MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltare.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workman. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith, or Phases of the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	1.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	3.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.00
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Salt Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	6.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.50
The Romance of Heaven.....	2.00
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S..... 2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe..... 3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations..... 4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50 .50 .50 .50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	51.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 3 vols.....	12.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Danis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Christmas Books, and Unre-printed Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Rhoads.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 3 vols.....	6.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Book-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
Wo Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.
Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each, $50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

T O B O O K - B U Y E R S .

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPE. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—
THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.50. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

DR. EDW. E. DENNISTON'S

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

ERINSTEIN,

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.,

WILL BE OPENED FOR THE RECEPTION OF PATIENTS,

ON THE TENTH OF MAY PROXIMO.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

Price.
THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)... $1.50
CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION..... 1.00
STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00
STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS..... 1.00
RELIGION OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND OTHER DISCOURSES..... 1.00
LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER..... 3.00
THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp., with steel portrait of the author).... 2.50
THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. Octavo, cloth..... 1.75
Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

253 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Killingwood Abbot.

THE INDEX,

231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

MRS. UNDERWOOD'S NEW BOOK.

HEROINES OF FREE THOUGHT.

Contents:

1. Madame Roland.
2. Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin.
3. Mary W. Godwin Shelley.
4. George Sand.
5. Harriet Martineau.
6. Frances Wright D'Armsmont.
7. Emma Martin.
8. Margaret R. Chappell Smith.
9. Ernestine L. Rose.
10. Frances Power Cobbe.
11. George Elliot.

BY

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

327 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.75.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 80 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES..... .15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES..... .40
FIFTY..... .75
ONE HUNDRED..... 1.50
TWO HUNDRED..... 2.40
THREE HUNDRED..... 3.60
FIVE HUNDRED..... 6.00
ONE THOUSAND..... 12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 7, 1877.

WHOLE No. 889.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE FOLLOWING statistics of the Catholic Church in the United States are given in Sadler's Catholic Directory for 1877: "A cardinal archbishop, 10 other archbishops, 58 bishops, 2297 priests, 5292 churches, 1587 parochial schools, and an estimated Catholic population of 5,541,000, without including the dioceses of Baltimore, Brooklyn, Portland, Allegheny, Pittsburgh, Nashville, Charleston, or Monterey, to which, taking the number of priests as a basis of calculation, we must apparently assign 750,000 more, making the whole Catholic population 6,290,000."

CHIEF-JUSTICE COOLEY, of Michigan, in a recent lecture at Baltimore on "Legal Wrongs or Torts," declared that the more cultivated and advanced a people become in the arts and modes of life, the greater is the number and varieties of legal wrongs and remedies. "Every new invention involves and develops new rights and more varied invasions of rights." These statements are extremely suggestive. Intuition or a priori morality can only be perplexed by the mention of "new rights," while evolutionary or scientific morality expects them as a matter of course. New rights necessarily result from new relationships, and they are none the less "natural" for being also derivative.

THE BOSTON Commonwealth sometime since mentioned a fact which is, to say the least, significant. Either Orthodoxy in Connecticut is getting rheumatic, or else Dr. Dudley was merciful to his old associates in the quality of the sermons he sent as samples: "It is a singular fact that Rev. Dr. Dudley, who was settled last Sunday over Theodore Parker's society, is still a member in good standing of the Hartford (Conn.) South Association of Congregational Ministers. Mr. Dudley lately sent the Association a number of his more recent sermons, with a request that they might be perused, and such action taken in regard to him as the circumstances warranted. The reply came last week that nothing was found calling for Congregational discipline; that he still stood in good repute with the body; and inviting him to be present at the convocation this month!"

THE QUINCY (Mass.) Patriot of May 6, not long after a copy of Shakespeare had been given to a pupil in one of the public schools of that town as a prize for excellence in reading, published the following letter, which well illustrates the beautiful influence in favor of literary culture which revivalism naturally exerts: "INCONSISTENCY.—It seems to me very much like hypocrisy for a person to ask God's blessing on anything they are going to do, and then do a thing which one day they may have reason to bitterly repent of. I felt almost shocked on Tuesday evening to hear a person pray, and then aid in presenting a book like Shakespeare's plays to a boy soon to start out into this wide world. What a book to put into a boy's library! Preaching temperance to children and yet holding up plays, so that they may become lovers of theatre-going. How often play-going and drinking go together! What is there in that book to exalt our Maker, or to teach us one word about him to whom we shall all have to give an account at the last day of every idle word, much less of wasted time spent in reading such a worthless book. Let those who profess to be Christians let their light shine, that they may be epistles known and read of all men.

M. A. TRELL.

AN ENGLISH friend sends us the following amusing extract from a last autumn's paper, which may possibly be turned to account in the grasshopper controversy out West: "At the meeting of the Established Synod of Angus, on Wednesday, an overture was presented praying the Synod to appoint a day on which the thoughts of the congregation might be directed to the dealings of God with the harvest, which has now been on hand for nearly three months, and is not yet completed. The Rev. Mr. Anderson, in supporting the overture, said it would be well for ministers to call the attention of their people to indications of dissatisfaction with their conduct shown by the Ruler of the seasons. The Rev. Mr. Young said it was a very difficult subject indeed to try and read the decrees of Divine Providence as expressed by prosperity and adversity. On the east coast of Scotland the harvest had been almost a failure, while on the west coast fine weather had prevailed and the harvest was a good one. Were they to infer from this that the Almighty was dissatisfied with the inhabitants on the east coast and pleased with those on the west? It was ultimately agreed to fix the first Sabbath in November on which ministers shall call the attention of congregations to the dealings of God with the bad harvest."

THE LATE Henry A. Wise, in one of his three messages as Governor of Virginia, expressed views as to the propriety of Executive appointments of days of thanksgiving which are worthy to be classed with the similar views of Thomas Jefferson. Gov. Wise was a Christian and a Democrat, the destroyer of Old John Brown of Ossawatimie, and later a vehement secessionist and rebel; yet none the less noble was the example he set in maintaining the principle of equal rights in the passage here quoted: "It has not been for the want of reverence for religion, or that I have been unmindful of God's providence to our people, that I have omitted to observe the mere form and fashion of the Executive messages to acknowledge divine goodness. I have purposely omitted to do so, for the same reason that I have, on every occasion when called on by the clergy or others, declined to recommend or appoint a day of thanksgiving. There ought to be no meddling of the State with matters of religion and faith, except to protect and defend the freedom of conscience and voluntary worship, and to enforce sound morality and common decency. This hinders us not, but rather sets us free to praise God in our own way. Any recommendation of worship from the State or its officers, in any form, is to some extent a constraint upon the people, who have forbidden by their Constitution the intermeddling with such matters by political power. Politics and religion ought not, in any way, to be brought into contact. They pollute and destroy each other. Two of the worst evils of the times are political religion and religious politics. I am not constituted and appointed to handle God's holy things, and I will not dare, hypocritically and cantingly, to huckster them to the market of popularity among men."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, Boston, Mass.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, New York.
 HON. ELIZABETH WELLS, New York.
 MR. O. M. FROTHINGHAM, Boston, Mass.
 MR. W. M. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. J. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT, San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
 REV. B. H. BENTON, Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER, New York.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. JAMES LICK, San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN, New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEL, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ISAAC H. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX, 3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT,
 W. H. HAMLEN,
 A. J. WILCOX,
 D. Y. KILGORE,
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS, Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. BATES, San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLING, South West, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY, Guthrie, Iowa.
 HERMAN LINDBER, Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE, New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD, Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD, Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE, Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS, Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON, Fort, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON, Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM E. SAYWARD, Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER, Gaitman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD, Washington, D. C.

(The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman, 24 Temple Place, Boston.
 Mrs. SARAH B. OTIS, 177 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The Many Encouragements, and the Few Discouragements,

THE PROSPECT OF THE LIBERAL CAUSE.

BY REV. A. B. BRADFORD.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I was brought up on the banks of the Susquehanna River just below the junction of the two branches where the stream is a mile wide. In the month of March, gratia vice versa, at Ansoni, as we were wont to sing from old Horace, it was very interesting to see the ice break up and go; and oftentimes the shore would be crowded with persons from the town—Sunbury—to see the flow of the river bulging up and loosening from the rocks around which it had frozen when the water was low; and how defiantly and conservatively the ice would plant itself against the bottom, and pile up in little hills, until the swelling flood above would break it in pieces and sweep it all away. After the ice, there came the drift-wood, made up of old stumps of trees, pieces of the broken timbers of bridges, boards, rails, and logs of all sizes. My juvenile mind was very much struck with this phenomenon which I did not then understand, that, while the water was swift in the channel of the river, some of the drift-wood that had been shot out by the current made its way to the eddies and back-water along the shore, and would go up stream! I well remember on one occasion the body of a tree about thirty feet long, blackened by fire, after circling about in an eddy below, came caving past in a wonderful manner, seeming to defy the laws of Nature that water shall run down hill instead of up hill; and I followed it along for a considerable distance till it reached a little cape or headland on the river, where it got within the force of the current, and away it went down to Chesapeake Bay.

Very often through life I paused and compared the course of human events called history, and especially so much of it as was enacted before my eyes, to this spring scene on the Susquehanna. There is a stream—a current—in human affairs; and there is also a counter-current, or back water, produced by the very force of the current itself; and at no period in the history of the world of mind was this fact more clearly visible than it is now. Free-thought, or a breaking loose from the trammels of mere human authority in all the departments of knowledge; a love of truth for truth's sake; secular ideas of political government, and of popular education; science as the natural religion of mankind, which, unlike the Church religion, never persecutes, and never outrages the human intellect by requiring it to believe an absurdity; a disposition to study the laws of Nature as they relate to health and enjoyment, and to take in our passage through life all the happiness we can honestly and innocently get as we go along,—these, with their cognate ideas, form at present the current of thought and feeling.

If we study the subject of the Church, both in its constitution and history, we shall find that the most dangerous feature in the whole concern centres in the priesthood. The idea that a class of men are set apart as the divinely authorized teachers of mankind, and are invested by Almighty God with authority to hold in their hands, and to transmit to their successors in office, the keys of the kingdom of heaven, with the divine assurance that whosoever sins they remit they are remitted unto them, and whosoever sins they retain they are retained; that whatsoever they bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever they shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven,—this is the most fearful claim of power that was ever made by an organized body of men. In a country like this, where the State is independent of the Church, this claim would be as laughable as the Pope's bull against the comet, were it not for the fact that the people who compose the churches, and support the clergy by their money, silently concede the claim. Catholics and Protestants alike call their clergy "ambassadors of Jesus Christ," and regard them as commissioned by the Sovereign of heaven to treat with his revolted subjects on earth. No protest has ever been made, either by the Catholic or Protestant membership of the Church, against this claim; and it is held to-day as sincerely, and would be enforced as rigidly, as when the Pope's nuncio laid whole kingdoms under an interdict, and forbade even the burial of the dead. It is the nature of a thing called a claim to live forever unless it is completely disproved or made null by the stipulations of a treaty of peace after war. This claim of the clergy is a constant menace against the liberties of mankind. While it is put forth, society is not, and cannot be, safe; for political complications may arise when the clerical order may take advantage of circumstances, and enforce their divine prerogative.

Now, whatever tends by way of argument to weaken this audacious claim of the priesthood to be the divinely authorized and exclusive teachers of the people in morals and religion; whatever tends to diminish the superstitious reverence which the people feel for them as a class; whatever tends to destroy in the popular mind the sense of the divine authority of the Church, and to make it merely a voluntary institution, is a good thing for society, and brightens the hopes of the future. And the object of this communication is to point out some of the ways in which this has been, and is now being, done; and, that notwithstanding the eddies and counter-currents observable along the shores of our times, the current in its overwhelming force is moving in the right direction.

1. The organization of the United States Government was the first direct blow ever given to clerical and ecclesiastical assumption; for, unlike any other government that has ever existed, or now exists, the Constitution recognizes neither priesthood nor Church, but ignores the very existence of both. The government drafts clergymen into the army in time of war, and appoints them to civil and military office, but only as citizens. The appointment of chaplains for army and navy, and the two Houses of Congress, is not enjoined, nor provided for, in the Constitution; for the convention that framed the Constitution in Philadelphia never had a chaplain, nor an official prayer, during all its numerous sessions, which would not have been the case, had the framers of the Constitution considered such things of any kind of importance in political affairs. The equality of all men before the law, which was the fundamental doctrine of the Declaration, for which the war was waged, destroyed in its very terms all adventitious distinctions between human beings, and placed them on a perfect level in point of rights, making the government merely the means of promoting this grand end. Every foreigner who travels among us is struck with the fact that the clergy, as such, are of no more account than any other citizens; but that, if any member of the class is respected at all, it is because he is a well-behaved man, and not as a clergyman. This is the national sentiment as produced by the Constitution and laws. If the clergy are exempted from sitting on juries, and from militia duties, and if their ecclesiastical property is exempted from taxation, it is done by the States; and, although a clear violation of the spirit of the national Constitution, the national government is not responsible for the anomaly. For it must be remembered that the government of the United States was originally organized out of States previously existing as such, and that these, and the rest which have been added since the Union was formed, have their State Constitutions and laws, and have functions independent of the general government. Each State gives, or refuses to give, the right of suffrage to any of its inhabitants,—taxes, or exempts from taxation, what property it pleases. Yet the national Constitution exerts a subordinating and perceptible moral influence on the States; and that influence is clearly against the pretensions of the Church and priesthood.

2. The Young Men's Christian Association, which is an affiliated institution, evincing great zeal and commanding great wealth in carrying out its plans, gave a second blow to the idea of an authoritative priesthood. This organization grew out of the fact, which was thrown into the teeth of the clergy without mercy, and wounded them in the tenderest and most vital spot, that they were a drag on the chariot-wheels of salvation; that at the poor, dying rate of their zeal for the conversion of souls, hell and the penitentiaries and jails are filling up with victims much faster than heaven and the Church were peopled with saints; that therefore they should resign the driver's seat on the gospel chariot to the young men who were in earnest, and not paralyzed by professionalism, and that themselves should take back seats as passengers, and be content with the enjoyment of their official dignity. One keen-eyed old parson in a city I wot of, seeing at the first that the young men, if not checked in their aspiring zeal for converting sinners, would inevitably and practically take away his double commission of ambassador of Jesus Christ and brigadier-general in the sacramental host of God's elect, turned upon the ambitious youth, and had influence enough to crush the viper while it was yet in the shell. But elsewhere, and generally, the clergy, grateful for anything that was likely to bring grists to their little mills, fell in with the movement. The effect has been to disparage the clergy as a class in the popular esteem, and to lead thousands to feel that the Young Men's Christian Associations are more comfortable and safer places for a man to be in than the chilling atmosphere of the churches. And this shearing of the clerical locks, this serious abridgment of their functions, has caused young men of superior ability to seek vocations in other fields of effort than the priesthood. John Wanamaker, the Philadelphia tailor, probably does more positive good in redeeming people from vice and misery than all the clergy of that city put together. The upshot of the Young Men's Christian Association is to compel the educational societies, whose province is to hunt up and educate men for the ministry, to go to the rural districts and rake up an indifferent class of youth—"poor but pious,"—and who are so humble and poor in spirit as to be willing to be educated, fed, and clothed on charity funds; and who, after four or five years of such wet-nursing, are sent out as licensed Micahs, going up and down among the vacancies, saying, "Put me, I pray thee, in the priest's office, that I may have a piece of bread." To such an extent have the educational boards gone in filling the ministry with fourth and fifth rate men, that open war is now being made in church courts and papers against the baleful policy. If, then, the Young Men's Christian Associations in their great zeal have done some harm in meddling with matters which do not concern them, we can pardon their faults in consideration of the two facts, that they have snatched many unfortunate young persons from the maelstrom of vice in our large cities whom the churches entirely neglected, and especially by unintentionally, yet really, weakening the people's respect for the clerical office.

3. On the heels of the Young Men's Christian Association came Moody and Sankeyism, which for a few years past has been riding the waves of religious excitement, and attracting the attention of thinking men. This was a third blow given to priestly assumption. The clergy, as already observed, claim that their preëminent function in the great scheme of redemption is to hold in their hands, and exclusively, the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and to open and shut the gates as they please, the Head of the Church being bound by solemn promise to confirm and ratify in heaven whatever they did on earth. Hence, they are previously put through stated course of theological education, then license to try their powers, and in due time "ordained," set apart in the most solemn manner, consecrated invested formally with the keys, and authorized to teach all nations, enforce discipline, secure obedience, and especially to administer the "saving ordinances" of baptism and the Lord's Supper.

But in this tide of time, and out of our prolific American hot-bed which produces individuality of character, as a compost heap produces weeds, arise these two upstarts, Moody and Sankey, men of no education at all, men who were never licensed, nor ordained, nor authorized, nor commissioned by any presbytery, association, consociation, bishop, or conference,—emphatically running on the Lord's errand without being sent,—pushing aside contemptuously the regular, divinely authorized teachers of the people and professional saviors of souls, and telling the whole of them, from Pope down to Deacon, that they don't understand the business, and must give way to those who do! In their revival meetings the clergy are condescendingly allowed to say over a prayer now and then, provided it be very short and to the point, but they are practically told that their vocation as soul-savers is gone, and that they should be content with the glory of revolving as satellites round their primaries "the Evangelists," and register the converts which they make. If any of the clergy dressed up in their canonicals, and with the shepherd's official crook in their hands, advise these gentlemen to be modest, reminding them that they have not been entrusted by Jesus Christ with the power of the keys, and cannot administer the "saving ordinances," the upstarts smile contemptuously, and are ready with the words of Paul: "I thank God I did not baptize any of you but Crispus and Gaius, for the Lord did not send me to baptize, but to preach the Gospel." As any old granny in a poultry-yard can coop the chickens when they are hatched, so any dried-up anatomy of a clergyman can dip or sprinkle a convert in baptism, and give him bread and wine at the Lord's Supper. But, to hatch out the chickens of the covenant in scores by a patent method of short incubation,—it takes such dabblers as we are to do that!

Now, if you could get the confidence of a clergyman,—not one of those lachrymose, gushing, short-sighted men who are so full of faith and water, but a long-headed, reflecting, judicious old stager who understands the causes of things,—if you could get him away up in the third story of his house where his study is, and ask him what he candidly thinks will be the inevitable consequences of Moody and Sankeyism, he would look cautiously to see if the study-door were shut, and then, sotto voce, would confess that, with all its fine seeming and present gain to the Church, the next generation would see that it did infinitely more harm than good, by disparaging the ministerial office before the world, and by preparing the way for a reaction in feeling that will be more dangerous to the Church than the previous deadness complained of. The English Church people, when the revivalists were among them, started the question, which they are now solving,—"If Moody and Sankey, uneducated, volunteer preachers, can convert more sinners in one year than the whole Church of England, bishops, clergy, and all, do at the yearly cost of a score of millions of dollars, what is the use of supporting twenty thousand of this class who do nothing comparatively to earn the money in the way of saving souls? Are they not leeches, or if you please, parasites—lice—upon the body politic, which would be cast off if that body were in a good state of health and cleanliness?"

4. The next adverse interest that now sets itself against a priesthood by divine right is the Temperance movement, which, like a June freshet, is surging over some sections of country, carrying all before it. Murphy began this work at Pittsburgh, and the two striking peculiarities in it were, first, that he did not denounce the retailers of liquor as abominable, and to be put down by prohibition laws, since they only supplied a demand created by the drinking habits of the people; and secondly, that the clergy were not to take the lead in the movement, but to occupy subordinate places in the ranks. It was boldly alleged by some, and they pointed to past experience for proof, that clerical forwardness would paralyze the movement; since the masses, seeing the cold indifference of the churches to their interests, had no faith in their sympathy or elevating power. If it were announced that the Rev. Dr. Creamcheese would address the public on Temperance on a given evening, and prove from Scripture that drunkenness was a sin against God, and that no drunkard, unwashed by the blood of Jesus Christ, could inherit the kingdom of heaven, he would scarcely have a score of people to hear him. But if it were on the cards that two or three reformed drunkards would tell their experience, and urge all to sign the pledge, the house would be too small to hold the audience. Murphy began the movement on broad humanitarian grounds only, and it went like wildfire among the masses. But he has yielded to the overwhelming kindness and flattery of the church people, and now agrees to call it the "Christian" Temperance Union. This, whether he understood it or not, was a stroke of policy of the clergy, who wished to get for Christianity, by which they meant the religion of the Church, the credit of the movement. Many of the temperance converts have already joined the churches. But it is no wonder. Instead of urging them to stand up to their pledge like men, and respect themselves too much hereafter to tamper with the evil habit of drinking, they are surrounded by the zealous myrmidons of the Church, and told in public and private that they have no power in themselves to stand firm to their vow, but that they must come to Jesus, join the Church, and thus get the strength to be sober and decent.

Now contemplate the fact. By the clear teachings of the New Testament, and by the common consent of Christendom, the clergy are the mediators between God and man, being ambassadors of Christ, sent out to beseech men to be reconciled to God. They are the authorized fishers of men; and their exclusive province is skillfully to cast the Gospel net into the sea on the right side of the ship, so as to secure a large draught of fishes. They, with their church members, constitute "the salt of the earth," to keep the mass of society from corruption by their antiseptic influence. They are divinely constituted the "light of the world," to illuminate the path of duty and safety to erring mortals, so that they will not wander on the mountains of sin and folly. They command abundant wealth. Their church machine is well arranged, and they pay no church taxes. They number sixty thousand clergymen, with creeds of all complexions to suit all comers. Yet with all these claims, and all this wealth, and all the appliances for reforming men from their evil ways, drunkenness had advanced to such a pitch in this country that nearly a thousand millions of dollars were expended every year for intoxicating liquors! The courts of justice in our large cities were kept in session all the time deciding criminal cases, four-fifths of which originate in drunkenness; and the jails, penitentiaries, and poor-houses were crowded with the victims of strong drink. The "salt" of the Church had so completely lost its savor that it had become, as Jesus said would be the case, "good for nothing" except to be cast out, and be made roads for rascals to walk on. Society everywhere had the whiskey and tobacco smell, and things generally were getting nearer to perdition every day. While this deterioration was going on, threatening our civilization, the clergy were regularly in their pulpits, expounding and defending their creeds, officially remitting or retaining sins, and binding and loosing the chains of the sinner's condemnation. Murphy, a reformed saloon-keeper, was moved by the situation of things, and seeing that the Church and clergy were utterly powerless to remedy the evil, proposed the new plan, which has always served to keep individuals sober, of appealing to the manhood of the drunkard, and to the humanity of all beside, to carry out this work of personal redemption. In this grand army of reform, the Church, as she did in the anti-slavery struggle, acts the part of a camp-follower, to pick up the broken victuals and to utilize as church-members the weak-legged stragglers in the rear who have not manhood and courage enough to keep in the front. The clergy, ashamed and mortified that a reformed drunkard will persuade more men to be reconciled to God and His laws in one month than they could in ten years, by dint of kindness and flattery, have induced the Murphy men to baptize the movement, and call it "Christian," so that they can stand up before their congregations, and draw their salaries stately, without blushing so much! For the American church people are beginning to start the question now debated in England, whether it "pays" to keep up such an expensive establishment as the Church, when the clergy are mere figure-heads and sinecures, following in the wake, instead of taking the lead in practical reforms which reduce the poor and criminal rates of the country, and make men better.

5. But the most crushing blow given to the idea of an authoritative priesthood is in the spread of spiritualism. Without discussing the question of the truthfulness of the theory, it is a fact that hundreds of thousands believe it. And all over the country the very first effect of showing that there is a telegraphic communication between the world of the departed and the world of the living is to push the clergy to one side as an excrescence, drawing their useless life from the body of society. Their claims are all treated with contempt since spiritualism makes every man his own prophet, priest, and king. The Bible, while spiritualism illuminates many of its pages, and explains many of its enigmas which defied solution under the old system, takes its place in point of authority with the sacred books of all other religions, and is judged, as they are, by its merits or demerits. As to the Church, it sinks in their esteem to the dead level of the world. Spiritualism is peculiar in this, that it leavens up the whole mass of society except the Sadducees. Having so much of Scripture on its side, it insinuates itself into the churches, and captivates many of the clergy who, for prudential reasons, conceal their real sentiments from the knowledge of their flocks. But the very moment spiritualism convinces a layman, his old faith in a mediatorial priesthood, and in the Church as the ark of safety, gives way like wax at the touch of fire. This faith is not limited to those of Caesar's household; but multitudes of persons of the highest moral character, and the best minds, are its converts. It has the elements of popularity, because it appeals to the feelings and hopes of mankind; and, if half as well-manned and organized as the Church is, would soon outnumber her adherents. But even in its unorganized condition, by which it loses four-fifths of its power, it exercises a controlling influence in many sections of the country.

Now, while the current of public opinion and feeling all over the world sets in deeply and strongly against the assumptions of the clergy as a divinely authorized class; while the Protestant Church herself complains that her power over the people is waning, and that her ministry is in danger of being cursed with imbecility and fourth-rate talent which commands no respect in the pulpit; while the Catholic priesthood finds it necessary to cut off and lo-late their people in Church schools and other societies, and even by forbidding marriage with non-Catholics, in order to keep them safe from the enervating spirit of the times; while the Catholics and all the numerous sects of Protestantism are making herculean efforts, by Sunday-schools and spasmodic revival efforts, to avert destiny by keeping the rising generation out of the current,—we see, in the complication of affairs, drift-wood actually running up stream, and some of it remarkably and fearfully fast. The cowardly refusal of the City Councils of Philadelphia to accept the bust of Thomas Paine in the Centennial year, and to give it a place in Independence Hall among the memorials of the other founders of the Republic; the hypocritical closing of the gates of the Centennial Exhibition against the masses on Sunday because it was a sin, while they were thrown wide enough open to others who ranked themselves above the common people; the efforts of the so-called Reform Party to secure a religious amendment by which they would put the Bible and Christ and their own anthropomorphic conceptions of God into the Constitution of the United States, thus effectually revolutionizing and Europeanizing the government, and making it an organ for defining, disseminating, and enforcing a theological creed; the shameful vote of the United States Senate last year in regard to a Constitutional recognition and allowance of the Protestant Bible as a school book; the astonishing power of the Catholic priesthood over their people and the politicians, and the fact that every priest in this country is a Jesuit, and a devoted missionary in partibus infidelium; the insane policy of the bibliomania in unwittingly playing into the hands of the Jesuits, by forcing our English Bible into the common schools in defiance of the convictions of the majority of tax-payers; the exemption of the owners of hundreds of millions of ecclesiastical property from taxation, while the poor man's house and lot are taxed to make up the deficit,—all these are the drift-wood, forced out of the current, and by the current, into the eddies and back water along shore, where it is swirling around, and heading up stream in the most anomalous manner.

In the cause of free thought and free speech all these discouragements in the outlook are to me just enough to act as incentives to organized effort on the part of the Radicals. They are the product and the sequelæ of past ages of ignorance, and its twin sister superstition, and can only be made to disappear by the gradual process of evolution and the general law of progress.

There is no danger of the radical cause ever losing ground as it did a hundred years ago on the decease of the fathers of the republic, who were nearly all what the Church now calls "infidels." To prevent any such back-set again, we have, what they had not, an extensive freethought literature. We have newspapers and magazines devoted to the discipline and spread of such sentiment, to say nothing of able and judicious lecturers, who address the people didactically, and discuss controversially these great topics so interesting to us all. And especially we have the suggestions and demonstrations of science in all departments of inquiry. A century ago geology was in its infancy, and chemistry was not a science, but a system of mere empiricism. The great law of the persistence of force was unknown, and the doctrine of evolution was fitting in its outlines in the minds of philosophers as a vagrant thought. Archaeology and Biblical criticism were scarcely dreamed of; for the critics of those days were mere commentators who entirely took for granted the previous question. Only astronomy, of all the sciences then known, had discredited the teachings of the Church concerning the cosmogony of our planet, as set forth in the book of Genesis. All these bear heavily, cumulatively, and fatally on the Church and her fundamental dogmas; for, being popularized, they come within the range of the common mind; and Americans are becoming more and more a reading people. A century ago scepticism, as to the teachings of the Church, was confined to the higher classes of society who had education and wealth. The only books calling these claims in question were the writings of Paine, Voltaire, Volney, and some few English authors of the same character; and these were read secretly, "for fear of the Jews in those quarters." Now on the centre-tables of church-members are to be found the writings of Spencer, Huxley, Tyndall, and others, which are at least a hundred times more dangerous to the religion of the Church than ever Paine's Age of Reason was. For Paine was a devout believer in the existence of a God and the immortality of the soul, while some of these late philosophers seem to be materialists and atheists. Of those who control the press and literature of the country, three-fourths, men and women, disbelieve in the popular religion, and worship God in the great temple of science. The radical cause does not advance by those moral thunder-storms where, if the thermometer of religious feeling runs up above "temperate" to fever heat, it is bound to experience a reaction, and to come down towards the chilling regions of zero. It is a slow and silent growth, such as the oak makes, that can only be measured by comparison. I see no sign that this growth can be again arrested. Every arrow of argument the Church can use in its war upon freethought has been shot and broken, and her quiver is empty; while Science in her workshops forges every day new and more deadly weapons for the radical. The only weapon the bigots can now use is what the priests of Baal, their illustrious predecessors, used in their controversy with the prophet Elijah, when, from morning even to the time of the offering up of the evening sacrifice, they called upon their god to appear in their behalf by miracle; and, when there was no sign, they leaped frantically on the altar, and cut themselves with knives to inflame their zeal and to compel a divine recognition. Let the radicals stick to the work of popular enlightenment, and be content to labor on for the future, and to die in the harness; for I am sure that heaven has decreed the ultimate redemption of the human family from the degrading bondage of superstition.

ENON VALLEY, Pa., May, 1877.

CHAUNCEY WRIGHT'S PHILOSOPHICAL DISCUSSIONS.*

This volume contains, we suppose, the only remains of its remarkable author which will ever be given to the public. Mr. Wright was so much fonder of thinking than of writing, of working out a vein of thought than of convincing others, and he was so indifferent to reward of fame or money, that he left little except the scattered essays which Mr. Norton has collected. He was not widely known; and we suspect that the generality of readers read with surprise the exalted estimate of his powers that his death called forth, attributing it largely to the fondness of sorrowing friends. And yet the reader who makes his own vast amount of thought concentrated in the four hundred and odd pages of these discussions is not likely to dispute the truth of Mr. Norton's estimate "that they form the most important contribution made in America to the discussion and investigation of the questions which now chiefly engage the attention of the students of philosophy." He will recall with appreciation Mr. Fiske's saying in the Harvard Advocate, that it was only Mr. Wright's neglect to preserve his thoughts in writing that prevented him "from taking rank among the foremost philosophers of the nineteenth century. An intellect more powerful for its union of acuteness with sobriety has not yet been seen in our country. In these respects he reminds one of Mr. Mill, whom he so warmly admired. But while hardly inferior to Mill in penetrating and fertile ingenuity, we think he unquestionably surpassed the latter in native soberness or balance of mind. A thinker more rigidly loyal to Baconian principles we do not know where to seek."

Mr. Norton's introductory account of Mr. Wright is certainly very good, with its nice analysis and delicate intellectual appreciation; and his long friendship with Mr. Wright gave him both the knowledge and the authority to speak of him fully. To Mr. Wright's friends it will seem cold; but it is not so much addressed to them as to the general public, to whom it will perhaps be none the less impressive on that account. The acute penetration of Mr. Norton's insight, and the calmly balanced justice of his judgment, those who knew Mr. Wright best will best appreciate; but they may wish to add to it Mr. Fiske's warmer words: "To have known such a man was an experience one cannot forget or outlive. To have had him pass away, leaving so scanty a record of what he had in him to utter, is nothing else than a great public calamity."

To give our readers an adequate account of the matter contained in this volume is quite beyond the limits of our columns. Most of the great questions of modern philosophy are touched upon, and Mr. Wright's touch was with the hand of a master. His contributions to botany, zoölogy, and astronomy are as important as his more purely philosophical discussions; his essay on the law of the arrangement of leaves (published in an unfortunately mutilated form in this volume) was especially valuable, and attracted attention both here and abroad. Mr. Darwin in particular being greatly pleased with it. Mr. Wright was a very fertile thinker within certain well-defined limits, his object being the marshalling of known facts and the marking out of paths for the discovery of new ones rather than the establishing of the dogmas of any school. He was an empiricist and a positivist of the English school; but the latter name has been so often misapplied that he preferred to call his method "scientific," as merely extending to philosophy the principles which characterize modern science. He firmly believed in the never-failing operation of natural laws in this world of ours, regarding the law of causation as the condition of scientific study. There were to him everywhere inviolate "laws that underlie our sentiments and our desires as well as all that these can rationally regard in the outer world." But it was strictly phenomenal causation that he sought,—the sequence of antecedent and consequent; not abstractions of primal or infinite being. Questions as to noumena or absolute substance he held quite insoluble. His position was more unusual than the reader might suppose, especially in this country. He had little in common with our old-school transcendentalism, for intuitions were to him puzzles whose origin was to be guessed rather than oracles whose authority was to be obeyed; and with that modern school which, under the disguise of brilliant physical illustration and pretended scientific method, smuggles back as unavoidable belief the dicta which it excludes as inspiration, he had little more sympathy. He appreciated the ardent "moral idealism" which underlies the system of Mr. Spencer; but the manner in which it transforms the definite laws of special phenomena into vague cosmic evolutions of the laws of thought, was very distasteful to him. To deduce from instinctive belief the exact physical law of the conservation of force, and formulate it in terms so broad as to apply to social relations and atomic motions, seemed to him not only bad philosophy but bad language,—a dangerously unscientific confusion of fundamental conceptions none too easy to understand at the best; and speculations of rhythmic flow of integration and disintegration seemed to him merely to conceal the ignorance they could not remove. And he as unsparingly criticised Mr. Wallace's notion that force is a product of the mind, "a sort of molecular leakage of energy from an absolute source into the nervous system of . . . man." On the other hand, he had no taste for purely destructive philosophy. The subtle paradoxes of Mr. Lewes attracted him no more than the narrow dogmatism of ordinary materialism. He confined science to fact; but he held that "theories, if true, were facts,—a particular class of facts, indeed, generally complex ones, but still facts," and facts sometimes to be assumed in advance of verification; for provisional hypotheses were the only means of handling the masses of detail and of intelligently seeking the unknown, by showing the probable relations of the known. Accordingly, he gave great attention to the fundamental theories of astronomy, zoölogy, and botany.

Yet, while he valued the function of hypotheses so highly, he did not lose sight of their tentative character, or seek in the laboratory of science for tendencies of the cosmos or purposes of Providence, found only in the fancy of the poet or the faith of the churchman. Although he did so much to establish the Darwinian theory, he nowhere found proof of persistent progress. To him, as to Aristotle, whom he so esteemed, there was no discoverable development of the cosmos; nature was "an endless succession of changes, simple and constant in their elements, though infinite in their combinations, which constitute order without beginning and without termination." An eternal counter-movement of action and equal reaction he saw, and further than that he did not see. Thus, in his physical theory of the universe, he adopted without limitation the fundamental assumption that the solar system is a natural product, but rejected the nebular progress of which that system has been regarded as the result. From his point of view, our system is not the solidifying remains of a nebula that once reached far out into space, whose successive stages of contraction the successive planets mark, slowly cooling, and doomed from its nature to final extinction. He saw in it rather a never-ending round of changes, a complete circle of existence. The universe was an unbroken continuity of matter in its various forms, solid, liquid, and gaseous, reaching to the farthest interstellar spaces that heat can reach, "a highly-rarefied continuous gaseous mass, constantly evaporated and expanded from its solid centre, but constantly condensed and consolidated near its outer limits, constantly heated at its centre by the fall of solid bodies from its outer limits, and constantly cooled and condensed at these limits by the conversion of heat into motion." From this point of view the planets are not the fossil remains of long-perished nebulous rings: they are the still growing accretions of meteors whose orbit is determined by their mass, heat, and the resistance of interplanetary matter. The sun is not a body whose shrinking volume keeps up its heat (a hardly admissible hypothesis in view of the dependence of volume upon temperature). It is rather to be considered as a planet whose central position causes it to be enormously increased and heated by the fall of meteoric rain, and which is constantly radiating the heat thus generated and evaporating the matter thus received into space, its volume expanding with each accession of heat and diminishing with its loss, and acting in fact as a fly-wheel to convert the violent and irregular shocks into equable force. And the corresponding reverse to these phenomena will take place on the outer verge of the universe, expanded to the farthest limit that heat can reach before absorption, and fluctuating as each accession of heat expands, or fall of condensing matter contracts, it. There is thus an endless action and reaction, a movement of expanding vapor outward and of cosmic rain inward, and similarly of heat or force; while occasional fluctuations on a grand scale may take place as a mass of extraordinary size ends its journey in the sun, or, per contra, takes up an orbit nearly permanent around it. Our earth is not the dying brand from a former conflagration whose molten core still attests its former incandescence. At some nodal point of pressure and cold at the outer bounds of space it was born, to rush spirally inward toward the sun, until its accelerating direct motion balanced the attraction that created it, and its orbit was reached, where, increasing irregularly in heat under meteoric shocks, solar radiation, tidal and ethereal friction, and other causes, at last the present operations of Nature became possible. It is hardly necessary to point out how different all this is from the slowly cooling universe of the nebular hypothesis. The conservation of force is its key-stone, as the loss of it was in the older theory. Dealing with the same elements its tone is entirely dissimilar. And it may be worth remarking that the spectroscopic proof of the existence of true nebulae discovered since Mr. Wright's essay was written, and frequently referred to as reestablishing the old nebular hypothesis, is equally consistent with Mr. Wright's theory.

He carried into organic science the same principles that he used in inorganic investigation. Never doubting the invariability of the law of causation, and doing much to establish one of its most important forms—the theory of evolution of species by natural selection (or, as he preferred to call it, to avoid all misleading connotation, the theory of "descent with modification"),—he yet saw no regular movement upwards, no presumption that an intermediate form was derived from a lower rather than a higher in the scale of being. He found only the action and reaction of organism and environment; no law of special creation or providentially-directed variations, or of selection operating along preordained paths,—hypotheses which he held unnecessary and therefore inadmissible now that Mr. Darwin has shown the operation of the struggle for existence. Although the specific branches of the tree of life have been constantly dying out, they have been as constantly springing afresh, and their number seems to have always been equal to the life-supporting capacities of the globe. The succession of our fossils may be deceptive. If we could go back to the ages before the convulsion of heat in which our earliest record ends, we might find a race the equal of our own; and even in the known geologic periods continents now buried in the ocean may have early supported races of a high degree of development which left no traces in the mud records of lands unfit for their habitation. These were, of course, mere speculations, and we only refer to them as showing the habit of thought in which he worked. Not that it was strictly novel or original to him,—it has been shared more or less by all the great critical thinkers; but it is, nevertheless, rare even in this critical age; and when we consider the delicacy and profundity of his analytical power, the calm strength of his judgment, the fertility of his conception, and the wide range of his well-ordered knowledge, the combination becomes remarkable enough.

The four longest essays in the volume are on the Darwinian theory, and of these the last one, on the "Evolution of Self-Consciousness," treating as it does of one of the most important questions alike of science and philosophy, is at once the most complete and the most powerful. Even those who differ most widely from its author will find it full of passages to admire, like the short note on dreams. One of the most notable essays is that on the arrangement of leaves, to which we have already referred, which carries one step farther Goethe's analogy of every part of the flower to the leaf by bringing the leaves themselves, as a whole, into the plan, with stalk as rib, and leaves as serrated lobe. Then there are philosophical reviews of Spencer, Mansell, Lewes, Mill, and others, the first of which is quite full; and there are several shorter articles, one or two of which, like the "Speculative Dynamics" and "Cause and Effect," the student will find, notwithstanding their fragmentariness, positively unsurpassed. Studied, however, they must be. More than one passage will appear at first reading obscure, and only when carefully reexamined will yield up its exact meaning. But the obscurity is only in the expression. There is no confusion in the thought. Mr. Wright carried conciseness too far; too often he left the point of a paragraph in an inconspicuous adjective. His style, we should say, was too frequently condensed without being crystallized. The modesty with which he anticipated from the reader an insight equal to his own was excessive. And he was so much fonder of establishing truth than of attacking error that he could not be an effective disputant; for "the strategy of science," he said, "is not the same as that of rhetorical disputation, and aims at cornering facts, not antagonists." Indeed, he always preferred discussion to debate, and even in conversation liked better to dwell upon the truths that he found in the minor corollaries of opinions he thought mistaken than to contradict point-blank the main theorem whose fallacies he sometimes too contemptuously slighted. And in his writings he was so interested in examining all the bearings of a topic that he was apt to dwell too little on the telling points that concentrate the wandering attention and focus the hazy thoughts. In conversation this was little apparent, and he was always ready with illustration or experiment, "while the pleasant play of his suggestive humor often added a happy and unexpected stroke wherewith to clinch the point of an argument"; but in the volume by which he will be known we have too often to remember that it lacks the revision of its author.

We have little to add, except that Mr. Wright never spared a bad argument because it supported a good cause, and sharpened no weapons for polemical warfare. No logic might demonstrate to him the plans of the designer of the heavens and the earth; but "there is nothing in philosophy," he said, "which can legitimately rebuke his enthusiasm [that of the Christian], nothing unless it be the dogmatism which would presumptuously interpret as science what is only manifest as faith, or would require of faith that it shall justify itself by proofs."—The Nation, May 17.

DEAN STANLEY ON "THE ROCK AHEAD."

EDINBURGH.

The Very Rev., the Dean of Westminster, whose three years' term of office as Lord Rector of the University of St. Andrews has now come to a close, delivered a valedictory address to the students to-day. The topic with which he proposed to deal, Dean Stanley said, was the religious or theological "rock ahead" which had been pointed out by a prophet of ill (Mr. Rathbone Greg); viz., the danger arising to religion from the apparently increasing divergence between intelligence and the faith of our time. He asked permission, as the successor of the Abbot of Westminster, to follow the example of the enterprising Abbot of Aberbrothock, and to "bell this rock"; and to speak of the grounds of hope for the religion and theology of the future continuing, the Very Rev. Dean said: I do not deny that the forebodings of Mr. Greg have some foundation. There has been an increasing suspicion between the fiercer factions of the ecclesiastical and the scientific world, each rejoicing to push the statements of its rival to the extremest consequences, and to place on them the worst possible construction. There have arisen new questions which ancient theology has, for the most part, not even considered. There is an impetuosity on both sides which, to the sober sense of the preceding century, was unknown, and which threatens to precipitate conflicts once cautiously avoided or quickly surmounted. There are also indications that we are passing through one of those periods of partial eclipse which from time to time retard the healthy progress of mankind, and this calamity has overtaken us in the presence of the vast, perhaps disproportionate, advance of scientific knowledge which falls most keenly and presser most heavily on the weaknesses of a credulous or ceremonial form of belief. It is no doubt conceivable that these dreadful forms and "fery forces" might portend for England the same overthrow of faith that has overtaken other countries; but behind these natural manifestations there is a higher Christianity which neither assailants nor defenders can fully exhaust. We cannot believe that the inexorable hour has struck. There is good ground for hoping that the difficulties of religion—rational religion, Christian religion—are the results of passing maladies either in its professed friends or supposed foes. Having alluded to the essential progressive element in religion, to the gains which theology had made by the process of diving below the surface and discovering the original foundations, the grounds of hope afforded by the study of the doctrines and institutions of the faith, Dean Stanley spoke of the change in the mode of regarding those physical wonders which were called wonders of miracles. There is, he said, no doubt an increasing difficulty on this subject,—the difficulty enhanced by the ever-growing incredulity of the educated section of mankind, and by the ever-growing unbelief of the half-educated. It is a question on which neither science nor religion, I venture to think, has yet spoken the last words. It is a complex argument imperatively demanding careful definition. But the point on which I would desire to fix your attention is this: that whatever view we take of these physical portents or their relative proportion, however valuable the moral of extraordinary incidents may be in other respects, however impressively they may be used to convey the truths of which they are confessedly the symbols, they have, in the eyes of the very men whom we most desire to convince, been stumbling-blocks and not supports. External evidence has, with most theology, receded to the background; internal evidence has come to the front. Let us, then, learn by experience to use with moderation arguments which—at least for the present—have lost their force. Let us acknowledge that there are greater miracles—more convincing miracles—than those which appeal only to our sense of astonishment. Let us recognize that the preternatural is not the supernatural, and that, whether the preternatural is present or absent, the supernatural, the true supersensuous, may and will remain unshaken. There was one school of thought which was either passed by altogether as too contemptible for notice, or noticed only to be dismissed; and yet this school or party is one which happily runs across all the others, and contains itself, not indeed all, but many of the most fruitful, finest elements in Christendom,—the backbone of the Christian philosophy, the camp of Christ, the theology we often hear of, the reconciliation of theology and science. It is not reconciliation that is needed, but the recognition that they are one and indivisible. Whatever enlarges our idea of Nature enlarges our ideas of God; whatever gives us a deeper insight into the nature of the author of the universe gives us a deeper insight into the secrets of the universe itself. Whatever is good science is also good theology. In like manner we sometimes hear of the reconciliation of religion and morality. The answer is the same,—they are one and indivisible. Whatever tends to elevate the virtue, the purity, the generosity of the prudent is high religion. Whatever debases the mind, or corrupts the heart, or hardens the conscience, under whatever pretence, however specious, is low religion, is infidelity of the worst sort. What is our duty in this interval of waiting,—of transition? You, no doubt, in this secluded corner of our island, feel the breath of the spirit of the age. How are you to avoid being carried about with every gust of its fitful doctrine? How are you to gather into your sails the bounding breeze of its invincible strength? There is nothing to make you despair of our Church. It may have to pass through many transformations; but a Church which has not only stood so many shocks, but continues to gather into its ranks the most liberal thinkers of the nation, is too great an institution to be sacrificed to the exigencies of party, if only it be true to that fine maxim of Archbishop Leighton, of leaving to others to preach up the times, and claiming for itself to preach up eternity. It is the growing conviction of all reflecting minds that there is no ground in the nature of things, or in the Christian religion, for the sharp division which divides seem to draw between the spiritual and secular,—for the curious fancy which represented all which belonged to ecclesiastical matters as holy, all which belongs to the State as worldly. In proportion as these larger and nobler hopes of religion of which I have been speaking penetrate into all the communions of this country, these provincial and retrograde distinctions will fade away, and the policy of improving and reforming institutions, instead of blindly destroying or blindly pursuing them, will regain the hold which it once had on the intelligence and conscience of the nation. Neither in the retention nor in the abolition of local impediments is the main interest of the ministry of the Church of Scotland in the times that are coming. Confession or no confession, subscription or no subscription, Established Church or Free or United Presbyterian, the profession of a clergyman in these days is not less interesting, but more interesting than it had ever been before. There is enough to occupy your thoughts and hearts in the moral evils which you have to combat,—the barbarism, the intemperance of large numbers of your citizens; and, on the other hand, the high and pure traditions of former times which you have to maintain, and the appropriation of whatever examples of pastoral activity, or keen, intellectual ardor are to be seen in other communions. It was once said, in mournful complaint of the highest ecclesiastical in Christendom, "For the sake of gaining to-day, he has thrown away to-morrow forever." Be our policy the reverse of this: Be it ours to fasten our thoughts, not on the passions and parties of the brief to-day, but on the hopes of the long to-morrow. The day, the year may perchance belong to the destructives, the cynics, and the partisans; but the morrow, the coming century, belongs to the catholic, comprehensive, discriminating, all-embracing Christianity which has the promise, not of the present time, but of the times which are to be.—London paper, name and date unknown.

* Philosophical Discussions. By Chauncey Wright. With a biographical sketch of the author by Charles Eliot Norton. New York: Henry Holt & Co. 1877. pp. 424.

DEAN STANLEY'S ADDRESS.

BY MONCURE D. CONWAY.

LONDON, March 29, 1877.

The desire of sending you full reports concerning Dr. Schillemann's address prevented due attention to the great event of the religious world; namely, the Dean of Westminster's Allocation, as the Times calls it. The Valedictory of the Dean at St. Andrews University, as its departing Lord Rector, will no doubt have attracted attention in America. It is premature to estimate its effects here, but it may be confidently said that all parties in the Church, and out of it, feel that it is revolutionary. No one can charge the Dean with not having the courage of his opinions,—the man who invited Max Müller to expatiate in Westminster Abbey on the grandeur of so-called heathen religion (on Sunday, too, and from the pulpit); who gave the communion to the Unitarian Dr. Vance Smith along with the Bishops; who invited Bishop Colenso, when he was inhibited by a Bishop from preaching at Oxford, to preach in the Abbey; who has set up a monument to the Wesleys in the same venerable place; and has now carried his boldness to the climax of proposing to disburthen the Christian ship of its supercargo: namely, to throw overboard the authority of the Bible and Miracles. It is certain that neither Dr. Martineau nor any recognized Unitarian living has ever taken such high rationalistic ground as Dean Stanley in this address. Not one of them can now be found prepared to declare with the Dean that it is "from the outlying camps of the so-called heretic or infidel that the champions of the true faith have come"; that it was to Spinoza—the non-Christian pantheist—that was vouchsafed the "clearest glimpse into the nature of the Deity." The mantle of Theodore Parker, declined by the Unitarians, has fallen on the shoulders of the last Abbot of Westminster.

By the favor of a friend, I am able to derive from a minute local report some details of the scene at St. Andrews which are not contained in the reports which have appeared in London. There were about twenty black-gowned and Orthodox eminences who were doomed to sit on the platform while the Dean distributed among the future pastors of Scotland his scholarly and fascinating heresies. Among these were Bishop Wordsworth (whose agonies it is frightful to think of), Principals Tulloch and Sharp, the Earl of Elgin, many professors and clergymen (some of them those who are prosecuting Professor Smith, of Aberdeen, for the mild offence of doubting the Mosaic origin of the Pentateuch), and also Dr. Boyd (the "Country Parson"), who is, however, suspected of being a "pal" of the Dean. When these august dignitaries approached the door of the hall, they heard within a chorus of their students' voices; the theme they were singing with fervor was not from Handel, but as follows:—

"He who kisses a pretty girl,
And goes and tells his mother,
Ought to have his lips cut off,
And never kiss another."

When the black-gowned procession began to file in, the F. P. (future pastors) were stilled for a moment; but when they caught sight of Dean Stanley, emotion again filled their souls and expressed itself in the happy song, "He's a jolly good fellow." When the song was ended, a representative of the Senatus laid the Mace on the table; but when that Royal Symbol was seen, the F. P. called out in Cromwellian tones: "Take away that bauble." When the Dean indulged in his first Latin quotation, the youths cried "translate,"—probably as a satire on his Oxonian Latin.—St. Andrews follows the French pronunciation. When speaking of the passing away into oblivion of all the controversies once thought so important, he alluded to the old Burghers and anti-Burghers of the now United Presbyterians, there was laughter, and this laughter was regularly renewed whenever any Scotch sect or doctrine was alluded to, however solemnly. When the Dean said his own theme referred to theology, the announcement was received with groans. The F. P. had evidently heard enough of theology. The first cheers were brought out by his extolling the discoveries of Schillemann and others, and the advance of science. To science the pastors gave three rounds. The next cheers came when the Dean said he had heard from an Argyllshire minister that "the vehemence of theological controversy had been in proportion to the emptiness of the phrases used." Great amusement was excited by his tracing the troublesome Eastern question back step by step to the old doctrinal dispute about "the double procession." When he trenched on the more vital themes, the mode of appointment to Church livings, diversion revealed itself in cries of "No, no;" for to the F. P. his future living is the immediate jewel for which he finally surrenders his undergraduate right of heresy. But the Dean's attack on miracles brought back the cheers, and encouraged him to go on with that earnest and eloquent tribute to Voltaire, Spinoza, and the naturalists, which did not terminate until he had pronounced science to be the only theology, and morality the only religion.

When, after this, the Dean asked solemnly what was their duty as "future pastors of Scotland," the youths evidently considered it grotesque; they shouted "Oh, oh;" and cried "Question;" and there were such minglings of voices that the Dean had to pause a little. However, the Dean is artistic; he remembered Scottish sensibilities, and alluded to "the Scottish Nation,"—which brought out cheers, and then quiet. The F. P. laughed loudly when the Dean alluded respectfully to the Westminster Confession, and also when he spoke solemnly of his own Thirty-nine Articles. But the ovation of the day was for Carlyle. When the Dean mentioned him, the name "Carlyle!" was shouted through the hall amid prolonged cheering. The Dean's peroration, with its felicitous modulation of themes from his old friend, Arthur Clough, and Horace, is one which it would be difficult to find surpassed in the modern annals of clerical oratory.

The London papers have botched it sadly, and so I give it verbatim:—

"There are words which often come into my mind when I look at an assemblage like this—words spoken by a gifted poet, endeared to some amongst us, and who loved your country well,—a cry desponding, perhaps, yet also cheering, wrung from him by the dislocations and confusions of his time, which is also ours, when he looked out on the contending forces of the age.—

"O that the armies indeed were arrayed! O joy of the onset!
Sound thou trumpet of God; come forth, great cause, to array us;
King and leader, appear; thy soldiers sorrowing seek thee."

We may already hear the distinct notes of that trumpet; we may catch however faintly, the coming of that cause. The kings and leaders will surely appear at last, if their soldiers will follow them on to victory. It was once said in mournful complaint of the highest ecclesiastical in Christendom, "For the sake of gaining to-day, he has thrown away to-morrow forever." Be our policy the reverse of this; be it ours to fasten our thoughts, not on the passions and parties of the brief to-day, but on the hopes of the long to-morrow. The day, the year, may perchance belong to the destructives, the cynics, and the partisans; but the morrow, the coming century, belongs to the catholic, constructive, discriminating, all-embracing Christianity, which has the promise, not of this present time, but of the generations which are yet to be.

"O fortes pejoraque passi
Mecum saepe viri . . .
Cras ingens iterabilis aequor."

"Souls that have taught and thought and wrought with me,
'Tis not too late to seek a newer world."

The Dean did not name his poets,—perhaps it was well enough in the case of Horace, for the F. P. might have hunted out the dangerous advice covered by the above dots (nunc vino pellite curas); but it is a pity he did not name Clough, whose "Bothie" is the sweetest and most classical poem that ever wove into its melodies the lochs and hills of Scotland; and yet is but little known or read by the youth of that country.

If anything were wanting to make this apotheosis of heresy on the grave of John Knox more striking, it has been supplied by a criticism on the Dean's performance by the Rev. Professor Wallace, who recently left his pulpit and professional chair in Edinburgh to become editor of the Scotsman. The reverend gentleman was, indeed, never suspected of being excessively Orthodox; but if he had any dogmatic proclivities he has certainly left them in the pulpit and lecture-room. The Scotsman's only complaint against the Dean is that he expects to realize his dream of an ideal and rational religion inside the national churches. The ex-minister of a national Church, now editor of the leading Scotch paper, writes in this way:—

"Is there any possibility of this transmutation of national churches into institutes of complete religious freedom? Are there not forces within them that are certain, under penalty of disruption, to prevent them from reaching by their own act more than a comparative and inadequate liberty? And if ever the time came when a full freedom should be given to the Church, would not that be because society had first of all itself grown free and then liberated the Church? It is this apparently inherent element of impotency in the Church that may lead many in the future, as it has done in the past, to believe that a better service to progress may be possible outside its limits; and if the Dean's religion of the future is worthy of its name, it is not unlikely that its advent may be hastened as much, if not more, by extra-ecclesiastical than by intra-ecclesiastical influences."—Cincinnati Commercial.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 2.

Mrs. E. J. Leonard, $20; Jos. York, $3.20; Mrs. W. A. Perkins, $1.00; J. D. Cater, $3; T. Bush, $3.35; Jacob Stern, $3; Louis J. Doyle, $3.10; Arline H. Arnett, $1; O. Cloughton, $1.60; Richard Russell, $3.30; Cash in office, $1; L. S. Rappgood, $3.20; Mrs. F. Oyer, 10 cents; Lee & Shepard, $2.98; John Ahrens, $1.00; Capt. B. F. Ratcliff, $3; E. F. Blaisdell, $3.20; John McManis, $3.20; John R. Thomas, $1; Wm. J. Phillips, $3.50; J. M. Harrison, 15 cents; Dr. W. D. Coker, $2; L. E. Hopkins, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 7, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDOE OFFICE, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBOY, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. OGDEN, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, Editorial Contributors.

To THOSE who urge the sacred duty of believing the Bible implicitly and the sinfulness of disbelieving it, these words of Professor Clifford will be startling: "If a man, holding a belief which he was taught in childhood or persuaded of afterwards, keeps down and pushes away any doubts which arise about it in his mind, purposely avoids the reading of books and the company of men that call in question or discuss it, and regards as impious those questions which cannot easily be asked without disturbing it, the life of that man is one long sin against mankind."

MATTHEW ARNOLD, in his Last Essays, thinks that "traditional religion" is certain to disappear among educated minds. He says: "One cannot blame the rejection. Things are what they are, and the religion of tradition is unsound and untenable. A greater force of religion in favor of tradition is all which now prevents the liberal opinion in this country from following continental opinion." In this tendency of the time Mr. Arnold foresees a danger that, in rejecting what he calls "the religion of tradition," the people will also, on similar grounds, reject Christianity; and to avert this he argues that "the teachings of Christ constitute a true religion without regard to their origin"; that Christianity is a life rather than a belief; and that the precepts of the gospel, if obeyed, will bring the most complete happiness in this world, without any reference to any other state of existence. In this way alone he thinks Christianity will live in the future, even when mankind have abandoned all faith in its supernatural authority. But Mr. Arnold's aesthetic over-sensibility leads him into crudity of thinking here. The world will not stop in its radicalism precisely when he or any other man desires; and it is moving steadily beyond the witcheries of the Christian name.

A Boston paper, commenting upon "Pan-Slavism," said recently: "The distinctive characteristic of the Germanic race is that of self-government,—the material conquest of the globe, the revelation of man's moral nature, a magnificent part in the civilization of the world! The Slavonic character is genial, sociable, and peculiarly mild, possessed of a certain dreamy mysticism peculiar to the Oriental organization. The idea of brotherhood seems as prominent in the Slavonic as equality in the Germanic mind. The Russian peasant travels from house to house across the Empire, gladly welcomed everywhere as a brother; the German, the Englishman, the American recognize equality rather than fraternity as the fundamental principle of life. Which is best for the world it is hard to say; but the fraternity of the Slavonic race is found exemplified in the 'Mir' or village organization of Russia in the interest of the community rather than of the individual; which makes the advocate of Pan-Slavism claim that in the 'Mir' or communistic socialism the future happiness of the world will find its greatest development, while we of the Germanic race proudly claim that liberty under the law and equality between man and man is the distinctive mark, and has achieved the greatest triumphs of the nineteenth century. Whether fraternity as developed in Pan-Slavism is to make the glory of this century pale before the serene light of the twentieth century remains to be seen. Liberty and equality or fraternity—which of these is the greatest? Time will tell." Is it necessary to decide between these things, as if they were incompatible opposites? Given liberty and equality, fraternity is assured. If it does not, it is dearly bought by sacrificing the former. But Free Religion, laying equal emphasis on "Freedom and Fellowship," believes in both.

TWO VIEWS OF THE RESULTS OF THE REVIVAL.

The New York Independent of April 19 had the following article in its editorial columns, taking a very cheerful view of the results of the Moody and Sankey movement:—

Religious Changes in Massachusetts.

The Moody revival in Boston has been the subject of more hostile criticism on the part of the local press and public than has attended the work of the Evangelist in other places. The traditions of Boston have been supposed to be, and to a certain extent are, antagonistic to revivals as at present carried on in Evangelical churches. But Moody and Sankey, as our readers have perceived, have been by no means unsuccessful. On the other hand, a definite and positive good has been done,—quite as much, we believe, as that which had previously followed their work in other cities. First, there was the period of interest and curiosity; then followed a certain stagnation and falling off in congregations; but now the third stage—that of solid and practical and effective labor—has been reached. This stage, we believe, will continue to the end.

The success of the Evangelists affords a new proof of what we have hitherto maintained,—that Massachusetts, and even the eastern part of it, is no longer actively opposed to Orthodox Christianity, but stands by a large majority on the side of Evangelical faith. A large part of its wealth and culture still remains, to be sure, with the Unitarians; and another large part is indifferent in religion. To these should be added the various "free-light" elements, as represented by the Spiritualists, etc. But the Unitarians, whose sole strength in the United States lies in Massachusetts, are not gaining anything even in their stronghold. They are, on the contrary, losing ground, relatively and actually. In Boston the number of their churches hardly exceeds that of the Congregationalists; while their congregations on any given Sunday are surpassed in numbers by those of the Congregationalists, the Methodists, and the Baptists. Their old generation goes to church; but the new is drifting into indifference or a more positive faith. Very seldom is a new congregation formed, and, when one does set up an organization, it no more than makes good the dry-rot of an old one,—like the Brattle Square Society. Dr. Clarke, Mr. Hale, and the other ablest divines of Boston are seeing no promising generation succeed them. The Cambridge Divinity School, like Brutus' army, is but "poor remains of friends," and the better Unitarian pulpits have to depend for recruits upon stray converts from Orthodoxy. We know of no better chance for an Orthodox minister to double his salary and get a city church than for him to espouse Unitarianism. Universalism in all New England, where it is not positively declining, is becoming Orthodox; Spiritualism is stagnant; and Free Religion is finding that its adherents, when they get "above religion," do not see the necessity of propagating negation. Thus at Harvard the tendency is to put all religions on a level. It is no longer a Unitarian college, and its liberality has gone to such an extreme that now it rather takes pride in its semi-attached Episcopal Theological School and its growing Evangelical element. Last week it elected an Orthodox theological professor one of its five governing overseers. [The Independent has confounded the Overseers and the Corporation. Its statement is true of the latter.—ED. INDEX.]

Conversely, the Orthodox bodies are gaining. The Episcopal Church, during the last twenty years, has been a great gainer, at Unitarian expense; the Baptists now have in and around Boston many churches of great size, architecturally and numerically; the Methodists are working like beavers, and reaping the reward of their toils; and the Congregationalists long since made good their losses of sixty years ago. In a word, it is an anachronism any longer to call Massachusetts and Boston anything but a stronghold of the Evangelical faith.

But Mr. Moody himself, and the ministers of Boston and its vicinity, do not seem to take so roseate a view of the situation, if one can judge from their statements made at a meeting in this city, on May 21, as reported in the Herald of next day:—

Ministers in Council.

The Evangelical ministers vote to keep Mr. Moody in Boston—Severe assault on Unitarianism and the Young Men's Christian Union.

At three o'clock yesterday afternoon, over three hundred ministers from churches of Boston and vicinity assembled in the Melbaon to take counsel with Mr. Moody on the proper course to pursue with reference to a continuation of the Evangelical campaign. Mr. Moody presided, and the meeting opened with prayer on his part. A number of letters were read from various parts of New England, giving the views of ministers as to the necessities and triumphs of the central and local movements, by which it appeared that the religious condition of New England is still an enigma to the holders of the fort. Measures of interest to the reverend fraternity were discussed at length, most of the speakers taking the position that the work was by no means in a condition to be permanently left by Mr. Moody.

After considerable desultory debate, Mr. Durant said that the proposal to keep the Tabernacle open all summer, and to engage somebody to speak in it from time to time, or to have English Evangelists come over in the fall and try to keep the spirit of religion and Evangelism afresh, was one of the greatest blunders that could possibly be made. Much valuable work had been done by Messrs. Moody and Sankey, and it cannot be too highly commended; but there is no doubt that, if Mr. Moody goes away now, he will leave the citadel in a defenceless condition. The work, to be permanent, must be more firmly planted, he believed. New England, not Boston, must be addressed. Let Mr. Moody stay here another year to assemble his forces for a grander and more vigorous effort than he has yet essayed. Let him study his territory, and change the infidelity of New England, and not Boston scepticism alone. Do not you ministers of Boston understand the case? It remains wholly with you whether he shall stay here another year with us, or go to Baltimore and leave the work here uncompleted. Ponder well upon the matter. The salvation of all New England, I believe, rests upon your shoulders; for I think there is no doubt in the world that, if he tarries here, that result must ensue.

Rev. George F. Pentecost indorsed Mr. Durant's suggestion with great heartiness.

Another minister spoke of the danger of the young converts becoming victims to the half-way stuff of Messrs. Clarke and Hale. Mr. Moody should remain, he thought, to preserve a healthy religious tone to these young people.

Rev. Joseph Cook said that, as virtue consisted in choosing the highest good before the next highest, it was incontrovertibly Mr. Moody's absolute duty to remain in Boston.

The question was then put to the house, and it was voted unanimously that Mr. Moody should come here next October, and remain until some time the following spring.—Mr. Cook suggesting that he might spend the summer speaking through New England.

Mr. Moody said he had not asked for this thing, and did not know whether the Lord would lead him here next fall; if he did, he would certainly come, although he had other work in view. He said he hoped they would excuse him, but he really couldn't see how any Evangelical minister could go to such an establishment as the Young Men's Christian Union and preach. He said that such unchristian conduct as that was leading a great many young men astray. The institution in question is already, as a direct result, recruited with large numbers of the young converts of the last three months, who have been enticed there by the arts of the management in getting Evangelical preachers to go and speak at their meetings. It was his earnest desire that this thing might be stopped, and that these deluded young people might be led into healthier religious ways than those of the Young Men's Christian Union. He told of the starting of one of these Unitarian establishments in Chicago, its insidious growth in this manner, and its present great strength. For Evangelical ministers to preach there was a most ill-advised piece of religious business, according to his idea. He could not affiliate with that church, and quoted from the New Testament a passage relative to shunning those who did not believe on the Lord, but refused his gifts and his salvation.

Rev. W. B. Wright, having spoken at the Union on invitation, felt called upon to explain in the face of this statement of Mr. Moody's, which he did. He had delivered a sermon there in perfect good faith and in reply to a Unitarian attack upon Evangelism. He believed he had done his duty as God directed him.

Rev. Henry M. Parsons, who had also preached there on several occasions, on invitation of Mr. Baldwin, attacked the Union quite severely. He said that Mr. Moody's view was quite right. It was the aim and object of the Union to get, by any means in its power, all the Evangelical members it can, and for this purpose its managers are all the time laying snares to entrap the converts the Evangelists labor so hard to make. A church, he said, is even now growing up in it, filled with this kind of captured people. They give out the appearances of Evangelism evidently as a snare, and try to make themselves seem as nearly Evangelical as possible in order to blind these young converts.

Mr. Moody said the Union was killing the Association. A few years ago it had no strength of its own, and now it is a very powerful organization.

It is voted to immediately proceed with the work of stirring up the ministers of New England to a thorough sympathy with the new movement, by committee if necessary.

What is the truth in this matter? Not only the Independent, but also all other Evangelical journals so far as we know, have made it a point from the beginning to represent the Boston campaign of the revivalists as highly successful; yet here are Moody and his co-laborers lamenting that the Unitarians artfully "entrap" the converts the Evangelists labor so hard to make." And it seems that Chicago is as dangerous a pest-house of Unitarianism, by Mr. Moody's own confession, as wicked and abandoned Boston herself. Certainly there is a half-suppressed wall of despair distinctly audible all through the report of this council of war, and most of all in the utterances of the general-in-chief. Who shall be believed, the jubilant Independent or the desponding Moody?

Probably neither the success nor the failure of the revival has been so great as has been imagined. If anything has been evident to those on the spot, it is that the Evangelists, in a really manful style, have been rowing against wind and tide. Their efforts have not been sufficient to reverse either the tide or the wind; and the moment they ceased their exertions, the "ark of safety" began to be carried down the stream again. It will take more than Moody and Sankey, at the head of three hundred or three hundred thousand ministers, to put the human mind back into that ignorant, benighted condition in which alone the doctrines they preach can appear either true, beautiful, or sacred. Failed they have, and fail they must, to make the intelligence of Boston pay homage to Orthodoxy in any shape.

Nevertheless, the revivalists have succeeded to a melancholy degree in reaching the unintelligence of Boston. The number of their converts is insignificant, as nobody knows better than they who devote their sanctified ingenuity to "inflating" the figures; and these very converts, it now appears, are slipping out of the hands that caught them. But Orthodoxy has succeeded in making a great public show of its popularity with the "majority"—that Dagon of the average American citizen which is worshipped more sincerely than any divinity of the churches. It is made more fashionable than ever to be, at least outwardly, a friend of Evangelical religion; and all who love popularity have received a very powerful and intelligible hint that, if they want to stand well in the community, they must beware of getting the reputation of being unorthodox. The Moody and Sankey movement is no success as yet, viewed from the fanatical stand-point of its leaders; for very few "souls" have been "saved." But, viewed from the stand-point of the practical managers who have kept out of sight, the disposition of the multitude to contribute to the support of the churches has been sufficiently augmented to make the movement by no means a failure. The churches will find consolation for the very moderate increase of church-members in the large increase of the number of miscellaneous attendants who do not join the church, but whose money is every whit as good as that of the saints. A movement which intimidates all the moral cowards of the community, enlists all the hypocrites, and attracts the immense multitude that care only for appearances, will, whatever its other results, certainly exert a large influence in extending that outward conformity which is all that Orthodoxy amounts to in so many cases to-day. Were it not for these indirect but substantial gains, we believe it would be impossible for the revivalists to carry on their expensive operations on the great scale now exhibited.

It is only in this superficial and misleading way that Massachusetts and Boston are becoming what the Independent delightedly calls them, a "stronghold of the Evangelical faith." Looking at the substance of the Evangelical faith—earnest belief in the doctrines of Orthodoxy,—this boast is groundless; for the intellectual disintegration of Orthodoxy is, as is well known, proceeding at an astonishing rate in the very heart of the churches themselves. Its most popular preachers, such as Phillips Brooks, W. H. H. Murray, Henry Ward Beecher, and Joseph Cook, are themselves shattering the Orthodox system. But looking at the mere externals of Evangelicalism,—its church buildings and property, the numbers of its nominal believers and its ecclesiastical organizations,—the boast is justified by facts. Its truth, however, is no proof of the vitality of the "Evangelical faith," but rather of an alarmed activity stimulated by dread of the formidable extension of rationalistic thought. It is easy to point out the relative decadence of Unitarianism in Massachusetts (though such radical preachers as Rev. M. J. Savage, who is growing daily in popularity and influence, prove that Unitarianism still has a message for the multitude); and it is also easy to point out the still more striking inefficiency of organized Radicalism. But all this proves nothing. The true vitality of Evangelicalism lies in the strength of "Evangelical faith," and this is relatively just as feeble in Boston as ever it was. In fact, Evangelicalism can only flourish in this atmosphere by coquetting with rationalism. It is spreading over the surface of society, but only by losing in depth and strength of conviction. The influence of science in undermining the Orthodox creed increases every day; it extends far outside the limits of existing rationalistic organizations; it is diffusing itself with unexampled rapidity throughout the popular literature of the day,—books, periodicals, the daily press; it is penetrating all centres of social life, and respects not at all the boundaries of the churches. This widely-diffusing knowledge, exposing the antediluvian character of the "Evangelical faith," is the real enemy to be confronted, and not the societies either of Unitarianism or a more radical type of thought. Does the Independent flatter itself that such heterodoxy as this is on the decrease in Boston or in Massachusetts? If so, it stuffs its ears with cotton and its eyes with mud.

Nevertheless, we concede the enormous retarding power of organization, when used in the interest even of exploded creeds. Organization is in itself a blind Samson, and does the bidding of whatever master directs its energies. But it is a dangerous servant. The very success of Orthodoxy in its reactionary operations will sooner or later teach intelligent liberalism not to neglect so mighty an agency as organization. To-day Orthodoxy is liberalizing into Unitarianism, while Unitarianism is retrograding into a species of boneless Orthodoxy. But by-and-by Radicalism will acquire a perception of its own duty to the common people, now left unprotected from proselytizing superstition; by-and-by it will become conscious that science is its own life-giving power, and will institute organized means to instruct the multitudes in spirit, method, and results of science. The slow infiltration of knowledge into the popular mind by hap-hazard will eventually be succeeded by systematic educational influences which are impossible without organization. Public institutions are already starting up in Boston which, though not designedly, tend to paralyze all the efforts of the "Evangelical faith" to perpetuate itself in the human mind. Every public library, museum, art gallery, lecture course, scientific institute, is undermining Orthodoxy in its very foundations; and no amount of exhortation or Tabernacle machinery will neutralize its workings. If the Independent wishes to study "religious changes in Massachusetts," let it not narrow its gaze to ecclesiastical Year-Books, but look out upon the vast array of educational instrumentalities already active in changing men's minds on religious subjects. Under the influence of enchantment, the Scandinavian god Thor imagined he was only lifting a cat, when he was tugging to raise the great Midgard Serpent that encircled the whole earth: Moody and the Independent fancy that they have no antagonist but the wilfulness of the individual sinner's soul, when in truth they are striving to break in pieces the enormous mass of the intellectual acquisitions of the whole human race. The "Evangelical faith" will never witness such "religious changes in Massachusetts" as shall restore its outgrown supremacy, until it shall have first succeeded in pulverizing the solid and slowly upheaved mountain of scientific truth.

A REMARKABLE ORTHODOX CONFESSION.

Mr. Charles Bradlaugh's paper, the National Reformer, in its issue of March 11, quotes from the Inquirer the following very remarkable confession of the Rev. David Watson in a discourse delivered in the Middle Church, Paisley, Scotland, to the Paisley Young Men's Christian Association:—

"The great, and the wise, and the mighty, are not with us. That I fear we must all own to, however much we may grieve to say so, and the more we read of the history, the poetry, the biography, and the literature of the age, the more will we think so. The best thought, the widest knowledge, and the deepest philosophy have discarded our Church. Not that they have taken up a hostile attitude towards us (some have, but not all), but they have turned their backs upon us with a quiet dislike, an unspoken disapproval, and a practical renunciation, greatly more conclusive than a wordy war would be. I do not mention names, it would be unfair to do so, for there is still a social stigma thrown at the man who ventures to disconnect himself from the common creed. But that does not alter the case one whit,—the great, the wise, and the mighty are not with us.

"The stern fact is, they do not identify themselves with the Orthodox Church we belong to. They are not even nominally with us. They look not for our heaven; they fear not our hell. They detest what they call the inhumanities of our creed, and scorn the systematized spiritualism we believe in. They step out into speculative atheism, for they can breathe freer there; their lungs are not compressed, and their humanities are happier there. But, mark you, they do not pass over into practical atheism, for however they hate the name of Orthodoxy and everything theological, their hearts are too large, and their souls are too religious—instinctively religious—to forget that reverence that is due, that living regard that is meet and fit. Some become practical philanthropists and philosophic friends of man by helping industry, extending knowledge, advocating temperance, inaugurating institutions that incarnate Christianity, furthering society in a thousand ways, reforming the manners, and making the men of time and clime. And if it be so with some, I make bold to say of all, that, more or less naturally pious, more or less consciously moral, they are all instinctively religious, despite their renunciation of our theological creed. They are all big with a faith in the ultimate salvation of man, a faith that inspires them to toil, and shames our whining cant. And yet these men—the master minds and imperial leaders amongst men—the Comtes, the Carlyles, the Goethes, the Emersons, the Humboldts, the Tyndalls, and Huxleys, if you will, are called by us atheists; are outside our most Christian Church, pilloried in our Presbyterian Orthodoxy as 'heretics' before God and man. Why are these and such like men without the pale of the Christian Church? Not that they are unfit—we own that; not that they are too great—we know that. But that we are unworthy of them, and by the mob force of our ignorant numbers have driven them out. They shun us because of our ignorant misconceptions and persistent misrepresentations of heaven, man, and God. They feel our evil communications corrupting their good manners; they feel our limited vision narrowing the infinitude of their horizon, and therefore, as an indispensable condition to the very existence of their souls, they separate themselves from us, and forsake—and greatly unwilling many of them are to do so—the worship with us of our common God."

To this the Inquirer adds:—

"We would ask our readers, is not that a remarkable utterance to come from a minister of the Orthodox Church of Scotland?"

Rev. Joseph Cook, who is so busy with the "concessions" of liberal thinkers, might with profit to himself and his audience quote the above extraordinary concessions of Rev. David Watson, from whom he needs to learn a lesson both of honesty and intellectual insight in treating the radicalism which he in part misunderstands and in part is viciously determined to misrepresent.

Communications.

WHEN PROOF FAILS, LOOK AT PROBABILITY.

BY CHARLES E. WHIPPLE.

Of what use is it to offer suggestions or conjectures in regard to a difficulty manifestly insoluble?

On the other hand, since the matter in question is one of the intensest interest, since it must more or less occupy the attention of every thoughtful person, and since, to many minds, the uncertainties attending it are a matter of constant anxiety and suffering, may it not possibly be advantageous for one who is at rest amidst these uncertainties to state, as clearly as may be, how he is enabled thus to rest?

The difficulty in question is the old, old, endless one of reconciling the existence of evil and suffering, as we see them in this world, with the assumption of unlimited power, wisdom, and goodness in God, and particularly with love, on his part toward men.

That a vast amount of evil and suffering exists, we know; in regard to the attributes of God, nay, in regard even to his existence, for want of knowledge, we are obliged to suppose or to assume.

The professional teachers of the popular theology pretend to know in regard to these matters; but when we inquire into the grounds of this assumed knowledge, we find only tradition; they hold as authoritative the opinions entertained and recorded by "them of old time." But recorded opinion is of no more weight than spoken opinion; to give it authority, there must be good and sufficient evidence; and the evidence offered us by the clergy falls far short of demonstration. It plainly appears that they also assume, instead of knowing.

Going to the opposite extreme, a few persons assume to know that there is no God! The pretension is ridiculous. To know this, omniscience and omnipresence would be necessary, and the people who announce themselves as atheists do not seem, or even pretend, to possess these attributes.

It looks as if, in this stage of existence in regard to God and immortality, we must take assumption of some sort instead of knowledge. The instincts of the human race forbid us to leave unregarded the questions respecting God and immortality. We cannot help thinking about them. It seems most reasonable to think of them in the light of a balance of probabilities.

Here the Orthodox dogmatist wonders, sometimes contemptuously, sometimes with sanctimonious pity, at the folly of those who are willing to trust their eternal destiny to a mere probability, instead of building, as they claim to have done, on "a rock," "a tried corner-stone," "a sure foundation." I mention this for the purpose of saying that their claim, like that of the Jews, of the Mohammedans, of the Brahmans, and of the Buddhists, will not stand critical scrutiny, and is worse instead of better for its tone of confident certainty. Their "rock" crumbles when the test is applied to it. We claim that, where demonstration is unattainable, probability is a very good thing; a far better thing at any rate than such assumption, however confident, as cannot bear impartial examination. We seek among probabilities expressly because their claim of certainty is not only improved but disproved.

The first of the probabilities to be considered, a probability so strong as to fall little short of certainty, is that no amount or carelessness of examination will dispel the mystery which essentially belongs to the two subjects in question. If God and immortality are ever to be comprehended by human beings, it is vain to hope that they will be so in this mortal stage of our existence. Whoever undertakes to circumscribe and map out the Creator, and to give an exhaustive catalogue of his characteristics and attributes, reveals thereby only his own conceit and incompetency. Any theory of God which undertakes thoroughly to explain and elucidate him is, for that very reason, untrustworthy, not to say absurd. The infinite must be beyond the comprehension of the finite; the Creator, of the created. In regard to these subjects it is in the highest degree probable that the evidence attainable now and here cannot amount to demonstration, and must be ranked in the department of probability. We will not fear, then, to confront the fact that the matters in question are, and must remain, unexplained mysteries, and that a balance of probabilities must decide our belief and our consequent action in regard to them.

The existence of a moral nature in human beings—the recognized fact that conscience first points out a difference between right and wrong, and then accuses and torments us when we consciously choose wrong instead of right—intimates very strongly the existence of a spiritual Father of the human race, a provider for progress and advancing welfare in the highest department of our being not less than in the mental and physical departments. History and observation assure us that there have been and are men and women preëminent in goodness. They are so because they have preferred right to wrong, have chosen to occupy themselves with promotion of the welfare of their fellow-beings rather than with personal ease, gain, or self-indulgence of any sort. They have taken this course, not through any endowment or faculty peculiar to themselves, but because they have chosen to use the higher rather than the lower department of those powers with which all human beings are endowed; as we others also might do, if we chose to do it. As a large amount of evil and suffering manifestly flows from the absorption of a majority of mankind in personal and selfish ends, it is plain that much of this evil and suffering might be removed or prevented, if that majority could be led to prefer and labor for the common welfare rather than for personal success or indulgence. On the supposition of a true spiritual Father, a Superintending Power, which, having arranged for man a beginning of education and development on this earth, designs to continue this process by successive stages to the ultimate attainment of permanent welfare for all, the facts above mentioned would be accounted for. Without such a supposition, they are unaccounted for. In taking God for granted, then, we have, so far, very high probability in our favor.

Let us look at what probability indicates in another department.

Our failure to comprehend God results from the difference between finite and infinite. But even among things finite there is abundance of mystery seemingly inexplicable. Science has explained many things about botany, but it does not explain why of three plants similarly green, one bears a white, another a red, and the third a blue flower. The author of Vestiges of Creation thought he could construct the solar system, if you would give him a vortex to begin with. But, if you must make a supposition out of whole cloth, why not suppose a God instead of a vortex? It is just as easy, and infinitely more satisfactory. Granting the vortex, and such success in its working as the ingenious author anticipated, you have only a lifeless, soulless system of revolving orbs. You cannot get from it the human being with articulate speech, a mind, and a conscience. Since we must suppose something, let us take a well-working supposition, competent to the function required of it.

But, the facts of evil and suffering on this earth prevent you from supposing God? Wait a little. What light does probability throw on that matter?

Suppose a sub-lieutenant, having caught sight of one corner of a sheet on which his general had sketched an order of battle, should assume that to be the completed plan, and should criticize it from his point of view of what a complete arrangement should be. Of course he would make enormous errors. Yet this parallel but feebly indicates the amount and variety of error into which a man would fall who should assume to sketch God's whole purpose and plan from the portion of it visible to him during half a century's residence on this earth, and should then, from his view of that purpose and plan, presume to dogmatize about the character and attributes of God himself.

Nobody is competent to assert either that there is no God, or that the course of events apparent in this world comprises the whole of God's plan. Then, the supposition is open to us that there is a divine plan actually in operation far more extensive, and far greater, nobler, better, than anything apparent in the minute fraction of it before our eyes now and here. If this were so, if our birth into this world and our progress through it were really only the beginning of an enterprise of vast grandeur and beneficence, our judgment of the enterprise and the Author of it would inevitably be subject to the limitations above suggested. A fragment, especially a small fragment of a great whole, must needs, when viewed by itself, appear partial and imperfect. A beginning, especially a beginning devised by profound wisdom for progressive development through a period indefinitely extended, may well appear unwise or impracticable to an inferior mind which sees only the beginning, and presumes to judge of the whole by that. These things being so, when the Divine character, and purpose, and plan are in question, we cannot be decently rational without bearing in mind that the finite cannot comprehend the infinite, and that an elaborately complex whole cannot be properly judged by a part.

I find in myself an inclination not only to assume the existence of God, but to think well of him; to expect great and good things of him; to presume him at least equal to the highest and best I can possibly imagine. Seeing here on earth a beginning of mental and moral education which in some cases already produces admirable results, with foregleams of more and better in the future, I please myself with supposing that this process of education is to go on in a progressive series indefinitely extending, in some part of which all human beings will attain, and thenceforth permanently enjoy, the welfare properly belonging to high mental, moral, and spiritual development.

This, if its realization can be accomplished, will be a work truly magnificent, fitly called glorious and divine. Why should I not please myself by supposing the reality of it? Nobody can know that it is not real. Though there may be varying suppositions, they are still only suppositions; and mine seems to me reasonable and probable as well as satisfactory, while the two others seem to me wanting both in plausibility and soundness. The atheistic theory is, in my view, unsatisfactory, improbable, and destitute of evidence, gaining such small plausibility as it has from the blunder of assuming that a part accurately and thoroughly represents the whole. The Orthodox theory is repulsive as well as irrational and improbable, and examination shows its foundation to be unsound, because false. Until certainty comes, which seems unlikely to come in this world, I greatly prefer, among possible suppositions, to take the best. And the very most satisfactory supposition possible has, in my judgment, both reason and probability in its favor.

TRUTH-SEEKING.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I cannot withhold an expression of my sympathy with the bold, noble utterances with which you conclude your able article on "The 'Authority' of Science," including your answer to Mr. Putnam. "Not without sacrifices, both inward and outward, can any one follow the ideal of the true." Your position is well illustrated by the story told by Father Hyacinthe, and printed on the first page of the same paper, May 17: "Lovers of truth must be prepared for the scorn of relations and dear old friends."

How few, alas, care for truth as much as they do for the traditions in which they are educated! The mere prevalence of an opinion, right or wrong, carries with it great force in the estimation of masses of people. What one thinks may be scientifically true, and come at last to prevail; but what the many think, though false, carries with it far more "authority" with common minds, and gets itself established in Church and State. I have been asking myself these questions:—

Is it easier or more rational and consistent to be reconciled and satisfied with the state of the weather in a time of drought—are we any more cheerful and hopeful,—when we believe that the weather is ordered by arbitrary will, by personal agency, which has inscrutable reasons for the drought, than when we believe that drought occurs by the coaction of natural, impersonal forces? In other words, are we necessarily happier in theism than we should be in atheism?

Am I any happier or more consoled for believing that my dear child is taken away from me by God, for reasons known only to him, inscrutable to me, than I would be to see and know the exact cause of my child's death in an inexorable and impersonal necessity of Nature?

What help or advantage is the supposition of personality or will-force behind the operations of Nature?

Is it philosophical or scientific to regard with reverence and to worship the operations of machinery, which to the ignorant are mysterious and wonderful, but to the intelligent are the pilant transformations of heat and gravity?

What evidence have we, not derived from consciousness, that there is any personality in the falling rain, or ascending sap, or opening flower?

I confess that I have not the unreasoning "faith" or dogmatic confidence in these things that I once had; and I have been waiting and watching for a number of years for the scientific evidence, if there is such. I have read with some care what you have written, and yet cannot help thinking that religion will get little help from science, and will remain, as it has been, more a matter of instinct, a habit, or feeling of the human personality, than a thing of knowledge. I should be pleased to receive more light, and am ready to follow the light, albeit to a higher theism, or to the much tabooed atheism. I shall not be the poorer for finding the truth.

A. N. A.

FAIR HAVEN, Vt., May 21, 1877.

A PORTION OF THE ORIGINAL MANUSCRIPT OF PAINE'S "AGE OF REASON" DISCOVERED IN LOUISIANA.

EDITOR INDEX:—

You will doubtless be surprised to hear, from this remote locality, of the discovery of manuscript, in a fair state of preservation, of such historical interest as attaches to all the writings of Thomas Paine, and especially to that small volume of great thoughts known to the world as the Age of Reason. But your surprise will not equal the astonishment of Dr. W. H. Gray and myself, as we sat down together on last Sunday and critically examined it, only to find that for the most part the differences between the manuscript and a printed edition (Calvin Blanchard's, of New York) were in favor of the former. With reference to grammatical construction, additional sentences, one additional note, underscoring of lines for purposes of emphasis, omissions of this emphasis when not required, the manuscript was superior to the printed edition. Taking this as conclusive evidence that it was not a mere copy, the great age of the manuscript, the likeness of the paper to that current at the period Paine wrote, the evident penmanship of a master hand or practised writer, as well as the following letter, enclosed in the package containing it, satisfied us almost beyond a doubt that we were perusing the genuine work of Paine's own hand:—

(LETTER OF JACOB WALTER.)

LOUISVILLE, Sept. 18, 1847.
This day I have spent very agreeably in reviewing some old relics—for which I have a great fondness,—among which I find a part of the original manuscript written by the celebrated Thomas Paine, author of Common Sense, Age of Reason, Rights of Man, etc.

The reader is to understand that this memoir was written by me twenty-five years after receiving the manuscript. I received it in 1822, and wrote this memoir in 1847. It was the best I could do from memory, and is substantially true.

The old manuscript is part of Paine's Age of Reason, said to have been written by him while in prison in Paris, France, during the reign of Robespierre. Now, as Paine was one of the great apostles of liberty and humanity, active and persevering in the days that tried men's souls in the great cause of our liberties, I thought some one, like myself, might be curious enough to desire to know how I came by this relic. It was for this purpose I made this note.

In the summer of 1822, I walked out to enjoy the evening breeze. I met one who invited me to go to church, and hear a celebrated lecturer that was to deliver himself that evening. I obeyed, and went to the meeting.

The man in the course of his proceeding took occasion to speak of Thomas Paine, author of the Age of Reason, in a most degrading manner. I waited with great patience until the lecture was through. I then rose from my seat and addressed the audience, begging permission to suffer me to set the lecturer right. The request was granted. I then called in a loud but mild tone of voice, requesting the gentleman that he should remember in future to use more benevolence and facts, instead of vindictive assertions, void of truth. I said I hoped the gentleman would be more particular in his next attempt at enlightening the world, and inform himself,—stick to facts, and do Thomas Paine justice.

I spoke for some time warmly and with much feeling on the subject. My course seemed to electrify the audience; this I judged from the seeming high state of excitement,—in the shouts sent forth. Paine's cause seemed greatly in the ascendant, while the poor scamp who had just before been abusing Paine in the most vile and abusive manner slunk from the crowd.

At the close of my appeal, a man came up to me. He grasped my hand, crying aloud, "Oh, how I love you!" He was in tears. Holding me by the hand, he said, "Friend, I have something for you you are worthy of, and should possess; I am not. I will wait on you to-morrow morning, and put it in your possession." And he, in accordance with his promise, did perform. He presented me next morning with this relic. As he placed it in my hands, he shed tears. At this I could not help feeling the warmth of his soul commingling with mine,—his sincerity was so demonstrative of truth.

He told me the relic was given him by his father, who was an intimate friend and boon companion of Paine's. Said he, "Thomas Paine gave it to my father as a keepsake, and (he) requested me always to respect Thomas Paine as one of the fathers of our liberty, and defend his character wherever I went."

At this juncture he sighed deeply, looking me full in the face. Said he, "I was at the church last night, and heard Paine much abused. I did not keep my promise with my father; but a stranger to me was there who did defend him and his sacred character. You, sir, was the man. Friend," said he, "I feel myself unworthy to possess this relic. I have forfeited my promise to my father. I will by this act endeavor to make some restitution to him who left me in charge of it by placing it in the hands of one who is worthy." As he uttered these words, he pressed the manuscript in my hands, and exclaimed, "You are a man, the noblest work of God." So saying, he went away. I did not know him, nor did I ask his name. I was much disconcerted at the time,—not collected enough to have done what I could have wished. It has been a long time, yet it holds a green spot on memory's waste.

JACOB WALTER.

It will be remembered that, when Paine was on his way to the Bastille, he contrived to place in the hands of Joel Barlow, a boon friend, for preservation and publication, the manuscript of the Age of Reason. Mr. Barlow was at one time commissioner for the sale of lands for the Ohio Company. To make a connection between Paine's statement of the disposition of his manuscript and its passing into the hands of Mr. Jacob Walter, in Kentucky, as described in his letter, it would only be necessary to infer that a son of Joel Barlow was the transferer. Of course, this is only a suggestion. I have no data at hand to trace the Barlow family, and make the evidence of genuineness complete in every detail; but I hope some interested reader of THE INDEX may throw some additional light upon the subject.

While discussing the Centennial proposition to place the bust of Paine in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, Mr. John P. Walter (son of Jacob Walter) remarked that he had at home some of Paine's manuscript. Dr. Gray and myself agreed that, if allowed to examine it, we had better do so. Mr. Walter placed it in Dr. Gray's hands, with the result as heretofore stated. In quantity it comprises near two-thirds of the first part of the Age of Reason, about two pages being illegible from age and wear. It must be noted that Jacob Walter was a man of unblemished character; began life as a mechanic, and died possessing a fair fortune. The package of manuscript was found among his effects on his decease, accompanied by the letter given above, as an explanation of the manner in which it came into his possession. His son, John P. Walter, preserved the manuscript along with a number of other relics, such as continental currency, English bank-notes, etc. If it is deemed of sufficient interest by any reader of this to make further inquiries, he will be the proper person to address.

Very respectfully,
EMERSON BENTLEY.

MORGAN CITY, La., May 22, 1877.

GRASSHOPPER RESOLUTIONS.

ENTERPRISE, Kan., May 6, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

There are blasphemous people out here, veritable fighters against God. Last fall God sent swarms of grasshoppers to deposit untold numbers of eggs. This spring, when the young 'hoppers began to come out, the people actually called meetings, whereas and resolved that, notwithstanding the fact that God Almighty had sent the 'hoppers for purposes of infinite good, they would fight them to extermination. "Oh consistency, thou art a jewel." Carlyle truly remarks: "It is impossible to over-estimate the stupidity of mankind."

For the edification of your readers, who hear so much of "liberal Kansas," I append a few resolutions offered by Mr. C. W. Abbey and adopted at one of the grasshopper-meetings, and published in one of the county papers:—

"WHEREAS, In the infinite goodness of an all-wise Creator the grasshopper has been permitted to deposit vast quantities of eggs in the ground in this our adopted and much beloved country; and

"WHEREAS, Their eggs are hatching by the million, and the young devils (the 'hoppers) will, if unmolested, devastate the face of this fair domain; therefore be it

"Resolved, That, by the great Jehovah and through the strength he vouchsafes to us, there shall not a 'hopper live in this vicinity, if in our power to accomplish the result."

I must yet add that the Being who, according to belief of our Orthodox friends, sent the grasshoppers to punish us for our sins, has changed his mind, and is now taking the 'hoppers off through the agency of birds and cold rains.

Very respectfully,

"AMT."

CELEBRITIES AT HOME.

THE POPE AT THE VATICAN.

Since Friday, sixteenth of September, 1870, the white figure of Pius IX. has never been seen in the streets of Rome. On that day, for the last time, he walked along the Corso from end to end to disprove the report that he had secretly escaped from the city. He came as usual down the middle of the road, an attendant cardinal on each side, his chaplain with two other prelates following, and behind them a few of the noble guard, walking at a brisk pace, blessing the people who knelt before him with affectionate reverence, stopping from time to time to put his hand on some child's head who had run forward to kiss his ring. Then he crossed the threshold of the Vatican he has never since repassed.

The "Mount of Myrrh and the Hill of Frankincense" is the name given by the Italian faithful to the Vatican, and thither the tribes of the earth go up to offer homage and bring treasures to the successor of St. Peter, free to admit or exclude as seems good to him. The several entrances to the vast and splendid palace of the Popes are guarded by the celebrated Swiss, clad as of old in their parti-colored uniforms of red, yellow, and black,—save that those keeping the bronze doors of the Scala Regia and the carriage-entrance near the Mint now have their gay garments concealed under long gray overcoats, their helmets replaced by dark-cloth caps, and their halberds by "Remingtons." At the head of the great staircase leading into the court of St. Damasus there is another guard of some dozen of the Papal police, a new feature in the Vatican interior since 1870, and so much out of character with the associations of the place, that people were not surprised when one of the American pilgrims, mistaking them for the jailers by whom the Pope is supposed to be kept in durance, shook his fist in their faces and gave them a piece of his mind in most vernacular Saxon. But having passed the courtyard and entered the door leading to the Papal apartments, one recognizes again the once splendid pontifical pomp. There are the lay chamberlains in their resplendent Spanish costumes and ruffs, the Pope's attendants in their crimson-damask liveries, violet-clad monsignors, and monks and friars, who startle one by their resemblance to princes and potentates in disguise, until one remembers they are generals of orders.

Pius IX. sleeps in one of the smallest of the eleven thousand rooms at his command. A narrow, humble bed without curtains or drapery—something similar to those used in seminaries for school-boys,—a sofa, two or three common chairs, and a writing-table are all the articles of furniture; few and simple enough for a Capuchin. There is not even a rug by the bedside to cover the floor of red tiles, not in the best repair. "Take care how you step; there is a brick loose," said the Pope to a Turinese ecclesiastic, who was admitted to his presence the other day when he was confined to bed, and whose eyesight he knew was not as good as his own. Winter and summer alike the Pope gets up soon after five o'clock, seldom or never later than half-past, and after he has finished dressing remains about an hour and a half alone, passing his time in prayer and meditation. At half-past seven exactly he leaves his room, and accompanied by his attendants proceeds to the private chapel near his apartment, where first he celebrates a mass himself and then attends another said by one of his chaplains. At half-past eight he takes a cup of black coffee with some dry bread, and by a quarter to nine, or thereabouts, he has entered his study (a small one-windowed room looking towards the Piazza of St. Peter's, and commanding the view beyond the Janiculum) and commenced the work of the day. The floor is covered with a common carpet; there are some red chairs; and the one principal piece of furniture, the large writing-table, on which, amid a mass of papers, stand a crucifix, a statuette of the Immaculate Conception, a timepiece, and an inkstand. As soon as the Pope has seated himself in his straight-backed chair, the Cardinal-Secretary of State, the ascetic Simeoni, enters with the correspondence of the day, and the oblations, often amounting to thousands of francs, laid the day before at the feet of His Holiness.

Next comes the post-bag, and with it the Pope's two private secretaries, Monsignor Mercurelli, whose duty it is to write the Brevi ai Principi (letters addressed to royal personages), and Monsignor Nocella, who has the charge of all the other correspondence included under the name of Lettere Latine. As the petitions are read, Pius IX. sits with his quill-pen in hand, and writes his sovereign will on each in turn—"Qualora la cassa non sia esasta il reverendo Teologo somministrerà lire duecento;" "Lire 150, solito tesoriere, solita cassa;"—in clear, round, well-formed letters. After this commence the official audiences: with cardinals; ambassadors who have letters of credence or recall to present; bishops or laymen of distinction, whose special qualification for the time is that of leaders of a pilgrimage to the feet of the Holy Father; and with royal personages. If the interview is of the last-named character, a trifling alteration has to be made in the narrow quarters occupied by the owner of eleven thousand rooms. The writing-table has to be removed from the study to give sufficient space, and—as, for instance, when the Prince and Princess of Wales were received—a gilt arm-chair is placed on each side, but somewhat in front of that occupied by the Pope. But the gilt armchairs have never yet been occupied by the King of Italy or the Prince or Princess of Piedmont. Notwithstanding all their expressions of respect, Pius IX. has never consented to receive His Majesty Victor Emanuel or any member of the Royal family of Italy. As midday approaches, the vast ante-chamber becomes peopled with cardinals, prelates, lay chamberlains, camerieri segreti di spada e cappa, and the one or two of the Roman nobles whose daily turn it may be, waiting to attend His Holiness while giving the semi-public audiences which are almost, without exception, daily events.

Pius IX. has never been given to posing; he used to take his snuff and unfold his blue-checked-linen handkerchief with perfect indifference while seated upon his throne, the centre of the grandest ceremonies; but he might almost be conscious of the effect he produces as he pauses in full sight of every one for a moment on entering the Loggia. He stands a venerable figure, clothed entirely in white—no scrap of color save the tips of his red slippers, and the plain gold chain and cross hanging from his neck,—the very picture of a grand, good old man whose heart is overflowing with benevolence, set on a background of scarlet and purple-draped stately cardinals and violet monsignori. It is a tableau once seen never to be forgotten. According to the etiquette of the Papal Court, the visitors kneel as His Holiness approaches. By his side walks the monsignore in attendance, who, armed with a list of names, presents each person in turn. "Santità, Monsieur e Madame Tola e Mademoiselle Azé, Ingleses"; and while Mr. and Mrs. Taylor and Miss Harvey kneel and kiss the ring upon his finger, the Pope says a few kind words. But woe betide those whose hot Protestant prejudices accompany them into the Pontifical presence-chamber! "I perceive we have some new additions here to the Vatican gallery of statues," was the remark made by Pius IX. as, on one occasion, he passed by some ladies whose consciences forbade them to kneel where their curiosity ought never to have taken them; and pungent indeed is the Pope's wit whenever he feels called upon to use it in reproof. Soon after he had issued condemnations of the excesses in female attire, some Italian ladies appeared at an audience with their heads dressed remarkably high. "Santità, le Signorine Guerrieri" (Anglicé, Warriors), said Monsignore. "I had already recognized them by the helmets," replied His Holiness. To foreigners he speaks in fluent French. He calls them all his children, even the members of those churches which, at the Reformation, separated themselves from the Roman Communion. "They divorced themselves," he says, "from the successor of St. Peter; but their children are none the less his." When the audience is composed entirely of Italians, his manner becomes more familiar and chatty. A lady came away enchanted at Pio Nono having told her she was more like her daughter's sister than her mother. "E quella," asked the Pope, indicating a remarkably small woman, "la cassa de statura o de età (is she short of years or of inches)?"

After the Pope has passed up one side and down the other of the two lines in which the strangers are ranged, he goes as nearly as possible to the middle, and delivers a brief exhortation. His audience is a mixed one, and he uses words which may be profitable to all and hurtful to the feelings of none. On the very last occasion he reminded them how rapidly their days were passing, while eternity remained immutable. With the audiences the morning's work is ended, and the Pope passes along the Loggia to one of the small rooms adjoining the great hall of the library, and there holds what is called his "circle," to join which he has generally invited some one or other of the more distinguished ecclesiastics or laymen who were received at the special audiences. A chair is placed for the Pope on the middle line of the floor toward the end, the cardinals present sit on each side of him, while all others are ranged at the long reading-desks rising behind each other in two rows. There the conversation becomes more or less general. The topics of the day—the unhappy condition of the times, and the iniquities of modern governments, the Italian and German in particular—are discussed, and the Pope, informed of the minor events of the hour. Baron Visconti will give His Holiness an account of the last archeological discovery; the Commendatore Rossi will describe the newest results of his explorations in the catacombs; or Monsignore Nardi set forth the articles of some bill against the Church or clergy just laid before the Italian Parliament. Not unfrequently the conversation leads to the Pope recounting incidents of his early life, as when, not long ago, the presence of the bishops who had come over with a pilgrimage from South America elicited from him a description, first, of the tempestuous voyage he made to Chili in 1823, when, embarking at Leghorn on the fifth of October, on board the good ship "Heloise," he accompanied the Papal Legate Monsignore Muzi; and then the hardships they endured on terra firma, where they were almost reduced to live on alms. Or again, when, soon after the battle of Sedan, he told of the political outbreak in 1827, when he was Archbishop of Spoleto, and how one of the revolutionists going to him for shelter, he took him in and aided him to escape. The name of the revolutionist was Louis Napoleon, and that was the only occasion when the two men, one to become Pope of Rome and the other Emperor of the French, ever met.

Pius IX. is Italian to the core, and witty, as in fact are all his clever fellow-countrymen, even when trenching upon the sacred. Many of his witticisms are historical, as when, on being asked by a devout lady, who was tearfully lamenting the misfortunes of the Church, if he did not fear for the "Bark of Peter," he replied that he was under no apprehension on account of the Bark, but he felt some doubts as to what might be the fate of the crew. When Cardinal Antonelli told him on one occasion that he had been recommended to try the Bagni baths for his gout, the Pope, jestingly alluding to the well-known false reports of Antonelli's brigand origin, said he thought his eminence would do well to act upon the advice, for he had heard it said the Bagni (which in Italian also signifies "the hulks") had more than once been found efficacious for members of his family. Sometimes His Holiness has got what he has given, as in the case of a yearly visit, some years since, to an asylum for the aged. According to custom the Pope recited the Lord's prayer; and when he came to the petition, "Et ne nos inducas in tentationem," a notably ugly old woman, who saw his eye fixed upon her, immediately took up the response, "Sed libera nos a mal-occhio," there is a vulgar tradition the Pope possesses.

At a few minutes before two the Pope rises, gives his benediction, and those present having kissed his hand he goes to dinner. The dining-room adjoins the study and bedroom, and in small size and plain furniture is in keeping with them. The Pope always dines alone, Monsignore Cennal, private chaplain, or some other prelate being in attendance, standing by the table, and twice a week the Commendatore Filippini, the segretario segreto. Having taken his seat—in this room his chair has a small canopy over it,—Pius IX. reads a few prayers silently, and then, punctually at two, is served, the menu consisting of soup and three dishes, of which he seldom partakes of more than two; drinking a little Johannisberg cabinet or Cyprus of the Commandery. But these good wines have been prescribed for him; until recently he never took anything but Vino del paese. Fried things he never eats. When the cloth has been removed, the red table-cover replaced, and the prelate in attendance has retired, the Pope places his elbow upon the table, his head upon his hand, and dozes for a quarter of an hour. After this brief siesta, he takes a few turns along the Loggia, and about three o'clock goes to his private chapel, where the Holy Sacrament is always kept, and remains half an hour in prayer; and then, according to the season, he either returns to his study, or, if it is very fine, is carried in his portantina down to the garden, which, it must be remembered, is somewhat distant from the Pope's apartments, and spends the time in receiving and conversing with what one may call a few intimate friends, chiefly those officials and prelates residing in the Vatican.

But the business of the day is not yet quite concluded. There are secretaries to be seen—possibly he of the Index Expurgatorius, who reports the opinions of the congregation upon some book to be entered in that bulky volume,—or semi-official audiences have to be given to bishops about to depart, or it may be to Cardinal Manning or Ledochowsky just arrived. When these are over, the camerieri segreti partecipanti enter; the Pope reads aloud from his breviary what might well be called family prayers; and then, it being half-past eight, he goes to supper, a frugal meal of one dish and a little wine. Pius IX. then retires to his study, on the table of which four wax candles are burning—no oil, still less the more modern substitutes are ever used in his apartment,—and spends the rest of his waking hours, until ten—his customary time for going to bed,—in strict seclusion and meditation. Then no doubt it is that he thinks over the arguments he shall use, and the biblical parallels he shall employ, in those discourses the consideration of which would be out of place in this sketch of the inner life of this successor of St. Peter, who has been the first to attain and pass those years which all Pontiffs are warned at their coronation they shall not see.—London World, April 4.

A GENTLEMAN, one evening, was seated near a lovely woman, when the company around him were proposing conundrums to each other. Turning to his companion, he said, "Why is a lady unlike a mirror?" She "gave it up." "Because," said the rude fellow, "a mirror reflects without speaking, but a lady speaks without reflecting." "And why are you unlike a mirror?" asked the lady. He could not tell. "Because a mirror is smooth and polished, and you are rough and unpolished." The gentleman owned there was one lady who did not speak without both reflecting and casting reflections.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
"13 to 25 "	"8 "
"26 to 51 "	"6 "
"52 to 100 "	"5 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1872.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. OLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
sy, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with 'dreadful interest'."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or $4 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS
ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Maloom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 30 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Bowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 30 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 30 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesiah Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 30 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 30 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 30 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1866 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
sy, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 30 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Drama.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Belwiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.50
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BRIDGES (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tail Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilisation in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 1 vol.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of the Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.50
CHERRY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A Series of Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.50
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.50
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.50
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE B.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Friendship.....	2.50
Rhetorical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.50
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.50
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURHEIM (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 8 vols., each.....	2.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.50
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.50
FIKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.50
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Effective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	.90
The Unknown River.....	.90
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Art.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Outpost Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Outpost Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 4 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.60
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Ball Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Salutes, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	4.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERB (ORPHEUS O.). Versifications, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.50
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.50
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 4 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1865. Thoughts suggested from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	3.00
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Discussions and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.50
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.25
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Homicide of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	2.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Universe of Man.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSETTI (VERISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
ROHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	12.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMITH'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them developed.....	1.25
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 3 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	1.50
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Great-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
1. The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
London, and novel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Skippetty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAYER'S (MRS. CHILL) Among the Lakes of Switzer.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Faraday as a Scientist.....	1.50
Faraday as a Preacher.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Faneuil Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vol. III. IV. and VI., each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Haunteries.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Little Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pamphlets & volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

251 Washington St., Boston.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each, $20.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 26 Broadfield St., Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $3.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $5.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $8.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MADAME FOY'S

CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year, And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY
FOY & HARMON,
New Haven, Conn.

DR. EDW. E. DENNISTON'S

HOME FOR INVALIDS,

ERINSTEIN,

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.,

WILL BE OPENED FOR THE RECEPTION OF PATIENTS,

ON THE TENTH OF MAY PROXIMO.

NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)...$1.50
CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION.....1.00
STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00
STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS.....1.00
BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND OTHER DISCOURSES.....1.00
LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER.....3.00
THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp., with steel portrait of the author) ... 2.50
THE CHADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. Octavo, cloth.....1.75
Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by
Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

233 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT C. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Free Thought.
EDITED BY
CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWO PENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.
Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $2.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

MRS. UNDERWOOD'S NEW BOOK.

HEROINES OF FREE THOUGHT.

Contents:

1. Madame Roland.
2. Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin.
3. Mary W. Godwin Shelley.
4. George Sand.
5. Harriet Martineau.
6. Frances Wright D'Arsmont.
7. Emma Martin.
8. Margaret R. Chappell Smith.
9. Ernestine L. Rose.
10. Frances Power Cobbe.
11. George Elliot.

BY

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

237 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.75.
Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
  - II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
  - III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
  - IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
  - V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1875.)
  - VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.
- Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $8.
- REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $8.00.)
- PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1873, '74, '75, '76, 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.50.
- FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!
THE INDEX for
1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874,
1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,
Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
  2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
  3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
  4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
  5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.
- This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....40
FIFTY.....75
ONE HUNDRED.....1.35
TWO HUNDRED.....2.40
THREE HUNDRED.....3.60
FIVE HUNDRED.....6.00
ONE THOUSAND.....12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 14, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 390.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental ideas on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

A "CITY FATHER" moved to take measures for purifying the lock-up from certain foul odors that proved the place to be unwholesome physically as well as morally. Another "Father" opposed this proposition on the ground of public economy, and sternly exclaimed to his fellow-official, "You are a sentimentalist, sir!" "Yes," was the dignified and crushing retort; "but the scent I meant was not the cent you meant."

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from Mr. William Little, Manchester, N. H., 111; from Mr. J. E. Louis, Milwaukee, Wis., 192; from Mr. Carl Doerflinger, Milwaukee, Wis., 20; from Dr. W. H. Gray, Morgan City, La., 25; from Mr. T. J. Atwood, Albion, Wis., 37; from Mr. L. A. Le Mieux, Seymour, Wis., 43 (making 171 in all sent by him). Total thus far received—8,273.

OLIVE LOGAN writes that, when Ralph Waldo Emerson was first in England, people thought he could not be "altogether sane," because he was afflicted with various isms—Unitarianism, Transcendentalism, Parkerism,—of whose dangerousness they stood in vague dread. Now, she says, many English people of position are Unitarians, though the prejudice against Parkerism is still strong enough to keep a certain "brilliant man" out of Parliament. She adds: "The objection most offered to Unitarianism in England is the demoralizing effect it is considered to have among those unblest with high intellect, the rank and file of humanity. Mr. Emerson, Huxley, Tyndall, Helen Taylor, George Eliot, George Lewes, Stuart Mill (while in the flesh) might search these philosophical rules and believe in their force and yet remain persons of the highest morality and commendable behavior. But how with the ignorant masses who are held in check to such extent as they are by the force of religious beliefs and it may be the fear of corporeal punishments hereafter?" The only parallel to this closing question would be to ask—what would become of the earth, if the old Hindu elephant that supports it should get tired and step off from the tortoise's back?

THE REVERE (Mass.) church case, which was explained in THE INDEX of May 24 by Rev. L. K. Washburn, receives further light from an account of another meeting of the society contained in the Boston Journal of June 8, as follows: "Pursuant to a warrant issued by the Parish Committee of the Unitarian church of Revere a meeting was held last evening. The call was signed by G. A. Tapley, Ensign Kimball, and W. S. Janvrin, the regular parish committee; but the opposition, or those opposed to the pastor, Rev. L. K. Washburn, had somehow got the only legible copy of the warrant—that originally posted on the church-door having either faded or been wilfully erased,—took possession of the meeting, Mr. Henry Spavin calling the assembly to order and announcing that only the old members or those who represented the parish a given number of years ago would be entitled to vote. He then called the members to vote for a Moderator, retaining the ballot-box in his own custody and allowing only certain parties to deposit ballots. Of course all this was not without vigorous protest, but a vote was declared, nevertheless, the whole number being 7, of which Ensign Kimball had 6, and he was declared elected and took the chair. The election of Clerk was then proceeded with, only the same members voting, resulting in the choice of W. R. Towle. Without transacting any further business the opposition meeting then adjourned and left the building. The regulars, who numbered about two dozen present, then organized with the choice of Jonathan Stone as Moderator and G. Arthur Tapley as Clerk. G. A. Tapley, W. S. Janvrin, and J. Erving Magee were elected standing committees, and G. Arthur Tapley Treasurer and Collector. A committee consisting of W. B. Eaton, J. E. Adams, and Rev. L. K. Washburn was chosen to draft by-laws. It was voted that all who subscribed and paid for the support of the parish and voted during the last parish year shall be considered members of the Society. The meeting then adjourned to Sunday afternoon next."

MR. CHADWICK's lecture on "Thomas Paine; the Method and Value of his Religious Teachings" (advertised on the last page of this issue), is a very honest and even anxiously conscientious attempt to do full justice to its subject. In the main it is successful, and should be thoughtfully read by every one desirous to form an accurate estimate of Paine's place in the history of religion. But candor compels us to say that Mr. Chadwick, with all his fine appreciation and liberal encomium, says some harsh things which we regret because we do not think them true. For instance, he says that Paine made against the Bible "charges of obscenity which fly back into the writer's face and brand it with dishonor." We must calmly take our place at Paine's side, and share the "dishonor"; for we believe that the Bible, with all its excellences, contains so much that is obscene and polluting that we have always shrunk from putting it as a whole into the hands of our own children, and have preferred to read to them aloud such portions as may benefit and not deprave their tender minds. "If there is one wilfully immoral word from Genesis to Revelations," says Mr. Chadwick, "I cannot now recall it. Whatever might be called obscenity is as innocent as the unconscious doings of a little child." Apparently the absence of immoral motives in the Bible-writers (which we are quite willing to concede) is regarded as decisive against the charge of obscenity in the Bible itself. But the question whether the Bible is or is not an obscene book in many passages must be settled on other grounds. If its contents are anywhere such as cannot be read aloud to women or children in decent society,—if pure-minded parents would indignantly refuse to put into the hands of their innocent child the foul stories which too often defile the Bible's pages, were it not for the partial paralysis of their moral nature by Orthodox superstition,—then Paine's "charges of obscenity" are true, and bring no "dishonor" to him—though he himself is not faultless in this very matter. Just discrimination loses itself in overweening partiality to the Bible when his charges are denied.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Cincinnati, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SARGENT,.....Boston, Mass.
 REV. B. F. SPENCER,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LIOK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEL,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYLER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COOLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Mrs JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 E. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATTHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIHAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMAN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quincy, Ill.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HAZEL P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The Trial of Galileo.*

BY A. MEZIERES,
 OF THE FRENCH ACADEMY.

Many points have been left obscure in the history of the double trial of Galileo, the details of which till lately were but imperfectly known. The important work published by Domenico Berti fills up some of these gaps, by placing before our eyes a collection of authentic documents taken from the secret archives of the Vatican. We have here no work of partisanship, undertaken in the interest of religious controversy, but an historical work executed with all the scrupulous care that is nowadays exacted in all historical researches. In France the question had already been handled by Libri, Blot, Joseph Bertrand, Trouessart, and Th. Henri Martin, the first two approaching it with preconceived opinions that aided but little in the discovery of the truth, while the others brought to the discussion a remarkable spirit of impartiality. But all of these writers lacked the indispensable elements of information which now, thanks to the labors of Domenico Berti, are at the disposal of the future biographers of Galileo. If we have suffered ourselves to be anticipated by an Italian in the publication of the documents relating to this famous case, we must attribute the fact either to the negligence or to the prudence of the French government, for we were in possession, for nearly half a century, of the valuable manuscript, the full text of which is now published by Berti. Having been taken out of the Vatican archives during the first empire and carried to Paris, this original collection was there seen by the historian Denina, but he thought it to be of no importance. Nevertheless Napoleon I. ordered it to be published, with a translation facing the text; but the publication, though begun, was not continued: only the beginning of the work was then known, and of this Delambre, the astronomer, gave an account to the Italian Venturi.

In December, 1814, according to the Duke de Blacas, the private library of Louis XVIII. received the entire MS. in the same condition in which it had been found by the Imperial government in Italy, and thence carried to France. During the early years of the Restoration, active negotiations were carried on by the court of Rome with the French government, to secure the return of these important documents. The government, though it did not positively refuse to comply, nevertheless delayed and procrastinated. It was not until 1846, after thirty-two years of negotiation, that the MS. was sent back to Rome, at the instance, no doubt, of Rossi, who himself presented it to Pius IX., in behalf of Louis Philippe. By the Pope it was restored in December, 1848, to the secret archives of the Vatican, and there it still remains.

All that was known of this MS. before the publication of Berti's work rested upon a selection of documents published at Rome in 1850, with many precautions, by Monsignore Marino Marini, sometime Prefect of the Secret Archives of the Holy See, and upon a larger work, in some respects inexact, and in others imperfect, published in Paris in 1867, by Henri de l'Épinois. Both of these writers take special points of view: they appear to be more intent upon justifying the judges that condemned Galileo than upon laying bare the whole truth with the boldness and freedom of an historian. Hence we can appreciate the motives which led them to publish only a portion of the MS. though the whole of it was in their hands. Did the court of Rome really suppose that these two publications contained all the documents pertaining to the double trial of Galileo, or did it think that the time had come for no longer hiding anything from the public? However that may be, at all events Domenico Berti, in February, 1870, was permitted to examine the MS., and even to copy it at his leisure in the room of Father Thelner, who had been officially authorized to intrust it to him. The present publication, therefore, was not procured by fraud, and, if the Holy See should have any occasion to regret it, at least it could neither dispute its authenticity, nor complain that the work was done without its consent.

I.

The interesting history of the travels of and the final destiny of the Vatican MS. is merely the preface of a far more important history, whose events we will endeavor to record impartially, with the sole purpose of unveiling and bringing to light the truth. Galileo, celebrated from his early years for the value of his discoveries and the brilliancy of his lectures at the University of Padua, loaded with honors at Venice and at Florence, and admired throughout all Italy, was pursuing the course of his great researches with the boldness of a man confident of his strength and of his fame, when certain slight indications no doubt warned him that it would not be disadvantageous, if he would carry on his researches in safety, to win the favor of the Sacred College. Accordingly he set out in 1611 for the Eternal City, without confessed misgiving, but with the ambition and expectation of interesting the most influential personages of the Roman court in his discoveries. He was nearing the decisive moment of his career. He had not as yet been disquieted by the objections of the theologians, though in prosecuting his studies of the constitution of the universe he was touching upon delicate questions which he could not expect to be permitted to discuss freely, without having first gained the sympathy, or at least the neutrality, of the Church. The court of Rome at that time exercised such moral authority in Italy, and especially at Florence, where Galileo resided, that people in some sense waited for her decision before they would accept the best-established conclusions in astronomy. The Grand-duke of Tuscany could not but be pleased at the discovery of Jupiter's satellites, announced in the Sidereus Nuncius; and he was all the more ready to believe, because these new heavenly bodies had received his family name; yet his own secretary had to admit that the discovery would never receive the unanimous assent of the learned world until it was approved and verified at Rome. There sat the Roman College, a regular tribunal, scientific as well as theological, whose decrees were law in Catholic countries.

*Translated from the Revue des Deux Mondes by J. Fitzgerald, A.M.

†Il Processo Originale di Galileo Galilei, pubblicato per la prima volta, Roma, 1876.

Galileo, who was a man of rare good sense, and perfectly conversant with the ways of the world, had in advance formed at Rome the best and the most powerful of relations. Besides, he came there in a sort of official capacity, at the grand-duke's charges, and he was entertained there by the Tuscan ambassador. Prelates, cardinals, princes, vied with one another for the honor of offering fetes and banquets to the most illustrious representative of Italian science. At the palace of Cardinal Bandini, in the beautiful gardens of the Quirinal, in the villa of the Marquis Cesi on the summit of the Janiculum, Galileo delighted a society of élite by having them contemplate, during the serene nights of April, the vault of heaven through the telescope which he had recently invented, and which bears his name. He awakened a genuine enthusiasm one day when, after dinner, he pointed his telescope toward St. John of Lateran, three miles distant, and enabled the guests to read the inscription upon the façade of that basilica.

His arguments did not equally convince all of those who were present at his astronomical observations, and who listened to the explanation he gave of the movement of Jupiter's four satellites, the inequalities of the moon's surface, and the phases of Venus and Saturn, and to the discussions he carried on with those who opposed his views. His doctrine implied the confirmation of the system of Copernicus and the demonstration of the earth's motion, which were no longer reserved for mathematicians only, but made intelligible to all by a series of experiments. Here was an innovation calculated to alarm the theologians. A system that might be regarded as inoffensive so long as it was only a mathematical hypothesis, useful to men of science in their researches, became a very different thing on being transformed into a physical truth accessible to the senses, and pregnant with consequences touching the plurality of worlds and the aim of creation. Hence the apparent triumph of Galileo hid from view perils the magnitude of which at first eluded his penetrating mind. While he was giving himself up, with perhaps over-much confidence, to the pleasure of success, and was yielding too easily to his habitual temptation to answer objections with sarcasm, the ecclesiastical authority quietly set on foot an inquiry into the Orthodoxy of his opinions. Cardinal Belarmin, probably in the name of his colleagues of the Inquisition, asked of the members of the Roman College (without mentioning Galileo's name) what was to be thought of the astronomical observations that had recently been promulgated by a distinguished mathematician.

This is the first symptom that we have been able to discover of the intervention of theology in the examination of Galileo's scientific opinions. The response of the Roman College was favorable to him; but, from that moment forward, the alarm was sounded, and the Inquisition never lost sight of him. Though the sovereign pontiff, to whom he was presented by the Tuscan ambassador, received him with great courtesy, not allowing him to utter even a word on bended knees, yet the Holy Office, even before he had quitted Rome, inquired of the tribunal at Padua whether, in the action brought against Cesare Cremonini for certain philosophical indiscretions, there might not be something to compromise Galileo. A direct personal attack, inspired by an overweening zeal, quickly followed these early suspicions. On his return to Florence, Galileo took up his labors afresh in the pleasant solitude of the Belvedere, placed at his service by the kind hospitality of the grand-duke; there he received his friends and pupils, who, on departing from these conversazioni, propagated his doctrines. At this a Dominican friar, Thomas Caccini, took umbrage, and, in a sermon delivered at Santa Maria Nuova, on the miracle of Joshua, he suddenly exclaimed, "Viri Galilei, quid statis aspicientes in celum?" The friar doubtless had heard of a conversation held at the court in presence of the Grand-duchess dowager Christine of Lorraine, and the Archduchess Madeleine of Austria, in the course of which Father Castelli, a pupil of Galileo, had endeavored to prove, to the great satisfaction of his hearers, that one might believe in the earth's motion without questioning the authenticity of Joshua's miracle. Upon this subject Galileo addressed to his pupil a famous letter, in which he precisely set forth the rights of science, at the same time asserting for religion its own. Here, according to him, are two separate domains, which are not rashly to be confounded.

"The Holy Scripture," said he, "can neither lie nor err, but it needs to be interpreted; for, were we to insist upon the literal sense of the words, we should find not only contradictions, but heresies and blasphemies; we should have to give to God hands, feet, ears, to suppose him subject to like passions with men,—to anger, remorse, hatred; and, again, to hold that he forgets the past and is ignorant of the future. . . . Inasmuch as the Bible constantly requires interpretation to explain how very different the true sense of the words is from their apparent signification, it appears to me that it should be quoted in scientific discussions only as the last resort. In truth, Holy Scripture and Nature both come from the Divine Word, the one being the dictation of the Holy Ghost, while the other is the executor of God's decrees; but it was fitting that, in the Scriptures, the language should be adapted to the people's understanding in many things where the appearance differs widely from the reality. Nature, on the other hand, is inexorable and immutable; she is not at all concerned whether the hidden reasons and means through which she works are or are not intelligible to man, because she never oversteps the limit of the laws imposed upon her. Hence it appears that when we have to do with natural effects brought under our eyes by the experience of our senses, or deduced from absolute demonstrations, these can in no wise be called in question on the strength of Scripture-texts that are susceptible of a thousand different interpretations, for the words of Scripture are not so strictly limited in their significance as the phenomena of Nature. . . . I therefore think it would be wise to forbid persons from using texts of Holy Scripture, and from forcing them, as it were, to support as true certain propositions in natural science, whereof the contrary may to-morrow be demonstrated by the senses or by mathematical reasoning."

This noble letter, the moderation of which would nowadays be admitted by every theologian, but which then gave out a dangerous odor of novelty, no doubt passed from hand to hand, was read by ill-disposed persons, perhaps fomented the agitation produced by Caccini's vehement assault, and furnished to another Dominican, Niccolò Lorini, an opportunity of denouncing Galileo to the congregation of the Holy Office. "Here," said the informer, "are propositions that seem to be suspect and rash, opinions that contradict the text of the Holy Scripture. Besides," he added, "Galileo and his disciples speak with little respect of the fathers of the Church, of St. Thomas of Aquino, and of Aristotle, whose philosophy has rendered so much service to the scholastic theology." The Inquisition, though search was made, was unable to procure the original of the letter, for Castellì had given it back to his master, and he prudently refused to part with it. The inquisitors contented themselves with an examination of the copy sent by Lorini, in which they discovered a few ill-sounding phrases; but, on the whole, nothing clearly contradictory of the language of Scripture. Still they continued to note the words of Galileo; they questioned two Tuscan ecclesiastics about the speeches that he might have uttered in their hearing; they scrutinized the letters he had published on the subject of observing sun-spots.

Galileo, though quite ignorant of the strict watch kept on him by the Inquisition, had a vague apprehension of imminent danger. To ward it off, he adopted the expedient of going again to Rome in 1615, and of pleading his cause in person in the quarter where a successful defence was most to be desired. It has been asserted that Galileo was summoned before the bar of the Holy Office, but they who so assert are in error as to the date. It was not till a much later period—viz., the beginning of his second trial—that he was ordered to appear in Rome. On the present occasion he went of his own accord, no longer possessed of the fearless assurance with which he made his first journey, yet confidently hoping that he would disarm his opponents by the clearness of his explanations. Perchance he rested his expectation of convincing them as much upon the graces and charms of his wit and the personal attractiveness which won for him all hearts, as upon the strength of his arguments.

Besides, he had taken more pains than even he did in 1611 to prepare the ground. He had, in urgent letters, rekindled the zeal of his friends, and had again obtained for himself all the external tokens of the official protection of the grand-duke. As before, he went down to the ambassador's palace, the villa of the Trinità de' Monti, where now the Academy of France has its seat, and, the day after his arrival, went into the country. What with detailed explanations made in the presence of numerous auditors, keen and lively disputations in which he plainly showed the weakness of his opponents, frequent visits to distinguished personages, brief tracts in which he demonstrated the truth of the Copernican system, he omitted nothing that could influence in his own favor those currents of opinion which judges themselves cannot withstand.

Unfortunately for Galileo, the tribunal of the Inquisition was but little affected by external influences; it imposed laws on opinion, and took no advice from it. The members of the Holy Office, heedless of the steps taken by the illustrious astronomer, and of the ardor with which his ideas were espoused by a portion of Roman society, went on quietly with their work. In examining the letters on the sun-spots, they found therein two propositions worthy of censure. On the 24th of February, 1616, they unanimously pronounced it absurd and heretical to assert that the sun is motionless, and that the earth revolves. The sovereign pontiff immediately ordered Cardinal Bellarmine to summon Galileo, and to have him promise that he would no longer uphold a proposition condemned by the Church. "If he refuses to obey," said the pontifical letter, "the Father Commissary, in the presence of a notary and witnesses, shall enjoin him absolutely to abstain from teaching that doctrine and that opinion, from upholding it or even speaking of it; in case he does not comply, he shall be cast into jail." Accordingly, on the 28th of February, 1616, Cardinal Bellarmine, in the presence of the commissary-general of the Holy Office and two witnesses, invited Galileo to renounce the two condemned propositions. After Bellarmine, the commissary-general again intimated to him, on behalf of the Pope and the entire congregation of the Holy Office, the formal order no longer to uphold, teach, and defend this opinion, whether by writing, by word of mouth, or in any manner whatsoever; if he failed to comply, he was to be prosecuted by the Holy Office. Galileo promised to obey.* On the 5th of March following, the congregation of the Index condemned the work of Copernicus until it should be corrected.

From these authentic facts it results that a certain number of modern historians are deceived themselves, or would deceive us, when they insinuate that the Holy Office meant to condemn, not the system of Copernicus, but Galileo's theological interpretations of it. There was no question whatever about theological interpretations. In neither Copernicus' book, nor in the letters on the sun-spots, is there a word, a single phrase, in which the Holy Scriptures are interpreted. If here and there in his correspondence Galileo, out of respect to religion, endeavored to reconcile the data of science with the text of the Bible, he never published these explanations. It was not upon these private manuscript documents that he was tried; and the only document that furnished a basis for the charge was a printed work, purely scientific in character, and having nothing whatever to do with theology. By no manner of argumentation can the fact be negated that a tribunal of theologians constituted itself a judge in a question of science, and decided it as an authority decides. The Holy Office did not forbid receiving and teaching the doctrine of Copernicus, on the ground that it was not yet demonstrated, as some of the apologists of the Holy See would have us believe. They would not permit it to be demonstrated; they pronounced it in advance to be "absurd, heretical, contrary to the text of the Scripture." Such is the whole truth about Galileo's first trial, and Domenico Berti sets it forth with much dialectic vigor.

II.

Galileo once reduced to silence by the act of submission to which he had subscribed, the object of the Inquisition was attained. No useless rigor followed the first procedure. Provided that the culprit spoke no more about the motion of the earth, the court of Rome would like nothing better than to make the most of a great mind that for a moment had gone astray, but whose genius and whose scientific flame were intact. After the trial, Galileo remained three months in Rome, and was kindly received by the sovereign pontiff. In fact, the rumor having spread that he had been punished by the Holy Office and obliged to retract and to do penance, he obtained from Cardinal Bellarmine a certificate to the contrary effect. All that was done, said the cardinal, was to forbid him defending or upholding the system of Copernicus. What advantage could it have been to drag Galileo down from the high position he occupied in the world's opinion? It was enough, for the purposes of his judges, if they could shut his mouth.

In this they supposed they had succeeded; but here they failed to take account of the overmastering impulse to propagate truth, which is the very essence of scientific genius. Galileo could neither erase from his mind a belief that rested on a demonstration, nor refuse to employ it in advancing to fresh discoveries, nor abstain from speaking of it with those who consulted him with regard to their own astronomical labors, or took an interest in his. In his retirement at the Belvedere, where, since his return from Rome, he led a more secluded life than ever, he received, as in former times, numerous visits, nearly all prompted by the love of science. He was still the recognized and admired head of the scientific movement in Italy. Why should he not converse about the cardinal proposition of the earth's motion with the young savants who came to ask his advice and to receive his instruction? A distinguished Italian narrates how, having spent a few days with him, after the close of his first trial, he heard from Galileo's mouth the exposition of the Copernican system, was converted to his ideas, and himself then converted Campanella to that doctrine.

Hence the submission of Galileo was only apparent. Later he was justly charged with having broken his promise. Still, he avoided compromising himself publicly, and in his first work, Il Saggiatore, which is a model of keen, clever irony, he hardly ventured to write anything touching on the system of Copernicus. Presently the election of a new pontiff inspired him with the hope that the court of Rome might relax its rigor. Urban VIII., of the family of Barberini, was a Florentine, a lover of letters, well-disposed toward the Academy of the Lincei, and especially friendly to Galileo, to whom he had addressed, while yet a cardinal, some verses conceived in a vein of eulogy. Galileo went to Rome to see him, had six long audiences with him, was presented by him with a picture, medals, agnus dei, and a pension for his son, and doubtless talked with him about the great subject which filled his mind. We can only guess at what was said by the two friends. Some authors assert that Urban VIII. then inclined toward the Copernican system; others, on the contrary, say that he demonstrated to Galileo the impossibility of maintaining the theory of the earth's motion. The truth is, that we know nothing about the matter. Neither the Pope nor the astronomer has given out anything about the nature of their conversations. Perhaps even, as we shall shortly see, they believed that they could agree, while differing from one another widely.

At all events, it seems that, dating from the accession of Urban VIII. to the pontifical throne, Galileo felt more free to touch anew upon the forbidden subject, under a different form. Was this the result of an overweening confidence in the friendship of the sovereign pontiff, of a too favorable interpretation of some friendly speeches, or of the impossibility of being silent while Kepler was speaking boldly outside of Italy, while on Italian soil one was constantly harassed by ignorant opponents, and, though one's hand were full of truths, one durst not open it and rout them? The Dialogues on the Two Great Systems of the Universe, which were destined to bring Galileo into so much trouble, show that, in writing them, he stood between the conflicting influences of a strong desire to speak and the fear of compromising himself. He rather insinuates his ideas with true Italian finesse than puts them forth boldly. He does not defend the Copernican system, but expounds it. He even takes the precaution of stating, in a preface, the rough draft of which had been sent to him from Rome, that the true aim of his work is to show that in Italy ideas are not condemned unknown, and that nowhere is this delicate matter better understood than in Italy. He carefully avoids drawing conclusions. The personage whom he introduces as the representative of the doctrine of Ptolemy, and as the defender of the belief in the earth's immobility, though clad in the strongest dialectical coat of mail, and though driven to his last ditch by the keen rally and the copious logic of his interlocutors, replies to them unmoved: "Your arguments are the most ingenious that can be conceived; but I consider them to be neither true nor conclusive." Father Riccardi, Master of the Sacred Palace, whose business it was to examine Galileo's manuscript, suffered himself to be half-way won by these exhibitions of innocence, and gave a permit for the work to be printed, though not without resistance. He afterward protested that he had been deceived by the author, and that some of the conditions on which he had granted the imprimatur were not fulfilled. At first it was agreed that the Dialogues should be printed at Rome; but at the earnest entreaty of Galileo, leave was granted to have the work done at Florence, where it would involve less trouble and cost to him, and where, above all, he could more easily evade the surveillance of the Sacred Palace. In this negotiation Galileo displayed a fecundity of resource and a force of will that show how important he considered the publication of his work to be. The chief fruit of his address was that he escaped a second revision of the text, which would have been made at Rome had the work been printed there. Galileo chose rather to deal with the inquisitor at Florence, to whom Father Riccardi had delegated his powers, but who, doubtless at the solicitation of the grand-duke, exercised these powers with less rigor than would have been used at the Sacred Palace. We can imagine the wrath manifested by the court of Rome; in fact, despite all its finesse, it had been outwitted by an Italian shrewder even than itself, by a fellow-countryman of Macchiavelli.

*In a work entitled Galileo Galilei und die Römische Curie (Stuttgart, 1876), Herr von Gebler disputes the authenticity of the document which states these facts. Berti makes a victorious reply to him.

Would Galileo have been so eager for the publication of his work, if he had foreseen the dangers to which he exposed himself by publishing it? The sovereign pontiff, immediately upon receipt of the book, in the beginning of August, 1632, was highly incensed, charged Galileo with having made an unhandsome return for his kindness, and would on the spot have referred the author and the book to the tribunal of the Holy Office, had he not been restrained by the importunities of the ambassador Niccolini, and his fear of offending the Grand-duke of Tuscany. "Galileo," said Urban, "has not acted without deliberation, has not sinned through ignorance; he was perfectly well aware of the difficulties of the case, for I myself have made them clear to him." These expressions of dissatisfaction on the part of the sovereign pontiff would seem to show that, in the interviews of which we have spoken, the two friends had touched on the delicate question of the earth's motion, and that, by a process of self-illusion quite natural under the circumstances, each had supposed he had convinced the other. The Pope was angry at Galileo, as at one in whom he had for a long time mistakenly reposed confidence,—as though a fraud had been practised upon him. This feeling which had broken the bond of their old friendship, explains the harshness with which Urban treated the friend of his youth. Nor had Galileo been less mistaken with regard to the disposition of the Pope's mind. He flattered himself that he should find in him an indulgent judge of his astronomical theories, while in point of fact he was wounding Urban in his most sacred convictions. Had he known that the Pope was so opposed to the system of Copernicus, doubtless he never would have braved the wrath of one whose power was unlimited, or affronted a tribunal from which there was no appeal.

On receipt of the Dialogues, Urban instructed a commission to examine the book and report to him. As soon as the report came into his hands, he commanded the inquisitor at Florence to communicate to Galileo a formal summons to appear in October before the commissary-general of the Holy Office in Rome. Galileo, then seventy years of age, and suffering from hernia, asked the authorities to take into consideration his age and his malady, and to dispense him from the journey. The Grand-duke of Tuscany interceded for him. But Urban would listen to nothing. Fearing lest he should be deceived, as he believed he had been before, he would permit no delay. He would not even believe the testimony of three physicians who attested the reality of Galileo's malady; he sent the inquisitor in person to him, with orders to arrest and bring him in irons to Rome, if he was found to be in a condition to bear the journey. Poor Galileo had taken to his bed, and, as was said by one of his friends, "he was more in danger of going to the other world than to Rome." He was not in a condition to be removed until January, 1633. The good offices of the Grand-duke of Tuscany attended him to the presence of his judges, and there the friendship of Niccolini accompanied him,—weak succors these in the face of such powerful adversaries. At first the ambassador's palace was appointed as his place of confinement, and he was commanded not to leave it; he went out only in order to submit to the interrogatories proposed to him by the Holy Office.

On the 12th of April he was interrogated for the first time. To begin with, he was asked if he remembered what took place in 1616, when he had to appear before Cardinal Bellarmine and the commissary-general of the Holy Office. Galileo admitted having heard it declared on that day that the system of Copernicus could not be maintained or defended, as being contrary to the Holy Scriptures. "It may be," he added, "that at the same time I myself was forbidden to maintain or defend that opinion; but I do not recollect, it is now so long ago." Whatever may be the interest now taken in a case so bound up with the question of the freedom of thought, it is not easy to believe with Berti that Galileo replied to this first interrogatory with entirely good faith. When a prohibition is issued in terms so formal as those we have given, upon so definite a point, neither the form nor the substance is ever forgotten. Ambiguity was out of the question after Bellarmine's warning, and still more after the solemn injunction of the commissary-general. Domenico Berti is in error with regard to the psychological conditions of memory where he says that it must have been easier for Galileo to recollect the conciliatory words of Cardinal Bellarmine than the threats of the commissary-general. On the contrary, what strikes one most under such circumstances, what impresses itself deepest in the memory, is the threats. How could any one forget words so simple, so clear, so menacing as these: "You are forbidden to maintain this opinion, to teach or to defend it, whether by writing or by word of mouth, or in any other manner whatsoever, else the Holy Office will take information against you?" These last words in particular must have buried themselves like an arrow in the memory of Galileo, nevermore to come out. He knew all too well what he had to fear from the Inquisition ever to forget on what conditions that tribunal agreed to take no further cognizance of him. The silence he kept in public for sixteen years upon the forbidden subject, and even the care he took in his Dialogues to give to his thoughts an inoffensive turn, might serve as evidence of the faithfulness of his memory.

The fact is, that the reason of Galileo's taking up his pen again to treat a forbidden subject was not that he had forgotten the formal prohibition. He might have made answer, with great frankness, that, though he had been ordered to hold his peace, yet he had not been convinced, and that, after so many years of silence, the need of proclaiming the truth had more power over him than the fear of disobeying. But it was not for a mind so subtle, nor for a character so wary as that of Galileo, to be tied down to a categorical declaration, and so to shut every portal of escape. He chose rather to use evasions with his judges, to plead extenuating circumstances, to produce the impression that he might have misunderstood, but that he had not acted with evil intent and with his eyes open. Even while undergoing the first interrogatory, he was still in hopes of finding in the sovereign pontiff some remnant of friendship, or, at least, of good-will; and this was another reason why he made an evasive reply, and did not compromise himself by an explicit admission of his offences. He appears to have believed, at this first session, that it would be possible for him to have a private interview with the holy father. Being questioned as to what had been said to him by Cardinal Bellarmine in 1616, he replied that some of the details of their conversation he could intrust only to the ear of the sovereign pontiff. This plainly was a request for an interview with Urban. His judges seemed not to understand him, or, if they carried his words to the holy father, they obtained from him no favorable answer; but, in the course of the trial, it became evident that Galileo could expect neither indulgence nor commiseration from his old friend.

All of Galileo's answers at the first interrogatory present the same character of ambiguity. On being asked whether, before he begged of Father Ricciardi license to print his Dialogues, he had informed the master of the Sacred Palace of his having previously been forbidden to treat certain subjects, his reply was that he had not mentioned that to Father Ricciardi, "for he did not think it necessary to do so, having no scruples, nor having supported or defended in his book the opinion of the earth's motion and the stability of the sun." It is not altogether certain that, by thus altering the truth, Galileo chose the best line of defence; probably a little more of frankness would have served him better. He was simply trifling with his judges and taking them for fools, when he tried to make them believe that, in his Dialogues, his purpose had been to demonstrate the "weakness and insufficiency" of Copernicus' arguments. The disguises in which the author clothes his thoughts fail to deceive the thoughtful reader. Throughout the work, the defender of Ptolemy's theory, Simplicio (in whom it has been wrongfully supposed that some of the traits of Urban VIII. may be found), is overthrown by his opponents' arguments, and made an object of ridicule by their irony. Surely, it was imprudent on the part of Galileo to deny the evidence, thus giving to his defence the appearance of double-dealing.

Nor did the resort to this course deceive any one. The three judges who had questioned him, unanimously declared that in his book he had contravened the injunctions of Cardinal Bellarmine, and the decree of the Congregation of the Index. Two of them added that he was gravely suspect of adhering to the doctrine of Copernicus. After the close of his first interrogatory, he was removed to the palace of the Holy Office, and there he occupied a chamber in the sleeping-apartments of the wardens, with an express prohibition of going out without leave. Here he had long and frequent interviews with Father Vincenzo Macolano, commissary of the Holy Office, an educated man of kindly disposition, and a friend of the grand-duke and of the Tuscan ambassador; Father Macolano took it upon himself to warn Galileo of the dangers of the situation, and to aid him with his counsels. First of all, he induced Galileo to submit without reserve, to admit his offences, and to repent. "I made his error patent to him," wrote the father commissary, at the close of one of their interviews; "he clearly saw that he had made a mistake; that in his book he had gone too far; and he expressed to me his regret in words full of feeling, as though he drew comfort from the knowledge of his error, and was thinking of confessing it judicially. He only asked of me a little time to consider how he might best word his confession." Father Macolano then looked for a speedy ending of the trial, and a less severe sentence. "When once we have Galileo's confession," said he, "the reputation of the tribunal will be safe, and the accused can be treated with indulgence." Evidently he expected that the case would not be carried beyond the first stage of inquisition, and that it would terminate by a special form of interrogatory, known as the "interrogatory with regard to the intention."

If things were pushed further than the commissary of the Holy Office either wished or expected, the blame does not rest with the accused, who, once warned, immediately resolved to submit. On being interrogated again on the 30th of April, Galileo confessed that, without meaning it, he had presented too forcibly the arguments in favor of the system of Copernicus, his intention all the while being to refute them, and that thus he might have led the public into error. He declared that he was "ready to refute the opinion of Copernicus by all the most efficacious methods that God might place within his power." These words, no doubt dictated to him by the humanity of the father commissary, had the effect of procuring for him some measure of liberty. That very evening he was sent back to the palace of the Tuscan ambassador, so that there he might receive such care as the state of his health required.

We must not forget that to the humiliation of repudiating his most cherished opinions, of belying his own thoughts, and of seeing himself treated as a criminal after he had, by his labors, done honor to his country and to mankind, were added physical sufferings of the most grievous kind. It is impossible to read without emotion the appeal he addressed to his judges at the end of his written defence: "It remains for me to urge one final consideration; viz., the pitiable state of bodily indisposition to which I have been reduced by incessant mental agony during ten whole months, together with the hardships of a long and toilsome journey, in the most inclement weather, at the age of threescore years and nine. . . . I confide in the mercy and goodness of the most eminent signors who are my judges, and I hope that if, in the integrity of their justice, they think that so great sufferings lack anything to make them equal to the punishment that my offences deserve, they will be pleased, at my entreaty, to remit the difference in consideration of the failing strength of my old age, which I humbly commend to them."

Among the hitherto unpublished documents contained in Berti's work there is one that is of the highest importance. This is a summary of the case, giving an enumeration not only of what was decreed but also of what was done. After reading a text so clear and so unambiguous on all points save one, while on that one it agrees perfectly with other authentic documents, we no longer find ground for supposing it was only on paper that Galileo was threatened with the torture, and forced to make abjuration. A decree of the Pope, dated June 16th, ordains that instead of a simple "examination as to intention," such as the commissary of the Holy Office had expected, an interrogatory* should be had with the threat of torture, if the accused could stand it; he is ordered to make abjuration, and condemned to imprisonment according to the good pleasure of the congregation. This decree was not, as has been supposed, a simple declaration designed to sustain the reputation of the tribunal for severity, while the culprit was treated leniently. On the contrary, it was executed literally, as is shown by the agreement of the documents concerning this portion of the trial.

On being interrogated for the last time on the 21st of June, Galileo was ordered to state whether he then held or ever had held the opinion that the sun is the centre of the world and that the earth moves. He humbly replied that ever since the decree of the Congregation of the Index, in 1616, he had always held and still did hold the opinion of Ptolemy to be "most true and unquestionable." This reply not appearing to be satisfactory, the father commissary insisted on knowing the truth, and wound up by declaring that, if the whole truth were not stated, recourse would be had to torture. "I am here in order to obey," replied Galileo, with some show of terror. The text of the sentence shows that he was treated more rigorously yet. "Inasmuch as it appears to us that you have not told the whole truth as touching your intention, we have deemed it necessary to resort to the examen rigorosum." Now, in the language of the Inquisition, examen rigorosum means just the torture and that alone: it is the law-term approved by jurists, and regularly employed in sentences which condemn the accused to the cruel punishment of the strappado. "In case the accused," say the treatises on inquisitorial law, "does not clear himself of the charges, recourse is to be had to the examen rigorosum, torture having been devised to supply the want of witnesses." In two manuscripts of the first half of the seventeenth century, both of them relating to the forms of procedure of the Holy Office, the expression examen rigorosum is pointed out as the formula to be employed by judges in ordering the application of torture.

*AUTHOR'S NOTE.—We interpret three obscure words in the pontifical decree, ac et sustinuerit, in the sense given to them by Berti. Th. Henri Martin gives a different translation, not without good reasons. The matter is one that will bear discussion. It is still undecided, even after the publication of the documents.

From the text of the sentence, from the pontifical decree already quoted, and from the summary of the acts of the trial, we might infer that Galileo was actually subjected to torture, if among the documents we found the official record (proces-verbal) of the examen rigorosum, as we find the official record of the previous examinations. The rule of the Inquisition was ever the same: the notary or registrar of the Holy Office was present at all interrogatories, and took down carefully the words of the sufferer; all the details of the examen rigorosum were recorded in a register, from the first intimation to the accused that he was to be taken to the place of punishment, down to the moment when he was released from the torture. On looking over the records of these dread sessions, we find all the words spoken by the sufferer while his clothes are being taken off and while he is being tied to the instrument of torture; all the replies he makes to his judges, all his pleas; every movement he makes is noted with cold precision; nay, even his sighs, his groans, while under the torture. "He was hoisted by the rope," calmly writes the notary, "and while suspended he would cry out in a loud voice, 'O Lord God, have pity! O Our Lady, help me!' repeating these words again and again. Then he was silent, and having for a little while thus held his peace, he began again to cry out, 'O God, O God!'"

If Galileo had been subjected to this mode of trial, the proces-verbal of the proceedings would certainly have been preserved along with the other records of the case. But, then, might not the examen rigorosum have taken place in the absence of the registrar; or might not the registrar, though he was present, have omitted to make a record? Both of these suppositions appear to be equally inadmissible, for they are in flat contradiction to all the precedents and all the rules of the tribunal. Neither can we suppose that the agent of the Holy Office suppressed the proces-verbal of the torture in order that both he and his principals might escape the indignation of posterity. This were gratuitously to transform an obscure, an irresponsible personage into an humanitarian philosopher who is ages ahead of the thought of his time, and who purposely destroys a sorrowful page of history. The most probable account of what took place would be this: According to all the treatises on inquisitorial law, the commissary was authorized not to inflict torture on aged men, or on persons suffering from disease, who might die under the punishment. The advanced age of Galileo, and his infirmities, aggravated as they were by so much mental suffering, naturally placed him in the category of culprits who were not subjected to torture. If he was spared that dreadful infliction, Berti gives all the credit to the humanity of the father commissary; he even appears to think that, but for the kindly intervention of Father Macolano, the sovereign pontiff and the Congregation of the Holy Office would have given over Galileo to the executioner.

Let us be more fair. It would be a libel on Urban VIII. to represent him as thirsting for the blood and pained with the sufferings of his old friend. The pontifical decree of June 16th has this important proviso regarding the employment of torture, that it should not be used unless the accused could endure it. When he expressed himself thus, the sovereign pontiff was perfectly well aware that Galileo could not stand such a trial, and he consented beforehand, without needing to be entreated by the commissary, to the omission of the torture. What, indeed, would have been the use of such extreme rigor? Urban did not desire the death of the culprit; he wanted to make certain that Galileo would never more speak or write about the question of the earth's motion; and it was in order to so strike him with terror as to insure his silence that of all the agonies of the trial he saved him only from the last,—the only one that would have been of no use. The Pope was not so cruel as Berti thinks, but neither did he give any sign of that compassion and indulgence toward the accused with which he is too often credited. This point is worth repeating, inasmuch as it is the clearest result of Berti's publication: the various phases of the trial of Galileo were not arranged with a view to theatrical effect, and to make an outward show of great severity, so as to intimidate the adherents of Galileo's doctrine, while, behind the scenes, the culprit was treated with kindness. The threat of torture, the abjuration, the sequestration, were realities, and not, as has been supposed, simply monitions addressed to overbold men of science. At first, the court of Rome did not concern itself so much about impressing the imagination of the public as about striking Galileo. Here was a rebellious subject who had once before been treated with the greatest lenience, but who repaid the indulgence of the Holy Office with the transparent irony of his Dialogues; who had set snares for the person appointed to examine his manuscript; who, at his first interrogatory, had made sport of his judges, nay, perhaps of the sovereign pontiff himself; he must now be reduced to silence for good and all, by conducting him, through a series of moral tortures, to the uttermost limits of terror.

At the same time the solemn form of his abjuration was calculated to prevent him from ever again inclining toward the Copernican doctrine. How could he embrace that doctrine again after he had openly pronounced it heretical, and promised, as he was compelled to do, to inform upon all persons suspected of this heresy? His judges, however, were not yet satisfied; he was feared even after his abjuration. He was confined at first in the palace of the Archbishop Piccolomini, at Siena, then at his own villa of Arcetri, near Florence, with leave to receive a few visits of relatives and friends, but on condition that several persons should never meet there to hold conversation. It was particularly feared that he would communicate with learned men abroad and in Italy. Father Castelli, his old pupil, in vain begged leave to see him, though he promised not to talk with him about the earth's motion. In order to protect all other Catholic countries against the contagion of his ideas, the Pope dispatched to all apostolic nuncios and to all inquisitors copies of the sentence pronounced on Galileo, and of his act of abjuration. At Florence his chief disciples and friends, especially the professors of mathematics, were summoned by name to listen to the reading of these two documents.

In shutting the mouth of a writer so gifted, so full of resources, so admired by the public, it was hoped that an end was made of the doctrine of Copernicus,—that dangerous doctrine which alarmed the theologians by displacing the centre of the universe, ousting the earth from its primacy and substituting the sun, and opening the way for hypotheses of the plurality of worlds and the end of creation. But the effort was vain. The theory of the earth's motion has survived all condemnations. It was not Galileo, as tradition would have it, that uttered the famous saying, "Appur si muove," but the general voice of mankind who, after his death, thus proclaimed the undying truth of his belief.

Here we will stop. We would not weaken, by any comments of ours, the importance of the documents we have been examining. It is a fixed historical fact that in the beginning of the seventeenth century the Roman congregations, assuming to represent the Church, and not disavowed by her, made themselves the judges of a scientific question, and decided it in a way contrary to the conclusions of science. The splendor of Galileo's genius and the commiseration inspired by his sufferings impress upon this discussion a tragical and popular character; but the emotion produced by his cruel fate must not blind us to the gravity of the problem. The great question was whether, in countries that were then Catholic and destined so to remain, science could free herself from the dominion of faith. The trial of Galileo, so far from retarding this conclusion, as is commonly supposed, on the contrary made it inevitable and urgent. So soon as the court of Rome saw how unwisely she had acted in deciding a question beyond her competence, thus laying herself open to the danger of being the next day convicted of error, it became her interest, no less than the interest of science, to distinguish clearly between the two domains, science and faith. If, nowadays, she avoids entering into scientific controversies, it is because she has been taught by experience that a decision might compromise her. Her authority could hardly stand after a second edition of the sentence in which she once forbade the sun to stand still and the earth to revolve.—Popular Science Monthly, February, 1877.

JOSEPH COOK ON GERMAN RATIONALISM.

Persons who depend upon Mr. Cook's lectures for their information about the present condition of religious opinion in Germany are believing that Rationalism is on the wane and that Orthodoxy is fast regaining its lost ground. While he has taken great pains to advance this idea in many of his lectures, in his last he has asserted it more positively and more in detail than before. He says: "I have not asserted that rationalism is driven out of the present life of Germany, or out of the life of the middle classes." Of course, the only fair inference is that rationalism is driven out from the life of the educated and upper classes. We think that Mr. Cook very seriously misrepresents the actual condition of things in Germany, and that the "peasant class," as a whole, are "Evangelical," and all higher classes very generally rationalistic.

While evidence upon this point is easily accessible, we have nowhere seen the evidence so fully stated as it is by Professor Christlieb in his great work on Modern Doubt and Christian Belief. Until the establishment of the Monday Lectureship this work has been considered the latest and best popular defence of Christianity. Professor Christlieb is quoted by Mr. Cook in this very lecture as one of his authorities, and so his testimony is of the highest value. The first chapter in Christlieb is "On the Breach between Modern Culture and Christianity": 1. Its causes. 2. Its extent. 3. Can it be filled up? Under the head, "The Extent of the Breach," he says (the italics are ours): "A look into our town churches shows at once the estrangement of the great majority of our educated classes from the Christian faith. In country places things look far better. There Christianity has a much greater hold upon the mass of the people; but agriculturists do not yet boast of any great degree of culture. But in the towns, whether you visit the lecture-rooms of professors, the council-chambers of the municipality, the barracks of the soldier, or the shop of the artisan, everywhere you hear the same tale. The old faith is now obsolete, and only ignoramus and hypocrites pretend to adhere to it any longer. But alas! all the factors of our modern intellectual life are largely influenced by a prevailing spirit of unbelief,—save first our universities and schools; whereas among our theologians the old spirit of rationalism is in a great measure overcome. It is quite otherwise among the teachers in our upper schools, and so also the semi-cultured teachers in our popular schools. Such being the condition of our grammar schools, who can wonder that few students at the universities, except those studying theology, should go to church? A large class of government officials are for the most part indifferent or hostile to Christianity. A further glance at our modern literature will exhibit the almost abysmal profundity of the chasm which divides our present culture from our Christianity. Our daily press, in far the largest number of instances, takes up a perfectly indifferent, if not positively hostile, position. Are not all of these signs of the times which exhibit the present breach between culture and Christianity as most deplorably deep and wide? It may then, I fear, be affirmed with truth that the great mass of our educated, and yet more of our half-educated, classes in this our German fatherland is alienated from all positive Christianity. Our diplomatists, almost without exception, the great majority of officers in the army, our government officials, lawyers, doctors, teachers of all kinds, except professed theologians, artists, manufacturers, merchants, and artisans, stand on the basis of a merely rationalistic and nominal Christianity; while the lower middle classes (always excepting the agriculturists and peasantry) assume a more or less hostile position toward it. The chasm is wider than most of us would allow."

The above extracts are condensed from seven large pages of Professor Christlieb's book. There could be no better evidence than his. One of the most distinguished of German Evangelical theologians, upon matters of fact within his own knowledge, his testimony is not to be questioned. In view of all this, what shall we think of the candor of Mr. Cook's representations? He must impeach Christlieb's testimony, or let his own stand as contradicted and condemned.

NEWBURYPORT, May 30.
—Boston Herald.

FROUDE'S "SHORT STUDIES ON GREAT SUBJECTS."

There is one essay entitled "Divus Cæsar" which, besides being of thrilling interest in itself, possesses particular interest as the ripe result of that spiritual pilgrimage which began when its author laid aside the last of the Lives of the English Saints he had written with Newman, parted from him at the Oratory door, and took the bearings of the wilderness before him in the Nemesis of Faith. From that time to this—thirty years,—the world has been enabled to judge the light, leading him only by the shadows it outlined on current interests. A growing detestation of Romanism, an increasing aversion to theological omniscentism, a dislike of confident philosophical systems, were from time to time traceable. But in this volume, for the first time, we have what may be regarded as the solid ground on which one of the sincerest thinkers and most accomplished writers of our time has come at last to rest. In the "Divus Cæsar" Mr. Froude begins by showing that the great philosophical and theological problems which are now discussed bore quite as heavily on the minds of men in ancient Greece and Rome as now; and there is not one solution offered now which was not offered then. The human mind has continually taken new departures to search after the evidence of divine existence and of a moral government, and it has invariably come back to the point from which it started, to meet again the stony Sphinx, with its never-answered problem, "If God or gods exist, why is not Nature moral; why do not the good have good things, and the evil have evil things; why does evil exist at all?"

It was known and felt by all men that moral government extended in the world only so far as the power of man extended; that where man did not interfere, Nature was cruel and unmoral. Hence the greatest men were deified. The successive deification of the Cæsars, the erection of temples to them, the consecration of months to them (July to Julius, August to Augustus), are traced with a masterly hand. When the deification of Augustus is reached we arrive at familiar and presageful elements. Augustus buried the recollections of the Civil War and the assassination of his uncle Julius in general amnesty. His reign was idealized even while he lived. He lived plainly to the verge of asceticism; banished plate from the Court; wore homespun, and brought on a reaction against social corruptions. He bore the title—inherited from his uncle—of Pontifex Maximus, and made the title a reality, reviving the canon of Sybilline Books, destroying apocryphal additions, and punctiliously fulfilling religious observances. Under him there came on a revival of religion. All the more because he did not suffer himself to be addressed as Dominus or Lord was he called divine by Horace and other admirers, and was deified as the son of God.

"On public buildings at Ephesus," says Mr. Froude, "he is found, from recently discovered buildings there, to have been described by the singular title Vios Theon, 'Son of God.' It is curious to consider that St. Paul must have seen these words there. The idea of sonship was already not unfamiliar. Nevertheless, notwithstanding his modesty, it is certain that throughout the Roman dominions Augustus was regarded, not only as the Son of God, but as an incarnation of God,—a præsens deus, a second revelation in the flesh of the reality of the celestial powers; and during his long reign, the harassed peasant, who at last could till his farm and eat his bread in safety, poured libations with unhesitating faith to the divinity of the Emperor. On his death the popular belief received official ratification. In the Fasti he was placed next to Julius. The uncle and nephew became tutelary deities of the fairest months of the year. Legends gathered about his history. He was found to have been born of a virgin. His mother had conceived him in a vision in the Temple of Apollo. The place of his nativity was held sacred. No curious visitor was allowed to intrude there. No one might enter, except to pray. A still more remarkable story was believed in Rome in Suetonius' time, on the authority of Julius Marthus, which it is difficult to suppose was not in some way connected with the Gospel history. A few months before his birth a prodigy was observed, which the augurs interpreted to mean that a child was coming into the world who was to be King of Rome. The Senate passed a vote that no infant born that year should be allowed to live."

Mr. Froude tracks this process of deification from this point onward through its phases of degradation until it sank to the mockery of Caligula beheading the statue of Jupiter, and setting a model of his own in its place; and still lower to Nero, who exhausted the enormities of vice. Then came Vespasian, heralded as having restored a man's disabled hand by means of his spittle, and who tried to restore the temples and altars which Nero had trampled. But, though Vespasian secured to Rome those eighty years which Gibbon thought the happiest mankind had ever experienced, he could not restore the dead gods. "The mythology was made endurable for a time by allegoric interpretation. But belief had become impossible forever. And again the question rose, Where was Providence? What signs could be found of a divine rule? Not in the Emperors. After the experience of Nero, that illusion was no longer possible. The Cæsars themselves required to be explained and accounted for in a universe precluded over by moral power." Then came from groups of Galilean peasants and fishermen the reply that held a "new life for mankind. In two eloquent pages the author paraphrases what he regards as the teaching of Christ, and the true solution of the problem. It is, so far as it can be condensed, that Christ virtually declared to men the mystery of life lay in their looking for the rewards of virtue and retributions of vice, where they were not to be found,—in the outward world. The moral government is within. The reward of virtue is to be good, not to be prosperous; the penalty of wickedness is to be evil. The divine ruler, he said, "is in the heart. He is in me who now speaks to you. He will be in you if you struggle to obey him and to do his will. To be happy is not the purpose for which you are placed in this world. To that man life has been most kind whose character it has trained most nearly to perfection." Such is Mr. Froude's interpretation of the moral teaching of Christ, which reached the heart of the Roman people and led them to invest him with deification similar to their Emperors, and cast on his shoulders the fable-broidered mantle of their gods. How far the man has been honored since then, and how far the mantle, is a question on which other essays in the book may cast some light.

M. D. C.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

GROWTH.

BY MRS. CHARLES E. RIDER.

From out my casement, small and high,
I watch below the surging crowds;
Or, gazing upwards to the sky,
Fancy I'm sailing with the clouds.

But, nearer yet than clouds or men,
Lo, clinging fondly to the eaves,
Are slender branches, which again
Their promise give of tender leaves!

But weeks have passed, till it would seem
These linger in coquettish mood;
Say, feel ye not the sun's warm beam?
For shame to loiter, when thus wooed!

The tiny bird doth build with care
Her nest, where she her young may hide;
But still the branches, long and bare,
Stretch boldly out on every side.

Yet, if across their tops I gaze,
A cheering prospect greets my eyes,—
I'm looking through a tangled maze
Of radiant tints and emerald dyes.

And denser still this maze will grow,
Till close the street I may not see:
The tardy leaves will come, I know;
At casement soon they'll nod to me.

And the same law, I ween, doth hold
No less o'er mind its potent sway;
Faint seemings may to truths unfold,
And hope to certainty give way.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 9.

W. C. Gannett, 10 cents; W. S. Cunningham, $4.80; Wm. E. Coleman, $1.60; J. L. Swayze, $2.50; W. F. Draper, $1.00; Eben Turk, $5; Hon. S. T. Douglas, $5; Mrs. C. M. Lawler, $10; J. P. Angier, $5; Chas. Ellershaw, $10; Jas. N. Clark, $3.20; Chas. H. Shepard, $5; Dr. F. Goodyear, $3.20; B. J. Turnbull, $5.20; Jos. Hayes, $3.50; Mrs. A. G. Cook, $3.20; V. H. Seaman, $6.50; Wm. Ellis, $18; Dr. M. Landsberg, $2; Chas. F. Wrecks, $3; Cash, $2; W. H. Sawyer, $2.00; Wm. J. Phillips, $3.75; Mrs. J. A. J. Perkins, $5; C. F. Woods, $1; P. W. Moeller, Treasurer Verein Vorwärts, $20; Joseph Knights, $3.20; Johannis Ellenbaas, $3.20; Mrs. Clara Neyman, $10; Dr. G. W. Topping, $1.25; J. L. Whiting, $1.75.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 14, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, Editorial Contributors.

REV. J. M. L. BARCOCK, editor of the New Age, has been prostrated by a sudden and severe illness in consequence of overwork. The issue of his journal for June 9 announces that this attack "will necessitate a suspension of the publication till his recovery, or until some satisfactory arrangement can be made." We are extremely sorry that such a misfortune should have overtaken him, and trust that his recovery will be speedy and complete.

FRANCIS MURPHY, the "Christian Temperance" revivalist and ex-rumseller, was invited by the Titusville (Pa.) Temperance Union to lecture in that place. His reply shows what a vile slander it is to say that ladies alone put the pith of their letters into a postscript:—

"With malice toward none, and charity for all."

CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE MEETINGS
OF
FRANCIS MURPHY.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19, 1877.

MY DEAR BROTHER: I will during the month of June deliver twenty (20) lectures, and as your people have expressed a desire to secure my services, I take pleasure in informing you that they may do so by applying at the earliest possible moment, to your Brother in Christ,

FRANCIS MURPHY,
Colonnade Hotel, Phila.

P.S.—My terms per lecture are ($200) two hundred dollars.

FROM THE Manchester (N. H.) Daily Union of June 2, we extract the account of another funeral conducted without the stereotyped formalities, as follows: "Nettie Keasor Little, the wife of George A. Little, who died on Sunday last, was carried to Warren for burial. All the ordinary funeral ceremonies were omitted and no minister was present. At the grave the casket was opened, and William Little, brother of Mr. Little, said that in accordance with the sentiments of the deceased and at the request of the relatives and friends he would say a few words. He stated that Mrs. Little was born in Belmont, N. H., Feb. 21, 1851, and until her marriage, Jan. 1, 1876, always lived in that town and the neighboring village of Laconia. She was amiable in disposition, loved by her family and friends, and respected by all who knew her. After her marriage for a year and a half her home was with her husband at Manchester. During her last sickness she was a great sufferer, yet she bore all patiently and with fortitude. She was anxious to live for the sake of her husband and friends, but often said if she could not recover her health it was better that she should die. She had no fear of death, for she did not believe the creeds and dogmas that make men cowardly of the future,—afraid of the unseen and the unknown. Of a future state she believed that we know nothing whatever. Whence we came and whither we go is an unsolved, and perhaps an unsolvable, problem. All that we can do is to so live that when we come to die we may feel that, if death ends all, we have lived usefully, nobly, and for the improvement and highest good of our fellowmen; and if there should be for us immortality, for which we all hope, that we should be the best possibly fitted to enjoy it. She died May 27, 1877, calmly, peacefully, like one going to sleep. 'And now we bury Nettie here in the bright spring-time, in this beautiful burying-ground; there is none more beautiful in New England. The little brook murmurs near; the rustle of the trees in the wind and the song of the birds are heard. The green hills and the great mountains around us look down on her grave, on which wild-flowers shall grow, and we leave her here, peacefully at rest, knowing that none who have ever lived can be better off than she.'"

TWO LETTERS ON THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD.

BROOKLYN, May 24, 1877.

DEAR ABBOT:—

Thank you for your careful answer to my last note. Your late discussions have awakened a few other questions in my mind which I should like to have you answer; in THE INDEX, if you choose.

It seems to me that, in your plea for a scientific basis for all religious ideas, you discredit the entire religious experience of the race. Do you not? You make it appear that all the religion of the past has been religion upon false pretences. Do you not? At best the beliefs in God, in Immortality, and in the Moral Law have been fortunate guesses so far, seen from your stand-point. Have they not? How can it be otherwise if we must wait for science to demonstrate these beliefs? Your own demonstration of the moral law in your lecture upon Darwinism and Morals I greatly admire and heartily accept. But how few have ever gone through the same process of reasoning, or can for some millennia to come! I must confess, I seriously reluct at this idea that the religion of the world so far has been purely hypothetical,—that religion, like the boots my friend had ordered, is "almost about to be commenced." You have arrived at God and Morals by a process of scientific reasoning entirely satisfactory to yourself. If you had not, you would be obliged—would you not?—to allow that in your belief about these things you might have been mistaken. Possibly a very earnest man might allow this concerning Immortality; possibly concerning God. But I do not see how any good and earnest man could allow this concerning Morality. Morality must be something more than "a pathetic perhaps" if a man is going to trust his weight to it in any extremity.

I can conceive an answer to my questions from the scientific point of view. Herbert Spencer, in describing the "Genesis of Science," shows that it is "no chicken," but began with human thought; I can conceive that one should say that God and Morals are not at the end of science, but nearer its beginning—that a very little science was sufficient to establish anything so potent. But I am not sure of this. I suspect that the genesis of morals was not intellectual at all, but emotional. And, any way, I can not think you would allow this. You always speak of religious beliefs as if they were still in the future; as if the world must wait for science to establish them. Meantime it is "saved by hope." Can you help me any in regard to these perplexities? For I am one the after-glow of whose Transcendentalism irradiates his sky perhaps a little more than the dawn of his Experimentalism.

Yours truly, J. W. CHADWICK.

MY DEAR CHADWICK:—

The closing sentence of your frank and thoughtful letter has touched me so deeply that I am impelled to throw overboard for once the stiff editorial "we,"—which is only endurable because it saves the poor editor from erecting in almost every sentence that obtrusive obelisk sacred to egotism, the columnar and toppling "I." You will excuse a little tardiness in this response on account of my recent absence in Ohio, and believe me when I say that the suppressed pathos of that sentence has made it reverberate in my mind all the while like a plaintive echo among the hills.

Although it is my hard fortune to seem insensible to that which makes Transcendentalism so dear to many souls, those who know me well do not think me such. It is my painful duty to warn those who linger too long in its Capuan climate that the decisive campaign demands their presence in other fields—that the imperial cause is at stake on untried plains—that the permanence of the religious convictions which Transcendentalism is content to wreath with roses of faith must be vindicated in the iron armor of argument. Truth to the heart must be made truth to the head, or it will not long, in these days of keen and victorious analysis, command homage as truth at all. Would that Transcendentalists had intuition enough to discern the absolute, inexorable necessity of an intellectual change of base, if they would defend successfully the precious deposit committed to their charge! In the end it might not, nay, will not, matter; but a melancholy defeat of uncertain duration might be escaped, if the leaders of the world's religious thought only possessed insight enough to read the signs of the times, and courage enough to accept, without reserve and without a dangerous delay, all the consequences of that Scientific Naturalism which they have already in part adopted.

But I must hasten to answer your questions, and will try to do so clearly and tersely.

"You discredit the entire religious experience of the race. Do you not?" Not in the least. Whatever can rightfully claim the name of experience must be allowed its full and just weight, when treated with the calm, candid, and patient consideration which the scientific method requires. Why, experience is all that this method has to stand upon; it is only hallucinations, unrealities, superstitions, baseless dogmas, false facts, that should be discredited.

"You make it appear that all the religion of the past has been religion upon false pretences. Do you not?" I should be very sorry to make it appear so. That religion and superstition have been dreadfully intermingled in the past, to the great detriment of the highest human interests, is what no careful student will deny; but the endeavor to separate them by the same method which has evolved chemistry out of alchemy and astronomy out of astrology should certainly not be mistaken for an attempt to prove "all the religion of the past" as either unmixed error or unmitigated hypocrisy. It is not science, but scientism, which displaces the past. Nothing that I have ever said or implied can justly be construed as indicating a contempt for the past so groundless and so unscientific.

"At best, the beliefs in God, in Immortality, and in the Moral Law have been fortunate guesses so far, seen from your stand-point. Have they not?" On the Transcendental theory, these three beliefs possess one and the same degree of certainty, and have only one and the same warrant—intuition. By the scientific method, they must be examined each on its own merits. I do not find the evidence equally strong in these three cases. It seems to me feeblest as to Immortality, though very far from being despicable or unimportant; it seems exceedingly strong as to God; while it seems to mount to positive demonstration as to the Moral Law. The strength of my own conviction in each case is proportioned to the apparent strength of the evidence. In each case the belief was originally a guess, like every other human belief; and the "fortunateness" of the guess should be to-day measured by the force of the verified facts brought to confirm it, for I hold no guess to be "fortunate" except so far as it is true. It is the very pith of my religion to seek truth for its own sake, no matter what its bearings on my preconceptions or wishes or hopes. Whoever is more attached to the old religion of implicit faith in established beliefs than to the new religion of conscientious, painstaking, indomitable loyalty to the true as such, makes a fatal mistake in toying with free-thought; he plays with fire. But whoever craves knowledge of the universe he dwells in as the only safe guide to a noble and exalted life, and as the highest reward of human exertion, will flinch at no sacrifice to secure it; he may possess an emotional nature of the most exquisite sensibility and even volcanic energy, but will persevere to the end in imposing upon it the law of constant subjection to Reason. In his estimation, it is always "fortunate" to know what is true; and what is true can only be determined by the tried and approved method of science.

Must we "wait for science to demonstrate these beliefs?" Yes, and No. Yes, if you refer to that universal acquiescence which depends on the satisfaction of all individual minds. No, if you refer to the individual mind alone. I cannot help it if long, close, intense, and persistent investigation is necessary to an intelligent conviction on these matters of high moment; nor can I wonder that few are capable of it. But the labor of the enterprise is the measure of the value set upon its results. I would not exchange the calm satisfaction in the conclusions I have reached thus far (though I hold them subject to revision or even reversal by any one who can show that he has thought more or examined deeper than I) for all the ecstatic raptures of the beatific vision. Yet I cheerfully admit that I "may have been mistaken" in all of these conclusions. What have I to fear? I hold these conclusions only because I believe them true; if I am forced to abandon them, it will be only in exchange for others that I shall then believe true; and I desire truth alone.

My dear Chadwick, few religionists comprehend the profound delight of having no "axes to grind" in the administration of this vast and mysterious universe—of holding in one's own hand the talisman of spiritual peace, the preservation of the integrity of one's inmost being. There is more humility in the "waiting" attitude, aye, more of noble and lofty pride too, than those can understand who shrink back affrighted at the thought of it. It is indeed a great achievement to "possess one's soul in patience." This may not seem very much to possess, if one is inflamed with ambition for external prizes; yet it is the one priceless possession beside which all else is cheaper than the dust of the streets.

"I do not see how any good and earnest man could allow [a doubt] concerning Morality." I have said already that to me the evidence of a Moral Law mounts even to positive demonstration. Yet if any man can prove to me that Morality is a mere illusory idea, and that utilitarian selfishness is the highest rule of conduct, I do not see why I should be disturbed; for he would then substitute a truth for a mistake, and would not that be gain? But no well-read man escapes doubt concerning Morality. If the necessarian theory is true, the words moral and immoral lose all special significance; yet that theory is stoutly defended by many strong thinkers. Have you always escaped doubts yourself, even on this point? To have no doubts is to have no thoughts, is it not? Perhaps the elephant, which first cautiously tests a bridge before "trusting his weight" to it, may teach us all that doubt is not the paralysis even of moral activity.

Holding as I do that the perception of all relations, moral as well as others, is essentially an intellectual act, and that emotion is always a subjective phenomenon which conveys no objective information, I cannot admit that "the genesis of Morals was not intellectual at all, but emotional," without being driven to admit also that there is no objective validity in moral distinctions. This seems to me the annihilation of the moral idea. Is it not?

The "world" must indeed "wait" for science to establish a new unity of belief on the ground of knowledge, replacing the old and lost unity of belief on the ground of faith. But active minds in all ages have outrun the slow march of the race, and anticipated its achievements. There is nothing to repress this activity to-day, but much to favor it. Once make clear to the forceful intellects of our time the path of future advance, and thousands will press eagerly into it. That is why I am so desirous to point out the inevitable future supremacy of the scientific method. No enthusiast can overstate the importance of the discoveries that will be made, when once the intelligence of civilized mankind looks steadily for religious truth in that direction. "Waiting" is only a fixed and eager gaze at the east when the rising sun begins first to tinge the clouds on the distant horizon. Your own poet-nature will tell you that there is a deep joy in that!

Yours sincerely,

F. E. ABBOT.

ECCESTIASICAL KIDNAPPING.

Passing recently through one of our city streets, I noticed a number of boys amusing themselves noisily in a game of "tag." "Do you see those curly-headed urchins at the right?" asked a friend; "they are two of Moody's spring lambs."

The lads thus designated were respectively of the ages of twelve and nine. I smiled to think that these innocent little fellows should have been enticed within the Tabernacle, but considered them only as specimens of those unfortunate children, who, instead of being tucked up in bed, or more profitably employed over their studies or domestic sports, were collected nightly a few weeks since by the youthful son and heir of Mr. Sankey, to confess their enormous wickedness in the sight of God, and gush in childish prattle about salvation through Jesus. I even laughed aloud as I was thus reminded of several youthful experiences of my own, in which play and prayer-meetings, gingerbread and Jesus, were curiously mingled. "But, seriously," my friend continued, "these little boys have really become 'lambs of the fold.'" "You do not mean that they have been admitted to the Church?" "They were made members of a prominent Congregational Church in this city last Sunday." "Upon profession of their faith?" "Yes, upon the profession of their faith in the dogmas of the Orthodox Church. They now partake of the communion, and are genuine church-members in good and regular standing!" Subsequent inquiry proved this statement to be correct.

Now what are we to think of such an almost incredible act of folly as this? What opinion can we form of a church which will admit into its full membership boys of twelve and nine years of age? Of course, as any sensible person must admit, it is most probable that the religious emotion which these lads have experienced is simply a phase of feeling more transitory even than an attack of the measles, and destined to exert only a passing influence upon the character. But let us suppose that it will be more permanent,—what, pray, is the idea of Christianity which these little boys possess? Certainly no more than this: that they desire to be good and to obey papa and mamma, while they have also a dim notion of being under obligations to Jesus, who is said to have died for them a great many years ago and whom they are taught to call God. But does such a simple sentiment as this make one eligible for church membership? Not at all. It is not under any such profession that these children are admitted to the Church. They have to pass through precisely the same ceremony as the adult convert. "In the presence of God, angels, and this assembly of Christians," they are required solemnly to profess belief in a creed, some of whose tenets are,—the Trinity of the Godhead, the Fall and Total Depravity of man, the Atonement, the Inspiration of the Bible, and the Eternal Punishment of the wicked. Think now of children of twelve and nine years going through the farce of assenting to these stupendous dogmas!

But this is not all. These little boys, scarcely out of their first trowsers, "solemnly promise" that they will "hereafter deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, wherein in times past they have walked," and will "give themselves soul and body, and all that they have, are, or shall be, unto the Lord Jesus Christ to serve him forever," etc., etc. Is it possible that rational beings can seriously receive such vows as these from lads not yet in their teens?

Unfortunately this important step affects not so much their present as their future condition. How will these baby church-members regard this action of theirs ten or fifteen years hence? It is indeed possible that they will grow up within the enclosure of the Church with not a thought of any more extended theological horizon than that by which they are environed in their creed. But this is hardly probable.

Young men are at present investigating the grounds of religious faith as never before, and this spirit of investigation is destined to increase rather than diminish as the years go on. If these lads shall come, in the course of study and reflection, to see the falsity of many of the Orthodox doctrines, and feel at utter mental variance with the creed of their Church, reflect a moment upon their condition. Are they to be blamed because their eyes have been opened? Assuredly not. Or are they culpable because their names are enrolled upon the church-register? By no means. They were led thither like lambs to the shearing in their years of immaturity. But is there any way of escape provided for them except that of a violent rupture of their church relations? None. The Congregational Church proceeds upon the ground that a person once a member of its order can be separated from it in only four ways: namely, by death, by a letter of dismission to another church, by excommunication, or by the erasure of one's name from the roll, if, after a certain length of time his whereabouts have become completely unknown to the church, so that to all intents and purposes he is dead.

Thus no other provision than excommunication is made for those who feel compelled to withdraw from the Church on account of a change of faith. But excommunication is a step which often brings much opprobrium upon the banished one, because the case usually becomes greatly exaggerated and misunderstood in the community. As no worse punishment could be served by the Church upon one who had broken its laws by the commission of gross immoralities, it is not strange that the sincere disbeliever who has been rejected from the Church should be loosely classed among the abandoned and reprobate.

Do those persons, then, who have aided and abetted the ecclesiastical kidnapping of these small boys, realize to what future mental agony and mortification they may have exposed them by their action? I do not use these words lightly. Those who have been through the mental conflict consequent upon a dissolving faith, with its accompanying struggles to be true to vows assumed in infancy, know that the expression is not overdrawn.

To conclude,—those who sincerely believe in the old dogmas of Orthodoxy are entitled to that respect from us which is due to the honest holders of any opinions; but those persons who, knowing the tempestuous state of theological belief at the present day, deliberately choose to swell their ranks by accepting the solemn vows of children, who could not legally assume any binding contracts, deserve the reproach and contempt of the community. It will not do for these saints to roll up their eyes and exclaim, "Jesus said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me.'" Whatever the kind-hearted Gallilean may have meant by these words, he certainly did not mean by them to require of little children an irrational absurdity; and a public profession of faith and the assumption of most solemn vows on the part of children of nine and twelve years of age is exactly that and nothing else.

The time may come when these lads will exclaim—as did a distinguished physician recently in my hearing,—"I was grossly deceived by the leaders of the Church into which I was cajoled at an early age, and the step thus ignorantly taken has been a source of pain and discomfort to me all my life."

J. L. STODDARD.

Communications.

A FREETHINKER'S VIEW OF APPLETONS' CYCLOPEDIA.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

IN THE INDEX of May 24, under the caption of "A Blighted Book," is found an article copied from the Lansing (Michigan) Republican. Complaint is made therein that great favor has been shown the Catholic Church in articles relating thereto in Appletons' New American Cyclopædia. It seems that Messrs. Appleton have met with no little trouble to adapt this Cyclopædia to the tastes of Protestants. When I became a subscriber to the new edition the agent handed me two special circulars. The first contained a letter from the editors, Messrs. Ripley and Dana, who, styling themselves "Protestants of the Protestants," replied to the charges made against them of "Jesuitizing" the Cyclopædia. They reiterated the pledge given in the preface that, as far as was consistent with the nature of the case, they would confine themselves to the "historical relation of facts without assuming the functions of advocates or judges." Then followed a justification of the articles "Albigenses," "Massacre of St. Bartholomew's," and "Thomas à Becket." One of the objections made by Protestants was to the effect that Rev. Dr. O'Reilly had written a letter intended to introduce the Cyclopædia to Catholic readers, assuring them that it was correct on Catholic subjects, and that the work was not conducted in a sectarian spirit. The second circular contained a list of fifty Protestant clergymen who were contributors to the Cyclopædia, embracing twelve denominations. Bishop James (Methodist Episcopal); Bishops Littlejohn and Williams; the Professors in Rochester Theological Seminary, and Rev. Samuel Osgood, D.D., followed with recommendations. The latter gentleman, in his enthusiasm, assured the publishers: "Your tone is higher, and God and Christianity crown Nature and history in your pages!" Who will not say, after such frank admission, that this work should be rechristened "Appletons' New Christian Cyclopædia"!

As for confining themselves to "the historical relation of facts without assuming the function of advocates or judges," let the reader examine the summing-up of the article on "Christianity," originally contributed by Rev. Pres. Barnes Sears (Baptist), wherein the astounding declaration is made that "the philosophy of government at the present day is preeminently Christian." Again, that "the theory of human and of social progress differs from ancient theories in having a Christian basis." While many are deploring just the contrary state of affairs, hear this special pleader unblushingly assert that "the literature of the civilized world is more and more a Christian literature"! He again breaks forth: "Christian civilization at this moment, more than ever before, seems destined to spread over all Asia, Africa, and the islands of the great oceans. The paganism of the world is evidently to share the fate of the paganism of the old Roman Empire, to fade away before Christianity, and become a mere matter of history."

Whether the foregoing rose-colored view is from the stand-point of the "judge" or the "advocate," the reader can easily decide for himself. It is easily seen why the Cyclopædia should find no place for "Comparative Theology" or "Comparative Religion." How fairly anything opposing Christianity is treated, may be seen a little farther on in the same article, when, incidentally alluding to the condition of Germany, he says: "That false rationalism which is essentially at variance with Christianity, deistically denying whatever is supernatural, has been already overcome." "Deistically denying" is a strange phrase; the more so, since it has not been deemed worth while to give a separate article under the head of "Deism." The article on "Atheism," found in the edition of 1863, has been entirely omitted in the new edition. A general "toning down" may be observed. While the edition of 1863 called Jefferson an "infidel," the last edition would lead us to believe that he was a Christian of some sort. Of Gerrit Smith it is said: "His originally Orthodox views underwent great changes, but he is said to have finally returned to them." "Is said" can hardly be classed with the "historical relation of facts," as set forth in the preface. Of Garrison it is said that, at the course of lectures delivered in Abner Kneeland's hall, he "took care at the same time to avow his faith in Christianity as the power which alone could break the bonds of the slave." Of Mr. Garrison's later views not a word is said. Obscure clergymen are noticed, while Robert Collyer has been overlooked. Stephen Pearl Andrews has also been omitted. A short article is devoted to George Jacob Holyoake, while so prominent a character as Charles Bradlaugh would seem to have been purposely omitted. Truly, one would suppose from an examination of this Cyclopædia that Christianity is a self-evident fact, while Freethought is treated incidentally in its connection, as if it were an aberration of the human mind. One will look in vain for such articles as "Atheism," "Deism," "Theism," "Pantheism," "Modern Skepticism," "Infidelity," "Modern Materialism," "Rationalism," "Biblical Criticism," "Comparative Religion," etc. When biographies of "heretics" are given, it would strike the freethinker that their prominent characteristics have been "suppressed," "toned down," or seemingly exaggerated. In a biographical sketch of O. B. Frothingham, he is made to figure as "one of the principal leaders of the so-called free-religious movement, which has for its object the promotion of rationalist ideas in theology in place of the received doctrine of the Christian Church!" What a cry arose from the Rev. Talmage, when Prof. Youmans, in the article "Correlation of Forces," said: "Therefore it is now regarded as a fundamental truth of physical science and a fundamental law of Nature that force, like matter, is never created or destroyed." Talmage drew the inference that, if such were the case, an extra-cosmic God was superfluous, and there would be nothing for Him to do. Youmans replied that his summing-up had no theological implications whatever, and that he declined to give an opinion beyond the facts. It is to be regretted that bigotry should have so much control of our educational institutions and literature. I. B.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

No. XII.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

In the last preceding article I attempted the analogical identification of the divine and the human, as to their essential substrate of being. There are the two poles of mental being. The two poles of being itself, in its total existential aggregate, are mind and matter, or inversely matter and mind; at which point this elaboration began, by assuming Mind as the within and Matter as the without. Let us now proceed a step farther, and discover, if so be, the underlying identity of these two as well; not so much in the sense of Spinoza, who posits substance as beneath both matter and mind, calling it God, and affixing both matter and mind to it as foreign and accidental attachments, as in the sense of Hegel, who makes the absolute—his word for the substrate unity (instead of Spinoza's substance)—to be a process, involving two opposite aspects,—as if we should say matter and mind, in the closest uniting embrace, while yet they are distinctive or separable momenta of the one process.

Let us recur to the illustration of a group of geometrical points, or of material atoms, or to a constellation of stars. We have in each case a body of individuals, who may present themselves to us in either of two ways. They may, in the first instance, appear with sufficient intervening distances to be each distinctly individualized, like a nebula resolved by a powerful telescope; or, secondly, they may be agglomerated, as in the unresolved nebula, and so be massed or matted into one. In the former case, we have the analogue of the idea of individuality, which we may now associate with that aspect of being which we call mind, the disengaged and separate point, atom, or star, pivoting upon its own centre,—self-centre being the peculiar characteristic of mind; in the latter case, we have the analogue of the idea of matter, which even in its etymology means that which is mat-ted or mass-ed. The nebula is the first appearance of matter, which, as it becomes more and more solidified or massed, obliterates more and more the individuality of the distinct atoms which compose it; that is to say, obliterates or obscures the manifestation of the mind-principle which underlies it, and which we may now say is essentially identical with it, differing only in consequence of a difference of conditions.*

Scientists are rapidly resolving the ultimate atoms, in the constituency of matter, into mere points of force. I believe Judge Stallo astutely combats both ideas, that of indivisible atoms and that of points of force, calling them necessary fictions of the mind merely. So Prof. Brackett calls in question the existence of the great ocean of luminiferous ether; but the prevalent hypotheses on those subjects are such approximations to the truth as we must for the present avail ourselves of, whatever changes of form they may be destined to undergo.

In a word, then, we may assume the ultimate material atom, itself centred by the finer geometric point of force, as the type of the primitive constitution of things; and we may (proximately) identify this compound atom with the monad of Leibnitz. Let us also demand for it the character of plurality, or the co-existence of many such monads. The mere method of that co-existence will then cause the difference between that manifestation which we call Mind, and that other manifestation which we call Matter.

Let us assume that the inner geometric point of each monad is the type of the individual mind inhabiting a body; that the material atom is the type of the body so inhabited; and that the inner geometric point, what is virtually the point of force, is, at the same time, a radiating centre, whose rays permeate the outer atomic corporeal structure, as the nerves of the human body, taking their origin in the brain, permeate the body; and that, like the nerves, these rays relate the monad to the other monads within its social environment. In this supposition we have, in the primitive monad, and its compound structure, a perfect prefiguration; nay, more, the actual incipency, in logical evolution, of the individual human being for the single monad; and of human society for the aggregation of monads in question.

The statement is still not sufficiently strong to cover the truth of the case. All the analogies concur, and in their concurrence demonstrate, that this precise type of structure, an outer and grosser body, with an inner and spiritual core, radiating and permeating the other, and relating it to the environment, is the incipient type of being universally, and in particular; incipient we must say, guardedly, for during the infinite variations in the careers of development, the dance of differentiation throws things often into opposite relations, demanding the closest scrutiny in tracing occurrences and their causes.

Hilckok (Rational Psychology, p. 22) thus epitomizes Leibnitz's theory of primitive monads: "Leibnitz sublimated all being into indivisible atoms, and as thus indistinguishable by any outer. They must be distinguished, each from each, by an inner peculiarity, and which, analogous to mind, is a faculty of representing. Every atom with its inner representation-force was thus a monad; and when representing in unconsciousness is matter; when partially conscious is animal; when in full self-consciousness is human soul; and the absolute monad arranges all the representations through a 'preestablished harmony.'" This statement, mutatis mutandis, is the universal conception in question. Leibnitz recognizes a within and a without for each monad, and a system of relations between the within and the without, passing outward and beyond into the environment. The within is mind, or mind-like; the without is body, or body-like; and the connective sphere is radiance-like (rationo'd), or nerve-like, in structure and function. I render this conception more definite by identifying the withoutness of the monad with the physical atom, as its body; and this, by analogy, with the human body; and so with the body of a sun or planet, and in fine, of any constituted object whatsoever; the withinness of the monad with the abstract geometrical point centring the physical atom, being conceptually finer than it, and being also the centre of those subtle spiritual forces which ray out through the body and into the vacancy of the environment.

As new, in point of statement, and more important in some senses, there are also, besides all this, inherent and necessary geometrical relationships, existing as between all the monads, and especially as between their geometrical centres, represented, conceptually, by an infinite net-work of straight lines passing from centre to centre, and constituting an infinity of geometrical figures in space (and, by extending the idea, in time also). Each of these figures is different from every other, in all the details of its geometrical constitution, while all are equal in the infinity of their complexity, according to the particular monad which is taken as centre of the particular schema of such relationships. This immense complex of inherent relationships is, therefore, the tressel-board of the destinies of all the individual monads,—all destinies being infinitely alike, and yet infinitely different. It is to this schema of fated relationships of the monads, and not to anything within the particular monads, that we must look for that element of difference or diversity which Leibnitz refers to the withinness of the monads. They are no more differentiated from each other internally, as geometrical points, than they are externally, as physical atoms,—rather less so, if a difference in this respect is conceivable. The great ocean of individual minds is as confluent and indiscriminated, at bottom, as the physical atomic parenchyma. The differentiative factor, by preëminence, is the angulation, and so the rational element found in the connective lines which conclude the monads—the web of destiny which fixes their individual peculiarities of character and career.

So, in the next place, and this is still more important, it must be questioned whether the absolute monad, by which is meant the God-entity centring (rationally) and embracing all the other monads, is really and truly that which "arranges all the representations, through a 'preestablished harmony,'" as Leibnitz puts the case; or whether the preestablished harmony is something which is not ARRANGED by any MIND or WILL whatsoever; a something which arranges itself; or rather which exists inherently and necessarily in the nature of things—its analogue being the network of geometrical lines which characterize and prescribe the destiny of each individual monad,—the central and absolute monad, as well as all the rest. This, at all events, is the rational as contrasted with the dogmatic conception of the constitution of the universe; and each represents a side of the larger and complex truth. We are again in the presence of the contrast and conflict between logicism and arbitrium in the evolution of thought; or between the secular-philosophical, and the theological idea. Is it true, in other words, that the will of God has fundamentally constituted things as they are in the universe, as theology has taught, in which case they are the result of an arbitrary edict,—the monarchic idea; or is there a Nature of Things, and an inherent necessity in that nature of things by virtue of which they have been so constituted, through laws of being, as controlling over God as over nature and man? This latter is the democratic and occidental conception, as contrasted with the dictatorial and oriental one. Lucretius, Pope, and Emerson have accustomed us to the idea of allying philosophic thought with a poetic form. I have been prompted to attempt to throw this profoundest of metaphysical speculations into poetical expression, and with the following result:—

MIGHT AND RIGHT.

When a king proclaims a law
Men think only to obey;
When the law proclaims a king,
All men accept his sway.

Which is the first, then, king or law?
The sway of law, or personal awe?
The Constitution of the State,
Or will of sovereign potentate?

This is the problem of State-lore;
'Tis, too, theologic core;
Is God to reign, alone of might!
Or reigns he under law and right?

Whence, then, God's rank and sovereign lot?
Would wrong be right if God were not?
Is God then first, or law before,
And God executor, or no more?

The State-craft of our happy land
Proclaims the law supreme;
Our Asiatic creed commands—
Exalts!—adverse philosopheme!

The Greek philosopho-theology coincides with and may be placed at the head of occidentalism, in this behalf, in that it put Fate back of Jove, and so subjected gods and men alike to the inherent necessity lodged in the nature of things. Christian theology, changing all this, puts God back of all, and thus unwittingly renders him responsible for evil as well as good. The interposition of the devil as the father of evil does not help the case, as the devil is not, by this system, an independent and co-equal being, as he was in the old Persian theology, but is himself a subject and subordinate of God, who is therefore still responsible for all that he is and does. He is simply an agent of God in the carrying out of his designs, and no number of intermediate agencies relieves in any degree the responsibility of the principles in any transaction. It is a good maxim of the law,—quod facit per alium, facit per se.

We can, therefore, in no manner relieve God of the responsibility of evil; in no manner "justify the ways of God to man," otherwise than by restoring or interpolating the old Greek idea of inherency in a nature of things which no arbitrary will, divine or human, can infringe or wholly overbear. It is the merest subterfuge to say: That evil is a means to the attainment of a higher good; for an unlimited omnipotence could as well command and so secure that higher good, without as with the intervention of evil; and hence the presence of evil is purely gratuitous. We must limit either the power or the goodness of God; and it is an over-zealous piety, which by affirming both in an absolute sense involves the divine being in a hopeless dilemma, and makes him an object of hatred rather than of love.

But are we thus brought under the dominion of a perfectly inflexible and absolutely dominant fatalism? I shall show in another article that we are not; that the ultimate philosophy opens a way of escape from that result; and that the fate-side of things, while it must be admitted as one of the factors, is only to be admitted as an equal factor with the will-side of things in the constitution of the universe; and, that, therefore, theology on the one hand, and secular philosophy on the other hand, are reconcilable in the grasp of a larger and complex unity.

JOSEPH COOK'S WESTERN "DOUBLE."

DEAR INDEX:—

The little illustrations you give us of the style in which the Rev. Joseph Cook—the "Elephant"—is treading the "loaferish" Freethinkers of Boston out of sight and hearing beneath the mire of Orthodoxy, through the ostentatious exhibition of his pseudo-science, are certainly refreshing, to say the least. But I wish you Boston people to understand that you do not have all the "harmonizing" done at the Hub. Though not in so ostentatious and "spread-eagle" style as that of his "lectureship," the Rev. Joseph Cook, yet we see, all over the broad prairies of the West, the same spirit and efforts being made to harmonize science and revelation; and, in order to accomplish the end, the operators most sadly mutilate them both. The Christian world sees that science can no longer be ignored, and is now anxious to claim it as its own child, just as it has before done with anti-slavery and temperance. Let me give you a little specimen which lately came under the writer's observation.

Last Sunday morning, the Rev. J. M. Pryse (Presbyterian), in his church service prayer, asked God to "help us to know the truths of Nature; for, unless we think in harmony with Nature and the laws of the Universe, we think in vain." Isn't that pretty good? For one, I felt strongly impelled to shout, Amen. But being aware that by doing such an unfashionable thing in a staid Presbyterian church, where dignity and propriety reign supreme, might subject me to arrest for disturbing the public worship, I smothered the impulse and kept silent.

After the regular service was through, then came the Sunday-school. The lesson for the day was about Jonah and the whale,—or the fish, as was strongly emphasized in the teaching. In reply to the question, asked by one present, whether we are really to understand that a man did or can live three days and three nights in the stomach of a fish, and then come out in a condition to be able to go about his business, Mr. Pryse answered, "It might be." Now is it not "thinking in vain" for intelligent, educated men and women to think that such a thing could be? We all very well know that, in accordance with Nature and its laws, if a man were once really deposited in the stomach of a live fish, he must necessarily, in a very few moments, be a dead man. One of the arguments used to prove that he might live there, was that physiologists tell us that the solvent fluid of the stomach does not act on living fibre, and consequently he would not be digested; forgetting, it would seem, that, even though Jonah might pass through the operation of being swallowed without being crushed and killed at once, yet, when once fairly lodged in the fish's stomach, he must suffocate in a few moments for want of air to breathe.

*The position of Spinoza makes substance, and that of Schelling the pure reason, and that of Hegel the absolute as logical process—specific differences of the same generic idea—to be the within or inmost of being: mind and matter being, conjointly, the without. All of their views will, at some time, require to be reviewed. At present it will suffice for the reader to remember that our mode of viewing the subject makes mind to be the within and matter the without; and their conjoint identity (whether as substance, reason, or logical process) figures as their twyness, or middle term. (It is this middle-term-character which makes it seem to be the within,—and which, from another point, entitles it to be so regarded.)

Another argument why "it might be," was from some old theologian—Dick, I think it was,—who had discovered that there is a kind of whale that has a pouch, entered by way of the mouth, in which to carry its young after their birth, the whale being an air-breathing animal; and that Jonah somehow got slipped into this receptacle where he could breathe, it having some kind of a ventilating arrangement. Do the old whalers down on the sea-coast know anything of such a kind of whale?

If natural and scientific explanations are necessary for the support of such absurd and miraculous stories as the one told of Jonah, or any other miracle, then I think the negro preacher's as good as any. He said, that when Jonah was thrown overboard, he snatched an oar and took it with him; and, when he took in the situation that he was really swallowed, he ran his oar out astern and sculled the old fish ashore and then tickled him with a tooth-pick till he let him out. Now I would ask seriously, is the negro's explanation any more ridiculous than the other two I have given you?

Yet this man is not an ignorant man, but an intelligent and highly educated one. He is a learned man; is an inveterate worker after knowledge; is a linguist; is familiar with many languages, and, among them, I am told, he has given much attention to the Sanskrit. He is a reasoner, a logician, a metaphysician. Why, he can take any common, simple, plain thought, such as I can think, and cover it all up with metaphysical reasoning until it is like Burns' "three grains of wheat hid in four bushels of chaff," and will cost more to find it again than it is worth when found. He is an honest man, and evidently means to treat all subjects and everybody's opinions fairly. As a social, kind, benevolent man and companion, I esteem him highly. But it would seem that a theological education is about the most unfortunate thing a man can experience. It seems to take the common-sense with which Nature has endowed him all out of him, when dealing with those subjects which he thinks have a bearing on the religion he has espoused. If men must believe in miracles, then, in the name of the Bible and theology, let them to their hearts' content. I recognize their right. But, for the sake of truth and common-sense, I protest against their doing it in the name of Science, Nature, and the laws of the Universe. So long as they teach the miraculous from the Bible as a divine revelation from God, independent of Nature and its laws, let them make the most they can of it. But when they attempt, as all Christendom is now doing, to force science into the iron shoes of their theology, and hold it in the leading-strings of the priesthood, however honest and good some of them may be, mistaking and misinterpreting both Science and Scripture, to make them seem to young and inexperienced minds to agree, then, is it not time for common-sense to make up and state its facts to these minds? Mr. Editor, push ahead your "Scientific Method." It is the only true gospel and glad tidings for man.

LAKE CITY, Minn., May 27.

SUPERSTITIONS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It was, in substance, a favorite observation of George Fox, the Quaker prophet, that those only can understand the Scriptures who have something of the spirit that gave forth the Scriptures. If such intelligence has its advantages, perhaps those persons have occasion to congratulate themselves who live among people so little accustomed to scientific method as to accept cordially the absurdity of supernaturalism. Such people have no need of elaborate commentaries in order to understand and appreciate accounts of miraculous cures of diseases. To give one or two illustrations:—

A small ulcer that comes on the ball of the eye is called "a Schurzbloder," and is supposed to be removed by a process called "powwowing." The operator grasps with thumb and forefinger a portion of the eyelid over the tumor, and, with a slight pressure and twisting motion, utters to herself, or imagines herself to pronounce, the following incantation:—

"Schurzbloder duck dich, Oder ich drück dich."

Patients are said to come sometimes quite a number of miles to have the cure performed. The operation is usually repeated once after an interval of an hour.

A more serious complaint, erysipelas, is understood to be cured very much in the same way. The operator holds with thumb and finger of each hand an end of a piece of red thread drawn straight in a horizontal position, and, placing herself at the side of the patient, she brings the thread in contact with the upper part of the forehead, and passes it down in front of the person, making rests to correspond with the pauses in the incantation, which is as follows:—

"Rothe Fade zeich,
Wildfeuer weich,
Rothe Fade siech,
Wildfeuer sieg.
Fleg! Fleg! Fleg!"

Then the malignant influence or devil which causes the disease is supposed to pass off from the ends of the patient's toes. But, still, in this disease he is likely to return. So the rule is to go through with this operation three times after the sun is down and three times before the sun is up. At the conclusion of every such ceremony the red thread, into which the disease or some portion of it is supposed to have passed, is destroyed by being thrown into the fire. By this treatment the devil is soon worried out, and the patient recovers. The lady who gave the information, being asked whether any medicine was used, said the patient must take a teaspoonful of dogwood-blossom tea three times a day before eating; if he could not take a teaspoonful, he might take five table-spoonful. She said she had cured in this way a good many cases which had been given up by the doctors as hopeless, and that she gathered every spring a bagful of dogwood blossoms for the purpose. The directness of this procedure is assuredly to be commended. Here is no cant or chat addressed to any third person; but the devil that makes the disturbance is directly addressed, and commanded to take his departure.

A young man, who was of sufficient importance in the world to have wife and children, was complaining that one of his children had been sick for a number of weeks, and that the doctors could do nothing for it, and could not tell what the disease was. In this extremity he did not despair, but had recourse to the light of intuition; not that which by rational conjecture of existing law, leads to careful investigation, but to that sublimer species which of course never misleads anybody. He said the doctors did not understand their business; that it was very plain to be seen what the matter was; that the child's heart and liver had grown together, and that, since he had got old Mrs. — to powwow for it, the child had been a great deal better, and that he had no doubt the child would be cured in a short time in that way.

Possibly there may be persons profane or incredulous enough to deny the reality of these cures. But to prove them there would be no lack of positive testimony of at least honest people, and thus in respect of credibility they have an advantage over any of the miracles of ancient story.

C. C.
NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., May 31, 1877.

INDIAN CIVILIZATION.

The general impression which prevails to a great extent is, that no progress has been made in the civilization of the Indians of the Plains, and that all attempts to induce them to adapt themselves to the peaceful walks of life have proved abortive. The efforts to lead the savage to civilization have not been made under the most favorable conditions. The same power which has placed the well-disposed teacher at an Indian agency has permitted the avaricious trader to follow; and so long as religion and rum are dispensed at the same time as the two blessings of civilization, the Indian will take to the latter. Moreover, it isn't much use to try to tame a savage with good precepts so long as he knows that the agent of the government is swindling him by furnishing him a wretched quality of flour and beef, and robbing him by short weight. But under all the discouraging circumstances arising from the cupidity of the white man and the natural aversion of the Indian to civilizing ways, excellent results have been noted in various localities. Mr. Lyon, one of the Board of Indian Commissioners, in the last report of the Board, which is not yet printed, furnishes the following statistics, showing the condition of two hundred and sixty-six thousand Indians in 1868 compared with their condition eight years later at the time of making the report:—

	1868.	1876.
Houses occupied by Indians.....	7,476	54,717
Schools on Indian Reservations.....	111	344
Teachers.....	184	487
Scholars.....	4,710	11,327
Church buildings.....	177	27,215
Indians wearing citizens' dress.....	104,818	104,818
Acres of land cultivated.....	54,207	318,194
Wheat raised (bushels).....	126,117	463,054
Corn raised (bushels).....	467,363	2,229,463
Oats and barley (bushels).....	45,978	134,780
Horses and mules owned.....	45,960	310,403
Cattle owned.....	42,874	811,308
Sheep owned.....	2,683	447,205
Swine owned.....	29,890	214,076

If, under the favorable circumstances of the past eight years, such results have been attained as the above figures indicate, it would seem that extermination is not the only solution of the Indian problem.

—Boston Journal, May 9.

DISSENT A CAUSE OF POTATO ROT.

The Rev. J. Booth, of March Gibbon, Bicester, sends to the Bradford Observer the following, extracted from documents posted in the porch of Ludgershall Church, Bucks, the authenticity of which he vouches for:—"Notice.—Leviticus, 26th chapter, and 27th and 28th verses: 'And if ye will not for all this hearken unto me, but walk contrary unto me, then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins.' Haggal, 1st chapter, 9th verse: 'Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of mine house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house.' You may look on the potato rot as a just judgment for your unthankful hatred of the Church, without which you would be nothing. There is no luck to such as have evil will at Zion. Consistent dissent is to be respected. Those who believe that the Baptist, or the Wesleyan, or the Independent religion is the best, perhaps do right to follow their persuasion; but no respect whatever is due to the mere pig-headed radical, who cares for none of these opinions, but only dissents to show his hatred of the Established Church. What need is there of jealousy? Our Church is no more established than the Wesleyans are. We get no advantage from the government. The law does us no good, but the contrary. They have left us only the mockery of an establishment without the reality. This we care nothing about; only we protest against the meanness of coming a-begging to us, and then lifting up your head against us. Thousands of the working-classes in London and other great towns have joined together in a union for protecting the High Church and Ritualistic clergy against their enemies, so that your chance is small of bettering yourselves by pulling down the Church. You are outvoted by your own class. Dissent and Methodism have seen their best days. Your love of dissent is only the liking for the sociability of the ale bench,—hale fellows, well met, all brothers together. The public house may as well be opened during divine service as the reading school, if it takes people away from Church. Dissenting baptism, whether valid or not, is no admission into our Church; and there is no good reason why I should be required by law to acknowledge it. In future, if a child die unbaptized, or has had only dissenting baptism, a short service will be read over the grave; but the bell will not be tolled nor the corpse met at the gate. This will prevent the necessity of mocking the Church by bringing children to be christened merely for the sake of burial, and then bringing them up as dissenters. It is proposed to establish a christening club. Five shillings to be deposited in the child's behalf; money to be returned with interest at confirmation or in case the child dies.—T. M." The rector of Ludgershall is the Rev. Thomas Martyn, M.A.—English paper.

THE "BLUE-LAWS"—TRUE AND FALSE.

THE TRUE BLUE-LAWS OF CONNECTICUT AND NEW HAVEN, and the False Blue-Laws invented by the Rev. Samuel Peters; to which are added specimens of the laws and judicial proceedings of other Colonies, and some Blue-Laws of England in the reign of James I. Edited by J. Hammond Trumbull. (Hartford, Conn.: American Publishing Company. 1876. 12mo, pp. 390.)

Whoever feels anger in his heart against New England finds, always ready to his hand, two crushing charges against her, besides the smallness of her territory. These are, that witches were burned at Salem, and that the Blue-Laws of Connecticut forbade a man to kiss his wife on Sunday. The first of these allegations may be left to Dr. Palfrey, Mr. Upham, and Mr. Poole; to the second it may be hoped that Mr. Trumbull has now given the coup de grâce. The volume edited by him contains the early codes of Connecticut and New Haven, together with miscellaneous laws, orders, and judgments of both colonies; the whole occupying 250 pages. The first of these is the Connecticut Constitution of 1838-9, which has been called "the first properly American Constitution," the instrument by which the three towns of Hartford, Windsor, and Wethersfield—which were, if we are not mistaken, original independent political bodies—formed a permanent union. The first fifty pages contain an introduction in two general parts: first, a statement of the popular beliefs, legislation, and judicial proceedings, especially of England, out of which this blue legislation grew; second, a history of the several Blue-Law falsifications, especially that of Mr. Peters, a native of Connecticut, who published in 1781 a mendacious and abusive history of Connecticut, from which are derived most of the absurd fabrications which pass as the Blue-Laws of Connecticut. These forgeries of Peters only occupy eight pages, and are, on the whole, less gross than we had supposed. For Mr. Trumbull's controversial purposes—to show the parallelism of Connecticut legislation with that of other communities,—we have, in notes and at the end of the volume, copious extracts from laws and judgments of New York, Virginia, Massachusetts, and England, many of them quite as offensively Puritan—even those of Virginia—as the genuine laws of Connecticut. For instance, the sixteenth of Peters' laws reads: "No priest shall abide in the Dominion: he shall be banished, and suffer death on his return. Priests may be seized by any one without a warrant." A footnote (p. 308) says: "There was nothing like this in the code; but New York had such a law, and Virginia forbade any popish priest to remain in the province more than five days after notice, and subjected every popish 'recusant' to a heavy fine on conviction." Again, we find in Virginia (p. 321), for blasphemy or unlawful oaths, on the second offence, "to have a bodkin thrust through his tongue"; for the third offence, death. And in 1623-4 (p. 324): "Whosoever shall absent himself from divine service any Sunday, without an allowable excuse, shall forfeit a pound of tobacco; and he that absenteth himself a month shall forfeit fifty pounds of tobacco." The fact is, the genuine Puritanical legislation of New England was the outgrowth of the spirit of the age; it was here more consistent and thorough, and of longer continuance than elsewhere, but after all not materially different in character.—N. Y. Nation, May 3.

LAUGHING TO THE GLORY OF GOD.—In my recent article on the subject of innocent amusements, I insisted that no amusement was innocent that was not sought or engaged in for the glory of God. That an innocent amusement must not be engaged in for the love of amusement, nor because we need amusement, but from a supreme ultimate regard to the glory of God and the interests of his kingdom. That in seeking amusement, as in the performance of every other duty, the eye must be single to the glory of God,—in other words, amusements, to be innocent, must be regarded by us at the time as the best means possible to us of pleasing God and advancing the interests of his kingdom. And they must not only be so regarded by us, but must be engaged in for the purpose, and as the best means to that end possible to us for the time being.—President C. G. Finney, of Oberlin, in 1872.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 " "	6 " "
" 52 " " " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,

publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 6 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is especially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	1.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	3.00
Belwieser.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, vol. I, Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.50
CHENNY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.80
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDS BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrawska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	2.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Baeher. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. E.) Enigmas of Life.....	1.00
Mystery and Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	1.50
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	1.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.50
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINS'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Rifle Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticism on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Boys.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Salads, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LOCKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	5.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
6.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.50
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Woman—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Marais.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Cuba from a German View. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Phases from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 1 vol.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and M.DCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Frothy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.75
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., fable cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Biology.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEESCHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 3 vols.....	12.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 1 vol.....	7.50
The Blue-Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	2.50
Tennyson's (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamor, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAYER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	2.00
Lectures on Light.....	2.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Shog and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sanctaries.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Lake Umbagog.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each, $50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1876

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THOMAS PAINE:

The Method and Value of his Religious Teachings.

A LECTURE BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

Price 10 cents, post-paid.

GHAS. M. GREEN.

18 JACOB STREET, NEW YORK CITY.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)... $1.50
CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION..... 1.00
STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00
STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS..... 1.00
BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND OTHER DISCOURSES..... 1.00
LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER..... 3.00
THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp., with steel portrait of the author) ... 2.50
THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. Octavo, cloth..... 1.75
 Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

253 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

THE INDEX,

231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE.

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

MRS. UNDERWOOD'S NEW BOOK.

HEROINES OF FREE THOUGHT.

Contents:

1. Madame Roland.
2. Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin.
3. Mary W. Godwin Shelley.
4. George Sand.
5. Harriet Martineau.
6. Frances Wright D'Armsmont.
7. Emma Martin.
8. Margaret R. Chappellsmith.
9. Ernestine L. Rose.
10. Frances Power Cobbe.
11. George Elliot.

BY

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

327 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.75.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
  - II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
  - III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
  - IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
  - V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
  - VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.
- Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.
- REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)
- PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.
- FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,..... .15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,..... .40
FIFTY..... .75
ONE HUNDRED..... 1.50
TWO HUNDRED..... 2.40
THREE HUNDRED..... 3.60
FIVE HUNDRED..... 6.00
ONE THOUSAND..... 12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 21, 1877.

WHOLE No. 391.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE RIGHT REVEREND A. CLEVELAND COXE, Episcopal Bishop of Western New York, has published a poem called "The New Crusade," which is worthy only of Peter the Hermit. The New York Sun makes it the text of an article on "A Ferocious Bishop" which is worthy of the occasion. Both will be found in this issue.

THE TURKISH PARLIAMENT seems to be a burlesque on the Free Religious Association: "In the Chamber alone there are Mohammedans, Greek Unitarians, Bulgarian Sectarians, Roman Catholics, Armenian Catholics, Armenian Unitarians, Chaldean and Syrian Sectarians, Protestants, Jews, Maronites, and Druses. Among the Deputies, three days per week are sacrificed as Sabbaths: Friday by the Mohammedans, Saturday by the Jews, and Sunday by the others."

THE LEEDS Mercury tells a story of petty clerical tyranny which it is difficult to believe possible even in a country where the Church is established by law. It seems that a little girl has been expelled from Boston Spa National School for no other offence than refusing to "curtsey" to the vicar's wife. The girl, who is only seven years old, is under the guardianship of a person who is called a sturdy Independent, he having adopted her; and the story is that this person had told her, while she was to be very particular in obeying all school regulations, not to "curtsey" to the clergyman or his wife. On her being asked by the latter "where her manners were," she assigned the true reason for omitting the usual mark of respect, and the vicar then desired the school-master to punish her, which he refused to do. The master subsequently refused a request made to him to expel the girl, and the vicar thereupon expelled her himself. It is added that the final result of the affair was that the school-master found himself obliged to resign his office, which he had held for twenty years. On doing so he was presented by the parishioners with testimonials to the value of about £80. The Leeds Mercury's informant says that there is no other school in the parish to which the little Nonconformist can be sent.

THIS is what the Cincinnati Commercial said lately on the Sunday question now agitated in that city: "The Evangelical gentlemen who are assailing the authorities in respect to Sunday state that they desire for themselves a 'quiet' Sunday, and they protest against the disturbance of public worship. That far they are quite right. As it is a certainty that Sunday will continue to be, for the great multitude of the people of Cincinnati, a day of recreation, the understanding should be established that recreation shall not take the form of public disturbances in the vicinity of the churches. The members of the churches and those in ordinary attendance upon them have precisely as many rights that other people are bound to respect as any other class of persons. We maintain that the citizen who desires to spend his Sunday in drinking beer, keeping time to the blasts of a brass band more or less musical, should not be permitted to interfere with anybody else. We also maintain that the citizen who is contented with milder beverages and with a sermon or two, and is soothed by the majestic voice of an organ, should have protection in his enjoyment, but should not feel it necessary to define the social and religious worship of others; and if they have acquired the conceit that they are entitled to insist that people of European birth should screw themselves into the Puritan notions of Sunday, they are entertaining a delusion of which they should be speedily dispossessed. We must draw the line somewhere on the Sunday question, and we desire to draw it at the point that the people at large shall conduct themselves according to their pleasure, and that good citizens shall take care not to disturb their neighbors or interfere with their observances of the day."

THE Freie Presse, of Cincinnati, recently contained the following statement of the German view on the Sunday question: "The agitation of the Sunday question has again actively aroused the gloomy spirit of Know-Nothingism. Last Sunday, in the various churches, the Sunday question was discussed from every possible and impossible side, and it was made plain to pious Christianity that we must have here a proper Mucker Sunday. In this, of course, the Germans, the godless Germans, who on the holy Sabbath would rather drink beer and hear good music than say hypocritical prayers and turn up their eyes, come off badly, and a minister named Ridgeway gave out in his sermon such a malignant Know-Nothing tone that one is involuntarily reminded of the dark days of Know-Nothing excitement. The gentleman strangely thinks that in no country is a certain part of Sunday so strictly observed as in Germany; and as an example, he says that if one in Leipzig should venture to play the piano in his house on Sunday, between eight and nine o'clock, the police would immediately knock at the door and forbid it. Who could have imposed this absurd story on the pious pastor? He has evidently understood imperfectly. The only compulsory observance of Sunday that here and there is still in force in Germany, is that on Sunday morning during the divine service, from nine to eleven, the saloons must be closed. This law is mostly only enforced in villages. In large cities no one troubles himself about it, but that the police should force their way into private houses is absurd. Our Germans here do not ask anything wrong, but base their claims on sound common-sense, and on a liberal comprehension of the Sunday question as it is more and more approved and adopted by the really cultivated and liberal thinking Americans. The Germans on this question are not alone. Let the Muckers be so good as to note that. But all educated persons of a free, cosmopolitan view of life, gave up long ago the puritanical prejudices by which these gentlemen are still surrounded, and will stand on our side. The Commercial, which on this question has taken a very sensible position, represents decidedly this liberal American element, and also opposes with its accustomed decision the Know-Nothing views of our pious ministers, especially those of Dr. Ridgeway."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL BOLLES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PASTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUMELANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HENZEL,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. ROBAOE BEAVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorncliffe, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COOLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. B. WALLISAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIBBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. R. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER,.....Quintman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N. B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

Science in America.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED IN NEW YORK, NOV. 16, 1876.

BY DR. JOHN W. DRAPER,
 PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY.

Scientific Progress in this Country in the last Thirty Years Reviewed—Industrial and Social Changes in Europe—Emancipation of Education from Medieval Shackles—Condition of American Colleges—What has been done by Scientific Bodies—The Work of American Investigators.

GENTLEMEN, MEMBERS AND ASSOCIATES OF THE AMERICAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY:—

In accordance with the plan of the American Chemical Society I am called upon to address you this evening. I have to congratulate you on its successful establishment, and its prospect of permanent success. Let us consider some of the reasons which would lead us to expect that success, not only for our own, but also for other kindred societies. The field of Nature is ever widening before us, the harvest is becoming more abundant and tempting, the reapers are more numerous. Each year the produce that is garnered exceeds that of the preceding. In all directions there is good hope for the future. Perhaps, then, you will listen without impatience for a few minutes this evening to one of the laborers who has taken part in the toil of the generation now finishing its work, who looks back not without a sentiment of pride on what that generation has done, who points out to you the duties and rewards that are awaiting you, and welcomes you to your task. Let us look at the prospect before us.

The progress of science among us very largely depends on two elements. First, on our educational establishments. Second, on our scientific societies. To each of these I propose to direct your attention. And first, of our colleges:—

Prof. Silliman, in his address delivered on the occasion of the Centennial of Chemistry, at the grave of Priestley, in commemoration of the discovery of oxygen, makes this remark: "The year 1845 marks the beginning of a new era in the scientific life of America, which is still in active progress; and chemistry has had its full share in this advance." He then enumerates the causes which, in his opinion, had brought about this increased activity. Among them are the Centennial celebration of the American Philosophical Society in Philadelphia in 1843; the reorganization of the United States Coast Survey in 1845; the establishment of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington in 1846; the enlargement of the American Journal of Science in the same year; the contemporaneous foundation of the Astronomical Observatory at Cincinnati; the institution of the Analytical Laboratory at Yale College in 1847, and simultaneously the Lawrence Scientific School at Harvard. To these he adds especially the establishment of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1848. Coinciding with him fully as to the character and power of these and other local causes which he mentions, I cannot but regard them as being themselves the issues of influences of a much more general kind.

A revolution had been taking place in Europe—a revolution not so much political as industrial or social, though it was followed by political consequences of the most important nature. Its commencements may be seen in the preceding century in the canal engineering of Brindley; in the improvements of iron manufacture; in the construction of all kinds of machinery; which reached its acme when the hand of man was deposed from its office, and, through the slide-rest and planing-machine, engines were made by themselves. Then came the exquisite contrivances for the manufacture of textile fabrics, so that a man could do as much work in a day as he had formerly done in a year, the movement in that direction culminating in the two steam engines, the condenser and non-condenser. The demand for cotton rose, the value of the slave, its cultivator, was enhanced, and the negro question became the paramount political question in the United States. See how scientific discoveries and inventions lead to political results! Herein, among other great events, we find the origin of the American civil war.

In Europe the social effect of the use of steam was strikingly marked. Performing mechanical drudgery, it relieved vast numbers of the laboring class, and gave them time to think. It concentrated them in factories and mills. Those industrial hives were pervaded by literary influences, perhaps not always of a kind that we should approve of. They became the seats of agitation in politics and theology; and, while this was the effect on the laboring mass, the owners or capitalists were accumulating enormous fortunes.

We may excuse the enthusiastic literature of the cotton manufacture its boasting, for man had accomplished works that were nearly godlike. Mr. Baines, writing in 1833, states that "the length of cotton yarn spun in one year was nearly five thousand millions of miles—sufficient to pass round the earth's circumference more than two hundred thousand times, sufficient to reach fifty-one times from the earth to the sun. It would encircle the earth's orbit eight and a half times. The wrought fabrics of cotton, exported in one year would form a girdle for the globe, passing eleven times round the equator, and more than sufficient to form a continuous sheet from the earth to the moon." And let us not forget that, to give commercial value to this vast result, the capital chemical discovery of bleaching by chlorine was essential. Such was the condition of things in England just previously to the epoch in question. Necessarily it was followed by great social results.

But there was something more. The locomotive absolutely revolutionized society. A man could now travel further in an hour than he had previously done in a day. Again it was clear that important political results were occurring. The effect of the railroad was to render nations more homogeneous, to destroy provincialism. It is actually true, that language underwent a change. No one who had remarked the various dialects of the English counties prior to the opening of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, and the homogeneity of speech which is fast displacing them, can be blind to this. Simultaneously a redistribution of the population took place. It was largely withdrawn from the open country, and concentrated in the towns.

CHANGES IN PUBLIC EDUCATION.

In this statement, I am recalling facts so common that they are familiar to us all. We all appreciate the immense social changes that took place just before 1845. Who in those times could fail to perceive that grand consequences must follow the expenditure of thousands of millions of dollars in the building of railroads, who, when he saw the labor of a year shrinking into the compass of a day, the travel of a day into the compass of an hour, the thought of man outstripping the velocity of light—who could be so obtuse as not to discern that a new agency had taken possession of the earth, that it was agitating the nations to their very foundations, that it was ameliorating the lot of man, increasing his power, and dealing remorselessly with old ideas,—the fictions and fallacies of the past?

Can we wonder then that those who were growing up in the midst of these marvels should not only contrast the activity by which they were surrounded with the stagnation of preceding centuries, but should demand to be made acquainted with the power that was thus opening a new world before their eyes? Very soon it became apparent that there was no provision in the existing educational establishments, the Universities and colleges, for this unexpected state of things. These were to be sure good enough to initiate a bench of boys into the method of translating an ode of Horace or a few lines of Sophocles; but something more substantial than that was wanted now.

This was the true cause of that influence which began to be felt in America about 1840. Every reflecting person saw that a change in public education was imperative,—nay, more, was impending. Confronted by the vigor of modern ideas, the system that had come down from the dark ages was seen to have become obsolete.

In addition to these influences, there was another, at which we must for a moment glance. Let me, in a few words, sketch its history.

The peninsula of Italy was separated from the rule of the Greek emperors, in the eighth century, mainly in consequence of the iconoclastic dispute. Partly through the stress of circumstances, and partly as a matter of policy, the Latin language was brought into such prominence that it was supposed to contain all the useful knowledge in the world. In Western Europe at the close of the fourteenth century, Greek was totally forgotten. But when it became clear that Constantinople would be taken by the Turks, many learned men fled to the West, bringing with their language precious classical manuscripts. As it was feared, however, by the dominant authority that knowledge and opinions of an unsuitable kind might thus be introduced, Greek obtained a foothold with much difficulty; and it was only by the aid of Florence, Venice, and other commercial towns of Upper Italy that after a struggle it made good its ground. The Latin had now a successful rival. A century later brings us to the culmination of the Reformation. Its literary issue was an admiration of the language of that much enduring, that immortal race to whom the Old Testament is so largely due. As had been the case with Greek, so now Hebrew passed from a condition of neglect to one of extravagant exaltation. It was believed to have been the original language of the human race, a conviction that proved to be a great stumbling-block to the progress of learning. There were thus three classical languages, each having its own paramount claim.

In 1784, the Royal Asiatic Society was instituted in Bengal. One of its earliest and most important services was, that it brought the Sanskrit language emphatically to the knowledge of Europe. The similarity of this to Latin and Greek, especially in the grammatical forms, struck every one with surprise. At first the old literary party resisted its claims, some of them even affirming that it never had been a spoken tongue, but that it had been fictitiously constructed out of Latin and Greek. The creation of comparative grammar by the great German scholar Bopp, in 1816, threw a flood of light on the subject, and the discovery in 1828 by Hodgson of the Buddhist sacred writing in Nepal revealed to astonished Europe a literature of grand antiquity and prodigious extent, in which is contained the religious belief of four hundred millions of men,—ten times the present population of the United States. Greek and Latin had now to descend from the imperial thrones on which they had been seated, and take their places as later and less perfect forms of this wonderful Oriental tongue.

In the higher regions of literature all over Europe these discoveries made a profound impression. It was at once seen by the great scholars of the times that the existing educational system, founded as it so largely was on the languages of the Mediterranean peninsula, was altogether on an imperfect basis. They saw that philology was about to occupy a higher platform, and that though it might cost a struggle with present interests, a change in public education was necessary. But though these languages have suffered an eclipse, there still remains that priceless heritage which they have transmitted to us—immortal examples in national life, in patriotism, in statesmanship, in jurisprudence, in philosophy, in poetry.

Still, there remain the ruins of the Parthenon, the relics of those statues which have no rival elsewhere in the world,—embodiments of the beautiful, before which at the risk of being denounced as a Pagan a man might fall down and worship. Still there remains the history of that awful empire which bore sway around the Mediterranean Sea,—an empire to which we owe our civilization, our religious convictions, and even our modes of thought.

I add this great discovery in letters to the scientific and industrial movement I have described as bringing on the epoch of 1840.

Educational institutions are in their nature very much under the influence of the past. They are guided by men of the parting generation, and are essentially conservative. The changes they began to manifest did not originate with them, but were forced upon them from without. They clung to the mediæval as long as they could, and only accepted the modern when they were compelled.

Among American colleges which are emancipating themselves from the mediæval we may number Columbia, Cornell, Harvard, Princeton, Yale. Doubtless there are many others that would follow the example if they could, but they are fettered with the gyres of sectarian or local restraint. They march along daintily and grotesquely in the pointed shoes of the fourteenth century.

I linger on this subject of colleges because the example of other countries, and especially of Germany, proves to us that on them our hopes for the development of science must very largely rest. The scientific glory of Germany, not inferior in brilliancy to its military glory, is the creation of its university professors. Among them we find the great chemists and physicists, whose works we study with delight.

Our colleges must separate themselves from the mediæval, and assume thoroughly and sincerely the modern cast. Sincerely, I say, for not a few of them indulge in deception. They would have us believe that they teach physics when they have no modern apparatus; chemistry when they have no laboratory; botany without any garden, herbarium, or even drawings; geology, mineralogy, natural history, without any cabinets. So ignorant are some boards of trustees and faculties that they hold such equipments as luxuries easily dispensed with. I have known some go so far as to affirm that as much money ought to be expended in teaching a few boys Latin and Greek as in giving a demonstrative and illustrated course of science, and even to act on that principle. In institutions under this kind of influence you will always find that their whole weight is thrown toward the æsthetic. Whatever college honors there may be, whatever emoluments, pass in that direction; and though through fear of public opinion science cannot be ignored, it is simply tolerated, not cultivated.

ORGANIZATION OF SCIENTIFIC EFFORT.

From our colleges we may in the second place turn to our scientific societies.

I have referred to the period at which the Greek language became cultivated in Western Europe. The first societies were those established in Florence by its admirers. In the Medicean gardens the lovers of Plato assembled to restore, under an Italian sky, the philosophy that had been extinguished in others, and to commemorate by a symposium the birthday of that illustrious man. There is a pleasure in associating with those whose thoughts are congenial to our own in breathing an atmosphere in which the intellectual makes itself felt.

Very soon the example was imitated. Persons who had a love for science followed the example of those who had a love for letters. The Accademia Secretorum Naturæ was instituted at Naples in 1560, by Baptiste Porta, the inventor of the camera which photographers now so much use; the Lyncean Academy for the Promotion of Natural Philosophy, in 1603; the Royal Society of London, 1645; the Royal Academy of Sciences in Paris, 1666; the Berlin Academy of Arts and Sciences, in 1700. Leibnitz, the rival of Newton, was its first president.

When the Royal Society of London was founded, it encountered a bitter opposition. Had it not been for the "merry monarch," Charles II., it must have succumbed beneath the fierce maledictions launched against it.

As in Italy, when the opportunity was offered, men of the same inclination of thinking sought each other, so here, to the surprise of the most enthusiastic chemists, when such an association was proposed, persons seeking membership came crowding in. The society I have the honor of addressing this evening was the result. Already it has completely organized itself; already it has published the first number of its "proceedings,"—a publication which I am sure will procure for it approval and respect.

In these organizations of scientific effort an opportunity of assisting is given to those who, not having dedicated themselves to philosophical pursuits, have yet achieved success in other walks of life, and who, recognizing that the progress of civilization very largely depends on the increase of knowledge, may desire to aid in promoting that great result by the application of their means. See what immense benefits have arisen from the money-grants that foreign governments have placed at the disposal of their scientific bodies; see what a stimulus there has been in the award of medals of honor; and if you desire to witness the effect of a well-judged benefaction, look at the Smithsonian Institution. I would not say one word in disparagement of gifts to colleges and universities, for it is indeed a noble purpose; but endowments for the promotion of a knowledge of Nature conferred on scientific societies for the good of all men, no matter what their country or color, no matter what their religious profession or political condition, is still nobler. The one is a local and transitory benefaction; the other an enduring and universal benevolence.

In our own special science, chemistry, all that has been done has only served to extend the boundary of what remains. The thousands of analyses that have been made have brought us into a wilderness of results. We have not been able to rise to a point of view sufficiently high to discover what is the true place of those results in Nature. We try to represent on the pages of our books and on our black-boards formulas of the constitution of things, conscious all the time that these are at the best only convenient fictions, which must necessarily change as we gain a more perfect insight into that grandest of all problems, the distribution of Force in Space, and the variations to which it is liable. The geometry of chemistry is that of three dimensions, not of two. We have to consider the relation of points not situated on one plane, and hence it is necessary to employ three axes of reference; nay, even more; we cannot avoid the conception of the mathematical method of quaternions. Our inadequate information respecting the real grouping of atoms is followed as a necessary consequence by imperfection in our methods of nomenclature, the confusion in this respect becoming, as we all too well know, every day worse and worse.

THE MARVELS OF THE HEAVENS.

And now while we have accomplished only a most imperfect examination of objects that we find on the earth, see how, on a sudden, through the vista that has been opened by the spectroscopic, what a prospect lies beyond us in the heavens! I often look at the bright yellow ray emitted from the chromosphere of the sun, by that unknown element, helium, as the astronomers have ventured to call it. It seems trembling with excitement to tell its story,—and how many unseen companions it has. And if this be the case with the sun, what shall we say of the magnificent hosts of the stars? May not every one of them have special elements of its own? Is not each a chemical laboratory in itself? Look at the clusters in the sword-handle of Perseus; in Cassiopeia, a universe of stars on a ground of star dust; so Hercules, of which as astronomers say, no one can look at for the first time through a great telescope without a shout of wonder,—the most superb spectacle that the eye of man can witness! Look at the double stars of which so many are now known, emitting their contrasting rays, garnet, or ruby, or emerald, or sapphire. Each is in accordance with its own special physical conditions, though all are under the same universal ordinance.

Now here a fact of surpassing importance presses itself on our attention. The movements taking place in those distant bodies are taking place under the same laws that prevail here on earth, and in our solar system. The law of gravitation, as developed by Newton, bears away in all those distant worlds. In them bodies attract each other with forces directly as their masses, and inversely as the squares of their distances. There the laws of the emission, absorption, and transmission of light are the same as they are with us. Their ignited hydrogen gives forth its three rays, the same rays that it gives forth to us. In the uttermost parts of the universe the law of definite combination, the numerical law, and the multiple law, stand good. Sodium absorbs its two waves of definite refrangibility, and iron gives in the spectra its more than a hundred lines, more than a hundred silent but convincing witnesses of the uniformity of the constitution of the universe. There the number of vibrations that constitute a ray of definite refrangibility is the same we have found it to be here. In the enormous heat of those central suns the dissolution of molecules may be of a higher order than we can reach artificially; but the law under which it takes place is a continuation of the law here. There, though the weight of a given mass of matter is different from what it is with us, it is nevertheless determined by the law that determines here,—the law of gravitation. There energy is indestructible, and is measured as it is measured among us, by work. Then is there any boundary that we can assign to natural law? Is it not omnipresent, universal?

Perhaps there is no exaggeration in the assertion—for there seems abundant proof of its truth,—that the light by which we see some of those distant orbs has crossed through such a prodigious space that millions of years have transpired during the journey. Then the phenomena it brings to us are those that were engendered in the beginning of the vast time so passed. Whatever there is that is in harmony with facts now happening here, is to us an unimpeachable evidence that the laws which were governing in those old ages have undergone no depreciation, but are active as ever until now. Then shall I exaggerate if I say that those laws are eternal in duration?

Infinite in influence, eternal in duration, what a magnificent spectacle! In the resistless energy of the motions of the universe is there not omnipotence? The Omnipotent, the Infinite, the Eternal, to what do these attributes belong? Shall a man who stands forth to vindicate the majesty of such laws be blamable in your sight? Rather shall you not with him be overwhelmed with a conception so stupendous? And yet let us not forget that these eternal laws of Nature are only the passing thoughts of God.

LAWS OF MAN'S NERVOUS SYSTEM.

But grand as this is, there is something still grander. There is another temple into which we have to pass, not that of the visible but that of the invisible. We must persist in the invasion we have made, in the revolution we have brought about in psychology. We have to determine the laws which preside in the nervous system of man, and discover the nature of the principle that animates it. Is there not something profoundly impressive in this,

that the human mind can look from without upon itself, as one looks at his phantom image in a mirror, and discern its own lineaments and admire its own movements? My own thoughts have of late years been forcibly drawn to this, from a recognition that the interpretation by the mind of impressions from without takes place under mathematical laws; as for instance, that when external ethereal vibrations create in the mind a certain idea, that same idea will arise when the vibrations are doubled, or tripled, or quadrupled in frequency; but other ideas will be engendered by vibrations of an intermediate rate. Yet what these ideas will be may be predicted. It is true that this is only an optical case, but it extends the view that has been offered to us by a study of the structure of the ear. In the labyrinthine compartment of that organ the ultimate fibres of the auditory nerves are laid on the winding plane of the spiral lamina, in ever-decreasing lengths, each capable of trembling to the sound which is in unison with it,—a mechanical action truly, answering to the sympathetic vibration with which the strings of a piano will respond to the corresponding notes of a flute; and these are translated by the mind into all the utterances of articulate speech, all the harmonies of music,—speech that engenders new ideas within us, strains which, though they may die away in the air, live forever in the memory. The exquisite delight we experience in listening to the works of our great composers arises thus in mechanical movements, which are the issue of mathematical combinations. The unseen world is under the influence of number!

But what is number except there be one who numbers? When Pompey, in his Syrian war, broke into the holy of holies at Jerusalem, he expressed, as Tacitus tells us, his astonishment that there was no image of a divinity within; the shrine was silent and empty. And so, though after death we may anatomize and explore the inmost recesses of the brain, the veiled Genius that once presided there has eluded us, and has not left so much as a phantom trace, a shadow of himself.

The experiments of Galvani and Volta have not yet reached their conclusion; those of Faraday and Du Bois Reymond have only yielded a preliminary suggestion as to the nervous force. Excepting the great sympathetic nerve, the nervous fibres themselves are, as is well-known, of two classes: those that gather the impressions of external things and convey them to the nerve centres, and those that transmit the dictates of the will from within outwardly. The capabilities of one of the former—the apparatus for sight—have been greatly improved by various optical contrivances, such as microscopes and telescopes,—an earnest of what may hereafter be done as respects the four other special organs of sense; and as concerns the second class, the result of mental operations, the resolves of the will, may be transmitted with greater velocity than even in the living system itself, and that across vast terrestrial distances, or even beneath the sea. Telegraphic wires are, strictly speaking, continuations of the centrifugal nerves, and we are not without reason for believing that it is the same influence which is active in both cases.

In a scientific point of view, such improvements in the capabilities of the organs for receiving external impressions, such extensions to the distances to which the results of intellectual acts and the dictates of the will may be conveyed, constitute a true development, an evolution, none the less real though it may be of an artificial kind. If we reflect carefully on these things, bearing in mind what is now known of the course of development in the animal series, we shall not fail to remark what a singular interest gathers round these artificial developments,—artificial they can scarcely be called, since they themselves have arisen interiorly. They are the result of intellectual acts. Man has been developing himself. He, so far as the earth is concerned, is becoming omnipresent. The electrical nerves of society are spread to a plexus all over Europe and America; their commissural strands run under the Atlantic and the Pacific.

SCIENTIFIC ACHIEVEMENTS IN AMERICA.

In many of the addresses that have been made during the past summer, on the Centennial occasion, the shortcomings of the United States in extending the boundaries of scientific knowledge, especially in the physical and chemical departments, have been set forth. "We must acknowledge with shame our inferiority to other people," says one. "We have done nothing," says another. Well, if all this be true, we ought perhaps to look to the condition of our colleges for an explanation. But we must not forget that many of these humiliating accusations are made by persons who are not of authority in the matter; who, because they are ignorant of what has been done, think that nothing has been done. They mistake what is merely a blank in their own information for a blank in reality. In their alacrity to depreciate the merit of their own country, a most unpatriotic alacrity, they would have us confess that for the last century we have been living on the reputation of Franklin and his thunder-rod.

Perhaps, then, we may without vanity recall some facts that may relieve us in a measure from the weight of this heavy accusation. We have sent out expeditions of exploration both to the Arctic and Antarctic seas. We have submitted our own coast to a hydrographic and geodesic survey, not excelled in exactness and extent by any similar works elsewhere. In the accomplishment of this we have been compelled to solve many physical problems of the greatest delicacy and highest importance, and we have done it successfully. The measuring rods with which the three great base lines of Maine, Long Island, Georgia were determined, and their beautiful mechanical appliances, have exacted the publicly expressed admiration of some of the greatest European philosophers, and the conduct of that survey their unstinted applause. We have instituted geological surveys of many of our States and much of our territories, and have been rewarded not merely by manifold local benefits, but also by the higher honor of extending very greatly the boundaries of that noble science. At an enormous annual cost we have maintained a meteorological signal system, which I think is not equalled, and certainly is not surpassed, in the world. Should it be said that selfish interests have been mixed up with some of these undertakings, we may demand whether there was any selfishness in the survey of the Dead Sea. Was there any selfishness in that mission that a citizen of New York sent to equatorial Africa for the finding and relief of Livingstone? any in the astronomical expedition to South America? any in that to the valley of the Amazon? Was there any in the sending out of parties for the observation of the total eclipses of the sun? It was by American astronomers that the true character of his corona was first determined. Was there any in the seven expeditions that were dispatched for observing the transit of Venus? Was it not here that the bi-partition of Biela's comet was first detected? here that the eighth satellite of Saturn was discovered? here that the dusky ring of that planet, which had escaped the penetrating eye of Herschel and all the great European astronomers, was first seen? Was it not by an American telescope that the companion of Sirius, the brightest star in the heavens, was revealed, and the mathematical prediction of the cause of his perturbations verified? Was it not by a Yale College professor that the showers of shooting stars were first scientifically discussed, on the occasion of the grand American display of that meteoric phenomenon in 1833? Did we not join in the investigations respecting terrestrial magnetism instituted by European governments at the suggestion of Humboldt, and contribute our quota to the results obtained? Did not the Congress of the United States vote a money-grant to carry into effect the invention of the electric telegraph? Does not the published flora of the United States show that something has been done in botany? Have not very important investigations been made here on the induction of magnetism in iron, the effect of magnetic currents on one another, the translation of quality into intensity, and the converse? Was it not here that the radiations of incandescence were first investigated, the connection of increasing temperature with increasing refrangibility shown, the distribution of light, heat, and chemical activity in the solar spectrum ascertained, and some of the fundamental facts in spectrum analysis developed long before general attention was given to that subject in Europe? Here the first photograph of the moon was taken; here the first of the diffraction spectra was produced; here the first portraits of the human face were made,—an experiment that has given rise to an important industrial art!

Of our own special science, chemistry, it may truly be affirmed that nowhere are its most advanced ideas, its new conceptions, better understood or more eagerly received. But how useless would it be for me to attempt a description in these few moments of what Prof. Silliman, in the work to which I have already referred, found that he could not include on more than one hundred closely-printed pages, though he proposed merely to give the names of American chemists and the titles of their works. It would be equally useless, and indeed an invidious task, to offer a selection; but this may be said: that among the more prominent memoirs there are many not inferior to the foremost that the chemical literature of Europe can present. How unsatisfactory then is this brief statement I have made of what might be justly claimed for American science! Had it been ten times as long, and far more forcibly offered, it would still have fallen short of completeness. I still should have been open to the accusation of not having done justice to the subject.

Have those who gloat over the shortcomings of American science ever examined the coast survey reports; those of the Naval Observatory, the Smithsonian contributions; those of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the proceedings of the American Academy of Arts and Science; those of the American Philosophical Society, the Lyceum of Natural History, and our leading scientific periodicals? Have they ever looked at the numerous reports published by the authority of Congress on geographical, geological, engineering, and other subjects,—reports often in imposing quarters magnificently illustrated?

Not without interest may we explore the origin of the depreciation of which we complain. In other countries it is commonly the case that each claims for itself all that it can, and often more than is its due. Each labors to bring its conspicuous men and its public acts into the most favorable point of view; each goes upon the maxim that a man is usually valued at the value he puts upon himself. But how is it with us? Can an impartial person read without pain the characters which we so often attribute to our most illustrious citizens in political and what is worse, in social life? Can we complain if strangers accept as at our own depreciation, whether of men or things?

We need not go far to detect the origin of all this,—it is in our political condition. Here wealth, power, preferment—preferment even to the highest position in the nation—are seemingly within the reach of all, and in the internecine struggle that takes place every man is occupied in pushing some other man into the background. I fear that in political life there is no remedy for this,—such is the violence of the competition, so great are the prizes at stake. But in the less turbulent domain of science and letters we may hope for better things. And those who make it their practice to decry the contributions of their own country to the stock of knowledge may perhaps stand rebuked by the expressions that sometimes fall from her generous rivals. How can they read without blushing at their own conduct such declarations as that recently uttered by the great organ of English opinion, the foremost of English journals? The Times, which no one will accuse of partiality in this instance, says: "In the natural distribution of subjects, the history of enterprise, discovery, and conquest, and the growth of republics fell to America, and she has dealt nobly with them. In the wider and multifarious provinces of art and science she runs neck and neck with the mother country, and is never left behind!"

ENCOURAGEMENT FOR MEN OF SCIENCE.

There are among us some persons who deprecate science merely through illiterate arrogance; there are some who, incited by superficiality, dislike it; there are some who regard it with an evil eye, because they think it is undermining the placid tranquillity they find in lifelong cherished opinions. There are some who hate it because they fear it, and many because they find that it is in conflict with their interests. But let us who are the servants of science, who have dedicated ourselves to her, take courage. Day by day the number of those who hold her in disfavor is diminishing. We can disregard their misrepresentations and maledictions. Mankind has made the great discovery that she is the long-hoped-for civilizing agent of the world. Let us continue our labor unobtrusively, conscious of the integrity of our motives, conscious of the portentous change which is taking place in the thought of the world, conscious of the irresistible power which is behind us! Let us not return railing for railing, but, above all, let us deliver unflinchingly to others the truths that Nature has delivered to us!

The book of Nature! Shall not we chemists, and all our brother-students, whether they be naturalists, astronomers, mathematicians, geologists, shall we not all humbly and earnestly read it? Nature, the mother of us all, has inscribed her unfading, her eternal record on the canopy of the skies; she has put it all around us on the platform of the earth! No man can tamper with it, no man can interpolate or falsify it for his own ends. She does not command us what to do, nor order us what to think. She only invites us to look around. For those who reject her she has in reserve no revenges, no social ostracism, no index expurgatorius, no auto da fé! To those who in purity of spirit worship in her heaven-pavilioned temple, she offers her guidance to that cloudy shrine on which truth sits enthroned, "dark with the excess of light!" Thither are repairing, not driven by tyranny, but of their own accord, increasing crowds from all countries of the earth, conscious that whatever their dissensions of opinion may heretofore have been, in her presence they will find intellectual concord and unity.—N. Y. Tribune.

AN OPEN LETTER FROM PRESIDENT WHITE.

TO THE ALUMNI AND UNDERGRADUATES OF CORNELL UNIVERSITY:

My dear Friends,—You have doubtless noticed that the old warfare against the Cornell University by sundry denominational newspapers—the organs of various sectarian colleges—has been recently renewed under pretext of certain utterances of Professor Felix Adler, who was lately a non-resident Professor in our institution.

These attacks do not in the least surprise me. When the news reached me of your sweeping victories at the late intercollegiate contests in scholarship at New York,—contests in which for three years past Cornell University has taken far more first prizes than all the other colleges together,—I felt sure that the sectarian organs would renew their old attacks. In the language of one of your own orators, "The sin of Cornell University has been its success,"—and I foresaw that your sins of success during these last years, in athletics at Saratoga and in scholarship at New York, must be atoned for. What the onslaught would be was also evident,—since the attack on you for want of scholarship having failed, the only remaining course was to renew it on your want of religion.

Nor does this renewal of an old warfare alarm me. Every such attack thus far has been followed by an accession of new friends, new gifts, new students. Every such storm has caused us to root ourselves more deeply and brace ourselves more firmly.

I rejoice, then, to have so good an occasion to impress upon you once more a knowledge of the history of which these attacks form a part. To some of you it is mainly old, to some of you new; but it is something that none of us should willingly let die, for it is full of lessons to our own State and to the nation at large. Bear with me, then, if at first I repeat what to many of you is familiar. About ten years since the State of New York found at its disposal a fund, prospectively of considerable size, which, in accordance with the terms imposed by the Congress of the United States, was to be devoted to advanced scientific, industrial, military, and literary instruction. Vigorous attempts were made during four years to divide this fund, but the State Legislature steadily resisted. It decided that this endowment should not be frittered away among some twenty sectarian institutions; it recognized the fact that for primary education the rule is diffusion of resources, but for advanced education concentration; and it therefore decided to keep the fund together in a single institution controlled by laymen, rather than to divide it between a score of institutions controlled by the ecclesiastical authorities of various denominations.

To the institution thus created, Ezra Cornell gave over five hundred thousand dollars to enlarge the scope of its instruction, and various other gentlemen have since given over a million dollars more for building equipments and endowments.

The main purpose of the nation, of the State, and of our honored founder may then be summed up briefly, as follows:—

First: To provide thorough instruction in the sciences bearing upon the great modern industries.

Secondly: To provide various courses of instruction, scientific, classical, and general, suited to the wants not merely of those who have in view the "learned professions," but of those who purpose to embark in "the various professions and pursuits of practical life."

Thirdly: To establish an institution not under the control of any Synod, Conference, Council, Convention, Consistory, or Convocation,—of any one denomination, or combination of denominations.

While the men who framed our charter were, most of them, members of the various religious bodies, and had full respect for these in their legitimate spheres, it was clearly intended, in this case, that there should be complete separation of Church and State, a separation as complete as that in our public school system; hence in our University charter occur such provisions as the following: "No sectarian or political test shall be imposed," and "Persons of every religious sect or of no religious sect shall be equally eligible to all offices and appointments."

This plan alarmed many. Some feared a system which placed education in science on an equality with education in "the classics," and thorough study in modern literatures on an equality with thorough studies in ancient literatures; some denounced the institution as "godless"; some impugned the motives of Mr. Cornell. It was curious to note, however, that all this alarm was confined to the organs of sectarian instruction. Their solicitude for our welfare was most touching.

Before a professor was appointed or a stone laid, attacks began, and from that time to this they have been continued. They have been directed against nearly every lecturer that has been elected, and nearly everything that has been done.

The very first public proceedings at the opening of instruction in the University were followed by an onslaught general and indiscriminate. A few weeks later an attack was made on Professor Agassiz for his lectures before the University. They were declared to be "dangerous" by the same men who, since his death, lament him as a bulwark of Orthodoxy against Materialism.

Shortly after this, when Professor Goldwin Smith came to lecture for us, he also was attacked as "dangerous," though he was a member of a church whose Orthodoxy is undoubted; and when this fact was shown, the assailants answered that "no Professor should be allowed who had written for the Westminster Review,"—the simple fact being that the only article Goldwin Smith had written for that Review was a reply to a criticism upon one of his own books. The lectures of James Russell Lowell, George William Curtis, and James Anthony Froude fared no better, and Bayard Taylor was handled with especial severity.

The founder of the institution too, Ezra Cornell, than whom no man more unselfish and more truly liberal to Christians of every creed has ever lived, was also attacked by hints, innuendoes, and, at last, by open charges which led to a vindication at the hands of a Commission composed of most respected citizens of the State.

The President of the University had also the honor of being included in the list of the attacked, though he had just been elected to a Professorship in one Orthodox college and to a Trusteeship in another. In the midst of these weightier attacks came some which may be mentioned for their singularity. A pleasant social gathering, composed of students and members of respectable private families, having ended with dancing, the Faculty soon afterward received a formal document denouncing dancing as "dangerous" and as "destructive to vital godliness," signed by representatives of various sects, among them the paid agent of a sectarian college. The impetus thus given to dancing many of you doubtless remember.

Curious has it been to note also some changes of view. Up to the time of your athletic victories at Saratoga, the organs of various denominations generally deplored the lack of physical exercise among students; and we heard much of preparation for our American Olympic Games. But as soon as your representatives began to carry off all the prizes, our denominational friends discovered that such contests are injurious, and that a true ambition should lead, not to triumphs of muscle, but to triumphs of mind. They therefore decided to exhibit the results of their systems at the intercollegiate contest in scholarship and literature; but now that for three years you have carried off twice as many first prizes as all the other colleges together, we begin to hear that those contests are "abnormal."

Still more curious is another phenomenon. I think it is Mark Twain who profoundly philosophizes on the difference in penetrating power between the voice of a boy's father and the voice of his mother, calling attention to the fact that when a mother's voice will not be heard by a boy in the next room and through an open door, a father's voice will be heard by the same boy up three pairs of stairs and through as many closed doors. Akin to this seems the fact that while our friends in charge of the organs of the denominational colleges have always heard with amazing quickness the least rumor to our discredit, they have been stone deaf to news which would appear fit to cheer every Christian heart. When, at the expense of a member of our Faculty, there was fitted up for our University

Christian Association the most beautiful room, probably, for this purpose, among our American colleges, at an expense of nearly fifteen hundred dollars, the readers of the denominational organs heard nothing of it. When another gentleman erected for us our beautiful chapel, so far as I could learn, few, if any of them, made any record of it. When another gentleman endowed the religious lectureship, which gives us every year one of the most extended and excellent courses of sermons ever known in this country or any other, and from leading divines of the various Christian bodies, the denominational journals did not cheer their readers with the news. When still another gentleman gave the noble organ that adds to the attractions of our Sunday service, not one of its echoes resounded through the columns of the sectarian weeklies.

But, my friends, I do not deprecate anything those journals have or have not done. Some anxious mothers have doubtless been alarmed and some excellent young men prevented from coming; but we have prospered all the more, and several of the largest endowments we have received have been given as a protest in favor of our system and against the attacks upon us. The American people, my friends, is after all very shrewd. When the first attacks were made upon us, Horace Greeley said to me, "Sectarian attacks are the best advertising a new university can have"; and another distinguished journalist said, "Nothing will gain more good-will for an American institution of learning than charges of heresy."

This brings me to the case especially in point,—the most recent of these attacks and its pretext.

It is now three years since the Trustees of Cornell University received letters recommending the appointment of Dr. Felix Adler to a non-resident professorship or lectureship.

Dr. Adler's testimonials certainly did not appear "godless." They showed that, although of Hebrew parentage, he was a graduate of one of our most renowned Christian colleges, and had been blessed with all the safeguards against error which an institution noted for its Orthodoxy could throw around him. These testimonials included the highest commendations of his character and scholarship from Christian divines and professors. Besides these there were testimonials of like import from men of similar standing in the foreign university where Dr. Adler had continued his studies after his graduation in our own country.

The University having no funds applicable to such a purpose, a number of gentlemen in New York, headed by a distinguished Israelite well-known for his public spirit, provided the funds to establish a lectureship for three years at Cornell University, and Dr. Adler was called to lecture on Hebrew and Oriental Literature.

The Trustees embraced the opportunity as an experiment. Mr. Adler's ability was undoubted; his character was, as you have seen, vouched for by some of our most distinguished Christian scholars. Into his religious tenets the laws of the State strictly forbade any inquiry.

The pressure of various duties prevented my hearing more than two or three of Professor Adler's lectures; but these revealed much rare knowledge and great ability in its presentation. They certainly did not reveal any "godlessness" or "atheism." Some time after this I learned that some people were troubled at what they considered the "dangerous tendencies" of his lectures; but as the lectures of Agassiz, Goldwin Smith, Lowell, Bayard Taylor, Curtis, and Froude had all been declared "dangerous," I gave no great attention to the matter.

Later I heard that Dr. Adler was charged with "atheism"; but as that charge has been made against nearly every man who has ever told any new truths, including John Milton and Isaac Newton, and as Dr. Adler was certainly not an "atheist" and disavowed any desire to proselyte students in any direction, and as no student was required to attend his lectures, since they formed part of no regular course, I saw not the slightest occasion for interference save in recommending him to avoid statements likely to be misunderstood.

The three years' term for which he was elected closed by its own limitation last December; and as I understand that he is devoting himself to a new work in our great metropolis, which will doubtless require all his energies and cause him to turn from the field of literature to that of a public teacher, I feel bound to say, no matter what obloquy the statement may bring upon me, that he has my respect for his devotion to study, and for his faithfulness to his convictions. In so far as these recent attacks have had it for their purpose to injure him they will probably signally fail. He can certainly desire no better introduction to the lecture rooms of a people like our own, which is much more attracted than alarmed by the atmosphere of heresy.

While the Trustees of the University will, doubtless, if the professorship be continued, prefer an incumbent who can reside steadily at the University, and who can give his whole attention to the subject—which certainly now demands continuous instruction, uninterrupted by engrossing duties elsewhere,—they will certainly not place any stigma upon Professor Adler in obedience to these attacks.

In the interest of Christianity itself they cannot join in such a crusade. For, my friends, have you thought what a tremendous charge against Christianity is involved in the assumption that any thoughtful statement of the opinions of this man is "dangerous to the Christian religion"?

Here is a University, governed by a body of trustees known and honored in every Christian denomination; conducted by a Faculty of whom a large majority are members of Christian churches; in whose chapel are preached every year over forty sermons by the most distinguished pulpits orators of various Christian denominations; which has at work in it a University Christian Association whose energy is proverbial,—and it is claimed that this one young Israelite delivering a short course of lectures each year to the small body of young men interested in his line of thought and study "endangered Christianity."

Could a worse charge against Christianity be devised? None of you need fear that our Trustees are to be forced into any such practical libel upon their faith. The words of our charter are plain, and even if they were not, our common-sense would tell us that nothing is to be gained by concessions to a sectarian spirit so short-sighted that it virtually instills into the minds of the community the idea that Christianity dares not risk full discussion.

The authorities of our University sincerely desire to live on terms of good-will with all our sister institutions of learning, no matter on what system they are founded. There is work enough for us all, and we shall never send out persons to warn the community against the "dangerous tendencies" of any college or university. Our Trustees will stand by their charter; our Faculty will go on in the future as in the past, steadily raising the standard and perfecting the system of our instruction; our Alumni will, I doubt not, in the important positions which they are beginning to enter, use their influence against injustice to us; and you, my friends, who are as yet undergraduates, will work more and more to develop that character and that culture which have already become the best reward for our toils and the best guarantee for our success.

I remain, faithfully yours,

ANDREW D. WHITE.

CASTELLAMARE DI STABIA, Italy,
April 5, 1877.

A CLERICAL SCOUNDREL.

NEW YORK, June 6, 1877.

The reality of New York life very far exceeds its romance. The size of New York gives men a privacy not found elsewhere. The city is silent as the wilderness. Desperate men hide in the by-lanes and pursue their avocations in chambers surrounded by crowds of artisans and with a hum of business around them. Some of the great forgeries of the Old World have been concocted, and the very documents sent out under the nose of our police. Men lead a style of life here which they could not lead in a smaller place.

There are no worse men here than elsewhere in proportion to the population. Things average in morality as they average in everything else. The average runs in business as well as in life insurance. Take a hundred men of any professional calling and there would be the average of good and bad among them. Men often run a long career of immorality and crime, keeping up the same time a fair exterior and a good public repute.

A clergyman was without a charge. He secured the confidence of some of our prominent men, who determined to put him into some position. He was a Scotchman and very fond of "Mountain Dew." Rumors of his weakness reached the city, that were not credited. He was assigned to a very important institution, where personal piety and strict morals were indispensable. Before six months were out he was accused of gross irregularities, of visiting drinking-places and going home from night meetings in a state of gross intoxication. His superiors refused to believe anything against him and kept him at his work. On the strength of his New York position he made the acquaintance of an intelligent lady in the neighborhood and married her. She had a little money in her own right. On the bridal tour to Canada he became beastly drunk. The woman had to send home and get money to return to the city. Still the man was allowed to occupy the chief place in one of the most important and moral institutions in New York.

When the man's conduct became so notorious that it was impossible to keep him in his place, his friends still clung to him. He was assigned to an important down-town charge, whose principal field of labor was among the poor, the lowly, and those who are victims of intemperance. His wife confided her sorrows to a few personal friends. She said that during his connection with that church he seldom came home a night sober. He was so abusive that the woman died of a broken heart within six months after her marriage. Her little earnings laid up before her wedding, were diverted from her aged mother, for whose benefit they had been invested. During all this while the minister continued his work as a leading missionary. He preached, prayed, was eloquent in temperance meetings, was on the platform nearly every night somewhere,—seldom going to bed at night sober. The scandal became so notorious that he was quietly slipped out of the pulpit into an inebriate asylum. After a rest of some months he has again taken the field, and is now engaged as an Evangelist working in a revival, with his former record unchanged. The sound policy of this effort, to force upon the community a man who has not respect enough for himself to keep sober is not apparent. Had prominent men been faithful, his poor wife, who supposed she was marrying an eminent preacher, would not have died of a broken heart, nor would the community be suffering under disgrace through the indorsement of men who stand high in religious life. It's an old English proverb that "One man can steal a horse with impunity, while another is hung for looking over a fence."—"Burling," in the Boston Journal.

DUTY IS THE love of law; and law is the nature of the Eternal.—George Eliot.

CRAZY as George III. was said to have been, there was evidently a method in his madness at times. Speaking to Archbishop Sutton of his large family, he used the expression, "I believe your Grace has better than a dozen?" "No, your Majesty," replied the archbishop, "only eleven." "Well," rejoined the king, "is not that better than a dozen?"

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE SAME OLD KNIFE.

BY OSCAR F. JONES.

The world improves its implements,
But never throws them away;
It adds, and it grinds out the dents
By friction, day by day;
But the new strife
Is about that sacred thing,
The same old knife,
With new handle, blades, and spring.
The old heathen gods of the past
Are not all of them dead,
But cosily nestled at last
In Christianity's bed:—
Though unhonored their lines
And their names be heard not,
The world tinkers the shrines
That the world has forgot.

JUNEAU, Wis., May, 1877.

THE NEW CRUSADE.

BY THE RIGHT REV. A. CLEVELAND COXE, D.D., BISHOP OF WESTERN NEW YORK.

In the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to His servants, the prophets.—REV. x, 7.

I.

Trump of the Lord—I hear it blow!
Forward the Cross! The world shall know
Jehovah's arm's against the foe.
Down shall the cursed Crescent go!
To arms—to arms!
God wills it so.

II.

God help the Russ! God bless the Czar!
Shame on the swords that trade can mar!
Shame on the laggards, faint and far
That rise not to the holy war.
To arms—to arms!
The Cross our Star.

III.

How long, O Lord!—for thou art just;
Vengeance is Thine—in Thee we trust.
Wake, arm of God, and dash to dust
Those hordes of rapine and of lust.
To arms—to arms!
Wake, swords that rust!

IV.

Forward the Cross! Break clouds of ire!
Break with the thunder and the fire!
To new Crusades let Faith inspire;
Down with the Crescent to the mire!
To arms—to arms,
To vengeance dire!

V.

Forward the Cross! That night recall,
Of ravished maids and wives withal,
With blood that stained Sophia's wall,
When Christians saw the Cross down fall.
To arms—to arms,
Ye nations all!

VI.

To high Stamboul that Cross restore!
Glitter its glories as of yore,
Down with the Turk. From Europe's shore
Drive back the Paynim drunk with gore.
To arms—to arms,
To arms once more!

VII.

Forward the Cross! Uplift that sign!
Joy cometh with its morning shine,
Blossoms the rose and teams the vine;
The olive is its fruit benign.
To arms—to arms!
Come, Peace divine!

—Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 16.

P. W. Wise, $8; J. A. Stevens, $3.20; Maggie Dickey, $5.20; New England News Co., $16; J. R. Hawley, $3.15; Joel McMillan, $3.40; T. P. Gere, $5; W. E. Lukens, $3.20; Ohio Post, $2.50; Rev. John S. Gilbert, $3.85; T. B. Skinner, 10 cents; Miss Mary C. Shannon, $20; Henry Lantz, $1.50; M. M. Pratt, $2; William Berrian, $16; Henry Pratt, $3.20; John R. Thomas, $2.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 21, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTATIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, Editorial Contributors.

THE BROOKLYN Catholic Review says of His Lectureship that "Orthodox Boston accepts him with uncritical delight"—the point of which truly penetrating remark is to be found in the adjective.

THE LONDON Fortnightly Review is to be republished regularly in this country, in fac-simile copies issued almost simultaneously with the originals. Subscription price, $5.50; address Craig & Taylor, Detroit, Michigan.

HERE is an illustration of the way in which the world is enlightened by Orthodox investigators: "In a lecture lately delivered in Liverpool by Mr. W. Haslam, of London, on 'The Great Pyramid,' it was maintained that the pile was erected under the guidance of Jehovah, and that in its chambers and galleries were clues to all the prophecies; the number of inches in the passages from chamber to chamber corresponding exactly with the number of years between such great occurrences as the confusion of tongues at the Tower of Babel, the passage of the Red Sea, and the birth of Christ. The length of the passage between the point at which the latter event took place, and the next chamber was 1882 inches, indicating the year 1882 as the date of the end of the Christian dispensation."

"THE WORDLESS BOOK" is a tiny publication for the use of Orthodox Sunday-schools, issued by Harry Angell, 410 Fourth Avenue, New York city. As a curiosity, it is worth procuring. On the covers are printed these words: "Black—Sin. What God says of man's heart. . . Red—Blood. God's remedy for a black heart. . . White—Righteousness. The white robe Jesus gives to the blood-washed. . . Gold—Glory. Which Jesus shares with the white-robed ones." There are texts of Scripture, which we omit, under each of these four heads. But the inside of the book contains only two pages of unrelieved black, two more of crimson, two more of white, and two more of bright gilding. It is simply an appeal to childish imaginations, condensing Orthodoxy into a visible array of colors made to represent the chief tenets of the "gospel"; and it is probably very successful in impressing the poor little minds for which it is designed. If liberalism were only half as industrious as superstition—!

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican of June 8 said: "Mr. Moody and Mr. Cook do not leave Boston as creditably as they began their respective seasons there. The revivalist's sectarian limitations, which his good sense and single purpose have kept in the background, cropped out badly in that bitter attack on the Young Men's Christian Union and the attempt to discipline the Orthodox ministers who have delivered addresses in its popular and useful courses. This sort of thing reacts, and liberal Christianity will not be hurt by Mr. Moody's spleen. The Christian Register keenly observes (in substance) that Moody has taught a great many that they ought to live right lives, and they naturally turn where they can learn the way of right living. And the Young Men's Christian Union is the most successful instrumentality of that sort in Boston. Mr. Cook closes this season of the Monday lectureship badly damaged in his reputation for thought and for honesty. He has been discovered to be rather a rhetorician than a reasoner; been detected in warping, falsifying, and almost hypothecating quotations. There can be little doubt but that he has hurt the Tabernacle revival seriously by his fantastic pranks with the old doctrines, which appear considerably more unreal in his new masks and costumes than in their familiar shapes; and he has recruited liberal Christianity, and even free religion, quite as much as Orthodoxy, by his rhapsodies about 'the nature of things.'"

CHILDREN'S FRATERNITIES.

There is probably nothing which stands more in the way of a rapid spread of enlightened ideas on the subject of religion than the fact that so little provision is made for the wise education of children in this respect. Except in a few large cities and towns where societies more or less liberal have been organized, liberal parents find themselves in no small perplexity. If they fully appreciate the importance of protecting their children in season against the seductive influences of an Orthodox environment (and it is to be regretted that they too often fail to be wise on this point), they labor under great disadvantages. Orthodoxy is shrewd; it perfectly comprehends the fact that the future of the churches depends on imbuing the minds of children with the Christian faith betimes; and it makes everywhere great exertions to draw as many children as possible into the charmed circle of church fellowship. It labors assiduously to attract new members by appealing to social sympathies and even selfish interests, and enlists all its active workers in the task of winning all the children it can to become regular attendants at its Sunday-schools. The children of freethinkers are invited by their Orthodox playmates and schoolmates to go with them to the various festivals and entertainments which Orthodox societies provide so liberally for the young; and what wonder is it if the little ones, otherwise unprovided with the social enjoyments which the child-nature so innocently and inevitably craves, are even importunate for leave to accept these invitations? As a result, they insensibly imbibe the opinions and sentiments of their associates; they are taught to look with a certain horror on those of their own homes; and, when they arrive at maturity, they surprise their parents by joining the churches which have quietly intrenched themselves in their young and susceptible affections.

This is no unusual occurrence, and it illustrates the utter un wisdom of exposing our children to the peril of deleterious influences which it would be miraculous if they had the ability to resist. It is not the strength of Orthodoxy itself, as a system of faith and practice, but rather the strength of the social element of the child-nature, acting under unfavorable circumstances, which does the mischief; and nothing will or can effectually remedy the evil until liberals have learned the necessity of organized cooperation in the work of educating their own children wisely. It is not enough to give thorough instruction at home in the principles and facts of religious liberalism, though even this great duty is too often lamentably neglected; such instruction, indispensable as it is, does not minister to the social wants of children, and these impel them to seek certain social gratifications which are perfectly legitimate, and which the Orthodox Sunday-school, with all its drawbacks, really affords. Nothing but a practically efficient substitute for the Orthodox Sunday-school can meet the requirements of the case; and this is impossible without organization among liberal adults.

It is an encouraging circumstance that the pressing want of some such substitute has been felt by not a few liberal people of this country, and that most liberal societies have made efforts to provide one. Perhaps the best planned and most successful of these attempts has been made at Florence, Massachusetts, by the "Free Congregational Society" which not long since erected the noble Cosmian Hall in that place; and Rev. David H. Clark, its resident speaker, would confer a favor on many of our readers, if he could find time to explain the plan and working of its Sunday-school in an editorial contribution to THE INDEX. The following request, contained in a private letter dated May 18, is a sample of many we have received during the past seven or eight years:—

"If it will not be tasking you too much, I should be glad if you could give us some ideas as to the conducting of a Sunday-school or 'Children's Fraternity.' Last Sunday we started a Sunday-school in connection with the Liberal League. Are there any books suitable for text-books for children, etc.? I should think that this would be a good subject for an article in THE INDEX from your pen: 'How to conduct a Liberal Sunday-school for children.' Pardon the suggestion."

We regret that want of experience in the practical administration of a Sunday-school really adapted to the needs of the times will render any suggestions of ours of very little value, particularly with reference to the books that might profitably be used. If any of the readers of THE INDEX have practical hints to offer on this subject, they will be specially welcome, and may prove very useful. The only points on which we wish to venture an opinion are few and simple:—

1. The moral instruction which liberal parents would wish to have imparted to their children can be far better conveyed by free conversation on the affairs of the child's common life than by set lessons of any kind.

2. The books used in groups or classes should be chiefly such as give exact and honest information about the various religions of the world, their so-called sacred books, their history and institutions, etc., with free and candid comparison of their respective merits and demerits; while the books used in general school exercises should be mainly such as appeal to the imagination, the affections, and the noblest sentiments.

3. Social exercises, pleasures, amusements, etc. (such as singing of cheerful and inspiring songs, recitations of poetry, innocent games), should be made more important than any teaching from books.

4. All the members of the school should be to some extent interested and enlisted, if possible, in active work of some kind which aims to benefit others than themselves, and extends beyond their own circle,—involving some self-sacrifice and fostering the growth of a true public spirit.

5. The management of the school (we make this suggestion with diffidence, yet with a strong desire to see it somewhere subjected to the test of a full and fair trial) should be lodged in the hands of the children themselves, who should be made to feel that they are themselves the parties responsible for its success. They should choose their principal officers from among their own members, and should have all the honor and responsibility of conducting their own organization. The teachers or adult heads of groups might very well belong to it as members on the same footing with the children, but it would be wisest for them to act rather as constant advisers than as official managers. The value of this feature of the plan lies in its influence in interesting the children, in making them feel that the Fraternity is their own affair, in training them to do a little business on their own account, in attracting new members and keeping the old members active, etc., etc. The older children would naturally be elected officers, but all would like the novelty and activity of the meetings; and the teachers would probably have little difficulty in guiding matters by their own counsels. At least, the experiment is worth trying.

The "Children's Fraternity" is a part, and a very essential part, of the local Liberal League, as contemplated in the "Form of Constitution" recommended by the directors of the National League. Four Committees of the local League are suggested by this "Form," one of which is a Committee on Social Affairs, whose function it is to "mature measures for holding frequent social assemblies for the benefit of the younger members of the League; and also for regular Sunday meetings of a Children's Fraternity, to promote the moral instruction and social enjoyment of the children." While the objects of the National Liberal League are general only, the objects of the local League are specific as well as general; and nothing should be neglected by the latter which will "promote the welfare of our own members as a local liberal society." Experiment will be better than theory in this matter of providing for the wants of the rising generation of liberals; but there can be no harm in offering suggestions like the above in advance. Incalculable good can be easily done both for parents and children, whenever liberals shall have learned to take a large and serious view of their duties to themselves, their children, and their country. What more useful discussion could be had in THE INDEX than one upon this subject of Children's Fraternities, or liberal Sunday-schools? If the many who are interested in it choose to do so, they can both impart and receive light; and we cordially offer these columns for a purpose so important to the liberal cause.

"ECRASEZ L' INFAME."

Mr. Parton recently sent the following incisive note to one of the Boston dailies:—

Rev. Mr. Cook vs. Voltaire.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER:—

Mr. Joseph Cook, in the report of his Monday lecture, quotes from Voltaire the words: "Ecrasez l' Infame," which he translates thus: "Crush out the infamous one,—that is, Christ." Mr. Cook mis-translates. The words mean, "Crush the infamous thing"; i. e., the spirit of intolerant fanaticism, which made religion a blight to France. Voltaire uses the expression hundreds of times in his letters (from 1760 to 1775), and always in this sense. He meant the spirit that broke the Protestant Calas on the wheel, that caused the massacre of St. Bartholomew, that expelled the Huguenots, and put into the Bastille almost every Frenchman of that generation who helped enlighten it. He meant the spirit that occasionally animates the discourses of Joseph Cook. It is because Voltaire has lived that Mr. Cook cannot dig up the honored bones of Theodore Parker and hang them in chains.

Respectfully yours, JAMES PARTON.

In connection with Mr. Parton's note, we quote as follows from the Critical History of Free Thought, by Rev. A. S. Farrar, Bampton Lecturer for the year 1862:—

"Écrasez l'Infâme" are the words the initials of which, signed at the end of his letters to infidel friends, baffled the French police. Buckle considers them to have been designed against the French Church, but offers no proof. It is to be feared that they were rather intended against the Christian religion, if not against the sacred person of our blessed Lord.

It is to be noticed that the Orthodox Mr. Farrar, though evidently inclined (without close examination) to construe the words of Voltaire in their worst light, is honest and "scholarly" enough to admit a doubt as to their real meaning.

But even the Orthodox Henry Rogers, author of the famous Eclipse of Faith, wrote on the subject in the Encyclopædia Britannica as follows, with a candor that does honor to Orthodox literature, and with a conclusiveness that will leave little doubt in honest minds that Joseph Cook misrepresented Voltaire to his credulous audience in a very discreditable manner:—

The habitual profanity of Voltaire has led to one charge against him which, it is due to justice to say, is very doubtful. He has often been accused of applying the well-known expression "écrasez l'infâme" (usually in his printed letters contracted into "écrasez l'inf." or more briefly still, "écr. l'inf.") to the Savior. There is, however, reason to believe that this offensive application was not designed. The first, so far as we are aware, who undertook to defend him from this charge was Professor De Morgan, in his interesting sketch of D'Alembert, inserted some years ago in a biographical dictionary [Biographical Dictionary of the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge, vol. i., p. 812] which, unfortunately for literature, was discontinued after the publication of a few volumes. The phrase occurs in Voltaire's letters to D'Alembert, and also in D'Alembert's letters to him. De Morgan urges that the feminine forms of the articles and pronouns with which it is construed, the nature of the context, and Voltaire's known abhorrence of the ecclesiastical system of his times, justify the supposition that it was to the actually existing Church of France as seen before his eyes, with all its cruelties, hypocrisy, and corruption, that he applies this opprobrious expression. The interpretation seems to us the most probable, and is certainly the most charitable, one. Professor De Morgan only adduces three instances of the phrase, all occurring in the correspondence between Voltaire and D'Alembert. The phrase is, however, of very frequent occurrence, not only there, but in the correspondence with Frederick of Prussia and others, and especially in the letters to M. Damilaville. We have examined very many more instances, and, in all, the examination of the context and the grammatical construction tends to bear out Professor De Morgan's interpretation, or at least elicits nothing that contradicts it. The feminine forms of articles, pronouns, and adjectives, are constantly construed with it; as cette, inconnue, etc.

It is also observable that the phrase occurs principally, if not exclusively, in the letters written after the proceedings in connection with Calas and other victims of ecclesiastical oppression had so inflamed the ire of Voltaire. This synchronism is not insignificant. Though Voltaire principally meant the Church of France, it is very obvious, from numberless passages, that he would not have been at all sorry if the "destruction" he so passionately desires had extended to the Christian Church in general. He evidently was not particular, nor at all inclined to divorce what his imagination had married—the Christian religion and superstition. Still one would willingly absolve him from the opprobrium of using the above words in the gratuitously offensive sense so often imputed to them.

It is of course unnecessary to add that liberal scholars (e. g., Mr. John Morley, editor of the London Fortnightly Review, in his very instructive volume entitled Voltaire) take the same view of the phrase. What we have quoted above is the language of Orthodox scholars of acknowledged standing. The fact, pointed out by Professor De Morgan and honestly admitted by Mr. Rogers, that the words "l'infâme" are always construed with feminine articles, pronouns, and adjectives, whereas these would be necessarily and invariably masculine if they referred to Jesus, is absolutely conclusive on the point at issue. If Mr. Cook is ignorant of this fact, his characteristic declaration that "there is no scholarly scepticism in Boston" is even more amusing than it is petulant and conceited. But if, knowing the fact, he nevertheless chooses for purposes of vulgar abuse to suppress it, he may be left to enjoy an unenvied monopoly of the very peculiar style of honesty with which he adorns the Monday lectureship.

PROFESSOR ADLER.

The New York Daily Graphic of May 15 published the following account of Professor Adler's new society:—

The annual meeting of the Society for Ethical Culture was held last evening in Standard Hall, Forty-second Street and Broadway. A numerous and enthusiastic audience was present. The report submitted showed a membership of two hundred and thirty-four, exclusive of subscribers. The receipts for the past year amounted to over $4,000; the disbursements about equalled the receipts. The expenses of the choir and rent consumed about $3,500. Professor Adler received only $500. The society begins its second year under very encouraging auspices. The subscriptions already amount to $6,700, and it is anticipated that the amount will be largely increased. The Trustees were authorized to procure a larger hall for the Sunday meetings, as Standard Hall was found to be totally inadequate to accommodate the rapidly increasing number of those attracted by the movement.

Professor Adler made a personal statement in regard to a letter by President White, of Cornell University, published a few days ago, in which the course of Professor Adler was highly commended. Touching his Professorship at Cornell University, he said the design of Mr. Ezra Cornell and President White was to found and direct a university in this country modelled after the celebrated University of Berlin, in which it was well known the utmost liberty of opinion was permitted without question among the professors of that institution. In order to emphasize the spirit of freedom which it was intended should be the distinguishing characteristic of Cornell University, the Chair of Hebrew and Oriental Literature was founded, and he was appointed to occupy it. No sooner did his opinions become known than a spirit of intolerance manifested itself, amounting in many instances to persecution. It is, said the Professor, a matter for extreme regret, that in this country, dedicated to freedom, so many are found who display a narrowness and intolerance toward freedom of opinion which places us in disagreeable contrast with even despotic governments. In a monarchical government like Prussia, almost absolute in its form and spirit, it is well known that many of the professors in the Berlin University hold the most anti-theological views in religion and the most extreme republican opinions in politics, and yet neither the government or the people manifest the slightest opposition; yet his public expression of his opinions and convictions had roused a storm of opposition toward Cornell University which seriously threatened it, and it was this spirit that forced upon him the propriety of resigning his professorship in that institution.

The "Open Letter" of President White (for a copy of which we are indebted to some unknown friend at Ithaca) will be found copied on a preceding page, and will interest all who hope to see in this country at some time a great university which can afford to be wholly independent of Christian superstition.

CELEBRITIES AT HOME.

THOMAS CARLYLE AT CHEYNE-ROW.

Seated in his ample arm-chair, Thomas Carlyle—the historian, biographer, essayist, and thinker, who has written his name deeper in the literature of his country than any man now living—presents a remarkable instance of the gradual development, not only of style, but of character, not only of literary work, but of personal appearance. When we compare the gray-bearded, rugged-featured man, swathed in ample dressing-gown of gray duffel, with the sketches of him taken in his youth, we note the work of time and thought upon the human organism. In the sketches by Lawrence and others he appears as a young Scotchman, and nothing more; but in the face of to-day every line speaks of the strong worker eager for truth, be it sunk in never so deep a well, impatient of incompetence, scornful of conventionality, cleaving his way through the lies and blunders of ages, till he succeeds in letting fresh air and genuine sunlight into the tangled maze that men call history. In the soft Doric tones—tonic would be an apter comparison—of his native Dumfriesshire, he discourses in a fashion peculiar to himself on a variety of subjects, and invests all with interest. It is difficult to imagine the question on which his utterances could be "dry." Enormous and omnivorous reading has stored a powerful memory with a mass of facts wonderfully arranged in the pigeon-holes of his brain, and ready at any moment to be focused on the subject in hand. But it is not mere learning which lends his conversation its special charm, but rather his faculty of illustration, sometimes poetical, sometimes homely, but always striking. It must not be imagined that he degenerates into monologue; for perhaps no really admirable talker has less of the button-holder in his composition. He gives his views fully, amply enriching his talk with anecdote and example, but ever keeping the real core of the subject well in view. As he talks on, in even deliberate tone, the listener finds his mind carried away for a while into queer nooks and crannies, to be presently brought back to the straight path by a keen and pertinent expression of opinion—not undecided or wavering this, but sharp, strong, and sudden, as a stroke from the hammer of Thor. The effect of Mr. Carlyle's "talk" may be compared to that produced by a walk in one of those quaint mediæval cities through which a broad modern thoroughfare has recently been cut. Turning aside from the straight path towards the railway-station the wanderer meanders among narrow streets and quaint gables, pauses at the foot of ancient towers, plumps upon a massive gateway revealing the traces of Roman occupation, notes the strange images that monkish masons delighted in, and the weathercock shot through and through by a skilful marksman, till all at once he emerges from an alley into a blaze of light, and finds that he has reached his destination after all. It is this element of surprise that distinguishes Mr. Carlyle's "talk" from that of all other men. It is impossible to predict what opinion he will pronounce, and equally vain to imagine the grounds on which it will be based. All this flow of argument and illustration proceeds from natural temperament. None of the aids to conversation supposed to have been indulged in by the gossips of the Noctes Ambrosianæ finds a place in Mr. Carlyle's dietary. He is naturally abstemious, eating but two sparing meals daily, and drinking never more than a couple of glasses of wine. His sole relaxation, amusement, or dissipation is tobacco, and tobacco in its simplest form. Neither sleek cigar nor dainty cigarette has charms for the philosopher of Chelsea. He smokes a pipe—not of meerschaum or of bruyère (Anglicè, "brier"), but of earth, the church-warden or yard of clay, the lineal descendant of the pipes dug up by the dozen on the site of Don Saltero's coffee-house, hard by in Cheyne-walk—a genuine Puritan pipe,—the place of the short-cut beloved by Roundheads being supplied by York River. In the bright summer-tide, when the old-fashioned garden is neat and trim, it is Mr. Carlyle's humor to sit under an awning in the sweet morning air, and discuss many pipes of his favorite weed. It is, however, abundantly clear that he does not require tobacco to stimulate his conversation; for when in the vein he will, when taking one of his long walks, supply his companion with abundant food for memory and reflection. There is a sort of rumor—of the value of rumors generally—that Mr. Carlyle is apt to be curt in his address. This is not only untrue, but the very reverse of the truth. He is certainly averse to the intrusion of utter strangers, and on one occasion vouchsafed an odd but well-merited reply to a man who walked up to him and asked "if he might look at him." The philosopher merely said, "Look on, man. It will do me no harm, and you no good," and walked quietly on. The most curious part of this rencontre is, that the person whose silly request was so gently rebuked went away delighted, saying that the "remark was so like Carlyle," so thoroughly "characteristic." Now it was something less than characteristic; for Mr. Carlyle, when approached like any other gentleman through the medium of an introduction, is courteous itself, and quite ready, if in fair health, to let his visitor enjoy a sample of his picturesque "talk." Not very long ago he invited one of our most successful novelists to call upon him, and edified that gentleman with much brilliant discourse on men and things,—all and every, save only that subject which naturally lay nearest the young author's heart,—his own works. At last the long-expected remark came. "You know our Scotland well," quoth the sage; "and I have read your books with great pleasure. They are amusing,—yes, amusing. You are just amusing. But when are you going to do something—to write a real book,—eh, man?"

A few years ago Mr. Carlyle not only smoked, but worked in his garden, and retired within doors to a little room at the top of the house. He now occupies the drawing-room of the house in Cheyne-row—a bright cheerful apartment, furnished among other things with a flat writing-table, a reading-cassell, a wooden paper-knife marked "Mentone," and a bow-knife of tremendous proportions. The walls are adorned with paintings and engravings of members of the Carlylese Olympus. Occupying one side of the room is a huge picture by Pease, the "Little Drummer"—Frederick and his sister, the Margravine of Bayreuth, as children, marching gayly along, the boy playing vigorously on a drum. From a spot on the right of the door smiles the before-mentioned Wilhelmina very coquettishly, with her hood drawn down in killing fashion over one of her great bright eyes. Beneath the séduisante marquise hangs the plain face of Cromwell, one of the many examples of the "Hero as King" in the house in Cheyne-row. Hard by are some choice engravings by Albert Dürer and his school, notably the Melancholia; and farther on is le roi Voltaire, crowned in the Théâtre Français; Frederick in a cocked hat looking across the room with no friendly gaze. Next hang two copies of Cranach's pictures in the Wartburg—the father and mother of the "Hero as Priest"—and the rare engraving of Feythorne's Cromwell. The dining-room is also well filled with pictures and engravings, portraits of Jean Paul, of Hume, of Martin Luther, and Goethe. The latter bears the autograph-signature of the great German beneath the lines:—

"Liegt dir Gestern klar und offen
Wirkt du Heute kräftig frey
Kannst auch auf ein Morgen hoffen
Das nicht minder glücklich sey."

WEIMAR, 7. Nov. 1825."

It was presented to Mr. Carlyle on the completion of his masterly translation of Wilhelm Meister. There is also a curious engraving of that ancient hussar Zlethen, "sitzend vor seinem König," who is holding the old warrior down in his seat. On the mantelpiece stands an example of the famous Worcester jug, dedicated to the great Frederick, and printed in "transfer" over the glaze. This jug is curious as a piece of historic pottery, but its value has been greatly increased since the publication of the History of Frederick II., called Frederick the Great. Scattered here and there are portraits of Mr. Carlyle himself—the head by Samuel Lawrence, the pen-and-ink drawing by Macleise, the admirable bust by Woolner—and a terra-cotta miniature of the magnificent statue by Boehm, exhibited at the Royal Academy. Just inside the door is a screen covered with valuable engravings, arranged with a keen sense of the fun to be created by incongruous juxtaposition. A melancholy interest attaches to this monument of patience, taste, and humor. It was made by Mrs. Carlyle. It will be recollected that this amiable and gifted lady died a few years ago, after being terribly frightened by her pet dog leaping out of her carriage in Hyde Park. The animal escaped safe and sound from the crowd of vehicles; but his mistress survived the shock but a very few hours.

As the morning mists clear from the Thames, various figures may be seen strolling about with that peculiar air which indicates expectation in its possessor. The pilgrim is sometimes a broad-shouldered Scot, sometimes a little townsman from the Midlands, now and then an obvious artisan, long-limbed and bowler-hatted. They can all read, these hangers by the Thames. They diligently peruse the morning papers, and now and then cast an eager look towards the end of Cheyne-row, for they have come many a weary mile to look upon their hero, who has taught them, in round terms too, to appreciate their betters. At last emerges a tall slightly-bowed figure, surmounted by a wide-awake of ample brim; and as Thomas Carlyle takes his early morning stroll they gaze, neither curiously nor impudently, but reverently. Unheeding he passes on, as one whose spirit is not stirred by public observation. This before-breakfast promenade is part of a regular programme, through which the inventor of the clothes-philosophy works daily. Breakfast over, work commences; and here be it observed that Mr. Carlyle does not qualify reading and study as work, reserving the latter term for actual production. In this he differs widely from the great army of literary nihilists,—the men of letters who pass their days in the reading-room of the British Museum, and take their full value out of the London Library, but never produce anything. His hours of work are short,—from half-past ten or eleven till two; the rest of the afternoon being devoted to exercise, either in the form of a long walk with an old friend and congenial companion, or of a jaunt up to town in a Chelsea omnibus. The last-named dissipation is a great favorite with Mr. Carlyle. He believes that the shaking, from which the effeminate hansom is comparatively free, but which may be thoroughly enjoyed in an omnibus, is a peculiarly wholesome species of exercise. Till within a few years he rode and drove a great deal. Making a rapid calculation one day, he said that during the time he was engaged in the production of Friedrich II. he rode twice round the world. On alighting from the omnibus he will stroll in any direction, not bent entirely upon exercise, but observing keenly the human comedy visible on a London afternoon. His tastes would not occur to one who met him for the first time during his afternoon stroll as being of a literary complexion. He is no loiterer at bookstalls or grubber among curiosities. The first time we saw him out of doors he was gazing intently at the bonnets in a shop-window in Knightsbridge, lost in thought,—or was it admiration? Imagine Teufelsdröckh on bonnets, and his considerations on the occult significance of the Angot cap! Returning home from his afternoon promenade he reposes until dinner-time. This important ceremony over he again wanders out for a short space, and then sits down, not to work, as he puts it, but to read till two o'clock in the morning.

This is, it must be confessed, a strong programme for a man of Mr. Carlyle's age, for it is eighty-one years since he was born in the room over the archway of the farm-house at Ecclefechan. All his later works have been written at Chelsea, but the book which may perhaps be said to have stamped his reputation, and to be the most Carlylesque of all his works, Sartor Resartus, was written at Craigenputtock, a sober, angular-looking country-house almost buried in a huge clump of firs. The inventor of a new style of English composition has always loved his native Dumfriesshire, and it was during his lonely rambles amid its picturesque scenery that his style gradually crystallized into the form which has needed all his genius to make it acceptable. In his essays on Pitt, Montaigne, and Nelson, we see the original genius seeking articulate power in ordinary language; but it is in Sartor Resartus that we see the mind, under German influence, putting on its proper clothing,—a garment which fits the imitators of the master like the mantle introduced by the dwarf to the lively beauties of King Arthur's court.

The reading preferred by the author of Hero-Worship is almost entirely confined to books. It has been said that it is general enough in character, but the reader is imbued with a certain preference for works in a bound and otherwise complete condition. Of newspapers he, despite his many commendations of the "able editor," is no lover. They occupy too much space, and their perusal too much time. Public Opinion and All the Year Round are the only periodical publications welcomed within the walls of the house in Cheyne-row, and the rhetoric of the leading journals is for the most part lost on the historian of the Seven Years' War. Books too, apart from a few companions of early life, are valued by him not as books, as choice editions, and so forth, but simply as shells which, when the kernel is extracted, may be flung away. The smallness of Mr. Carlyle's library—perhaps the smallest, saving mere books of reference, that ever belonged to a great man of letters—is explained by his magnificent memory. When a book is read, read with that intensity of attention which he brings to bear upon it, it is no longer of value. He has made it his own. Whatever of fact and truth and life is in it, it is absorbed, and the husk is valueless. The pleasure derived by weaker creatures from the reperusal of favorite books is lost on his vigorous organization. As his readers and companions well know, he rarely quotes on paper, and never cites in "talk" the exact words of his authorities. They are melted down in the Carlylesque furnace, and come out of it in startling flights of graphic description, and in conversation like nothing in the world so much as a kaleidoscope, so rare and original are its combinations of vivid color. It is this tremendous individuality which accounts for the grip of Thomas Carlyle on many of the foremost minds of England, America, and Germany. Adopting literature as a profession at the comparatively mature age of twenty-eight, he worked ten more years before he began to write the lucubrations of Teufelsdröckh. It requires an effort to throw the mind back to that distant date. When Sartor Resartus appeared in Fraser's Magazine, and Mr. Carlyle first occupied his present dwelling at Chelsea, many men who now rank high in the world of letters were not born. Macaulay had just made his mark in the Edinburgh Review, Bulwer had astonished the world with Pelham, "Young Disraeli," at the height of his literary reputation, was not yet in the House of Commons. The first Reform Bill had but recently received the royal assent. The Noctes Ambrosianæ were in full blast. Dickens and Thackeray were unheard of. Of all this galaxy of genius but two stars remain,—one shining through the murky atmosphere of politics, the other in the serene firmament of letters.—London World, Nov. 22, 1876.

Communications.

THE FRIENDS OF PROGRESS.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., June 5, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The twenty-ninth annual meeting of the Friends of Human Progress at Waterloo, N. Y., just closed a very interesting two-days session. It was attended by some six or seven hundred of the intelligent inhabitants of the vicinity, and the prominent questions of the day were freely discussed from that freest of platforms. The subjects included those of Temperance, Spiritualism, Free Religion, Church and State, Capital and Labor, and the Rights of Women. Each of these questions was represented by one or more of its able advocates. The blank petitions issued by the National Liberal League were numerously circulated, and I am confident will be returned well filled. Mr. Giles Stebbins, of Detroit, and two secretaries constituted the officers of the meeting. I have often attended these meetings during the last twenty years, but remember but few that gave better promises of valuable results.

H. L. GREEN.

P.S.—And may I add that there is appointed the First Annual Meeting of Freethinkers for Central and Western New York, to be held in a beautiful grove near "Cosad's Liberal Hall" at Waterloo, N. Y., on the 17th, 18th, and 19th days of August. The committee have invited as speakers, C. D. B. Miles, of Syracuse; Giles B. Stebbins, of Detroit; J. H. Harter, of Auburn; T. L. Brown, M.D., of Binghamton; and H. L. Green, of Salamanca. A large gathering is expected.

"SOCIAL DEMOCRACY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

An editorial notice of the Radical Review in THE INDEX of May 31 contains the following sentence: "Mr. Ernst's paper on 'Practical Socialism in Germany' is full of instruction, especially for some who propagate ignorance in the name of labor reform." Now, if "ignorance" signifies the absence of knowledge, as cold signifies the absence of heat, it seems to me to be of too negative a quality to be "propagated." Further, if the hint is intended for the advocates of "practical socialism" in industrial and commercial matters in America—an inference that I cannot help making,—social democracy is not propagated "in the name of labor reform"; and social democrats are not labor reformers in the ordinary sense of the term.

Considering that the form of socialism treated of in the paper in question is a very new manifestation of social revolt even in Germany, where it has already made such rapid headway; and that it involves such immense changes in the organization of civilization; and that it has not yet attracted to any large extent the attention of the best thinkers, at all events in America, and that, accordingly, its arguments are not very ably presented,—is it fair thus to throw the whole subject into the waste-paper basket as an exhibition of ignorance not worthy of refutation?

THE INDEX is engaged in a special work of reform, and of course is not called upon to examine the theory of social democracy unless it pleases; but, if it does spontaneously touch the subject at all, it should at least do so respectfully, unless it is able to show that the subject is not worthy of respectful consideration.

The advocates of social democracy in our midst do not claim to be men of scholarly attainments,—in a certain conventional sense they are ignorant men. But it does not follow that they have not got hold of an important truth; and the fact that their ideas are acknowledged to have already awakened alarm in the despotic powers of Europe—notably in Germany, and in the mind of Bismarck himself, the very personification of despotism,—ought to command for them a candid hearing and examination, not a contemptuous consignment to the limbo of "ignorance."

W. G. H. SMART.

[It was not "social democracy" to which the remark criticised had reference. What we had in mind was the fact that Mr. Ernst's paper contained very useful ideas which are despised, if known, by some of those who are prominent in the "labor reform" movement. For instance, we consider Mr. Ernst to have uttered very wholesome truth, when he said: "One speaker explained to the socialists the legitimate consequences of their crude theories and the inevitable results of their practical demands. The accumulation of capital and rent was shown to be a moral act, and this moral agency was proved to underlie all trades as much as land is the basis of farming. Hence war against either labor or capital is war against moral civilization. Therefore, should a war come such as the socialists wish, the rich will become poor, if their enemies be victorious, and the poor will not become rich, if they are the victors themselves." We believe that antagonism between labor and capital can bring only injury to both, and that social prosperity will be postponed until they learn the difficult lesson of coöperation. We intended to pass no sweeping judgment on "social democracy," and should be glad to receive from Mr. Smart a clear, definite, precise statement of what it aims to accomplish.—Ed.]

HOW THE CHURCH WOULD CURE INTemperance.

Last week, the Rev. Dr. Crosby, Chancellor of the New York University, not only assisted in ejecting a drunken man from a street-car, but also lodged a complaint against him, and appeared to testify when the case was called.

Now this appears to us very much like the case of the rum-seller who first furnished his patron with the "fighting whiskey," and then summarily ejected him from the bar-room upon his becoming noisy and abusive. The Church, both Catholic and Protestant,—as in the case of slavery,—utters but a feeble protest against the sale of liquor on every corner of the street in our great cities, and the consequent widespread curse of intemperance. Liquor-dealers, rum-sellers, and distillers stand high on the lists of the faithful, and are regular attendants at the communion-table, where doubtless they often taste their own wines. Of course, they head subscriptions, pay exorbitant pew-rents, and never grumble at bills for trips to Europe, excursions, sociables, and the amusements of the church-parlors. Their profits are large; they can afford it, and from a business standpoint, we don't blame the churches for not making a wry face at the flavor of the contribution; for, as Goethe well says: "The Church has a strong stomach."

But when the Rev. Dr. Crosby ejects a poor fellow from the horse-car and then secures his fine and imprisonment for drunkenness, we contend that his act is both unchristian-like and unscientific, and empiric in the extreme.

We are not a Christian; but from our knowledge of the tenets and precepts of that religion we should say that the Rev. Dr. Crosby's proper course would have been not to drag the offender before the "judgment-seat," but rather to rescue him from the stroke of blind justice, ascertain his residence, pray with him and for him, induce him to attend services at his (the Rev. Dr.'s) church, ask the prayers of the congregation for him, watch over him with gentle, loving care until a change came over him and he grew strong enough to resist the tempter. The Rev. Dr. was unscientific in that he did not rescue the man from the brute force of an ignorant guardian of the peace, accompany him home, ascertain the cause of the man's tendency to drink, whether hereditary or accidental, whether a weakness of the stomach or a weakness of the mind, whether acute or chronic, whether rational or emotional, whether the man had not that day been discharged from employment, or betrayed by his wife, or abandoned by his child, or wronged by his fellow-man, or led astray by a designing and crafty counsellor.

The Rev. Dr. ought to know that drunkenness can't be cured by "fine and imprisonment"; that it but aggravates the disease, but chafes the raw spot, but produces the very evil he sought to suppress. There was but one man who deserved "fine and imprisonment," and he was the conductor, for allowing the drunken man to enter the horse-car. Still, perhaps we should not say this, for doubtless it saved the poor devil a clubbing at the hands of one of our "guardians of the peace."

INGERSOLL LOCKWOOD.

NEW YORK, June 11, 1877.

MR. DAY ON SPIRITUALISM.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I desire space for a brief review of the articles signed by Preston Day, who seems to be straining his vision into the abyss of "Visible Darkness." "Beyond the Veil," where no prophet has been permitted to see more than the ignes fatui on the border of the shadow land. Yet he informs us that "any the slightest hope of immortality is an absurdity," if Mr. Lum's logic is invulnerable; in other words, that hope cannot be entertained for a theory in the face of a strong argument against it. There would be some plausibility in this statement, if every logical argument were absolutely exhaustive. But according to his own showing he has no evidence of immortality; for he exclaims, "I asked for a morsel of bread"—the bread of evidence,—and received a whole cart-load of stones." He further admits the ability of Mr. Stoddard's essay, and that he clearly makes it appear that there is no "evidence of any kind." Mr. Day further declares: "I would not give a button for all the arguments in favor of immortality from Plato's time down to now." He does not even hint at any evidence possessed by Spiritualists, but says: "If Spiritualism can succeed in finally establishing one of her peculiar phenomena as verifiable fact, the world will freely forgive her sins." Yet, strange as it may appear, he tells us: "I think it best to continue indulgence in hope." Hoping still, without evidence,—hoping against hope. Most rational minds admit that there are some things beyond the domain of science. But Mr. Day, in his eulogy on science, declares: "Vainly have I striven to imagine something above, beneath, or beyond" the domain of science. "There is nothing beyond, nothing super." "A methodical and reasonable exposition of facts we call science." He thus makes man's limited faculties capable of solving the infinite and impossible. When all the facts that are possible for human powers to reach are classified, if that day ever comes, then man will have gathered but a few shells from the shore of the great ocean of truth, whose depth he may never fathom. But Spiritualism, or an imaginary "fact" in Spiritualism, is the real deity of Mr. Day. At this shrine he worships. The sweetest incense of his heart goes up in "profound and abiding reverence for facts,"—not facts outside of Spiritualism, for in his estimation they are "all" worthless on the subject of immortality. But "if Spiritualism succeeds, doubtful hope will give place to confident joy." If any one has come nearer establishing a spiritual phenomenon than Katie King, Mr. Day has not informed us of that fact, nor given evidence that there is a prospect of any fruits emanating from his cherished science better than the "confused floundering" or the "malarious, disagreeable, and worse" "ploneering" of its advocates that he mentions. He closes the count by giving a reason why he is averse to exercising his wits on the follies of Spiritualism. To which it is sufficient to say,—better exercise all our wits against follies than for them. T. J. ARWOOD.

ALBION, Wis.

THE PARASITES OF JESUS.

The fulsome and continuous eulogy, flattery, and laudation of Jesus Christ, poured forth by the pulpit, is offensive as unmixed adulation always must be, when its motives are subjected to analysis. If Jesus is what the supernaturalists claim that he is, to wit, the heir-apparent of Jehovah, sitting on the right hand of the Father in the heavens, wherever that exceedingly indefinite region may be, he is as much a potentate as is the Prince of Wales, or the grand-ducal heir of the Czar of Russia. He has good things to bestow on those who fawn on him and flatter him; namely, happiness hereafter and a heavenly citizenship, which makes its subjects eternally fortunate. If the parasites of Jesus say that their admiration of him is excited by his amiable traits, is a pure effusion of love and disinterested regard, taking no thought of the tremendous power over man's fate which Jesus wields, the reply must be that the parasites in question will find upon the least self-scrutiny that they are mistaken. Worship soon ceases unless the object of it has power as well as amiable traits. Man has worshipped gods from the start, and appeased them with costly sacrifices to secure their good-will, and with the conviction that they could harm him or bless him at their option. The Roman Emperors, the lords of the world of their day were worshipped as gods. This Caesar-worship was the chief religion of the Roman Empire prior to the prevalence of Christianity. The Emperors were supernaturalized, as Jesus Christ was after them. The Pope of Rome is an ecclesiastical Caesar, and belongs in the estimation of Papists to the category of gods, as his predecessors in Rome—Cæsar Augustus, Tiberius, Nero, and Caligula—did. Worship is prompted by fear of power and by human selfishness. No personality was ever worshipped simply because he or she possessed amiable traits. The mass of people are apt to entertain a mild contempt for a merely amiable person. Like all amiable men, Jesus of Nazareth was weak in many points. Men install imaginary, omnipotent persons in the heavens called Jehovah and Jesus, who sit on thrones surrounded by adoring angels, and inhale the incense of ceaseless praise and adulation. These omnipotent persons they make the objects of unmeasured and immeasurable enmity, while they depreciate themselves at the same time and their own race as altogether vile, notwithstanding that we here on earth are subjected to toll, suffering, and pain, while the aforesaid gods lead easy lives. Such is religious worship. B. W. BALL.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., as everybody knows, is renowned for its culture, its university, and its literary men; notwithstanding, or rather on account of which, it is so well satisfied with itself that it frequently fails to note, or to care for, what is going on in the rest of the world. A young lady, representing the best society of the town, in a conversation with a New Yorker about clergymen here, asked if Henry Ward Beecher was not considered one of the ablest Unitarian clergymen in the city. He replied: "O no, Mr. Beecher is a Mohammedan." "Is he, really?" Well, we don't pay much attention in Cambridge to what is going on in New York." Not wholly unlike this was the experience of a "liberal religionist" from this city. While travelling in England recently, he happened to have some theological discussion with a lady belonging to the Established Church. As he did not agree with her in opinion, she regarded him as little better than an infidel, and replied to an argument of his in this extraordinary manner: "O well, you Americans are so very clever that I dare say you can get along without any God; but it's very different with us, you know."—Tribune.

A FEROCIOUS BISHOP.

The Right Rev. Dr. Coxe, Bishop of Western New York, has written a poem, which our readers will find in another column. If we call their attention to it, it is not on account of any literary merit which it may possess, but because we desire to show them what a leader of "the Church militant here on earth" can do when his blood is up. Were it the inspired effusion of the Sheikh ul Islam or a Mohammedan moollah preaching a jehad, with the Crescent substituted for the Cross to which the Bishop appeals, we should regret its intolerant spirit and bloodthirsty tone, but should accept it as an additional evidence of that ferocious religious fanaticism with which the Moslem has so often been charged, and for which he has been so justly condemned in years gone by. With the progress of civilization, however, the parts seem likely to be reversed.

The propagandism of the faith of Islam by the sword is a matter of the past, and centuries have elapsed since populations subjected by the soldiers of the Prophet have been compelled to adopt his creed. In the present struggle the standard of a holy war has been first raised by the Christian, and doubtless many bishops of the Greek Church have sought to stimulate the warlike ardor of their flocks with just such strains as have now issued from the western Episcopalian diocese of New York. Of all branches of the Christian Church there is none more degraded in its superstitions, or more oppressive in its persecutions, than that which in Eastern Europe claims to be the parent stem from which all other Christian sects have been the offshoots; and no Church treats with more unrelenting severity the professors of forms of Christianity which presume to differ from what is considered the Orthodox confession. The scourging of the nuns of Minak and the fearful barbarity with which these poor unoffending women were treated on account of their religion, roused at the time the indignation of Europe, and called down a chorus of execration on the cruel and intolerant ecclesiastics who incited the Russian government to the perpetration of horrors unsurpassed in the annals of Moslem fanaticism. But the constant and increasing persecution to which the Russian Raskolniks are still subjected, for venturing to have religious opinions of their own, are unknown and unsuspected in this country. Imprisonment, scourging, exile, or even death is the portion meted out to them, for no other reason than that they cannot conscientiously conform to the State religion; while the massacre of Ismail, the memory of which still lingers in the neighborhood where nearly thirty-nine thousand men, women, and children were put to death because they were Mussulmans, was directly due to the religious fanaticism which inspired their murderers.

It is upon the same fanatic crusaders, and apparently in hope of deeds of similar ruthless and sanguinary barbarity, that an eminent, and we had almost said a Christian, divine now invokes the blessing of the Almighty. The bugle-blasts of Gen. Kauffman's troops in Central Asia recently engaged under the orders of that General in sparing neither woman nor child in their wholesale slaughter, Bishop Coxe sacrilegiously describes as the "Trump of the Lord"; and in his fear lest commercial considerations may arise to check the glorious and sacred work of indiscriminate massacre, he piously exclaims, "Shame on the swords that trade can mar!" There is, to be sure, a little ambiguity about this line; it may contain a warning to the manufacturers of arms for the Russians in this country or elsewhere, not to impose upon the holy Cossack weapons which may give out through imperfect temper in the early stages of women and baby hewing. In another fine burst of religious fervor, in which the somewhat involved state of the metaphor may be pardoned for the noble sentiment which lies behind it, this Episcopalian priest exclaims, "Wake, swords that rust!"

We should treat this bombastic effusion with the contempt which it deserves as a poem, if it were not that we felt bound to protest against a prominent teacher of men, who is clothed with the authority and dignity of a high Christian office, prostituting his sacred functions by a rhapsody which we can only regard as profane, and which, in the minds of all serious and earnest Christians, must bring discredit on that religion of peace and love which it is the Bishop's duty to inculcate. What right has he to invoke Russians or any one else to work "vengeance dire" upon any nation or people simply because he happens to differ with them in religious belief? The Master whom the Bishop is supposed to serve has said, "Vengeance is mine"; and we can safely leave the retribution, which in the Divine providence will overtake those people who have incurred it, to Him who holds the nations in his hand.

When Bishop Coxe recalls the glories of Stamboul of yore, and wishes to see the Cross restored there, does he remember that the Christian emperors who misgoverned a people as no Turks have misgoverned them, were chiefly celebrated for the crimes of murder and incest; and that the only glory of which Stamboul could boast was that of being more licentious and depraved than any other city of Europe? We advise the Bishop, before chanting the glittering glories of high Stamboul under the Cross, to read a little about its past history; and we would further suggest a closer study of those sacred precepts which he so presumptuously repudiates in his war-song. "To arms! to arms!" sounds like a shout of defiance to his mild and gentle Master, when he rebuked the impetuous disciple whose highest conceptions of moral obligation resolved themselves, like this Bishop's, into brute force. "Put up again thy sword into its place; for all they that take the sword shall perish by the sword."

We know nothing about Bishop Coxe's practices in propagating his own religious opinions in the community amid which he dwells. In Western New York the fist is now the only safe weapon; but were he to be transferred to a more occidental field of labor, he might indulge in the congenial revolver; and, for our part, we should not regret any change that should substitute for this sanguinary crusader a tolerant and Christian spirit, fulfilling the apostolic injunction to Timothy, "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." Instead of outraging Christian sentiment by holding up that cross as an emblem of rapine and slaughter, which we cling to as the symbol of peace and good-will toward men. When there is so much urgent work to be done at home, so many social and clerical abuses to be grappled with by men occupying positions of authority in the Church, who shrink from exposing themselves to the unpopularity which the conscientious discharge of their duties might involve, it is distressing to have such evidences as this poem afford to a benighted and intolerant spirit more in accordance with the middle ages than with the nineteenth century. We sincerely regret for Bishop Coxe's own sake that he has given us this insight into the spiritual methods which he believes in for the defence and propagation of his religion; and we no less compassionate those whom he instructs respecting that inspired system of morality which appeals not to the lowest and most savage passions of humanity, but to their purest and noblest instincts.—New York Sun.

LONG AGES ago, in times so remote that history does not fix the epoch, a dreadful war was waged between the King of Cornwall and the King of Scotland. Scottish valor prevailed, and the King of Cornwall was defeated. The Scottish monarch, elated by success, sent for his prime minister, Lord Alexander. "Weel, Sandy," said he, "is there ne'er a king we canna conquer the noo?" "An' it please your majesty, I ken but o' ae king that your Majesty canna vanquish." "An' whaur is he, Sandy?" Lord Alexander, reverently looking up, said, "The King o' Heeven." "The King o' whaur, Sandy?" "The King o' Heeven." The Scottish King did not understand, but was unwilling to exhibit any ignorance. "Just gang yer ways, Sandy, and tell the King o' Heeven to gie up his dominions, or I'll come myself and ding him out o' them; and mind, Sandy, ye do not come back till us until ye hae done our bidden." Lord Alexander, retired much perplexed, but met a priest, and reassured, returned and presented himself. "Weel, Sandy," said the King, "hae ye seen the King o' Heeven, and what said he to our bidden?" "An' it please your Majesty, I hae no seen the King himself, but I have seen ane o' his accredited ministers." "Weel, and what says he?" "He says yer Majesty may e'en hae his kingdom for the asking of it." "Was he sae ceevil?" says the King, warmed to magnanimity. "Just gang yer ways back, Sandy, and tell the King o' Heeven that for his ceevilty the de'il a Scotchman shall ever set foot in his kingdom."—Liverpool Mercury.

NOT LONG AGO, a phenomenon in China gave lively hope of the conversion of the Chinese heathen to Christianity. There was a sudden and remarkable demand, in certain places, for the Bible; and a large edition in the native tongue was consequently struck off to supply the anxious heathen. These heathen greedily sought for the free copies of the Bible, gratefully accepted them, and rejoicingly marched off with them. The missionaries were delighted as they distributed the volumes among the crowds in waiting, and looked patiently for the appearance of as many converts as there were Bible-seekers. But though there continued to be an active demand among the idolaters for the Bibles that were gratuitously distributed, no converts turned up. At last the missionaries determined to undertake an investigation of this strange state of things. It was a melancholy revelation for them, when they discovered that the quick-witted heathen were not giving themselves up to the pious study of their free Bibles, but were using them in the making and repairing of the thick paper sole of the Chinese shoe. The supply of free Biblical material to the almond-eyed heathen of the Celestial Empire was quickly cut off by the disappointed missionaries; but, in the meantime, many of them had provided themselves with comfortable shoes at the expense of the Bible Society.—N. Y. Sun.

THE REV. EDWARD EVERETT HALE does not greatly care for revivals and revivalists. He tells this suggestive story: "In early life I happened to meet one morning with the distinguished author, Sylvester Judd, just after we had both heard a great preacher, a man of much rhetorical power and remarkable 'religiousity,' speak on the text: 'The whole creation groaned in pain together until now.' I asked Mr. Judd how he liked the sermon. 'I stood it, though with difficulty,' he said in a sort of agony. 'I stood it till he came to that place where he abused God's ocean. But when he said that that was roaring in pain, was howling with agony as convinced of sin, I had to leave my seat and leave the church. I crowded by the good woman at the door of the pew. 'Excuse me, madam, but it makes me sick,' I said. I was not myself till I stood under God's clear stars in his still night. They were not in anguish; they were not howling in pain. And I could not hear that man defaming them.' And then, more seriously, Mr. Judd went on: 'Is there nothing better to preach about than sin? Always sin! sin! sin! Is not virtue better to talk of than vice? Is it not better to think of the pure than the impure? Are not love and truth and beauty subjects better fitted for God's children than always sin, sin, sin?'—N. Y. Tribune, Jan. 31.

AH SING and Ah Sin have been at law in San Francisco about the sale of a wife. The matter has been referred to Ah Bitration.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " 8 " "
" 26 " 51 " 6 " "
" 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,

No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address

THE INDEX

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, E. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 50 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address

THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. The Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physiology and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Betty Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.50
Common-Sense in Religion.....	1.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	1.50
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.50
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	4.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Father Time.....	1.00
Ellas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.50
The Same. Library Edition. 1 vol.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Man.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Places.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Baier. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.40
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	1.00
The Unknown River.....	1.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapman's Address.....	1.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	1.50
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Sepia's Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Repose.....	1.50
Eden. An Out-Door Repose.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Asiatic Essays.....	2.50
Out-door Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrates.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms and Water, in Glaciers, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostation. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analytical Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Begius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Varieties, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEWIS (W. E. B.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEWIS'S Confessions' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	2.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SER. JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1842.....	3.40
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.35
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of St. Paul.....	1.50
Complete of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Future Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
Logic.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.00
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Language. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.00
Phases of his Career, or Passages from the History of his Own, or Passages from the History of his Own, or Passages from the History of his Own.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.00
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. 1 and M.DCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.00
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tretty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnet, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.00
SCHILLER (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E., F.R.S.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	25.00
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Human, to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	3.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New—Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	2.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.00
The Olney-Boon Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.00
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pandemonium.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Margaret, Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Smoke, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THACKERAY'S (MRS. UNLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THORNTON'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in the Woods. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
A Week in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	2.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings of the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLES (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	4.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Science and the Conditions of Life.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 8000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.

Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each, $30.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPE. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MADAME FOY'S

CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year, And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY
FOY & HARMON,
New Haven, Conn.

THOMAS PAINE:

THE METHOD and VALUE of his RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS.

A LECTURE

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

Price 10 cents, post-paid.

CHAS. M. GREEN,
19 Jacob Street, New York City.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)...$1.50
CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION..... 1.00
STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00
STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS..... 1.00
BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND OTHER DISCOURSES..... 1.00
LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER..... 3.00
THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp., with steel portrait of the author) ... 2.50
THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. Octavo, cloth..... 1.75
Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

263 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Free Thought.
EDITED BY
CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.
17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

MRS. UNDERWOOD'S

HEROINES OF FREE THOUGHT.

Contents:

1. Madame Roland.
2. Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin.
3. Mary W. Godwin Shelley.
4. George Sand.
5. Harriet Martineau.
6. Frances Wright D'Arsenault.
7. Emma Martin.
8. Margaret B. Chappell Smith.
9. Ernestine L. Rose.
10. Frances Power Cobbe.
11. George Eliot.

BY

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

237 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.75.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUEBLO SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 33 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.50.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL.

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROMISE of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES, ..... .15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES, ..... .40
FIFTY " ..... .75
ONE HUNDRED " ..... 1.55
TWO HUNDRED " ..... 2.40
THREE HUNDRED " ..... 3.60
FIVE HUNDRED " ..... 6.00
ONE THOUSAND " ..... 12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbus holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to vote, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 28, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 392.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

REV. J. H. NOYES, the head of the notorious Oneida Community, has abdicated in favor of his son, Dr. T. R. Noyes.

IN CONSEQUENCE of President MacMahon's surrender to the clerical party, the Italian Republicans placarded the streets of Rome with notices of a public demonstration at the Opello Theatre, to declare that Rome can never again be the capital city of a restored Papacy.

"ALMOST EVERY English review that comes to hand," says the New York Nation of June 7, "contains an article on some phase of the present relations between Church and State in the mother country." The same remark will, before long, be made of American reviews and journals of the higher class.

THE Library Table, of New York, says that "a prominent divine of New York city recently said he knew of no civilized country in the world where it was so difficult to speak out frankly and fully, especially on politics and religion, exactly what one thinks and feels, as in the United States of America." This testimony is recommended for consideration to the wise people who are innocently unconscious of any restriction on liberty of thought and speech in this country.

THE NEW YORK Irish World of June 23 declares that "there is a strong movement in influential Catholic circles looking towards the removal of Secretary Thompson on account of his book against the Catholic Church." The Boston Pilot makes the same declaration. The conflict between Protestantism and Catholicism is creeping into American politics, despite all the foolish assertions to the contrary. But this Catholic movement, if really in existence, will only intensify the Protestant Evangelical determination to govern this country. Where is the politician of eminence who dares to uphold the principle of strictly secular government? Can he be named?

THE EXCLUSION of all Jews by Judge Hilton from the Grand Union Hotel, at Saratoga, has created an immense excitement in New York. It is a miserable exhibition of race proscription, mixed up with private feuds and business rivalries; and we regret to believe that it will revive the old jealousy between Jews and Gentiles which ought long since to have been buried forever. It is a terrible blunder to suppose that the world has grown so liberal as to be safe in the future from the devastating effects of religious hatreds; the volcano sleeps, but is not extinct, and these small eruptions give warning of fearful forces at work beneath our feet. Equal Rights in Religion—they will never be recognized and revered without many a prior struggle and social convulsion.

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition of the National Liberal League have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from Dr. G. W. Topping, De Witt, Mich., 200; from Mr. B. F. Underwood, after a lecture at Whitehall, Ill., 67; from the same, after a lecture at Hudson, Mich., 58; from Dr. John G. Jenkins, Denver, Col., 107. Dr. Topping writes: "I herewith send you 200 signatures to the petition. All are adults twenty-one years old or over, and quite a number of them are members of the Methodist and other Orthodox churches. While procuring them, I gave two lectures on Church and State, one in De Witt and the other at St. Johns, Clifton Co., Mich. Think I could obtain more signatures in this section if I had time. May do so yet." Total number of signatures thus far acknowledged—6,705.

HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN died on Sunday, June 24, at his summer cottage on Lake George. He has been prominent all his life as a liberal and a socialist, and was a Vice-President of the National Liberal League at the time of his death. He was a son of Robert Owen, and was born in Glasgow, Nov. 1, 1801. He came to this country in 1826, and assisted in the socialist experiment at New Harmony, Ind. He served three successive years in the Indiana Legislature, and was active in passing measures for popular education and the giving of property rights to women. He was elected to Congress in 1843 and again in 1845. He introduced the bill organizing the Smithsonian Institute, and was one of its first regents. In 1849 he was President of the Indiana Constitutional Convention, and in 1853 he was sent by President Pierce as Minister to Italy. He was a warm advocate of emancipation in the early years of the rebellion. He published a number of books, including a novel, an autobiography, a drama, and several volumes of discussion and controversy. His writings on Spiritualism—of which he was an ardent advocate—are the best known of his works, especially the volume entitled Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World.

THE AVERAGE ATTENDANCE at church in our great cities is strikingly small, considering how persistent and loud is the claim that this is a "Christian country." Says the Springfield Republican of June 1: "The New York Sun has been counting polls in the churches. Last Sunday reporters went to the houses of worship in New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City, and found that, though the summer exodus had not begun, and the weather was charming to display new bonnets, etc., the majority of the principal churches were not well attended. Heworth, Beecher, Deems, and Hall had great houses; Grace and Trinity Episcopal were crowded; Dr. Tiffany had a house half full; one church which could seat eighteen hundred had only four hundred and fifty; another with room for eight hundred, had but a fourth that number; some congregations numbered as low as seventy. Giving the hundred churches an average attendance of six hundred and fifty—a liberal allowance from the reporter's figures,—sixty-five thousand of the two million people, more or less, in the three cities, attended the services mentioned. The churches visited were the largest and most popular, and it is probable a census of all the congregations would not double these figures. That leaves one million eight hundred and seventy thousand persons who had not the gospel preached to them in the metropolitan district. Of course Mr. Frothingham's church was not included in these observations,—for he doesn't pretend to preach 'the gospel.'"

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEL,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAH M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIEN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Katherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLYGLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quincy, Ill.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 [The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.]

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....187 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HANLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The Prosecution of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant.

A LETTER.

BY MISS FLORENCE FENWICK MILLER.

Sir,—I am greatly obliged by your courtesously permitting me to address, through your columns, my friends in the borough of Hackney, to thank them for the kind expressions used by many of them with reference to certain scurrilous attacks which have been made on me, and to explain to them exactly what is the position that I have, after due consideration, felt it right to publicly take up.

I do not write for the benefit of the few persons who have had the impertinence to assume that a book which I openly defend can be one of the class commonly and properly stigmatized and prosecuted as "obscene." Individuals of this stamp are beneath my personal notice, and my only reply to their spokesman will be through a court of law. Nor do I write for the sake of those who think themselves entitled to demand an explanation from me because I am one of their representatives at the School Board; for I do not recognize that that fact gives them any such right. For what I do as a representative of Hackney, I am answerable to those whom I represent; but, upon subjects entirely and completely outside School Board matters, I retain my right of private judgment, and my individual freedom of action; in other words, for what I do in my individual capacity I am answerable to my constituents only as I am answerable to public opinion everywhere. But I address this letter to the hundreds of thoughtful, earnest, clear-headed working and middle-class men and women who have given into my hands a trust of which I am proud, and whom I am entitled to call my friends. To my friends in the borough of Hackney, then, I write, to let them know what is the pretext upon which I am just at present assailed with coarse abuse, vulgar impertinence, and untruthful malice.

I have joined a committee for the defence of the publication of a book, the title of which is Fruits of Philosophy: an Essay on the Population Question, by Charles Knowlton, M.D. It must be understood that I am speaking here only of the edition which is now being prosecuted, and for the defence of which the committee that I have joined exists. I had never seen the book before this prosecution began, and am not responsible for any other edition of it than the one before me. It is necessary that I should say this, because I am given to understand that extraneous matter has been sometimes introduced into Dr. Knowlton's work for the purpose of making it salable among the customers of the men who gain an infamous livelihood by the clandestine sale of indecent literature.

It is not likely that many of your readers have seen this book; so I will ask you to allow me briefly to describe its contents. It is a little volume of fifty-four small octavo pages. It opens with what the author styles "A Philosophical Proem," upon the sources of the conditions which men call happiness and misery. This is purely introductory, and is as suitable for the pages of a magazine as it is for any other place. The work proper begins by expounding the law of population. This law was originally discovered by a Church of England clergyman, the Rev. Mr. Malthus, and published to the world by him about the year 1798. Miss Martineau, in her recently-issued autobiography, describes the discoverer of the law, whom she knew well, in these terms: "A more simple-minded, virtuous man, full of domestic affections, could not be found in all England; and the desire of his heart and the aim of his work were that domestic virtue and happiness should be placed within the reach of all." Later on, this distinguished lady remarks, that Malthus' doctrine is "mathematically indisputable, and therefore assailable in itself only by ribaldry and corrupt misrepresentation." The population doctrine, as propounded by Malthus, and set forth by Dr. Knowlton, is now accepted by the whole modern school of political economists. I must not occupy your space in expounding it. Those who wish to study it for themselves must refer to the work of Mr. Malthus, of which a new edition was published by Messrs. Reeves and Turner, in 1872. A clear and good review of this appeared in the Examiner for May 25, 1872, and a copy of that number could doubtless still be had from the office of the paper. Those who have to rely upon public libraries will be able more easily to obtain the Principles of Political Economy, of John Stuart Mill, where the population doctrine is treated in Book II., chapter 13; or a work on Political Economy, by the respected member for this borough, Prof. Henry Fawcett, where they will find the law very ably set out.

But when the professors of political economy have done with the question, what next? Dr. Knowlton's pamphlet proceeds to consider the social and physiological results of late marriages or life-long celibacy. It will be understood that I am not professing to give any idea of his arguments; that I am merely stating what subjects the book deals with. Then comes, from page 17 to page 46, a plain, straightforward account, such as may be found in any standard work on physiology, of the reproductive structure, and a very brief outline of the development of the new being in the human race, connected with remarks on some of the most common unhealthy conditions. Pages 47 to 50 treat of the ways in which this natural process may be obstructed; and the last four pages contain hygienic advice which every adult would be the happier and the better for having and laying to heart on and from their wedding-day,—words of wise counsel, and of the purest morality. This is the whole subject-matter of the book.

As I have before said, I had not seen it before I was asked to join the committee for its defence. Of course, knowing that it was being prosecuted, I naturally expected to find something objectionable in it. My surprise and indignation were great when I came to look at it, and to find that it treated only of subjects upon which every work on physiology and political economy must treat; to find that what this pamphlet was to be prosecuted for were the identical discussions and facts which were already on my library shelves in the celebrated and honored works on physiology of Drs. Carpenter and Kirkes; the anatomy of Gray; the practice of medicine of Tanner; the gynecological works of Graily Hewitt, Cazeaux, Churchill, Robert Barnes, Sir J. Y. Simpson, or my old teacher, Dr. Murphy; and the political economies of J. S. Mill and Prof. Fawcett!

Pages 47 to 50 of the book are peculiar to Dr. Knowlton's work, as in the nature of them they must be to works on the medical side of the population question; but although the morality of following the advice there given may be open to doubt, the discussion of the point cannot by any possibility be called more improper than the preceding and succeeding pages, which might be transferred direct from or to a large medical work.

But surely, it will be said, if the matter of the work is simply that which can be found in any large physiological treatise, it must be the manner which is objectionable. It is not so. Indeed, the expressions are generally singularly well chosen. Writing for popular perusal, the author has evidently tried his utmost to use unobjectionable language; and he has, on the whole, succeeded. Here and there is an expression not in the most refined taste, or a fact which perhaps might, without any detriment to the scientific character of the work, have been omitted; but there are only two or three such instances in the whole work; and, in the main, the subject is far more carefully and delicately treated than it is in many standard scientific works.

Persons who have read the pamphlet, and who are acquainted with the works of Carpenter, Graily, Hewitt, etc., will know that this is the case. For those who have not read the work, or who could not judge it in comparison with other scientific works if they had, the constitution of the committee for the defence of this book must be a sufficient guarantee for its character. Persons in the position of Dr. C. R. Drysdale, the senior physician of the Metropolitan Free Hospital; of my friend Miss Vickery, the first lady who passed the examination as a chemist and druggist in England, and who has now passed nearly all the examinations for the Paris M.D. degree; of Mrs. Lowe, the wife of a Church of England clergyman; of Henry R. Dalton, Esq., B.A., of Oxford; of Mr. and Mrs. Swagman,—leaving unmentioned myself, and a host of others of equal social position, unimpeachable respectability, and totally unconnected with the defendants, Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant; persons like these, I repeat, do not come forward and openly give their names and their assistance for the defence of an obscene book. The writer of an obscene book does not put his name upon its cover. The publishers of an obscene book do not add their imprint. These facts speak for themselves. I repeat, if this book be brought under that condemnation, then every general physiological and medical work must come under it too.

I must clear away here a misconception which exists in some persons' minds. The book which I defend has never yet been condemned by a judge and jury of Englishmen. I am informed that it was found among other works of a different character on the premises of two men who were tried for the sale of indecent literature, but that, as might be expected, there were additions made to it, and plates inserted to alter the pure science to the requirements of the customers of such vendors. Do not let me be misunderstood. If the work had already been tried, as it will now be tried, and the sale of it declared against the law, my position with regard to it would remain unaltered. I do not for one moment believe that science will be declared obscene because it is published at a low rate; I do not in the least expect that this trial will result in a conviction; but, in the almost impossible event of its doing so, my opinion of the book would remain unaltered, and I should hope that the open publication of such works would continue, and would speedily bring about a reform in a law which had thus been made mischievous, and wrested to a purpose for which its mover never designed it. I go on to explain my reason for this decision.

The book being a physiological work, written for popular perusal, in good language, and without the slightest taint of suspicion of intentional coarseness and impropriety attached to it, the prosecution resolves itself into a barefaced attempt to keep the people, who cannot afford to pay high prices for knowledge, in ignorance upon the most important of subjects. If this book be condemned, the wealthy man who can afford to pay one pound twelve shillings for Carpenter, or one pound five shillings for Cazeaux, can study this branch of physiology and medicine as thoroughly as he pleases; but the poor man who could only afford to pay the sixpence required for this pamphlet must because of his poverty remain in ignorance. I protest against this. I maintain that wealth has no more right to any knowledge than poverty has. I hold that if this branch of physiology be obscene, then it must no more be treated of in high-priced books than in low-priced ones.

But the bare idea that it is so is absurd; no straight forward, plain, honest account of any vital process is indecent in itself. Physiology is the most valuable of all sciences. Very early in the progress of my studies I saw how much suffering and death arise from the general ignorance of the structure and functions of the human body, and of those rules for its health which are gathered from its physiology. The longer I live, the more plainly I see this. Mr. Simon, in his report for 1871 to the Privy Council, says that not fewer than one hundred and twenty thousand persons die every year; and an incalculable number more suffer long and painful illnesses, solely because the facts of physiology and the dictates of hygiene are not known and obeyed. I have ever felt, therefore, that among the most useful work that I might be able to do in my life, the task of popularizing physiology held a first place; and I have gladly taken every opportunity of doing this work, both by my voice and my pen.

But not the least necessary knowledge for the people generally to possess is that of the reproductive structure, and the hygiene of married life,—in other words, the subject of Dr. Knowlton's book. I know, as every medical man and woman who has practised in female diseases knows, that ignorance and the error resulting from it, are as mischievous here as in the case of the lungs, the skin, or any other organ of the body. Such subjects should never be written about or alluded to! Every graveyard has its stones crying out against the false doctrine; every hospital for women rears its head as a standing protest against the mock delicacy; the divorce court sends forth its miserable and corrupting stories of ruined homes and unhappy souls, in solemn warning against the dangers of ignorance. It never was intended that young wives should sink into the grave in the full bloom of youth; it is not natural that young mothers should be torn from their infant families; it is not right that children should be born into the world, to sink after a few years' battle against the weakness of constitution given them by their parents; it is emphatically terrible that those who love each other should sin against their affection, and finally murder it outright, because they have never thought of their duty to each other. For all these evils, unrestrained passions, arising from ignorance of physical laws, must be held answerable. Shame on those who know this full well, and who yet will hold their peace while there is danger that it may be declared "improper" to bring light and warning within reach of the studious poor!

There is but one way in which such instruction can be imparted, and that is by the circulation of proper books among men and women, fathers and mothers. Other branches of physiology and hygiene may be taught in schools, or by means of public lectures. This branch cannot be. It cannot be publicly taught in lecture-halls to men and women; and the more completely unconscious of the fact of sex children can be kept, the better for them, morally and physically; therefore it can never be mentioned in schools. If cheap books are forcibly kept from the fathers and mothers of the working-class, they, who most need the instruction, cannot obtain it at all.

I dwell thus upon the practical utility of such books, because that is the great reason why I have felt myself impelled, by an overmastering sense of duty, to defend the publication in this test case. I should equally have felt the impropriety, tyranny, and injustice of an attempt to suppress a cheap work upon botany, geology, theology, or any other subject, while expensive works written in the same tone and treating on exactly the same matters continued to be published unquestioned. But it was only the knowledge of the importance to the good of mankind, and especially of the female half of our race, of the dissemination in the only proper way of this kind of teaching, that could have induced me to expose myself to the insults which I could not but foresee would be offered me in consequence of my action.

One thing more, and I have done. I have no sort of connection with the defendants in this case. I am not in any way one of their party, or concerned in their theological or political propaganda. My acquaintance with Mr. Bradlaugh is the slightest and most casual; and my knowledge of Mrs. Besant is only that she is a lady by birth and education, and that her circumstances are such that she risks far more than even imprisonment and a fine when she stands in the dock for this book. But with them personally I have not the remotest connection. I am defending the publication of the book; that its publishers are Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant is an accident in the case, so far as I am concerned. It is honorable to them that they have never gained profit by the sale of the book, but have placed themselves in a position of danger with regard to it, with pre-consideration, and of their own free will. But to me the fact that they were the publishers had nothing to do with the question of the propriety of defending the publication; and in saying this I imagine I speak also for other members of the defence committee. We are defending the right of publication, not the persons. For this reason, some statements which have been made to me as to Mr. Bradlaugh's mode of expressing himself in his attacks upon others, and of his general behavior to his followers, appear to me quite aside from the question. I am not in any degree expressing an opinion upon his general language, manners, and speculative opinions. In this particular instance, it so happens that Charles Bradlaugh is doing that which I believe to be noble and brave, and a good and necessary thing to do. I approve of the object he has in view; therefore, in this particular instance, I support him. There my connection with Mr. Bradlaugh begins; and there it ends. I can quite believe that there are some persons so incapable of justice that, whether he is right or wrong in this particular case, they would withhold all support from him, however much they sympathize with his present aim, because they disapprove of him generally; but I cannot believe that such an unfair, underhanded, un-English mode of dealing can be widely adopted by the just and brave people of England.

I trust that I have now made my position perfectly clear; and that it will be understood that I do not specially support Dr. Knowlton's work, far less the right of publishing and selling any book, on any subject, in any tone; but that I do uphold the freedom of the press to issue scientific works at prices which place them within the reach of the people who need them most.—Eastern Argus (England).

MISS F. FENWICK MILLER AND THE HACKNEY LOCAL PRESS.

In another column we print a letter from Miss Miller dealing with the attacks recently made upon that lady by each of our local contemporaries in consequence of the action she has chosen to take in the case of the Bradlaugh prosecution. It is not our intention to enter into the question whether the book, for publishing which Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant are now being prosecuted, is obscene or not. The case is still sub judice, and, unlike our contemporaries, we think it unfair to prejudge an issue, and so bias public opinion when a case is under investigation by the lawful guardians of the public morals, even though the defendants happen to be "very free-thinkers," or atheists. But there is one point we do desire to speak upon, and it is this: from the time this journal has been in our hands it has been our custom to speak out, calling a spade a spade, without fear or favor; we believe in the liberty and duties of the press, and have contended for that liberty, and endeavored to discharge those duties. But liberty is not license, and in the attacks just referred to we regret to say our contemporaries, ignoring the old English maxim of fair-play, have passed the boundary line between the two. Without defending a single line in the book now under trial, or endorsing a word of Miss Miller's letter in its defence, we say that it has never been contended in any of the previous prosecutions, nor is it in this, that the work, even if "obscene" and "immoral" according to law, comes under the same category as the vile books of Holywell Street and Wych Street; and, more, that the writer who in the editorial column of a public journal infers or contends such was the case, has either neglected to possess himself of the full facts of the matter under discussion, and if so he had no business to write upon it at all, or, knowing, wilfully and cruelly ignored them to gratify spleen or prejudice. It is absurd for any public journal to contend that Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, with an almost world-wide reputation as a lecturer and a politician, apart altogether from his "freethought," would, just as his future is most promising, throw over everything for the purpose of becoming the publisher of Holywell Street abominations. However much we may differ from Mr. Bradlaugh on theological matters, and we do, wide as the poles, common fairness compels us to say that during the twenty-seven years of his public life his character has been free from the least taint of suspicion of "filthy" proclivities. The work may be condemned; but it will not be because it was written by Dr. Knowlton and published by Mr. Bradlaugh for the purpose of "debauching the minds of the young"; and that is what one of our contemporaries means when describing it as "one of the vilest books that ever disgraced the most abominable of the shops of Wych Street or Holywell Lane" (street), but because it is a quasi-medical work, published in a popular form, dealing with a subject best discussed, if at all, in the privacy of one's study.

The literary fledgling in Hackney which has thought fit to prejudge this case, did so in an article so grotesquely inconsequential and illogical that it is not worth serious attention. For a writer to call upon the electors to convene a public meeting for the purpose of unseating a lady, who is guilty of no other crime than the reading of a book which this writer admits he has "not read" and therefore cannot pass an opinion upon, is simply to call forth pity for the man who has so mistaken his vocation, and contempt for the "organ" that, in the name of a "great party," publishes such unmanly trash.

In conclusion, we advise our readers to suspend their judgment on this matter. We are perfectly well aware that in taking the position we have we risk the loss of popularity with a select few; but we think that we may safely touch the subject in the way we have, and leave our reputation as a Christian journal to protect us from any suspicion as to atheistical tendencies, or of pandering to "prurient tastes." Public morality, we hold, in this matter as in all others, is best served by full investigation and intelligent criticism, not by high-handed prudishness or purblind bigotry.—Eastern Argus, April 28.

RELIGION AND POLITICS IN EUROPE.

If, a quarter of a century ago, a European statesman had been asked to look forward for five-and-twenty years, and to name the force which would then be exercising the most powerful influence over political affairs, we doubt whether the utmost human foresight would have directed him to a right prediction. It is certain at least that no ordinary observer of that day could have foretold the part which religious ideas, religious zeal, religious hatreds, are now playing, not in one or two countries alone, but almost everywhere, without exception, throughout Europe. At no period, of course, has religion been altogether without influence on politics, and down to the end of the seventeenth century its influence was both constant and profound. But from that time onward until to-day this influence has, save for one period of what may be called accidental reaction, been on the wane. The intensely anti-theological bias of the French Revolution brought religious ideas into line, as it were, with politics; and in the long struggle which marked the period of 1789-1830, and which was closed by Catholic Emancipation in England and the July Revolution in France, it cannot be denied that European statesmen had to reckon with religious almost as much as with political forces. The succeeding era, however, was an era of purely civil questions,—of electoral, commercial, municipal reform in this country; of strivings after the first of these objects in France, and of the gradual growth in other continental countries of those modern ideas which have now given constitutional government to all the civilized nations of Europe, either as a reality, or as the homage which despotism pays to liberty. And liberalism here and elsewhere undoubtedly flattered itself that the retirement of religion from politics was final; that the "civil period" was not transitional but permanent, and that the problem of dissociating the conduct of mundane affairs from all questions connected with the world to come had been successfully solved. The theory might have been narrow and unphilosophic to the last degree; but that it was held very generally and with great confidence it is impossible to doubt. That a statesman of Cavour's eminence should have attached such value to the maxim of "Libera Chiesa in libero Stato"; that he should have thought that it described a modus vivendi, instead of the conditions of a campaign, or should have believed that a freed Church would use its liberty for any other purpose than to fight,—all this shows, we say, how powerful a hold the belief we speak of had obtained over powerful minds.

To-day we can scarcely look around us in any direction without seeing how mistaken it was. Religion is not only the most potent factor in international politics at the present moment, but it is the most disturbing influence over individual political minds. We are now witnessing a war which is in its circumstances, if not in its origin, a war of religion; and which, in so far as it is national upon either side, is almost wholly a religious war. Even so far, too, as the rulers responsible for it are concerned, it is impossible to define the extent to which the hereditary religious melancholy of an autocratic sovereign has contributed to bend him to the counsels of cooler and more designing minds. Nor need one go as far as Russia, or take so poor a specimen of a ruler as Alexander II., for an instance of what we mean. The one weak spot in the strongest of European statesmen is on the religious side; the one point in which the hard, good sense and political composure of Prince Bismarck has appeared to the outside world to fail him is in his dealing with the religious question in the Empire over which he presides. Opposed to ultramontanism, the German Chancellor seems to lose his self-command, his patience, his sense of the practicable in politics, his foresight of results; and it is at least no improbable conjecture that antagonism of creed has in this case contributed to obscure the judgment with which he would have dealt with a purely political difficulty. In our own country we have a signal and deplorable example of the influence of religious prepossessions upon individual political minds. It was the influence of the Catholic hierarchy which overthrew Mr. Gladstone; and his fall by this agency converted a distinguished statesman into a bitter theological pamphleteer. His first effort in his new vocation was naturally to wreak polemical vengeance upon the authors of his downfall; but the spirit which animated the attack on Vaticanism, surviving in undiminished force, has now found fresh material on which to exercise itself, and Mr. Gladstone has placed himself at the head of the party who for many months past have been openly inciting the Christian powers of Europe to a crusade. It is needless to dwell on the value of this party as an illustration of the truth of the foregoing remarks. With some few among them, perhaps, the genuine detestation of cruelty and oppression is unmixed with any ingredient of religious rancor; but with the bulk of them it is otherwise, and they do not even care to conceal the fact. Not only the Ritualist, who yearns so ardently for union with the most ignorant and superstitious Church in Europe, but the Broad Churchman and the Protestant Dissenter, use language on this subject which shows how, beneath their sympathy with suffering, beneath their indignation at wrong, lurks the ancient and ineradicable hatred of the Christian, as such (we do not mean it ironically), for the Mohammedan, as such, and the feeling that the massacres in Bulgaria were not only an outrage upon humanity but an insult to a creed. It was not a Ritualist, but a Quaker, who reminded an excited audience that not only Batak and Otloukeui, but "Jerusalem, Calvary, and the Mount of Olives" were in the possession of the Turk. Nowhere, in fact, has such a spectacle of the invasion of politics by theology been witnessed as in England,—England, where, if anywhere, the civil and secular spirit might be supposed to have established an undisputed supremacy in the conduct of public affairs.

The inquiry might be pursued throughout Europe with results less striking, perhaps, in the extent of their manifestation but the same in kind. In France the intensity of political animosities is only at its highest when the religious question comes in. It is the strife between Ultramontanism and Voltaireanism to which French party-conflicts owe three-fourths of their bitterness. "L'ennemi c'est le cléricisme," was the frank avowal which the French statesman who had labored to found the Conservative Republic regarded as a necessary confession of faith, and as the minimum of candor with which his more advanced followers would be satisfied. And at this moment the religious strife which embitters the domestic politics of France most dangerously complicates their foreign relations also. The first thought of Berlin on receiving the news of M. Simon's dismissal was, as we have seen, that it was the defiance of Ultramontanism to Protestant Germany, and the first menace of the revenge of the Vatican upon the government which enacted the Falk laws. The words we have just penned reveal the religious struggle through which the German Empire has been passing of late years, and which has left so deep an impression on the mind of the people as to make them think immediately of Ultramontaniam at the first news of a French ministerial crisis. In Italy, as of course, the religious war is identified with the every-day battle of domestic politics; and in the condition of Belgium we see the theological disease in its acute stage, and marring the otherwise perfect prosperity of the most flourishing little community in Europe. Everywhere, in short, the same symptoms are traceable in a latent or developed form. The world seems to have receded generations into the past; and in the last quarter of that century which was supposed to have ushered in a golden age of civilization, we see religious passion distracting empires, dementing statesmen, and destroying peoples as in those benighted times on which we have been wont to look back with such self-complacent pity.—Pall Mall Gazette, May 19.

THE PRIESTLY INFLUENCE IN POLITICS.

Some remarks which we made a few days ago on the perilously increasing influence of religion on politics appear to have stirred at least one political conscience already. They have, at any rate, it is fair to presume, assisted to elicit the anxious protest under which the Times printed yesterday the letter of a Mohammedan correspondent, Mr. Hakim, complaining of the denunciations levelled in Parliament and elsewhere against his co-religionists. The appearance of that letter was an instructive commentary upon our observations. We had dwelt upon the fact—too clear to be disputed,—that what is called "anti-Turkish feeling" in this country is, as regards the large majority of those whom it actuates, neither more nor less than anti-Musulman feeling,—not a political sentiment, that is to say, but a religious sentiment; not mere sympathy with suffering and mere indignation against wrong, but rather, or principally, a pure odium theologicum, the ancient and ineradicable hatred of the Christian as such for the Mohammedan as such. We had said that the massacres in Bulgaria were regarded by the great mass of those whose mental equilibrium they so completely overthrow as something else besides an outrage upon humanity,—as an insult to a creed; and but for this offence to the religious sentiment, this stimulus to the theological hatred, the denunciations of Turkish misrule, the encouragement of Russian intrigue, and generally the incitements to that war which threatens to embroil Europe, would never have taken the form or produced the effect which they have. And as it seemed to us, so it must appear to all Mohammedans. Mr. Hakim's letter protesting against the hostility to his religion in this country, as the Times justly says, one which it is "impossible to read without a feeling of respect and sympathy." Apparently, it is equally impossible to read it without at least an attempt at self-excuse. Accordingly, Mr. Hakim is solemnly assured that he is mistaken. The Russian masses may be "animated by religious enthusiasm," and "there are, no doubt, speakers and writers among ourselves who seem to share this crusading temper." But the "present alienation of the English people from Turkish rule is independent of any such feeling." They are "moved simply by certain facts of misgovernment," and would be just as much moved by them if the misgovernors were Christian instead of Mohammedan. Nay, it cannot but be so; for "it is a settled principle alike of our home and of our domestic [foreign?] policy to repudiate every attempt to support it by force, and there is nothing we should more deeply lament than that this contest should assume the character of a religious war." With much more to the same effect, and equally resembling the attempt of a prisoner to establish an alibi after being taken in the fact. What is said about the "alienation of the English people" is not to the point; for Mr. Hakim was not complaining of English indifference (that and its consequence, Turkish isolation, he submits to), but of English hostility. And to deny that the active hostility of a certain section of Englishmen to the Turks, their active sympathy with the Russian crusade, which we are now told rather late in the day is to be "disturbed,"—to deny that these feelings had in those whom they animated their beginning and end in religious passion is to deny facts not only palpable but avowed. The speeches and the writings of the autumn agitators are full not only of evidences but of admissions of the feelings which actuated them. Not Ritualists only, not only aspirants after union with the Eastern Church, but Protestant Dissenters have talked the language of Crusaders. The height to which the feeling has arisen may be measured by the fact that Mr. Bright, a Quaker by persuasion, expressly excepted this war of religion from his condemnation of war in general, and was warmly moved to that desertion of his principles by the recollection that the holy places of Christianity were in the possession of the Turks. The depth to which the feeling extends, the unconscious manner in which it colors even what profess to be dispassionate speculations on the question, is shown in such remarks as that of the Times itself but a few days ago, to the effect that the Germans would not be much moved by the overthrow of the Ottoman Empire, for the reason, in substance, that "the Germans are decided Christians." It is needless, however, to labor the point further. The sentiments of the agitators who, with Mr. Gladstone at their head, have done so much to precipitate a war, now openly proclaimed by the Czar as a crusade of Christianity against Islam, are beyond doubt or dispute. They have been avowed and gloried in by the agitators themselves.

But what we said on this point had reference to a part only of the general subject. We commented at large upon the extent to which religious ideas are influencing modern politics throughout the world, upon the extent to which "religious questions" are constituting themselves the sole issues which divide parties and nations from each other. And more is implied in this than that religionists have become politicians—this they have always been ready enough to do whenever and wherever they have been allowed,—but that politicians have assumed the character, or at least have allied themselves with the designs, of religionists. Nay—and this is the most ominous fact in the situation,—that very political party whose best established traditions ought to have held it aloof is the one which has committed itself most deeply to this most mistaken course. If we ask what is the next "new" cry by which it is hoped to unite the Liberal party, we are told that it is the cry of "disestablishment." It is a mere question of time, we are assured; a mere question of a few years more or less before the leader of the Liberal party for the time being takes the inevitable plunge and heads the assault of the Radicals and political Dissenters upon the Church of England. That, sooner or later, the Liberals, as a party, will "take up" disestablishment seems to be considered as something too certain to be worth disputing; but none of those who so confidently anticipate it appear to reflect upon the meaning and import of their prediction. None, that is to say, seem sensible that what they are prophesying is the abandonment by the Liberal party of one of their most valuable principles,—the subordination of the religious to the civil idea; and that they are prophesying this desertion at a time when of all others the principle most needs to be maintained. For the spirit which we now see rife and rampant in France, in Belgium, in Italy, is active among us too,—is striving for supremacy here as well as there, and is principally kept from attaining it through the accident of that very institution which the Liberal party are, they tell us, destined to overthrow. Abroad, Ultramontaniam is taxing all the energies of Liberalism to hold it in check; the Ritualists are our Ultramontanes; and here it is Liberalism which is to set them free. The apprehensions well expressed in the letters we printed the other day on the subject of disestablishment, are apprehensions present to many serious minds; to most, indeed, of those who prefer examining a political question for themselves to echoing a "party cry" provided for them by others. It is impossible not to feel that the connection with the State is the one influence which now keeps English Ultramontaniam under some sort of control, both directly in its restraints upon the Ultramontanes themselves, and indirectly in that semi-secularizing effect upon the whole body of the Church which keeps down the number of Ultramontanes. Sever this connection, remove this control, and the immediate effect would be to give free action to sacerdotalism, while the ultimate result would be to increase the number of sacerdotalists. The need of unity among those whose ecclesiastical theories were alike in the main would operate to mark sharply off from each other the several parties in the Church; and we can scarcely doubt that that party which makes the strongest appeal to the "professional instinct," so to speak, to esprit de corps, and to the inborn human love of power, would attract to itself the largest accessions of strength. We should then have not a floating element of English Ultramontaniam, but a compact body of English Ultramontanes, proceeding doubtless by other than Continental methods, but animated in the main by that sacerdotal spirit which is the same in its broad characteristics all over the world, and aiming persistently at the uniform object of their order,—the establishment of the domination of the priest over all the civil and domestic relations of life. And this is the work of all others to which English Liberals, at this time of all others, are expected to lend a hand! Of the Radicals we do not speak; destruction is their métier, and they are too much accustomed to think destruction an end in itself to trouble themselves at our solicitation about the consequences. Nor do we address ourselves to the Dissenters; they are sectaries first and politicians afterwards; and though they will in our judgment be woefully disappointed by those religious and social results which they anticipate from disestablishment, we do not expect them to forego the pleasure of depositing a Church from whose doctrines they dissent, and humbling a caste whose superior status and consideration offend their pride. But that Liberals who are neither Radicals nor Dissenters, and who have been supposed to recognize certain political principles too valuable to be given up to gratify sectaries and destructives,—that these should lend themselves to the disestablishment policy in full view of the consequences it entails, is discouraging indeed. It is an addition to those proofs so sadly multiplied of late that English Liberals have ceased to understand their business, and to comprehend the true purposes for which as a political party they exist.—Pall Mall Gazette, May 22.

MONSIEUR D. CONWAY'S ESSAYS.

GREAT COMMOTION CAUSED BY HIS TEACHINGS IN HOLLOWAY.—MR. CONWAY'S POSITION SUSTAINED.—GENERAL TENOR OF HIS NEW WORK—A GLIMPSE OF THE "RELIGION OF THE FUTURE."

LONDON, April 13.

A new volume of essays by Mr. M. D. Conway has just appeared under the title Idols and Ideals, with an Essay on Christianity. (Trübner & Co.) This last essay was published separately a few months ago, and, writes a friend, brought on a war which shook Holloway to its centre and left the Eastern question nowhere. Mr. Conway's evening congregation in that district, having grown too large for its little iron church, obtained a lease of the fine hall called the Athenæum. This the Vicar of Holloway, after the manner of his kind, resented. He undertook to preach down the new faith, threatening with eternal penalties those who let the hall, who happen to be mainly his own parishioners. Doubting, however, whether his own anathema would insure the complete damnation of the heretics and their lessons, he called to his aid the Christian Evidence Society. That society sent four clergymen—Bampton and Hulsean lecturers, men of proved courage against infidels,—who discharged four sermons at Mr. Conway, which were published. They also printed in the local paper six reviews of the pamphlet on Christianity, including among other amenities incident to theological discussion, an elaborate and bitter accusation of atheism. This Mr. Conway did not himself directly answer. He sent the book and the review of it to the President of the Christian Evidence Society—no less a person than the Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England,—agreeing to abide by his decision whether there was or was not any atheism in the book. The Archbishop behaved manfully. He wrote Mr. Conway a long letter, declaring that he could find no atheism in his teaching, and expressing his disapproval of the fashion of imputing names and doctrines to people who disclaimed them. So the Vicar and the Christian Evidence Society fell by this shaft feathered from their own wing. A week or two since a vote of the share-holders of the Athenæum ratified by fifty-four to six the letting of the hall to Mr. Conway's congregation. Although nearly every share-holder is an Orthodox Christian, they saw no reason why Holloway laymen should be more Orthodox than the Archbishop of Canterbury. So ended one more effort at persecution. It had the result which persecution usually has. It promoted the freedom which it strove to stifle. It has doubled Mr. Conway's congregation, increased his salary, and circulated his book. The strife went on for six months, its record occupying on an average some five columns a week in the Holloway paper.

As to the non-atheistic character of Mr. Conway's essay, the judgment of the first prelate of the Church of England may be accepted as decisive; but he certainly would not pronounce it Orthodox. On the Christianity of the Church, the Christianity of tradition and history, Mr. Conway does certainly make war. "In judging the tree by its fruits," writes he, "I must affirm my conviction that the fruits of Christianity, though not altogether evil, were preponderantly evil." He sums up his criticism on it in a compendious sentence: "The chief root of its evil was that it taught mankind that their supreme duty is to believe certain propositions; and that the very worst sin man or woman can commit is to disbelieve those propositions." Mr. Conway is, in the good and right sense of the word, a freethinker. To him, naturally, nothing is more abhorrent than the effort to repress freethought, and the effort to set up in place of it, as the Church and every sect that for eighteen hundred years has called itself Christian has tried to do, the despotism of dogma. This plain speaking will shock and pain many worthy people; certainly much to Mr. Conway's regret, himself a kind-hearted man. But they may find some alleviation of their distress in the thought that it is not, after all, the best part or essence of Christianity on which Mr. Conway passes sentence. If he condemns Christianity such as the professors of Christianity have made it, he is far from condemning the religion, the virtues, the ideas which they label Christian. These are not declining; it is Roman Catholicism and Calvinism that are declining; sectarianism of all kinds, and the human fabrics reared by so many hands and alleged to be of divine origin.

You perceive that Mr. Conway takes a sanguine view of the growth of freedom. Other recent observers have thought Romanism was never a greater power than at this moment. Mr. Conway's remark that Christian enthusiasm is spent, may not, after all, be inconsistent with that view. Neither is he at a loss for the means of supplying the void which the disappearance of Christianity must leave. A man of so emotional a nature as Mr. Conway could not be insensible to the emotional and other religious wants of the world in general. He gives us glimpses into the future as he would have it; and believes it will be when the existing "barbarous" religion shall have yielded to the advances of civilization. We shall still have a Bible, but it will not be the Hebrew Scriptures and New Testament only; it is to be enlarged by adding to it the manifold Scriptures now rejected, which make up the canon of revelation to humanity—a sacred anthology in fact. Christ will be left to us, stripped of his divinity; and be held as one of a high and holy fraternity of seers and teachers, stretching through all ages, whom no one race can claim, who speak from universal reason and right. As for God and immortality, some better notions are to be hoped for than those contributed by what Mr. Conway calls the strongest manifestations of Christian enthusiasm in our time; viz., Mormonism, Shakerism, Moodyism, and Spirit-rapping. I quote the passage which seems to contain the most exact account of what Mr. Conway expects from the Religion of the Future:—

All our hope of new light now comes of the liberation of the human mind in every part of the world from these other worldly methods which have so conspicuously failed; and the concentration of the combined energies of all the mind, heart, and wealth of the earth to the work of civilizing religion and raising it to equality with our material and scientific progress. We have found that gazing into the sky does not reveal God; now let us try what will come of exploring the earth, and man, and history.

The Chinese sage said to men, "Since you do not yet know man, how can you know God? Since you do not comprehend life, how can you comprehend death?" Some of us believe—I believe—that eyes turned from phantom gods have caught glimpses of a divine life in the evolution of Nature and the mystical movement of the heart of man. Already some have listened deep, and heard a sweet music to which the ages keep time, and man ever marches to a happier destiny.

The universe is the shrine of Reason; it is the abode of Love; it is the temple of Conscience. These have derived from it, and from us they shall return to it in that perfect trust which no surrounding darkness can extinguish, not even the darkness of the grave. But it is with these our larger hope is ascending. We know that Reason has hardly begun to tell its story, that Love has been drooping in the dungeon of fear, and Conscience hardly awakened from the drugs of superstition. They have yet to fulfil their career in religion which has been so long denied them. They can find their freedom and fulness only in the unity of mankind. Of old the races streamed out through the earth, like pulses from the heart of Nature, that every member of the body might be fed from a common life; and though member has warred with member, still has their secret life centred in that one heart. Now let the day of harmony dawn! Now let member cooperate with member, and nation say to nation, "I have need of thee!"

As a statement of a creed, this may be thought to lack precision; and I can imagine an Orthodox opponent of Mr. Conway protesting that it is no better than a sort of religious communism, or, at best, a poetic translation of the doctrine of fraternity in politics. I do not know that Mr. Conway would care to defend himself against even such a charge as this. He expressly anticipates that the new prophets, nobler than Christian or Mohammedan, are to be born of the enthusiasm of humanity, and expressly teaches that the highest religion of to-day is to look and labor for a nobler day.

The essays which precede this are all on topics more or less closely related. Such titles as "Growing Superstitions," "The Praying Machine," "Anthropomorphism," and others, indicate the bent of Mr. Conway's mind. He grapples courageously with problems for which the most devout souls of all times have sought solutions. He presses everything into the service of his favorite speculations,—science and art and literature are only the hand-maids to a possible religion. It would be too much to say that this book will satisfy all minds to whom reflections on the mysteries of life, human and divine, are familiar. But whoever reads them without prejudice, and can put up with free handling of subjects called sacred, will find them suggestive, full of genuine sympathy, and of feeling often poetic in its essence and eloquent in expression.—G. W. S., in New York Tribune.

THOMPSON ON THE PAPACY.

The Hon. R. W. Thompson of Indiana, Mr. Hayes's Secretary of the Navy, published a book last winter on The Papacy and the Civil Power. It is a very full statement of evidence and arguments which, in the opinion of Mr. Thompson, go to show that the Papal power, and especially the Jesuits, is the foe of civil liberty and republican institutions. Mr. Thompson does not anywhere seek to conceal his opinions concerning the Roman Catholic system and idea. He believes that they are essentially retrogressive in their nature, and that the welfare of mankind, and especially of the people of this country, demands that they should not be permitted to gain the ascendancy. Mr. Thompson does not go out of his way to abuse the Roman Catholic hierarchy, although he uses very plain terms in dealing with it; and it is evident, that, while he means to administer a powerful blow to Roman Catholicism in this country, he means to be fair. Nor can it be denied that his work is an able one, whatever may be said of its purpose or of the premises and conclusions of the author.

Such a work must naturally make a stir in the land. It could not fail to be unpalatable to the Roman Catholics; and we have been much interested to see how they would receive it and what reply they would make to it. The book has been published about six months, and there has been plenty of time to peruse it. So strong an arraignment from such a source could not be overlooked; and the Catholic pulpits and publication offices are beginning to be occupied with comments and criticisms upon it. We noticed a few days ago a sermon by a priest in Washington, the Rev. Father Boyle, devoted entirely to Mr. Thompson and his book. Father Boyle seems to have preached an interesting sermon; but, after considerable general denunciation of all those who attack Catholicism, he fell afoul of Mr. Thompson's acquaintance with the Latin and English languages, to which he devoted so much of his time that he did not have much space left to deal soberly with the points of Mr. Thompson's work. We do not know how thorough is Mr. Thompson's acquaintance with the Latin language, and it is quite likely that the construction of some of his English sentences is not absolutely faultless. Yet we should have been glad if the Washington preacher could have devoted less time to those matters, and dealt a little more with the arguments and disputed statements in the book which he was criticising. We regretted to notice that in calling attention to an error in Mr. Thompson's English, Father Boyle (who seems to have corrected the report of his sermon for the newspaper in which it appeared) attempted at one point to make it appear that there was a misconception where there was none at all.

A more extensive "reply" to Mr. Thompson appears in print "addressed to the American people" by F. X. Weninger, D.D., of the "Society of Jesus." This gentleman has written several works which were referred to and quoted from by Mr. Thompson in his book. He makes an error at the start, by saying that the work in question appeared during the presidential canvass last year; but this is perhaps unintentional. Father Weninger answers Mr. Thompson's main point as follows:

The assertions . . . which Mr. Thompson makes on the necessary antagonism between the Catholic Church and free institutions are characterized by pitiful ignorance and blind audacity. He is reckless of logic, of history, of common-sense, of charity; and presents himself before the loyal American people as a narrow-minded bigot. No scholar would venture to repeat the stale calumnies which have so often been refuted. But Mr. Thompson writes as serenely and flippantly about the history and aims of the Catholic Church as if he were scribbling about some club or meeting-house in his native village. In answer to his accusations against the Church as the enemy of liberty, I tell him, that, if ever this country should become a Catholic country—that is, if Catholics should ever be in the majority, and have the control of political power,—then he would see the principles of our Constitution carried out to the fullest extent; he would see that these States would be in very deed United. He would behold a people living in peace and harmony; joined in the bonds of one faith, their hearts beating in unison with love of their fatherland, with charity and forbearance toward all, and respecting the rights and conscience even of their slanderers.

The writer does not deny that the doctrine that the government of the Church is above all merely civil government is taught everywhere by the Roman Catholics, but he says that they recognize in this republican form of government "the same title to allegiance that is possessed by any legitimate form of government, viz.: that it is a government by divine right." But he immediately afterward says: "If there is any danger to the free institutions of this Republic, it will come from the principles of Protestantism logically developed. Those who deny divine authority, in matters of religion and conscience, cannot, if they are consistent, have much respect for the authority of the State. Their obedience is not a matter of conscience; their allegiance depends rather on their interest than on their sense of high obligation. The man who claims the right to say: 'The Church, it is myself,' why should he not also claim the right to say: 'The State, it is myself?' Protestantism, so far from having originated with the people, or being the palladium of their liberties, was, from the very beginning, used by princes and kings as an instrument of despotism."

Father Weninger answers the charge that the Jesuits are opposed to Republican institutions, by asking why, if that is true, Bismarck does not use and sympathize with them. He has always taught his hearers, he says, that it is their duty to sustain the Union even with their blood—this in answer to the charge of disloyalty. The following are some of the concluding sentences of Father Weninger's reply:—"We advise Mr. Thompson to send his book to the Czar, Alexander III., and to Frederick William, Emperor of Germany. He may expect from them, as a token of their sympathy, the orders of St. Andrew and of the Black Eagle. From clear-minded, self-thinking, patriotic Americans, he cannot expect anything but the decoration of their contempt. As long as American hearts will beat in American bosoms, and the blood of their fathers shall flow in their veins, such efforts as Thompson's shall not succeed. True, genuine Americans will protect the Catholic Church in this country, and will finally join it. . . . We leave the volume, whose argument we have killed, as a carcass to be devoured by those Texan buzzards—those stinking birds—we mean that kind of men who love to feed on corruption, calumnies, and lies, and are attracted by the stench of them."

The writer winds up, by stating that "it is evident to every critic that Mr. Thompson did not write the book himself, but only adopted it"; and therefore his "reply is not directed to him, but to the real author of the book."—Sunday Herald.

CHURCH MORTGAGES IN NEW YORK.

Recent foreclosure proceedings in the case of Dr. Hepworth's Church of the Disciples and similar procedures in other suits have lately directed attention to the fact that many of the finest and costliest of the fashionable churches in this city are heavily mortgaged. No other class of improved real estate in the city appears to be so heavily encumbered as that of its religious associations. Of course no sort of property has more uncertain tenure of its income, the whole depending in large measure on the popularity of the ministers engaged and in the good-will and prosperity of the church-members.

Nearly the whole of the debt created by these mortgages has been for the purpose of enlarging edifices, or the construction of new ones. There can be found scarcely an example where a church has incurred debt for the purpose of increasing the salaries or the numbers of its laborers, or to enlarge its contributions to general charity or missionary funds. All has apparently been for show. Indeed many of the churches owe their existence to the mortgages with which they are encumbered.

The following list shows the financial condition of many of the New York churches which are mortgaged, and of some religious societies. All mortgages registered prior to 1869 are omitted, and others less than $9,000 in amount disregarded, except in the grand totals. The other figures are exact, as taken from the County Register's books:—

American Bible Union, No. 32 Great Jones Street.	$30,000
American Tract Society, No. 160 Nassau Street.	123,000
Annunciation, P. E., No. 142 West 14th Street.	16,000
Ascension, P. E., 8th Avenue and West 10th Street.	35,000
Ascension Chapel Mission Association, P. E.	21,000
Atonement, P. E., Madison Ave. and East 35th St.	25,000
Brick Presbyterian Ch., 5th Ave. and W. 37th St.	25,000

Christ P. E. Church, 5th Avenue and East 35th St.	29,000
Covenant, Presbyterian, Park Ave. and East 35th St.	$28,000
Disciples, Cong., Madison Avenue and East 45th St.	189,000
Fifth Avenue Baptist, No. 6 West 45th Street.	42,000
Fifty-third Street Baptist, 53d Street and 7th Ave.	67,000
First Baptist, No. 43 East 39th Street.	45,000
First Baptist of Harlem.	22,000
First Ger. Bapt., East 14th Street and 1st Avenue.	18,000
First United Pres., No. 533 East 116th Street.	12,500
Fourth Avenue Pres., No. 238 4th Avenue.	25,000
Fourth Ger. Ref. Prot. Dutch.	10,000
Fourth Ref. Pres., No. 365 West 48th Street.	20,000
Grace Church, P. E., Harlem.	10,000
Heavenly Rest, P. E., No. 551 5th Avenue.	137,000
Holy Apostles, P. E., 8th Avenue and West 28th St.	12,000
Holy Saviour, P. E., East 25th St. and Madison Ave.	60,000
Holy Sepulchre, P. E., East 74th Street and 4th Ave.	50,000
Holy Trinity, P. E., Harlem.	85,000
Holy Trinity, Ev'n Lutheran, No. 47 West 21st St.	22,885
Incarnation, P. E., Madison Ave. and East 35th St.	14,000
Intercession, P. E., West 168th St. and Boulevard.	45,000
Jane Street M. E., No. 13 Jane Street.	14,000
Madison Ave. Ref., Madison Ave. and East 57th St.	100,000
Madison Square Pres. Church, Madison Ave. and East 24th Street.	45,000
M. E. Church, East Circuit of New York.	45,000
M. E. Church, Harlem.	45,000
Memorial, Pres., Madison Avenue and East 53d St.	130,000
New York Pres. Church, No. 169 West 11th Street.	15,000
North-West Prot. Ref. Dutch.	20,000
Phillips, Pres., Madison Avenue and East 73d Street.	250,000
Puritans, Pres., West 180th Street and 5th Avenue.	155,000
Plymouth, Baptist.	18,000
Ref. Prot. Dutch Church.	471,000
Ref. Prot. Dutch Church, No. 307 West 34th Street.	25,000
Ref. Low Dutch Church, Harlem.	28,000
Sacred Heart, R. C., No. 447 West 51st Street.	15,000
Second Cong. Unitarian Church.	64,000
St. Andrews, P. E., Harlem.	60,000
St. Bernard, R. C., No. 332 West 14th Street.	70,000
St. Esprit, R. C., French Church of.	10,000
St. John, Evang. Luth.	18,000
St. John the Baptist, R. C., No. 208 West 80th Street.	75,000
St. Luke, Ger. Evang., No. 233 West 42d Street.	30,000
St. Nicholas, R. C., No. 125 2d Avenue.	19,000
St. Stephens, P. E., No. 55 West 45th Street.	34,000
St. Teresa, R. C., Rutgers and Henry Streets.	27,000
St. Vincent de Paul, Asylum of, R. C.	5,000
St. Vincent de Paul, Church of, R. C., No. 127 West 23d Street.	65,000

RECAPITULATION.

Presbyterian	$708,000
Reformed	644,000
Protestant Episcopal	453,000
Roman Catholic	225,000
Baptist	212,000
Methodist	79,000
Lutheran	44,886

Total.....$2,367,886

—N. Y. Tribune, June 9.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WORSHIP.

Base, craven instinct! born of ignorance
And fear, that bow'st man's forehead to the dust
With downward-bent and beast-like grovelling glance;
The nobler faculties of spirit rust
Beneath thy tyranny, unused, repressed,
Reason to sense gives not its high behest;
So that all things distorted are, to suit
The ends of superstition vile. Sword, cross,
And sceptre away the brutal, stupid crowd.
Truth, bruised and bleeding, lieth crushed and mute;
While triumph o'er her mitred hierarchs proud,
Proclaiming fiercely that her gold is dross:
But soon will come her day of sovereign power,
When priests, mobs, kings, will 'neath her glances cower.

B. W. BALL.

BOSTON.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

FAITH.

Believe and trust, though clouds may darkly lower,
And hope the herald seem of stern despair;
Bend not before the blast, but with new power,
And firmer will, still persevere and dare.

With caution choose the path thy feet shall tread;
Then hold thy course, unwavering, firm, and true:
Though disappointment fill thy soul with dread,
Seek for the good it surely brings to you.

Prize, but ne'er test thy friends: build no ideal,
That, shattered, leads to bitterness and woe;
That which alone may win a guerdon real
Is in thyself—thyself to act and do.

With patience work and strive, serene, undying,—
The only helper of the aspiring soul;
Though oft deceived, still trusting and relying,
With time and faith, thou yet shalt win the goal.

CARLOTTA.

CHICAGO.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 23.

Joseph E. Reed, $1.50; J. R. Morley, $10; S. S. Hunting, $7.90; Emerson Bentley, $4; H. F. Marshall, $1.25; Cash, $5.35; Geo. H. Foster, $1.60; Dr. E. Moyer, $1.75; Joseph Bristol, $3.25; J. L. Stoddard, $25.40; John Curtis, $25; Benj. J. Jones, $1; W. C. Little, $3.20; D. G. Francis, $2; cents; Thomas Douglas, $3.85; A. E. Hecht, $3.20; Chas. Hazeltine, $1.80; G. B. Stebbins, $3.20; John Howes, $6.40; Thomas Nye, $12; Thomas Butler Gunn, $3.83; Stevens & Kallouch, $1; Mrs. L. F. Johnson, $1.25; Chas. M. Green, $1; Mrs. F. Wason, $1.50; John Logan, $4.04; J. C. Keams, $1.60; Wm. Harrison, 10 cents; Dr. Robert Ormiston, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 28, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 36 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CROWLEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, Editorial Contributors.

THE PRINCE OF WALES horrified the Sabbatarians recently by visiting Grosvener Gallery on Sunday afternoon with two of his children.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at the Paine Memorial on Sunday forenoon, July 1, in reply to Rev. Joseph Cook on the subject of Materialism. The ability of the lecturer, who is exceedingly well fitted to handle this subject, will doubtless attract a large audience.

A FRIEND who evidently has a keen sense of the ludicrous sends us this: "Sussex County, New Jersey, has produced a five-year-old boy who, when his Sunday-school teacher told him how Jesus took little children in his arms and blessed them, earnestly inquired: 'When will he be round again?'"

THE GRAND RAPIDS (Michigan) Post of June 9 says: "The valedictorian of the Williams College class of 1871 was Mr. John L. Stoddard, of Boston, who was sent through with the expectation that he would become an Orthodox minister. He afterwards travelled extensively, and studied for the ministry, but within a few weeks he has abandoned Orthodoxy and become a radical contributor for THE INDEX, the infidel organ. Mr. Stoddard was the most brilliant scholar Williams College had seen for years when he was there. He will be in his new relations a most efficient workman, and he has certainly proved the sincerity of his convictions by sacrificing prospects that were, in the social sense, of the most flattering description."

OUR LIST of editorial contributors receives this week a most valuable accession in the name of Hon. Elizur Wright, who has been an occasional contributor and a warm friend to THE INDEX from the beginning, and who kindly consents to give it an editorial article now and then. Born in 1804 at Canaan, Connecticut, Mr. Wright was educated for the Orthodox ministry, but failed to pass the examination on account of doctrinal unsoundness. For several years he was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at the Western Reserve College, in Ohio, and subsequently became the first Secretary of the American Anti-Slavery Society. A lot of Abolitionist tracts sent by the Society to Charleston was burned on the public square by the excited South Carolinians, who offered a reward for the capture of the mailers. Mr. Wright was rescued from kidnappers only by the intervention of some hackmen; and his house in Brooklyn would have been mobbed and destroyed, if the Mayor had not tardily consented to protect it. As editor of various journals in Boston, particularly of the Chronotype (founded in 1845), he spent years of active service in the Anti-Slavery cause, and conspicuously identified himself with the little band of moral heroes who roused the conscience of the North against the great crime of the nation. From the year 1868, he held for about six years the office of Insurance Commissioner for the State of Massachusetts, and has made himself a great authority on the subject of life insurance, on which he has published some valuable books. In the literary world, however, he is best known by his free metrical version of La Fontaine's Fables, which is to-day the standard translation, and exhibits a wonderful sprightliness, brilliancy, and aptitude for the performance of a very difficult task. A thorough radical in religion, Mr. Wright never hesitates to express his opinions with equal courage and clearness, yet with a strong reverence for all that ought to be revered—as appears very plainly in his article on the opposite page. We congratulate our readers on the prospect of more such articles as this, and only hope that the writer's quite indefensible modesty will not interfere with their frequency.

THE BRADLAUGH-BESANT PROSECUTION.

The prosecution of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant has been concluded, as announced in the following telegram dated London, June 21:—

"In the trial of Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant, for publishing a pamphlet alleged to be immoral, before Lord Chief-Justice Cockburn, Mr. Bradlaugh to-day finished his defence.

"The Lord Chief-Justice, in summing up, said a more injudicious and ill-advised prosecution was never brought into a court of justice; but if the jury were of the opinion that the book was calculated to injure public morals, then, however pure and good was the intention of defendants in publishing the work, their duty was to find them guilty.

"The jury, after being out an hour and a half, returned the following verdict: 'We are of the opinion that the book is calculated to deprave the public morals; but we entirely exonerate the defendants from a corrupt motive in publishing it.'

"Lord Chief-Justice Cockburn said: 'I direct you upon that to find a verdict against defendants.'

"The prisoners were ordered to reappear a week from to-day, in the meantime being allowed out on bail."

During the progress of the trial, the circulation of the book (Dr. Knowlton's Fruits of Philosophy) is reported to have increased from 700 to 100,000 copies. The verdict of the jury must be satisfactory to all friends of the defendants so far as it publicly vindicates the entire purity of their motives, and thereby prevents their enemies from using this prosecution to break down their characters in public estimation. It was an act of extraordinary daring to do what these defendants have done, rising to the level of heroism and sure to receive the admiration which all heroism elicits. The Lord Chief-Justice told the plain truth when he said that "a more injudicious and ill-advised prosecution was never brought into a court of justice"; and the usual effect of such prosecutions is illustrated by the astonishing increase in the sale of the condemned book. The defendants come out of the fiery ordeal of the prosecution, not only without the slightest stain upon their reputations on account of publishing the book, but even with a marked and very unusual expression of personal respect on the part of the jury.

The effect of the book itself upon public morality, however, is a wholly distinct question, much more difficult to answer than the question of motive; and we cannot help thinking that there is a measure of truth in this part of the verdict also. The book is one which not only gives scientific information respecting the reproductive system (doing so in language of great delicacy, against which no just reproach can be brought), but also describes in detail how to prevent conception by other means than by absolute continence. This is the feature of the book which gives it its real character, as a cheap propagandist publication of the Malthusian school; and it is undoubtedly this feature which determined the judgment of the jury. That such a book conveys knowledge which, in the hands of the immoral, can be made subservient to the most immoral purposes, such as adultery and seduction,—that, if scattered by the hundred thousand copies, it will certainly fall more or less into such hands,—and that its effect on public morality is therefore certain to be bad to at least some extent,—we do not see how any one can deny. The book is analogous to one which should give specific directions for preparing the most fatal poisons, and for using them so as to defy all subsequent detection; would any one doubt that, scattered broadcast over the land and coming into all sorts of hands, such a book would tend to make murder dangerously easy and frequent? It would only contain scientific facts properly expressed; yet the hard common sense of mankind would consider it an "immoral book," giving information which had better be entrusted only to scientific men as such, and not disseminated indiscriminately among all classes of the population. If, furthermore, the book were issued in the direct interest of a quite possible form of Malthusianism which should advocate on philanthropic grounds not only the prevention of an increase of the population, but also a positive reduction of it,—which should add to its lists of poisons and its specific directions for using them direct advice to administer them secretly to all hopeless invalids, to all very aged persons, and in general to the classes whose removal would be to the purely economic advantage of the community,—such a book would probably and not wholly unjustly be considered immoral, however excellent and philanthropic might be the motives of its publishers.

Nevertheless, this does not fully dispose of the case; it does not by any means justify the legal condemnation and suppression of such a book as Dr. Knowlton's, or of any other book written with an evident purpose to elevate rather than to degrade mankind. So unspeakably precious is the liberty of the press that, in all dubious cases, freedom should receive the benefit of the doubt. The way to make men moral, in the long run, is not to keep them in ignorance; it is not to suppress the honest thought of any writer, however crude or erroneous; it is not to set up the present knowledge of the community as an absolute finality, and to impose penalties on those who have the courage to proclaim sincere convictions which the majority consider impious or immoral. The principle of suppression is that of the "Sacred Congregation of the Index" at Rome, and is in disfavor everywhere, except where insolent bigotry reigns supreme. The wiser and nobler course, nay, the course sure to be far more successful in the end, is to place no obstacles in the way of publishing any well-meant book, dear or cheap, but rather to multiply means of information, to overwhelm half-knowledge with knowledge, to conquer the immoralities of well-intentioned but practically mischievous literature by a fuller and higher instruction of the whole people. Public opinion, thoroughly enlightened and brought to bear with full force against any really immoral and therefore dangerous principles, will be a thousand times more efficacious in averting their evil effects than a public policy which, striving to stamp out an incipient fire in perilously combustible material, only succeeds in scattering sparks in every direction. Admitting that the Knowlton book is really immoral in its tendencies (and all that can justly be alleged against it is that immoral persons will be likely to put it to immoral uses), the result of the present attempt to suppress it will beyond a doubt be to multiply whatever mischief it might have done many thousands of times. On the contrary, if the parties who instigated this prosecution had taken the pains to publish as cheaply, and scatter as widely, some book which should teach the principles of a high and pure sexual morality in terms free from all low associations and comprehensible by everybody, is it not more than likely that any evil effects of Dr. Knowlton's book would be in the main effectually neutralized? The suppression policy in this case, as proved by the increased sale, has turned out to be an egregious failure from the start; the policy of supplementing this book by further information and wise warnings, even if not absolutely successful, would at least have succeeded better than that.

There can be no question among right-minded people that the circulation of literature cunningly calculated to stimulate the passions or to facilitate vice, especially when addressed to children and youths, is a high crime against society, and ought not to be tolerated anywhere. Those who are too young to protect themselves against its demoralizing influences ought to be protected by the community which has everything at stake in their purity. But that should be the limit of the suppression policy. Books designed for no such purpose, but addressed to the reason and conscience of the reader, ought not to be suppressed at all, even though the theories advocated may not be reconcilable with the moral convictions of the majority, and though the information communicated may be capable of abuse. It is in this latter class that we should include the Knowlton pamphlet. The just limitations of the freedom of the press do not extend to this treatise, which is not at all obscene, and was manifestly written with a sincere desire to do good. If its moral or immoral character is to be judged by the very evident motives of the writer, it is not an immoral book; but if its character is to be determined by its actual influence on public morality, we should say that this influence is likely to be mixed, partly moral and partly immoral. The same may be said of a great many other books which no one has ever dreamed of attempting to suppress on moral grounds; as for instance the Bible, which Rome suppresses, if she can, only because it undermines the authority of the Church.

With these views, when we were requested to allow our name to be placed on the Bradlaugh Defence Committee, we could only reply that, if the Committee were simply understood to defend the freedom of the press in a test case, we cordially consented; but that, if they were also understood to defend the thesis that this particular book is not immoral, we could not conscientiously do so, since that is a question not to be decided solely by the motives of the writer. Whether our name was added, or not, we do not know. But our readers will be much interested in the letter of Miss Fenwick Miller (printed on a previous page), who with admirable dignity defends her course in giving to the Committee the use of her own name. It is difficult to find words strong enough with which to commend the courage of ladies who, like Mrs. Besant and Miss (now Mrs.) Fenwick Miller, do not flinch for conscience' sake to allow their names to be connected with a case so repugnant to the instincts of their sex; and surely every one but the malicious will rejoice that the verdict at least places them beyond any possibility of incurring the reproach they risked so bravely. We would also call attention to that passage of the editorial article accompanying Miss Miller's letter in the Eastern Argus (also printed in this issue) which says: "It is absurd for any public journal to contend that Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, with an almost world-wide reputation as a lecturer and a politician, apart altogether from his 'free-thought,' would, just as his future is most promising, throw over everything for the purpose of becoming the publisher of Holywell Street abominations. However much we may differ from Mr. Bradlaugh on theological matters, and we do, wide as the poles, common fairness compels us to say that during the twenty-seven years of his public life his character has been free from the least taint of suspicion of 'filthy' proclivities."

The contest that these defendants have made has been above all for the freedom of the press; whether the actual publication in question is or not "immoral" in a strictly utilitarian sense, it is preposterous to contend that it is "immoral" in any sense that implies deserved disgrace to the publishers; we have not a shadow of doubt that the only righteous verdict would have been complete acquittal, since the law ought not to condemn any book whose motive of publication was so evidently honest, philanthropic, and free from any taint of wilful impurity. That the defendants have been even partially condemned throws discredit on English law, which does not yet permit its full and rightful freedom to the press, but throws none on them; and, whatever penalties they may be obliged to undergo, they may rest assured of the sympathy of all who fitly value that intellectual liberty in whose cause they suffer. No matter if the condemned pamphlet is in one sense immoral, that is no just cause for punishing them for publishing it; for if all books liable to the same objection should be condemned, nine-tenths of the works advocating Christian theology should receive a far heavier condemnation. It would be monstrous and unendurable for the law to undertake to suppress all "immoral" books not immoral in manifest motive and intent; yet, unless it does this, it is a great wrong to imprison these defendants. The result of their imprisonment cannot fail to be an extension of the just freedom of the press; and it should be no small consolation to them to remember that they will not suffer in vain.

"REVERENCE."

"A lingering trace of reverence is still discernible in the occasional use of capitals."—Springfield Republican.

This is a criticism by implication on two books; one by Conway and the other by Frothingham, both outside the pale of Christianity. The Republican's wonder seems to be that there should be any reverence left in a man who is outside of such a pale. The sentence which the Republican quotes from Frothingham, as giving "in a condensed form about the essence as well as style of both books," is as follows:—

"James Martineau's tender wisdom gains nothing in charm by being attributed to his beautiful fiction of a Christ, and Mr. Moody's painful caricatures of Providence have an unfair advantage in being sheltered behind the authority of the Hebrew messiah."

Here certainly is as much orthographical reverence as could be desired, with the exception perhaps of the word Messiah.

But supposing Messrs. Conway and Frothingham really have no more reverence for Christ or Providence than they have for Messrs. Martineau and Moody, does it follow that they have less reverence than they ought to have, for what is supremely revered?

Reverence for will, as such, is nothing but fear, not the noblest quality in human or any other nature. Will does not become worthier of worship by becoming stronger, even to the extent of being supreme. If there is a supreme will that orders and controls everything in the universe, it is reverend, not because it is supreme, but because it orders and controls everything as nearly as possible according to the principles of order and harmony, which are eternal and above all will.

It may be called blasphemy to think it; but it is none the less true for that, that the human mind cannot conceive of a will strong enough to turn a mathematical truth into a falsehood. Hence there is something conceivable to be revered higher than will, even than a supreme will; namely, that which a supreme will must reverence to make it worthy of reverence. Does it not then follow that, if a man should cease to believe in the personal objects of worship which Christianity sets forth—always in capitals,—there would still be left, as objects of reverence, the eternal laws of order and beauty which radiate into the human soul from every possible subject of thought and every cubic inch of the material universe? Nothing to reverence, and yet life everywhere, even in death! Nothing to reverence, and yet every atom of the universe alive, and ready to jump into the arms of some other live atom, if it comes within reach!

The least reverent of mortals is probably the man who shuts his eyes to the actual universe, ignores the eternal, uncreated principles of order and harmony, and lives as much as possible in some one of the five or six theological universes created by the human mind at various stages in the progress of the human race. These theological universes, so far as I am informed, agree in starting from will as superior to law. With them two and two are four, and the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles, because God willed and made them so. And a thing is right because God commands it, not that he commands it because it is right. To some minds this is simply inconceivable. They do not on that account deny the existence of will or of mind as something distinct from matter. But if you will make them try to dive infinitely beyond their depth, they have no more difficulty in conceiving of the eternity or self-creation of one than of the other, but it is an insuperable difficulty in either case. They hold it to be an entire and atrocious waste of time to inquire about two such phenomena as mind and matter, so acting and interacting on each other everywhere and everywhen, as to which is cause and which is effect. Knowing that it is impossible for them to conceive that there are not eternal and indestructible principles, or self-legislated laws, to which both mind and matter owe allegiance, they are humbly content to study and reverence those laws. Enough of them have been discovered to make men very solemn, earnest, and reverential, without any theology whatever. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

UNITARIAN OR RADICAL—WHICH?

The final result of the controversy in the Unitarian Society at Revere, Massachusetts, is thus reported in the Boston Journal of June 23:—

Supreme Court—In Chambers—Lord, J.

A hearing is in progress in regard to the troubles in the First Congregational (Unitarian) Church at Revere. The subject came before the court in the form of a petition of the "First Parish of Revere v. George A. Tapley, William S. Janvrin, J. Irwin Magee, and Lemuel K. Washburn." The petition recites that the parish was formerly known as the First Parish of Chelsea, and was incorporated May 10, 1826; that previous to its incorporation the town of Chelsea transacted its parochial and municipal duties by the same organization and with the same officers; that upon the incorporation the petitioners succeeded to the parochial powers and property of Chelsea; that there is upon the parochial land a meeting-house which has been since the incorporation, and is now, in the possession of the petitioners, who have kept the pulpit supplied with preachers; that at a meeting of the parish on June 7, 1877, in pursuance of a warrant under date of May 21, David W. Stowers, Jonathan Harrington, and Ensign Kimball were chosen as the standing committee of the parish, and were sworn in and attended to their duties, one of which was to supply the pulpit, in pursuance of which they engaged the Rev. Warren Cudworth; that on Sunday, June 10, said Cudworth went to the meeting-house ready to preach; that said Washburn anticipated Cudworth in the occupancy of the pulpit to the exclusion of said Cudworth, and in contempt of the authority of the petitioners, who had terminated the contract with him as past; that the parish is Unitarian in its tendencies, and that Washburn does not belong to and does not believe in the tenets of that denomination, but is a "Radical," so called, in religion, and preaches in violation of the vote of the parish, passed on April 30, 1827, "that no denomination but that of the Unitarian principle shall be permitted to preach in the meeting-house"; that said Tapley, Janvrin, and Magee pretend to be the standing committee by reason of a pretended meeting of sundry persons, who have never been members of the parish and who do not hold to the tenets thereof, and do not desire to unite therewith for the purpose of advancing the cause of Christianity, but solely for the purpose of obtaining possession of the meeting-house and to pervert the same to "radical" uses; that this pretence of the defendants is untrue, because the last-named meeting was held without legal authority, and at it no member of the parish was present, and that neither of the defendants are members of the parish; that they illegally claim the power to supply the pulpit, and have confederated together to enter upon and hold possession of the meeting-house and to exclude the petitioners and their agents, and to prevent any clergyman, by the said Washburn, from occupying the pulpit.

The contempt in which the defendant Washburn holds the authority of the petitioners is shown by the appended note introduced by the petitioners:—

"REVERE, June 9, 1877.

"ENSIGN KIMBALL, DAVID W. STOWERS, JONATHAN HARRINGTON:

"Sirs,—As I do not recognize you in the official capacity which you assume, permit me to say that I shall take no notice of any matter which you may be pleased to communicate.

"(Signed)

L. K. WASHBURN,
Pastor of the First Congregational Church of Revere."

The petitioners pray that a temporary injunction may issue to restrain the respondents from entering upon or taking possession of the meeting-house, or hindering the petitioners in the free use thereof; that the respondents may be required to answer, and for such other relief as may be found just and equitable.

The respondents contest the matter, as they view the troubles, claiming that they are the lawfully constituted parish committee.

The real question underlying this quarrel is whether the parish shall be Unitarian or "Radical"; and this will be determined for the present by the decision of the Court as to which of the two committees is the legally constituted one, with power to supply the pulpit, and to recognize members or fix and control the membership.

The trouble has been growing for months. Mr. Washburn has been pastor for two or three years; but on account of the radical character of his views there has been an increasing dissatisfaction on the part of a portion of the society and congregation. These caused to be printed and circulated a circular in which reference was made to a sermon preached by Mr. Washburn, April 29, 1877, on the subject, "Am I a Unitarian Minister?" Also to an article published by him in the New Age, Dec. 30, 1876, in which occurs the following paragraph: "Let us see if Christianity can stand criticism, or if Radicalism cannot. I believe that the Christian doctrines are false and injurious, and that they should be disproved and cut from our civilization. They deform it. Let us rid the world of worship of Jesus; of worship of the Bible; of the silly and nonsensical performances witnessed in Christian churches. One cannot enter a Christian Church without stooping, nor listen to the exercises in them without shame. Radicals cannot go to Christian meetings without loss of self-respect."

It is contended by the respondents that the "parish" means the territory, and that "members of the parish" means all legal voters of the vicinity who attend the meetings of the society; and the first evidence taken was upon the point as to the proceedings in former parish meetings, it being found that others than those in the list of 1848 had been in the constant habit of participation.

After hearing the evidence and arguments on both sides the Court granted the injunction prayed for.

Alfred Hemmingway and George Kimball for the petitioners; Charles S. Lincoln for the respondents.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, substantially like the Supreme Court of New Hampshire in the Dover case, has decided that Unitarianism and "Radicalism" are incompatible with each other,—that trustees identified with the latter cannot hold, administer or control property vested in a "Unitarian" society,—that they are to be ejected from the meeting-house of such a society, even though, as in this case, they represent a large majority of the society itself. The issue between Unitarianism and Freedom is thus forced upon the attention of Unitarians in Massachusetts, who can no longer ignore it because it is away off in New Hampshire. The protest against Christianity, even in its excessively mild Unitarian form, now becomes a home matter—a matter which must press heavily on every sensitive Unitarian conscience. The Supreme Court of the State, brushing aside the flimsy sophistries with which this vital issue has been incontinently smothered, now decides in effect that a minister cannot be Unitarian and Radical at the same time, and that, if the latter, he is an interloper and intruder in a Unitarian pulpit. Will the Unitarian papers at last treat this subject with the frankness which its gravity demands?

With Mr. Washburn, who is thus exiled by Massachusetts law from a society strongly attached to him by a large majority, and who is turned adrift by the triumph of Unitarian enmity to freethought, we have the deepest sympathy. He is a young man of unimpeached character, as brave as he is bright and liberal, and capable of splendid service in the field of religious radicalism, if only opportunities are opened to him. Several months ago, before these troubles came to a head, he called upon us, and expressed strong sympathy with the objects and principles of the Liberal League movement. He would render most valuable aid to this movement, if he could be constantly engaged in working for it; but, like many other earnest and devoted spirits full of enthusiasm for this cause, his services cannot be had for lack of organized support. The liberals of the United States little dream what intellectual power and high moral purpose are lost to their cause, simply because they themselves are too inert or indifferent to give it scope for exercise. How can a young man like Mr. Washburn, forced out of the public advocacy of freethought because he is too brave and sincere to take false denominational shibboleths upon his lips, find a chance to continue his work in the dearth of organized liberal societies through the country? Here and there is one, but not enough to afford lecturers the bare necessities of life. If there were only a few hundreds of such societies, liberals would be astounded to see what intensity of now suppressed enthusiasm would blaze forth in advocacy of their own ideas. We speak of what we know. Young men have again and again appealed to us for aid in getting into this noble work; and it has been with inexpressible mortification and sadness that we have been obliged to confess that we were powerless, that the liberals of the country are too much engrossed with their private affairs to give the time and thought necessary to advance their own cause through local organization. They do not know their own numbers or strength. If they did, they would not be condemned or trampled under foot by Orthodoxy as they are to-day. Their cause is not that of a sect, but that of the whole country, ay, of all mankind; and its very universality will remain the source of its greatest weakness, until they themselves come to comprehend that they have a vast public duty to discharge. Speed the day when American Liberalism shall shake the slumbers from its drowsy eyes, and lay its resistless hand on the rudder of the national destiny!

Meanwhile, though wholly unsolicited by him, we ask all who can to invite Mr. Washburn to lecture in their town. His address for the present, at least, is Revere, Massachusetts.

Communications.

HUMAN INSTINCTS.

"I understand by instinct a law working to a given end by impulse, yet blindly,—the subject not knowing why he thus works; a law innate, inherent in the constitution of the animal, not acquired, but transmitted, the origin of which is to be found in the Intelligent Author of the universe."—Haven's Moral Philosophy, p. 330.

"The difference of mind between man and the higher animals," says Mr. Charles Darwin, "great as it is, is certainly one of degree and not of kind."

That instinct is intelligent force, or physical force combined with intelligence, and operating throughout all organized life, we think there can be no reasonable doubt. That this intellectual force is the power of God—all powerful, and everywhere present—should also appear reasonable. If God possesses and exerts all power, then all the forces of Nature, all the actions, movements, and effects produced, are in, by, and through him. All animals, from the lowest protozoa to the highest mammals, even to man with all his superior endowments of thought, conscious intelligence, and affectional emotions,—all are only the production of forces derivable from the same omnipotent and original power, the power inherent in Nature; for Nature and omnipotence are inseparable, Nature being that which is seen and tangible, and omnipotence its hidden powers. Both are one, as the life and the body are one.

"Nature! What is Nature?" says George H. Colver, in his Life of Goethe. "All that is, from the clod under your feet to the farthest star over your head; from the commonest impulse of the heart, to the finest aspiration of the soul; all phenomena, mental and physical, psychical and sensible, spiritual and corporeal, are embraced in Nature, are all manifestations of the supreme mind."

The principle of life, and that of instinct and reason, emanate from the same source, either directly or through various instrumentalities, and are but different appropriations and degrees of the activities of the divine mind and power. Human instincts are properly those of the vital functions, and belong to the corporeal organism. They may be innately derived from Nature in common with the instincts of other animal organisms, or they may be formed by the confirmed habits of individual experience, which, as the saying goes, becomes "a second Nature." But, as the habits of the parents descend to their offspring, so do these become innate instincts, inasmuch as the organism is conformed to produce them, and are in this way also derived from Nature, and yet all from God, the primal power of all being.

Now assuming, according to the quotation at the beginning of this article, "that instinct is a law working to a given end, yet blindly," then human instinct, whether it concerns the mind and soul, or otherwise, must work in the same way—is intuitively acquired, and is perfectly independent of man's present reasoning powers; and, therefore, all intuitional or instinctive impulses are unintellectual on the part of the subject, as much as are those of the ant or the swallow, until submitted to the inferences and decisions of reason. Again, instinct and intuition, being both the activities of Nature's diffusive mind, are intrinsically the same; the former belonging more particularly to the physical constitution, though occasionally to the psychical, while intuition is more especially supposed to designate the affections of the mind and its emotions, though both act without conscious intent. Yet how can mind exist and continue to be a verity, if deprived of the only qualities that give it distinction from animal passivity, the attributes of the will-power and rationality?

We are, however, often reminded by writers whom we would suppose to know well whereof they speak, that there is such a thing as the "instinct of reason." We have always supposed that there was a "difference in kind" between these two powers—the one impulsive and the other a motive power,—one coercive of its subject, the other originitive and creative; but all within the boundaries of Nature. We have also heard of "philosophical instinct," which may be intended as co-partner with the "instinct of reason." These instincts, if not innate and transcendental in their nature, like that of intuition, and beyond that of man's common nature as a reasoning and moral being, most certainly give the results and benefits of reason without the exercise of that faculty, which human nature claims as its own distinctive attribute. Even presuming that these gifts of rational instinct are organic impressions, and come by normal human processes, by inheritance or personal habits, still, if they operate from any cause so as to be superior to and destructive of man's present reasoning powers, they destroy his volitional status, and make him equal to the animals that are below him in the sphere of being,—to a mere automaton, whichever way his faculties may have been substituted or extinguished.

Our thoughts, many of them, may be said to be instinctive or intuitional, inasmuch, as they seem to be spontaneous, and arise in the mind without the action of the will. What more can be claimed for those which are supposed to be peculiarly deposited in the soul from a higher source than has ever been committed to the human mind to be evolved by the exercise of its own functions? These ordinary thoughts, not usually claimed as instinctive, but continually springing up in the mind without any apparent cause, are, it appears to me, as really intuitional as any other thoughts; even as those pertaining to Deity, immortality, and the sense of right. So that, if all casual thoughts are not intuitional, none of them are. But those thoughts which many suppose to be instinctive or intuitional doubtless arise from organic tendencies impressed on the constitution, either innately, or according to educational influences from the environment of the individual.

All thoughts and ideas must surely arise from the impressions made upon the mind by external things, and by the comparing and deducing facts from such impressions. With regard to what have been called "innate ideas," though the intent as affecting the organism may have been just, yet a moment's consideration ought to dispel the conception of there being such a thing as inborn thought. But may not instinctive and intuitional thoughts be placed in the same category? Measured by the laws of Nature and the human mind, these, to me, are unaccountable conceits,—deductions from nothing; for they surely transcend and distort the functions of the soul, and overleap the boundaries of created being.

The fallibility of reason, to be sure, is proverbial; and it may, after all, hardly be wondered at that some may lose their faith in it, and substitute in its place some mere imaginary notions of their own, thinking, doubtless, that they can fancifully conjure up something just as near the truth as that fallible faculty can furnish. But the failure of reason to ascertain the truth, we may always know, is on account, not of imperfection in reason itself, but of our imperfection in the use of it—in our failing to reason rightly. "But," say the opponents of faith in reason, "there are other faculties and functions in man, other sources of perception and conviction than the understanding; these are the sense of duty and loyalty of the affections to an invisible Supreme." But whence came this sense of duty—this "Moral Sense," as it is sometimes called, but by the application of the powers of the mind and the ignored understanding? Reason with yourself; would you know what you should do to your neighbor? Do even as you would that he should do unto you. Sift out the true and the good from the debris of surrounding things and events? Then shall you, indeed, have "a sense of duty," and a conscience void of offence toward God and man.

Reason and the understanding are supposed to be incapable of deducing from the things that are seen those very facts that concern the progress and welfare of humanity the most. They depend upon a vague notion of moral sense welling up within them from the sources of germ-creation, super-sensuously distilled, and independent of natural organs or functions. Yet the advocates of this system of ethics are incautious enough to call it "Science in Religion." Science is the very acme of reason and intelligence; yet when these persons repudiate reason as insufficient for human needs, they vauntingly claim their system of religion to be established in science. They denounce reason as unreliable, yet would fain claim it as their own method, in antagonism to those who never abandon it, but constantly and honestly pursue it, and are guided by its decisions. Moral sense is indeed begotten by reason, and as such is the highest attribute of humanity; otherwise, if not so produced, if it is begotten by the caprice of circumstances, and its convictions are not brought before the bar of reason to be tested by its decisions, it may answer for a blind faith; but such a faith is no more than blind instinct at all creditable to man in his advanced estate, and should be relegated to man in a purely savage condition.

R. P. THOMSON.
SAN JOSE, Cal., June 8, 1877.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

No. XIII.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

We were brought by the reasonings of the last article to the verge of a seeming necessity for excluding will-force and freedom from any part in the universal arrangement and administration of things. It was shown that inherent necessity or fixed fatality must be admitted to go for something in the universe. It now remains to inquire whether they must, therefore, be admitted to go for everything. This is no longer a mere question for the metaphysicians. Physical science is taking a strong hold upon it. In philosophy the question is identified with that of efficient or back-lying causes and final or front-lying and soliciting causes (teleology); the former being formal, mechanical, invariable, and so favored by the fatalists; the latter being plastic, vitalic, and spontaneous or self-originitive, and so favored by the advocates of free-will and divine intervention. In natural science the question comes forward as between evolutionism, in the purely mechanical sense, as the sufficient and total explanation of all that occurs (materialism), and what we may call supra-materialism, which posits the necessity of other forces than the purely mechanical and external laws of being, to account, at least, for some of the occurrences of the universe. As the former of these views (materialism) reduces all eventuation to a single variety of causation, it is also denominated monism (from the Greek monos, SINGLE); and as the latter (idealistic) view, admitting a fixed order of external causes as operating in part, yet posits other forces, or some other force, as essential to the production of other classes of phenomena, it is called dualistic, as predicated a doubleness of method in the operation of universal things.

Dr. Ernst Haeckel, just now the leading sciento-philosopher of Germany, an earnest disciple of Darwin, but surpassing the master in the tendency to metaphysical discriminations, is one of those who has most fully discussed this subject, in the light of the natural sciences, and he may be cited as the most pronounced and representative monist. Agassiz, Richard Owen, and St. George Mivart may be mentioned among the ablest representatives of the opposite school. None of these last must be understood as opposing evolution for what it may prove to be worth; but as opposing the assumption that it (as merely external and mechanical, or what is the same thing, efficient-causative), covers the whole ground, and excludes the necessity of any other causation.

Haeckel characterizes these two schools of thought and theory,—the first as mechanical-causal, monistic, or unimal; the second as final-causal, teleological, DOUBLE-FACED, or DUALISM (I translate from Natürliche Schöpfungsgeschichte, Berlin edition, 1888, p. 16). He says rightly, in characterizing the dualists (p. 17), "that it is entirely indifferent whether we adore this (interpolated) creative (or originitive) power as a personal God, or whether we conceive it as a life-power (vis vitalis) or as teleic purpose and cause (causa finalis)." "In each case," he adds, "we betake ourselves to the marvellous, as a means of explanation"; and this resort, he holds, must be absolutely excluded from the beat of the natural sciences. He might have added to the ranks of the dualists all those natural scientists who believe in type forms or organic types, and who are known as transcendental anatomists, of whom Goethe, Oken, and Carus were preëminent instances, as contrasted with Cuvier, Buffon, and the ordinary school. It is on this ground that I class Richard Owen here, as he is perhaps the most eminent living defender of the theory of organic types.

It is a curious and valuable fact which Haeckel points out, that monism or unism is the triumphant doctrine throughout the abiological or inorganic range of the sciences; and that dualism or dualism still prevails, lingers, as he would say, in biology (vegetology and zoölogy); that is to say, that the unimal theory prevails in the lower range, and the dualist theory in the higher range of these sciences; or, rather, that the latter statement was true until Darwin broke through the distinction; and that now the monistic or unimal doctrine is rapidly conquering in biology also, and, as he supposes, is destined absolutely to triumph in both spheres. That is to say, the supposition of the existence of any principle of spontaneity, not rigorously referable to the chain of antecedent and purely mechanical phenomena, is to be chased from the dominion of life, as absolutely as it is assumed to have been from the dominion of death.

The admission by naturalists of the occurrences of those seemingly abnormal forms called "sports" offers some difficulty to the certainty and simplicity of this theory; and other difficulties arise within the immediate scope of the sciences in question, which, however, I do not propose to discuss; but to suggest, rather, some farther out considerations which stand related to the subject.

The idea of a spontaneity producing the new form independently of any efficient or back-lying causes, allies itself with that of final or front-lying cause, soliciting or, as it were, drawing forth and on the exceptional occurrence; and this again with the supposition of a typical plan or programme to be enacted; and so with the notion of a will or willa, residing either in the thing itself, or elsewhere, and operating on it. Again, obedience to an efficient cause is compulsory, fatal, necessitarian; and obedience to a final cause is voluntary or attractive. The one operates à tergo, the other à fronte. We are thus brought to the simple consideration of the two forms of force which we call, in simple language, a push and a pull; and the denial of the existence of final causes is simply affirming that everything in the economy of universal things is accomplished upon the principle of push; and that nowhere is the principle of pull illustrated. When science substituted pressure for the older idea of suction, that was an argument in his favor; but that was in chief part in the inorganic realm, and even then we are still taught to regard gravitation as attraction; and are we at all prepared to discard the notion of attractive forces throughout the higher range of universal affairs?

Doubtless the disputants in this controversy who deny the existence of final causes, and so of any spontaneous and attractive domain anywhere, are not aware of the sweeping nature of their negative proposition. They are not aware, probably, that it is again the old question of fixed fate and free-will in a new arena, and under new conditions; that it is, at the other extreme, the question of mechanical traction and pulsion; that it is, on middle ground, the question of physical coercion and moral suasion in the control of the family, the school, and the State; that is the question of compulsory or slave labor and of "attractive industry" in every department of work, etc., etc. They do not know, that by denying final causes and spontaneity, they are affirming, virtually and analogically, that nothing anywhere either is or should be drawn or pulled, and that everything is and should be driven or pushed. The generalizations of universalism are, however, like mathematical formulae, by which numerous and remote classes of phenomena are drawn together by a common element of unity in the perception of the sameness of law which underlies them; and the question of teleology is thus bound up in the same fasciculus with these other related questions.

But in the usual order of development compulsory method comes earlier, and yields gradually to the presence of attractive method or charm; slavery first and freedom afterwards. It is in accordance with this order that efficient causes, only or mainly, should be recognized in inorganic nature, the lower and prior sphere of natural things, and that final causes should be recognized in greater measure, in the organic or living world; and the doubt must still be entertained whether Haeckel, and his co-peers, even by the aid of Darwin, will be able to reduce all the happenings of the sphere of life to the dead mechanism of efficient causes.

Absolutely pure monism is indeed impossible. Haeckel finds himself, in asserting it, upon a quotation from Goethe, to this effect: "Matter can never exist and be actual without spirit, nor spirit without matter." This is an unfortunate authority and an unfortunate quotation for his purpose. First, it discriminates force as living power, from dead corporeal matter, or from matter looked at in that aspect; and secondly, it identifies force with spirit (Geist). This is ample warrant for the dualism along-side of unism or pure and exclusive monism; and then for their unity, which makes Goethe to be, what preeminently he was, a trinitarianist (in a naturalistic way). It is altogether a secondary and incidental question whether matter and spirit can exist apart. The first and fundamental question is: Do they both exist? Is the discrimination between them one that has to be made, and so that the study of its significance is important? Probably none but an extreme theologian, or an extremist of the opposite school, say Mr. John Fiske, in his anxiety to put matter and spirit so far asunder as to preclude all possibility of reasoning from the one to the other, would insist on the point that spirit, if it exist at all, must exist, or in certain states exist, or be capable of existing, entirely divorced from matter. The contrary conception, that matter and spirit always co-exist, that they are inseparably married or united; and that they, in some perhaps unknown or undefined sense, accurately reflect each other, so that what is true of one is true in some way, to be discovered and defined by science, of the other,—this is far more the prevalent drift of modern thought on the subject; a drift which is as yet vague or indeterminate, but which universalism renders definite and exact.

Another important result of this dictum of Goethe, adopted by Haeckel, is the clear identification of force and spirit. This idea once accepted, there is no farther difficulty. Force and matter (hence spirit and matter) are clearly co-existent and inherently united, and measurable each in terms of the other; and yet, clearly distinguishable as the state and the dynamic manifestations of existence, respectively. And it is this complex idea which is really meant by the monism or unism of Haeckel; a complexity which is insisted on as being a pure simplicity. Those who are then called dualists differ from that view only in this: that they conceive that total concrete existence exhibits two spheres of being, in the lower and least developed of which matter, as such, predominates, with only those subordinate manifestations of spirit which are called mechanical forces or force; in the higher and more developed of which, spirit, as such, predominates, manifesting itself first as life, then as mind, and finally as that spontaneity or free-will, which seems, from time to time, to interfere with the steady and habitual course of the lower and more observable laws of Nature. It is even a fair question whether there be not a whole set of occult laws in universal Nature, which are set over against, and are constantly prone to counterwork, that set of the overt laws of Nature which our scientists are worthily investigating, only mistaking them for the whole, while in fact they are merely the half of the universal truth of things.

If then, spirit, the mind-side of things, and the occult constitute an equal half with overt matter (and its force); and if yet there is an identical framework of adjustment combining the two, and constituting them into the obverse and the reverse of the same general body of existence, the field of scientific investigation is simply enlarged thereby, while yet the method of attacking the whole problem is clearly indicated. If this be true—and it is certain that the universal analogies all concur in demonstrating it,—then thought and ideas are entities, and not a mere resultant of force in matter; matter and force (mechanical, efficient causes) are only naturismally originative, while scientifically or logically, mind and spirit are so; and universal existence is the proliferation from their joint action. In this point of view immortality is as probable, not to say certain, as mortality; perpetual life as true at least as perpetual death; and we have only to ascertain in what form this truth is manifested.

This special identification of matter with efficient causes or the universal push, and of spirit with final causes or the universal pull, simplifies the issue, and will lead to important solutions; and, further on, this larger identification of numerous seemingly unrelated and remote conceptions, by virtue of a subtle sameness in their manner of standing related to numerous other things, illustrates the way in which it becomes possible to found the unity of knowledge. The most diverse aspects of thought and being and practical affairs are found to be colligated in the bonds of an all-embracing and systematic analogy, repetition, or echo of resemblances, which are traceable from a common fountain-head of unity in diversity, out into detail. That fountain-head is the fixity, the undeviatingness, the utter stillness, or the mechanical uniformity in movement, of things, on the one hand, which coincides with oneness; the change or deviation of parting, departing, etc., on the other hand, which coincides with twoness, and their co-action or combined unity in the production of whatsoever result. These, again, are the UNISM, DUALISM, and TRINITISM, which lie at the basis of the science of universal things; and which, when grasped and comprehended and rightly applied, will recast all human thinking, the whole sphere of education, and the life of the world; substituting definite knowledge for opinion, and substantially in all spheres.

Hundreds of other related ideas crowd into connection with those which have been designated. For example, in the matter of family, church, and political government, the efficient-causal, compulsory and purely mechanical fixed law method is masculoid and paternal; the loving, solicitous, attractive, or final-causal method (ginger-bread in place of the rod) is feminoid and maternal. So remote a matter, therefore, as woman's rights, stands intimately related with the vindication of the doctrine of final causes.

In conclusion, let me call the attention of thoughtful readers to a series of profound investigations into the basis of induction, a thesis supported before the Faculty of Letters, in Paris, by J. Lachelles, translated from the French by Sarah A. Dorsey, and published in the Journal of Speculative Philosophy, St. Louis, during 1876 and 1877, and particularly to the treatment of the subject of final causes, in its issue of January, 1877.

RELIGIOUS REVIVALS.

MR. EDITOR:—

Notwithstanding the steady growth of Liberalism during the past year, Orthodoxy has been able to add to the numerical strength of its churches in many parts of the country. It has put forth every effort to accomplish this result. The course pursued shows that the method in which it has the greatest confidence is "getting up revivals." It has not gained anything in its contests with science, for, as Huxley says, "extinguished theologians lie about the cradle of every science as the strangled snakes beside that of Hercules"; and the means it now employs to swell its numbers are a confession that appeals made to the understanding and judgment of men fail to produce the desired result. Since there is no use in addressing the intellect with the expectation of making any considerable accessions to the churches, the only thing that remains for the leaders of Orthodoxy to do is to make increased exertions to obtain converts from the unintellectual and uneducated. As much as we dislike to acknowledge it, it is a fact which candor compels us to admit, that in this country, as in every other, the masses are ignorant and steeped to the eyelids in superstition. Under the influence of strong religious tendencies and devotional feelings, the result of ancestral experiences through ages of unreasoning faith, accustomed to "think in herds" as they have been taught from childhood, and moved in no other way so readily and profoundly as by appeals to their prejudices and emotions, they constitute an element with which the Orthodox clergy may hope for a long time yet to continue their influence and to perpetuate their authority. This is the element from which the churches, East and West, have been strengthened the past year and more. This is not simply an inference from a consideration of the means employed by Orthodoxy to increase her strength and influence—although as such it is quite legitimate and proper,—but a fact attested by the observation of thousands, admitted by the more candid and honest among the clergy, and easily demonstrated by reference to the intellectual calibre of the converts that have been added to the churches in any community during the recent revivals.

If the character of the converts do not bring honor directly to the Church, their numbers augment her power and make her more dangerous. Large organizations even, though composed chiefly of unintellectual men and women, like the Catholic and Methodist churches, may be able to influence society and the State to a far greater extent than smaller bodies made up largely of educated persons. Brought into ecclesiastical organizations and controlled by bigoted and narrow-minded, yet conscientious, leaders, the element to which I have referred will, I apprehend, be the most dangerous, because the most ignorant, unreasonable, and fanatical element with which the friends of State Secularization and impartial religious liberty will have to deal in the future. For this reason alone, if for no other, I cannot regard religious revivals, even though some incidental good can be justly claimed for them, with that indifference which I hear some Liberals express. The longer I live the more deeply I am impressed with the importance of a great, organized, systematic, sustained effort among the independent minds of this country to counteract the evil effects of superstition by the diffusion of science and liberal views, and at the same time to labor earnestly and unitedly for the triumph of those noble principles which constitute the platform of the National Liberal League.

Respectfully,
THORNDIKE, Mass., June 14, 1877.

THE INTEREST DOCTRINE BRIEFLY STATED.

BY BISHOP FEEBETTE.

The doctrine of money interest may be briefly stated thus:—

First, we must suppose the debtor to be solvent; for if the money is less safe with him than with the creditor, the loan contract becomes complicated with an insurance contract, and we must study a single case. Secondly, we must suppose the money to be as safe with the creditor as with the debtor; for if it is made more safe by the loan, the borrower is entitled to wages for safe-keeping, and so the loan becomes complicated with a contract of service and wages, and the case again is not a simple one. In a simple case, the conditions of which are by the nature of things necessarily found in every loan, the creditor is justly entitled to be compensated for all that he parts with by the fact of the loan, and should receive that compensation from the party in whose favor he parts with it. On examination we find that he parts with two things in favor of two different parties:—

First, he parts with the capital itself, and that in favor of the borrower. The borrower is therefore bound to repay to him the capital at the stipulated time or times, and is bound to nothing more.

Secondly, he parts with the certainty that, when the stipulated time comes, the money will be repaid to himself and not to his heirs, as he is not immortal. By incurring that uncertainty, he damages himself and benefits his heirs to an equal amount; and the amount is proportional to the duration of the loan and his probabilities of death, taking into account his age, according to tables of mortality. His heirs, therefore, may justly indemnify him for the risk incurred by him in their interest, by the payment of a sum or sums, called interest, of an amount proportional to the greater or less probability that the capital will be repaid to them and not to him.

But, supposing the heirs say that they don't care about the matter and will have nothing to do with it, and the borrower is greatly in need of the money, and the capitalist consents to lend it to him, what shall happen? Shall the capitalist incur without compensation the probability of the money being repaid to his heirs instead of him? And shall his heirs gratuitously receive at his detriment the benefit of that probability for which they have refused to indemnify him? Or shall the borrower himself offer to step into the place of the heirs in indemnifying the lender for the risk incurred in their behalf, but himself never receive any compensation for the money thus advanced for them?

The borrower, in that case, can offer to vicariously indemnify the lender for the risk incurred as aforesaid. But having paid what he has paid instead of the heirs and on their behalf, he is entitled, on his reimbursing the lender or his heirs for the capital, to deduct all that he had paid in the form of interest. The Catholic Church teaches that the lender is bound to provide for that deduction by his will. In defect of such will, the heirs themselves are bound to allow that deduction, which the borrower may demand and the courts must award. All laws and stipulations to the contrary effect are null and void.

The purchase of a life annuity for a premium differs in substance from a loan contract, as the premium or capital is never to be repaid. But the justice or injustice of a premium and annuity contract is based on the same principles as that of a loan and interest contract. The annuity can never be perpetual; and the premium ought to be equal to the sum of the expected annual payments according to life insurance probabilities. Office expenses are extraneous to all contracts, and are to be borne by both parties alike, or by the party most specially benefited.

[The ingenious Bishop omits altogether a chief point in the case: namely, that the lender parts with the use of his money during the time of the loan. What about that?—ED.]

ORGANIZATION.

SALAMANCA, June 14, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

May I request all the freethinkers residing in Central and Western New York, including towns as far east as Syracuse and Binghamton, who are in favor of a freethought organization for that territory, to send me their names so soon as they read this note?

As there is to be a three days' grove-meeting of the Liberals of Central and Western New York, near Wolcott, on the 17th, 18th, and 19th days of August next, it is proposed, if thought advisable, to form a permanent organization at that time, to be known as "The Central and Western New York Association of Freethinkers."

H. L. GREEK.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 50 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1863 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, Mr. Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets. . . . .	1.50	III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith. . . . .	1.75	PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates. . . . .	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols. . . . .	3.50	IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain. . . . .	1.50	Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena. . . . .	1.35
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories. . . . .	1.50	V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq. . . . .	1.50	Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts. . . . .	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl. . . . .	1.50	VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr. . . . .	2.00	The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Economy, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc. . . . .	2.00
Little Men. . . . .	1.50	VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine. . . . .	1.50	THE EXPANSE OF HEAVEN. . . . .	2.00
My Boys, &c. . . . .	1.00	VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew. . . . .	1.75	RENAN'S Life of Jesus. . . . .	1.75
Shawl-Straps. . . . .	1.00	IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D. . . . .	1.50	ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante. . . . .	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience. . . . .	1.75	JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Salutes, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers. . . . .	1.50	SCHELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in the Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies. . . . .	2.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50		JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India. . . . .	5.00	SCIENCE PRIMERS: . . . .
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism. . . . .	2.00	JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian. . . . .	2.50	1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S. . . . .	.50
New Poems. . . . .	2.00	JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols. . . . .	12.00	2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe. . . . .	.50
Literature and Dogma. . . . .	1.50	KERR (ORPHEUS O.) Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous. . . . .	2.00	3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations. . . . .	.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine. . . . .	2.00	LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols. . . . .	4.00	4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth. . . . .	.50
Edelweiss. . . . .	1.00	LEGG'S Confucius' Life and Teachings. . . . .	4.00	SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols. . . . .	2.25
German Tales. . . . .	1.00	Confucius and Chinese Classics. . . . .	3.00	SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition. . . . .	2.00
BAOON'S Essays. . . . .	1.25	LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham. . . . .	1.50	SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help. . . . .	1.50
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution. . . . .	2.25	LEWES'S Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. . . . .	3.50	SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. . . . .	1.50
Physics and Politics. . . . .	1.50	Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol. . . . .	1.00	First Principles. . . . .	2.00
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy. . . . .	1.75	Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed. . . . .	3.00	Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers. . . . .	2.50
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol. . . . .	1.75	LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life. . . . .	1.50	THE PRINCIPLES OF BIOLOGY. 2 vols. . . . .	4.00
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol. . . . .	2.50	LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.) What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews. . . . .	1.00	The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols. . . . .	4.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms. . . . .	5.00	LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols. . . . .	4.00	Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition. . . . .	2.00
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations. . . . .	3.00	Prose Works. Portrait. . . . .	4.00	Sociology. . . . .	2.00
BARTOL (REV. G. A.) Radical Problems. . . . .	2.00	LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols. . . . .	4.00	Life, Correspondence and Ethics. . . . .	9.00
The Rising Faith. . . . .	2.00	The Biglow Papers. First Series. . . . .	1.50	STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny. . . . .	1.50
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols. . . . .	5.00	The Biglow Papers. Second Series. . . . .	1.50	Uncle Tom's Cabin. . . . .	.50
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls. . . . .	5.00	Among my Books. . . . .	2.00	STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols. . . . .	12.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary. . . . .	2.25	My Study Windows. . . . .	2.00	TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols. . . . .	7.50
The World-Priest. . . . .	2.25	LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children. . . . .	.75	The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske. . . . .	5.00
The Tall Student. . . . .	.75	LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times. . . . .	5.00	TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems. . . . .	1.75
BUEHNER'S Force and Matter. . . . .	3.25	LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols. . . . .	5.00	THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol. . . . .	1.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols. . . . .	8.00	MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter. . . . .	1.50	Vanity Fair. . . . .	1.50
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 16 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 3 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol. . . . .	3.00	MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his wife. . . . .	1.50	The Newcomes. . . . .	1.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.) The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions. . . . .	3.00	Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848. . . . .	3.00	Adventures of Philip. . . . .	1.50
CERVANTES' Don Quixote. . . . .	1.50	Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann. . . . .	1.25	Pendennis. . . . .	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.) The Perfect Life. In Two Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing. . . . .	1.50	MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol. . . . .	2.50	The Virginians. . . . .	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse. . . . .	2.00	MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind. . . . .	.75	Edmond, and Lovell the Widower. . . . .	1.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.) Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. . . . .	1.00	MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire. . . . .	1.50	Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. . . . .	1.50
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience. . . . .	1.00	MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols. each. . . . .	9.25	Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. . . . .	1.50
Bally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated. . . . .	1.50	The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols. each. . . . .	2.25	This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. . . . .	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions. . . . .	5.00	The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition. . . . .	2.50	1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. . . . .	1.50
Common-Sense in Religion. . . . .	2.00	The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol. . . . .	2.50	2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. . . . .	1.50
CLARKE (Dr. E. H.) Sex in Education. . . . .	1.25	Representative Government. . . . .	1.50	3. Noels, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. . . . .	1.50
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World. . . . .	.75	Autobiography. . . . .	2.25	4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. . . . .	1.50
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. . . . .	5.00	Memorial Volume. His Life and Works. Three Essays on Religion. . . . .	2.50	5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces. . . . .	1.50
The Religious Demands of the Age. . . . .	.50	MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands. . . . .	1.50	THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shikoku. . . . .	1.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.) The Earthward Pilgrimage. . . . .	1.75	MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species. . . . .	1.75	THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods. . . . .	2.00
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol. . . . .	2.00	MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire. . . . .	2.00	Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. . . . .	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans. . . . .	2.00	ROUSEAU, 2 vols. . . . .	5.00	The Maine Woods. . . . .	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.) The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship. . . . .	2.50	MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories. . . . .	1.50	Cape Cod. . . . .	2.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species. . . . .	2.00	MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series. . . . .	2.50	Lectures. . . . .	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols. . . . .	4.00	The Science of Language. Second Series. . . . .	3.50	A Yankee in Canada. . . . .	2.00
Journal of Researches into the Geographical and Natural History of the Beagle, under the Command of Captain Fitz-Roy, during the Years 1831-4. 3 vols. . . . .	6.00	Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume. . . . .	2.50	A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers. . . . .	2.00
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated. . . . .	6.00	Lectures on the Science of Religion. . . . .	2.00	TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind. . . . .	2.50
DESCARTES (RENE) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences. . . . .	2.25	NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle. . . . .	1.50	Primitive Culture. 2 vols. . . . .	5.00
DICKENS' Child's History of England. . . . .	1.50	Ekkoese from Kentucky. . . . .	1.50	TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer. . . . .	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA) Philosophers and Poets. A Study. . . . .	2.00	NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Phases of Faith. . . . .	4.50	Fragments of Science for Unscientific People. . . . .	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each. . . . .	1.00	The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy. . . . .	2.00	Light and Electricity. . . . .	1.50
Comprising— . . . . .		Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. . . . .	4.25	Hours of Exercise in the Alps. . . . .	1.50
Adam Bede. . . . .		PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion. . . . .	1.50	Heat as a Mode of Motion. . . . .	2.00
Romola. . . . .		Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols. . . . .	4.50	On Sound. . . . .	2.00
The Mill on the Floss. . . . .		Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols. . . . .	3.00	Radiant Heat. . . . .	1.50
Fells Hall. . . . .		Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. . . . .	1.50	Forms of Water. . . . .	1.50
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols. . . . .	3.50	Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. . . . .	1.50	Lectures on Light. . . . .	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols. . . . .	3.50	The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence. . . . .	1.50	Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall. . . . .	.50
Wit and Wisdom of . . . . .	1.25	The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story. . . . .	.80	TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures. . . . .	1.50
The Spanish Gypsy. . . . .	1.50	PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite. . . . .	1.00	Modern Painters and their Paintings. . . . .	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series. . . . .	1.50	PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar. . . . .	1.50	VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each. . . . .	2.00
Essays. Second Series. . . . .	1.50	The Tricky Book. . . . .	1.50	Vols. III, IV, and VI, each. . . . .	2.75
Miscellaneous. . . . .	1.50	Man, Women, and Ghosts. . . . .	1.50	WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden. . . . .	1.50
Representative Men. . . . .	1.50	Hedged In. . . . .	1.50	Saunterings. . . . .	1.50
English Traits. . . . .	1.50	The Silent Partner. . . . .	1.50	Back-Log Studies. . . . .	2.00
Conduct of Life. . . . .	1.50	WHAT TO WEAR? . . . . .	1.00	WEISS (JOHN). American Religion. . . . .	1.50
Poems. With Portrait. . . . .	1.50	PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition. . . . .		Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols. . . . .	6.00
May-day and Other Pieces. . . . .	1.50			WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life. . . . .	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold. . . . .	1.25			Essays and Reviews. . . . .	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold. . . . .	1.25			Character and Characteristic. . . . .	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols. . . . .	6.00			The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth. . . . .	1.50
Society and Solitude. . . . .	1.50			Success and its Conditions. . . . .	1.50
EVANS (E. F., Ph. D.) First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger. . . . .	1.50			Washington and the Revolution. . . . .	.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols. . . . .	5.00			WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life. . . . .	1.50
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion. . . . .	2.00			We Girls: A Home Story. . . . .	1.50
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. . . . .	4.00			Real Folk. . . . .	1.50
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy. . . . .	2.00			The Other Girls. . . . .	1.50
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity. . . . .	1.50			Panics. A volume of Poems. . . . .	1.50
Child's Book of Religion. . . . .	1.00			WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols. . . . .	4.00
Life of Theodore Parker. . . . .	3.00			Child Life. . . . .	3.00
FULMER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memorials by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols. . . . .	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences. . . . .	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol. . . . .	5.00
Selective Antiques. . . . .	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols. . . . .	2.50
Kerman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham. . . . .	1.00
GREG'S (W. E.) Enigmas of Life. . . . .	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments. . . . .	2.00
Creed of Christendom. . . . .	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait. . . . .	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France. . . . .	1.50
Thoughts about Art. . . . .	2.00
The Unknown River. . . . .	0.00
The Intellectual Life. . . . .	2.50
Chapters on Animals. . . . .	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. . . . .	1.00
Child World. Part First. . . . .	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. . . . .
1. Metaphysical Lectures. . . . .	3.50
2. Logical Lectures. . . . .	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol. . . . .	2.00
Twice-Told Tales. . . . .
Mosses from an Old Manse. . . . .
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. . . . .
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. . . . .
The English Note-Books. . . . .
The American Note-Books. . . . .
The French and Italian Note-Books. . . . .
Our Old Home, and Septimius Falcon. . . . .
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers. . . . .	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance. . . . .	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment. . . . .	1.50
Atlantic Essays. . . . .	3.00
Oldport Days. . . . .	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey. . . . .	2.00
Suburban Sketches. . . . .	2.00
Venetian Life. . . . .	2.00
Italian Journeys. . . . .	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance. . . . .	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three". . . . .	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits. . . . .	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life. . . . .	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses. . . . .	1.25
Bits of Travel. . . . .	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature. . . . .	1.25
On the Origin of Species. . . . .	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism. . . . .	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. . . . .	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews. . . . .	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems. . . . .	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen. . . . .	1.50
Songs of Seven. . . . .	3.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skellings. . . . .	1.75
Studies for Stories. . . . .	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series. . . . .	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours. . . . .	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story. . . . .	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures. . . . .	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall. . . . .	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. . . . .	1.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

321 Washington St., Boston

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C.O.D., for examination, all charges paid. No risk. No humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburg, Pa.

CENTENNIAL BUSTS.
Jefferson and Paine.

Copies in plaster, boxed, guaranteed against injury by transportation. Price of each, $50.00. Send orders to S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.
Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAKER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX
for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $5.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,
Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—
THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.50. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THOMAS PAINE:

THE METHOD and VALUE of his RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS.

A LECTURE

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

Price 10 cents, post-paid.

CHAS. M. GREEN,

18 Jacob Street, New York City.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)...$1.50
CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION..... 1.00
STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00
STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS..... 1.00
BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND OTHER DISCOURSES..... 1.00
LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER..... 3.00
THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp., with steel portrait of the author) ... 2.50
THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. Octavo, cloth..... 1.75
Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

253 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

MRS. UNDERWOOD'S NEW BOOK.

HEROINES OF FREE THOUGHT.

Contents:

1. Madame Roland.
2. Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin.
3. Mary W. Godwin Shelley.
4. George Sand.
5. Harriet Martineau.
6. Frances Wright D'Armand.
7. Emma Martin.
8. Margaret R. Chappell Smith.
9. Ernestine L. Rose.
10. Frances Power Cobbe.
11. George Elliot.

BY

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

327 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.75.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 30 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. BANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	.40
FIFTY ".....	.75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a Life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and Life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 5, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 393.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THERE WAS quite a tempest in a teapot over the Sunday question at the Presbyterian General Assembly in Chicago: "The synod and presbytery of Allegheny some time since pronounced, in the case of certain members of the church in Sewickly, Pa., that the fourth commandment and the Presbyterian standards rendered any share in the publication or sale of a Sunday newspaper inconsistent with God's law and with membership of the Presbyterian Church. The assembly have now confirmed this judgment by a nearly unanimous vote, and declared that, if the session of Sewickly does not proceed to discipline its offending members, it must itself be disciplined. What the Presbyterian standards require as to publishers of Monday newspapers, whose work is done chiefly on Sunday, we still remain in ignorance of,—no test case having been made. Dr. Bettinger, pastor of the offending church, pertinently asked if the assembly would extend its condemnation to street-cars and railroads in which some of its members own stock; but the assembly, after a 'personal' discussion, waived the question."

It is quite evident that Judaism, however "reformed" it may be, is not yet ready to sacrifice its claim of being the one and only absolutely true religion. The New York Reformer and Jewish Times, in its issue of May 11, said: "In his sermon last Sunday, the Rev. Dr. John Hall said: 'When the day shall come that Jewish zeal, intelligence, ardor, genius, courage, and enterprise, combined with Jewish knowledge of all law, shall be subsidized to the service of Christ, no tongue can tell what blessedness shall be. Then the millennium shall come with all its brightness, when men shall seek God as now they despise and reject him.' The Jews are not likely to be 'subsidized to the service of Christ' as long as the perpetuity of the religion of Moses remains one of the fundamental doctrines of Judaism. Modifications, arising out of the local, social, and political conditions, may be made and have been made always in the spirit of the code itself; but to suppose that the revelation of Sinai will ever be superseded is to misapprehend the very central idea of that system—is to misinterpret the history and mission of the Jewish race. It is, indeed, to make the marvellous preservation of the Jewish people an impenetrable mystery, a problem without a possible solution."

THE "RISDALE JUDGMENT," which has called out a protest from Dr. Pusey against English decisions on the Church question, is thus explained by the Nation: "The discussion of the relations of Church and State in England is likely to receive a new impulse from the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of the Rev. Charles Ridsdale, who was charged with various ritualistic practices, and appealed to the Privy Council from an adverse decision of the Court of Arches. The tribunal consisted of ten judges, besides four bishops and an archbishop; and as the decision was unanimously agreed to, it may be regarded as the final one with regard to the points involved. Accordingly, no parochial clergyman of the English Church (bishops were not mentioned) can hereafter wear any other vesture than the surplice during the administration of the communion. With reference to facing the east, the decision was a compromise. The opinion was expressed that the clergyman should stand at the north side of the communion-table, facing the south; but not wishing to force a specific direction where none is to be found in the Rubrics, the judges limited their decision to the requirement that the clergyman must so stand that the communicants present may be able 'to see the breaking of the bread and the performance of the other manual acts' necessary; in other words, he must not turn his back to them. The use of wafer-bread and the placing of a crucifix on the screen separating the chancel from the nave of the church are forbidden. The decision is an important one, inasmuch as it determines the position of the Established Church with regard to some matters which have been for a long time in dispute. The course of the extreme Ritualists may now be looked forward to with some interest, as upon it may depend the continuance of the present agitation for disestablishment."

NOBODY into whose hands this number of THE INDEX falls should omit to read, from the first to the last word, Mr. Frothingham's most beautiful and wisely discriminating address on Theodore Parker. We do not think that any one else has expressed so fair and just, so sympathetic and at the same time so conscientiously impartial, an estimate of this great character. It is a very noble tribute to one who was worthy of such tributes as few men are. Integrity in its highest sense, catholicity, outspokenness, manliness of personal character,—these are, in Mr. Frothingham's opinion, the secrets of Parker's persistent hold on the attention of mankind. If we were to add anything to this list of resplendent virtues, it would be a great, deep, and unaffected warm-heartedness, which lit up all his writings with a sunny radiance from within and made "the common people hear him gladly." This is a very different thing from the mere trick of eulogizing "sentiment" and "heart," which one may be an adept in who himself is as devoid of genuine warmth as a cold potato. Parker was no fastidious critic, a cold and cavilling and never satisfied except with the odor of frankincense burned by admirers under his own nose. If he saw what was cruel or false, he blazed out with a splendid, fiery wrath that shrivelled up the offender, while his ordinary mood was that of a wholesome, hearty, inborn kindness which made him love, not only humanity, but men—a distinction with a mighty difference. His "sentiments" were too real and powerful to be merely paraded on State occasions as elegant adornments of his person, and then wrapped up carefully in camphor and laid away for preservation till next time; they were his life, fired his soul to heroic words and deeds, and created great surges of feeling and high purpose in other souls. Here was an element of permanent power which ought to be included among the others. It helped largely to make the man whom Mr. Frothingham so skilfully and so admirably portrays.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. F. HURLBUT,.....Adams, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. H. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. HAYAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE BEAVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....The Hague, Holland.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIS,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Eitherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBES,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAWYARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER,.....Quincy, Ill.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The Claim of Theodore Parker.

AN ADDRESS.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

On the thirteenth of May, 1860, Theodore Parker was buried in the Protestant burial-ground, hard by the Pinti Gate, in the Italian city of Florence. The services were extremely simple,—the reading of the Beatitudes by an old friend; that was all. There was no address, no prayer, no idle, sentimental word of eulogium. It was a festival,—the "day of ascension"; and the streets along which the little procession passed were gay with flags and merry throngs of people in their spring attire. The deep-hearted friends of the departed prophet hailed the omen as one of promise for his future. Scarcely was the body cold in the ground when the Civil War broke out which for four years absorbed every thought of the American people. Twelve years of doubtful peace have barely sufficed to "trammel up the consequences" of the convulsion. All this time Parker has been sleeping; his memory tenderly cherished by his friends, his influence deep in a few centres, his name spoken with reverence among earnest people, but his books piled upon publishing shelves, and his works unknown to the people for whom he gave his life. It was believed, even by many of his warmest admirers, that his day was over; but now, at the moment when the country, recovering from the effects of its deadly conflict, is entering on a new career of peace, the name of Parker is heard again. It is thought worth while in some quarters to assail, depreciate, calumniate him; in other quarters, it is thought worth while to defend, vindicate, and interpret him. His beliefs and his disbeliefs are made subjects of discussion; his position is readjusted. The old enemies are confronted by new friends; and the ancient battle between Christianity and Rationalism seems likely to rage again around the standard which he set up. It may not be thought untimely, therefore, to offer some thoughts in explanation of the hold he still has on the minds of men.

To what does this man owe his resurrection and his present power? Why does he survive? Why are people still interested in him and his ideas? I cannot think the revival of sympathy due to the ideas so much as to the man. The ideas are no longer new or startling. The man is more original and startling now than he was in his lifetime; for he lived in the most earnest period of our moral history, when one form of his greatness was shared by many heroic men and women. We live in an age of lassitude, when heroism is discredited, and truthfulness is unpopular. The school of theology to which he belonged is not, probably, on the increase, the forms of thought having changed much in fifteen years; the school of philosophy, of which he was a prominent champion and an eloquent interpreter, is, on the whole, at present losing ground in the intellectual world. The particular movement which he inaugurated and led has in great measure spent its force, and is traceable now as an indefinite influence rather than as a clear current. His writings are interesting more from their exuberance and glow than from their originality of thought. In the multiplicity of books, his will be likely to receive less notice than they deserve.

The new interest in Parker can hardly be owing to his disbeliefs. They were never of primary importance in his own estimation, but, however pronounced, were altogether secondary; and now similar disbeliefs are so common as scarcely to attract attention. He did indeed reject the doctrines peculiar to the Christian system, rejected them explicitly and vehemently. But so did the large, respectable, and intelligent sect to which he belonged; so did multitudes who were not of this sect; so do much greater multitudes now,—thinking men, going much farther than he did, and resting in conclusions which he dreaded. In his own city and generation he made himself conspicuous by the energy of his assaults on what he considered the abominations of the popular theology, and the practical evils to which it led. But this immediate, temporary prominence will not explain the fact, that now he is a power. It is clearly seen, at present, that the doctrines of trinity, fall, incarnation, atonement, salvation, judgment, are parts of a consistent scheme professed by Christendom, but of no concern to simply philosophical minds which, outside of Christendom, deal with speculative questions on their rational merits. These are disposed to leave the Christian system to itself, and to substitute for the policy of assault the policy of neglect. The fierce charges that Parker led against dogmatism and superstition are discontinued. The flanking manœuvre is more in vogue. His method looks, to our eyes, rude, unskilful, mechanical, conducted with vast learning and ample ability, but proper to a more primitive warfare than is practiced in the modern world of intellect. The Prince Ruperts have given place to the Von Moltkes; and it is highly improbable that their tactics will ever be revived.

Neither could the sudden rejuvenescence of Parker be ascribed to his beliefs; for his beliefs are not in the current of living mind to-day. They that hold them hold them, in large measure, on other grounds than his; and such as do not hold them will not, in large numbers, be persuaded by the arguments that were of greatest weight to his own mind. The arena of argument has shifted its locality. The believers in God and immortality rely on other evidence than that by which he was satisfied, and hold their faith in other forms than commended themselves to him. To say that he was a believer in the cardinal truths of religion is to say nothing; he was a passionate believer in them; he believed clearly, positively, and with all his soul. Of such believers, there were not many in his day; they are very rare in ours. The annals of Christendom contain but few names so bright as his; he was an apostle in fervor of conviction. One wonders, in reading his discourses on Theism and Atheism how he could have spoken as he did,—how he could have described the atheist in language so sad, so bitterly discouraging; how he could have described him as sending out his intellect, and receiving nothing from it when it came back,—"Nothing but the reflection of its own littleness mirrored on the surfaces of things"; as sending out his moral sense, and seeing it return "silent, alone, and empty"; as sending out his affections, and hearing from them the announcement, that "there is naught to love"; that he may love "gravitation, cohesion, the primary qualities of matter," but that "naught else abides"; as sending out his soul, and again being horrified by the message that "the universe is a disorder, and man a confusion." His belief in personal immortality was noble, was inspiring, simply and grandly human; but we marvel that he could have laid on it the stress he did, saying: "If to-morrow I am to perish utterly, then I shall only take counsel for to-day, and ask for qualities which last no longer. My fathers will be to me only as the ground out of which my head-corn is grown, dead. They are like the rotten mould of earth; their memory of small concern to me. Posterity: I shall care nothing for the future generations of mankind. I am one atom in the trunk of a tree, and care nothing for the roots below, or the branch above. I shall sow such seed as will bear harvest to-day; I shall know no higher law. Passion enacts my statutes to-day; to-morrow ambition reverses the statutes; and these are my sole legislators. Morality will vanish; expediency will take its place." The enthusiasm that prompts such declarations is worthy of all respect and sympathy; but the doctrine will not commend itself to the deepest-hearted men and women of this generation; and the suggestion it offers to the trifling and careless, that unbelief in personal immortality logically consorts with sensuality, will be of sinister omen and dangerous consequence. To tell unbelievers, who are many, that their unbelief conducts inevitably to beastliness is a terrible incentive to beastliness in those whose humanity needs all the support that can be given. The wise preachers of this generation are using much effort to make it appear that morality is not dependent on belief in a future life.

Mr. Parker's faith in the essential rectitude of human nature need not be insisted on. It was his great faith,—the soul of all his faith; out of it his whole system grew. This explains his enthusiasm for Jesus, as the consummate Man—so eloquently expressed in the well-known sonnet:—

Oh thou great Friend to all the sons of men,
 Who once appeared in humble guise below,
 Sin to rebuke, to break the captive's chain,
 And call thy brethren forth from want and woe,
 We look to thee; thy truth is still the light
 Which guides the nations, groping on their way,
 Stumbling and falling in disastrous night,
 Yet hoping ever for the perfect day.
 Yes, thou art still the life; thou art the way
 The holiest know,—light, life, and way of heaven!
 And they who dearest hope and deepest pray,
 Tell by the light, life, way, which thou hast given.

The charge of infidelity cannot rest on the man who had such faith as this. We do not look for such faith among infidels. It is rarely found among believers. Yet it is not this faith which makes Parker's memory dear to living men; for of those who hold his memory dear, the greater part, we must believe, do not share his enthusiasm for the Man of Nazareth, of whom they profess to know much less than he felt persuaded of; and they who hold his memory in dread entertain views of Jesus quite incompatible with such as his.

Parker's power over the present generation is certainly not due to his faith in prayer, or in the personal providence of the Infinite God; who, having made the world in perfect wisdom, from perfect materials, for perfect ends, watches over it, and makes sure that the end is accomplished. Such a conception of providence is becoming less and less acceptable to thinking man. The believers in providence do not hold it in this guise any more, but, by the aid of science, are forming new ideas of the living universe. The literal theism of Parker is going out of fashion, both as a system to bring unbelievers to conviction, and as a system to furnish believers with consolation. The atheist does not respect it; the theist does not find repose in it as of yore. The school that retains it is becoming smaller year by year.

The more remarkable is the influence which this man still possesses,—the charm he still exerts. Had his thoughts been greatly in advance of his time, it would be merely a thing of course that his power should be recognized more after his death than during his life; but that this should be truly said of a man whose specific thoughts have been distanced in less than twenty years is a remarkable circumstance. There must have been something more than the thoughts; something behind them, or at the centre of them, which outlives them, is untarnished by their decay, is uncompromised by their imperfection; something in the man himself, independent of his views; something which the peculiarity of his views merely served to illustrate; some human quality, which finds its way to the heart of human beings. It is our business now to inquire what this may have been. It presents itself to me in three aspects.

1. The first is that of INTEGRITY. Theodore Parker was a man of integrity. By this I do not mean of mercantile integrity. That he paid his debts and kept his word,—that may be assumed; for it has never, even by his worst enemies, been called in question. He was a man of integrity in a far deeper sense than this. He was a whole man, sound and complete, in the sense of being perfectly at one with himself, mind, heart, will, according well, and "making one music." There was no break between his thought and his impulse; none between his impulse and his determination; none between his determination and his deed.

It is not easy at a glance to apprehend the full significance of this saying. There have been men before, there are men now, in all communions, who faithfully live up to their idea. The notion that the churches are full of hypocrites, that there is a systematic, customary, deliberate, and accepted divorce between creed and conduct, between professors and preachers of religion, finds no countenance on this platform. Talk like that belongs to the cant of anti-religionists, who think more of a chance to make a stab at religion than they do of an opportunity to disavow of truth. In all churches, as I believe, there is a fair amount of sincere fidelity to conviction. But in these cases there is usually an expression of effort which is painful and dispiriting. The believer works himself up to the point of consistency; toils, prays, denies himself; confesses to a sharp conflict between his desires and his duties; clips and reduces certain parts of his intellectual system. The faith is forever coming in with power and rebuke, forbidding this, prescribing that. The obedience is not glad or entire, but partial and austere. The religious life is called a battle; the religious character is the result of discipline. With Parker, it was precisely and emphatically the reverse. His whole being responded joyfully to his faith. His loyalty was glad. He loved obedience; to him, service was freedom. He had no inclination to go in a direction other than that indicated by his thought. The path he preferred to tread was the path of duty; his religious experience was his happy experience. The thought of God warmed him; the thought of immortality made him leap and sing; the conviction of Providence supplied him with perpetual motive for praise. Where his mind went, his whole being went also, without hesitation or halt.

Nor is this all. The correspondence between thought and life in this man was rational. The thought animated and controlled the life by reason of the natural relation they bore to each other. The thought was not a tradition, not an inheritance from church or ancestry, not a system imparted at a single stroke, in a moment of conversion, but the result of personal feeling, of deep reflection and study. It came to him as he read and pondered, as he walked and talked. Thus accepted, it was heartily accepted. It became the basis of his existence,—the mind of his mind; therefore the heart of his heart, the soul of his soul. He used to say of himself, that he loved ease and elegance; but, when the new ideas had fairly taken possession of his mind, the rest of his being fell into accord with them. It may be said of him, that he was all of a piece. He was not a man of several lands and climates, the part of him that was alive on Sunday being dead or torpid all the remainder of the week; the part of him that was at home in Jerusalem being a stranger and a pilgrim in Boston; the part of him that lived in the library having no acquaintance with the part of him that walked the street. In public and private, at home and abroad, he was the same person, equally grave, equally gay, equally earnest, always bearing his faith with him,—a faith so cheering and ennobling that it permitted no moment of discouragement or fear, and consecrated every moment to kindness and courage.

Such utter sincerity carries with it an immense power. It is nothing less than the projection of the whole man upon the circle in which he moves and acts. It multiplies his energies, and drives his thoughts in with the whole force of nature. In the judgment of many, this is the secret of Mr. Moody's influence,—a man with a narrow, irrational, repulsive creed, against which human nature rebels; an ignorant man, illogical, rude, he nevertheless impresses, awes, fascinates people who are out of sympathy with his ideas, and even gains the respect of people who regard his ideas by themselves with abhorrence. Even philosophers of the scientific school, while dissenting all through from the opinions advanced by the "revivalists," found themselves drawn to them by the spirit of earnestness which animated their conduct. Men who back up their words by corresponding lives are sure of an audience and of a following. The creed that is fortified by character wins the battle, though it be narrow, stupid, dehumanizing. The creed that is not fortified by character loses the battle, though it be wide, liberal, encouraging, humane. For thoughts alone pass over the surface of society like the wind, softly breathing or fiercely blowing; but thoughts sustained and animated by consistent character have the power of sunshine and rain to quicken the germs and nourish the roots of life. If the small, puny, ghastly system propelled by such force will go so far and achieve so much, it is not at all surprising that a faith like Parker's, so wholesome and encouraging to every element of human nature, sustained as it was by a life entirely in accord with it, should keep alive his memory and his power years after his death, and should cause his influence to revive even on soil which civil war had soaked in blood and sown with cannon shot. So whole-hearted a man as he was is not seen once in a century. A distinguished Orthodox preacher, announcing the fact that a well-known rationalist minister was to lecture in his town, said that some men would do more with a rusty old jack-knife than others would with a whole chest of tools. Parker would have carved his monument with a jack-knife, had he possessed no more effectual instrument; but, having a whole set of tools, he could not fail to build one more enduring than brass.

2. Another point of importance to an estimate of his continued influence is the catholicity of his mind, the receptiveness of other men's ideas. He was a universal reader and listener. All thinkers of all schools laid their books on his table; and he read them with a candor that was, as far as possible, without prejudice. It was a belief of his that the teacher in religion should make himself acquainted with every school of thought, and be willing to learn from all. To be the preacher of a traditional system, the champion of a fixed and unalterable creed, was, in his judgment, an infidelity to the position he occupied, a repudiation of the most sacred vow he made.

To appreciate the moral power of this view, its originality must be clearly understood. To say that it is not the custom of preachers to include in their reading other books than those that support their own opinions is to say what amounts to nothing. It is not putting the case too strongly, to affirm that many teachers make it a rule, a principle, to read nothing but what maintains the system they teach. The writings of critics, opponents, or even dissenters are not opened; or, if opened, are read with eyes so keen to detect faults, so dull to perceive merits, that no justice is done them,—as, indeed, no justice can be done when the whole mind is diseased by prejudice. The dogmatical training of the sects disqualifies the intelligence for weighing arguments and making allowance for opinions. The assumption which dogmatism starts with, that the system it professes is the true one, and that all others are false; that its truth and their falsity are both certified by supernatural authority; that therefore it is commanded to believe that the books that support the truth shall be studied; that the books which oppose the truth shall be banished as godless and detestable,—this primary assumption, I say, makes it morally as well as intellectually impossible to read widely or candidly. The conscience is committed to disingenuousness and dishonesty. Ignorance becomes a duty of religion; superciliousness and fraud are acts of piety. To condemn books they have never read; to denounce opinions they have never tried to understand; to malign men they have never taken pains to become acquainted with, is the accepted, approved, consecrated method of "religious" papers. So rare is the example of intellectual candor on the part of the "religious" platform and press, that when an instance of it occurs, it calls forth general remark.

This is one reason of the intelligent distrust of preachers and teachers. This explains the charge of cowardice, meanness, hypocrisy, that is so frequently brought against them,—a charge that is abundantly well supported by a consideration of individual instances, but that loses its point when it is recognized that the individuals are victims of an insane principle, which makes them incapable of reading or understanding or weighing opinions other than their own. Their meanness, therefore, they are not wholly chargeable with, any more than for their feebleness. At heart, after all, intelligent people respect candor and courage; at heart, they distrust narrowness and prejudice, and characterize it as fear. The open-minded teacher, who is known as a lover of truth more than as a lover of his creed, gains the confidence and wins the ear of mankind. The teacher who, knowing what others believe, and weighing it, still has persuasions of his own, will find a multitude ready to hear his word. Though his ideas be new, startling, and unpopular, they will obtain recognition at last.

Theodore Parker was one of these; he did his best to understand the system he controverted; he considered all sides; he knew what opposing schools held, and the grounds which opposing preachers occupied. The strongest books were familiar to him, not the weakest. It is not asserted nor suggested, that in trying to understand the system he controverted he was always successful. There were systems or points in systems he could not appreciate. Every mind has its limitations; every generation has its intellectual boundaries which may not be passed over except by men of transcendent genius; and such it is not claimed that Theodore Parker was. There were fields of thought he could gaze on from a distance, but could not explore or traverse. That he had the truth, or more than a small fraction of the truth, is not affirmed. That he loved the truth more than he did his opinion or the opinions of his sect is affirmed. This love of truth attracted to him multitudes of ingenious minds, and will continue to attract multitudes more. His "system" may pass away; indeed it has already begun to decline: but the open-mindedness of the man preserves its charm and its power, and will preserve them both, while it is so rare a quality in the professors of religious truth. Nay, we shall be prepared to find Parker's popularity increase on this account; for open-mindedness in religious teachers has not kept pace with open-mindedness in other departments of human speculation. When men venture to read newspapers and magazines, to listen to lecturers on unfamiliar subjects, and to think it practicable to learn something outside of their inherited tradition, the stubborn bibliolatriy of the pulpit and religious press is more offensive than it was in other days; and a man like Parker, who was not afraid to think, has a claim on homage.

It may be said that Parker owed his breadth of reading to his enormous reading power, which made easy to him what to others is impossible; and to his prodigious memory, which retained whatever it received. But the disposition to use the power,—whence came that? Is the love of truth always corresponding to the power to obtain it? Experience often shows that the two are not in concurrence at all. That Parker's reading power and retentive memory were a great advantage to him will not be denied; it enabled him to illustrate in a very complete manner that love of truth which was his characteristic. But had this singular gift of reciprocity and retention been no greater than ordinary, the love of truth being the same, the few books would have justified the spirit which the many illuminated; the limited reading would have exhibited the man. He who can candidly read the single volume of his opponent shows his love of truth as well, though not as conspicuously, as he that can candidly read a hundred; for the love of truth is a quality, the intrinsic virtue whereof is in no wise dependent on quantity or bulk.

3. Let me name one feature more of Theodore Parker's character which, in my judgment, goes far to explain his popularity; I refer to his out-spokenness. He had no concealments, no disguises. He never faltered or compromised. He was no tactician in the pulpit or out of it. Having spared no effort to arrive at the truth, through study and reflection, he communicated it with all simplicity and directness. It seemed to be his endeavor to penetrate beneath all layers of qualification, to avoid all possible misunderstanding, to dispense with all neutral tints, and present his thought,—his whole thought,—so that the least instructed and least prepared mind might apprehend his meaning. He never was tempted to imitate the example of the preacher who made it a point to have in every sermon at least one sentence that no one in the congregation could understand. The charge so frequently made against preachers, that they keep back their deepest thoughts, was never, to my knowledge, in mature life brought against him. So outspoken was he, that it was very difficult for him to understand the reserved, reticent men, who from mental indecision, halfness of conviction or knowledge, constitutional prudence or an overpoise of practical wisdom, withheld from the public their private misgiving or persuasion. Perhaps the nearest he ever came to injustice was when he spoke of men whom otherwise he loved and honored who, as he knew well, entertained in the study opinions they did not promulgate to the world. They thought as he did, yet they turned away from him; they agreed with him, yet joined the company of his persecutors. He could not understand how men could send their minds onward in advance of their sentiments, and make pleasure excursions into territory they were not prepared to occupy. The responsibility that rested on the public teacher made imperative upon him the duty of establishing an absolute confidence between him and those who came to him for instruction. To withhold from them the inmost contents of his mind was disingenuous. To conceal them was deceitful. To deny them was dastardly. His hearers might be sure that in listening to him they listened to the honest thought of an honest man. The opinions expressed might be unpopular, even obnoxious; that was to his mind a reason for giving them utterance. The doubt, the disbelief, came to his lips, not as gladly, but as sincerely as the faith and hope. "My friends!" he said in a discourse on Immortal Life, "I look at things as they are,—at least strive to do so; and, if I had come to the conclusion that man was mortal only, I should proclaim my conscientious conclusion strongly and clearly and right out. If I thought in my heart that there was no God, why, then, I should proclaim that odious conviction." And so he would have done; for deep as his love of truth was his faith in truthfulness.

The wisdom of this course is not at present under discussion. There is another side to the question of outspokenness. There is something to be said for the policy of waiting and withholding, lest the word may be hasty and ill-advised. An absolute faith in the truth is quite compatible with distrust of one's own success in finding it; nay, hesitancy in speaking one's whole mind may spring from respect for the entire truth; but it admits of no doubt that the frank, outspoken nature is the most attractive and the most popular. At all events, the common suspicion of craftiness and timidity cannot attach to them. Their frankness alone is a power. But, where frankness is accompanied by ability, the power is something tremendous.

On the whole, then, I should say that manliness was Theodore Parker's crowning quality and supreme claim to distinction. That he had other most remarkable gifts is conceded as a matter of course. Everybody knows that he had. But this was his prime characteristic. The other gifts he had in spite of himself,—his thirst for knowledge, his love of books, his all-devouring industry, his unfailing memory, his natural eloquence or power of affluent expression; but character men regard as less a gift than an acquisition,—the fruit of aspiration, resolve, fidelity,—the product of daily, nay, of hourly, endeavor. Hence it is that intellectual greatness does not impress the multitude; even genius has but a limited sway over the masses of mankind. But character goes to the roots of life. In fact, Theodore Parker's eminence as a man of thought and expression in words has concealed from the world at large the intrinsic quality of the person. His reputation as theologian, preacher, controversialist, has concealed the real greatness which comes to light as the dust of controversy subsides. The very causes in which the heroism of his manliness was displayed,—as, for example, the anti-slavery cause, to which he devoted so much of his time and vitality,—rendered inconspicuous the contribution he made to the treasury of humane feeling. Now that that great conflict is over, now that its agitations have ceased and its heats have cooled, the character of which this conflict revealed but a portion, the career in which this long agony was but an episode, loom up into distinctness.

The greatest of all human achievements is a manly character,—guileless, sincere, and brave; that he by all admission possessed. He earned it; he prayed for it, meditated for it, worked for it,—how hard, his private journals show. And for this he will not be forgotten. For this he will be remembered as one of the benefactors, one of the emancipators, of his kind.

A FRENCH DOCTRESS ON DOCTRESSES.

I have no intention to plunge into the controversy going on in London on the desirability or otherwise of ladies taking medical degrees. Personally, I am for letting individual women be a law unto themselves. They are the best judges of the path they should follow in avoiding a descent into the work-house, or in escaping from the limbo for the female mind, which our tea-drinking civilization has created. What I propose to do is, to give the confessions I have extracted from a married lady of good family, blameless life, and very peculiar experiences. She goes into the best society. She understands its shibboleth, and knows how to practice it; but her conformity proceeds from a wish to avoid friction. I have met her at most of the Embassies, at the houses of the most reputed authors, at Thiers', Victor Hugo's, Gambetta's; and I know that she has a footing in the noble Faubourg. Her husband is engaged in the editorship of a journal. He wanted assistance, and she thought that, being gifted with a facile pen, she might as well assist him. In helping him in his work, she perceived she had not a sufficiently rich stock of brain furniture, though of book knowledge she had early acquired a larger store than most girls, or indeed young men. Besides, she had seriously studied pictorial art, which, if it did not make her a painter, taught her to observe accurately, and to seek for beauty elsewhere than in the creations of M. Worth. My friend succeeded fairly in her newspaper work. But she was dissatisfied with what she did. Her "copy" she condemned as spindleshanked; as lean kine that was devouring all the fat kine, bred of years passed in youth in a fine old library, and in contemplation in a manor house beyond the reach of railways. She felt she needed to study life in its bright and sunny sides; in its splendor and its profound misery. The fairy tales of science were a sealed book to her, and she quietly set before her to open them. To this end she has, without being a doctress, walked the French hospitals. She gets French medical men—professors and savants for the greater part—to introduce her as a colleague. Lecturers and demonstrators wink at the white lie. It saves appearances, and that is all they want. Gambetta has opened to her Belleville and the Red country in the south of France. Citizens in the eccentric quarters of Paris receive her in an open-hearted way; and, perhaps, she may hereafter render them the service of rectifying the impression the so-called realism of M. Zola is creating.

Appropos of the decision of the Convocation of the London University, I said to her last night, "Do you think, my dear lady, that it unsexes women to send them in among medical students?" "Look at me," she answered, standing up as she spoke, "and judge." With a good conscience, I might have paid her a compliment when I accepted her challenge, and scanned her from head to foot. A delightful, plump, good-tempered little being she was. There was something in her eye which said, "I accept all the social fictions going, just for what they are worth. But I am enchanted to meet with somebody who does not overvalue them. Pray, if you are a knowing augur, treat me as another." "What sculptor has furnished you, madam, with your dimpled hands?" I demanded, as a step towards extracting a confession. "If I knew, I should decline to tell you," she replied. "I dislike beating about the bush. Let us return to your first question. You want to know if I think it unsexes females to send them in among medical students?" I nodded assent. "I never," she said, "heard that people complained of trained hospital nurses and sisters of charity being unsexed. Yet the latter led a very abnormal sort of existence. There are two ways of unsexed women. One I need not mention. The other is to send them to work in factories, which the world is willing enough to do. You may alter their manner and their social ideal. The alteration will be unpleasant to the generation, which is sinking into its grave; but it will suit the one that is rising into life. I know old gentlemen, who think architecture has gone to the dogs, because the Queen did not repeat the Brighton Pavilion at Osborne and Balmoral. Young ladies being doctresses, and young gentlemen medical students, do not prevent affairs of the heart springing up between them. In my walks round the hospital wards, I have observed symptoms of these affairs. Human nature is the same everywhere. An honest attachment makes a young man bashful, be he a sawbones or a harvest-reaper, and a young woman reserved, no matter how high or how humble her rank. It also impels the swain, or the medical student, to brush his hair, and indulge in ablutions. The worst corruptors are hoary-headed sinners. But you will admit that professors and visiting surgeons and doctors in hospitals are not to be dubbed with this epithet. On the whole, the male students have benefited by finding a class of young female friends superior to those whom they were in the habit of making their temporary companions in the Quartier Latin. There are more than seventy foreign ladies engaged in the study of medicine in Paris. Three-fourths are English and Americans; the rest are Swiss and Russian. It is a pleasure to see how neatly and sensibly they are dressed. Their manners are ladylike, and their conduct good. It sobers youth to be thrown suddenly on the sea of life. The feeling that the eyes of the police, the professors, and the newspaper reporters are upon them, checks the youthful spirits of the studentesses who hang well together. Their standard of morality is not, in the main, in conformity with that of a certain Aunt Tabitha, who has become the English type of genteel old maidenhood. Not that they behave themselves worse than that strait-laced lady; but they are less exacting of rigid virtue in others. A pretty studentess came to grief for believing a young Frenchman would marry her as soon as he was old enough to serve those disrespectful citations called actes respectueuses on his parents. Her relations at home knew nothing of her misfortune. You will jump, I dare say, to the conclusion, that her fellow-studentesses anonymously apprised them of it. They did nothing of the sort. They met to pass a vote of blame on the erring sister, who, if she did not respect herself, should have respected her flag. But it was also resolved that a subscription should be raised to pay debts she had in good faith contracted, and to send her to Zurich, where nobody knew her; there she graduated. On obtaining her diploma, she was encouraged by a Russian lady of rank to settle in Moscow, and she is now the partner of a German doctor, and at the head of a brisk practice. Women brought up in the Greek Church like to be attended in illness by physicians of their own sex."

All this was new to me. But what I chiefly wanted was a personal confession. I pleaded guilty to being a knowing augur, and begged to be accepted in this character. "Question me," said my fair friend, "and I shall answer frankly." Thus encouraged, I asked her to descend into the depths of her moral consciousness, and tell me how her inner woman was affected by her curious experiences. "I breathe more freely because of them," "Does the racket you undergo, and do the painful scenes you must witness, recoil disadvantageously upon you? Has your grain become coarser, or your moral sense blunter?" "I have simply become sublimated," cried the philosopher in petticoats. "I have come to have an immense pity for the human race, and most of all for my half-empowered sisters. I have learned that no weed is a weed to the artist; no trash trash to the chemist, and nothing unworthy of investigation to the thinker. What the exact drift of the grim comedy called human life is I cannot answer. But it seems to me that the path of many to a higher state lies through putrid fermentation,—a notion which teaches me to be tolerant where formerly I would have flung stones. As to racket there is none. I get up early when I want to attend a clinical lecture. The day previously a rendezvous is made with a doctor connected with the hospital service. If the omnibus drops me too soon, I wait in a café until the appointed time, reading the morning papers and sipping a demi tasse. There is no mystery in anything I do, and nobody is shocked at it. But, I think it well to tell you that I eschew intimate acquaintance with narrow-minded persons, who object to women living out their own lives. In the hospital I meet the greatest lights of science, who receive me in the double quality of a colleague and a femme du monde. They are aux petits soins, and I impose upon myself the obligation never to get in their way. Moreover, I stay away when there are cases which they would be embarrassed to treat in my presence." "And how do you dress," I asked, "in your scientific matinées?" "In black silk from top to toe." "Do you forswear the condiment of a patch of color somewhere?" "Why, no. A bright bow or a flower detaching itself from the dark mass is an ocular boon to the patients. My hospital bonnet is a perfect beauty." "And your house, does it go to the dogs?" "No, nor to the cats either. Why should it? I am as much at home as most women of my age and rank. Instead of going to shop, and to pay formal visits, I go to where my tastes lead me. Returning, I pass through a market, where I study still life, prices, and the picturesque world of the Halles. I know by heart the eccentric quarters. The more I see of Paris, the more I feel its seductive loveliness. My chief grievance is, that I am not at liberty to ride through the city in the early morning on the top of an omnibus. That is the time it is best worth seeing. You then make the acquaintance of the vrai peuple Parisien, at once the most creative, destructive, amiable, ingenious, and ferocious in the whole world." If the above is not set down in the exact order in which it was given, the confession is not the less genuine. I wish I could forward a photo. of the learned lady who made it to the Convocation of the London University.—Truth (London), May 17.

ONE OF OUR ANCESTORS, "PONGO."

A distinguished personage, whose arrival here on a visit is awaited with considerable curiosity by the public and with great interest by Mr. Darwin's friends and enemies, is just now receiving innumerable calls from his large circle of friends in Berlin. He is called "Pongo," and is the most interesting result of a Prussian scientific expedition into the interior of Africa. When first he was taken to Berlin a special banquet was given in his honor, and he at once became the pet of fashionable and educated people there. We shall probably welcome him as warmly here, for his advent will be regarded as a brilliant addition to the lions of the season.

An account of his habits, furnished by a correspondent in the Prussian capital who is on terms of great intimacy with him, will, I think, interest the readers of the World. "Pongo" is now, the writer believes, "nearly three years old, and he is about three feet high. His body is covered with soft, silky hair, mixed with gray, and reddish on the head. He has a powerful form, muscular arms, smooth, polished black face, with well-shaped ears, and a large, sharp, and malicious eye, which gives him a strikingly human appearance. When one has the pleasure, as I had this week, of spending a morning with him in his apartment, he strikes you—after having got over the slight feeling of disappointment which is produced by the absence of any bridge to his nose—as being singularly like a very amusing, playful, and good-natured negro boy, rather awkward in some of his gestures, and in his mode of progression sometimes distinctly apelike. As he sits, looking solemnly round him, he appears to be thinking of what the next joke shall be, until presently something in your gestures or voice pleases him, and then suddenly he claps his hands together and nods with an air of great delight. He is very sociable, and distinguishes young from old, and male from female visitors. He is exceedingly attached to the society of children of two or three years old, plays about with them as though recognizing them as playfellows of his own age, chases them round the cage, allows them to pull him about, drag him by the leg and roll him over and over, swings with them on the trapeze, kisses them if they will allow him, and permits them to take every kind of liberty with him, without making any unfair use of his superior strength. With older children he seems to understand that he may be more rough, and, when he is racing about with them, he slyly upsets a chair and takes the opportunity of giving them friendly boxes on the ear. When ladies visit him in his large cage, which is suitably furnished with sofas, chairs, and table, trapeze, and all kinds of gymnastic appliances, they have nothing to fear, except from his somewhat importunate amiability. He is particularly delighted if they take him up in their arms; he embraces them and leans his head against their shoulders with a grateful and gratified air; he is by no means willing to be set down again. The Berlin aquarium, in which he now holds court, is rich in varieties of the larger monkeys, and when he goes into the monkey's cage he rules there supreme. Even the chimpanzee, who resembles very much, in his clever, human ways, an old favorite of London at the Zoological Gardens, treats him as distinctly his superior. The gorilla, however, appears to recognize the chimpanzee as nearly his equal, chooses him almost exclusively for his playmate, and bestows friendly, but rather rough, caresses on him. He is fond of getting hold of the chimpanzee, keeping him down and rolling over him on the ground. Sometimes Tschego manages to slip from under him, and then Pongo sprawls awkwardly on the floor on both hands, and looks up with an expression of accepted defeat. He walks on the soles of his feet, leaning at the same time on the outside of the hand, but he turns out his toes far more than the chimpanzee, and he carries his head more grandly erect, this seeming to be the mark of high social standing. When in high spirits he has a way of showing the tip of his red tongue, which makes his black face look all the more like that of a negro boy. His mode of life is as human as are all his ways. He sleeps on a mattress rolled in a rug, and at about eight o'clock in the morning he rises in his bed, sits up, yawns, scratches himself, and remains in a sleepy, listless condition till he has taken his milk, which he drinks out of a tumbler. He is now wide awake, and leaves his bed and looks about in the room for something to play with, and perhaps, if he is allowed, to destroy, for he is as mischievous as any child or as any monkey. Then he looks out of the window, clasps his hands, and, for want of some more suitable companionship, begins to play with his keeper. This man must be continually in attendance on him; he does not allow himself to be left alone for a single moment. If he finds himself alone, he utters the shrillest cries until he regains the society of man. At nine o'clock the gorilla is tubbed, an operation in which he takes the greatest delight, expressing his approval in bass notes, which, perhaps, it will be impolite to call grunting. He takes his meals at the usual German hours. For breakfast he has sausages, preserved meat, cheese, and the favorite Berlin white beer. It is extremely funny to see him try to hold the glass with his fat, short fingers, while he is assisting himself with his feet. He is fond of fruit, which he eats with the most gentlemanly deliberation, carefully removing the stone when eating cherries or other fruit of the kind. At one o'clock the keeper's wife brings him his lunch, and he seems to possess so punctual an internal monitor of the time that this should be brought, that he is always extremely impatient if it is not there to the minute, and always goes down to the passage to look for it when he hears the bell ring. He begins by looking into the glasses and tries to steal something out of them, whereupon he usually has his ears boxed, and then the meal begins, consisting of gravy soup, rice or vegetables boiled with meat, etc. Sometimes it finishes up by a most welcome slice of roast chicken; this is his great treat. The keeper's wife is mistress of the ceremonies, and sees that he behaves himself with propriety. Under her chastening eye he is careful to use his spoon respectfully. After his meal, however, he wants a siesta, like all other inhabitants of tropical climates. After a sleep of about an hour or an hour and a half, he is ready for more play. In the afternoon he has some fruits, and in the evening tea or milk, and bread and butter. He goes to bed at nine o'clock, lying down on his mattress to be wrapped up in the woollen blanket. He always insists, however, on his keeper sitting by him till he is asleep, which soon comes to him. He prefers, however, being allowed to sleep with the keeper, and then he puts his arm round his keeper's neck and leans his head against him. He sleeps uninterruptedly all night. In this way of life he has lived and thriven, until he has increased in weight some thirty-seven pounds. A short time ago he fell ill with bronchitis. He is a very restless and impatient invalid, and seemed utterly wretched and far from amiable in temper. Many doctors assembled round him every day. He was treated with quinine and Ems water, and a uniform, moist temperature was kept up in the room. Now, however, he has completely recovered. Great anxiety was manifested by the people of Berlin during his illness, and more than a hundred cards a day were left upon him. He may be seen now in the highest state of caprice and enjoyment. He is very much attached to his keeper, and has a great respect for Dr. Hermes, the doctor of the aquarium, whom he treats always with marked consideration, and whose boy is one of his favorite playfellows. I know nothing more human than to see him having an elaborate romp with this boy, running round the table after him, skipping along the shelves, hiding himself under the table, upsetting chairs, and ultimately allowing himself to be caught, and going through all his performances of walking up a ladder, sliding down the sides of it, and tumbling over head-and-heels, lying on the floor and rapping with delight, and ultimately jumping into the trapeze alongside of his little playfellow, putting his arms round his neck, and sitting there with his cap on his head and a pipe in his mouth, swinging backward and forward in amicable enjoyment with the son of his doctor."—London corres. of N. Y. World.

JOSEPH COOK AND JONATHAN EDWARDS.

On Friday evening, June 1st, one of the written questions proposed to Rev. Joseph Cook was this:—"Would you advise ministers to preach such sermons as Jonathan Edwards' 'Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God'?"

Mr. Cook's reply was, "Certainly, yes,—with certain changes in phraseology."

As phraseology relates only to the literary style and "mechanical execution of sentences," we have here a full and satisfactory announcement from Mr. Cook, that he accepts the ideas and doctrines of Jonathan Edwards. In this, he is logical and consistent, and we admire the frankness with which he has defined his position.

Until Joseph Cook himself, comet-like, suddenly appeared blazing across the sky, Jonathan Edwards was the greatest light in the firmament of New England Evangelical theology. And he was well worthy of his place. His character was grand and majestic; his life consistently devoted to his ideas of truth; his faith in the authority of the Scripture absolute and unquestioning; his industry and learning unparalleled, and his logic and his reasoning as immovable as the "foundations of the everlasting hills."

He did not undertake to judge God by our human standards of morality, and consequently he most logically and ably defended the great doctrine of the damnation of the heathen, and the eternal punishment of infants.

Mr. Cook appears to disagree with Edwards on these points, and speaks of the doctrine of the damnation of infants as a "pandemonium caricature." But we do not think Mr. Cook can answer Edwards' argument on this topic. Mr. Cook must know that this doctrine is historical, and grows logically out of the doctrines of the original sin and election, and the sovereignty of God.

We are prepared with the evidence from Edwards and many others, whenever it is called for. But, although the champion of the last century and the one of this disagree on this point, it is gratifying to know that they are in accord on the other great doctrines of Orthodoxy. What, then, does Edwards say in his well-known sermon on "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God?"

Text—Deut. xxxii., 35: "Their feet shall slide in due time." We find it easy to tread on and crush a worm that we see crawling on the earth: thus easy is it for God when he pleases to cast his enemies down to hell. God is as angry with many now in this congregation, as he is with many of those miserable creatures he is now tormenting in hell. There are but few saved, and the bigger part of men that have died heretofore have gone to hell. God has laid himself under no obligation to keep any natural man out of hell one moment.

"That world of misery, that burning lake of brimstone, is under you. There is nothing between you and hell but the air. The God that holds you over the pit of hell, much as one holds a spider or some loathsome insect over the fire, abhors you, and is dreadfully provoked. You hang by a slender thread with the flame of God's wrath flashing about it, and ready to snuff it and burn it asunder. Now God stands ready to pity you. This is a day of mercy, but when once this day is past, your most lamentable shrieks will be in vein. God will have no other use to put you to, only to suffer misery, and will keep you in existence to no other end. He will crush you under his feet without mercy. He will not only hate you, but have you in the utmost contempt. You shall be tormented in the presence of the holy angels and the Lamb, and all the glorious inhabitants of heaven shall go forth to look upon the awful spectacle. You will know, certainly, that you must wear out long ages, millions and millions of ages, and when you have so done you will know all is but a point to what remains. How many of you, is it likely, will remember this discourse in hell? It would be no wonder if some that now sit here should be there before to-morrow morning."

To show Edwards' ideas of hell, its nature, etc., we quote from another sermon:

"The whole world will be converted into a great lake, or liquid globe of fire, a vast ocean of fire, in which the wicked shall be overwhelmed. Those billows of fire, which are greater than the greatest mountains, will never cease to roll over them, forever and ever. Your souls which shall have been agitated with the wrath of God, yet will still exist to bear more wrath; and your bodies which shall have been burning and roasting all the while in these glowing flames, yet shall not have been consumed, but will remain to roast through an eternity yet, which will not have been at all shortened by what shall have been past."

From the eight volume edition of Edwards, we learn that his preaching constantly abounded in these doctrines. Since Mr. Cook has declared that he would advise ministers now to preach such sermons as the one quoted, we infer very confidently that he indorses the sentiments, though he "would change some of the phraseology." But how could the ideas be better expressed than by Edwards himself? Why should Mr. Cook wish to "change the phraseology," while holding to the doctrines. The language is not at all obscure, and we fail to see how Mr. Cook could at all improve its phraseology without changing its meaning.—Ex-Catholist, in Newburyport Herald.

PAINE MEMORIAL BUILDING.

At the first meeting of the new Board of Trustees at the Investigator office, on Monday, June 18, on motion of B. F. Underwood, Horace Seaver was elected Chairman, and J. P. Mendum, Secretary. After a full discussion of all the circumstances or condition of the building, it was voted, that in order to meet its indebtedness and defray its current expenses, the trustees immediately issue an appeal to the liberal public for aid and assistance. The following appeal was then drawn up, and, on motion, voted to be published in the Investigator, INDEX, Banner of Light, New Age, and the German Pioneer, of Boston; the Truth Seeker and Evolution, of New York; the Chicago Religio-Philosophical Journal, the Milwaukee Freethinker, the San Jose (Cal.) Mercury, and any other friendly papers:—

To the Liberals of the United States, Canada, and Elsewhere.

We, the subscribers, having been elected trustees of the Paine Memorial Building, the fee simple of which having been transferred to us by the former joint tenants, to have, hold, and manage for the liberal cause, finding a heavy debt upon said property, appeal to you and all interested in the liberal cause for aid and assistance to help meet the present expenses, and to assist in finally removing the said indebtedness.

We find the taxes for the year 1876 ($1102) unpaid, and the property liable to be sold in a few months to satisfy said tax. The interest on the first mortgage will be again due in September, amounting to $1750. The insurance on the building will expire in September; the premium for renewal of the same will be some $400, besides some bills for necessary repairs, etc. With these facts before us, and trusting in your generosity, we appeal to you for aid and assistance. This is an emergency which cannot be put off. Heretofore our Treasurer has hired money to make up the deficiency, when contributions have failed to furnish the means to meet payments. We can no longer depend upon him, as the building is now indebted to him several thousand dollars. This appeal is made now for any assistance which friends may bestow on the building to help us save it until such time as it can sustain itself.

The income from the building at present is not sufficient to pay its expenses; and therefore we, the trustees, in our anxiety to save the property for the liberal cause, consider it our duty to issue this appeal. We are confident that with help from our friends generally, we shall be able not only to defray the current expenses of the building, but to gradually reduce the debt from year to year, until, in the not very distant future, all incumbrances will be removed, and the edifice by its own earnings will be rendered self-supporting. This, briefly, is our object, and it can be accomplished by the cooperation of the liberal public.

Friends, we need offer no excuse for any supposed presumption or selfishness on our part in making this appeal to your generosity and fraternal sympathy. You, equally with us, are fellow-laborers in a common cause and in a common enterprise. The Paine Memorial Building, erected as an enduring monument in honor of the name and memory of a world-renowned champion of freedom and humanity, and as a temple of freethought, free speech, and a free press, belongs to the liberals of the present, and we ask you to help us preserve it for them, and also as a heritage for the liberals who are to come after us and fill our places. It is the only Memorial Building of the kind; and satisfied as we are of its great importance to the cause in which we are all interested, we appeal with hope and confidence to the liberals throughout the United States, Canada, and elsewhere, for their aid and support.

HORACE SEAVER,
JOSHUA P. MENDUM,
B. F. UNDERWOOD,
OSMORE JENKINS,
THOMAS ROBINSON,

Boston, June 18, 1877.

MR. T. W. HIGGINSON writes in the Journal of Education to refute the imputation on women teachers that their service is of a briefer period than the average of men, and that they oftener enter the profession as a temporary makeshift. "I have had no leisure," he says, "though I have tried to find it, to carry this investigation further than my own residence; but of the permanent teachers employed by the city of Newport, for 1875-8, the thirty-five women have had a collective term of service in this city of two hundred and eighty-two years, giving an average of 8.06 years, and the men, now six in number, show a collective service of twenty-five years, and an average of 4.23 years. Until other statistics are collected to refute these, I shall continue to suspect that much of the complaint against women-teachers, on this score, is mere guesswork."

MIRACLES are becoming uncommonly common. There is the bedridden Chicago crone who prayed and was made whole. There is Mr. F. W. Fields, the lame man with the hip-disease, who taught a Sunday-school class in Chicago, and whose leg grew two and one-half inches after a night of prayer. And now comes Ruth Harris (colored) of Washington. She has been dumb for eight years. She committed some dreadful act, and when accused of it called upon her Creator to strike her dumb if she did not speak the truth. She was struck dumb, and never spoke again until one night last week, when she had a dream. Her mother—who died about a year ago—appeared unto her in the watches of the night, and told her that her powers of speech would return to her. Awakening from her dream, she found that her speech had indeed returned. Rejoicing at the discovery, she turned over in bed, touched her husband's shoulder, and when he was aroused remarked: "What do you think?" He thought the world was at an end, and waited for no explanation. Bouncing out of bed he ran into the street and aroused the neighbors. They returned with him, and found that Ruth could really talk again. So runs the tale. Possibly the miracle-vein is being overworked just now.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE Pacific Methodist speaks of the prevailing infidelity of the present day as "a mental perversion," though it allows that some "men of talents, education, and general morality have argued against religion from its abuses"; which, however correct when employed by Protestants against the Catholic religion, it thinks is not fair when employed by infidels against the Protestant faith. The editor supposes that "the whole host of unbelievers" are unconscious of their great danger, and avers "we have at least two chances to their one." This is the lowest and most moderate estimate we have ever noticed of the chances in favor of Christianity.

EXAMINATION of infant class: "How many souls have you, Johnnie?" "Two, one on each foot." Next: "How many tongues have you?" "Three, one in my head and two in my shoes." Next: "What is the chief use of bread?" "To spread butter and molasses on." Next: "Where did the wise men come from?" "Boston."

Poetry.

THE WATCHER ON THE TOWER.

TRAVELLER.

What dost thou see, lone watcher on the tower?
Is the day breaking? comes the wish'd for hour?
Tell us the signs, and stretch abroad thy hand,
If the bright morning dawns upon the land.

WATCHER.

The stars are clear above me; scarcely one
Has dimm'd its rays in reverence to the sun;
But yet I see on the horizon's verge
Some fair, faint streaks, as if the light would surge.

TRAVELLER.

And is that all? O watcher on the tower!
Look forth again; it must be near the hour;
Dost thou not see the snowy mountain copes,
And the green woods beneath them on the slopes?

WATCHER.

A mist envelopes them: I cannot trace
Their outline; but the day comes on apace;
The clouds roll up in gold and amber flakes,
And all the stars grow dim. The morning breaks!

TRAVELLER.

Again, again, O watcher on the tower!
We thirst for daylight, and we bide the hour,
Patient, but longing. Tell us, shall it be
A bright, calm, glorious daylight for the free?

WATCHER.

I hope, but cannot tell. I hear a song
Vivid as day itself, and clear and strong
As of a lark, young prophet of the noon,
Pouring in sunlight his seraphic tune.

TRAVELLER.

What does he say, O watcher on the tower?
Is he a prophet? Doth the dawning hour
Inspire his music? Is his chant sublime
With the full glories of the coming time?

WATCHER.

He prophesies; his heart is full; his lay
Tells of the brightness of a peaceful day!—
A day not cloudless, not devoid of storm,
But sunny for the most, and clear and warm.

TRAVELLER.

We thank thee, watcher on the lonely tower,
For all thou tellest. Sings he of an hour
When error shall decay, and truth grow strong,
And right shall reign supreme, and vanquish wrong?

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 30.

E. A. Hodson, $3.20; C. Vonnegut, $3.20; C. L. Nunnally, 90 cents; Mrs. C. E. Watson, $3.20; D. G. Crandon, $10; F. A. Foster, $3.20; H. D. Bennett, $10; Dr. A. W. Thomson, $10; A. B. Tuttle, $3.20; Mrs. E. B. Chace, $13; M. H. Isbell, $3.20; Chas. H. Pierce, $3.20; M. Rimahu, $1.80; E. C. Walker, $1.20; Kirsch & Scheiss, $3.20; Thos. Nye, $1; H. S. Williams, $2; T. A. Hanson, $3.20; Geo. W. Cooke, $1; C. M. Dennison, $2; Geo. Henshaw, $13.20; Anna E. Thompson, $3.20; Lemuel T. Wilcox, $3; N. A. Lombard, $3.20; B. S. Green, $3.20; Maggie Devoe, $1.60; W. L. Heberling, 75 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 5, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 221 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, Editorial
Contributors.

FREQUENT APPLICATIONS made to THE INDEX office for the Knowlton pamphlet oblige us to say distinctly that we cannot furnish it to anybody—partly because we have no copies on hand, and also because we cannot, with our own views of the pamphlet, take any part in circulating it.

ATTENTION is particularly called to the appeal of the new Trustees of the Paine Memorial Building, in whom the title of the building is now vested. It is needless to say that every enemy of free thought in the country would be delighted to see this building pass from Liberal management, and that the only way to prevent this is to raise money without delay. It is greatly to be hoped that this appeal will be promptly and generously responded to.

THE RAPID PROGRESS of the evolution philosophy is indicated in no way more significant than in the attempts now frequently made to prove that it is wholly compatible with Christian doctrine. Having failed to refute it, the Church is now endeavoring to accept it with the best grace possible. The Church of England Pulpit and Ecclesiastical Review has just published a very sincere discourse, delivered before the University of Cambridge, May 6, by the Rev. T. G. Bonney, which illustrates what a powerful hold the evolution philosophy has already taken on the ablest minds of the clergy: "There is sufficient evidence in favor of the applicability of the evolution hypothesis to the human race to make it wise, in my opinion, to face the possibility of its being true. I fear indeed that many earnest Christians will deem this nothing less than surrendering the very citadel of Christianity. Nevertheless, I hope to show that they are only maintaining an outwork which does not strengthen the line of defence, and so, in accordance with the best strategy, should be evacuated while this is possible without loss. . . . Dark as is many a page of the history of Christianity, few are darker, few more calculated to evoke the sighs of believers and the laughter of infidels, than those which relate to its conflict with science. See, for example, how eminent fathers of the Church denounced those who believed in the rotundity of the earth, and welcomed almost as an article of faith the ludicrous celestial mechanism of Cosmas. Listen to Romanists and Reformers alike condemning the theory of Copernicus. Remember the fate of Cecilio d' Ascoli, still depicted as writhing in the fires of hell on the horrible frescoes of Pisa Campo Santo; remember the sufferings of Galileo, of Roger Bacon, of Vesalius, and numbers of others of less note. Remember how the Church—I do not say always in her corporate capacity—has again and again declared doctrine to be incompatible with a true faith in which a century or so later the most earnest Christians have seen declared the glory of God. . . . May we, the clergy of the Church of England, in the future be cleared from the reproach which has been too justly laid upon us of being leaders in opposition to scientific inquiries and the most trustful of all men in the might of the truths which we teach. Among the younger part of my audience are doubtless some who in due course will be called to the ministry of our Church. Beware then, I pray you, of the arrogance of a theology which claims that all things have been revealed to it, no less than that of a science which claims that all things have been discovered by it. Be bold in welcoming truth from whatever quarter it comes. Be careful in distinguishing between the accidents and the essence of what you teach, between the husk and the kernel of your faith. Above all be careful in dogmatizing on points where you are without knowledge, or in making up for the weakness of your arguments by the strength of your language."

ANTICHRIST AT HARVARD.

The New York Independent of June 21 takes a not wholly erroneous view of the relations of Harvard University to Christianity:—

As for Harvard's religion, the truth is to be found in medietate. The general spirit of the institution is not hostile to Christianity or to Orthodoxy; but it is utterly indifferent to both,—a form of hostility which is very effective with some young men. There is no vestige of squarely Christian teaching in the curriculum. Believers and unbelievers are indifferently appointed as instructors, and the general impression left by the Harvard management is that it regards all forms of Christianity and Christianity itself as out of its province. The chapel, with its simple service of hymn, prayer, and sermon; the Christo et Ecclesia on the college seal; the Unitarian divinity school at one end of the town, the semi-attached Episcopal divinity school at the other; the rentals of pews in the neighboring churches,—these show that Harvard, like the honest sailor in the revival meeting, has "nothin' agin" Christianity. It should further be noted that Unitarian propagandism is dead in Cambridge. The authorities take pride in putting all creeds on a level, and this actually has a good effect, in the present state of the University. Ceteris paribus, they would nowadays prefer to elect a Congregationalist or an Episcopalian to an overseer's or a professor's chair. The students are simply let alone. Those who go in a particular faith generally stick to it; those who go without any seldom acquire one. That is the story in a nutshell. If your son is Orthodox, don't be afraid to send him to Harvard. If you want him to become so, send him elsewhere.

It certainly would not be fair to say that the authorities of Harvard University are consciously "hostile" to Christianity; they pay great outward respect to it, maintain Christian services on Sunday in the College Chapel with due decorum, and on all public occasions assign positions of honorable prominence to the clergy. In fact, the University still doffs its hat to "Christ and the Church" with even ostentatious formality.

Nevertheless, the "general spirit of the institution" is, like that of every other institution of thorough scientific culture, more than "indifferent" to Christianity; it is at bottom "hostile" to it, as the Independent (amusingly contradicting itself) immediately proceeds to acknowledge, when it pronounces indifference to be a "form of hostility which is very effective with some young men." There are but two possible attitudes towards the exclusive claims of Christianity—that of obedient, unquestioning submission, and that of active or passive rejection, which is in either form nothing but hostility. The attempt to discriminate between "non-Christian" and "anti-Christian"—fashionable as it is with a certain class of radicals, who cannot by any stretch of complaisance bring themselves to concede these exclusive claims, yet who shrink from recognizing or acknowledging the fact that their "indifference" is in spite of themselves "hostility"—has no basis whatever in reason or truth. The only effect of this attempt is to involve one in a really humiliating inconsistency, which keener or sturdier minds are constrained to contemplate with such excuses as charity requires. When Christianity commands implicit faith and obedience, all her true soldiers believe and obey; it matters little to her whether those who refuse to do this take their position in the ranks arrayed openly against her, or whether they merely throw down their arms and embarrass the movements of her own troops by perversely blocking the way. She reckons the latter her foes quite as legitimately as she does the former; and, when she turns her guns upon them, she receives with not undeserved contempt their plea that they are entitled to the privileges of non-combatants. "He that is not with me is against me"—has been her invariable answer from the beginning.

When Harvard University, therefore, is attacked as an enemy to Christianity by the Orthodox pulpit or press, and when even the semi-Orthodox Independent maintains that its "indifference" is only one species or "form of hostility," we see no reason to wonder or complain. Like every other seat of sound learning and thorough instruction in the sciences, its influence is constantly undermining the doctrinal foundations of the Christian religion, and is doing in the most efficient and remorseless manner the work of the avowed anti-Christian.

There is no other excuse for singling it out for special malediction, however, than the fact that, because its learning is more honest, accurate, and comprehensive, and its scientific instruction more thorough-going and complete, than those of any other American college, therefore its influence is more powerful than any other in this work of needed and inevitable demolition. The quarrel of Christianity really lies, not with Harvard, but with the modern civilization of which Harvard is the richest fountain in this Western world. Harvard has "nothin' agin" Christianity any further than she is "agin" all ignorance and superstition; but, if Christianity as a doctrinal system is synonymous with ignorance and superstition (and this is the case, despite all protest), then Harvard has a great deal "agin" her, and will sooner or later become abundantly conscious of the fact. Harvard University and THE INDEX are in truth engaged in precisely the same anti-Christian work; the only difference is that the former does this work in detail without being aware of its general character, while the latter, without doing this detailed work at all, is making evident its general character to not a few minds of this generation.

Knowledge, education, culture, literature, science, philosophy,—in brief, all that Harvard University stands for and promotes,—these are the real enemies of Christianity to-day, which Christianity can never conquer until she can succeed in extinguishing the whole sisterhood of colleges at a blow. These colleges may at present imagine themselves the great and mighty bulwarks of Christianity, and be sustained and multiplied as such by its friends; that is an innocent and stubborn hallucination which THE INDEX neither desires nor imagines itself able to dissipate. But the still more stubborn truth remains that the combined and cumulative influence of all well-modernized universities, fostering free-thought, disseminating ideas, promoting knowledge, banishing ignorance, and overturning superstition, is Antichrist itself; and the day will come when its beneficent, liberalizing, and thoroughly anti-Christian character will be universally understood. Harvard University would to-day resent such an intimation; its "authorities" would wax indignant over the irritating but scientifically accurate statement that she is doing more to destroy Christianity than could be done by a dozen INDEXES; they would protest, and with perfect truthfulness, that they cherish no purpose whatever to meddle with Christianity in the slightest, but confine themselves strictly to the thorough education of youth in positive knowledge. This is the truth. Nevertheless, what the jealous champions of Orthodoxy see and say is also true, that Harvard University (and all other universities in proportion as they teach positive knowledge and neglect the positive superstition of Christianity) is exerting a mighty anti-Christian influence on modern society. The intentions or professions of the "authorities" have nothing to do with the matter. They cannot help themselves, or modify the fact in the least. The rupture between Christianity and modern culture is absolute and irreparable, though not generally understood; and until this rupture is healed (as it never can be), Harvard University, as the leading promoter and chief seat of modern culture in America, is Antichrist incarnate. The keen scent of bigotry is not at fault; it snuffs danger in the breeze, and already stands at bay. But the universities are the hope of the world, and in their ultimate predestined triumph over Christianity the world will at last emerge from the still prevailing twilight of mediævalism into the full day of knowledge, liberty, and truth.

RELIGION BY AUTHORITY.

"If no happiness is to be expected after death, he is most reasonable and virtuous who strives to satisfy all his passions; and he is most vicious and unreasonable who renounces his present gratification for the sake of morality. The sceptic, therefore, who denies a future life is constrained logically to admit that all virtue is foolishness, and all wisdom consists in self-indulgence and pleasure."

These two sentences are from the Catholic World of July. But they would have been growing in congenial soil if we had found them in a Protestant journal or in any "author" who accepts, on mere authority, the common or Christian theory of a future life as his religion.

Perhaps the first thing that strikes a careful reader, and disgusts a candid one, is the misuse of the word sceptic. It is not only spelled unreasonably, but it is made to describe not a doubter but a dogmatist. The sceptic does not deny a future life, that is, believe the negation, but holds it "not proven." There are undoubtedly plenty of dogmatists who will vehemently deny the very possibility of a future existence; but it is not proper or fair to call them sceptics. They ought rather to be classed with the believers whose faith transcends evidence and reason.

Beyond this verbal criticism there comes the more important one; that, if the word sceptic had been used in its proper sense, as the writer would doubtless have used it if he had written a little more carefully,—for in consistency he ought to believe that the doubter is more likely to be damned than the dogmatist,—the conclusion is wholly unsupported by facts.

One of the first things that occurs to a human being after he gets into this life, and long before it is possible to convey to his mind any theory of another, is, that he cannot gratify all his passions without making himself miserable. Even on the assumption that there are no altruistic passions in his constitution, nothing but selfishness and "original sin," long before it is possible for him to have any conception of God or a future state, he learns that unlimited self-indulgence is not the best way, or perhaps any way at all, to be happy. Hence a pretty effective sort of morality springs up in the human mind, including faith in men as well as things, before religion or faith in God can possibly be planted. The wise parent at this period, no matter what are his own beliefs or opinions, is very careful about imposing mere authority, finding that the limitations of the passions are best taught to the child from his own experiences and the things immediately around him. Is it to be pretended that a process of moral training, which always begins without any theology, and acquires strong constraint over the indulgence of the passions before any whatever can be applied, must by and by come to depend wholly on faith in the rewards and punishments of a future state of existence,—a faith which, inasmuch as the finite cannot comprehend the infinite, must be accepted wholly on the authority of other finite beings, equally incapable? Here let us disclaim any under-valuation of authority. This would be a miserably poor world if there were not a general, practical, and everywhere present respect for authority, especially in matters of science, including morality, which is the highest science; to wit, the science of happiness. Authority, subordinate to truth, and within the limited sphere of human powers, has a right to respect and must be respected. Loyal and sensible subjects believe and obey the herald of their sovereign, provided his proclamation seems reasonable, and he does not put on airs. But if he wears a sword, and draws it, threatening instant harm as the penalty of disobedience or doubt, he impairs authority, and brings it into contempt. This, it seems to us, is just about what the Church, Protestant as well as Catholic, has been doing ever since the new dispensation of the Jewish religion was brought into the world. Its moral effect has been exceedingly malign. Science which depends almost wholly on authority—for what all of us, except specialists, know of it is principally by faith—takes a very different course. It never denounces skeptics, but simply refers to its facts and experiments, and with kind words lets them alone. The motto of the apostles, or popes, if you please, of astronomy, chemistry, zoölogy, botany, geology, is, Give the world the facts, and leave it to work out its own salvation. The benign moral effect of this policy on the population of the world is so susceptible of statistical proof that proof is needless. Everybody, including the most interested and bigoted ecclesiastics, must admit that the morals of the nineteenth century are better than those of the sixteenth. And yet the pillars of dogmatic theology, which stood so terribly firm at the beginning of the sixteenth century as to be able to support a very corrupt hierarchy, have been so battered by science, rather than by schism; by the worldly wisdom of Columbus, Galileo, and their followers, rather than by the preaching of Luther or the wit of Rabelais and Voltaire, that now, in the end of the nineteenth century, they must be supported themselves: and all that saves them from tumbling into oblivion is the improved moral character of the hierarchy, itself the fruit of a higher and better morality than such dogmas could ever inspire.

Though a tree may be known, in some measure, by its fruit, it is well to examine the wood and the bark and the manner of growth,—in short, all that its nature comprehends.

The religion of authority which afflicts Christendom, and seeks to abridge the normal freedom of the human mind, more or less, assumes not only the truth but the divine inspiration of certain Scriptures. These Scriptures, the product of many writers in many ages, without much apparent unity of purpose, contain, along with much of mere local or temporary interest, much of history, poetry, and morality worthy to have been transmitted to posterity, and which probably would have reached us without any assumption of its divinity. The writers themselves lay no distinct claims to divine inspiration, or that they were addressing all mankind in all future ages under the immediate dictation of the Almighty. If they had been conscious of having any such mission, as they were certainly in most cases men of common-sense as well as genius, they would have taken care not to lumber up their writings with much that could be of no earthly interest to any but the people of their own day and district. Not a single book of the whole list fairly canonizes itself. Had it done so, none the less would its claim have been submitted to canonizers, who might, by a majority of a single vote, have ruled it out. Hence it is a logical necessity that the Church should make the traditions of the fathers to some extent of equal authority with the canonical Scriptures; and the Protestants cannot escape it, for their Bible does not either wholly or partially canonize itself. All that the Greek, Roman, or Protestant churches, which accept the Scriptures as a wholly and divinely inspired rule of faith, can say, is: "We accept them because the fathers did; and we assume that the fathers could not be mistaken." When they say: "We accept what is in them just so far as, and no farther than, it is consistent with other knowledge and commends itself to our reason and conscience," then they unchurch themselves, and stand with the free religionists. They then reduce their regard for authority to the scientific standard, where it is no longer the master but the servant of reason. They make it possible to have some respect for so-called sacred writers, after they have been convicted of ignorance and mistakes; for to err is human: whereas an error in a book claiming to be a divine revelation damns the whole as an imposture. Scripture and tradition do not pass with them for nothing, but for what they are worth in the presence of all other light.

It cannot be pretended by any healthy and reverent mind, little authority as it may concede to the writers of the Old and New Testaments, that their speculations about God are of no human interest, and did nothing to displace grosser ideas. They were sublime steps in their time. But that they were vague, crude, and incomprehensible, not very sane attempts to know the unknowable, is proved by the fact that the fathers of the Christian Church fell at once to quarrelling about them; and at the end of about three hundred and twenty-five years they were ready to cut each other's throats; and perhaps would have done it, had not a converted king who had some worldly-mindedness and common sense left in him, got the controversy hushed up by calling a convention of Bishops, who, after heated discussion, settled a creed about the Trinity by sheer voting. To this most of the malcontents, who were suppressed but not convinced, being the ablest theologians of the crowd, subscribed, saving their consciences by surreptitiously injecting an iota into a Greek word.

A more practical and mischievous assumption than that about which they quarrelled was the doctrine of the universal taint of "original sin," about which they agreed. Without that knot, they could see no occasion for the intervention of a God. The writers of the Gospels seem to have thought it necessary to save Jesus from the taint of original sin by denying him a human father,—the sacredness of virginity, in the estimation of the people of that day, being sufficient to neutralize the taint on the mother's side. Thus Jesus, the Christ, as to his human nature, was born without sin, as otherwise he could not have been. But this idea of the virgin was afterwards thought not quite sufficient to counteract the taint, so that it early became a common though not universal belief that she herself, though having a father as well as a mother, was born without sin.

To show how utterly the Church relies upon authority and rejects common sense and reason, even when it exists in its own bosom, it is only necessary to refer to its action on this curious tenet. In 1850 the Pope consulted the most eminent of his prelates about making it an article of faith binding on every Catholic conscience, expressing his own desire that it should be done. Of course the majority advised it, but many dissuaded. Among them was the lamented and ill-fated Archbishop of Paris. With humility, but with overwhelming reason and touching pathos, he implored the Holy Father not to do it, seeming to forbode that such an outrage on human conscience would provoke the horrors in which he passed away. He even ventured to ask Pius, "Can the Church propose, under the pain of eternal damnation, a doctrine which is altogether indifferent, in respect of dogma or rule of life?" Yet on the 8th of December, 1854, the Church in council had done it by a strong vote; and Pius IX. published it in a Constitution entitled, Ineffabilis Deus, in these words: "We define the doctrine which holds the most blessed Virgin Mary in the first instant of her conception to have been preserved free from all stain of original sin, by the singular grace and privilege of Almighty God, and through the merits of Jesus Christ the Savior of the human race, to be a doctrine revealed by God, and therefore to be firmly and constantly held by all the faithful."

Reason, thus crushed by ecclesiastical authority, has to suppress the questions which undoubtedly struggled in the mind of the Archbishop of Paris. If Almighty God could preserve Mary free from the stain of original sin, without suspending natural laws and depriving her of an earthly father, why could he not save a superfluous miracle, not the easiest of belief, and do the same for Jesus? Would his merits as a Savior have been any less? Again Mary, though sinless, was not God. She was saved by the "merits" of a suffering God, and, as a matter of "privilege," she of all mankind was saved from ever being a sinner. Where is the morality of such a dogma?

Science has taught the Catholic hierarchy the folly of sneering at Columbus because he didn't think the earth was flat, and of persecuting Galileo because he dared to investigate its motions. It now thinks of canonizing Columbus; and it, some time ago, set Pietro Angelo Secchi to lecturing at Rome on the very things which it forbade Galileo to speak of. Though the Italian government allows Father Secchi still to adorn the Church as an astronomer, and allows the Pope to exercise all his spiritual functions with regal splendor, it is accused by the Catholic priesthood all over the world, not excepting the United States, of holding him a prisoner, and oppressing the consciences of the faithful everywhere, because the Pope is not recognized as a territorial sovereign, independent of the State, and owing no allegiance to it. The superstition of France has been stirred to its very bottom by its ultramontane priesthood, to wrest from regenerated Italy the old dominion of the Pope. They say they have not, and well they may not have, any enmity to a republic which grants them $10,000,000 a year from its budget; but they impudently demand that it shall press Italy to do what no republic or any other government fit to live has a right to do. Whoever will read the last issue of the Catholic World will see that, if the Pope should take it in his infallible head to establish himself in the United States, this zealous advocate of religious slavery would be stirring up all the Catholics in the world to petition Congress to give him the sovereignty of some city, and to petition every other government to interfere with our government in his behalf. The recent overthrow of Jules Simon, and the terrible predicament in which the Hibernian French President finds himself; throws a strong light on the cause of the Franco-German war, and demonstrates that a religion of authority, though no longer able, or perhaps willing, to burn individuals for heresy, is as avaricious of power and as dangerous to the peace of nations as ever. There is no safety in giving it more than the tolerance due to all the dangerous, while they keep within the pale of strictly secular law. E. W.

A GENTLEMAN was very much annoyed at night by a person who was walking heavily in the room above, and unable to sleep; he ascended to the room to ascertain the cause, and found a man walking up and down, apparently in great distress. His sympathy induced him to inquire the cause. At first he could get no response, and the man, with his hair in his hands, still continued to pace the floor. At last, induced by the kindly tone of his visitor, he stated the cause of his great anguish. "I owe my friend Brown $500, which I am utterly unable to pay." "My friend," said the gentleman, "I can give you advice which will relieve your distress." "What is it?" anxiously inquired the distressed individual. "You have walked far enough," replied the gentleman; "my advice to you is to go comfortably to bed, and let Brown walk awhile."

BARNUM was travelling once on board of one of the river steamers, where they feed you for a moderate outlay (seventy-five cents a meal) very sumptuously, but the portions supplied are usually of microscopic dimensions. He called at tea-time for a beefsteak. The negro brought him the usual little shrivelled mite of broiled flesh, certainly not sufficient for more than two mouthfuls. Barnum poised the morsel on his fork, scanned it critically, as though it were a sample of steak submitted to his inspection, and then returned it to the waiter, saying, "Yes, that's what I mean. Bring me some of that."

THE NEW YORK Times is embarrassed by an obscurity in one of Rev. Dr. Talmage's sermons. That great divine said, with all the indignant eloquence of his arms and legs, "that a ship once sailed from Boston on board of which were three missionaries and twenty-four thousand gallons of rum." What the Times can't find out is, whether there was too many rum for the missionaries or too much missionaries for the rum.—Commonwealth.

Communications.

IS CHRISTIANITY THE GREAT MORAL FORCE OF THE WORLD?

I do not propose to go into an extended consideration of the subject, traversing the broad field of history, but to briefly note two modern instances.

For nearly forty years, Rev. Dr. Joel Hawes was minister of the "Centre Church" (Orthodox Congregational), of Hartford, Conn. His connection with his society closed in the year 1863, or thereabouts. He was called to that position when it was still the custom to settle a minister for life, unless some flagrant immorality or heresy gave occasion for his dismissal. Though never a brilliant man, he steadily grew in favor with his denomination, and after a few years assumed a leading place in it. On all questions of doctrine and church polity he became an authority. Of great ecclesiastical erudition, a master of the traditions, and perfectly sound, he was looked up to as a man of great wisdom, and in matters of controversy often referred to as a court of final appeal. Occupying such a position of respect and influence in his denomination, of course his immediate society would regard him with pride and admiration. Besides, at that time, a sacredness attached to the ministerial office which it has since largely lost among Protestant sects. The minister was ordained of God as well as man, and, if not quite infallible, was at least divinely guarded from serious error. If he did not receive specific and literal instruction and guidance from on high, he was divinely inspired with general wisdom. He was God's interpreter to the people, and received deference accordingly. The wide reputation he had acquired as expounder and defender of the faith, together with the exaltation belonging to his office, placed him very high indeed in the estimation of his people. He was almost, if not quite, an object of worship. His word with them had all the force of law. By their encouragement, his position in relation to them became that of dictator; his authority absolute; and great complacency was felt and manifested by those having charge of the oracle. This worshipful attitude of his people of course had the effect to encourage in him an autocratic habit, which was more and more confirmed as the years went on. He was naturally inclined to magnify the office which he held; and his people were willing to receive from him a reflected glory. In exalting him, they were also a little way lifted up.

The extraordinary inflexibility of will, and confidence of opinion, naturally promoted by this flattering deportment of his people, was unperceived by them so long as it was their happiness to defer to him, as to one in immediate communication with the divine source of all knowledge and wisdom. But the favor of God and the worship of the people seem to be no barrier against the infirmities of age. The prophet of the Most High grows old, and his vital force is exhausted, just the same as the man of science or the man of sin. As the minister passed his threescore years, his people proposed to provide him with a helper. This he declined from time to time, as the offer was renewed, maintaining that he was still in such vigor of body and mind as to be well able to fulfil all the duties of his position. But the time came when he could no longer conceal from himself the fact that his physical power was waning somewhat; and he reluctantly accepted the offer of a colleague. A young man was engaged for the place who possessed many attractive qualifications. The members of the society congratulated themselves on having secured so efficient a helper for the old man, and at the same time one whom the younger portion could sympathize and associate with, as well as look up to; and all for a while was harmonious and lovely.

The contrast between the two men, of course, was great. One was of the past; the other, of the present. One was profound, solid, sound, antiquated; the other equally sound, but fresh and inspiring. The people soon began to find out what perhaps they would otherwise never have discovered, that they were really getting tired of listening to the cogent, but monotonous and prosy presentation of the same old round of doctrines, and were delighted to have them set off with a bit of color that was not lurid, enclosed in fancifully illuminated borders, or made to serve as background for graceful studies of philanthropy and art.

When the young man preached, the house was filled; while the old man discoursed to a "beggary array of empty boxes." To this he was not unmindful, and doubtless felt the slight to be as undeserved as it was cruel. Perhaps a half-conscious presentiment of such a state of things made him refuse as long as possible to accept the proffered help. Slight differences soon arose between the two pastors on matters of minor importance, which at first were settled by the ready submission of the junior. But differences grew larger, more serious, less easily settled. The old minister could not see why his authority, based upon the superior wisdom of age and experience, should not be as absolute as aforetime.

The young minister could not see why his position did not give him some voice in the management of affairs. So there was a breach which grew wider and wider: the people took sides; and the side of the young man was much the larger. The strife became intensely personal and bitter, as contests between religious factions always are. Of course the old pastor was still essentially the same man that he had been,—in many respects what his people had made him. It can hardly be supposed that a few weeks or months had served to greatly change his character, or render him less entitled to respect and veneration.

Yet the same people, who a short time before sat in worship at his feet, now heaped upon him all possible abuse, upbraiding him especially, and in no mild terms, for those traits which they themselves had been instrumental in making prominent in his character,—stubbornness, wilfulness, an autocratic spirit. The assault upon him became virulent, venomous, pitiless. Those who had been most extravagant in their laudation, most submissive and obsequious, were now the most bitter in denunciation, the most unfeelingly unsparing in their efforts to publish the weaknesses of a character which a short time before they had seemed to regard as perfect. The result was the forced resignation of the pastor, followed not long after by his death.

The other instance to which I wish to refer is, in all its main features, identical with the one already related. Dr. Woodbridge was, in like manner, settled in his youth at Old Hadley, Mass.; in like manner worshipped for nearly half a century, and in like manner disposed of. His compulsory abdication took place two or three years before that of Dr. Hawes, and under exactly the same circumstances. The minister grew old; the colleague came; the old man was repudiated,—the god deposed. Gray hairs found no respect; long and faithful service no consideration; with scorn and bitter reproaches he was turned adrift, and the people felt no shame.

To me these incidents carry their moral so conspicuously that there is no need that I should do more than barely call attention to it. These people had been for many years under the most strict and constant Christian training. Their opportunities for appropriating, and manifesting in their characters, the results of the soundest Christian theology and ethics were exceptionally favorable. Their preceptors in Christianity were of the strictest order, of widely acknowledged ability; and they gave much time in listening to exposition and instruction, which were received with child-like confidence. They were subjected from youth to age, Sunday and week-day, day and night, to the most powerful and penetrating Christian influence. Being in the very focus of Christian light, they might be expected to radiate whatever good that light should bring to them. In their knowledge and practice of the common virtues—sometimes called the Christian virtues—they might be supposed to be somewhat in advance of others less favorably situated, if the claim which the votaries of Christianity make for it is true,—that it is the great moral force of the world. If that claim is just, when the trial came they would have had a measure of wisdom to comprehend the situation,—to see how far they themselves were responsible for it; the charity, forbearance, and forgiving spirit, which would surely have maintained the relation of goodwill, affection, and respect between pastor and people.

All these years of superlative Christian training had brought to them nothing, unless it was an added capacity for rancor, blunted sensibilities, increased selfishness. They were now forced to see that the man whom they had worshipped was not altogether perfect; and the violence with which they met such a revelation was due perhaps, in part, to their chagrin at having been duped so long, albeit by their own credulity and blindness. I would not affirm that they were of a lower moral tone, less refined and delicate in feeling, or more hasty and severe in controversy than that part of the community which is not professedly Christian; but, in view of the claim which Christianity makes, we have a right to demand that they manifest the possession of those attributes and virtues which are maintained to be the offspring of Christianity in more than ordinary prominence and activity. In a situation which required much wisdom, forbearance, self-control, and mutual concession, the worst passions had full sway,—neither held in check nor modified by the vaunted moral influences of Christianity.

These incidents are given as a single item in the vast array of evidence which might be cited to show that Christianity is no leader in the moral or intellectual progress of the world, but rather follows far behind, and dimly reflects the moral sentiment of the age.

J. A. J. W.

CLERICAL DIFFICULTIES, AND THE REMEDY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I find in one of the morning papers the following interesting item of business transacted at the annual meeting of the General Association of Congregational Churches of Massachusetts, now in its third day's session. It may be remarked, in passing, that the reason for this body being called "The General Association," etc., is possibly because a proportion of the Congregational churches of the State are excluded from its membership, for sectarian and theological reasons.

In "The Business Meeting" on Wednesday, "the Rev. Daniel T. Fiske, D.D., of Newburyport, Chairman of the Committee to prepare a compendium of doctrine for the instruction of the young, reported that while the desirability of such a compendium was obvious, it was not advisable to enter upon the work at the present time for three reasons: First, want of time; second, the improbability that the committee themselves could agree upon any compend of doctrine to be reported; third, with ample time and with agreement on their part they would not be able to report any compend of doctrine which would command general approval of the ministers and churches represented in this body. Therefore the committee asked to be discharged. The report was accepted, and the question coming upon its adoption, after a short discussion it was voted that the report be laid on the table on the ground that it would not be well to have it understood by the public, as it would be if the report were adopted, that the committee were unable to agree on matters of doctrine; that if the committee agreed the convention could not; and if the convention should finally come to a decision, that decision would not be accepted by the churches."

The above report seems to me to be noteworthy for two reasons: first, as forming one among many items of evidence that the plans and operations of the Orthodox clergy include a systematic suppression of truth, more or less extensive, and are detrimental to the public welfare in this manner, as well as by their habitual teaching of false doctrine; second, as enlarging the already abundant proof that this body of men does even now wield such means of influence, pecuniary and other, as to persuade the conductors of the periodical press to cooperate with them in the suppressions in question. For instance: the report above quoted appears in but one of the city papers, the others giving only the first five lines of the extract, and omitting (no doubt on strong persuasion) the reasons assigned by the committee, and the debate upon those reasons in the Association, matters more interesting and instructive than anything else in the proceedings of the meeting.

Think, reader, for a moment, of the deep significance of the vote of the Association above described. They agreed to evade all action on the confessedly important subject before them, expressly "on the ground that it would not be well to have it understood by the public" that neither the reverend committee nor the reverend members of the Association could agree upon matters respecting which they all declare from the pulpit that the truth is plain, clear, and unquestionable, settled thoroughly by the creed, after having been settled thoroughly by the Bible!

When Mr. Moody tried to prevent the reporters from communicating to the public his remarks about the Young Men's Christian Union, and the Orthodox ministers who saw no harm in preaching the gospel to that body, it was wittily said that perhaps he had found a new reading of a well-known passage of Scripture, thus: When thou backbitest, enter into thy closet and shut the door. A friend to whom I repeated this joke, said he was glad of Moody's exposure, but sorry for the manner of it, since any assembly had a right to hold its sessions in private, if it so desired. I, having just seen the above record of the action of the Congregational Association, suggested that there might be some reason in a different view of the case; namely, that if, in a meeting of teachers by profession, plans were concerted to suppress and conceal from their pupils matters properly belonging to the course of instruction, and needful to the pupil's welfare, that welfare might claim exposure of such treachery, even to the extent of disregarding the secrecy enjoined by the conspirators.

C. K. W.

BOSTON, June 21, 1877.

JOHN HEPBURN.

MILWAUKEE, June 16, 1877.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

THE INDEX just come to hand, containing a notice of the funeral of Mrs. Little, reminds me of a neglected duty. I ought to have sent you a notice of the funeral of John Hepburn, published in the Milwaukee News, May 6, the day after the funeral. Although several weeks have passed since we laid the good old man in the grave, I wish you would publish it, as it is the best way I know to convey the news of his death to old friends in London; among others G. J. Holyoake, of whom he thought so much.

He was a socialist of the Robert Owen school, and came to this State in 1845, with Thomas Hunt and others, to establish a community. Of course they failed. Since the breaking up of this attempt at community, he has constantly resided in Milwaukee. A few days before his death, in conversation with him, we found him as hopeful of the ultimate success of socialism—as he understood it—as in the days when he subscribed his mite to the "Harmony Hall" experiment in England.

Those who were participants in this simple funeral ceremony will not easily forget it. In the silence of the Forest Home Cemetery, on a calm and beautiful morning, when all Nature seemed so bright and peaceful, friends still in the vigor of manhood lowered the coffin, containing the body of John Hepburn, gently into the grave; while around stood his only daughter and her husband and children, and friends of the family, among them all that are left of his gray-haired companions,—all but one, and he prevented from being there only by blindness.

In the short time spent at the grave, there passed before the eyes of his old companions a retrospective vision of forty years past,—their hopes, disappointments, and successes; and loving tears coursed down their furrowed cheeks as they thought of hours that had been made happier by the unceasing helpfulness of him with whom they now parted forever.

John Hepburn lived a life of purity, and died loved by all who knew him,—loved best by those who knew him best.

A. BATE.

In Memoriam.

Most of the residents of Milwaukee will recall to mind meeting often on our thoroughfares a white-haired old man of diminutive stature, always appearing to be hastening on some important errand, so eager and intent was his manner. He was only known in this way to the majority of those who might have thus met him. A few knew him by name; fewer still personally or intimately.

This earnest little figure will never more add its modicum of activity to the moving panorama of living energy that threads the city pavements, intent upon the various purposes for which that energy is requisite. During the past week his life went out suddenly and sweetly; and yesterday, in the bright

May-morning sunshine, loving hands laid him away, to rest, at last.

John Hepburn was a Scotchman by birth, a resident of Milwaukee for more than thirty years. In the old country, and in the new, he labored diligently, in his very limited way, for every cause which to him meant a better time for all men and women who were poor, oppressed, and degraded; and these labors were continued unremittably up to the very day of his death.

There may be some who will remember him as a zealous friend of the Young Men's Library Association in its early, struggling history. A number of valuable books are now in the library; and on the fly-leaves may be read, "Presented by John Hepburn." Yet he was a very poor man at that time, and daily toll with meagre pay was his heritage. Whenever there was an opportunity for the little effort he was able to make, he was sure to step in, zealous and helpful.

In character, he was as guileless as a child. Not the innocence of ignorance, for he was a reader and a thinker. Like a child, too, in that, his enthusiasm never seemed to receive the chill of aging years. In the home circle—his home for many years being with his only daughter, Mrs. James Richter—he was helpful, cheerful, content; the playmate of the children, the intelligent companion of the elders. A purer, truer life possibly never passed through its mysterious weaving of weal and woe, and kept so clean and fair a pattern. It was unmarred by a single taint of selfishness, weakness, or shame. He even denied himself all the little luxuries that the pocket money given to him by his friends could have furnished, and devoted every penny to promote in his little fashion some cause that to him meant progress. This was his only religion; and he was a devotee in the religion of philanthropy. By it, he lived a life of useful beauty; in it, he died a death of tranquil satisfaction. It was his desire that neither clergyman nor solemn obsequies should mark his burial with anything different from the religion he had lived and died in; and his wish was carefully regarded. The funeral was attended only by acquaintances, the most of them friends of forty years or more standing. They laid flower tokens on the coffin, and dropped tears of genuine affection on the serenely restful face, and then carried him to his grave, where there was no ceremony save a few tender, truthful words spoken by a life-long friend and comrade in their common cause of progress for man.

Who shall attempt to estimate the value of this simple, earnest life? Judged by any worldly standard, the figures would be small. Yet in the surging sea of human pain and oppression, some word or act of this brave soul may have been as the pebble dropped in the ocean, whose influence upon the water is never quite lost, and touches at last the shore.

Nor is a true soul ever born for naught;

Wherever any such hath lived and died

There hath been something for true freedom wrought,
Some bulwark levelled on the evil side.

B.

"SOCIAL DEMOCRACY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Mr. Abbot.—I am glad to find that my letter in THE INDEX of June 21 was written under a misapprehension of the intended application of your remark to which it referred; and I thank you for your courteous invitation to present in THE INDEX "a clear, definite, precise statement of what social democracy aims to accomplish."

I am quite conscious of my inability to do justice to so excellent an opportunity; still the hope of arresting the attention of some among the many thoughtful and liberal-minded readers of your paper to the important social problems involved in the question of labor and capital urges me to do my best to respond to your wish as briefly as I can, and as promptly as my other engagements and the desire to do my best will permit.

Suffer me, however, to take advantage of this occasion to make one or two remarks regarding the passage you have quoted from Mr. Ernst's paper in your comments on my letter; the sentiments expressed in which passage I understand you to accept as "very wholesome truth."

I confess that I am very much surprised at this indorsement, considering the vagueness of the entire passage and the utter absence of any reasons, either in the passage quoted or in the article quoted from, for the string of conclusions arrived at by Mr. Ernst.

If German socialism is based upon Lassalle's teachings, it seems to me that Mr. Ernst's own account of the man, and especially Heine's opinion of him, given in the letter quoted in the article, should absolve his well-considered and largely adopted theories from the charge of "crudeness"; and, in the absence of any definite information in your quotation—or in the rest of the article, for that matter,—as to what the theories in question really were, and as to the exact nature of the "legitimate consequences" and "inevitable results" that would accrue from their adoption and practice, I cannot see how you can be so easily satisfied. Nor does Mr. Ernst, anywhere that I remember, show how "the accumulation of capital and rent was shown to be a moral act"; and what does he mean by the accumulation of rent? Also, what is the meaning of "trades," as he uses the word in the same sentence? "Hence," he says ("hence," from what?), "war either against labor or capital is war against moral civilization." Change the sentence to this: war between labor and capital is war against moral civilization, and all social democrats will indorse it; they will also fully indorse (with their own interpretation) your own sentence which immediately follows the quoted passage.

Social democracy does not propose any antagonism between labor and capital; it simply recognizes an antagonism that already exists—not between the two abstract terms, but in the relations between the two classes of men who represent these two elements of production and distribution; and its very object, and only object, is to remove this antagonism, and thus to bring about that equitable coöperation, without which, as you justly say, "Social prosperity will be [indefinitely] postponed."

As to the war which the socialists are said to "wish for," I do not know how it may be in Germany, but certainly it is the very thing that we in America are desirous of avoiding. We believe that nothing but the adoption of the social democratic system of industry and commerce—that is, of production and exchange—can prevent war either in this or in any other civilized country.

Above all things, social democrats believe in the rightful sovereignty of the collective will of the people in matters of common interest; in the efficacy of the ballot for its expression and enforcement; and they hope to accomplish their purposes by a true education of the people, mainly through the teachings of social friction. What those purposes are, and on what principles they are based, I will try to show in another article.

BOSTON, June 21, 1877.

W. G. H. SMAET.

IS IT A "FORTUNATE GUESS"?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I think Mr. Chadwick is in error when he says: "Seen from your stand-point, the belief in the moral law has been a fortunate guess so far;" and I think the ground of his error is the supposition that you, in the advocacy of the scientific method as applied to the subject of religion, claim to use some other instrumentality for the discovery of truth than what always has been used, while (if I understand you correctly) you are simply urging the recognition of reason as the final arbiter on all questions within the purview of human intelligence. This, in fact, it always has been; for, even if the world has hitherto deferred to "authority," it has used its reason in its choice thereof.

But, granting that Mr. Chadwick is right in the above remark, in what respect is his theory (to wit, that "the genesis of morals is not intellectual at all, but emotional") superior to his assumption of what yours is? What there is more reliable in the shifting emotions of human nature than in a "fortunate guess," I fail to see. Now it seems to me that, as tested by the method of science, moral law is simply right law; and that the only indication of the rightness of a law is its beneficence, which latter quality can be fully apprehended only through experience. It required ages of experience for the world to become capable of appreciating the practical value of the Golden Rule. Some laws are so beneficial, their application being limited by so few exceptions,—in short, they contain so much of rightness,—that men have attributed to them a supernatural origin, and in some sort canonized them as they have certain good men. The only office of emotion in this matter is, according to its character, to impel us either to obedience or to violation of recognized right law; and, consequently, as the elder Mill maintained, it is liable to be called upon to give an account of itself at the bar of reason. I conclude that the world always has learned, and always must learn, its golden rules and discover its "moral laws" by climbing the rugged hill of Experience.

J. N. C.

N. P. ROGERS.

LINCOLN, Neb., June 20, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—I notice a "Freethinker's View of Appleton's Cyclopædia" in THE INDEX of the 14th instant. It recalls to mind that a few months since I had occasion to look in this Cyclopædia for N. P. Rogers; and was quite surprised, as well as disappointed, in not finding the slightest notice of one of New England's brightest, freest, and purest authors. I was the more dissatisfied when I found many men of less note had found a place there.

My Cyclopædia is for sale.

Yours for truth,

BENJ. F. FISHER.

THE WOLCOTT GROVE MEETING.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., June 24, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As has been announced through THE INDEX, the Liberals of Central and Western New York are to hold a three days grove meeting in Cosad's Grove, near Wolcott, N. Y., the 17th, 18th, and 19th of August. At that meeting it is proposed to perfect a permanent organization for the western half of the State. The expenses of the meeting will be considerable, and must mostly be borne by Mr. J. M. Cosad, the builder of the Liberal Hall and the owner of the grove. To assist him a little, please allow me to ask the readers of THE INDEX, and others who may feel so disposed, to remit such sums as they may choose to Mr. J. M. Cosad, Wolcott, N. Y. Efforts will be made to secure a goodly representation of the Liberal public, and make the meeting a grand success.

H. L. GREEN.

[We hope the Wolcott meeting will be a great success,—all the more so if the proposed organization shall have the courage to enter into the Liberal League movement explicitly and earnestly. The principle of State Secularization should be proclaimed by every liberal society; and its professions should be backed up by active work. Why not get the signatures of all the members of this meeting to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition, and make the organization auxiliary to the National Liberal League? This step would not interfere in the slightest with its local independence, but would give needed aid and sympathy to the most important liberal movement of the time.—Ed.]

THE SUNDAY SOCIETY.

The second public annual meeting of the Sunday Society to obtain the opening of museums, art galleries, libraries, and gardens on Sundays was held in the large hall, Freemasons' Tavern, on Saturday afternoon. The hall was crowded. The chair was occupied by the Dean of Westminster, the president of the society. Among those on the platform were Professor Tyndall, Professor Huxley, the Rev. John Oakley, the Rev. Mark Wilks, Professor Henry Morley, Dr. B. W. Richardson, Joseph Arch, Mr. James Heywood, Sir Henry Thompson, the Rev. W. Rogers, Mr. E. R. Russell (Liverpool), Mr. W. H. Donville, Dr. J. Shaw, the Rev. H. G. Henderson, Miss Anna Swanwick, Mr. Lewin Hill, the Rev. Arthur Mozley, Dr. W. C. Bennett, Mr. J. F. B. Firth, Mr. A. Elley Finch, and Mr. Thomas Henry Farrer, secretary of the Board of Trade. Mr. Mark H. Judge, the honorary secretary, stated that letters expressing regret that they were unable to attend the meeting had been received from (among others) the Bishop of Exeter, the Marquis of Ripon, the Marquis of Huntly, Sir Harcourt Johnstone, M.P., Sir Richard Wallace, M.P., Sir Sydney Waterlow, M.P., Sir Arthur Guinness, M.P., Mr. P. A. Taylor, M.P.; and that Lady Burdett Coutts would have been there but for an illness in her family. The president, in his address to the meeting, said he did not address those who wished that Sunday should be altogether abolished, nor, on the other hand, those, if any, who thought that the mode of observing Sunday in England did not require any alteration. The question for consideration was, What is the best mode of enjoying one of the greatest institutions of this country for the purpose of the religious and moral elevation of the people? It was cherished by all sects and churches, and was almost the only institution which the Legislature forced on the whole nation. The object of the society was, he understood, to maintain, on the one hand, the value of the English Sunday, and, on the other hand, to do the best they could to improve it. Every institution worth preserving was worth improving. "Spartan nactus es, hanc exorna." The meaning of that was, "You have got something good; make the most of it you can." The English mode of observing Sunday was different from the Continental mode, whether Protestant or Catholic. The opportunities afforded by this one free day were grievously neglected in this country. To a vast number of the working-classes in our great towns Sunday was the only day which afforded an opportunity for innocent and healthy recreations and studies. In the direct interests of religion, and in the interests of morality, which after all was only religion under another name, this society advocated the enjoyment of that opportunity. In the direct interests of religion, because it was important that the religion of the country should not suffer in the estimation of the young, the uneducated, or, he would add, the hostile or indifferent, by being associated with enforced gloom or listless idleness. It was well, said by Richard Baxter, "The devil is a great undoer by overdoing." In overdoing religious observances there was great risk of undoing the vital, essential elements of religion itself. This society also advocated the enjoyment of opportunities for instruction in the interests of morality. No stone should be left unturned which could give some means of escape from temptation, some places of resort where rich and poor might meet together, or at any rate where the poor and their families might meet one another—such as Kew Gardens or the picture galleries at Hampton Court. He understood there was a general testimony of the moral advantages which those institutions had afforded. With regard to the opening of the national museums and galleries this society proposed two conditions,—first, that the general character of the day must not be infringed by an undue extension of the hours during which those buildings should be opened; and, second, that the rights and liberties of the public servants who would be employed must not be unduly curtailed. Professor Tyndall moved the first resolution, "That this meeting rejoices in the progress of the movement for the opening of museums on Sundays, as shown in the second annual report of the Sunday Society, and requests the chairman to sign a petition praying the House of Commons to support the resolution which is shortly to be submitted to it for the opening of the national museums and galleries during a part of Sunday." The resolution having been seconded by Professor Henry Morley, and supported by Dr. B. W. Richardson, was carried almost unanimously. Professor Huxley moved the second resolution, "That in the opinion of this meeting the Sunday Society should appoint a deputation to wait upon the First Lord of the Treasury to solicit the support of the government to the measure for the opening of the national museums and galleries on Sunday afternoons." The Rev. John Oakley seconded the resolution, which, having been supported by the Rev. Mark Wilks and Joseph Arch, was carried. On the motion of Professor Flower, supported by Mr. James Heywood and Mr. E. R. Russell, thanks were voted to the president.—London Times, May 14.

A CLOSE-FISTED man invited a friend to dinner, and provided only two mutton-chops. Upon removing the cover he said: "My friend, we have a Lenten entertainment; you see your dinner before you." Taking the two chops upon his own plate, his friend replied, "Yes, but where is your dinner?"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8	"	"	"	"
" 26 " 51 "	6	"	"	"	"
" 52 "	5	"	"	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX—

TOLKDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,

No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Bowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Bees"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 80 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.50
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physique and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUEHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete Index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COERRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanea. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Domby and Son.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasie Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBAUGH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Hours.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMESTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about the Various Lands. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.50
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAUTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image from Various Lands.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of, with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mornings of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Series.....	1.25
Stories told to the Old and Young.....	1.25
Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Salads, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
3.00
LEWES (G. E.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
6.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1843.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. 10s. per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—D. L. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.00
PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty, Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Derval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	2.00
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Slings and the Stones. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and V, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banisterings.....	2.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

331 Washington St., Boston.

RIFLES, SHOT-GUNS, REVOLVERS, sent C.O.D. for examination, all charges paid. No risk. No humbug. Write for catalogue. Address GREAT WESTERN GUN WORKS, Pittsburg, Pa.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of fifteen shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

GERMAN RADICAL PAPERS

Published by

CARL DOERFLINGER,

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

"ONKEL KARL," an illustrated juvenile monthly. Good reading for American youth studying German. Natural morals. No bloody crimes. No love-stories for "Boys and Girls." No hypocritical cant. Price per year, $1.50.

"FREIDENKER" (Freethinker), a weekly paper, devoted to the elevation of mankind out of the thralldom of superstition and ignorance. Price per year, $2.50.

MRS. UNDERWOOD'S NEW BOOK.

HEROINES OF FREE THOUGHT.

Contents:

1. Madame Roland.
2. Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin.
3. Mary W. Godwin Shelley.
4. George Sand.
5. Harriet Martineau.
6. Frances Wright D'Armsmont.
7. Emma Martin.
8. Margaret R. Chappellsmith.
9. Ernestine L. Rose.
10. Frances Power Cobbe.
11. George Elliot.

BY

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

297 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.75.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY (3d Ed.)...$1.50
CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION..... 1.00
STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER 1.00
STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS..... 1.00
BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS, AND OTHER DISCOURSES..... 1.00
SAFEST CREED AND OTHER DISCOURSES, 12mo. Cloth..... 1.50
LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER..... 3.00
THE HISTORY OF TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND (octavo, 400 pp., with steel portrait of the author)... 2.50
THE CHAOS OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. Octavo, cloth..... 1.75
 Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

MADAME FOY'S

CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year, And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY

FOY & HARMON,

New Haven, Conn.

THOMAS PAINE:

THE METHOD and VALUE of his RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS.

A LECTURE

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

Price 10 cents, post-paid.

CHAS. M. GREEN,

18 Jacob Street, New York City.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,

LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 30 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874,

1875, and 1876,

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.

2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.

3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.

4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.

5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER,

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES..... .15

TWENTY-FIVE COPIES..... .40

FIFTY..... .75

ONE HUNDRED..... 1.50

TWO HUNDRED..... 2.40

THREE HUNDRED..... 3.60

FIVE HUNDRED..... 6.00

ONE THOUSAND..... 12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 12, 1877.

WHOLE No. 394.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental ideas on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THELUCK, the great German Evangelical scholar, has just died at Halle.

THE KING OF DAHOMEY is reported by the steamer Volta, arrived at Liverpool on July 4, to have determined to offer to his fetish a human sacrifice of five hundred of his men. The Czar is offering thousands to his.

PROFESSOR CLIFFORD, discussing in the Contemporary Review for January the "Ethics of Belief," said with sententiousness and force: "It is wrong always, everywhere, and for any one, to believe anything on insufficient evidence."

PRESIDENT MACMAHON declares the necessity of "encountering the extending radicalism of France." He can only encounter it as a dam encounters a mighty river. If he makes himself too high, he will be swept away by a torrent of his own creation.

TROUBLE is apprehended in Montreal to-day (July 12) on account of the Orangemen's annual parade. Protestantism and Catholicism in Canada are constantly disturbing the public peace with their quarrels. How hard it is for the world to learn the lesson of equal rights in religion!

THE STEAMER Queen Victoria took a number of Papal Zouaves from Ottawa to Montreal on the third of July. The Zouaves hauled down the British flag from the steamer's peak, substituted the Papal flag, and maltreated the captain for remonstrating. That is the issue the Papacy is raising in every country of the earth; and the United States will yet take her turn.

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition of the National Liberal League have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from Mr. Charles Schroeter, speaker of the Freie Gemeinde at Painesville, Wis., 98; from Mr. C. A. Seckler, Perry, Iowa, 53; from Mr. S. Gensberg, of New York city, and Mr. Wm. Fels, of Patterson, N. J., 74 (collected chiefly at Baltimore). Total thus far received—8,380.

A NEW YORK dispatch of July 2 states that "the college of Romish Cardinals have ordered the Romish clergy in France to actively support MacMahon's candidates in the coming elections." Next to the Pope, the college of Cardinals is the highest authority in the Roman Catholic hierarchy; and this order does but illustrate the mode in which the Church, conquered as it now is by the Jesuits it once proscribed, will henceforth enter politics everywhere.

THE TENDENCY of superstition to explain great disasters as interpositions of Providence has received a queer check. More than one pious believer would wince at such law as this: "The fire insurance companies are said to have refused to pay the losses by the Mount Carmel (Ill.) tornado, which caused several conflagrations by stoves being overturned among the debris, claiming that these were 'acts of God,' such as are specially excepted by the terms of the policies."

DR. THOMAS LAYTON, orator of the day at the New Orleans Catholic celebration of the Pope's Golden Jubilee, said of the Catholics: "The just rights of the State are sacred in their eyes; but they live for something more than the State. The Catholics cannot yield, and sooner or later the State must." Such sentiments as these, cherished by every sincere Catholic, are preparing national complications which will task American statesmanship to the utmost; and the prospect of its success is not flattering, when the shortsightedness of even liberal thinkers is taken into account.

NEARLY at the same time that Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant were "condemned to six months imprisonment, a fine of £200 each, and to enter into an engagement to behave well for two years," the Earl of Redesdale, in the House of Lords, exposed to the whole nation the disgusting obscenity of a book issued by the Ritualist party of the English Church, under the name of The Priest in Absolution—a manual for the guidance of priests at the confessional. This was printed by the "Society of the Holy Cross," for private circulation among clergymen; and the most respectable men among the Ritualists are implicated in it, including Rev. A. H. Mackonochie, Rev. Arthur Tooth, etc. Verily, if English law lets these churchmen escape after condemning Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant, it will be fairly open to the reproach of "straining out the gnat and swallowing the camel."

SUCH DISPATCHES as that below forbode a large, even if silent, following for such leaders as Governor Chamberlain. If any politician is imagining in the foolishness of his heart that equal rights are a dead political issue, he is destined to a rough awakening before long. Read this: "New York, June 27. A New Orleans dispatch says that the Nicholls school board proposes having distinct schools for blacks and whites. On being remonstrated with by wealthy colored men, Gov. Nicholls declined to interfere with the school board. The colored committee then stated its intention to oppose this flagrant violation of distinctive pledges and constitutional obligations, and left the Governor's presence determined to defeat and overcome the proposed violation of their common rights. The public schools of New Orleans have been common for the past ten years, and even before the war certain classes of colored citizens had access for their children to the schools."

THE PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL was opened at Edinburgh on the Fourth of July. The first business was to discuss the project of establishing "harmony of confession" among the Reformed churches. Dr. Schaff introduced the subject, and, if he is to act as chairman of a commission, the future creed is probably foreshadowed in the "Catholic Consensus of Greek, Latin, and Evangelical Christendom," contained in his just published Credo of Christendom. In this "Consensus," the very first article is given as follows: "The Divine Inspiration and Authority of the Canonical Scriptures in matters of faith and morals. (Against Rationalism)." Here is the ulterior purpose of all this pageantry of Christian consolidation—opposition to Rationalism. The new organization is to be the great sun-glass; "Christian truth" is to be the fiery luminary; and you and we are to be the fuel at the focus! Nevertheless, we shall all become ashes in a natural way, before all Christendom can be brought to re-unite on a single creed.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI E. FELSETHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAVE,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIHAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Batherville, Iowa.
 STEPHAN L. LEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. RILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 E. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quilman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 [The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.]

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....131 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....221 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston Index to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Are Protestant Churches Infallible?

BY CHARLES K. WHIFFLE.

The press has widely reported two recent depositions from the Orthodox ministry for alleged heresy, one of Rev. Mr. Miller, by a New Jersey Presbytery, the other of Rev. Dr. Augustus Blauvelt, of Kingston, N. Y., by the General Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church. The New York Evening Post of June 9th, commenting on these transactions under the heading "A Commonsense View of It," thoroughly approves the exclusion. Its approval is founded, not at all on the theological and sectarian grounds impelling the two ecclesiastical bodies, but on the following reasons:—

"In this country, since membership [in religious societies] is voluntary, and retirement from membership is voluntary, a society may with perfect propriety say to one of its associates, 'You came here of your own choice, knowing what our rules are; you are at liberty to withdraw if you do not like our rules; but so long as you are with us, we insist that you shall conform to our rules.' We do not see how this plain proposition can be answered."

The Post intensifies its condemnation of the expelled ministers by adding:—

"There is not a shadow of excuse for the disturbances which they [the Millers and the Blauvelts] create in their respective denominations, because, the moment they dissent from the faith or practice of the denomination, they may turn to other sects, who will receive them with open arms."

The Post's conclusion upon these two points, though plausible to readers unacquainted with the rules and customs of the churches in question (namely, those which call themselves "evangelical"), is unsound, in consequence of a defect in its minor premise. The member of a church of that class, who, after fair trial, finds the Church's position unsatisfactory because unsound, and therefore wishes to leave it, is not at liberty to withdraw quietly and reputably, as he entered. If he chooses to go at all hazards, of course they cannot keep him; but their rules and customs require that a discreditable stigma shall be affixed to him, which is entered upon their records, and published to their community, and inevitably made known, through them, to the community at large. Substantially, the cry of "mad dog" is raised by the church after any member withdrawing in this manner, and that equally whether he is seeking freedom from the restraints of religion and morality, or whether, being more religious than the church, he finds it neither suited to promote his spiritual welfare, nor willing to profit by his admonition.

The Orthodox churches assume that he who enters one of them is a member for life, unless either honorably transferred to the membership of some church theologically like-minded, or expelled with the stigma of immorality or of heterodoxy. This rule, expressed more or less distinctly in the "covenants" of not a few of them, is held as the right ground of practice in the whole Orthodox communion. The case of Henry Ward Beecher's church in Brooklyn is the single exception which proves the rule. He and his church are the big flies, which unceremoniously break through the webs of custom and prescription. They are so big, and wield so much influence, that the other churches of that persuasion, even under the able leadership of Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon, have not been able to enforce discipline against them. But none the less sufficient is the web to hold any smaller fly which should attempt to break it. The rule of allowing the departure of a member only by regular dismissal to a sister church, or by excommunication, is still the rule, and still regulates the custom, of the entire body of Orthodox churches.

The Post meets this fact, and seems plausibly to dispose of it by saying the dissenting member knew this rule when he joined the church, and so, having voluntarily come under it, he is bound to acquiesce in it. Nevertheless, there are other facts vitally connected with the case, which may go far to justify a different conclusion.

It is true, not only that he who joins an Orthodox church understands his union with it to be for life, but that he rejoices and triumphs in the permanence of the relation, considering it the height of happiness and welfare. He takes this view in consequence of believing what he has heard taught from childhood by the ministers of that church, and apparently acquiesced in by his parents and teachers and the most pious people of his acquaintance; namely, that the articles of the creed upon which the Church is founded are absolute and unquestionable truth, proved such by being founded on the Bible, which is God's Word to men, an inspired and infallible record of the facts and doctrines properly belonging to religion. Those who accept and enter upon church membership in the sects called Orthodox do so on the ground that these pretensions of the Church and assertions of its ministry are sound and true; that, by joining that party, they at once fulfil a duty and obtain an inestimable privilege, putting themselves on God's side, and joining his chosen ones to do his work in the world.

Such is the beginning of the new convert's life. He lives by faith, and his faith is capacious as well as undoubting. He believes in the Church just as he believes in God. Is it not God's institution, his appointed instrument for the conversion of the world, directed by his providence, guided by his book, and enlightened by his spirit? The repetitions of the pulpit, heard Sunday after Sunday from childhood upwards, and obviously accepted as truth by the most devout people he knows, seem to give him perfect assurance that in yielding to their call he is putting himself on the side of God and of truth, and will never need to change. It is these ideas and feelings, the direct result of the Church's action upon the susceptible mind of the new convert, which induce him to promise that he never will change.

But what if, coming sooner or later to the conviction that he ought more perfectly to understand the theological basis of his creed, and seeking to confirm by knowledge what he had accepted from the Church by faith, what if conscientious examination shows him that he has been grossly misled by the Church's assumptions? What if he finds that, among the doctrines which he has received as undoubtedly true on the authority of the catechism, the pulpit, the creed, the scriptural commentary, and the rules and customs of the Church, some are unproved, unreasonable, and improbable, and others are thoroughly disproved? What if he finds strong reason to believe that the reciprocal relations between God and man, and the duties of human beings to God, themselves, and their fellow-creatures, are materially different from what the Church has assumed and taught concerning them? What if full and fair trial has shown him that connection with the Church and conformity to its ways of thinking and acting are a hindrance rather than a help to his efforts to lead a right life?

The supposititious case above sketched is the case in which a very large number of men and women actually now find themselves; and the number seems increasing, year by year, with the progress of scientific investigation, and the wider acceptance of the idea that freedom of inquiry, and judgment according to evidence, are not only rights but duties; and duties preeminently in the sphere of religion, where the Church has always stigmatized them as dangerous and sinful. This change is coming inevitably, and irresistibly, over the minds of more and more of the people of New England and of the great West; and even a proportion of Mr. Moody's captives in both sections of the country, who, after having "got religion" in a moment of excited feeling, have been placed by that skilful operator in the grasp of the machinery which is to make church-members of them, will by-and-by discern how their confidence has been abused and their career misdirected.

But, if the obligation rests upon every man to follow truth, in spite of entanglements in which previous error may have involved him, this duty makes most emphatic appeal to the minister, whose special business it is to find and diffuse truth in the departments of theology and religion. Take the cases of Mr. Miller and Dr. Blauvelt, whose integrity, devoutness of spirit, and honesty of purpose are admitted by all parties. By faithfulness in the search for truth, and in the utterance of it when found, reproach, instead of grateful approval, has befallen them from the ecclesiastical authorities of their respective denominations. But it was their youthful veneration for these very authorities which originally led them into error. They now find that their supposed conversion was in part perversion; that the body of doctrine which persuasion from the Church and the clergy induced them to accept and subscribe to was in part false doctrine. Does the delusion into which they were thus led by the best and purest impulses, devoutness, humility, and reverence for supposed wisdom and goodness, suffice to annul the prior and perpetual obligation to seek truth, to dig for it as for hid treasure, and to declare it when found? Above all, are the proved deluders and misleaders to stand triumphant in the judge's place, and frown upon, censure, punish, and silence those whom they led into the wrong path, but who, by faithfulness greater than theirs, have escaped from their false position?

To accept new truth when discovered, and manfully to declare his acceptance of it, seems a duty which the minister owes to himself, to his character, to his integrity. But the two ministers of whom I have been speaking owe a special duty to their parishioners also. Deluded themselves by the Church's teaching, they have (innocently, because unconsciously,) been active in extending the delusion among their hearers. They have spent years in teaching what they now find needs to be untaught; and they must inevitably feel some sense of responsibility to the persons thus misled, and a desire personally to rectify an error which, with the best intentions, they see themselves to have committed. Is the technical objection of their obligation to fulfil an agreement for the benefit of the party which had deceived them in the contract, to outweigh the other obligation, of restitution to those whom they have wronged? This would be to sacrifice the greater to the less.

Moreover, looking at priority of time in the matters in question, it seems to me that the rightful position of Mr. Miller and Dr. Blauvelt is that of accusers and not of defendants. They made the agreement which the Church now insists upon, after, and in consequence of, the delusion practiced upon their inexperience by the Church. They were first entrapped into signing what they ought not to have signed. If their own loss only were in question, it might possibly be well enough to let the technical objection rule, and allow themselves to be expelled as unfaithful and guilty persons; but, considering their intellectual and spiritual relation to their respective congregations, and the right of those congregations to share in the light newly gained by their teachers, those teachers were right, it seems to me, in exposing the origin of the errors in question, and spreading before the public the evidence in regard to those errors.

All Protestants clearly see the unsoundness of the Church position here treated of when it is exemplified in the doctrine and practice of the Papacy. When a Roman Catholic, venturing to look for himself into the evidence of the doctrine which has been taught him, finds the evidence deficient and the doctrine erroneous, and joins some church which seems to him to stand on a better foundation, every Protestant will approve both his wisdom in examining and his courage in acting; will maintain his right first to inquire, and then to act in accordance with his conviction; and will brand as persecution the action of the priest who publicly curses him, and warns the congregation against him as a vicious and dangerous character. But the difference between the Roman and the Orthodox Protestant churches is one of degree only, not of kind. Each discourages that sort of examination which assumes the possibility of error in its own position, and views the question in regard to its doctrine as an open one, to be decided this way or that, according to the evidence; each claims a right to hold for life the person who has once joined it, irrespective of his discovery of preponderating evidence on the other side; and each stigmatizes as criminal the person who, having found such evidence, ventures to act upon it.

The error common to both churches, I may say to all or nearly all churches, is the attempt to set bounds to the discovery of truth; to decide that certain specified propositions shall always be held as truth, irrespective of new light which advancing intelligence may throw upon them. This doctrine must necessarily have the same pernicious effect in religion and theology as it had on astronomy in the time of Galileo, and as it would still have on astronomy if still applied there. Wherever applied, this doctrine not only obstructs scientific inquiry and bars out knowledge in that department, but tends to an arrest of intellectual development. The fact that it is still so applied in church-matters, among Protestants as well as Romanists, explains the fact that not one in a hundred of either faith can give adequate reasons for his belief. If one of them, even when intelligent in other matters, ventures to answer an inquiry concerning the grounds of his faith, his answer will be found, on analysis, to amount only to this: that his religious teachers have assured him that there are good grounds for it; just what would be said with the same confidence by any Buddhist or any Mussulman to the missionary sent to convert him.

While we rejoice that the Church can no longer condemn free thought and free speech to the stake or the dungeon, we should remember that every step of the progress of science and civilization in this department has been resisted by the Church to the extent of its power; and we should honor those courageous men who, in publishing what seems to them important truth, brave opposition and reproach so considerable as the clergy can yet visit upon those who dissent from their doctrines.

SPENCER'S SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIOLOGY. By Herbert Spencer. Vol. I. 12mo. pp. 734. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.

The general verdict seems to be that this is the most interesting and successful of Mr. Spencer's works. Even from those whose judgments are adverse, or are suspended in regard to the great synthetic system of philosophy, to which he has devoted his life, there are expressions of surprise at the new and strange light his researches throw over the rise and growth of the religions and social customs for which a divine origin has been generally assumed.

To those, however, who are favorably inclined to the new philosophy—the successful indication of the main scientific laws that underlie and explain the conditions and progress of all human societies in their ever varying phases—will seem to assure victory along the whole line.

There is much to encourage the friends of Mr. Spencer in this view. For, after all, is not the main question, the question of our age, simply this: Is there, or can there be, any such science as sociology? There is a large literature, ever increasing, seeking to answer this question, and thus calling attention to its importance, theoretical and practical. How practical it is, a moment's thought will show; for, if there is or can be such a science, then the opinions of mankind, the government of society, and the education and morality of its members ought to pass, and in time must pass, from our present religious, political, and social rulers into the hands of those who can understand and apply the laws of this science. Nor can there be a reasonable doubt but that the scientific method and influences, if properly applied to our social order, would greatly relieve those miseries which too often, and to so many, make life a curse.

A new system of social philosophy, then, from the scientific standpoint, if not a failure, is indeed a great event. It may mean an immense and far-reaching change in human affairs, however slow and gradual its advent may be.

It is agreed at the outset by all, that Science can give no solution of man and his societies until she can give us an explanation or philosophy of the world in which he lives, and of which he is, in the scientific view, the highest organic result. It is evident, therefore, that any opinion about Mr. Spencer's sociology must be worthless, which does not rest upon some knowledge of this "synthetic philosophy" of which it is a part, and perhaps the key-stone.

It is now about fifteen years since the attention of thinking people of both hemispheres was called to the attempt of Mr. Spencer to elaborate human knowledge into one grand synthetic system of philosophy. The notice received less regard than it otherwise would from the belief that the work proposed was more than one man could ever accomplish, especially under the conditions of delicate health and limited means. But the intellectual hero has toiled on, regardless of the indifference of the stupid, and the ridicule of those who ought to have known better, until now the world is beginning to speculate about the danger of his success. We have already before us First Principles (1 vol.); Principles of Biology (2 vols.); Principles of Psychology (2 vols.); and the Principles of Sociology, of which the second volume is in preparation. The prospectus of the whole course has also been published, together with the essays and minor works of Mr. Spencer in several volumes, from which the general scope and burden of his synthesis is apparent.

The undertaking is grand and justifiable. It is the attempt of one "who has made all knowledge his province," to organize that knowledge into a philosophy by means of one, or of a few general laws prevailing throughout all phenomena, material, social, and mental. If this synthesis can be achieved, it will eventually place in the hands of man a power over the world, over society, and over himself, of which the consequences are incalculable in extent and beneficence.

In the strictly scientific point of view, also, the new synthesis is needed. About 1600, the Copernican astronomy swept away the Old World, and gave mankind a new environment. Modern science is the attempt to know and realize that world; modern life and society the attempt to become adapted to it. Science has conquered the material, vegetal, and animal, and now threatens the social world; but she is overwhelmed by her own victories. She cannot administer the provinces she has conquered. Her officers in charge of them are disorganized specialists, generally under half pay from the enemy, and without any knowledge of their comparative relations, and therefore of the values of their respective departments. From such a host cooperation for social influence, government, or education is practically impossible. Nothing can bring order out of this chaos of opinion but a general positive synthesis, that will discredit the half-hearted specialists as no longer worthy of the scientific name the moment they talk of the limits of her empire.

That this work is superfluous may be claimed by the adherents of Auguste Comte. They say that he did this work once, and that he did it well. How well, the comparatively independent labors of Mr. Spencer will enable the world to judge better than ever before. Comte may be, as Mr. John Fiske intimates, the Copernicus of sociology; but what his life and works mean, we shall see better after the Galileo and Newton of the new science reveal to us the world in which he really lived. The new philosophy is not the product of any one philosopher or sect, and all attempts to synthesize, or restate it, whether as the positive, synthetic, cosmic, or experimental philosophy, can but add to its clearness, sufficiency and strength.

There is no room for a summary of Mr. Spencer's philosophy here. For the reader is referred to his works, from which alone a competent knowledge can be obtained. Nor, as to the final success of the undertaking, would a prophecy be in place. How far that great, patient, thought-worn brain shall be able to draw together the lines of the world-thought, and place them in the hands of the world-controllers, only the result can show. But one thing the history of all similar efforts do show: that is, that in the end it will be judged by its practical utility, usus coronabit opus. It must culminate in some direct, practical, religious influence upon the social and individual life of mankind, or the great labor will have been in vain. The word synthetic must become religious, in the scientific sense of that word, when the philosophy reaches man and society.

But before that, and while we are being called to its first study of society, it may be well to try to brush away some objections to the whole philosophy that may stand in the way of its social application. If this is done, the Sociology will need fewer words. The objections are: That the law of evolution is a law of the organic and social kingdoms only, and has no application to the material world; that the classification of the sciences should follow the order of phenomena from the more general to the more special; that the "unknowable" has no religious, scientific, or social value.

1. The point of the first objection appears from a glance at the common or positive classification of the sciences, which may be condensed as follows:—

- |                           |  |
|---------------------------|--|
| 1. THE MINERAL KINGDOM.   | (Astronomy, 8.Physics, 7.Chemistry, 6.(Protistology).)   |
| 2. THE VEGETABLE KINGDOM. | (Vegetal Physiology, 5.(Botany).)                                |
| 3. THE ANIMAL KINGDOM.    | (Animal Physiology, 4.(Zoology).)                                |
| 4. THE HUMAN KINGDOM.     | (Sociology, 3.Morality (Ethics) 2.Psychology (Education) 1.) |

Now, it is claimed that the great laws of gravity, correlation, and chemical combination make the synthesis of the mineral, i. e., the material kingdom and its special sciences, and that evolution has no place there; that "stones do not grow," and that fluids and gases are like them in that respect; that the crystals and vapors are formed, but never evolved from each other; that the attempt to apply this law to inanimate matter, is an attempt to biologize the cosmos, just as materialism is the reverse error of applying the laws and properties of matter to vital and mental phenomena.

It is true that Mr. Spencer has made the law of evolution the back-bone of his philosophy, and sought to find instances of it, and to give it a kind of meaning in regard to the material world. Suppose him to be all wrong in this, it does not invalidate the application of the law where it does prevail; to wit, in the protoplasmic world of plants, animals, and societies. In them this law, which he has grasped so firmly, and elucidated so beautifully, makes possible the synthesis that completes what the other great laws we have named had already been made to do in the material world before Mr. Spencer became a philosopher. He very properly omits any review of these material sciences in his work as being unnecessary, and he would probably have escaped the present objection entirely, had it not been for the "nebular hypothesis." The ingenuity and time he has wasted upon this flimsy hypothesis is greatly to be regretted, for it seems to discredit his whole philosophy. That it was a hypothesis should have kept it beyond his reach until observed verification had placed it beyond doubt. The aggregation hypothesis of Mr. Proctor (Other Worlds than Ours, chap. 9), makes it probable that our solar system has a very different and a much pleasanter future from that imagined by Mr. Spencer in those concluding chapters of First Principles, which seem to be written to justify Byron's "Dream of Darkness." Which of these hypotheses is the more accurate, the observation of future ages may show, and then the trust of them will be added to the philosophy of the "knowable." Meanwhile we must wait.

Let it be remembered that the sciences of logic and mathematics and of the material world had been co-ordinated before Mr. Spencer began his labors, and that they are incorporated—though he does not especially treat of them—as the foundation of his synthesis. Bearing that in mind, the "nebular hypothesis," and all appertaining thereto, may be brushed away without the slightest danger, and, probably, to the great improvement of his system.

But the moment we pass from the material to the organic or protoplasmic world, we meet the new and great facts of life, growth, evolution,—of differentiation and integration; and of them, and of that world, the written part of Mr. Spencer's philosophy is the great explanation. He it was who took the law of evolution in its rude form from the earlier biologists, and has proved it to be the great synthetic law throughout the higher register of the sciences, as Newton did the law of gravity through the lower. His great work on biology, to be read with the explanatory works of Darwin, Huxley, and Haeckel, is the organic world displayed. Such works are absolutely necessary to prepare the student for the study of the succeeding sciences of psychology, sociology, and ethics. It is clear that people have no means of forming, and have no right to have opinions about the subjects of these latter sciences, until they have become familiar with the rudiments and processes of biology.

2. The next objection is, that Mr. Spencer has adopted a classification of the sciences that breaks the back of his philosophy in two places, and so makes three isolated disconnected departments, but never a whole. He divides the sciences into the abstract sciences, dealing with relations; viz., logic and mathematics. Then abstract-concrete, dealing with properties; viz., physics and chemistry. Then concrete sciences, dealing with aggregates; viz., astronomy, geology, biology, psychology, sociology, ethics. One is amused to find astronomy and psychology in the same department. The child, the savage, the philosopher, have seen that the world is easiest divided into animals, vegetables, and minerals. The philosophers have found the best classification to be the subdivision of these great kingdoms into sub-classes of phenomena with their respective sciences, proceeding from the more simple and general to the more limited and special, from the infinite and the stars to man. So it has seemed best to Comte, Mill, Bain, and the mass of scientific philosophers.

Mr. Spencer has set his face resolutely against all this. On this subject he is ready to meet child, savage, and philosopher with the herosim of Mrs. Partridge, and we think with a similar result. The old classification is too simple, true, and useful to be ever dislodged. It needs no defence from Mr. Spencer's objections to those who have learned to think by it and to apply it.

The objection to Mr. Spencer's classification is, not that it is not true from his point of view, but that, as Mr. Mill says, it serves no useful purpose. It seems to serve the contrary, for it has probably to answer for his unfortunate treatment of nebulae to a course of biology; though the reverse may be the case, the celestial biology may be the father of the classification,—each worthy progeny of the other.

The point to be observed is that Mr. Spencer's synthesis is really truer and better understood on the old classification than on his own. Even the nebular hypothesis, as a part of astronomy treated under the laws of matter instead of life, becomes innocent enough, and was so treated by Comte.

This unsatisfactory classification fortunately makes no trouble when we reach the organic world, which Mr. Spencer has chiefly elaborated, unless it be in his treatment of psychology before sociology. The point may be taken that man did not acquire a soul, in any proper sense of the term, except by the transition of brute into man, and that this transition was made by society. That the mental life of man was therefore a social product, and is intelligible only as a deduction and counterpart of social progress, and should have been investigated after instead of before sociology. In short, that Mr. Spencer's work on Psychology is a philosophical anachronism.

But this objection, if well taken, may be obviated. If by psychology is meant the science of sensation, it should have been included as a part of biology, and may be read as such. If it be admitted that the rise and growth of the Ego, that is, of human consciousness, is a social product, Mr. Spencer's present work presents the investigation that should be read before his Psychology. He indeed argues that the very conception of the Ego arose from the effort of the dreamer to separate himself from his dream-self—his alter Ego—(Sociology, p. 157). Certainly, the processes of reasoning analyzed in his Psychology take-for granted the highest stages of civilization. Is not the individual, then, the result of society, and inexplicable without it? If so, should not the explanation of the Ego be the result of all science and psychology, and stand as the last science in the order of the special sciences? Even if so, Mr. Spencer will doubtless include in his Ethics, or some subsequent work of his system, the parts that seem to be omitted in his Psychology.

*How flimsy, the little book called Modern Genesis, by Rev. W. B. Slaughter (Nelson & Phillips of New York, publishers), noticed in the Library Table of May 31, 1877, will help the reader to know.

3. The next objection is that Mr. Spencer has presented the unknowable as the basis of religion, and so has foreclosed himself from rendering his system one of use in controlling the feelings and lives of men. In other words, his whole system is an infertile hybrid, born of science and metaphysics. "The unknowable absolute is the monothelistic development of Fetichism," says Mr. Lewes, in his Problems of Life and Mind (p. 396); and, again, he says religion cannot be successfully founded on the Unknowable; "for religion which is to explain the universe and regulate life must be founded on the known and knowable relations." Certain it is that the religious value of the Infinite in the hands of theologians has been in proportion to its supposed knowability. In order to keep a foothold for any religion at all they have had to rebel against the logic of Sir William Hamilton, Dean Mansel, and Herbert Spencer. Drs. Calderwood and McCosh declare the Infinite to be in some way knowable, and practically treat it as a person; and only thus can they make "it explain the universe and regulate life."

But it does not follow that the unknowable is to have anything to do with regulating life in Mr. Spencer's synthesis. Even if not, it still answers two most useful purposes: it stands as the fundamental and innocent conception upon which the cosmos can be imagined to rest as if in infinite space; and it is the grave of all the ghosts and fetiches, big and little, which have haunted and cursed the earth since man began to imagine. It serves a religious purpose, therefore, in founding and explaining the universe, and it may subserve a religious purpose, also, in giving man his freedom from the ghosts, and leaving him to explain the world by law, and only by law. For, thereby, he obtains the knowledge of the cosmos, by which only he can intelligently regulate his life. But it may not be necessary to look to the unknowable for the regulation of life. The work before us discloses society as an organism lying between man and the world. It is the humanity, the "immortal individual" of Pascal, Comte, and Goethe, co-extensive with the human race in time and space. This fact is of the profoundest meaning. What are and should be man's relations to that grand organism? The answer to this question will show how life should be regulated; and the consequences near and remote will furnish the motive and the joy of life. Mr. Spencer will have to meet these questions far away from the unknowable: to wit, in sociology and in the sciences nearest to man; and when he touches them, no matter by what names, he will give us the substance of religion, theoretical and practical.

With these general reflections, we turn to his last work—the Sociology. T. B. WAKEMAN.
—Library Table, June 21.

AGITATION IN THE SCOTTISH CHURCH.

Ever since Thomas Carlyle introduced to the youth of Scotland the learning and literature of Germany, Scotland has been more or less stirred up with the leaven of rationalism. In spite of the strong safeguards which the ecclesiastical system of Scotland throws around the faith once delivered to the saints, Calvin and Knox, enough of the leaven has been able to find its way to the brain ecclesiastical there as to cause more or less uneasiness to those who feel themselves charged with the important trust of keeping sound the Orthodoxy of the people. At no period in the history of the Kirk have "new lights" been more numerous or more outspoken than now. Since the days of the famous ten years' discussion touching the "headship of Christ," as against the headship of the Crown, culminating in the "disruption" of 1843, there has not been such deep and general commotion as now. It was truly a grand sight, as Lord Brougham once remarked on the floor of the House of Commons, to see three hundred ministers of the Kirk turn their backs upon manse, glebe, and stipends, rather than be disloyal to the idea that the Church and not the Crown should decide as to the qualifications of a minister for his office; and never since the days of the Reformation has there been seen in any branch of the Church a more sublime spectacle of self-sacrificing devotion to a principle than that presented by some of the ministers of the Free Church of Scotland in that memorable 1843. The Crown, through the civil courts, said, in effect, "We furnish the churches, the manse, and the glebe, and pay the stipends, and insist on saying who shall enjoy them." The Church said, "You may do as you please with your temporalities; but in spiritual affairs we are supreme." At the point of the bayonet, in one or two instances men were inducted to office over a people unwilling to receive them, and the Kirk was rent in twain. The voluntary system has proved successful beyond the most sanguine anticipations, although for many years numbers looked longingly back to the flesh-pots of the Crown-supported Establishment, for almost all believed themselves unjustly deprived of their rights as to the emoluments from the Crown. But a great change has at length come over the Free Church, and she now unites with other dissenting bodies, the Independents, and the U. P. Presbyterians, in pleading for "disestablishment and disendowment," and that, to-day, is the skeleton in the closet of the established Kirk.

But she is not alone in having a skeleton. The U. P. and the free churches have each got one of their own. While for years those bodies kept themselves clear of all taint of heterodoxy, and could with some degree of chuckling point to one and another in the Establishment who were hardly "sound," and could say with some show of reason that Establishments tend to foster heresy, they have now to deal with heresy, deep-rooted and widespread, within their own folds. In the U. P. Church are such men as David Macrae, Fergus Ferguson, and George Gilfillan, anxious and earnest for a revision, if not a shelving, of the venerable instrument of theological torture to the German-tainted Scotch mind, the Westminster Confession of Faith. In the Free Church, Professor Robertson Smith, of the Divinity School at Aberdeen, has proved a very firebrand by his article on the word "Bible," furnished to the new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica. And so, what with disestablishment meetings on the one hand and presbytery meetings to try for heresy on the other, Scotland is in a fair way to have lively times. Rev. Dr. Wallace, late of Grey Friars Church, Edinburgh, and late incumbent of the chair of ecclesiastical history in the university, but now editor-in-chief of the widely-read Scotsman (newspaper), a man of liberal sentiments and sound learning, keeps the public intelligently informed on all ecclesiastical and theological matters; and as the Scottish mind takes as naturally to metaphysics and theology as the Scottish stomach takes kindly to oatmeal and whiskey, there is no probability that interest in the awakened discussion will flag there even through the dog-days, or that the skeletons above alluded to will cease to haunt for many a day to come.

Rev. David Macrae, in his Jonesbytery, brings forward a motion that "the subordinate standard of the Church" (meaning the Westminster Confession of Faith) "be either set aside altogether, or brought into harmony with the supreme standard" (the Bible) "and the actual belief of the Church"; and in a speech characterized by much frankness of expression as to his own belief, and much freedom as to the real belief of his ministerial brethren, has aroused something more than a hornet's nest about his ears. He is not without some support from the clergy, although it is as much as a man's life-ecclesiastical is worth to do as he has done. Rev. Fergus Ferguson finds himself in the same, or even a worse plight, for a certain Elder Wilson has had him libelled for heresy. At a recent meeting of the Synod of Glasgow, where the matter of revision of the standards was discussed, the following clause of a declaration by that body seems to be levelled at Mr. Ferguson: "The synod strongly disapproves of and condemns the conduct of those persons who, having solemnly professed to give their assent to these standards, do, notwithstanding, indulge in denouncing them as erroneous and unscriptural, and in impeaching their brethren of the eldership and the ministry with not believing and not preaching the doctrine of them." This led Mr. Ferguson to determine on the resignation of his charge as minister of the Queen's Park Church of Glasgow; but, at the earnest solicitation of some of his ministerial brethren, he has been induced to withhold it. Meantime, the work of the committee appointed to consider whether he has been sufficiently guilty of heresy to enable the presbytery to cut him off from exercising his ministerial function, goes on, and, in all probability, he will be suspended, which is, virtually, expulsion. But, whether he be or not, the war will go against the now antiquated dogmas of the confession, for the school-master is at work in Scotland, and the scientific method and rational spirit is in the air, and is "dreadfully catching," and that once very Orthodox land may now be called the land of heresy.

In the Free Church the difficulty is even worse; for has it not been discovered that one of the very men set to the work of keeping the stream of theological supply clear of all heresy has been poisoning that stream with German notions about the Bible? The chief cause of offence is in the fact that Professor Smith has written in his Bible article that some of the books ascribed to Moses could not have been written by him, inasmuch as institutions are alluded to and described which it is now well-known did not come into existence till seven or eight hundred years after the time of Moses. A committee was appointed to look into the matter. The committee reported, and in the report they said that, while they regarded with very grave concern some of Professor Smith's teachings, and regarded their influence as dangerous, and calculated to awaken suspicion as to the infallible inspiration of the Scriptures, they yet could not say that he was open to the charge of heresy; at least not so open as to justify them in "libelling" him for that offence. This did not satisfy those in the Church who think John Knox knew what was Orthodox, and the matter has been before the public mind during the whole of the last year. Pamphlets have been numerous, and newspaper articles innumerable; and now the General Assembly, which has just closed its sessions at Edinburgh, has, by a vote of four hundred and ninety-one to one hundred and thirteen, suspended the unlucky man, under suspicion that his teaching has a dangerous and unsettling influence and tendency. But the General Assembly, it seems, has done a thing without precedent, and, according to Professor Candlish and others, is contrary to the constitutional law of the Church. When Professor Smith's case came up in the Assembly, that gentleman came forward in a manly way and said, inasmuch as suspicions had arisen as to the soundness of his teaching, and as he felt the importance of being cleared of all such suspicion, he would, at the next meeting of his presbytery, request that all the charges against him be reduced to the form of a libel, and he be judicially tried by that body. Pending this trial he should be suspended. There would have been time for this trial, and he found guilty or acquitted before the meeting of his college classes next fall. This was and the former had given notice of the motion which looked to the immediate suspension of the learned professor. Discussion proceeded on this motion, and while it was ruled that the merits of the case should not be entered upon, it was difficult to restrain the speakers. Professor Candlish opposed the motion, and proposed another which looked to another mode of procedure, viz., to wait for the judgment of the Aberdeen Presbytery; but it was of little use, and when a vote was finally taken it was with the result above given. It is a significant fact that the result of the vote when announced was received with cheers by the house, but with hisses from the students' gallery, indicating clearly what is the temper of the young blood of the Church. Professor Candlish then gave the following reasons of dissent, which were signed by thirty-four members: "For myself and all who may adhere to me and dissent from this decision; first, because to require Professor Smith to cease from discharging his duties as professor before any charge against him has been formulated is at variance with the law of this Church, and without precedent in its history; second, because it does material and grave injustice to him; third, because, on the same grounds on which this is done, he might be permanently suspended from his professorial office without regular process by way of libel; fourth, because the object aimed at in the decision could have been secured by the regular operations of the laws of the Church." From all of which it can be seen just what is in store for the Church, in the way of discussion at least. It is a noticeable fact in relation to this whole case of Professor Smith's suspicious teachings, that no one has attempted to show that his views are not well supported by sound learning, and arrived at after careful and critical examination of the questions; nor does any one seem to doubt that Professor Smith is better qualified to deliver an opinion on the question in hand than any of those who seek to cut him off. The question with these "defenders of the faith" does not seem to be what is truth in this relation, but what is allowed by the laws of the Church. Professor Smith does not deny the inspiration of the Scriptures; nay, he asserts he believes in it, according to the requirements of the standards; but the difficulty seems to be how to render harmonious and consistent with the Orthodox notion of inspiration the conclusion which in his critical and scientific investigations, he has been led to. He seems to have no particular difficulty himself, any more than Dean Stanley has, in subscribing to the Thirty-nine Articles of his Church, and yet holding views as broad and catholic as most men. But whatever may become of Professor Smith (and from the indications it seems hardly possible he can ever teach or preach again in that body), it is not probable that the learning and spirit of critical inquiry which has led him to write as he has written is going to be suppressed. But is it not likely that such proceedings as those just concluded at Edinburgh will deter young men of ability and independence from entering a ministry where they must leave behind them all hope of progress in theological science, and be content with the results of the ancient Westminster divines? Is there not some danger that suspicions may be awakened that the views of this branch of the Church, while they may be "Orthodox," are yet not defensible on grounds of sound reason, and cannot bear the light of learned and critical examination? Let the doctors take heed, and learn the supreme importance of asking the previous question, what is truth, rather than what is Free Church Orthodoxy.—Sunday Herald, June 24.

RUSSIAN PERSECUTION.

The correspondence recently produced (in a parliamentary paper "On the Treatment of the Members of the United Greek Church of Russia") shows the Russian government to have followed the precedent of Louis XIV. with the most exact fidelity. No doubt the prejudice of the Imperial Russian authorities against the United Greeks, like that of the French Royal persecutor against the French Protestants, was at first and at bottom political. The Uniat Greeks were suspected of Polish sympathies, as, indeed, is everybody in Russia who belongs to a religious community connected, however remotely, with the Western branch of the Christian Church. The first measure taken against them, and prompted by this suspicion, was a close counterpart of the earliest aggressions on the Protestants. The Uniat Greeks were declared to have innovated on their primitive religious usages and ancient ritual; they had borrowed from the Latins such damnable inventions as organs and benches; the iconostasis in their churches exhibited heterodox features; there was no "Imperial odor." Accordingly, a peremptory order was received from St. Petersburg that the Greco-Uniat rites should be cleared from everything Latin. The oppressiveness of such a direction is only less remarkable than its hypocrisy. For there is no more disputed question in ecclesiastical history than the original condition of the Uniat Greeks. Each of the contending churches—Latin and Greek, Papal and Orthodox—vehemently asserts that they naturally belong to its fold, and differ from the rest of its flock merely from having been corrupted by its sectarian enemies. But the received historical account of their present institution, under which they acknowledge the Papal supremacy, but have married priests and a vernacular liturgy, is that given in these papers by Vice-Consul Webster, who traces them to the ecclesiastical status quo before the final separation of the Greeks from the Latins. In any case, an order to the Uniat Greeks to clear their rites from everything Latin is extremely like an act of Parliament enjoining on the Church of England that it so purify itself from everything not recognized by primitive Christianity. Such an ordinance, begging as it does a most prodig-not enough for such men as Drs. Wilson and Begg, lously difficult, historical question, is in effect a mere violent piece of oppression, and as such it was regarded by the Unit Greeks. They displayed, as the Russian Minister of the Interior puts it, "religious fanaticism and stubborn resistance." Like the French Protestants, they went out into the desert. Then followed the persecutions, which Colonel Mansfield, writing as Consul-General from Warsaw, called "massacres." "The mortality among the peasantry bivouacking in the forests in the severe weather was frightful. . . . Orders have been given to the Cossacks to hunt them back into the villages, so that the peasants bivouacking have been constantly on the move, retreating by hanging the Cossacks here and there when in isolated parties." In one district, the peasants defied the military to introduce the strange priest. As a measure of repression, fifty blows with the Cossack whip were given to every adult man, twenty-five to every woman, and ten to every child, irrespective of age and sex. One "fanatical" woman received a hundred blows.

"Having exiled the Bishop to Viatka," says Vice-Consul Webster, "and deported some twenty thousand of his followers to Saratoff and other provinces, the government sent Russian priests to proselytize the rest. . . . There now remain about sixty thousand Unitas, all of them small land-owners. As they will not change their religion, the government persecutes them by putting them in prison, by flogging them, and by billeting Cossack troops, who commit every license, in their villages." And the tragi-comedy ends, precisely as did the French preface to the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, by the return of the United Greeks in a mass to the bosom of the Orthodox Church. The Official Gazette described the ceremony of re-admission with pompous solemnity. The United Greek clergy of Chelm, with the Archbishop Popiel at their head, were received at the Winter Palace by the Emperor, who had just attended divine service. They presented their humble petition, soliciting reunion with the Holy Orthodox Eastern Church, "which was the Church of their fathers." The Emperor replied in an address which, now that the whole history of the previous transaction is before us, it is difficult not to call blasphemous. "Having listened with peculiar pleasure to your declarations, I above all thank God, whose ineffable goodness has inspired you with the wholesome thought of returning to the bosom of the Orthodox Church. . . . I thank you for the consolation you give me. I believe in your sincerity, and I pray God to support you in the course which you have just deliberately adopted."—Pall Mall Gazette, April 21, 1877.

PROFESSOR ADLER AT FLORENCE.

The lecture of Prof. Felix Adler, of New York, was attended at Cosmian Hall, last Sunday, by a large audience. The speaker was eloquent, as expected. He said:—

"A great conflict is raging. The battle between science and the old religious beliefs has been waged now for years and years, and is not by any means over yet. We are entering a new age, with new conceptions and new ideas. These conceptions, called the new ideal, offer a rich mine of generous motives and make us stronger and greater men. The old ideal, especially that of the middle ages, is passing away steadily from among us. It was a supernatural, transcendental idea, which regarded man as an exile from the kingdom on high, hoping continually to return there, if he only passed his life here in prayer and devotion, and dismissed from his mind all earthly cares and troubles. Slowly and by degrees have we learned to appreciate Nature in its true light. We have found that the human body is not alien to the mind within it. The new ideal makes us regard ourselves as the sovereigns and creators of the world, and presses us onward to new and better thoughts, while the old ideal emphasizes prayer and supplication. In these supplications a request was often made to the Deity as if he were a man. There were also prayers for rain, for good crops, and plenty of children, that the villages might be populated. In many American churches to-day prayers are offered on certain occasions that must be considered not only an insult to our intelligence, but also a direct contradiction of the belief in an all-wise Providence. When people pray in time of drought for a moderate rain, or at any time pray for seasonable weather, the modern view of the new ideal enters its emphatic protest against these prayers. The laws of Nature are never broken. The rains and winds follow their bidden course, regardless of prayers. The world is a cosmos, and to pray for its disarrangement is simply monstrous. It is to pray for its virtual destruction. The very men who profess to believe in an all-wise, great ruler, are the very first to belie their professions by indulging in such prayers. The disarrangement of a single part of the world's machinery would destroy the harmonious working of the whole. The new ideal teaches that as time proceeds all will be better. Mankind will submit with better dignity and greater fortitude to the inevitable. It teaches us to look forward in ages yet to come to a race of men brighter and stronger than those ever seen. In the remote future these men will reap what we have sown, and they will gather the fruition of our labors. The old ideal professed to see in the past ages the very best that was ever given to man. The oracles then spoke, and whatever they uttered was regarded as imperishable truth. Not so says the new ideal. It does not throw contempt upon the entire past, but, while gauging it at its true value, it nevertheless looks to the future with greater hope. The circle of duty in which we move is not as yet wide enough; but mankind begins to understand that the more we advance under the inspiration of the new ideal, the more exacting will become our duties, not only as citizens of a great country, but as members of the great brotherhood of man.—Hampshire County (Mass.) Journal, June 30.

AN APPEAL TO THE THINKING CLASSES IN AMERICA.

In this first year of our second century of national existence there are said to be three millions of unemployed persons in the United States.

Who can tell us why or how this appalling situation arose? Who can set forth in colors sufficiently vivid the degradation and demoralization it is bringing upon the sufferers and upon our country? We are dealing with wide-spread effects; let us search into their causes. Are these the ripened fruits of our boasted civilization? Or is this crisis an ordeal through which every nation must pass? Now, if ever, is the time for our legislatures, our political economists, and our social science reformers to exert themselves for the benefit of a bankrupt people.

As I am a woman, and therefore cannot be expected to understand so profound a mystery as political economy, I do not pretend to have any solution of these questions ready. But I have asked myself, with an earnestness springing from intense feeling, Is there no remedy? Can anything be done for these idle millions?

I believe that a few clear heads, a few strong wills, and a little money judiciously expended, can control the world. If I cannot answer the question, I can at least state it and summon the wise and the good to answer it, and in their replies I shall recognize the vox populi vox Dei, the crystallization of that universal reason which is the voice of God speaking to the understanding.

I appeal to governors, to legislators, to journalists, clergymen, physicians, lawyers, teachers, workers in whatever field, and thinkers with whatever title, to give their minds to the solution of the great problem of the cause and cure of national misery. Think of it, study it, observe the facts, and communicate your conclusions to the most convenient organ of publicity. Discuss it in the press, in legislative halls, in the sessions of societies, upon the lecture platform, in the pulpit, and in the private gatherings of friends.

Will not the periodicals which receive this appeal second my proposal, and aid it by making known its practical contents, to the end that the best talent of the country may be stimulated to the study of this great issue? I desire that every aspect of the subject may be thoroughly discussed in the columns of the American press. To that end I offer three premiums, one of $100 in gold, one of $75, and one of $50, for the best newspaper articles of about two thousand words upon some feature of the "Labor Question," considered in its widest scope. These articles are to be signed by some nom de plume, and sent to the office of the Library Table before the first of October next, and the awards shall be made by a committee to be appointed by the "American Social Science Association" at its meeting at Saratoga in July. I reserve the right of accepting at $20 any of the essays which may not receive the premiums.

ELIZABETH THOMPSON.

Mrs. Thompson has deposited funds in the East River National Bank, for the payment of the prizes awarded to the articles that may be approved by the committee of the American Social Science Association.

CHARLES JENKINS, Pres.

DISSENT IN RUSSIA.

The Russian St. Petersburg Gazette, in an article on the Russian Church, observes that the number of dissenters in Russia has very much increased of late, especially among the masses of the population; and that even in the higher classes of society the mystical doctrines of fashionable preachers and the manifestations of "Spiritualists" have undermined the influence of the Orthodox clergy. This is certainly not due to any excessive tolerance by the government of sectarianism, for "the State could not do more to support Orthodoxy than it does, unless it adopted a system of intolerance like that practised in the Middle Ages." The writer next enumerates the laws which are now in force for the protection of the State Church in Russia: "If a member of the Orthodox Church changes his religion, both he and the person who instigated him to do so are punished. When the adopted religion is a non-Christian one, the instigator is punished with hard labor; when it is the Roman Catholic or a Protestant faith, he is banished; and when it is that of a Russian sect he is 'interned.' As for the person who leaves the Orthodox Church, he is in every case placed at the disposal of the ecclesiastical authorities for suitable correction, and his property is sequestered. Members of the Orthodox Church are forbidden to marry non-Christians, and the children of mixed marriages (except only in the Baltic provinces) are bound, under severe penalties, to be brought up in the Orthodox religion. The right of propagating religious doctrines is possessed exclusively by the State Church; the members of other religions are not even allowed to convert pagans to Christianity. The establishment of new religious communities, too, is strictly forbidden." And yet, continues the writer, though the State thus protects the Orthodox Church, the latter is daily losing ground in the empire. "It is not the fault of the State that, notwithstanding such severe protective laws, the Tschouvaszes, Tcheremisses, and other alien races, are being converted in masses to Mohammedanism; that whole villages which were regarded as Orthodox are now found to be Mohammedan; that the Mohammedan propaganda is rapidly spreading northwards, while the Orthodox propaganda finds but few supporters."—Pall Mall Gazette, Jan. 5, 1877.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE OLD GODS.

Zeus.

Shrank I long since, O Jehovah,
On my hill-throne to a shadow;
Ceased to summon into conclave
Gods of ocean, stream, and meadow.
Reigned I, while the nations dreaming
Peopled air with shapes immortal,—
Whom the poets saw in vision,
Thronging off my cloudy portal.

But 'e'en to the Age of Reason
You your kingdom have extended,—
Naught have gained you; your dominion
Will at last like mine be ended.
Storm-clouds on the heights of Sinai
Form no more your dread pavilion;
Round its barren base no longer
Kneel the low-browed, awe-struck million.

Where we dwelt, the mountain ether,
With its keen breath, chills and freezes,—
Zion, Meru, and Olympus
Fan no more celestial breezes.

Jehovah.

Fell I, too; I am a shadow,—
Primal man's imagination
Shaped me, throned me in the heavens,
Deemed the All my hand's creation.

Of the Universe the vision
On man's soul at length is breaking;
Scorns he now his ancient sky-gods,
At whose bolts he erst was quaking—
Law of duty in his reason,
Not on stony tablets, findeth—
All things into ordered cosmos
Feels the nameless might that bindeth;

That through boundless space, duration,
Restless, tireless throbs forever,—
Thus illumined, men our lieges
Will be, as they erst were never.
Even now our airy sceptres,
Bards, so loyal once, are scorning;
Myths they call us—men colossal,
Visions of the young world's morning.

Brahma.

I, an oceanic essence,
Formless, bodiless abstraction—
As a dream was ever worshipped,
An abyss of mere inaction.
O'er the the golden horn of Meru
Float I tranquil, calm as ever,
Mindless, passionless my votaries
Change from me cannot dis sever.

Ormuzd.

I, an optimistic vision,
Am the good time always looming,
When the earth, a sinless garden,
Shall with amaranths be blooming.

Odin.

Darkly with its sky-wide branches
Yggdrasil, the ash tree, waveth;
Dead was fairest Balder long since,—
Wind of doom through Asgard raveth.

Pantheos.

As in inlets, bays, the ocean
Ceaselessly its billows urges,
So through finite spirits rolling
Heave and flash my radiant surges;
Like the tranquil, cloudless ether,
Plain and mountain-peak transcending,
I, the pure and sovereign reason,
O'er low vales of sense am bending.

Thorough boundless space, expanded
In the atom too, I'm dwelling;
Every moment feels me pulsing,
Though through æons I am swelling.
When, in sense and languor sunken,
Grovel every race and nation,
Some great soul, idea-drunk,
Make I stem the degradation.

Pour I through his lips and glances
Surge-like, flame-like life remoulding,
Till eternal truth and beauty
Man's purged eyesight is beholding,
God's provincial, cloud-compellers,
Primal races, nations swaying!
Other than your petty sceptres
Is the universe obeying!

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 7.

E. Wilcox, 25 cents; W. P. Wesselhoef, $3.20; Nath'l Little, Jr., $5.20; H. Balcorn, $3.20; Geo. H. Foster, $1.67; W. L. Foster, $15; Samuel Colt, $30; Geo. Lewis, $2; J. W. Scott, $2.20; Philip Hake, $6.94; W. E. Mott, $3.25; Louis Liebman, $3.20; Geo. Maunfeld, $3.20; W. H. Eastman, $3; Isaac N. Sterne, $3.20; John Gardner, $3.20; O. P. Whitcomb, $3.20; Mrs. M. E. Adams, $1; Wm. Hogan, $3.20; Dr. E. B. Foote, $5; Mrs. R. P. Maynard, $3.20; Nath'l Allen, $3.25; O. M. Wetmore, $5; Hiram Colt, $40; Mrs. E. W. Leggett, $3.25; John Wiley & Sons, $2.60; Col. A. D. Straight, $1.35; A. N. Alcott, $2.75; S. Harrington, $3.20; Gary Bros., $10; S. C. Gould, $1.75; W. E. Eaton, $3.20; Chas. T. Fowler, $1.60; Louis Ash, $3.20.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 12, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 281 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTATIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, Editorial
Contributors.

IN HIS closing Monday lecture on May 28, Rev. Joseph Cook said: "America is but half a Republic until it Christianizes politics, the colleges, trade, fraud [!] and even dead Orthodoxy." So, at least, the Boston Journal reported him next day.

THE ATTENTION of all who are interested in the labor question is specially invited to Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson's offer of premiums for the best essays on this subject, which will be found in another column of this issue. Mrs. Thompson's mode of eliciting thought upon this topic is as well-considered as it is generous, and we take pleasure in helping to make it widely known.

A PRIVATE correspondent recently sent us this kind word of encouragement: "Your writings of late upon the subject of science, as a test in matters of religion, have been very interesting to me. I think you have reached 'hard-pan.' I believe your position in regard to intuition is impregnable, being founded on a correct scientific view of the constitution of the human mind; and I have faith that your views possess elements of early popularity, inasmuch as they promise to furnish at last a method (for which the world has longed through ages) of divorcing religion from superstition. Heaven speed the day when theological mountebanks, with their 'third substantences' and the like, will have nothing wherewith to feed their conceit."

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE, of the British Royal Navy, has just published an exceedingly thoughtful little treatise of about seventy pages, entitled "Woman Suffrage, the Counterfeit and the True: Reasons for Opposing Both." It is for sale by W. Ridgway, 169, Piccadilly, London, W., at one shilling. The "counterfeit" is the "Propertied Single Woman" suffrage measure of the English Society; and Admiral Maxse opposes it frankly for these reasons: "1. Because it is falsely termed a Woman Suffrage Movement. 2. Because the measure advocated will create an invidious distinction between wives and other women, at the expense of the former. 3. Because its success will constitute a triumph of the representation of property as against the representation of persons. 4. Because the effect of the bill [Mr. Forsyth's] proposed will be to strengthen the reactionary party, and thus to impede National progress." The "true" woman suffrage is that advocated in this country, of which he says that "generous sentiment inclines to it"; yet this, too, he opposes, claiming that all government is a matter of expediency, not of abstract right—that the question at issue in this case depends on the characteristics of the majority of the female sex, not on those of the exceptional few,—that among these general characteristics are "constitutional timidity, mental not less than physical," inability to appreciate remote and indirect causes of existing evils, inveterate tendency to "care more for persons than for ideas"—and that these general characteristics create a very mischievous subservience to conservative, tory, and above all clerical influences. These views are urged with genuine English frankness and no little force; and they ought to receive the most candid consideration of both sides on the question. If the Woman's Journal is to deal with the depths rather than the shallows of its own movement, it will cease to ignore objections which, more than any others, are turning the tide of liberal thought on this whole subject. It is a mistaken policy to avoid discussing the relations of woman to the Church, if the persuasion of independent minds is the object aimed at; and the ballot will scarcely be gained for woman by anything short of that.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE COLLEGES.

The universities of Harvard, Cornell, and Michigan, although not strictly secular, represent nevertheless a hopeful tendency in this country to render collegiate education independent of ecclesiastical or sectarian control. Both Harvard and Cornell have laymen as Presidents; while Michigan, with a Methodist President, has not yet learned the wisdom of this policy, but permits the Methodists to exercise an undue influence in the administration of the university—as evidenced in the recent prohibition of dancing at Commencement. The time has not yet come when American public opinion, moulded so largely as it now is by the prevalent and potent superstition of Christianity, will allow any university to be prosperously conducted in total independence of the Church. The Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore, of which much is hoped by those who know the vast importance of emancipating education from the yoke of sectarianism, is yet too young to have acquired a fixed character; though it is understood to be controlled by a very liberal policy at present. Cornell is quite as independent in this respect as any American college; yet its Trustees have been compelled by sectarian clamor to adopt a special new law in order to prevent the continuance of Professor Adler's able and dreaded lectures within its walls, notwithstanding his application for re-appointment at the close of his first engagement of three years. He did not, as was reported, resign his professorship, but desired to continue it; Mr. Joseph Seligman, who was so absurdly and oppressively excluded by Judge Hilton from the Grand Union Hotel at Saratoga because he is a "Jew," distinctly offered to renew the special endowment by which Professor Adler's services had been originally secured; and in order to avoid re-appointing him a new regulation was passed forbidding the endowment of a professorial chair from even nominating its occupant! We are not at all disposed to censure the authorities for yielding to a popular clamor which threatened the usefulness of the institution; perhaps they could not discharge the difficult duties of their high position in any other way. The fact, however, remains that no American college can afford to appoint professors who are prominently identified in public opinion with obnoxious heterodox views in religion, although many professors cherish them in private without molestation. There is no such thing in the United States as complete university freedom. The really free university is an ideal not yet attained in this great republic. Even despotic Germany is her superior in this respect.

So far from being intellectually emancipated, most of our American colleges are subjected to a degrading sectarian domination. They are used too much as mere adjuncts and tributaries to the churches. Denominationalism governs by far the greater number of them, to the melancholy detriment of education. President Porter, of Yale, delivered to the graduating class of this year a baccalaureate sermon entitled "Personal Faith in the Personal Christ the Essential of a Rounded Manhood and a Successful Life"—the essential character of such faith to a "successful life" being unhappily as plain as it is the reverse of plain so far as "rounded manhood" is concerned. Rev. Dr. Peabody, of Harvard, delivered before the Adelphi Union of Williams College an address on "The Three Eras of the Positive Philosophy," in which he argued that the new philosophy is on its way from unbelief to the Christian faith. President Chamberlain, of Bowdoin, has just delivered a baccalaureate sermon on "A Kingdom of Priests," advocating the idea that the State is a "divine institution"; that it is a "mediator and minister between God and man"; and that its authority does not rest on the aggregated wills of individuals, but that every man should be a "king first of righteousness and then of peace, and priest of the Most High God." But the most significant of these annual discourses by university magnates was President Seelye's "Inaugural Address" at Amherst College, which was a distinct declaration that "Christian" education is the true object of all university training, and that "faith in Jesus Christ and his atonement" should, in all university administration, "tolerate nothing which makes its aim to set aside his claims." Were it not so long, we should republish this remarkable paper, to illustrate the lamentable blindness with which Christianity smites the present guardians of the highest educational interests in this country. But we cannot forbear giving a prominent place to this condensed account of it, taken from the Boston Daily Advertiser of June 29:—

The inaugural address delivered Wednesday by President Seelye of Amherst College will unquestionably receive much attention from scholars and the general public. Having so high a reputation as a scholar of various culture and a man of superior ability, both in thought and in the world's practical affairs, there is a somewhat peculiar and uncommon interest in his assumption of the office of president of Amherst College. This address defines with distinctness and force his idea of the origin and aim of all educational work. After a reference to the fact that the educational institutions of this country were in their origin closely allied with religion, he proposes the subject of his discourse in the question, "Is this wide-reaching relation of religion and education, after all, only accidental and temporary, or has it a rational ground, which is therefore abiding, and on which, if we are wise, we shall still continue to build?"

His answer, as might be expected, is an affirmative one. The first position he takes in support of his thesis is, that there is no inherent law of progress in human nature by which it is constantly seeking and gaining for itself an improved condition. The notion that there is such a law he brands as "quite superficial," and not supported by the facts of history or of human nature. On the contrary, the inherent law is a law of deterioration, and even progress is by virtue of an impulse communicated from without and above human nature, manifested first as an emotion of the soul and then inspiring the intellect with its aspirations, which work themselves out in the refinements of living. Human nature is powerless either to originate or to perpetuate progress. The higher precedes the lower always. No savage ever civilized himself. No ignorant people ever advanced to knowledge without being first acted upon by an influence other than that which knowledge itself supplied. Art always precedes science, and art itself is always preceded by religion. The primal condition of the human race was its most exalted condition. The original age was one of peace and purity, and from this high station the race has fallen by its inherent law of deterioration, and only recovered itself as it has been from time to time influenced by a supernatural impulse coming from God. Hence, he reasons, it is a mistake to attempt to civilize a savage people until they are first made religious.

All our present civilization is due to the religious quickening of Christianity; but the capture of Constantinople by the Turks, and the consequent scattering of Greek scholars over Europe, not the discoveries of Columbus and Kepler, not the new method of reason taught by Bacon, are to be credited with the achievements of these modern ages. It was the Reformation, in its dawning long before Luther, which dispelled the darkness of the Middle Ages. The saints who wrote the Theologia Germanica, and the Imitation of Christ, were the real pioneers of modern civilization. The beginning and end of man's endeavors toward progress are in the supernatural. So the intellectual life depends upon the religious life, or revelations of the supernatural developing aspirations for the supernatural, and "education divorced from religion is like a tree severed from its nourishing roots." The conclusion of this argument, as President Seelye reasons, is that the informing law of our whole educational fabric should be faith in the atonement of Christ. The college should not only have the Christian name written on its seal and in its earlier records, but graven in its life. It will seek for Christian teachers, and only these. Only by so doing can it have freedom in the truth, and be liberated from prejudice, superstition and narrowness. "Only that tendency of thought which divorces itself from God and the supernatural and the Christian atonement shall we wisely discard from our process of education, and this not simply because such a tendency is untrue, but because it is necessarily empty and vain, and because it has no power of permanent progress, and because the schools and systems of education left to its control will become first superficial and formal, and then barren and dead." He would consecrate the college anew to Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Savior and his atonement, "tolerating nothing which makes its aim to set aside his claims."

We have but sketched the course of thought of this lofty and eloquent address, which will repay reading in full. It is a strong plea for excluding from colleges all questioning of the truth of Christianity,—perhaps we should not be wrong in saying all questioning of the truth of Christianity as understood by Protestants; perhaps even all questioning of it as held by what are termed the Protestant Evangelical denominations. It is an address that invites controversy. Despite President Seelye's assertion that it is a "quite superficial" notion that there is in human nature an inherent law of progress, there are many who believe it, and they will flatly deny his sweeping declaration that all the facts of history and human nature controvert it. And of those who would admit, if only for the sake of argument, this proposition and the other propositions concerning the dependence of human nature for its inspiration of progress upon a supernatural and divine influence, and the tendency of that impulse when excited to seek the supernatural again, there are some who will think it at least a fault of logic to assume that this last condition necessarily implies a recognition of the doctrine of the atonement by Jesus Christ as it is held by the Church in Amherst College, any more than it implies a recognition of the doctrine that the Holy Ghost is an equal person of the Trinity. If President Seelye is right in his argument, the Catholic Church is right in its theory of education; and, if his theory is the sound one for colleges, it is the sound one for all schools, and the Catholics are right in their demand for a share of the school-taxes to educate their children in their form of Christian faith. Indeed, it would appear that the Roman Catholics have been right from the beginning in subordinating all philosophical and all scientific education to religious education; and, as they hold quite as strongly as President Seelye does to Christ and his atonement as a basis of civilization, it ought to be the fact that civilization has made farthest and surest progress under Catholic auspices.

The Advertiser well points out the strong Catholic tendency of the doctrine preached by President Seelye, although he himself would be the last man to admit such a tendency in it. It is true, however, and we wonder that so intelligent a gentleman as he unquestionably is should not see the fact, that, if faith in "Christ and his atonement" is the overmastering concern of man, our entire educational system should be made to inculcate these doctrines explicitly and continuously; and that the system which most completely sacrifices all other objects to this one alone is the most thoroughly "Christian," and therefore the best. What could such a man say consistently in favor of a non-sectarian, honestly secular public school system? Nothing whatever. Logic would oblige him to condemn such a system as one of those things which no Christian ought to "tolerate." Catholicism and Evangelicalism join hands at least in the attempt to drag Science after the triumphal car of Christianity, like the slain Hector after the chariot of Achilles. The weak compromise of Protestantism melts away at the touch of logic, and nothing is left but the irreconcilable extremes of Catholic Parochial Schools and Secular State Schools. May the American people yet learn to see and to understand what so profoundly concerns their future prosperity, virtue, and peace!

It is deeply to be regretted that the majority of the colleges of the United States are placed by their representative spokesmen in the attitude of "Defenders of the Faith" rather than in that of simple Educators of Mankind. When our highest institutions are in this manner prostituted to the service of superstition, the cause of unperverted knowledge is retarded and imperilled. The sanctity of truth as such is lost sight of in the fanatical propagandism of creeds, and the fountains of science are choked up with the debris of crumbling ecclesiastical systems. When will it be possible to emancipate the great centres of learning and national enlightenment from this degrading thralldom to an outgrown Past?

A CARD, OFFICIAL AND PERSONAL.

I take this opportunity to announce to all persons interested in the Free Religious Association and who may have occasion to correspond with me as its secretary, as well as to personal friends, that I have changed my residence, for the present, to Grantville, Mass., and that this is now my post-office address. Letters addressed to me at New Bedford, where I still hold my ministerial connection (going there for the Sunday services), will reach me, though not as a general rule so immediately. Liberal religious newspapers will confer a favor by printing as an item of information this change of address. Let me add that I invite correspondence on all matters of interest to the Free Religious Association and to the progress of free religion. This correspondence has been much interfered with during the last two years by my long absences from home and frequent changes of post-office. Foreseeing this result, I was myself desirous of resigning my office as secretary into other hands, and should have done so if the judgment of friends had not prevailed against my own. Now that I am to be, as is hoped, more permanently located, I trust to be able to take up all the duties of the office again and to renew its efficiency,—having lost no particle of faith or interest in the great movement—too great for any one mind to represent—for which the Free Religious Association stands. I hope, too, to resume my place more regularly hereafter in THE INDEX as editorial contributor,—an engagement which numerous calls and cares of late have permitted me only infrequently to fulfil. WILLIAM J. POTTER.

RENAN ON PRAYER.

It is with pleasure that I present to those readers of THE INDEX, who have been disgusted with the recent appointment of a "Day of Prayer for Grasshoppers," the following extracts from the Dialogues et Fragments Philosophiques of Ernest Renan, a work which, I believe, has not yet been translated into English. J. L. STODDARD.

I do not object to prayer as a mystic hymn. Every act of admiration, of joy, and of love is in this sense a prayer. But selfish prayer, the prayer by which a finite being seeks to substitute his will for that of the Infinite Being, this I reject, and hold it to be even a sort of insult offered (no doubt innocently) to the Deity. In primitive ages, when a hero was devoured by a cancer, he was believed to be eaten by a god. Fresh meat was therefore offered to the Deity on the supposition that he would prefer this to the flesh of the sufferer, and would leave him. In a somewhat similar way the unscientific man believes that there are supernatural beings acting directly in the affairs of the world, from whom he may obtain by means of supplication an action conformable to his desires. But that such supplication has ever been followed by its desired effect has never been proven. The Greek philosophers saw this perfectly. One of them, Diagoras of Melos, to whom some one pointed out the offerings of the sailors in a temple of Neptune, remarked: "They count the saved, but not the drowned, who, nevertheless, had made vows like the others!" How admirably said! Yes, in such matters one only takes note of the favorable cases; the sponge is passed over those which do not accord with the illusions which one wishes to indulge in. This is the explanation of all miracles. A prayer is in reality a request for a miracle, since he who prays solicits the Deity to change for his advantage the course which Nature would otherwise follow.

The sick man who prays to recover, when, according to the natural order of things he must die, asks for a miracle. The peasants who make their processions* in order to secure rain, or to cause it to cease, in reality request a miracle. They ask that rain may fall at a moment when naturally it would not fall, an event which would require for its accomplishment an utter evolution in the state of the atmosphere. A copious rain in the month of June depends upon phenomena which took place in the month of May amid the icebergs of the north pole. The Deity must, therefore, have known a month beforehand the prayers which were to be addressed to him; he must have turned his attention to the action of the icebergs, and either interfered in their formation or prevented the ice of the pole in its southerly advance from having its ordinary effects in the chilling and condensation of vapors. What is this, if not a miracle?

In order that the wide-spread belief in prayer should be well-founded, it would first be necessary to prove some cases where prayer has been efficacious; that is to say, where prayer has caused events to follow a different course from the one which they would have followed without it. Now such a proof has never been given and never will be. People have prayed ever since the beginning of the world; but we have no proof that a prayer or a vow has ever been answered. Nearly three thousand Carthaginian inscriptions, bearing a close resemblance to each other, have been recently exhumed. On each one of these some pious Carthaginian tells us that Tanith and Baal-Hammon have heard his prayer, in proof of which he has erected this little votive tablet. Very well; but Tanith and Baal-Hammon are false gods! No one any longer admits that they were able to grant the favors sought. The three thousand inscriptions of Carthage attest a mistake. Heaps of votive tablets cannot therefore be considered as a proof that a prayer has ever been answered. Even though the mass of a population should believe that they had experienced the efficacy of prayer, that would prove nothing. The Carthaginians claimed to have experienced the same efficacy, and were deceived, for their gods, as every one will now confess, were powerless.

However, a trial by statistics would be easy. In a time of drought let us suppose that twenty or thirty parishes in one section of the country make processions in order to obtain rain; twenty or thirty others do not. By means of registers carefully kept and operating in a large number of cases, it would be easy to see, first, if the processions had any effect; second, if the parishes which made them were more favored than the others; and third, if the quantity of rain with which they were blessed was proportional to their fervor.

This experiment could be tried in a thousand ways. One might, for example, arrange in two separate halls children attacked by the same disease, taking care that there should be no fraud in the division.† Upon the children in one hall pious persons should be allowed to place medals believed to be miraculous; upon the other children nothing should be put; we might thus discover if these made any appreciable difference. But this has never been done, and all sensible persons will, I think, concede to me that, if it were tried, the result might be predicted in advance.

*It is perhaps needless to say that M. Renan here alludes especially to the custom so common in France, and other Catholic countries, of making solemn processions about the fields praying for rain, a bountiful harvest, or fine weather.—Tr.

†The reader will be reminded by this proposition of the recent celebrated "Prayer Gauge" of Tyndall. It is but just to say that these Dialogues of M. Renan were written in 1871, although they were not published until five years later, owing to the disturbances in France.—Tr.

The same absence of supernatural intervention is seen in the events of history. The most pious and Orthodox nations are often beaten by the less pious and less Orthodox, without the faintest proof that a superior providence has favored any other party than the most courageous and the strongest. The pretended god of armies is always on the side of the nation which has the best artillery and the best generals.

Nature shows in her government an absolute indifference to right or wrong. The sun rises equally upon the evil and the good. There is not then a single fact that leads us to believe that there exists outside of humanity finite beings capable of acting on our planet. This does not mean that no intelligent and active beings exist outside of humanity; but it does mean that such beings do not extend their action as far as our planet. For, if such a strange action existed, we should recognize it. Let us suppose some ants establishing their republic in a very solitary place, where man would only pass two or three times in a century. Let us furthermore suppose that these ants are able to arrive at a knowledge of some of the laws of Nature, but are not capable of understanding the enormous being who, from time to time, crushes them. Their natural philosophy would resemble ours; but they would be obliged to admit that the laws underwent every forty or fifty years a strange disturbance; that then an unknown, gigantic being, an intermittent, inexplicable force, passed by and destroyed everything. If the ants were philosophers, they would not at all confound the passage of such a being with a tempest or a water-spout, phenomena which are entirely mechanical and with which no personal intention is concerned. Man, conceived of more or less vaguely, would be for these ants what the Deity was for antiquity,—a being more powerful than mankind, interrupting occasionally the world's affairs. Now it has never been proven that such a being exists above man. No phenomenon like that which the ants were supposed to have beheld ever takes place among mankind. Volcanic eruptions, earthquakes, epidemics,—these were formerly believed to be effects of this sort, evincing the wrath of God. At present, however, no educated person entertains such an idea. These events are now regarded as perfectly natural. Among the causes of the eruptions of Zorullo and Hecla, no academy of science would consent to reckon, as having even the slightest influence, the sins of the Mexicans or Icelanders. There are countries very much less moral than Iceland which are never troubled with earthquakes!

THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD OF SOCIAL REGENERATION.

With the scientific method in religion, which, we confess, with all due respect to those who entertain a different view, seems to us the essential one to rational progress, should be united the scientific method in social regeneration. The popular conception has always been, as it is still, that there is some short cut to social and moral perfection; that the most effective mode to the end is through some spasm of excitement, certain sudden and summary influences, rather than the evolution of natural processes. It is thus the world abounds in specifics for its maladies. Every religion, church, sect, reform, claims to have discovered the great panacea for all our woes, the sovereign elixir for the rejuvenation of mortal existence, the sole path to a paradise regained. The world is to-day full of quixotic moral enterprises, shootings of Niagara, hap hazard expenditures of zeal and energy for the benefit of mankind which avail but little because they are neither conceived nor prosecuted according to practical wisdom and intelligence. It is impossible for any one of real discernment and power of reflection, to contemplate the comparative failure of these endeavors, to witness how often their promises come to nothing, as is inevitable, without feeling that the one thing needful for the world's redemption is a scientific study of, and acquaintance with, the absolute facts and laws of society and human progress, the recognition of the fact that human life cannot be transformed by main strength,—that something more is needed for genuine reform than earnestness and good intentions,—that there is a social science as well as a science of physics, an order of invariable sequence in respect to it no less than in our material surroundings.

If we would make the world better, we must seek to apprehend the causes and influences which have conspired, and still conspire, to make it as it is. At the beginning of all effort to improve our species is a proper regard for the conditions of birth, the responsibility of parentage. It is of the first consideration what kind of beings shall be born into the world. The first requisite to success in life, it has been said, is to be a good animal. It is important that a human being should start in the race of life with as sound a physical constitution as possible. "Sickness," says Emerson, "is poor-spirited, and cannot serve anyone; it must husband its resources to live." It is thus that the physically infirm become in a great degree the dependent and helpless class of society. Their mental and moral natures are also liable to share in their bodily feebleness. Much may be done by wise, educational, and directing influences to counteract and remedy original defects; but they generally tell upon the whole after-character. Rightly assorted marriage and rightly constituted parentage are essential to the future welfare of society. Its reformation, to be most thoroughly effective, must begin even before the birth of the individuals of which it is to be composed. It must begin with a due sense of the responsibility of parentage,—with the essential education of future parents to secure the best characteristics in their children; nay, with the parents' parents, since it is a truth of science no less than a declaration of scripture that the sins or deficiencies (and it might be added, also, the excellences or virtues) of the parents descend to the children, even to the third and fourth generation.

But not only are the circumstances of one's birth, with reference to the future of society, of great importance, but also those into which he is ushered. That there is a most lamentable amount of incompetence in this particular, not alone among the impoverished and ignorant, but also among the more fortunate and favored classes, is patent to every one. Is there not reason to believe that the mortality which prevails among children might be much reduced by a more intelligent acquaintance with their physical natures and the diseases incident to them,—a more thorough education of woman in the requisite qualifications of maternity? Should not a young woman be instructed in the care of children as well as in the acquirements of the school or college course or fashionable accomplishments? We can only hint at these things at present.

Another powerfully determining element with reference to the social condition, and its improvement, is the situation people occupy, the material environments of their lives. Indeed, it might almost be said that this is the fundamental consideration, the one which should receive first attention in the work of social regeneration. The individual is moulded very largely by his circumstances,—acquires in no small degree through them the distinguishing traits and tendencies of his character. To secure a virtuous and progressive state of society, its members must be well housed and fed. Poverty and wretchedness are the hot-beds of vice and crime. The most potent cause of the social evil, it has been affirmed, is the want of bread.

It is necessary, in order to improve society, that the home should be rendered as attractive as possible. This may be accomplished through the effort to impart to it a cheerful and tasteful aspect; but even more by the charm of intelligence and sympathetic and affectionate fellowship. The relation which the home sustains to public morals and individual character is very imperfectly apprehended. It may be the centre of restraining, inspiring, and ennobling influence, or serve but to inflame and aggravate the lower impulses and tendencies. There is much emphasis in churches upon the importance of "Christian homes," of setting up the family altar in them, and the like; but little, comparatively, in regard to those practical characteristics upon which their real welfare, their most effective and elevating influence, ultimately depends. The art of making them comfortable, healthful, inviting, intelligent, and affectionate; the art of thrifty and economical management (so essential to their permanent peace); the art of congenial and ennobling fellowship, avoiding jarings and irritations, and subduing the waywardness of their inmates,—these things are overlooked. May we not in our external labors for social reform too greatly under-estimate these internal obstacles to our success, and need more radical methods in this respect than those to which we are accustomed to give our principal energy and enthusiasm? In order to further the regeneration of society, we should strive to set in operation those agencies and influences which conspire to render it more rational, genial, and sympathetic. We must endeavor to counteract the allurements of vice with higher and purer attractions.

Finally, our reforms will prove abiding only as they are accompanied with the general improvement and advancement of society. Let us be fully persuaded that intemperate zeal, spasms of moral and religious excitement (such as the revival mania that we have witnessed of late), dependence upon supernatural and traditional religious theories, inevitably prove disappointing and unsatisfactory in their results. They can never effect the world's redemption. Let us be assured that there is no leap in human development; that in order that others may share in our appreciations and perceptions, it is necessary that they should be brought somewhat near to our standing-point; that society can be advanced toward its best ideals only in the ratio of its enlightenment.

The great demand, then, of to-day is increased intelligence, a more thorough and pervading acquaintance with those laws of life upon which human well-being depends, and the consequent renunciation of all forms of superstition and intellectual servitude, demoralizing customs and tendencies. A system of education in our schools and institutions of learning superior to that which prevails, rendering them better adapted to the ordinary requirements of the world we live in, is indispensable. It should recognize the fact that we live in a world of inherent law that cannot be regulated by our unenlightened and narrow impulses and theories,—a world that is ruled by law rather than subject to an arbitrary and capricious will outside of it, which may be turned this way or that by our propitiations and importunities.

The general elevation of society to which we have referred, as the scientific and true method of reform, is the necessary preliminary to its advancement in all specific directions. It includes all other progress. Such labors will be felt not in narrow circles alone, but throughout the whole range of social relations and interests,—in the Church as well as the State, in the legislative hall as well as among the people who are governed, in all conditions and circumstances of mental and moral activity. Thus shall come at last a better and more glorious society than that of which the most ardent enthusiasm ever conceived,—the perpetual millennium of wisdom and virtue.

D. H. C.

Communications.

RIGHT-THINKING AND RIGHT-DOING.

Conversing recently with a gentleman of thought and culture about the various methods often brought to bear upon the same reform, he expressed the opinion that the sole test of any method must be the amount of direct and tangible benefit it can produce. So the reform be accomplished, it does not greatly matter by what (honest) means it is done. This is a plausible theory. It seems to pierce the heart of the difficulty at once, and point out a short cut to success. The plea of practicality is always a strong one. Certainly, it would appear that the most pressing need of the hour was to convert men to a higher standard of action, to reduce the number of crimes, to promote industry, frugality, and sobriety,—to make good men out of bad men.

Admitting that this moral conformity (and it does not deserve a much better name) is the great desideratum, it follows that we have only to congratulate ourselves on the variety of ways and means at our command. The road to heaven—i. e., goodness,—formerly supposed to be a straight and narrow path, difficult to find and difficult to keep, suddenly diverges into several broad highways. Spiritual pilgrimage is made easy and comfortable with all the conveniences of modern travel. It is like taking a summer trip, this striving after perfection; there are any number of routes leading to the same destination, each offering its own variety of scenery by the way.

Some of us have quarrelled a good deal with the old theology because it makes salvation dependent on belief alone; but the new theology commits almost as great a blunder, when it goes to the other extreme and substitutes morality for belief. In one sense of the word, the preachers are right when they sneer at "mere morality." The morality which proclaims itself from the house-top, and boasts of its severed allegiance from reason, deserves all the scorn it receives. It is idle to say that right-thinking has no necessary connection with right-doing. The goodness which works according to its humor, prompted wholly by impulse, is not worth the name. People may stumble into goodness unaware, but the awkwardness of the situation is soon manifest. The motive and conviction which lie behind the deed may not form such an essential part of its nature as to determine whether it be good or bad; but they are by far the strongest waking forces which a man has. If it is not so, then the entire system of progress becomes mean and underhanded. The inebriate who has reformed through a suddenly-acquired love for Jesus, or through the excitements of the red-ribbon movement—i. e., through fear or vanity,—is as truly reformed, as fine a specimen of regenerate manhood, as one who silently and unheeded has endeavored to gain a manly control of himself. Instead of meeting evil and temptation in an open hand-to-hand conflict, men are taught to dodge past them in the dark; to waylay and circumvent them. No wonder Satan is a sly fellow; he has to be, to encounter the ingenious moral trickery of men.

The reader is doubtless familiar with examples of a class of persons who all their lives play a game of "hit and miss." Their acts, so far as they are rational and just, can be regarded in no other light than as so many sublime happenings. There is no single, deep, all-embracing principle which governs their lives. The writer calls to mind a woman who is invariably as wrong-headed as she is right-hearted. Take a special case of wrong or suffering to her, and she knows exactly the right thing to do. Attempt to enter into an analysis of the causes which brought it about, and she immediately involves herself in a labyrinth of argument in which she confuses and loses herself at every turn. The mystery of such natures lies in their possessing an abundance of common-sense without one whit of logic, and in their utter inability to grasp a principle and trace its bearings on the various phases of human conduct. Housed in the darkness which comes from undisciplined thinking, they fancy the play of checkered light on the wall to be the whole of God's truth, and are blinded and bewildered when the curtain is drawn aside, and the whole of the broad sunshine let in.

The pure philanthropist is always in a hurry, and would impose a higher moral standard upon the world at once. His good-will runs into wilfulness. He is forever battling with impossibilities, in his attempts to make men good before they are wise; correct in practice before they are sound in principle. He thinks a great deal of humanity in the rough and in the lump, and has not time to watch the silent processes of growth in a few solitary specimens. He likes to strike off averages, which, as we all know, consists in an indiscriminate mixing of higher and lower quantities, not altogether to the advantage of the higher. He is as fond of quoting the text, "By their fruits ye shall know them," as the mere theorist is of avoiding it. It is the fruit, solid, ripe, and plump, he is after, and all the signs of fruitage, leaf-bud, and blossom he regards as so much dilatory trifling on the part of the plant.

In certain respects nothing is easier in the world than to be a philanthropist, or so-called "practical reformer." Honor and good-will follow him who plunges with reckless enthusiasm into the mêlée of public benefaction. Only cold looks of avoidance and dislike await the man who, in charitable as all other enterprises, looks before he leaps, and refuses to lend a hand, even to a labor of love, which he believes conducted on unsafe and injurious principles.

That progress which consists only of the better and swifter performance of what we term the duties of life is very incomplete. Real growth is a full, free, and harmonious development of all the faculties, intellectual no less than moral. He who thinks to transplant a few virtues out of the common stock into the sandy waste of his own sterile life is doomed to disappointment. There is no soil like character for the blossoming of a noble life. "Knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers." It is one thing to possess a smattering of moral principles, and be able to make fitful application of them here and there; but quite another to arrive at a clear understanding of the nature of virtue itself; to know that it is only another form of reason. Let no one be afraid of Reason. She checks the lower impulses only, but guards with jealous care that sacred realm where dwell the noblest aspirations and the purest resolves. Mental culture is continually evoking a new and higher moral standard. The rational faculty, that which can discriminate and set aside, even to the tearing down of our most cherished idols, is the one to rule. Reason, clear, cold, and calculating though she be, is our safest guide; else all action becomes chaotic, springing from nothing and ending no whither.

CELIA P. WOOLLEY.

CHICAGO, June 27.

A WOMAN'S PLEA FOR SINCERITY.

When Harriet Martineau died, leaving an honest utterance of her disbelief in immortality, the religious press, seconded by the secular press, protested loudly against such sincerity; one ministerial writer taking the ground, if we understood him fairly, that it were far better for humanity had Miss Martineau died, giving a tacit assent to the tenet which she could not clearly accept, than to have left this legacy of unbelief to the world. He deplored the harm which her earnestly expressed opinion would work among the young admirers of her life and writings, and also among those who were already "partially unsettled by the prevailing scepticism of the age." He urged that in matters of theology no one can think for himself; human reason is fallible, and what the carnally-minded reject as contrary to experience, the spiritually-minded accept without asking any questions, or refer the whole matter to a God of miracles and special providences.

There were others who took a more cheering view of Miss Martineau's scepticism; others who, themselves believing in the indestructibility of the soul, believe likewise that intellectual integrity is worth more than a profession of faith, and that truth is better than all the creeds, inasmuch as the creeds are naught, except as they embody something of its eternal principles.

We need not despair of that person who, being called upon to answer to theological tests, dares to do so according to his conscience; neither should we disparage that age which has developed men and women who feel called upon, in matters of religion, as well as in others, to say what they honestly think. Lives, not formulas embodying doctrines, are the true exponents of men's religion, if we give to the term religion its highest significance.

If we have read her history correctly, Miss Martineau's life compares most favorably with the lives of the best of those who accept all the religious dogmas; and we do not fear that her doubts will injure those whom her pure and earnest precepts of life have led to a higher plane of action and endeavor. The truth is, we have learned to say we believe many things about which we do not know enough to form an honest opinion; we suppose we believe, when, in fact, we do not know whether we believe or not; and so we go on in our ignorance and our cant, until we really suppose that people who do not think as we do are on the road to eternal ruin. We should be surprised at being told that we do not think at all.

The truly earnest soul, humbled by the contemplation of its own small gains, but possessed of the royal love of knowledge, and an infinite longing for the highest, is tender and considerate toward the honestly held opinions of every one; and whether Erasmus accepts the Christian miracles, as Huxley denies the "Miltonic Theory of Creation," feels assured that neither has done this without a reason; however it may depart from the credulity of the one, or fail to fathom the science of the other. It finds whatever good the creeds contain, and recognizes a prophet in every thinker sent forth upon the earth.

It is a great obstacle to enlightened progress, that so many half-educated, narrow-thinking men denounce and ridicule, to those over whom they have influence, the great thinkers of the age, whose shoelatches they are not worthy to unlatch.

A few months ago, some of the American journals were jubilant over Carlyle's estimate of Darwin,--surely the weakest and most puerile thing Carlyle ever said; and nothing can account for it but ill-temper or dotage. Since when has Carlyle been remarkable for unflinching Orthodoxy? And they do say that, in its moral aspects, the life of Charles Darwin is not unlike that of a Christian gentleman of the highest type! Nothing in the Evolution theory inconsistent with all this? Strange!

The Church says that the world is given over to Mephistopheles, the demon of doubt; but there are those who fear that the Church is most true to his dark philosophy, if she would make herself a foe to science, or place a dogma above the highest integrity of a human soul.

One, indeed, I knew,
In many a subtle question versed;
Who touched a jarring lyre at first,
But ever strove to make it true;
Perplexed in faith, but pure in deeds,
At last he beat his music out.
There lives more faith in honest doubt,
Believe me, than in half the creeds.

O. F.

CHILDREN'S MEETINGS.

EDITOR INDEX:--

Your editorial on "Children's Fraternities" touched so vital a topic that I am tempted to add a word of my own. To put that word in the shape of propositions, I would say:--

1st. Until the Free Religious movement provides something for the children which shall be to Free Religion what the Sunday-school is to the old faiths, it will have done but half its work.

2d. Call the thing provided what you will--Sunday-school, Children's Meeting, Children's Lyceum, or Children's Fraternity,--it must approach the children not as wards, but as peers; not as those to be done for so much as those who need help in doing for themselves.

3d. The effort must include rational enjoyment, such as sociables, picnics, etc.; rational worship, such as shall recognize truth and goodness, right thinking, and doing; and rational instruction concerning the religious history of mankind.

Of course there will be no difference of opinion about appealing to the social nature and supplying its wants. May I suggest a thought or two concerning the worship and instruction?

It seems to me the first thing to be done with both these is to eliminate from them every shadow of theological bias or opinion. In the one we want inspiration, not cant; in the other we want facts, not myths. This will not offend; on the contrary it will foster the spirit of reverence for all that is pure and noble and true. In the Sunday-school with which I am connected, we have substituted for the Lord's Prayer, which seemed to some, though not all, of us, open to grave criticism, a simple aspiration, addressed to no one, such as a soul longing for the highest and purest might naturally express. We have also substituted for the old form of benediction one which is a simple expression of the hope that we may be blessed in going as in coming, in giving as in receiving. Instead of the old style of alternate readings filled with meaningless, or worse than meaningless, phrases, we use a little book of prose and poetical selections (quite limited in size, but we think very good in quality) compiled by the teachers and superintendent. Add to these singing from Mr. Blake's Morning Stars, a book of rare merit, and we have what proves to us an attractive and rational service.

A word now about instruction. So far as we deal with religious history (and we ought to deal with it comprehensively and thoroughly), it should be, it seems to me, from the stand-point of universal religion. Begin with the oldest or the youngest as you choose, but do not end with either. Do not allow a prejudice in favor of either. Keep out of the child's head, if possible, the idea, so often inculcated, of the comparative immensity of Christianity and the comparative littleness of all the other systems. Do not be so disrespectful to the young mind as to give it Arabian Nights Tales for facts; but present to it the real merits, and at the right age defects, of the different systems impartially, and let it form its own conclusions. In this way the child will come to love and honor all the great religious leaders, and will in the end cherish a higher regard for Jesus, because it recognizes him as one of a noble company of divine men, of which Confucius and Buddha are members. But we have no guide for such instruction as this. The field waits for tillage. More than one man's hands must be put to the plough. Question papers and books are needed; the incorporation of kindergarten principles and methods is needed; intercommunication and conferences of those interested in the work are needed. By all means, let us have a mutual comparison of notes. I send this fragmentary statement of a few of the many things which might be said, hoping it may help to call forth something more valuable from some one of greater experience and wisdom. Sincerely yours,

F. A. HINCKLEY.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL A UNIVERSITY FOR THE MILLION.

With most persons in this country, Sunday is a day of rest from labor, or of relaxation from the turmoil of business. How the day shall be most effectively utilized for the benefit of such persons is a grave question. Sleepy inactivity does not afford the best refreshment for the weary or careworn; spiritual, mental, and social culture and enjoyment are far better invigorators for the working world.

Cannot the Sunday-school be modified so as in a higher degree to supply the intellectual needs of a large portion of the people? Instead of its present comparatively narrow scope, why not make the Sunday-school a university for the million, where young and old, rich and poor, Christian and non-Christian, may come together to give and receive instruction? It is not so much a change as an extension that is here proposed. Some classes, as at present, will recite the Scripture they have memorized; other classes, as at present, will apply the rules of interpretation to passages of Scripture under consideration. But for others, why not provide teachers and classes in whatever branches of knowledge may be expected to make men happier, better, or more useful? For example, there might be classes for teaching or reading Greek, Hebrew, Latin, French, or German. There might be classes for the study of botany, physiology, astronomy, archaeology, psychology, or ethics. History classes might be formed for the study of Church history, the history of missions, history of Christian dogma, the history of reforms, etc. Or classes could be formed in natural, systematic, and comparative theology, and in many other branches that would in part supply the culture and knowledge for lack of which so many are perishing.

It may be objected that the conscientiousness of some or the bigotry of others will make such a Sunday-school impracticable. To this it may be replied that a school might be so managed that every class would be under the teacher of its choice, and that pupils might be assigned to classes only with the consent of their parents. General exercises could be so arranged as to avoid offence; or, if necessary, they might be limited to a reading, a song, or an instrumental symphony.

It may be said, that in many communities competent teachers for many of these branches cannot be found. This admitted, it is nevertheless probable that in every community some competent teachers of these, or other equally useful branches of knowledge, can be found. The stimulus which an earnest class affords, and the thought and study which it necessitates, are of incalculable benefit in the training of teachers. Let the demand for teachers be made, and let every man and woman become a teacher who is capable of giving help in some department of useful knowledge, and soon the supply will equal the demand.

Perhaps it will be objected that such an extension of Sunday-school studies will tend to secularize the Sunday-school and the Sunday also. To this, with some it may suffice to say, that the original Sunday-school devised by Robert Raikes was undertaken for the purpose of giving the elements of an education, beginning with the alphabet, reading, and spelling, to poor children who had not been able to attend school during the week; and the Christian world has approved of the enterprise. Is there not equal reason for utilizing the Sunday, and calling into activity all unemployed teaching talent to bring a higher education within the reach of multitudes who will never see the inside of a college? In a word, shall the Sunday-school become a university for the million?

THE INTEREST DOCTRINE.

My short article on "The Interest Doctrine Briefly Stated" (INDEX, June 28) is accompanied by the following clever little editorial note:--

"The ingenious bishop omits altogether a chief point in the case: namely, that the lender parts with the use of his money during the time of the loan. What about that?"

A few developments, which the briefness of the article alluded to excluded, will show that, far from overlooking this point, I give it the principal place.

"The creditor," I say, "is justly entitled to be compensated for all that he parts with by the fact of the loan, and should receive that compensation from the party in whose favor he parts with it. On examination we find that he parts with two things in favor of two different parties:--

"First, he parts with the capital itself in favor of the borrower. The borrower is therefore bound to repay to him the capital at the stipulated time or times, and is bound to no more.

"Secondly, he parts with the certainty that, when the stipulated time comes, the money will be repaid to himself and not to his heirs, as he is not immortal. . . . His heirs, therefore, may justly indemnify him . . . by the payment of a sum or sums, called interest, proportional to the greater or less probability that the capital will be repaid to them and not to him. . . . Supposing the heirs say they don't care about the matter, and will have nothing to do with it, . . . the borrower . . . can offer to vicariously indemnify the lender for the risk incurred as aforesaid. But having paid what he has paid instead of the heirs and on their behalf, he is entitled, on his reimbursing the lender or his heirs, to deduct all that he has paid in the form of interest."

Developments indeed seem superfluous to make it clear that the lender, when "he parts with the capital itself in favor of the borrower," "parts with the use of his money during the time of the loan." In full compensation for this, his money is to be repaid at the stipulated time, with an opportunity to enjoy it then instead of having spent it before. Supposing, for example, the sum lent to be $500, and to constitute the possibility of a summer trip to the White Mountains, his lending the money for ten years simply adjourns the trip for ten years. The question whether, when the ten years are elapsed, the lender or his heir will have an opportunity to go to the White Mountains, then comes as my second point; and my subject is thus fully, though briefly, treated in its two branches. There is absolutely no possibility of a third one without introducing some of those extraneous elements which, as I have shown, must be excluded from the consideration of a loan-contract per se. Such would be the question of the solvency of the debtor, of the possible depreciation or enhancement of the value of the metal within the ten years, etc.

JULIUS FERRETTE.

[A lends to B $500. B repays it in two hours, without interest. A then lends it to C, who at the end of a year repays it with $30 additional, as interest. The question is--has C been swindled out of his $30? We believe that this sum is only a fair compensation for the year's use of the money. If the Bishop believes otherwise, we submit that his belief should be capable of explicit proof, and that avoidance of the issue is not proof. Is there no difference between the loans to B and to C, and ought C to pay back nothing more than the original $500?--ED.]

"ONE STAR DIFFERETH FROM ANOTHER STAR."

The following is a verbatim account of a conversation which recently took place between a Boston lady and the editor of a Nebraska newspaper:--

The editor spoke of Col. Ingersoll in terms of the highest encomium, finally remarking: "He's an infidel, too." "You seem to consider that a compliment," said the lady. "I do, I do," he replied promptly; "and there's Emerson, he's another; and James Freeman Clarke, and E. E. Hale. You do have great men your way. There's Ben Butler and Mr. Savage. Emerson's beautiful, beautiful; but he don't suit me like Bob Ingersoll."

BOSTON, June 28.

MRS. PARRY.

CLABINDA, Iowa, June 19, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:--

For several months last past, Mrs. Mattie H. Parry, of Beloit, Wisconsin, has been in the lecture-field in south-western Iowa and north-western Missouri.

Mrs. Parry is one of the ablest lecturers on the rostrum. She stands on the same broad platform that THE INDEX does, theologically, and challenges the clergy and all to meet her in discussion; but she is seldom troubled with disputants.

Mrs. Parry is only thirty-four years old, and bids fair to live long for the glorious work she is engaged in. Even some of the bluest Orthodox admit that she is as "logical as Blackstone and as eloquent as Cicero."

J. R. BAKER.

A PUZZLED PRIEST.

BOSTON, June 26, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:--

Dear Sir,--The following pregnant bit of a discourse by a Roman Catholic priest was heard by a niece of mine. If you enjoy it as much as I have done, I think you will give it to the readers of THE INDEX:--

"If the Virgin Mary had not listened to the embassy of the angel Gabriel, it is difficult to see how the redemption of the world could have been accomplished."

Yours truly,

THEO. BROWN.

LITTLE BOB begged hard the other day, when some friends were dining with us, to be allowed to come in and sit at the table during dessert, which I told him he might do, provided he neither talked nor annoyed people by asking for fruit. He very readily assented to this condition, which he honestly fulfilled to the letter. At last I heard the poor little fellow crying and sobbing most pitifully. "What is the matter, Bob?" I said; "what are you crying about?" "Why, pa," he replied, "here I am, asking for nothing, and getting it!"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "	"
" 26 " 51 "	6 "	"
" 52 " " "	5 "	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 88 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents; ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	6.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 1 vol.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Broviary.....	2.25
The World-Printer.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by George. Helmholtz. Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Garphner, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Whiston, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or Women's Relations to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 3 vols.....	6.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREEN'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.30
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Umeeen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Byes.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics, or Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Haezhot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq. of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq. of Sociology.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautes. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saluts, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.00
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. B.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HOBACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Stars.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MOBLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eckoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul's Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. C. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILP'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trosby Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear!.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	4.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	24.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEEOHER.) Pink and White Tarn.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Boom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	2.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English edition, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. OKLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Lectures.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	1.25
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	5.00
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Scatterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM AND THE NEW FAITH.

By EDMUND C. STEDMAN.

12mo, Cloth extra, with Portrait of Mr. FROTHINGHAM, 75 cents.

A clear and effective presentation of what is known as Rationalism in Religion in an analysis, by an admirer of acknowledged genius, of the life and work of one of its leading teachers.

"A brilliant and appreciative essay."—Boston Post.

"Radical ideas are here formulated, and expressed in a strong, clear light."—Liberal Christian.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LEWES' NEW BOOK!

THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF MIND.

Being the Third Volume of "Problems of Life and Mind."

By GEORGE H. LEWES, author of the History of Philosophy, the Life of Goethe, etc. 8vo. $3.00.

CONTENTS.—THE NATURE OF LIFE.—THE NERVOUS MECHANISM.—ANIMAL AUTOMATISM.—THE REFLEX THEORY.

Mr. Lewes is widely recognized as one of the most acute and independent of thinkers, and a writer of remarkable force and perspicacity. The two preceding volumes of Problems of Life and Mind have attracted in an unusual degree the attention of scientific and philosophical minds, and have taken rank among the most important of recent contributions to the philosophy of life and thought. The present volume is of equal significance, and will doubtless win equal study and admiration from those competent to follow the author's speculations and argument.

Its interest is by no means confined to specialists, but all persons of intelligence will find it in a high degree instructive and engaging.

"The book is one which will inevitably find its way into the hands of every student of mental science who wishes to obtain the freshest view of physiology in its relation to mind."—Saturday Review (London).

PROBLEMS OF LIFE AND MIND.

Vols. I. and II. $3.00 each.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Paper, 25 cents.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK &amp; TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATIONAL PAPERS.

Published by

HAILMANN &amp; DOERFLINGER,

Milwaukee, Wis.

(German) "ERZIEHUNGS-BLÄTTER," monthly, per year, $2.12.

(English) "THE NEW EDUCATION," a monthly tract for parents and teachers, devoted to Kindergarten Culture and Educational Hygiene in Home and School. Per year, 50 cents.

(English) The "New Education" TRACTS. Nos. 1 and 2 ready. Six copies (of any one number, or assorted) sent to any address on receipt of a 3-cent stamp.

A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS BOOK.

A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $2.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GERMAN RADICAL PAPERS

Published by

CARL DOERFLINGER,

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

"ONKEL KARL," an illustrated juvenile monthly. Good reading for American youth studying German. Natural morals. No bloody crimes. No love-stories for "Boys and Girls." No hypocritical cant. Price per year, $1.50.

"FREIDENKER" (Freethinker), a weekly paper, devoted to the elevation of mankind out of the thralldom of superstition and ignorance. Price per year, $2.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XIV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.

2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.

3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.

4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.

5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES	.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES	.....	.40
FIFTY	.....	.75
ONE HUNDRED	.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED	.....	3.00
THREE HUNDRED	.....	4.50
FIVE HUNDRED	.....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND	.....	12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 19, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 395.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSSES.

THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION for the Advancement of Science meets at Nashville, Tennessee, on August 29.

REFERRING to the Priest in Absolution, the London correspondent of the New York Tribune says: "The book for which Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant are to spend six months in prison is a good Sunday-school treatise by the side of this."

THE RIOT at Montreal on the twelfth of July was a most disgraceful affair. The Orangemen have as complete a right to parade in public as the Catholics have to make similar displays; the wisdom of the celebration is no affair of any one but themselves, and their voluntary surrender of the right on this occasion gave them a peculiar claim for protection in their other exercises. Only the inordinately credulous will believe that the Catholic Church could not have controlled the mob, if she had desired to do so; her power is too well established to leave a reasonable doubt on this point. Further, the inactivity of the police, which has so naturally excited the indignation of the better-disposed people of Montreal, can only be explained by treachery or intimidation on the part of the city authorities. The similar riot at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, shows the absolute necessity of protecting the Orangemen in their right of parade, until it is no longer questioned or infringed by any one. It is folly amounting to criminality for the authorities to evade the duty of establishing equal rights in this matter; the consequence of yielding to the mob will be practically to make the Catholic Church the mistress of the country. It is to be hoped that the British government will not show the white feather in so grave a matter as this. We have little sympathy with the Orangemen as a body, but we do hope to see their rights protected for the public weal.

THE CATHOLIC parochial schools, it seems, are to be henceforth exempted from taxation in Ohio. This is a great victory for Rome, and a formidable blow at the public school system. The defences of secular government are gradually giving way under the indefatigable attacks of its enemies, and its friends continue to look on in apathy. A despatch of July 12 from Cleveland says: "A case that has attracted public attention has been on trial in this city for several days before Judge Jones in the equity branch of the Common Pleas Court, in which Bishop Gilmour (Catholic) sought to enjoin the County Treasurer from collecting $3900 of taxes assessed on lands alleged to be held by him in trust for the use of Catholic parochial schools. The Bishop himself and other clerical witnesses were cross-examined exhaustively, and a large number of papal documents, decrees of various councils, an encyclical letter of the Pope, etc., were introduced by the defendant to show that the parochial schools were organized and conducted for purposes hostile to free institutions and opposed to the public policy of the State, and were not therefore to be construed as coming within the exemption clauses of the statutes either as public schools or institutions purely of public charity, and to show that the bishop holds title to property, not as trustee, but that he is absolutely accountable only to the Pope of Rome. To-day Judge Jones held that the establishment of these schools was not in any legal sense opposed to public policy unless they were tainted with illegality of origin, purpose, or tendency, or were in contravention of public morality; that the bishop was really the trustee of the property for school purposes, and that a court of equity could enforce the trust; that the school property was not exempt as public school property, but that, being built and partially carried on by voluntary donations, and no income arising therefrom, they were exempt from taxation, as institutions purely of public charity and under the same law as other sectarian colleges and institutions of the State, so far as general taxation was concerned, but not exempt from special assessments for sewers, paving, etc."

THE LONDON Punch of June 30 has a picture of "A Wolf in Sheep's Clothing." The wolf is a Ritualistic clergyman of the Holy Cross holding a copy of the Priest in Absolution in his hand, and led by the ear out of doors by Mr. Bull, who remarks to a fearfully disgusted Britannia: "Whenever you see any of these sneaking scoundrels about, ma'am, just send for me. I'll deal with 'em, never fear!" On the opposite page are these decidedly spirited lines:—

Punch to the Priestly Paul-Prys.

Pah! 'Tis a loathsome task; a piece of work
That Punch, as well as ROMANESQUE, fain would shirk;
But, lest the pest should suck fresh life from doubt,
"War to the Knife!" the tocsin must ring out.
Stand up, you Priestly Prys! Sham Roman pranks,
Mock-monkish tricks we look for from your ranks—
Matters of course, as illa familiar borne,
Or flagellated with half-careless scorn;
But when the gnats that pester poison too,
They must be crushed—and so, Jack-priests, must you.
What poison worse than the foul canker-worm's,
Dropped in the germ to blight the opening bud?
Nor casuist wriggings, nor sophist squirms,
Henceforth can clear you; it should stir the blood
Even of Gallios, whom your mammeries irk
No more than puppet-posturings, to see
The leaven of your impious plety
In black and white once more at its foul work.
Hearts in these fevered days are not too clean,
Imaginations not too sweet. What then?
You'd peep and pry into the souls of men,
To scent uncleanness out with snouts unclean;
You'd poke and pry upon e'en childhood's tracks
For the snake's trail. In maiden minds you'd wake Spectres more easy raised than banished. Take Your nostrums hence! Sham-Spiritual quacks
Must not be trusted with our households' health.
We dread your creep of super-subtle stealth,
Nor will we trust your fumbling hands to feel
About the roots of life. Let Spirit deal
With Spirit frankly in free daylight. Learn
That still our English natures scorn and spurn
This fleshly inquisition of the flesh,
Whose prying serve no end but to enmesh
Confessor and Confessed in Sense's snare.
So stand aside, let in the fresh June air,
With flowery breath to sweeten once again
The place your presence taints. 'Tis all in vain
You'd burrow, molewise, in the dirt. Give o'er!
We will not have this bastard-birth of Rome—
Will guard from it the purity of home,
Or crush it, like a viper, at the door!

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. H. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HOLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER,.....Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thordike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIHAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quilman, D.C.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D.C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

Unbelief:

ITS NATURE, CAUSE, AND CURE.

A DISCOURSE IN SOUTH PLACE CHAPEL, LONDON, APR. 8, 1877.

BY MONCURE D. CONWAY.

In the new magazine, the Nineteenth Century, a new kind of article has been introduced. It is called a modern "Symposium." A group of eminent men of various schools of belief set themselves to consider whether, or how far, human morality depends upon religious belief. Most of the statements appear to me remarkable for the elaboration with which they beat about the heart of the problem without touching it. The simple question is, whether the religious belief is a revelation from without, or an evolution from within, human nature. If Christianity, for instance, is a supernatural revelation it must have been given to make the world better, and of course the world would lose morally if belief in it should fail. On the other hand, if Christianity be an evolution, a historic product of human nature, the same force which created it will work on as it disappears and bear us above it.

As to the plain proposition whether a man's morality is related to his belief, there is no question at all. The experience of mankind in every age and place is that recorded in the Bible, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." But he must think it in his heart. It must be a genuine conviction. The "Symposium" would never have been written if this genuineness had not departed from the popular faith in the theology whose forms stand around us. "All that we are is founded in our thought," said Buddha. Our moral systems are so because man so thought. He once thought hanging the right punishment for theft, and then men were hung for stealing. That once moral law has become immoral, because the underlying belief has changed. Men still think hanging necessary to prevent murder, and so long as they think so men will be hung for murder. Man once thought men could be made moral by threats of hell and promises of heaven; he has found out that these threats and promises easily disconnected themselves from morality, and even encouraged immorality by persuading men that by priestly conjuration they could pass from the worst life, from the very scaffold, straight to the arms of Jesus.

Supernatural religion was of old the rival of morality. Its wrath was poured out on those who trusted in morality and good works. We have among us two totally different and discordant religions. One is for the glory and pacification of God; the other is for the improvement of man and the culture of this world. One is a religion whose legitimate embodiment is in sacraments, ceremonies, mysterious creeds, all related to man's estate in another world. The embodiment of the other is in social duties, charities, law and order, equal justice, and the pursuit of happiness. If belief in either of these religions were to fail, the institutions growing out of it would fail. If the root of belief in the other-world religion were cut, its foliage and fruit would wither,—that is, sacraments, supplications, mysterious dogmas, priests, bishops, and a vast number of litigations and quarrels, whose cessation would hardly demoralize society however deplored by the lawyers. If belief in the religion of morality were uprooted, then the corresponding growths would decay,—love and truth, charity and sympathy, justice and purity, all the social and civic duties.

Because the branches of these two trees mingle in society they must not be supposed to have one root. The priest and the moralist are both interested in the preservation of peace and social order. The priest cannot carry on his temple amid social chaos, and he borrows the ethical system. The moralist finds mankind selfish and passionate, so he borrows some of the menaces of the priest to frighten people into obedience. By this alliance our society has been formed in which morality is labelled Christian, and Christianity is warranted moral.

Nevertheless, it was never an alliance of equals. Christianity at an early period gained the upper hand, because it was believed to command the more terrible sanctions of reward and punishment. Morality could threaten or bribe a man for only the few years of life; but the binding and loosing of the priest extended through endless ages. He could always look down on kings and laws, and say to the people, "Fear not them that at most can only kill the body; but fear us who have power to cast both soul and body into hell for ever."

So Christianity became a throned ecclesiasticism: the priest became supreme. He denied that morality was any religion at all; it was only a policeman. He would not deny it might be valuable if it supported his ceremonies and authority; but if it claimed to be the main thing, he made war against it.

So poor Morality had to make the best terms it could; and it has gone on until now conceding that Christianity was the main thing, itself a dependent. Prayer, it agreed, was more important than justice; belief in the Trinity more essential to life than kindness, and theft a mere peccadillo compared with confounding the substance or dividing the persons of the godhead.

By this subordination the two as master and servant managed to get on peaceably until now. But now—even in our own day,—a tremendous break has occurred between them. And it came about in this way: the progress of knowledge discovered and proved that the fundamental dogmas of supernatural religion are untrue,—the speculations and dreams of ancient, ignorant tribes. This discovery has brought on a new set of moral questions altogether. The servant has been called suddenly to judge the character of his master. Does his master speak the truth? Certainly he has not in the past. Will he in the future? What! and admit all his divine knowledge to have been a pretence! Impossible! Then, says Morality, can I remain moral and still support untruth? Theology suggests, Why not shut your eyes to this discovery of untruth in your old master, or at least wink at it? But is that moral? asks Morality, anxiously. Is there not a morality beside that of conduct—a morality for the intellect? If there are mental duties, then to assent to a fiction is as immoral as adultery. To believe a proposition aside from its truth, to believe it merely because of some advantage, becomes intellectual prostitution. The purity of the mind is bargained away.

It is vain now to claim the old authority of religion over morality; it is a part of the new discovery that there can be no authority but truth. So the system which sits in the seat of a religion, but finds itself opposed in the name of morality, has been compelled to try and save itself by claiming to be the very soul and self of popular morality. Disbelieve, it says, if you must, but keep quiet about it; for if the masses come to disbelieve with you, they will break all restraints. They hold what morality they have, only because the priest has adopted morality, and told them it is part of their means of escaping hell; but if you take away all their preternatural terrors, they will not be restrained by mere considerations of public good, or the beauty of virtue.

To this, Morality, merely as a prudential thing, confidently replies: Admitting your old hopes and fears still bind the ignorant, it is only the ignorant. You leave the educated world suspended between the old and the new; what is to keep the keepers—to lead the leaders—to prevent the cultivated class from sinking into mere hypocrisy, luxury, selfishness? Nay, the obligations your superstition imposes on the ignorant must become ever weaker even for them. The spread of knowledge, which is inevitable, will mean the spread of lawlessness. Every new school-house we are building must prove a centre to radiate recklessness. As a mere practical policy your attempt to keep up the delusions is itself a delusion.

But Morality has a higher answer than that. As superstitious religion crumbles, Morality itself has ascended to be a religion. From being servant it assumes to be master; it claims to be itself a faith, a belief, and affirms that truth is to be maintained on principle and apart from any possible overt acts. It is not mere outward rule and law, but contains an inward life which inspires it to believe in what it affirms, and to religiously trust that the fruit of right will never be wrong, whatever may be the appearances to the contrary.

This is the living faith of the present; it will be the commanding faith of the future. Theologians call it unbelief, but in no sense is it that. Its attitude towards the superstition which sometime superseded it is that of disbelief; but there is a vast difference between disbelief and unbelief. The unbeliever is one who has not accepted a thing; the disbeliever has positively rejected it. The unbeliever may not believe a thing because he never heard of, or never examined it, or does not wish to admit it; the disbeliever has considered and denied. Consequently unbelief does not imply that there is any belief at all in the mind. Disbelief implies that a proposition has been rejected because there is something already in the mind which excludes it. Consequently a man cannot be a disbeliever of one thing without being a believer in some other thing. But unbelief is a mere blank, passive state of mind; and it deserves some of the evil accent it bears to the religious mind, because it is generally the counterpart of a torpid indifference. He who disbelieves in science, he who believes in morality, he who worships humanity, or adores reason, cannot be called an unbeliever. He is a great believer. As to the rest, no intelligent mind exists which does not disbelieve something.

The Christian calls the man of science an infidel, or unbeliever; the Mussulman calls the Christian an infidel. Every religion is infidelity to other religions; and while sectarians thus call each other by hard names, all victims of idle words, the real enemy of all religion, unbelief—systematic indifference, cynical contempt for all high principles,—is sapping the strength of every civilization. No student of history can view without concern the moral dangers which attend the crumbling of any religion. We have before us the fearful scenes which followed the decline of the gods and goddesses of Rome in universal contempt and unbelief: amid the fragments of their statues and the blackened ruins of their temples stands Caligula knocking off the head of Jupiter and setting his own in its place, and Nero lighting up his orgies with burning Christians for his torches. When Vespasian came to rebuild the temples, repair the altars, and set the gods back in their shrines, what he could not bring back was belief in them. Titus tried the same. Titus was strong enough to carry to the temple of Jerusalem the same desolation that Nero had brought on Rome; but Titus was not strong enough to carry into any mind the faith that had become a mythology. And amid those ruins belief never sprang up again until called from its grave by the voice of a great soul, whom the old moral world crucified because he announced a new moral world,—setting the religion of simple purity and love against established superstition and proud sacerdotalism.

There are not wanting prophets who, remembering these things—remembering, too, the terrors amid which Romanism went down in France, Germany, and England,—predict that the decay of dogmas in the popular mind will be followed here, too, by the carnival of rapine and lust. I hope not. But if we are saved it will be because the real believers of our time—the disbelievers in superstition—have grown wise enough to anticipate and forestall the danger. The evil in those historic examples was that moral principles had not been cultivated in and for themselves. The light suddenly blazed on a long bandaged eye and inflamed it. The whole order of society had been made to rest on gods and goddesses, and when belief in them gave way the superstructure tumbled down. Undoubtedly the like fate would befall us if the people were still taught that the only motive to be honest is to get to heaven; that self-restraint is only a prudent investment in paradise; that any crime may be outweighed by accepting the blood of Christ. If popular morality has no root of its own, if it is a mere graft on the decaying limb of a dying trunk, then when the dead tree falls, down goes all that was grafted on it.

But I would fain believe that such is not the case with our public morality. It has crept into our courts that a man may testify the truth without kissing the Bible, and may minister justice without believing in hell or heaven. It has made its way even into the admissions of the priest that his church presents no higher morality than the societies of those who reject his morality. The noble lives of the great disbelievers, who were yet the martyrs of their belief,—the Lyells and Grotes, Mills and Channings, Mazzinis, Strausses, Parkers, who sleep in honorable graves; the Emersons, Huxleys, Darwins, Carlyles, Spencers, at whose feet this living generation sits and learns not so much any theory as the great moral lesson of courage and fidelity,—these have not spoken to the world in vain. How far it has penetrated into the popular mind that virtue, kindness, truth, and honesty are independent of religious phantasms—good and essential in themselves—rooted in the honor of humanity,—this cannot be estimated. Our sanguine hopes that we shall escape the political Nemesis which has heretofore pursued legally established falsehood may be disappointed.

Assuredly we cannot escape the moral Nemesis. Even now one phase of the decay of superstition is upon us,—a phase which in previous ages was represented in social ruin. It is the phase of mere unbelief; the general dropping out of belief of the old Orthodoxy, accompanied by an indifference to all religion, chiefly shown in a pretence to believe what is not believed.

One hundred years ago, when Soame Jenyns wrote his hard, dogmatic defence of Christianity, a certain clergyman wrote on it: "Almost thou persuadest me not to be a Christian." Since then the dismal theology of Soame Jenyns has run its course; it has sought in Nature signs of the vindictiveness of God; in hereditary disease, proofs of God's hatred of man for Adam's sin; it has paraded human misery on earth as a happy augury of endless misery hereafter. It so completed in the real mind of this country the work Soame Jenyns began in that old clergyman, it has quite persuaded men not to be Christians. Nobody can see the gay, smiling, money-getting, eating, and drinking multitudes around us, from the merry-makers of Good Friday—once funeral—to the clergyman with his old port, and imagine that they believe in hell, or the devil, that riches hinder heaven, and the world is all accursed. But, alas! the departure of belief has left them in mere unbelief. One thing untrue as another, they stick to that which is most convenient. They make religion a mere minister to their social, political, or even pecuniary advantages.

Now, because this phase of no-faith does not break out in blood and riot, let us not imagine that it can exist without serious harm. A reign of terror were hardly worse than a reign of chronic hypocrisy and selfishness. Real unbelief means heartlessness, and it must lower the whole character of both individual and national life. Maybe society can get along in that way; a colony of ants gets along; but there can be no grandeur in a country which has no faith; there can be no ascent of national genius where there is no moral earnestness. Also a man may get along in one way by cauterizing conscience and burying enthusiasm. When a shrewd fellow once defended his base occupation by saying, "I must live," a wit replied, "I don't see the necessity." A man has indeed to justify his right to consume and occupy a part of Nature. A weed has no right to soil and sunshine that might turn to corn and wine. But what good thing can grow in barren soil under a sunless roof?

Under no such murky atmosphere, shrouding every star of idealism, can we raise our own minds and hearts, or those of our children, to any high aims, or secure beautiful characters. It cannot be done by a spurious devotionism, the hectic spot of a dying faith; it can as little be done by cold-hearted absorption in pleasures of life, which should be only its fringe. It is no true belief to have faith in the senses and their satisfactions. Belief is that which trusts in principles, recognizes laws and obeys them; and whatsoever it finds to be true, raises that to be the pole-star of its progress. The man of unbelief is the mere organism of external influences. When you have found what is respectable in his neighborhood—what is strongest,—the biggest church, the successful party, you have found all there is of him. There is nothing in him to build on. In the far West, among rough adventurers, along the Mississippi, with all their oaths and vices, one often finds that after all they have some principle; deep down there's something they'll fight for, some point of honor they'll die for. The half-savage pilot who swears and drinks, and then sinks with his boat to save the passengers; that noted gambler who, at the late St. Louis fire, lost his life in saving others,—you can build that man into your social wall. But you can do nothing with your smooth-polished gentleman who believes in nothing, and holds himself ready to affirm or deny anything you please so long as the mellifluous flow of his self-seeking existence is undisturbed.

It should be recognized that the great ages have always been ages of belief; and though they have uttered their mighty disbelief, they have never sunk to the sunless gulf of unbelief.

There are two etymologies of the word belief,—some derive it from the old German belieben, to belove; others making it be-leben, to live by. But in either case it marks the height from which the ordinary use of the word has descended.

Whether belief was of old that which a man lives by, or whether that a man loves, or believes,—such indeed must a true belief be to any man if it is to serve him or others. Eight hundred years ago, two great French theologians were teaching the world. One Abelard, the other Anselm. Abelard said, Intellege ut credas; Anselm replied, Crede ut intelligas. The world turned from Abelard, who said, "Understand, that you may believe," to follow Anselm, who said, "Believe, that you may understand." So, putting out their eyes that they might see better, they groped their way until, mad with disappointment in the thickening darkness, like blind Samson, they pulled down pillars of throne and temple in revolutionary wrath.

It is time now to remember the long-forgotten motto of Abelard: "Understand, that you may believe!" He only reaches his aim to whom his aim is clear. You can only live by a belief when it has entered profoundly into both brain and heart. It is something you are to believe, believe, live by. You shall fall in love with it. Where that faith goes there will you go; its people shall be your people, its God your God. And if amid all the great events and causes of our time you can find nothing that can so kindle your enthusiasm, it is because you are the victim of that organized unreason which has set up a tyrant for men to worship, and made the merit of belief consist in the absurdity of the thing believed.

Wonderful, indeed, it would have been if, after ages of monster-worship and compulsory belief of the incredible, the very organ of faith should not have suffered atrophy in many. But let none rest content with that mere despair—the suicide of faith,—unbelief. Let every mind know that it is its nature to believe. If a mind will only ascend from unbelief to disbelief, if it will face the fact that the dogmas do not fill it with conviction and joy, and ask itself why not; if it will consider and think, it will intelligently disbelieve, and that disbelief will be the other side of a belief. An aged authoress once told me, "I do not believe in miracles because I believe in God." If you do not believe in jealous Jehovah, it is because you believe in supreme love. If not in depravity, it is because you believe in man. Follow that earnest scepticism, and it shall fall like a blossom before the fair fruitage of a larger faith.

THE PRIEST IN ABSOLUTION.

THE CLASS OF LITERATURE CIRCULATED BY THE SOCIETY OF THE HOLY CROSS—PECCOLAR PRACTICES ADOPTED BY CLERGYMEN OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND—AN INFAMOUS MANUAL OF CONFESSION.

An extraordinary scene occurred in the British House of Lords on Thursday, June 14, which is thus reported in the London Times of the 15th:—

"The Earl of Redesdale rose to call the attention of the House to a book entitled The Priest in Absolution, which had been privately printed by, and was at the disposal of, an association of clergymen called the Society of the Holy Cross for private and limited circulation among the clergy. The book, the subject of his notice, was brought under his observation a short time ago, and he ventured to think that the fact of such a work being in existence was well worthy the consideration of their lordships' House and of the whole country. The society by which it was printed and circulated was one called the Society of the Holy Cross, and had among its members many well-known and in some respects very excellent men. Rev. A. H. Mackonochie was Master of the society, and on the Council were Rev. Dr. Littledale, Rev. A. H. Stanton, Rev. C. T. Lowder, and Rev. H. D. Nihill; and Rev. A. Tooth was one of the Foreign Missions Committee. With regard to the book itself, he believed it had been compiled by a gentleman now dead, from whose widow the society had purchased the copyright. It seemed to be regarded with suspicion even by those who had published it, because in the preface there was this passage:—

"To prevent scandal arising from the curious or purulent misuse of a book which treats of spiritual diseases, it has been thought best that the sale should be confined to the clergy who desire to have at hand a sort of valde mecum for easy reference in discharge of their duties as confessors."

"That statement was not a little remarkable; and he was informed that in reply to one clergyman who had requested copies of the work to be forwarded to him, this reply was received: 'I am unable to comply with your request without reference to some well-known priest of your acquaintance.' Bearing in mind the doctrines of the Church of England, the doctrines laid down in this book were rather extraordinary. He would not quote many extracts to their lordships, but to show the character of the book he felt bound to quote two or three. Here was one:—

"There is no resource for the spiritually sick but private confession and absolution; and to make that effectual it is necessary that the penitent be examined with discretion and expertness."

"Again:—

"Children may receive absolution with much spiritual benefit after seven, or even five or six."

"The priest must be careful not to be too reserved in questions, lest he risk thereby the loss of a great good for the sake of the less."

"Children may be asked with whom they sleep; if they have played with their bed-fellows; touched each other designedly or unbecomingly."

"Adults, with whom they had to do; whether more than once with the same person; when it took place; how often the sin was committed; how often interrupted before committed."

"He did not like to go into these matters, but he ought, perhaps, to bring one further subject of examination under their lordships' notice, to show how grave was the matter to which he had ventured to direct attention, in the hope of putting a stop to the practices inculcated by the book:—

"In regard to married persons, the priest is bound ordinarily only to inquire, when he finds it necessary, of wives if they have rendered due benevolence, and that only in the most modest way he can, and not inquire further unless he be asked questions himself. Wives should be asked if they have not caused their husbands to blaspheme by not rendering due benevolence. Wives often by refusing the latter are damned, and cause the damnation of their husbands by driving them to thousands of iniquities. The questions should be veiled in discreet language: 'Do you obey your husband in what belongs to the marriage state?'"

"The danger arising from auricular confession was admitted in the book, for in one passage it was stated that the confessor 'should abstain from every word which springs from tenderness,' and that 'though he may say 'My dear son' to a young man, prudence forbids him to say 'My dear child' to one of the other sex. Then there was this testimony in the book as to the result of the system:—

"It is only too easy during long interviews to be exposed to the incursion of impure affections, and to lose more than is gained. Circumspection is the more necessary when the youth or appearance of people, or the subjects of confession, or their great piety or wickedness, might cause more easily bad impressions on his or their hearts. Pity, I say, has been more than once a wreck upon which imprudent confessors have been wrecked, who, by commencing with a simple spiritual esteem, have ended insensibly with a sensual and carnal love."

"It was a doctrine of the Church of England that there were only two Sacraments. According to this book, Confession and Absolution were a Sacrament. Another doctrine of the Church of England was that there was but one Mediator between God and man. What did this book say?

"To think of the Ever Virgin Mary and her purity, and to beseech God to hear her intercession on behalf of those who long for likeness to her immaculate example."

"This was the manner in which the book described 'the Priest':—

"The Priest as a Judge. It is in his capacity as judge, in remitting or retaining sins, that skilful adroitness supplies him with means for bringing the sinner to a right state for receiving absolution."

"It was further stated: 'The priest is judge in the place of God.' That was, he assumed to himself perfect infallibility of decision in respect of the persons who came to him to receive absolution, and thereby to be relieved from all responsibility on account of their sins. He submitted to their lordships that the time had come when the laity should move in this matter. Hitherto it had been treated too much as one exclusively for the clergy. Since he put his notice on the paper his attention had been called to a book entitled The Priest's Prayer-book, designed as an Appendage to the Book of Common Prayer. Fifth edition. Much enlarged; 369 pages. In this book were directions under the heading, 'Communion of the Sick with the Reserved Sacrament.' What did the rubric of the Church say in reference to the consecrated elements?—

"If any remain of that which has been consecrated it shall not be carried out of the church, but the priest and such other of the communicants as he shall then call unto him shall immediately after the blessing eat and drink the same."

"And the twenty-eighth article was in these words:—

"The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped."

"But what did the Priest's Prayer-book say?—

"The priest then takes the Blessed Sacrament from the pyx and, holding it before the sick person, says, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world.' He kneels down and adds, 'Lord, I am not worthy that thou shouldst come under my roof, but speak only and Thy servant shall be healed.'

"He did not know whether the book had been seen by the right reverend Bench. He thought it was deserving of their attention, and he hoped their lordships would be of opinion that the time had arrived when there should be a decided condemnation of practices such as those indicated in the volumes from which he had quoted his extracts. [Hear, hear.]

"The Archbishop of Canterbury then arose and said: 'The fact that such a book should be printed and circulated is to my mind a matter of very great concern. The noble earl spared us from many details; but, at the same time, he read quite enough to show that no modest person could read the book without regret, and that it is a disgrace to the community that such a work should be circulated under the authority of clergymen of the Established Church. [Hear, hear.] . . . The persons who put this book forward have no authority but one which they have arrogated to themselves. [Hear, hear.] They have been in no way invested with authority by their superiors to do what they have done in this matter. [Hear, hear.] And, my lords, those restraints which in the Church of Rome are imposed in order to prevent those results arising which we might expect to arise from the practices to which I am referring, are certainly wanting in this case. [Hear, hear.] Now, I do not know whether the law is broken if a book of this nature is circulated without being publicly sold; but I cannot help thinking that the person who circulates a book of this kind, even though he refuses to give it to a clergyman who applies for it, unless he refers to some third party, is trenching very near the confines of the law. [Hear, hear.] . . . They (the clergymen) have made a most grievous mistake in endeavoring to pry into the secret thoughts of the human heart in matters of this delicacy. [Hear, hear.] I am certain that if such a course is persevered in by them it will have very evil results: first, in the harm it will do to their own minds; secondly, in the harm it will do to the minds of those who come to them; and, thirdly, in its effects as regards the influence on families of the clergy of that Church whose interests they wish to further. [Hear, hear.] I cannot imagine that any right-minded man could wish to have such questions addressed to any member of his family; and if he had any reason to suppose that any member of his family had been exposed to such an examination, I am sure it would be the duty of any father of a family to remonstrate with the clergyman who had put the questions, and warn him never to approach his house again. [Cheers.] I have ventured, my lords, to express my feelings on this matter very strongly; but I have no reason to think that I am not the mouthpiece of the right reverend Bench on this occasion. Indeed, I have reason to know that in reference to one clergyman, one of my right reverend brothers, who is now present, took immediate steps, and had the satisfaction of receiving from the clergyman a disavowal of future connection with either the book or the society. [Cheers.]

"Lords Oranmore and Browne said that the subject was not a new one. He had brought it under the notice of the House and of the right reverend Bench, but he did not think that the Bishops had shown themselves sincerely desirous to condemn the practices denounced that evening by the most reverend Primate.

"The Earl of Harrowby thought that the speech of the most reverend Primate must have been most satisfactory to their lordships, because his grace had told them that any clergyman who adopted the practices recommended in the book published by the Society of the Holy Cross ought not to have access to any of their houses. He regretted, however, to think that those practices were being inculcated very widely. He had heard of a case in which instruction for the confession was given by a person who said he himself did not approve of the practice, but, as the young men whom he was instructing would be called on to hear confessions, such instruction was necessary for them. This was no light matter, and he was glad to perceive the tone in which it had been treated. Nothing could be so fatal to the character of this country as that such a system as that of the Confessional should spread among us.

"Most of the London papers reported the proceedings referred to, and all united in denouncing the book in unmeasured terms. The Pall Mall Gazette, an evening newspaper and review noted for its respectability, says: 'Prudery is too often the passive ally of obscenity; and the grossest outrages upon morality often escape the full measure of their deserved condemnation because, like certain noisome animals, they are too filthy to be approached. We are resolved, however, that the Priest in Abolition shall not altogether escape in this way. We will quote all that we can, and a great deal more than we like, of the excerpts which lie before us; and our readers will be able to judge of the book from the fact that it contains far more indecent things than any of those which we have ventured to print. . . . The head of confession is the delicate one of the seventh commandment:—

"Penitents should be questioned as to thoughts; whether they have had corrupt desires, or had taken 'morose delectation' in impurity, and whether they have clearly turned their attention to them and consented to them; whether girls, widows, or married women have been the subjects of their thoughts, and what evil they thought to do with them. If, however, they cannot answer satisfactorily, they should be asked whether they have lusted after persons they have met or who have come into their minds, or whether they have been in the habit of dwelling impurely upon the thought of one person in particular through their never resisting bad acts of consent thereto; and whether they have always lusted after such a person, or only as often as they looked upon them. Lastly, they should be asked if they have taken means to follow up evil thoughts, for then such means become endowed with interior wickedness, and therefore are to be explained as being exterior sins, or deeds in their commencement. As to obscene words, penitents should be asked, (1) in whose presence and how often they uttered them; whether before men or women, married or unmarried, young persons or adults; (2) what terms they used. . . .

"Desunt parva et spurca."

As to acts. They should be asked with whom they had to do; whether more than once with the same person; when it took place, with the view of learning what occasions of sin might be avoided; how often the sin was consummated, and how often it was interrupted before consummated.

"Under the head of 'Duties of Married Persons' is included a quantity of matter far too offensive for quotation. We can say no more of it than this: that it places the marriage-bed itself under a system of the strictest surveillance, and furnishes the priest with a series of the most minute inquiries into details which are left sub tacite—to use the expression of a heathen poet whose plain-spoken indecency was ten times less disgusting than the innuendoes of the 'Christian' confessor—by every decent man or woman in the world.

"We leave our readers to ponder the foregoing passages from the Priest in Abolition, and to consider whether they care to submit their wives, sons, and daughters to such religious training as this, and to teachers of whom the Primate of their own nominal Church has admitted that a layman would be justified in warning them 'never to approach his doors again.' And having duly pondered the extracts from this disgusting book, we would ask them this further question, What claim have the men whose vade mecum this is to be considered Englishmen at all? They are of no country. They have renounced their own along with the reformation which they disown and vilify. They belong only to the bastard sect of their own creation—that offspring begotten of sacerdotal arrogance upon effeminate vanity,—that incarnation of the spirit at once of the mystagogue and the man-milliner. What claim to be heard on any question of English politics, domestic or foreign, can attach to men who live only to assert that principle of priestly domination,—of priestly intrusion into the household,—under which Englishmen were the most restive of all races, even in the so-called 'ages of faith,' and which in the present age they regard with more disgust and abhorrence than any other nation upon earth?"

MR. JOHNSON'S WORK ON ORIENTAL RELIGIONS--CHINA.

It is five years since the Rev. Samuel Johnson published the first volume of his work on Oriental Religions and their Relation to Universal Religion. The volume was devoted to the religions and civilization of India; it represented the fruits of the study and research of a score of years; and it challenged admiration by its profound scholarship, earnest purpose, and broad view. We have now, from the press of J. R. Osgood & Co., the second volume of the series, treating in the same broad and scholarly way the religions and civilization of China. Mr. Johnson puts in a single word the main difference between the Hindus and the Chinese by calling the mental quality of the one family cerebral and that of the other muscular. In the one case, we have an imaginative, metaphysical race, who think away matter, and hate the physical toil which develops its uses; in the other, apparently a swarm of plodding utilitarians, sternly adherent to things actual and positive. The Chinese are not pure materialists, but they do not hold ideas apart from concrete embodiment, so as to study them in their own right, and in their capacity for growth. This quality of the Chinese mind is illustrated in the inflexibility of their written language, and it furnishes the key to their immobility of character, and their childlikeness; their immense civilization appearing to be, in many respects, an arrested development. Mr. Johnson does not consider that the Chinese mind is wanting in ideality, but that the abstract is to them inseparable from some fixed, actual embodiment, and as a result of such constant experience of limitation there is a perpetual schooling in moderation and repression, and compromise between extremes. This, he remarks, is that passport to Chinese wisdom which meets us everywhere in philosophy, politics, manners, literature, faith, "the middle path; the mean." He shows the application of this principle to logical processes, to language, jurisprudence, and character, to morality and religion. He analyzes the multitudinous and conflicting testimony concerning the Chinese character, and defends it from the charges of dishonesty and impurity. He credits the Chinese, upon the whole, with honesty, social order, peaceableness, courage, endurance, benevolence, warm domestic affections, industry, cheerfulness, and a passion for traffic. Their apparent cruelty he ascribes to defective sensibility; their immobility is counterbalanced by a peculiar alacrity of the social sentiments and attractions, and by certain natural reactions. "Their qualities," the author observes, "eminently fit them to enter into the spirit of the present age, and to work in its paths as a two-fold force of moral conservatism and industrial progress. Not less do they serve to warn us by the stunted state of their imagination and ideal faculty, by the lack of free individuality and original force, of the dangers of mechanism and uniformity in culture. And this is timely service, in view of many similar educational tendencies that begin to flow already in America from the jealous assertion of a universal equality of minds, and of every one's capacity for all functions; an unlimited power being expected from prescribed methods and the machinery of drill. Many prejudices will be removed, and wider conceptions of the unity of races will prevail, when our growing acquaintance with this great people shall bring us to do justice to their democratic instincts and affinities, to their local liberties, to their universal aim in education, and to that grand theory of office as a function of knowledge and virtue, which they have so persistently striven to embody with more or less success, while free America, by general confession, has of late most perilously thrown it aside."

Having thus analyzed the qualities of the Chinese mind, Mr. Johnson, in the remainder of the first division of the volume, proceeds to consider their industries and science, the history of their external relations—including the opium war, the coolie trade, and the treatment of immigrants in California,—their ethnic type, and the resources of their country. In the second division, which bears the general title of "Structures," he treats at length, and with great thoroughness and interest, their systems of education and government, their language and literature, their history and their poetry. The third division, upon "Sages," discusses the lives, teachings, and influence of the great leaders in philosophy and religion. It opens with a statement of the doctrines and results of Rationalism, as held by the thinking class in China, followed by a sketch of the life and character of Confucius, an outline of his doctrines, and a survey of their influence, and by a similar, though briefer sketch of Mencius, and the Mencian doctrines. The fourth division presents an analysis and history of the beliefs of the Chinese. Among the foundations underlying these beliefs are enumerated patriarchalism, the ancestral shrine, the future life, Fung-chiu (the doctrines relating to the elemental powers), divination, and theism. Next is given a history of Buddhism, the methods of its coming, its development, and the forms it assumes among the Chinese. An account of missionary failures and fruits follows. Mr. Johnson considers Protestant missions a still greater failure than those of the Nestorians and Catholics, as far as religious results are concerned, although they have rendered real service in enlightening the minds and healing the bodies of the people, and deserve recognition because of their literary and scientific results. In the next section, Tao-ism, as taught by Lao-tse and Tao, and exemplified in the schools of faith developed by them, is described; and in the last section we have a survey of the teachings of philosophy, as embodied in the Y-king, or book of transformations, in metaphysics, and in anthropology.

The volume, whose principal topics we have thus hastily and imperfectly stated, presents a very fascinating subject for study, and will repay the most careful and painstaking perusal. No mere compilation of facts and opinions—with whatever care and diligence it might be made—could be compared for a moment with this work, which is in the highest sense original, and constitutes a genuine and important addition to the world's store of knowledge. It is strong, vigorous, and closely-knit; rich in its accumulation of facts, and richer still by virtue of the subtle thought and controlling purpose which bind together the vast stores of material, and make them available to the reader,—giving to each its proper relation and significance. The value of the work is enhanced, and the circle of readers to which it appeals is greatly widened by the rare excellence of the style in which it is written,—a style which is dignified without being ponderous, and which has a certain crispness and freshness whose charm holds the reader's attention throughout. We do not know how extended may be the design of the work which Mr. Johnson has undertaken; but if it were to go no further than the publication of these two volumes—each of independent interest, though part of a common scheme, and each containing in its nearly a thousand broad pages an exhaustive study of the people whose religion and civilization it considers,—it would be a work sufficient to constitute a noble monument of a life-time of patient study and labor, and to entitle the author to the respect and gratitude of scholars everywhere. We trust, however, that the author will be permitted to carry out the work to the limits originally suggested to his mind, after the same thorough fashion in which he has begun it.—Boston Journal, July 6.

THE LAST MAN.

WHAT WILL BECOME OF HIM?—WILL HE BE DROWNED SUFFOCATED, BLOWN UP, BURNED, FROZEN TO DEATH, CRUSHED, OR WILL THERE NEVER BE A LAST MAN?—A COLLECTION OF CURIOUS THEORIES.

In all the discussion which has agitated the world over the Mosaic and geological accounts of the creation, no question has been more argued than that of the origination of the race. There is nothing like variety, even in scientific argument; and we have heard so much disputation as to whether Adam or an anthropoid ape was our primal ancestor, that we are now impelled to turn to the diametrically opposite end of creation, and consider, not the beginning of the first, but the end of the last man. Speculation as to future events—especially if several billion or so years distant—is not particularly profitable; but if a personal originator of the race is to be made an object of present theory, similar theorizing as to the personal terminator of the race is certainly just as useful, both hypotheses being equal in the speculative nature of their basis, and it being certain that we cannot know anything more definite about the subject of the one than about that of the other.

M. Alphonse de Candolle points out that the terrestrial surface is constantly diminishing, and that elevated regions are being lowered, through the incessant action of water, ice and air. Besides, earthly matter, washed or ground away, is being carried into the sea, which is thus filling up; consequently in course of time the present configuration of the land will change. Continents will be divided into islands, and these will be gradually submerged. The human race will be driven by the encroaching waters from island to island. Finally the sun will rise on a vast waste of sea, dotted perhaps with far-separated islets which once were mountain peaks. One by one these will be submerged, until finally but one is left,—Kunchajunga, the loftiest summit of the Himalayas, perhaps; or, more likely, some new coral reef which an insect to-day is laboring down in the depths to build up. Here will perish the last man, and the body of the last relic of our race will be washed away by the waves of the mighty flood. Therefore (1) if the last man does not starve to death, he will probably be drowned.

Another theory is, that of the periodicity of deluge, proposed by Adhemar, which depends on the fact of the unequal length of the seasons in the two hemispheres. Autumn and our winter last with us one hundred and seventy-nine days. In the Southern Hemisphere they last one hundred and eighty-six days. These seven days or one hundred and sixty-eight hours of difference increase each year the coldness of the pole. During ten thousand five hundred years, the ice accumulates at one pole, and melts at the other, thereby displacing the earth's centre of gravity. Now a time, it is reasoned, will arrive when, after the maximum of elevation of temperature on one side, a catastrophe will happen which will bring back the centre of gravity to the centre of figure, and cause an immense deluge. The inventor of this theory fails to consider the probability of the centre of gravity returning as gradually as it was displaced; but, with this defect, the hypothesis from another point of view goes to show that (2) the last man will certainly be drowned.

Every few years or so we have a comet scare; and when the flaming star appears in the sky, there are plenty of nervous persons who fret themselves over the chances of our earth coming in contact with it. It is, of course, not without the limits of possibility that such a collision should occur. If it did, our globe would plunge into an atmosphere of gas, which, mingling with the air, say those who predict this mode of death to our planet, would produce an explosion which would destroy every living thing. Such being the case, the person capable of breathing deleterious gas longest would survive the rest; and therefore (3) if the last man is not suffocated by cometary gas, he will be blown up.

It is believed by many astronomers that there is a retarding medium in space, based on the fact that Encke's comet, in thirty-three years, loses a thousandth part of its velocity. If the ether resists our earth's motion in its orbit, then the centrifugal force will be constantly lessened, while the action of gravity will remain constant; so that the earth will describe a spiral path, always approaching the sun. The effect of this would be to convert the tropics into a desert, which would gradually expand towards the poles, from about which the ice and snow would be quickly melted. Finally, the intense heat would turn the whole globe into one barren waste; but before then the human race would have disappeared. The probabilities in such event point to the supposition that (4) the last man will be sunstruck.

There are certain classes of rocks which are constantly becoming hydrated, and are thus occluding immense amounts of water. The theory has been broached, that, in course of time, the seas will thus be dried up; and water being absent, our atmosphere will disappear, the earth becoming a waste similar to the moon. But, before then, the atmosphere would probably become too rare for human existence. As the air pressure decreases, as M. Bert has shown, the privation of oxygen produces the deleterious effects experienced chiefly by aeronauts and mountain climbers. Consequently, in view of this theory, (5) the last man will be suffocated.

Our sun itself may come to an end in two ways. First, as Mr. Proctor has recently very graphically explained, being but a variable star, it may suddenly blaze up, and go out as other suns are known to have done. In this case, the intense heat of the colossal conflagration would destroy everything on the earth, and perhaps even vaporize the earth itself. Should this event occur, (6) the last man will be burned up.

Or the sun may cool down. The glacial zones would thus enlarge; the race will be crowded nearer and nearer to the equator, by the encroaching glaciers coming from the poles. The small space will no longer support the life upon it; and, in the terrible struggle for existence, only the fittest will of course survive. Finally, after the earth becomes covered with the vast ice-sheet, man with his wonderful capacity of adaptation to surrounding circumstances will probably subsist for a certain period; but in the end the constantly augmenting coldness will assert itself, and thus, eventually, (7) the last man will be frozen to death.

It has been suggested, that the cooling of the earth will lead to the production of immense fissures in its crust, similar to those already visible in the moon. The surface of the earth would thus be rendered extremely unstable, while the dwellers thereon for safety would be compelled to take refuge in caves. It is possible that the troglodytic remnant of the race might meet its fate in some great cataclysm or eruption; and hence it is assumable that (8) the last man will be crushed in some subterranean cavern.

Or supposing that the people adapted themselves to their surroundings, and managed to live on the surface, until the time when the earth becomes so cracked and broken that, as predicted, it falls apart, flying off in fragments into space. Possibly a part may exist large enough to preserve its atmosphere. It may either be a satellite of the first larger body within whose sphere of attraction it may come, or it may fall into another world. In such case, (9) the last man will be killed by the crash of orbs; but if he is not, and no one can tell to what extremes of resistance the race may develop, he will become an inhabitant of a new world. Evolution does not necessarily imply progress; and possibly the race may have retrograded until the human being possesses the nature of the plant-louse. Such being the case, this single inhabitant will spontaneously produce posterity of both sexes. A new race of man will begin, to continue ad infinitum. Hence (10), there will be no last man.—Scientific American.

CHARLES DICKENS ON THE SUNDAY QUESTION.

It would puzzle the most austere of the Sunday legislators to assign any valid reason for not opening the British Museum on Sunday. The Museum contains rich specimens from all the vast museums and repositories of Nature and rare and curious fragments of the mighty works of Art in by-gone ages, all calculated to awaken contemplation and inquiry, and to tend to the enlightenment and improvement of the people. "But attendants would be necessary, and a few men would be employed upon the Sabbath." They certainly would, but how many? Why, if the Museum and the National Gallery, and every other exhibition in London from which knowledge is to be derived and information gained, were to be thrown open on a Sunday afternoon, not fifty people would be required to preside over the whole; and it would take treble the number to enforce a Sabbath

Bill in any three populous parishes. . . . I should like to see the time arrive when a man's attendance to his religious duties might be left to that religious feeling which most men do possess in a greater or less degree, but which was never forced into the breast of any man by menace or restraint. I should like to see the time when Sunday might be looked forward to as a recognized day of relaxation and enjoyment, and when every man might feel what few men do now, that religion is not incompatible with rational pleasure and needful recreation. Above all, the more ignorant and humble class of men who now partake of many of the bitters of life, and taste but few of its sweets, would naturally feel attachment and respect for the code of morality which, regarding the many hardships of their station, strove to alleviate its rigor and endeavor to soften its asperity. This is what Sunday might be made, and what it might be made without impiety or profanation. Let those who have six days in the week for all the world's pleasures appropriate the seventh to fasting and gloom, either for their own sins or those of other people, if they like to bewail them; but let those who employ their six days in a more worthy manner devote their seventh to a different purpose. Let divines set the example of true morality; preach it to their flocks in the morning, and dismiss them to enjoy true rest in the afternoon; and let them select for their text, and let Sunday legislators take for their motto, the words which fell from the lips of that Master whose precepts they misconstrue and whose lessons they pervert.—"The Sabbath was made for man, and not men to serve the Sabbath."

LIST OF PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Books.

- ORIENTAL RELIGIONS, AND THEIR RELATION TO UNIVERSAL RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson. China. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1877.
- THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.
- AN ANALYSIS OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF. By Viscount Amberley. From the late London Edition, complete. New York: D. M. Bennett. 1877.
- THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF MIND. With Illustrations. Being the Second Series of Problems of Life and Mind. By George Henry Lewes. Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co. 1877.
- THE ANONYMOUS HYPOTHESIS OF CREATION. A Brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account. By James J. Furness. New York: Charles P. Somerby. 1877.
- PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS. By Josie Oppenheim. New York: Charles P. Somerby. 1877.
- THE TRUTH SEEKER COLLECTION OF FORMS, HYMNS, AND RECITATIONS. New York: D. M. Bennett. 1877.
- THE GOSPEL INVITATION: Sermons Related to the Boston Revival of 1877. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. 1877.
- THE WONDERS OF PRAYER. A Remarkable Record of Well Authenticated Answers to Prayer. How God Answers the Prayers of Christians. Helps those who Trust in Him, and Fulfills (sic) Faithfully all the Promises of the Bible. Living Evidences of the Constant Power and Presence of God among Men, as fully Illustrated in the daily cares and experiences of His Children. Helps to Christians in Doubt, Fear, Sorrow, or Trouble, to Trust Him fully in Faith, and a cordial Welcome to All to come and give their Love or cast their Cares upon the Great Comforter. By Henry T. Williams. New York: Henry T. Williams. 1877.
- A BOOK OF AMERICAN EXPLORERS. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson, author of Young Folks' History of the United States. Boston: Lee & Shepard. 1877.
- GATHERINGS FROM AN ARTIST'S PORTFOLIO. By James E. Freeman. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- PETITES CAUSERIES: or, Elementary English and French Conversations for Young Students and Home Teaching. By Achille Mottet. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- CLASSICAL GEOGRAPHY. By H. F. Tozer, M.A. Literature Primers. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- PHILOLOGY. By John Pells M.A. Literature Primers. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- GEOGRAPHY. By George Grove, F.R.G.S. History Primers. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- IDEALS MADE REAL. A Romance. George L. Raymond. New York: Hurd & Houghton. 1877.
- TWO LILIES. A Novel. By Julia Kavanagh. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.

Paper.

- EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. 1877.
- THE YELLOW-FISH PAPERS. By W. M. Thackeray. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
- GARTH. A Novel. By Julian Hawthorne. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- AFTER MANY DAYS. A Novel. By Christian Reid. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- EXETER HALL. A Theological Romance. Boston: William White & Co. 1873.
- THE NORTHERN AND ASIATIC DEFENCES OF TURKEY. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
- THE SCIENTIFIC BASIS OF DELUSIONS. By George M. Beard, M.D. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.
- FINAL ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE WOODRUFF SCIENTIFIC EXPEDITION around the World, starting October, 1877, and returning October, 1879. Indianapolis: Indianapolis Journal Co.
- HOLLIS STREET CHURCH, from Mather Hyles to Thomas Start King. Two Discourses. By George Leonard Chaney. Boston: George H. Ellis. 1877.
- WOMAN SUFFRAGE, the Counterfeit and the True; Reasons for Opposing Both. By Rear-Admiral Maxse. London: W. Ridgway. 1877.
- LONDON DIALLECTICAL SOCIETY. Lancaster: T. Bell & Co.
- RULES AND OBJECTS OF THE ELEUSIS CLUB, 180, King's Road, Chelsea, London, S.W.
- THE SCIENCE OF LIFE. London: James Burns. 1877.
- REPORT OF A VISIT TO THE UNITED STATES as Delegates from the British, Continental, and General Federation for the Abolition of Government Regulation of Prostitution. By Henry J. Wilson and James P. Gledstone. Sheffield: Leader & Sons. 1876.
- STATE REGULATION OF VICE. By A. M. Powell. New York: 58 Rensselaer Street.
- HEREDITARY Responsibility in Parentage. By Rev. S. H. Platt. New York: S. R. Wells & Co. 1877.
- THE PSYCHOLOGICAL BASIS OF RELIGION, considered from the Stand-point of Phenology. A Prize Essay. New York: S. R. Wells & Co. 1877.
- WAS BROOKSON ALLOTT'S SCHOOL a Type of God's Moral Government? A Review of Joseph Cook's Theory of the Atonement. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. 1877.
- THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. By F. B. Barton. London: Holloway Press Co.
- LETTER TO YOUNG GIRLS. By J. Ruskin, LL.D.
- THE DAY OF REST. By W. McDonnell. Lindsay: Canadian Post Publishing House.
- GOD AND THE BIBLE. By T. A. Matsuda, a Japanese.
- UNIVERSAL LIBERTY. By E. H. Heywood. Princeton: Coöperative Publishing Co. 1877.
- COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH CANADA. Speech by Hon. Elijah Ward in the House of Representatives at Washington, Feb. 21, 1877.

- FALSE AND TRUE PRAYER. A Sermon. By L. K. Washburn. Boston: New Age Office. 1877.
- THE RELIGION OF TO-DAY. A Sermon. By L. K. Washburn. Boston: New Age Office. 1877.
- THE COMING MAN. A Sermon. By J. W. Chadwick. New York: C. P. Somerby.
- THE MORAL ASPECTS OF THE BELIEF IN IMMORTALITY. A Sermon. By J. W. Chadwick. New York: C. P. Somerby.
- THOMAS FAIRB. A Lecture. By J. W. Chadwick. New York: C. M. Green.
- SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, at Langham Hall, London.—March 4: "Authority in Matters of Belief."—March 11: "Temptation and Asceticism."—March 18: "Religious Upheaval in Scotland."—March 25: "English Morality and Piety."—April 1: "Morality Prior to Religion."—April 8: "Religion an Aid to Morality."—April 15: "God's Love vs. Eternal Torment."—April 22: "In Christ or out of Christ?"—April 29: "Who is our Savior from Sin?"—May 6: "The Weather."—May 13: "Responsibilities of the Free."—May 20: "The Loving Spirit."—May 27: "Revelation."
- REPORT OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF THE CITY OF MANCHESTER, N.H., for the Year 1876. By William Little, Esq. Manchester: J. B. Clarke.
- PROCEEDINGS OF THE PENNSYLVANIA Yearly Meeting of Progressive Friends, at Longwood, 1877. Germantown: H. Smith.
- FIFTY-SECOND ANNIVERSARY of the American Unitarian Association. Boston: Amer. Unit. Assn. 1877.
- HISTORY of the Free Congregational Society at Florence, Mass. Northampton: Metcalf & Co. 1876.
- REPORTS OF COMMITTEES of the Church of the Disciples, April 25, 1877. Boston: D. B. Fletcher.

Periodicals, etc.

- FOUR CLAVIGERA. Letters to the Workmen and Laborers of Great Britain. By John Ruskin, LL.D. London: Hazell, Watson, & Viney.
- THE SUNDAY REVIEW. April, 1877. London: Trübner & Co.
- LA RELIGION LAIQUE. Organe de Régénération Sociale. Sous la Direction de Ch. Fauvet. On s'abonne à Paris, chez M. Louis Guyot, rue Montmartre, No. 65.
- CANADIAN MONTHLY AND NATIONAL REVIEW. Toronto: Hart & Rawlinson.
- JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. W. T. Harris, editor. St. Louis: Gray, Baker & Co.
- POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. E. L. Youmans, editor. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
- UNITARIAN REVIEW AND RELIGIOUS MAGAZINE. Boston: 101 Milk St.
- THE WESTERN. St. Louis: Book & News Co.
- KINDERGARTEN MESSENGERS. Cambridge, Mass.: Elizabeth F. Peabody.
- POTTER'S AMERICAN MONTHLY. Philadelphia: J. E. Potter & Co.
- THE CATHOLIC WORLD. New York: Catholic Publication House.
- THE COMPLETE PREACHER. New York: Religious Newspaper Agency.
- THE SANTARIAN. New York: P. O. Box 1956.
- THE HERALD OF HEALTH. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

Poetry.

TO THE SPHINX.

O sleepless Sphinx!
Thy sadly patient eyes,
Thus dumbly gazing o'er the shifting sands,
Have watched Earth's countless dynasties arise,
Stalk forth like spectres waving gory hands,
Then fade away with scarce a lasting trace
To mark the secret of their dwelling-place—
O sleepless Sphinx!

O changeless Sphinx!
In the fair dawn of Time
So grandly sculptured from the living rock,
Still bears thy face its primal look sublime,
Surviving all the hoary ages' shock;
Still art thou royal in thy proud repose
As when the sun on tuncful Memnon rose—
A changeless Sphinx!

O voiceless Sphinx!
Thy solemn lips are dumb;
Time's awful secrets hold'st thou in thy breast;
Age follows age; revering pilgrims come
From every clime to urge the same request,
That thou wilt speak; poor creatures of a day,
In calm disdain thou seest them die away—
O voiceless Sphinx!

Majestic Sphinx!
Thou cronest by a sea
Whose fawn-hued wavelets clasp thy buried feet;
Whose desert surface, petrified like thee,
Gleams white with sails of many an Arab fleet;
Or when wild storms its waves to fury lash
High 'gainst thy form the tawny billows dash!
Majestic Sphinx!

Eternal Sphinx!
The Pyramids are thine;
Their giant summits guard thee night and day;
On thee they look when stars in splendor shine,
Or while around their crests the sunbeams play;
Thine own coevals, who with thee remain
Colossal geni of the boundless plain!
Eternal Sphinx!

J. L. STODDARD.

—Boston Transcript.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 14.

John R. Thomas, 30 cents; A. D. Dickinson, $3.25; L. A. Foster, $1.50; H. B. McNair, $1.20; Dr. S. Wolfenstein, $3.20; Russell Marston, $3.20; J. A. J. Wilcox, $8.20; Charles Nichols, $2.85; W. B. Clark, $5.20; M. M. L. Cummings, $3.20; Dr. A. F. Erich, $3.20; J. A. Peters, $2; Dr. S. W. Johnson, 75 cents; Hannah L. Putnam, $5; Jacob S. Howe, $1; John Curtis, $6.40; Hon. G. F. Talbot, $3.20; a friend, $5; Richard Hall, $2.20; G. G. Miner, 75 cents; Mrs. C. E. Grain, 5 cents; John D. Caldwell, $6.40; Lucy Smith, 50 cents; Carl Doeringer, $2.10; E. M. Wyckoff, $1.00; S. W. Rathbone, $3; W. H. Boughton, $3; W. Archibald, $3.25; Preston Day, $3.20; M. M. Waterman, $3.20; Asa C. Pierce, $3.20; C. B. Palmer, $3.20; Robert Reid, $3.20; R. T. Starr, $3.20; J. H. Clark, $3.20; R. D. Israel, $3.20; H. W. Wellington, $3; Wm. Roteb, $3.20; E. P. Wright, 50 cents; Mrs. A. F. Wood, $3.20; Cash, $1.75.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 19, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, Editorial Contributors.

Do THE READERS OF THE INDEX, or any of them, love poetry? If so, they will thank us this week for republishing some exquisitely melodious and fascinating verses by Mr. Stoddard, "To the Sphinx." They are simple even to sublimity, and constitute a poem fit only to be compared with the severest and loftiest of Bryant's—perfect in form, grand in imagery, full of that almost oppressive sense of infinity which poetry of the highest class wakes in the soul like the moaning of the distant sea. We would rather have been the author of this short but masterly ode than have written volumes of the diluted stuff that passes for poetry in these sensational and unclassical days.

MR. C. D. B. MILLS, of Syracuse, N. Y., who kindly permits us to add his name this week to our list of editorial contributors, was born at New Hartford, N. Y., in 1821. His father, a most estimable and respected man, was a clergyman of the Presbyterian denomination, and reared his children in the strictest manner. Mr. Mills himself was trained for the ministry, at first under Rev. Beriah Green, of the Onelda Institute, and afterwards at Lane Seminary. Being licensed to preach in 1844, he soon found himself out of sympathy with Calvinism, withdrew from all ecclesiastical connections, and has remained independent ever since. For a few years he preached in Northern Ohio, chiefly at Brownhelm, where he addressed a small independent society of liberals, and also had charge of an academy in Elyria. In later years he has found himself obliged to seek business occupation in Central New York; but his leisure has been devoted to studying, writing, lecturing, and the various practical reforms that appealed to his highly conscientious nature. In 1876, he published an excellent little work on Buddha and Buddhism, and valuable articles from his pen on Giordano Bruno, Spinoza, Pythagoras, Zoroaster, etc., have appeared in the magazines. We regret that his first editorial contribution should be on so sad a theme as the death of his brother, Hon. H. A. Mills, one of the kindest and most faithful supporters of THE INDEX; and this second bereavement, following so closely the death of his father, will quicken the sympathies of many an unknown friend.

A COMMUNICATION headed "Christianity at Cornell University," dated "Ithaca, June 17, 1877," and signed "T. S.," was recently published in the New York Tribune, as follows: "In a recent issue of yesterday, under 'Notes on Education,' you make mention of Mr. Yatabe's strictures on Christianity before a Japanese audience, and say that he is a graduate of Cornell University. Now this is all true, but, at the same time, it is apt to injure Cornell unless the following explanation be made: Mr. Rikichi Yatabe was a Buddhist and an enemy of Christianity before he came to Cornell University, and his infidelity is not therefore to be laid at the doors of that institution. This explanation should be unnecessary; but ever since its foundation Cornell University has been bitterly attacked by sectarian colleges and the religious press generally, and such an item as the one just noticed will doubtless be made the text for renewed thrusts at one of the best educational establishments in the State. I would mention that President White's recent letter in the Cornell Era, which deals with this very question—i. e., religion at Cornell University,—has been published by the university for gratuitous distribution as an offset to these assaults. The gist of the letter is that the university is opened every morning with religious exercises; that the Young Men's Christian Association has the finest hall of any American college; that the university sermons are preached by the best talent of all denominations in the American ministry; and that it is the universal opinion of all those who are acquainted with the institution that its students have more genuine religion among them than is found in several of the sectarian colleges."

REVIVALISM vs. VERACITY.

Not very long since the Boston Advertiser published a paragraph which went the rounds, as follows:—

Mr. Moody wants the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to change its name to the Woman's Evangelical Temperance Union. It is said that when the ladies asked, "Why?" he replied, "So as to get rid of your Unitarian and Universalist members." "But that will rule out Mrs. Livermore, our President," said they. "Well, rule her out," was the response; "she isn't a Christian."

We happen to know, by the testimony of an unimpeachable witness, that the above statement was submitted to Mrs. Livermore herself prior to publication, and accepted by her as accurate in every point—in fact, as "her own statement." It drew out a letter from Mrs. Moody, which we copy from the Boston Globe of July 4:—

NORTHFIELD, Mass., June 28, 1877.

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 25th, with clipping from paper, has been received, and my husband asks me to answer for him.

As I heard the conversation from which I suppose the statement is made, I am better able to say that the article misrepresents what Mr. Moody said.

He did not say at any time that Mrs. Livermore is not a Christian. Furthermore, Mr. Moody never suggested that the name of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union be changed to the "Woman's Evangelical Temperance Union."

The thought had never suggested itself to him, and your clipping is the first time the idea has come before him.

Yours very truly,

MRS. D. L. MOODY.

On this letter, the Christian Register very pithily remarks: "Mr. Moody has been concealed behind his wife long enough. Let him now come out and speak for himself like a man."

But the matter was not allowed to rest thus. The Globe of July 10 contained the following communication, which is surprising enough in face of the foregoing denials:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GLOBE:—

Sir,—Mrs. Moody's letter of contradiction in the Globe of July 4 does not cover all the facts in the case, which are briefly these: During the progress of the revival Miss Frances Willard sought an interview in Park Street Church with the Secretary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and made this demand:—

"I have sent for you to say that you must change the name of the 'Woman's Christian Temperance Union' to the 'Woman's Evangelical Temperance Union.'"

"For what reason?" inquired the Secretary.
"So as to get rid of Unitarians and Universalists," was Miss Willard's reply. "You cannot go on with your Christian work unless you do, but will be hampered by them continually."

"We shall never make any such change of name!" was finally the reply of the Secretary.

"You will have to come to it," said Miss Willard, "for Mr. Moody has already made arrangements to start another organization, unless you do."

Miss Willard had similar conversations, at other times and places, with other ladies of the Union, refusing to speak at a temperance meeting in Malden at the same time with Mrs. Livermore, giving, as the reason of her refusal, the fact that "Mr. Moody thought that she (Miss Willard) had already compromised herself by speaking at Tremont Temple on the same platform with Mrs. Livermore."

This debate concerning our Woman's Temperance Union, its name and its President, went on for weeks. At last, to end the matter, a committee of two ladies was appointed to see Mr. Moody personally. We will not enter into the details of the interview. Suffice it to say that Mr. Moody repeatedly charged these ladies "not to blame Miss Willard for the course she had pursued, as she had acted under his direction, or by his counsel." And when they sought to convince him that their President is a Christian woman, his reply was: "If Mrs. Livermore is a Christian, why don't she come out and join the Church?" These are very briefly the facts in the case, every one of which can be substantiated in a court of justice.

In conclusion, we have only to say that we regret the publication of these disagreeable occurrences; but Mrs. Moody's letter leaves us no other alternative. The head and front of our offending seems to have been that we have persistently refused to change our broad name for a narrow one or to surrender our President on a sectarian issue. We aim to be a Christian organization; we utterly refuse to become sectarian, and welcome to our membership all Christian women who will join us in our efforts to abolish intemperance.

MRS. L. B. BARRETT, Secretary,

By order of the Executive Committee of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Massachusetts.

Here is a strange case—a very grave and painful one for all who desire (as we certainly do) to regard Mr. Moody as incapable of unblushing falsehood. Mrs. Moody, writing avowedly in his name, denies that he said Mrs. Livermore is not a Christian; or that he suggested a change of name of the Union.

Mrs. Barrett, by order of the Executive Committee of the Union, affirms in substance exactly what Mrs. Moody denies. A more direct issue of veracity could scarcely be conceived. What a spectacle!

But Mr. Moody himself sent the following letter to the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, which published it in its issue of July 13:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE REPUBLICAN:—

In reply to your note, asking what was said by me to give rise to that report that I had stated that "Mrs. Livermore was not a Christian," I write to say, that some of the members of the Boston Ladies' Temperance Christian Union felt that they in their work had not been recognized by me as they thought their work deserved, and furthermore were grieved that I had not encouraged co-workers with me to enter into the temperance work with them. I can see nothing that such a report could have arisen from more than the conversation held with the committee of ladies from this society, to whom I explained my reasons for not cooperating with them.

My strong belief has been and still is that the drunkard's only hope is in a renewed heart, with new desires and strength from God to keep him. I have no faith in a simple pledge alone. I believe the power strong drink has over a person cannot be broken by man's will. It needs God's power to help overcome this terrible appetite. Believing this, and seeing many cases that have been saved by reliance on God's power, and many failures where trust has been placed in one's own strength, I explained that I could not, with these convictions so strong, connect myself with any society, where there might arise opposition to what I consider the fundamental doctrines of the gospel. Of course to disagree on these points would only give rise to argument and endless discussion, and the real object of the society in this way be to a great extent defeated.

(By fundamental doctrines I mean regeneration—"Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God";

Justification by faith—"By him all that believe are justified from all things from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses";

Atonement—"Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures"; and the doctrine of the resurrection of Christ.)

There was no feeling against any person, either felt or expressed during this or any other conversation in reference to the society, and I was surprised to find such a statement attributed to me, which was as unjust to me as to the lady mentioned. If this had not been one among many other statements for which I am not responsible, I should have contradicted it immediately; but there being so many statements of things said and done by me of which I would know nothing till I read them or heard of them from others, I have found as a rule that it was better to take no notice of them. I write now only in answer to your letter and to repeat that I have never expressed to any one that I believed Mrs. Livermore was not a Christian.

My idea is that life is so short, and the work to be done so great, and the workers so few, that our time can be better spent than in controversy.

Yours truly,

D. L. MOODY.

NORTHFIELD, Mass., July 8, 1877.

Notwithstanding the shortness of life, and the greatness of the work, and the fewness of the workers, we submit that Mr. Moody can in no manner spend his time more usefully, whether for himself or his cause, than in proving himself guiltless of wilful untruth in this particular case. There is an old-fashioned prejudice against lying, not confined by any means to "infidels," but shared by very many "believers" who have hitherto supported the Evangelist in his revival; and this prejudice will go very far towards neutralizing his influence in this community, when he returns in the autumn, unless he can successfully explain the peculiarly ugly situation in which Mrs. Barrett's letter leaves him. There are many curious persons who will study his case with interest, as furnishing valuable data for considering the question—"what is the real influence of Christianity upon Morality?" If a man can be converted, convert thousands, become the head and front of a great Christian revival, and yet stoop to a cowardly mendacity from which many an "infidel" is preserved by a mere unregenerated sense of honor, the world (which persists very stupidly in thinking truthfulness an essential part of morality) will be in great danger of concluding that, when Christianity is set up as the great bulwark of Morality, the pretence is nothing but a "pious fraud."

Mr. Moody would have been wiser to manifest "the courage of his opinions." By his own peculiar tests of Christianity, Mrs. Livermore is not a Christian; he is very careful, in the above highly diplomatic letter, not to say that she is; and it is evidently the "wisdom of the serpent," rather than the "innocence of the dove," which makes him refrain from speaking his mind fully on this point. But the question now is not about his courage, but about his veracity; and we think we can assure him that, if he desires to succeed in Boston next autumn, he cannot possibly "spend his time better" than to dissipate the cloud which now rests upon it.

OBITUARY.

Died in Galesburgh, Ill., on June 8th, of consumption, Hon. H. A. MILLS, of Mt. Carroll, Ill., in the fiftieth year of his age.

My brother has gone in his prime, quickly following our father, whose death was noticed in THE INDEX of April 28th. For some time he had been in declining health, more manifest, however, to others than to himself. Of large ambition for accomplishment in his chosen field of work, he doubtless exerted himself quite beyond the limits that his strength would justify, and hastened the wasting attacks of that disease that was surely carrying him to the tomb. Early in March last he visited Florida in the hope that, in that mild and genial climate, he might gain improvement, if not full recovery, but without essential benefit. Returning homeward, he was overtaken by death at the house of his daughter, Mrs. Carr, of Galesburgh.

Mr. Mills was not unknown to the readers of THE INDEX, having been for it an occasional correspondent, and a fast friend throughout. He was a member of the Index Association, and was deeply devoted to freethought and intellectual liberty universal. In all the relations of social, civic, and business life, he was very greatly esteemed by his neighbors and acquaintances through a wide region of country, and his death brings a heavy loss not only to his dear household, but to the community as well. It is especially severe and irreparable to the friends of a free and rational religion in his own town and county. He stood like a pillar for intellectual freedom.

His end was peaceful. He died as a brave man should, calm, poised, and in perfect trust. He had reposed all on Truth and the Everlasting here; how should he not still rest on the same arm in that darkness?

May the remembrance of his luminous virtues, his unwavering fidelity to the end to the high trusts he had taken to honor, be to us that remain a presence full of incitement and quickening to do ever braver, greater, and more!

C. D. B. M.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., July 8, 1877.

GOD AND NATURE.

In the conflict between Orthodox theology and science, or perhaps one might more properly say between the assumptive and the inductive method in theology, the most noteworthy of recent utterances are those of two eminent scholars on taking the presidency, one of Amherst and the other of Dartmouth College. Teaching is by far the most important function in human civilization, and whether our head teachers are to confine themselves to facts, and theories that seem to be supported by facts, or to deal out exploded fictions, is the most serious of all questions. A teacher fallen behind time, earnestly and sincerely inculcating what was once received as truth, and is still by him supposed to be true, may be admired as well as deplored. But the spectacle of one who, out of regard to popular prejudice, shuts his eyes to facts and upholds a theory which facts have subverted, is without a redeeming trait. The politician who upholds a policy because it commands a majority of votes, and not because it is right, is bad enough. The teacher who holds a doctrine because it is popular, when he has no reason to believe it true, is far worse.

It is quite possible that President Seelye in his baccalaureate sermon, in which he attempts to glorify the Orthodox God by abusing Nature, may be sincere. He is certainly eloquent and serious. But when President Bartlett, in his inaugural address, huris bitter sarcasms right and left on all the laborious living specialists in science, and sets only those scholars who have not openly quarrelled with the Orthodox theological creeds; when he almost canonizes Thomas Arnold and forgets to name his son Matthew—a man to whom, if Christianity survives this century in any shape, it will owe more than to any hundred like his father,—it is difficult to believe him sincere. Under the teachings of such a man we can only look for crops of Rev. Cooks, going about as flying artilleryists to guard future Moodys by cannonading the infidels with pop-guns. Such a teacher cannot but be an infidel to the inductive method and essentially a foe to science. This is not denying him all virtues as a man, or great force as a thinker,—thinking still in vain. But we are obliged to regard him as Matthew Arnold does the Pope,—“That amiable old pessimist in St. Peter's chair, whose allocutions we read, and call them impotent and vain.”

President Seelye, of Amherst, takes for the text of his sermon the first eleven verses of the Book of Ec-clesiastes, or in effect the whole book. This wonderful book, we believe, has always been regarded as rather obscure by the commentators, not so much by the difficulty of its language as by the difficulty of reconciling such plain language with other Scriptures. It is said that for some time after it was written, though when it was written is a little doubtful, the wisest of the Hebrews endeavored to conceal it from posterity, as containing things heretical and contradictory. It finally, however, came into the canon of the Hebrew Scriptures on account of its undeniable merits, for it contains some of the sublimest expressions and weightiest truths ever clothed in human language. But were it not for the fact that it is found within the lids of the “Holy Bible,” its view of Nature, and especially of human nature and human life, would be considered by most people decidedly sombre, if not morbid. And its author is far from relieving the picture by any revelation of a future life in which there will be less of the “vanity and vexation of spirit” which he bewails here. On the contrary, while he admits that the knowledge and wisdom to be obtained here are worth something, he says: “There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.” He says that when dust returns to dust, “the spirit shall return to God who gave it,” and “God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.” But here is no word about life after the judgment, nor anything to confine this to human beings. It must be remembered that this preacher had already said, “A man hath no preëminence above a beast,” and had asked, “Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?” It is difficult to give this latter passage any meaning worthy of its place in such a book, except that it assumes both men and beasts to have spirits, and emphatically denies that anyone knows any difference in the destiny of these spirits. To be consistent with his conclusion above quoted, the preacher must mean that while their bodies return equally to dust, their spirits return equally to God who gave them, by him to be judged. On the result of that judgment he is wholly silent. He admits the being and government of God, for he recommends obedience to His commandments and to enjoy this life as much as possible while obeying them, “vanity and vexation of spirit” notwithstanding. But where, in the whole book, is one glimmer of anticipation of a happy perpetuation of the individual existence for even the most obedient, after the judgment? For all that the preacher says, the spirit, in his opinion, may be absorbed in the infinite spirit, like a drop in the ocean, or be sent back into some new man or beast, to live a new life of “vanity and vexation of spirit” if a man,—but unconscious, it is to be hoped, of the former one.

It is on this sad and sombre book, rather than on that most cheerful view of Nature, and especially of human nature, which characterizes the succeeding book, supposed to have been written by the same author at an earlier period, that President Seelye founds the address with which he sends into the world the young men who have been nourished by the Amherst Alma Mater. And he does not relieve the sadness the little he might have done by quoting the close of the eleventh chapter. In his grand attempt to glorify the popular theological conception of God, he starts by abusing Nature. He accuses Nature of exciting neither man nor beast to anything but laziness. If we understand him, till a supernatural knowledge of God or “spiritual life” is supernaturally brought into the human mind, there is neither work nor thought. Lest this charge should seem incredible, we quote a few sentences:—

A spiritual life must first penetrate and clothe and crown the natural life in man, or man remains immersed in Nature, never rising above it, never gaining any mastery of it, moving in and by its currents, and never seeking to control or change them, with no more progress than the brutes possess, and making no more efforts to improve his state than do the brutes that perish. It is the knowledge of God alone which lifts a man above the brute, which makes him conscious, first of himself, and then of his wants, and which is a living impulse to labor because it is a living inspiration to all growth, and to all great and good attainments. The old Egyptians, by their doctrine that there was nothing to be seen in Nature, but the same worlds coming over and over again with all things, and all events repeated just as they had taken place; the old Pythagoreans and Platonists with their notion of the magnus annus; the old Stoics teaching the cyclical return of the world and all things in it, through rarefaction and condensation, with a final conflagration,—illustrate not only the tendency of the human mind to cherish such a view of Nature, but also show how destitute of life and progress such a view must always be. In every case, just so far as this thought took possession of the thinking of the time, there was no thinking left; the observation of Nature, and the impulse to the study of Nature, died out with this view of Nature.

Has President Seelye forgotten the Pyramids, thought by some to be sublime monuments of human labor? Has he forgotten Aristotle, a greater than Pythagoras or Plato; himself a pupil of the latter and whose own pupil conquered the world with a Homer under his pillow; Aristotle whose writings after being buried more than a century rose from the grave and were about all the philosophy there was in the world till the days of Bacon? Perhaps the labor on the Pyramids, President Seelye will say, was wasted. But was not that of Aristotle as much as could be expected of one man, even having a knowledge of God, and has it not been useful to mankind? If the President will have it that a “spiritual life” first penetrated the “natural life” of Aristotle, it would seem that it must have penetrated it naturally, or from Nature. Why then abuse Nature?

If President Seelye is inclined to attribute every great and useful work to a spiritual life, or the knowledge of God, then he ought to have been in Congress earlier, for he could certainly, by the converse of his proposition, have justified the “Credit Mobilier,” whose proceedings were attributed to an inspiration anything but divine.

The more common and reasonable opinion seems to be that we owe our transcontinental railroad to a natural greed of wealth, very much as Europe owes some of her most admirable architecture to ecclesiastical tyranny. In truth, out of Nature come both good and evil things, the good often out of the evil, and this mystery has not been much cleared up by the Nicene and Athanasian creeds, or the Orthodox scheme of human salvation.

The President of Amherst pretty plainly intimates, in the following question, that this world without the theology of his Church is not worth living in,—just what we should expect of a man who thinks mere justice or righteousness in the Constitution is not God enough:—

If man is only a member of such a world, only a bubble breaking on the breast of this great sea, made of the same elements, and vanishing into the same as the unnumbered others which have gone before, or which shall follow, who is he of all these dancing, fleeting, momentary myriads of the same commingling, that expects a permanent remembrance?

Well, who expects a “permanent remembrance,” any way? Only a “bubble breaking”! We protest against such blasphemy of Nature. The bubble, living marvellously under law, has no fear of death. The bubble, whether riding on the crest of the ocean wave, or smiling like the bow of heaven in the wash-tub, is “a thing of beauty and a joy forever.” So is a well-conducted life, though it be but momentary. Life a bubble! There are differences in bubbles. Life a dream! There are happy ones. Whosoever loves Nature, and learns of her all the wisdom he may, will be too full of work and of happiness to worry himself much about what is above and beyond Nature. There have been such men and women, joyfully living the lives and accepting the fate of bubbles,—Christianity sometimes tries to steal the credit of their lives.

But, marvellous to behold, the Amherst preacher, after having thus abused Nature considered independently of the Orthodox theological idea of God, or in the absence of a supernatural revelation, as a wild, misshapen Caliban, no sooner comes to regard it as designed and created by that God, than he changes his tone. Now Nature is the perfection of beauty, full of indescribable variety and harmony! All this is truly pitiful. Why cannot these head teachers recognize the fact that under the most conscientious study of all the things that can be studied, the notions stereotyped into creeds fifteen hundred years ago, which they call the “knowledge of God,” have died out of the best and wisest minds of our age in the Church as well as out of it? A flood of facts has overwhelmed all the sacred fictions and left their authors on the level of the rest of human nature. Their long-venerated creeds have really gone to the same “measureless Golgothas” to which President Bartlett has justly consigned the “slaughtered theories” of science. There they will stay. Matthew Arnold no more believes in the personality of God than Charles Bradlaugh does. If Hume undermined belief in the miracles of the Bible, Matthew Arnold has exploded it as with nitro-glycerine. But who is Matthew Arnold? He is a churchman, advocate of Christianity and the Bible, lay inspector of schools under the British Council of Education, fellow of Oriel College, and lately Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Son of Dr. Arnold, the famous head-master of Rugby, who has been fairly canonized for his Orthodoxy, it cannot for a moment be supposed that he has lapsed into heresy by any defect in his training, or from any worldly consideration. Hear what he says in his most recent book, God and the Bible:—

At the present moment two things about the Christian religion must surely be clear to anybody with eyes in his head. One is, that men cannot do without it; the other, that they cannot do with it as it is.

And he holds that all the knowledge of God that either the Bible or Christianity can give us is, that He is "the eternal, out of ourselves, that makes for righteousness." If we do not learn as much as that from Nature herself, without either (and Arnold has reduced them both to mere parts of Nature), we study her to little purpose.

Now as parts of all Nature, the Bible and Christianity are no more rejected by the men called infidels or atheists than the works of Aristotle, Bacon, or Newton.

Why must the odium theologium be so carefully nursed against heretics, when the Church—every church—is full of them? E. W.

Communications.

WHAT IS RELIGION?

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

What are we to understand by the term Religion? Your correspondent, Dr. Horsch, criticised me some time ago for having said that religion is an evil. If he and the readers of THE INDEX have given due attention to two passing events—the Turko-Russian war and the Seligman-Hilton affair,—I think the correctness of my saying will be sufficiently proved to them. Whatever may be the ostensible reasons on the part of Russia for engaging in the present war, the actual reasons are obviously very different from her pretended ones. But religion is made, as it so often is, to cloak and justify the selfish and covetous motives of Russia. She pretends to be the "generous champion" of Europe, of civilization, of humanity, and of Christianity. But what we do find is, and ever was, the true character of this "generous champion" in Europe? The traditional enemy of all progress and liberty, the assistant of tyrants, and the terror of their subjects. Whenever and wherever there was a liberal movement of the people, whenever a sovereign, driven by the loud demands or still more energetic action of the people, was about to confer on them more rights and liberties, Russia invariably interfered and prevented the grant. Who has forgotten the Russian hordes aiding Austria in treading down the victorious Hungarians in their heroic struggle with Austria in 1848-49? Certainly not yet the noble Magyars, as the recent letter of the venerable but exiled Kossuth to them and their present agitation shows. Or ask torn and bleeding Poland what the true character of this "generous champion" is. The proclamation of the Poles in Turkey in respect to the present war will answer this question. Or ask again even all Christians except Greek Christians (to say nothing of the Jews, whose maltreatment in Russia and by the whole Slavic race seems but a matter of course) how tenderly they, Christians as they are, are treated by this "generous champion" of Christianity and humanity. By what mild persuasion and kind measures are they forced to embrace the Greek faith?

But, aside from the traditional Russian covetousness and policy, it is its religion that brings all these sufferings on the unhappy peoples of Europe, especially those subject to Russia or under the more immediate influence of this "generous champion," as it is again religion that is made to sanctify this outrageous policy, and that is used to uphold and strengthen it.

Not enough, however, that religion is thus decried and misused by the "generous champion of Christianity" in Europe and rendered the greatest evil of that continent; even here, here in "free and independent America," this pernicious character of religion exerts its baneful influence. In spite of all that cruel Russia has been doing and is still doing in Europe, in Hungary, in Poland, and even in Russia itself,—in spite of her unjust policy towards Turkey, born out of her covetousness of Constantinople and other desirable portions of the Turkish empire,—the large majority of Americans, and almost the unanimous voice of the press in this country, are in sympathy with Russia and antagonistic to Turkey. And why so? Why is it that we find "the freest country on the globe," "the land of the brave and the home of the free," thus in an unholy sympathy with the most despotic, the most tyrannical sovereign in all Europe, if not in the world, the bitterest enemy of civil and religious freedom, and the most cruel ruler of modern times, and denying justice and sympathy to the Sultan and his cause, although incomparably more humane and liberal than the Czar of all the Russias? It is because of the evil inherent in religion,—because Russia is a Christian country and Turkey non-Christian!

Christian, forsooth! Does the mere confession of the Greek faith without regard to goodness and morality make the Czar a Christian, and are all his persecutions of all but Greek Christians, all his outrageous tyrannies, all his murders of peoples and patriots, all his opposition to their liberties and freedom, to be forgiven him and ignored, because he makes an unrighteous war on the unbelieving Sultan, in whose parliament there are sitting Moslems and Christians, Greeks, Jews, Armenians—representatives of all nations and sects with equal rights and privileges, and in whose empire all creeds and nationalities enjoy equal or nearly equal rights, unless they forfeit them by revolts and disloyalty? But such are the vaunted blessings of religion, such its iniquities, prejudices, and corruptions.

Judge Hilton's ukease to the managers of his Grand Hotel at Saratoga, excluding Jews from its walls, is another fruit of the tree of religion. If such an order had been given three or four hundred years ago by some petty sovereign or chief-magistrate of a city, confining the Jews to their Ghetto, it were not to be wondered at; for it were at least in conformity with the spirit of those benighted "dark ages" of bigotry, intolerance, and fanaticism. But when in the broad daylight of the nineteenth century, in a country that boasts of the freedom, liberty, and equality of all its citizens, and the liberality of the spirit permeating its society, laws, and institutions, a man of Judge Hilton's standing perpetrates such an outrage, there can be no excuse, much less justification for him. And when Judge Hilton tries to excuse himself by saying Mr. Seligman is only a "trade Jew," and does not believe in the Bible, etc., his act gains yet another aspect, and his injustice reaches and affects all those who reject the Bible as a book of revelation. Who gave him the right to inquire into the belief and religion of his guests, and to judge them as to their Orthodoxy or heterodoxy? Would he not, in accordance with this same rule, have to exclude almost all the best taught and educated, the savants and thinkers, the intelligence of the Lord? Are they not almost unanimously heterodox to his Orthodoxy?

More plausibility, at least, there may perhaps be for the Judge's other excuse,—the unbecoming behavior of some Jews at the hotel. No doubt there may be some reason in that. There are always among the guests at such places more or less of the class generally known as "shoddy,"—having wealth, but no education, and hence also no manners. But then this class is by no means confined to Jews alone; and Christian "shoddy" is not a whit better behaved or less disagreeable than Jewish. He shall then judge and treat them individually, but not bigotedly and fanatically discriminate between them as to their religion and nationality. If there are "shoddies" among the Jews, there are also among the Christians; and, in proportion to numbers, as many well-educated and well-behaved people among the former as among the latter. The Judge, and those bigots who side with him, would do well in reading an article of the New York Herald (of the 20th or 21st June, if I mistake not: "Only a Jew"), and the sermon of H. W. Beecher, last Sunday, in the same paper.

But what is all this bigotry, fanaticism, and intolerance of Judge Hilton and his confères, but the result, the outgrowth of their religion, of religion such as we find it and of what passes as religion, the evil and curse of such religion? To such a religion as you, my dear friend (and with you, perhaps the most intelligent portion of society), understand it—a religion demonstrable by, and in accordance with, science, or at least in accordance with reason,—I have no objection whatever. Though I may doubt whether such sublime "religion" will ever be the portion of humanity, I also well know the honesty and sincerity with which you look and hope and work for it; and far be it from me to discourage you in it. Yet I cannot help believing that when science shall have accomplished this feat, it will not be religion any more. Morals, ethics, and, perhaps, even politics, may possibly reach such high development; but religion never! At least not what to-day is, even in its best sense, understood by the term. This it is that induced me to put the question to you with which I began this article, "What is Religion?"

There are, in this country alone, spent annually millions upon millions upon the propagation of "religion"; and all that this enormous waste of money produces is bigotry, fanaticism, superstition, and (worse than all) hatred, persecution, divisions between man and man, misery, suffering, and unhappiness, instead of love, fraternity, and blessings. If not all, but merely a considerable fraction, of these countless millions thus annually spent, worse than uselessly, were appropriated to the diffusion of knowledge, light, and education, and the ameliorations of deserving poor, what an amount of good they would do! If education and instruction were made general, if lyceums were to take the place of churches, lectures the place of preaching, science and morals the place of religion, how society would be benefited! How the miseries we complain of would vanish, and how happy humanity would be made! But these things never will be as long as religion divides, prejudices, governs, and curses mankind! MORRIS EINHSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, June 29, 1877.

BIBLICAL OBSCENITY.

Mr. Chadwick's censure of Thomas Paine for preferring "charges of obscenity" against the Bible will freshly recall to the reader's mind a subject that has never received the attention that its importance deserves. Partly from a disinclination to shock the public mind, and still more from a personal disinclination to work in a cesspool of filth, the subject has been treated partially and indirectly: George Francis Train some years ago issued several numbers of the Train Ligue, containing some of the most shocking passages of the Old Testament. Casting them into the streets, he defied the authorities. Being arrested, he pleaded guilty to "quoting obscenity from the Bible." He afterwards threatened to issue a book to be called the Pagan Bible, containing a complete collection of all obscene Biblical passages. Proving a "white elephant" on the hands of the authorities, they at last discharged him. In the meanwhile, however, the Young Men's Christian Association, taking the alarm, had a bill "omnibused" through Congress making it a criminal offence hereafter to "quote obscenity from the Bible." It would seem that at least a considerable portion of the Bible was placed in the category of the lowest, most depraved, and vilest publications! This law embraced much more, and has done great injustice to parties who were discussing questions having an important social bearing. But this does not concern us at present.

Of course, bibliolaters may allege impure motives as possessing those who "quote obscenity from the Bible." But surely, a liberal who should write a work on Bible-in-schools, and embrace these passages in an appendix as an illustration of his argument, could not with justice be accused with impurity of motive. That the Bible as a whole is a holy book, and in part most obscene and immoral, is a strange anomaly. Let those who are interested in the matter take the patience to read through the Bible, making note of obscene passages, including enough additionally to preserve the sense, and they will have enough material to form a large octavo scrap-book of nearly sixty double-columned pages. While the biblical writers, perhaps, may be excused from immoral motives, yet it cannot be denied that they used a freedom of language and an indelicacy of expression that would be inexcusable in any writer of the present day. B. I.

[Can the writer, or any other person, favor us with an exact transcript of the law above mentioned as having been "omnibused" through Congress? We should be very grateful for it.—Ed.]

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

NO. XIV.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

From the consideration of the God-mind or pivotal mind, as a within, and of the man-mind, or circumstantial mind-sphere, as a without, I passed to the consideration of mind collectively, as a within, and of matter as its without (the commencement by an act of anticipation of this total elaboration); and from that I passed again to the consideration of mind-and-matter, as entity at large, as a within, and of a net-work of fixed relationships, amounting to fatality or a system of immutable laws, and a world of things constituted on that determinate plan, as the without, or enclosing matrix of any and all special entity, whether mental or material, or whether as personality, consisting of both matter (or body) and mind. I, then, in the last preceding article, identified efficient causes with the fatal (and especially materialistic) theory, and final causes with spontaneity and freedom; and these again with push and pull, or with compulsion and attraction or attractive methods, universally.

There were, perhaps, reasons enough given and suggested why we must practically accept, as extant in the general economy of things, some portion of the principle of pull along with the seemingly very prevalent presence and activity of push; of spontaneity, freedom, and charm, along with necessity, compulsion, and force à tergo. But the purely metaphysical vindication of freedom, as a possibility, in the nature of things, in the face of the seemingly overwhelming argument in favor of an absolute necessity, is still a desideratum.

A defender of the doctrine of free-will is reported to have said: "I am certain that I can do as I am of a mind to"; to which his contestant replied: "I am equally certain that you can't do any otherwise"; and that seemed to settle the argument in favor of a backlying necessity, as the last word on the subject, and as covering the whole ground.

But are we still quite at the bottom of the subject? The speech is of an absolute necessity. What is meant by this term absolute? That, it will be agreed probably, which is self-causative, and so, free from interference or contingency; the opposite of relative. It has not perhaps been sufficiently reflected upon, that there are quite current in the world two absolutes, the precise opposites of each other. The absolute of the theologian is a will—the divine will, with him; but after what has now been said we may enlarge the idea to wills or minds at large, and to the monads which represent them, and call it the ethical absolute. The absolute of the secular philosopher or logician is, on the other hand, the imposed fatal necessity, the abstract and necessary law which he finds at the basis of things, and which we may call the logical absolute. (These are the arbitrium and logicism, or the unism and dualism of this sphere of things.) Entity and relation are thus contrasted with each other; and each contestant in this controversy posits the idea of the absolute in one or the other of these two senses, to the exclusion of the opposite.

Now, in so far as either of these ideas is concerned, we may have the hardihood to cut the knot by simply denying the existence of any absolute. There is no absolute in any such sense; nor otherwise than as partial conception and statement of a more complex reality. The absolute and the relative (taken now as contrasted with the absolute) are themselves, not things, but aspects or merely phases of universal things. They never exist, as our mode of speaking and thinking of them implies, apart from each other. In reality, they never exist at all; but only inhere as factors of existence. It is, I think, the commonest and the worst error of reasoning to elevate aspects, unconsciously, into spheres of being, and then to treat them as such.

Pure abstractions never exist, except in our thought. Whatever is real is complex; and is first compounded of absolute aspects, and then of a relative factor, aspect, or phase. Of the two absolutes hitherto brought into view, the entical absolute symbolizes freedom or spontaneity, and the logical absolute symbolizes necessity or the irresistible conditions of being. Hence we are presented, in these two opposite poles of absoluteness, a free-will side on the one hand, and a fixed-fate side on the other hand; hence a free-will side, and of a fixed-fate side, of being. If we abstract and think the free entical aspect by itself we have an entical absolute; if we abstract and think the fixed-fate side—become pure logicians which we may be, but which nature is not,—then we have the logical absolute,—neither of which is, in the nature of things, but only seems in the nature of us (while kept apart, but which are united and reconciled in the pure reason which lies between us and the object).

It must not be understood that I am denying the utility or rightfulness of pure abstraction. It is all-important and all-governing, as logic and science, that is to say, within its legitimate sphere; but it must not mistake itself for the whole of ontology, of which it is an aspect merely. We are now prepared for a statement of the third and only really true conception of the absolute. In this aspect, the absolute is the inherency of the double-faced unity of entity-and-relation. It is a hinge-wise-ness of these two; a trinitism, a complexity, which it is hard for simple-mindedness to seize upon; hence the difficulty of understanding Hegel, for this is the Hegelian absolute. "Every notion," as Hegel shows, "has in itself its own opposite or negation [its own antithesis, that which is set over against it]; is one-sided, and pushes on into a second [something], which second, the opposite of the first, is as per se, equally one-sided with the first. In this way it is seen that both are only moments [factors or constituents] of a third notion which, the higher unity of its two predecessors, contains in itself both, but in a higher form that combines them into unity."—Schwegler's History of Philosophy, Sterling's Translation, p. 317.

This higher unity of the two opposite factors of the compound notion is the true absolute or the rational absolute. The one factor without the other is nothing, and only becomes something by its inherency of unity with the other. Hence there must be two in order to the existence of the one; and these two unite into a higher kind of one, which then has a three-fold aspect, the simple one-ness (unism) of either factor; the duality of both (dualism), of them both as two; and finally the hinge-wise unity of those two former aspects (one-ism and two-ism) in the trine (trinitism). All of these collapse in the tri-unity. This is the meaning of Schiller's mystical dictum: "One is none, and two is three, and three is one."

Otherwise,—let either primitive and simple one thus be taken as subject and so as a within. The remaining one is then an object and a without relatively to it, hence called by Hegel its negation; and the higher unity in which they are conjoined is their between, and so betweenness or relation is the true absolute; the primal net-work of condition out of which all the aspects of being issue, and to which they reconverge infinitely. (In this supreme instance the complexity and difficulty of the conception is augmented by the fact that the relation here spoken of is that which intervenes between relation-at-large, and entity, or the things which are related.)

The betweenness, or the relation in question, this third aspect of the absolute, now brought forward, is, therefore, that which holds in its grasp entity and relation now taken conjointly; or it is the finer unity between them, in which they are combined, and which, I may say, is the punctum vite of existence. It is here that fixed-fate and free-will co-exist in their oppositeness, and exist only by virtue of their oppositeness. They two are thus also a double-faced unity, and in this they only concur, in their existence, with the universal type of being. The freedom is symbolized by the inner geometrical points of all the monads, which spontaneously out-ray their being; and the fixed-fate is symbolized by the net-work of relational geometrical lines between the points; the punctum vite in each conjunction occurring where the line touches and becomes one with the point.

But, how, the question recurs, is it possible that there can be anything more than a seeming freedom of the will. All mental determination, it is said, is effected or caused by the preponderance of motive, and hence we must resolve as we do. This is supposed to dispose of the whole matter. How easy it was for our forefathers to prove that every thing must settle towards the bottom, unless it were upheld by a foundation, and so that the earth must rest on a solid foundation underneath it; and yet we know that the earth swings clear in pure space balanced by its own and the circumambient forces.

The argument in question assumes that every act of the will is the effect of a cause, which, so to speak, pushes or compels it to be as it is. So be it; but it is alike true that every such act or determination is itself a cause of other and resulting actions. Now as between this cause and its effect, the mental determination appears and functions as an act of freedom or spontaneity; as something purely original or self-caused. It is only when we go back of it, to the prior link in the chain of causation, that then it presents itself to us as something itself caused, constrained, or necessitated. The compound fact, therefore, is that every such act of the will presents itself to our conception alternately, and as a double-faced unity of free-cause and necessary effect. The force of the argument in question, never perhaps more strongly presented than by Mr. John Fluke, consists in abstracting and considering by itself one side only of each such act, that side which shows as mechanical, to the exclusion of that side which shows as spontaneous. While the abstraction is maintained the logic is perfect; but in the total, rational presentation of the subject, the dead-lock is at every instant resolved, and each aspect restored to its equal factorship in the concatenation of events. The aggregate number of the successive presentations of freedom and of fate through the whole series, amounts to a precise equation; or, in their varied dance, to a balanced vibration.

There is another more subtle fallacy in the argument for an exclusive fixed fate. The causative motive being put as backlying cause of the will's determination, everything is of course derivative from the fixed fate, so long as we maintain exclusively that point of view; but when we change the point of view and put the will-determination as cause of the subsequent action, then everything is derived from the free act of the will; and so nothing is proved for either unless it is assumed that one or the other was first in the whole chain of succession; and, on account of that priority, truly origination. The theologian surreptitiously makes this assumption in behalf of the will-side, and so posits the volition of God as first cause; the logician unconsciously, but also surreptitiously, makes the same assumption on the fate-side, and so posits inherent law as first cause, the absolute and exclusive ruler of the whole series. Logic, no less than faith, makes fools of us, unless it is that supreme analogic which recognizes the double-faced unity which is the core of things. The supposed strength of the logic of fate lies in an unauthorized assumption that a historical beginning-point is somewhere attained to by going back far enough through the series of eventuation; whereas no other beginning-point is attainable than in the absolute pure reason, and therein, in the double-faced unity of entity and relation both in thought and being, which must therefore be assumed as the origin of all.

The Calvinistic union of predestination with moral accountability grew out of an approximation to the true perception; but, falling of the complete solution, presents an abhorrent contradiction, as a religious mystery. The truth is this: that, looked at from one point of view, we see an unvarying certainty from an imposed necessity; looked at from another point of view, we see freedom and accountability; and the existence viewed is that which presents to us these two aspects, according to our point of view, and the mental faculty we employ at the time in considering it. Put for the whole truth, either aspect is false; put for an aspect merely, addressed to an observer at that point of view, it is true. The complex real truth is the combined existence which throws off these opposite presentations; and the chief mystery is that we are able to abstract and consider apart from each other aspects of the truth which, in their root or inmost fibre, or in their real nature, are so united as to be essentially one. We are then left to reunite our opposite abstractions as we best may, by discovering this intimate and unresolvable complexity as the universal nature of things.

The pure fate-logic taken alone is that summum jus summa injuria, which Mr. Wesson has so well expounded in the first number of the Radical Review (p. 54); and it is because this is only an element or factor of real truth, that the approval of imperfection is compatible with divine justice (p. 57).

There remains still another argument much relied on in behalf of a strictly mechanical, fixed, and invariable scheme of things in the universe, excluding all spontaneity and freedom of the will. What other security, it is virtually asked, that things will not get hopelessly out of order? If there is freedom of the will, or of wills, how provide against the constant liability to disturbance in the on-going of universal affairs? The objection is specious, but unsound. Wills which are free may be as certain to act in a given way, as wills that are constrained. Freedom does not mean an impossible and inconceivable emancipation from one's own nature and constitution, but freedom, on the other hand, to conform to it, uninterfered with. Suppose the case of an absolute monarch: the courtiers, who should carefully enough have studied his character, would come to as definite an understanding, upon many a point, of how he would act, as if he were bound by all the constitutions and laws in the universe. Freedom no more than fate implies capriciousness. Fixed law itself, broken up into a thousand refractions of application, may seem to be capricious. The only intelligible meaning of the question of freedom and fate is as to whether conduct is self-determined or determined altrunde. If self-determined, then if it were possible to be absolutely acquainted with the self-hood or self-hoods involved, the conduct might be as certainly foretold as if the law were imposed from without. Freedom is, at bottom, then, only another kind of fixed law; a fixed law or line of conduct derived from the intrinsic nature of the given entity or entities, instead of being derived from conditions. The results of freedom are as susceptible of calculation, if we could be possessed of all the data, as the results of fate. It is only that extrinsic are more easily observed than intrinsic occurrences. Freedom has its fixed sequences of phenomena, as really as constraint; and it is not to be said, that because fixed, they are therefore not free, since it is the freedom itself which fixes the sequent order of eventuation. If it be said that this intrinsic eventuation is, then, itself determined by backlying causes, that is true, from one point of view; but it is alike true that it is essentially causative, from the opposite point of view; and we are thus carried back to the solution of the relation between efficient and final causes, as expounded in the last preceding article.

MALLALIEU AND MAYOR.

MR. EDITOR:—

On Sunday, July 1st, the Rev. W. F. Mallalieu discoursed upon the late Presidential banquet in Boston, and, as the Herald said, "handed Mayor Prince without gloves." The nitro-glycerine of the reverend gentleman's rhetorical explosion is to be found in the secret that he is a—not exactly an "infernal machine," but a "prohibitionist."

Without expressing an opinion as to the merits or demerits of prohibition as an ism, I would like to suggest a thought or two for Mr. Mallalieu's consideration:—

1. If there is no intoxicating liquor manufactured, there can be none used. This is as plain as any of Mr. Cook's axiomatic propositions, but is not put forth as evidence of any extraordinary precocity on the part of the writer.

2. If prohibition is right, it must insist that there shall be no intoxicating liquors manufactured, because only in that way can it become impossible for people to use them. And the reverend gentleman says that their use is "sending more than sixty thousand of our citizens into the grave of the drunkard." Now if he is sincere in his advocacy of prohibition, he will insist upon stopping the manufacture and use of wine and other alcoholic liquors everywhere and at all times. Anything less would be illogical and inconsistent.

3. But if the gentleman prohibits the manufacture and use of wine, and thereby saves from the drunkard's grave "sixty thousand of our citizens," what is he going to do about the six hundred thousand souls that will be in danger of hell-fire, if they are prohibited from taking wine at the communion table?

The character of the place where it is used, and the nature of the occasion when it is used, will not extract from intoxicating liquor the poison that destroys "sixty thousand of our citizens" annually. If it is wrong for Mayor Prince to use wine at a banquet given by the city of Boston in honor of President Hayes because it is intoxicating, it is wrong for Mr. Mallalieu to use it at his church banquet in honor of the Lord Jesus Christ. The difference in the persons will not change the nature of the liquor, although one of them is said to have performed such a miracle,—and at a banquet, too! Therefore is it not a good deal like presumption in the reverend gentleman to make such a splutter about the Mayor's use of wine, when he is guilty of the same misdemeanor himself every time he encourages men and women to drink wine at the communion table?

He exclaims: "We have had enough of Belshazzar and Pilates. O for a generation of Daniels who dare to be true to God and righteousness!" And I think the ingredients of this cup might be commended to his own conscience, as well as his lips.

CHARLES ELLIS.

A CORRECTION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In the article on Universology, in your issue of June 14, I endeavored to cast one of the leading ideas in poetical form. By an unfortunate oversight in punctuation or proof-reading (probably my own fault), the last verse of the little poem, difficult enough, perhaps, at the best, is made quite unintelligible. Will you have the kindness to republish this trifle, with the error corrected?

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

Might and Right.

When a king proclaims a law
Men think only to obey!
When the law proclaims a king,
All men accept his sway.

Which is the first, then, king or law?
The sway of law, or personal awe?
The Constitution of the State,
Or will of sovereign potentate?

This is the problem of State-lore;
'Tis, too, theologic core;
Is God to reign, alone of might!
Or reigns he under law and right?

Whence, then, God's rank and sovereign lot?
Would wrong be right if God were not?
Is God then first; or law before,
And God executor; no more?

The State-craft of our happy land
Proclaims the law supreme;
Our Asiatic creed commands
Exalts!—adverse philosopheme!

THE YOUNG Thakoor of Bhownugger is in trouble. What is he to do with his four wives? The Thakoor is one of the chief Rajahs of Kattiawar, in Western India. Three years ago he married four wives simultaneously. At the time of marriage the respective ages of the brides were twelve, fifteen, sixteen, and twenty-two years. The Prince, whose broad territory slopes down to the blue waters of the Gulf of Cambay, is said to be meditating a change of religion. He is now twenty years old; he was only seventeen when "married and done for" four times over, in one day, three years ago. Now he wishes to become a Christian, but the missionaries tell him Christians must only have one spouse. He is sorely perplexed, and so are the missionaries, who tell him that, as a Christian, he can retain only one of the four wives at present lawfully his, and that the proper wife to be retained is the one who has a prior claim upon his Highness. This is all very well, but scarcely meets the case. "Which one of my wives has a prior claim on me?" asks the bewildered Thakoor; "I married them on the same day." The dilemma seems to be insurmountable.

A FATHER bent on instructing his three-year-old son said: "If you had three apples and should give me one, how many would you have left?" "I wouldn't do it, pa," was the prompt reply.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " 8 " "
" 26 " 51 " 6 " "
" 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
sy, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 99 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE
RELIGIOUS
ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keebub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mrs. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal
DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
sy, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM AND THE NEW FAITH.

By EDMUND C. STEDMAN.

12mo, Cloth extra, with Portrait of Mr. FROTHINGHAM, 75 cents.

A clear and effective presentation of what is known as Rationalism in Religion in an analysis, by an admirer of acknowledged genius, of the life and work of one of its leading teachers.

"A brilliant and appreciative essay."—Boston Post.

"Radical ideas are here formulated, and expressed in a strong, clear light."—Liberal Christian.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LEWES' NEW BOOK!

THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF MIND.

Being the Third Volume of "Problems of Life and Mind."

By GEORGE H. LEWES, author of the History of Philosophy, the Life of Goethe, etc. 8vo. $3.00.

CONTENTS.—THE NATURE OF LIFE.—THE NERVOUS MECHANISM.—ANIMAL AUTOMATISM.—THE REFLEX THEORY.

Mr. Lewes is widely recognized as one of the most acute and independent of thinkers, and a writer of remarkable force and perspicacity. The two preceding volumes of Problems of Life and Mind have attracted in an unusual degree the attention of scientific and philosophical minds, and have taken rank among the most important of recent contributions to the philosophy of life and thought. The present volume is of equal significance, and will doubtless win equal study and admiration from those competent to follow the author's speculations and argument.

Its interest is by no means confined to specialists, but all persons of intelligence will find it in a high degree instructive and engaging.

"The book is one which will inevitably find its way into the hands of every student of mental science who wishes to obtain the freshest view of physiology in its relation to mind."—Saturday Review (London).

PROBLEMS OF LIFE AND MIND.

Vols. I. and II. $3.00 each.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Paper, 25 cents.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Free Thought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.20.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK &amp; TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATIONAL PAPERS.

Published by

HAILMANN & DOERFLINGER,

Milwaukee, Wis.

(German) "ERZIEHUNG-BLAETTER," monthly, per year, $2.12.

(English) "THE NEW EDUCATION," a monthly tract for parents and teachers, devoted to Kindergarten Culture and Educational Hygiene in Home and School. Per year, 50 cents.

(English) The "New Education" TRACTS. Nos. 1 and 2 ready. Six copies (of any one number, or assorted) sent to any address on receipt of a 2-cent stamp.

A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS BOOK.

A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for TRAJECTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (W. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cents; four for $1.50.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

MADAME FOY'S

CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year.

And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY

FOY & HARMON,

New Haven, Conn.

GERMAN RADICAL PAPERS

Published by

CARL DOERFLINGER,

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

"ONKEL KARL," an illustrated juvenile monthly. Good reading for American youth studying German. Natural morals. No bloody crimes. No love-stories for "Boys and Girls." No hypocritical cant. Price per year, $1.50.

"FREIDENKER" (Freethinker), a weekly paper, devoted to the elevation of mankind out of the thralldom of superstition and ignorance. Price per year, $2.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	.40
FIFTY ".....	.75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.50
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	5.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 26, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 396.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

TWENTY-THREE CITIZENS of Fort Lee, N.Y., were arrested on June 28 for violating the Sunday law. Four men were each fined $3.00 and costs for carrying passengers to and from the ferry on the previous Sunday. "The warrants were sued out by Mrs. Parish, a woman of considerable notoriety, who declares that no one shall violate the Lord's day in Fort Lee, and that all shall be as orderly as a town in New England."

THE "POLITICAL PROGRAMME" of the London Eleusis Club proposes to secure the following seven measures: "1. Universal adult suffrage. 2. Such a re-distribution of seats as shall secure an equal share of electoral power to every voter. 3. Abolition of hereditary privileges. 4. Shorter duration of Parliaments. 5. Payment of members of Parliament from the Imperial taxation, and of election expenses from local taxation. 6. Complete separation of Church and State. 7. Compulsory, secular, and free education."

THE FOLLOWING REPORT was made and accepted at a recent meeting of Baptist ministers in this city:—

Your committee, to which you referred certain questions about the moral and religious instruction of the convicts in the State Prison at Charlestown, report the following resolutions for your consideration:—

First, No person visiting the institutions of the State should be permitted to interfere, either openly or covertly, with the duties of the officers appointed by law.

Second, So long as public funds are appropriated for the moral and religious instruction of the convicts, they should not be divided among various denominations, but should be used for the employment of good men, who shall devote their whole time to the work, and who in the prosecution of their duties shall avoid, as far as possible, the expression of denominational sentiment. But

Third, It would accord more nearly with our convictions, and we think with the principles of our government, should the State appropriate no funds for the support of chaplains in our penal institutions, but request the various denominations to arrange for the instruction of the inmates.

NOT A FEW liberal people are slow to believe that, when the Evangelical or daily press declares itself in favor of "unsectarian schools," it can mean anything short of secular schools. Nevertheless, "unsectarianism" means nine times in ten "undenominational Evangelicalism"; and whoever imagines it means more than that is the victim of his own credulity. For instance, referring to Mr. Gladstone, the Philadelphia Christian Statesman says (the italics are ours):

"The influence which he is capable of wielding on any great question of the day is incalculable, and as wide as civilization itself. We profoundly regret, therefore, to see that at the recent dinner given in his honor by the Mayor of Birmingham, he is reported by the telegraph to have 'notably praised the efforts which Birmingham has made to solve the educational difficulty by the adoption of a purely secular system.' We trust the cable has blundered here, as so many other authorities have done of late, confounding opposition to sectarian schools with opposition to all religious instruction in public schools. We cannot believe that so sagacious and philosophic a mind has intelligently embraced the hopelessly untenable theory of secular education."

THE RAILROAD STRIKES must be deeply regretted by every one. Pity for the strikers and their families, however strong and sincere, cannot become sympathy with riot and lawlessness, with deeds of blood, wanton destruction of property, and reckless interference with the rights of the public. The oppressed ruin their own just cause when they seek redress by such means. The right to strike—i. e., to quit work simultaneously by agreement—is unquestionable; but the wrong of preventing others by force from taking the vacant places is just as unquestionable. Mobs must be put down at all costs; no other alternative exists. There is and can be no excuse for resorting to anarchy and violence; such acts right no wrong, but inflict it in an awfully aggravated form. If the selfish greed of corporations is the real cause of these outbreaks, the misery it produces ought to excite universal compassion for the sufferers and indignation against those who thus grind the faces of the poor; but how are the merits of the case to be understood by the vast public? Neither corporations nor individual employers can pay money as wages which they do not receive themselves; and the long stagnation of business has decreased profits everywhere so largely that no unprejudiced mind can jump to a conclusion in this case in the absence of accurate information. But riot and tumult only make matters worse; they must be suppressed at all hazards.

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition of the National Liberal League have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from Mr. John W. Babbitt, Ypsilanti, Mich., 93; from Mr. Franklin Goodyear, Cortland, N. Y., through Mr. Levi Hopkins, 38; from Mr. S. T. Headley, Laingsburg (State not known), 29. Total thus far acknowledged—7,090. Mr. Babbitt writes that "most of these petitioners are members of the various churches of this city of Ypsilanti"—a circumstance which shows that a portion, at least, of the Orthodox population are prepared to carry out the principle of secular government. But the friends of this principle ought not to be satisfied with the seven thousand signatures thus far obtained. The time for presenting the petition will be whenever the subject of amending the Constitution so as to prohibit sectarian appropriations comes up in Congress. It will then be too late to collect names to a petition in favor of a secular amendment: this work must be done beforehand, or not at all. Any one can see that the amendment will be a Protestant Evangelical, not a secular one, unless in some way the secular principle is asserted by the people. But the politicians will not assert it for us; we must assert it for ourselves, or the country will before long see its now secular Constitution poisoned with an Orthodox creed, either expressed or implied—and it matters little which. Hence our deep desire to collect a large number of signatures to this petition. If you cannot organize a Liberal League in your town, are you not willing to do for religious liberty the small service of collecting signatures? Let us have at least a hundred thousand! Send to the National Liberal League your postage stamps for blank petitions.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. W. M. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. NAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAVEY,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIHAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Easterville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 E. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quitman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 [The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.]

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....34 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, undimly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Objects and the Method of Education in Amherst College.

BY CHARLES K. WHIPPLE.

During my undergraduate course in Amherst College, from 1827 to 1831, one prominent feature in its administration was elaborate preparation for and incitement of "a revival" during the autumn and winter of each college year. Other colleges in New England were well understood to favor the Orthodox faith; but Amherst manifestly took the lead in stimulating propagandism in that direction. The points of distinction insisted on in its favor by its managers and friends were far less its facilities for mental discipline and scientific attainment than its arrangements for the promotion of "piety" of the Jonathan Edwards type. There were claimed to be, on the average, so many pious students entering in each class, so many becoming pious in each during the four years' course, and so many in each ultimately choosing the Orthodox ministry as their occupation for life. The trustees and the faculty were unanimous in approving and actively forwarding this state of things, and without doubt many parents selected Amherst College for their boys in view of this peculiarity, conceiving their permanent welfare, here and hereafter, to be thus best assured.

In the preaching, prayers, and public and private exhortations preceding and attending these revivals, the chief points insisted on were the total depravity of unregenerate men, the offer of free salvation to those who would accept it as purchased by atoning blood, and the certain damnation of those whose earthly career should close without so accepting it. In preparation for the excitement, and during its progress, there were frequent "prayer-meetings," and among the hymns there sung, those containing the following lines seemed special favorites:—

"Oh, there will be mourning,
 Mourning, mourning, mourning,
 Oh, there will be mourning
 At the judgment-seat of Christ.

"Parents and children there must part,
 Must part, must part, must part,
 Parents and children there must part,
 Must part to meet no more."

"In that lone land of deep despair,
 No Sabbath's heavenly light shall rise;
 No God regard your bitter prayer,
 No Savior call you to the skies."

In the considerable interval which has passed between the time above spoken of and the present, the progress of intelligence has wrought considerable changes at Amherst. One of them certainly is a great enlargement of the instrumentalities for secular education, in which Amherst College now takes a high rank. Another, probably, is a modification of the phraseology in the revival hymns and exhortations. Be this latter as it may, I find in the inauguration address of President Seelye, lately delivered, such an emphatic reaffirmation of the theological ideas upon which the college was founded, and so distinct an announcement that Orthodox propagandism is still the chief purpose of its directors, that I think it well to quote some passages from the full report in the Advertiser of June 28, and to call attention to some features of the policy there disclosed:

"Amherst College was founded by Christian people and for a Christian purpose. It was an association of Christian ministers, who, at Shelburne, May 10, 1815, started measures for the foundation of the college; and it was the Christian men and women of Franklin and Hampshire counties by whom these measures were carried to their consummation. The inspiring sources of the whole movement were devotion to Christ and zeal for his kingdom. When the first college building was dedicated, and its first president and professor were inaugurated September 18, 1821, 'the promotion of the religion of Christ' was declared to be the special object of the undertaking. . . .

"It was the original purpose, from which the friends and guardians of the college have never swerved, that there should be here furnished the means for the highest attainable culture in science and literature and philosophy. The college was not to fall below the best in its intellectual provisions. But the constant and chief aim of its founders was to establish here an educational institution in which Christian faith might dominate, and whose power might subvert the knowledge of Christian truth. . . .

"And not only the dawn, but the clear day of which we boast, has proceeded step by step from the clearer shining on the human soul of some truths which the Bible first revealed. It is a simple but most significant truth that every stage of our modern progress has been preceded and inspired by a closer study of the Scriptures and a deeper reverence for them as the word of God. . . .

"A Christian college, therefore, looking not at transient but at permanent ends, sowing seed for a perennial harvest of the farthest science and the fairest culture, will be solicitous, first of all, to continue Christian. . . .

"But this is to be taken in no narrow sense. Christian faith does not fetter, it emancipates the mind. Just in proportion to its depth and power is its possessor liberated from prejudice and superstition and all narrowness of thought. Christian faith is not only not hostile to freethought, but it finds its normal exercise and expression in this very freedom. It is itself in such exact accord with all the original endowments and deepest instincts of the soul—whose foundations were not laid in falsehoods,—that it is only settled more firmly in its seat by free inquiry. It is only when the thought becomes fettered and is no longer free that it fails to return—over whatever field it may have ranged,—to the faith which has inspired it. . . .

"In like manner Christian faith, if that be the object sought, may be reached by divers methods of inquiry, and we shall wisely welcome any tendency of thought, starting from whatever source and moving in whatever direction, which has this faith for its presupposition and is zealously bent upon discovering and declaring its sufficient grounds. Only that tendency of thought which divorces itself from God, and the supernatural, and the Christian atonement, shall we wisely discard from our processes of education. . . .

"May this faith be so firmly fixed and so intelligently held that it shall be free and fearless in its exercise, emancipated from all intolerance and bigotry, abounding itself in largest charity and sympathy, and giving speed and cheer to whatever seeks the knowledge of Christ, in whatever avenue the search be made; and yet, because it is a living and not a dead faith in Jesus Christ and his atonement, tolerating nothing which makes its aim to set aside his claims!"

In the last two of these extracts I have italicized two specially significant phrases.

It is a matter of course that President Seelye should make a general eulogy of freedom of thought as desirable in a school of education, and a general pledge of the practical recognition of it in the one over which he presides. But, coming to details, he does not hesitate to declare that rigid restrictions are to limit that freedom in certain directions. The founders of the college having made the promotion of the religion of Christ their special object, their chief aim having been that their Christian faith might dominate, their successors are to be solicitous, first of all, to continue Christian. This Christian faith is declared to include recognition and acceptance of the following doctrines: namely, that the Bible is the word of God; that Jesus, whose birth, life, death, and burial are described in the New Testament, is identical with the Messiah or Christ predicted in the Old Testament; and that acceptance of an atonement made by his death is indispensable to salvation. These doctrines, with others, are to be presupposed as sound and true by the freethought of the Amherst student; that great body of modern literature which gives the verdict of scholarship against the doctrines thus presupposed is to be discarded from the apparatus of Amherst study; and if exceptional freethought in any student, recognizing the soundness of this verdict, shall offer, in one of the theses required in the college course, a statement of the reasons for accepting it, such statement will not be tolerated!

Such presupposition of absolute truth in a certain body of theological doctrine, such systematic exclusion from a course of study of all opposing statements and reasons, and such intolerance of the expression of diverse opinion among those who are in the process of formation of opinion, must strongly tend to bedarken and mislead the majority of those who are subjected to it. The mental and moral characteristics produced by a long course of such training are so well described by Mr. Lecky, that I quote the passage from his History of European Morals, Vol. II., pp. 375-377.

It has always been the peculiarity of a certain kind of theological teaching, that it inverts all the normal principles of judgment, and absolutely destroys intellectual diffidence. On other subjects we find, if not a respect for honest conviction, at least some sense of the amount of knowledge that is requisite to entitle men to express an opinion on grave controversies. A complete ignorance of the subject-matter of a dispute restrains the confidence of dogmatism; and an ignorant person who is aware that by much reading and thinking in spheres of which he has himself no knowledge, his educated neighbor has modified or rejected opinions which that ignorant person had been taught, will, at least, if he is a man of sense or modesty, abstain from compassing the benighted condition of his more instructed friend. But on theological questions this has never been so. Unfaltering belief being taught as the first of duties, and all doubt being usually stigmatized as criminal or damnable, a state of mind is formed to which we find no parallel in other fields. Many men and most women, though completely ignorant of the very rudiments of biblical criticism, historical research, or scientific discoveries, though they have never read a single page, or understood a single proposition of the writings of those whom they condemn, and have absolutely no rational knowledge either of the arguments by which their faith is defended, or of those by which it has been impugned, will nevertheless adjudicate with the utmost confidence upon every polemical question, denounce, hate, pity, or pray for the conversion of all who dissent from what they have been taught, assume, as a matter beyond the faintest possibility of doubt, that the opinions they have received without inquiry must be true, and that the opinions which others have arrived at by inquiry must be false, and make it a main object of their lives to assail what they call heresy in every way in their power, except by examining the grounds on which it rests. It is probable that the great majority of voices that swell the clamor against every book which is regarded as heretical, are the voices of those who would deem it criminal even to open that book, or to enter into any real, searching, and impartial investigation of the subject to which it relates. Innumerable pulpits support this tone of thought, and represent with a fervid rhetoric well fitted to excite the nerves and imaginations of women, the deplorable condition of all who deviate from a certain type of opinions or of emotions; a blind propagandism or a secret wretchedness penetrates into countless households, poisoning the peace of families, chilling the mutual confidence of husband and wife, adding immeasurably to the difficulties which every searcher into truth has to encounter, and diffusing far and wide intellectual timidity, disingenuousness, and hypocrisy.

The results above described, of assuming a presupposed theology to be unquestionably true, appear most glaringly when the persons in question are ignorant in other departments also. Such persons will often talk freely, not knowing either that they expose their own ignorance, or that their cause itself is discredited by the efforts of stupidity to defend it. But these results appear, and work in the same disastrous manner, in the theological department, in men and women whose minds have received a good general training, and whose attainments have been large in fields where free research is permitted them. This state of things usually occurs when the theological bias has been firmly established in early youth, before the mind had learned to act for itself, or to appreciate evidence in any department. In such cases, it is comparatively easy for clerical directors to persuade them that reason is inadmissible in theological matters, and that faith is the appropriate and the sufficient substitute for it. A lady of high culture and refinement, and fluent in the expression of opinion in matters of politics, literature, science, and general education, explained thus her systematic refusal to discuss diversities of religious opinion: "Many persons have been surprised that one so radical in politics as I, should be so conservative in theology; but I hold the conservative side, and I prefer not to discuss it." Very likely she realized (what was plain to me) that reticence here seemed, as it would seem in other departments, like a confession of weakness; but at any rate, she was quite decided to allow no comparison, in her presence, of ideas and the reasons for them, conflicting with her ideas and her reasons for them.

It was prudence of the same sort that dictated the answer, when, in a general convention of Young Men's Christian Associations, the question was asked, How to meet the reasons given by opponents? "Talk kindly, but avoid argument."

The reader will observe that President Seelye has used the artifice common to people of his persuasion, of assuming that disbelief in God is the natural and probable accompaniment of disbelief in "the Christian Atonement"; regardless of this immense difference in the basis of the two beliefs, the former seeming an intuition of the human mind, judging from the almost universal acceptance of it by peoples the most diverse in character, cultivation, and attainments, the other confessedly dependent upon documentary evidence, which scrutiny proves to testify more strongly against the atonement theory than for it.

It seems now to be settled that in Amherst College, while "free thought" and "free inquiry" are allowed, the peculiarities which Orthodoxy finds in Christian faith are to be "presupposed" and to "dominate," and, to this end, certain lines of argument are not to be "tolerated," and certain tendencies of thought are to be "discarded!"

It may seem to some persons that President Seelye would have done better to "avoid argument," since it involved such point-blank self-contradiction as appears in the above extracts from his address. But a triumphant majority cares little for such considerations. The predominance of the theology which the President and his party presuppose, will last through his life-time and through the next century. The people who assume belief in "the Christian Atonement" to be as well founded as belief in God, are yet sufficiently numerous to supply Amherst with a long succession of students; and a majority of those students will probably, through the policy of repression and presupposition above indicated, still find the Christian ministry a satisfactory field for their occupancy.

SUNDAY OR SABBATH?

The question was once more raised at a meeting, presided over by Dean Stanley, on Saturday last, whether any valid reasons can be alleged for excluding the public from places like the National Gallery on Sundays. What difference is there in principle between allowing admission to Hampton Court or Kew Gardens, and allowing it to the Gardens in Regent's Park? The sole test of what Sunday recreation should be legal or the contrary ought surely to be, not the pecuniary profit of a company or an individual, nor the actual quantum of labor involved in it, but the profit, mental or otherwise, of the community at large. The adoption of any other test is beset by difficulties which it is as well to make prominent. Only three originators of our actual Sunday can possibly be suggested; namely, Moses, Constantine, or the Church. But equally with the seventh day Moses sanctified the seventh year; equally with the day of the sun Constantine sanctified the kalends of January; equally with the Lord's Day the Church sanctified a crowd of saints' days, which the Reformation rejected. If we resort to the fourth commandment as the real authority for Sunday, we shall find the Sabbatarian theory not quite so simple as at first sight appears. For, not to insist on the fact that the commandment in question forbids only labor, not pastimes or pleasures, ought we not to take the old Israelites as the best exponents of their own institution, letting our servants and cattle rest, as they did; and punishing Sabbath-breaking with stoning, as they did? Are we justified in neglecting to observe the seventh year, the seventh month, and the new moons, which were as distinctly ordained by Moses and as rigidly observed by the Jews as the Sabbath? But even among the Jews there were different opinions as to the observance of the Sabbath. Because Moses had said with respect to it, "Abide ye every man in his own place," the Dositheans taught that in whatever posture a man found himself on the morning of the Sabbath, so he was bound to remain till the evening. The Rabbins invented thirty-nine negative precepts relative to the Sabbath, the spirit of which may be judged from two of them. Shoes without nails, they said, might be worn, but shoes with nails were a burden. People might not walk on the grass; for walking on it bruised it, and such bruising amounted to a kind of threshing. It was a Sabbath degenerated into such trivialities as these that the early Church ultimately succeeded in superseding by the Christian Sunday.

As regards Sunday in the early Christian Church, the first fact which demands attention is, that the obligatory observance of the Sabbath was never transferred to Sunday, but that both were for several centuries kept together. Public worship was precisely the same on both days; and whilst each of them commemorated distinct events, the chief point of resemblance between them was, that originally they were both of them days of rest from labor, without any idea of abstinence from recreation. For the first three centuries of its existence, all games and business were permitted on Sunday, which was a day of purely optional observance, and the reverse of a day of gloom or self-denial. It was only by slow degrees that, as the Jewish Sabbath fell into disuse, some of its associations clung round the Christian Sunday. Constantine made a law, which extended to "the venerable Day of the Sun," that suspension of business which had hitherto been, and still continued to be, customary on such purely civil festivals as the emperor's birthday, the kalends of January, and the thirty days respectively of harvest and vintage. The intent of the law was purely civil, and not religious; and in the same way, in a most remarkable edict of Theodosius, Sunday and other Christian festivals shared the solicitude of the law with the traditional festivals of heathen Rome. That Sunday at the end of the fourth century had still no Christian pre-eminence is marked by the fact that the same law set apart from the transaction of civil business the two months of harvest and vintage, the kalends of January, the days of the founding of Rome and Constantinople, the seven holy days before and after Easter, the days of the sun, and the days of the birth and accession of the emperors. Secular amusements also, such as animal-baiting, horse-racing, and plays, were then for the first time made unlawful on Sundays, and the subsequent extension of laws in the same direction have only confirmed the principle then asserted. But whether such laws were made in England or abroad, they enjoined precisely the same respect for the saints' days as they did for Sunday; so that if we ascribe the blinding authority of the latter to the institution of the Church, we are equally bound to observe the numerous saints' days, which have exactly the same authority and grew up in exactly the same way.

The great authors of the Reformation clearly saw this difficulty, and, boldly breaking with the Judaical or ecclesiastical past, they made Sunday a mere creation of law, and an institution of our statute-book. Recognizing the expediency of a weekly day of rest, they saw that its sanctity depended no more on the fourth commandment than the criminality of murder depended on the sixth. They saw that its ultimate sanction lay, not in the authority of transitory religious phases, but on the permanent requirements, both physical and moral, of human nature. Thus they established the principle, which in spite of Puritanism has never been wholly lost sight of, that the legislative protection of Sunday should be rational and discretionary, guided solely by the utilities of the present, and not by the superstitions of the past. That such was the spirit of the Reformation admits of easy proof. Luther, rather than have the observance of Sunday "set up on a Jewish foundation," ordered his followers "to work on it, ride on it, dance on it; to do anything which should remove the encroachment on Christian liberty." In the Augsburg Confession the Protestants declared that it was a great error to suppose that the Lord's Day had been instituted in place of the Sabbath as a day to be necessarily observed, for that Scripture had abrogated the Sabbath, and taught that Mosaic ceremonies were no longer necessary. Cranmer spoke of Sunday and other days as "mere appointments of the magistrate"; and in accordance with this maxim was the law of Edward VI., which made it lawful for every husbandman, laborer, fisherman, or other person, on Sundays as on other holy days, "at harvest, or at any other time, when necessity should so require, to labor, ride, fish, or work any kind of work at their free will or pleasure." But most conclusive of all is Tyndale's exposition, which is striking enough to be cited in full: "As for the Sabbath, we be lords over the Sabbath, and may yet change it into Monday or into any other day, as we see need, or may make every tenth day holy day only as we see cause why. We may make two every week, if it were expedient, and one not enough to teach the people. Neither was there any cause to change it from the Saturday, but to put a difference between ourselves and the Jews; neither need we any holy day at all, if the people might be taught without it." Lastly, even Calvin is said to have been found playing at bowls by Knox, when the latter visited him one Sunday at Geneva.

Then came the Puritanical reaction in the seventeenth century, when on Sundays Englishmen would not so much as light their fires, cook their food, pay visits, or walk out of doors; when the Long Parliament had the Book of Sports, republished by Charles I., burned by the common hangman; when in Scotland attendance at church was enforced by soldiers; when the Session at Aberdeen could see in the custom of Sunday salmon-fishing the clear cause of an earthquake; when in the Puritan colonies beyond the Atlantic the profanation of Sunday could be classed with witchcraft and murder among capital offences. In those days the clergy preached that to play at bowls on Sundays was as great a sin as homicide, and that to give a feast or wedding-dinner on that day was as criminal as for a father to cut his child's throat. The unsubstantiality of the premises from which such conclusions were drawn has been pointed out; but they still suffice to keep the hard-worked classes of our towns from any higher recreation on Sunday than that afforded by gin, and to influence well-meaning people to oppose any innovations which seem to infringe on the Sabbath.—London World, May 16.

CELEBRITIES AT HOME.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL IN ALBEMARLE-STREET.

As becomes a cragsman of approved reputation, Professor Tyndall dwells in the elevated range of apartments which crowns the heights of the Royal Institution. Inured to fatigue by a long course of Alpine training, he makes several times a day, without apparent difficulty, the long and difficult ascent to the eery whence he contemplates the "infinite azure of the past" and the volcanic upheaval of the present with sublime equanimity. That is to say, until he takes up his pen, when the equanimity is apt to vanish, and trenchant sentence follows trenchant sentence, until the pulpits of Belfast and other places ring with furious denunciations of the successor of Davy and Faraday. "My distinguished and ever-helpful friend," as Mr. Carlyle styles him, if trenchant on paper, is far otherwise in his ordinary converse. An active, wiry, keen-eyed man, full of vigor and decision, he is endowed with a singularly sweet and musical voice, and a manner almost caressing in its suavity. It was this contrast between matter and manner which lent additional poignancy to the Belfast address. That petroleic oration, highly charged with inflammable and explosive matter, was delivered with an unctuous deliberation which drove the opponents of the speaker wild with rage, and provoked a conflict now happily at an end. It must not be understood from this that the scientific world is ever at a loss for a controversy, or that Professor Tyndall has not the true scientific relish for debate; for he is at this moment engaged in a series of experiments, the result of which, so far, has been to invalidate those of Dr. Bastian and the other supporters of the theory of spontaneous generation. Professor Tyndall is still continuing his experiments. In a room, heated to an uncomfortable temperature, are endless rows of hermetically sealed tubes filled with infusions, none of which have at present displayed the strange forms of animal life generally found in them when exposed for a few days to the open air. Very great importance attaches to these tubes of infusion of hay, codfish, sole, and other organic substances; and the eyes of scientific Europe are strained anxiously towards the sultry chamber at the Royal Institution. Next to this apartment is the laboratory in which are prepared with infinite care and patience the beautiful physical experiments with which the Professor enlivens his lectures. But very few of those who witness the charming effects produced in the theatre of the Royal Institution have any idea of the time and thought expended in the invention and arrangement of the necessary apparatus, and in the rehearsals necessary to insure that certainty of result for which the Professor of Natural Philosophy is justly celebrated. For all new and original work the philosopher must perforce make his own tools, and work with them and at them till they act perfectly. There is a forest of tubes and an artillery of apparatus in this scientific workshop, from which the philosopher-artifex again leads the way to the lofty writing-room, formerly occupied by his illustrious predecessors. With a loving and reverent hand he has marked every article used by Faraday. A tiny brass plate tells that this ample arm-chair once held the philosopher who first magnetized a ray of light and discovered magneto-electricity. Faraday, however, was no friend of arm-chairs—at least for working in,—much preferring an upright desk and a singularly uncomfortable high stool, also treasured by Professor Tyndall. In a corner—behind a bust of Thomas Carlyle, presented by him to his "ever-helpful" friend—hangs the famous barometer used during his Alpine tour by the handsome Cornish philosopher, whose eyes, as the ladies remarked, "were made for something better than poring over crucibles." In this little room Davy and Faraday recorded the experiments made in the laboratory below, and in it Professor Tyndall is very much "at home" indeed during the scientific season. When that exciting period is over, he invariably starts for Switzerland, having found there for the last nineteen or twenty summers health, relaxation, and a strong influx of fresh ideas. By next season he will have built himself a "mountain home" among his beloved peaks and glaciers. The spot he has selected is in the centre of a region of unrivalled beauty and interest. From the Bel Alp, hard by the upper valley of the Rhine, and not far from the spot where the Simplon road bends southwards, he will enjoy on the one side a magnificent view of the Matterhorn, the Weisshorn, and Dom, rearing their proud crests above an army of icy peaks; on the other side is the great Aletsch glacier, bounded and fed by the giants of the Bernese Oberland, the snowy axe-end of the Jungfrau, the savage pinnacle of the Finsteraar, and the great central dome of the Aletschhorn. It was to the summit of the latter magnificent peak, springing from enormous glaciers, that Professor Tyndall last summer conducted his bride, to the great delight of that lady, whose skill as a cragwoman is a source of infinite pride to her husband.

His love of mountain scenery, his slightly northern accent, and his indubitable perfidium ingenium have led many to suppose that the famous savant and mountaineer is a Scot; but justice to Ireland compels us to point out that he is a native of the sister isle,—the descendant of a Gloucestershire family who crossed over to County Wexford about two centuries ago, when there was a kind of emigration of cloth-manufacturers from the vales of Gloucester to the eastern coast of Ireland. It is not difficult to believe that Professor Tyndall is the descendant of a long line of Orangemen. His father was a strong partisan, whose greatest pleasure was the study of controversial theology, and whose strongest conviction was the necessity of warring against the Church of Rome. Read by this light, the character of the son—his aggressive attitude to dogma of all kinds; his vigorous determination to push scientific investigation to its utmost limits, irrespective of the requirements of creeds—may be easily explained. It may or may not be worth while for the school-master of the future to decide how far athletic exercises tend to increase the fighting tendencies of mankind; but it nevertheless is a significant fact that the early education of John Tyndall was mainly athletic. He was already a big boy and a good swimmer, runner, climber, and no dull student of the noble art of self-defence, before Mr. John Conwill, a skilful teacher in one of the Irish national schools, took his mathematical education in hand, and marked out his first problems on the snow as master and pupil returned from school together. In the earlier stages of mathematics his power of representing an image upon the tablets of the mind helped him very considerably; but his circumstances compelled him to earn the opportunity of self-culture before he could undergo any sufficient scientific training. At first a member of the Ordnance Survey of Ireland, then an assistant in an engineer's office during the mania for railway extension, next a student at the old muster-place of the Teutonic knights, young Tyndall worked hard, read Carlyle, and made many friends, among whom were Professor Hirst and General Wynne. Over and over again he determined to push his fortune in America; but fortune proved too strong for sound calculation, and the Transatlantic visit was reserved for the day when success was achieved. Fate and the desire for self-improvement led the young scientist to Queenwood College in Hampshire—the Harmony Hall built by Robert Owen and his disciples,—where he made the acquaintance of Professor Frankland, in whose laboratory he spent a large portion of his time. At that period the illustrious Bunsen attracted to Marburg a number of students of chemical and physical science, and among them were two natives of the British Islands, Frankland and Tyndall. Here, in a technical sense, they parted company, for Frankland devoted himself to chemistry, and Tyndall to physics, under the auspices of Dr. Knoblauch. Subsequently master and pupil became firm allies and pursued joint inquiries. Not till the year of the first International Exhibition did young Tyndall meet Faraday, and the same year was signalized by the commencement of his long friendship with Professor Huxley. The two young scientists were already looked upon as "rising men"; but were "without definite outlook, needing proper work, and only anxious to have it to perform. The chairs of Natural History and of Physics being advertised as vacant in the University of Toronto, we applied for them,—he for one, I for the other; but, possibly guided by a prophetic instinct, the University authorities declined having anything to do with either of us. If I remember rightly, we were equally unlucky elsewhere."

Thus the second attempt of Professor Tyndall to cast his lot in the New World failed; but ample compensation came shortly afterwards when he was appointed to the chair of Natural Philosophy at the Royal Institution. This post he has since filled in a fashion equally satisfactory to genuine scientific folk, and to the large portion of English society which affects scientific tastes. Following the precedent set by Faraday, Professor Tyndall has succeeded not only in original investigation and in teaching science soundly and accurately, but in making it attractive. In his lectures it is no longer "harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose," but puts on a seductive air, and woos the spectator with magical power. When he lectures at the Royal Institution the theatre is crowded,—not, as might be supposed, by blue-stockings, severe as to look and angular as to outline, by ancient men with long back hair, and younger aspirants with bulbous foreheads, but with the men and women of the great world,—the people who help to make society and history. In 1872 the New World, which would have nothing to say to young Tyndall twenty years before, succeeded in persuading the full-blown professor to visit it. At last John Tyndall got across the Atlantic, not as a toiler for renown, but as one of the foremost scientific men in Europe. His four months of lecturing excited extraordinary interest, by no means diminished when he handed over the net profits of his tour to trustees, to be applied to the perpetual education in the universities of Europe of two young Americans. Since then he has been engaged, on his own account and on that of the government, in many interesting investigations. As scientific adviser of Trinity House he undertook a series of experiments on the atmospheric conditions of the transmission of sound, which resulted in proving that fog is a better conductor than the clear air of a summer's day. This is only one of the many instances in which he has found scientific truth opposed to popular belief. At the present moment his interest is concentrated on the tubes in the hot room in Albemarle Street, and his efforts are devoted to the settlement of a very vexed question. Since the famous experiments of Pasteur, scientific opinion has been divided on the subject of spontaneous generation, and a serious and well-considered attempt to solve the problem is now in progress. Despite the experiments of Dr. Bastian, Professor

Tyndall still abides by his own, the result of which is, "at present," as he philosophically puts it, "that life has never been proved to have been produced independently of antecedent life."

Germs in the air and minute beings in infusions have their charms, no doubt; but they are not permitted to absorb the entire attention of Professor Tyndall. The motion and structure of glaciers have formed the subjects of long investigations, recorded in books written at various times and for various audiences. In positive science the author of Heat, a Mode of Motion, has ever shown himself a philosopher of a conservative turn of mind, taking nothing for granted but that which is absolutely proved. It is only when he reflects on the long duel between science and dogma that he steps into the borderland which connects the true domain of science with the region of hypothesis. Then the spirit of William Tyndall, the martyr to his zeal in translating the Bible, comes out, and the philosopher of Albemarle Street relieves his spirit by utterances which, if promulgated in the time of his hero, Giordano Bruno, would have resulted in his involuntary cremation coram populo. But we do not burn philosophers now, and Professor Tyndall and his friend Professor Huxley may, from the altitudes of Albemarle Street and South Kensington, preach such doctrine as seems good unto them without fear of the secular arm.—London World, May 18, 1877.

AN IRISH PHILOSOPHER.

"Aisy, Mither, aisy; it's jokin' you are, sure, spakin' of Providence to an Irishman; it's like tellin' a hungry man about his gran-father's fine dinners! Didn't you never hear how Providence wouldn't stay in the country along wid the Orangemen?—It's as thrue as that wanst there was kings in Ireland of our own blood and bones, that Father Murphy spakes about. Them was the days, when we had kings and a Providence to look after us; when our best crop wasn't childer, and there never come mouths but there was praties to fill them! It's jokin' you are, Mither! What! Is it after tellin' me you'd be, that Providence doesn't live over the say wid the fine gentlemen, and niver looks in here at all, at all! Thruth, thin, if we was to wait for Providence, we would be like Rory waitin' at Dublin for the thrain from Limerick to Cork! Didn't you niver hear what happened to Phelim O'Connor, whose daughter was the purty girl you was winkin' at? (Sure, thin, an' it's not blushin' you are, to find we have eyes?) Faith an' I'll tell you the story. You see, Phelim was comin' home by the King's Moss one night, as light-headed as a lamp-post, an' as merry and lively as a lark, whistlin' tunes whiles, and repatin' patheranavies if a lonesome thought came across him; but few of them did. All at wanst it struck him to vaset his old friend McCarthy, whose house was a quarter of a mile off the road,—and by the same token he forgot his friend had gone to Australia. So, you see, he laves the road, and strikes across the country for the house; an' when he gets there he knocks, callin' out, 'It's me, Phelim O'Connor, so don't be disturbed, my darlin'!' and divil a one was there to answer him. So, Mither, he knocks and knocks for some time, sittin' down for the conveyance of it on the door-step, where the whusky sent him asleep, and sure when he waked up it was the blissed morning! an' that was the way he got the rheumatis he died of,—rest his ould bones! Isn't it the blissed thruth I'm tellin' the gentleman, Rory, as if it came from Father Murphy himself? No, no, Mither; if we don't come up wid Providence on the straight road, we best not turn off to it to look after him. What is the matter with the country at this minute, but the rheumatis that she gotten sittin' down by her bogs and waitin' on Providence; more belike she will die of it—the poor ould creature! What! Is it after contradicthin' me you'd be?—an' a purty opinion you must have of Providence, if you think he's been looking after Ireland this eight hundred years, an' made such a mess of it! Bad luck to you, Mither, it's ashamed you ought to be for spakin' in that way, though I says it as knows little about Providence. Faith, an' there's a hundred years on to Mither's purgathory for that!—eh, Rory?"

"Belave in purgathory? Yes, an' bedad you'd better be after doin' the same; but I niver made a raysonable gentleman, did you, Rory?—they was all made deficient in rayson, and got the land to make up for it! Faith, here's Mither jokin' again! How can I tell you about purgathory that have niver been there?—thruth, an' you'll know about it time enough am thinkin'. But maybe you will be goin' to the other place right on, like a thrue Prothestant; it wouldn't be purille, Rory, would it, to keep the gentleman waitin'? Which is the other place? Why will you be askin' me about it, that have so many friends of your own there? Sure, thin, you're spakin' for the sake of it. Well, if you must know, it's the place for—Prothestants an' propriethors, an' if you're the one or the other, Jasus—blessed be his name—and Father Murphy protect you! Belave in Father Murphy? That's like your way of spakin' about Providence. Ugh! I wonder where half of the praties an' the whole of the rint goes? Belave in Father Murphy! Plaise don't be blasphemous, if none of your kind niver was raysonable. Oh, Rory, macushla, here's Mither not seein' we're jokin' him! But listen; you'll hear the whole blissed thruth about me and Father Murphy, and thin you'll know if I belave in him."

"I was wanst at D—, that I wint to, to buy ribbons for my purty Kate Devlin, that's now the wife of my busom, but my sweet-art that thin was. The weather was fine and frosty, and the wind keen, makin' the pint of my nose as red as my neckerchief; bruk weather, with blue and white the ould cullers on the ground and sky, and I rached the town, by runnin' and sliddin', half an hour before I expected; and faith, when I did, it's ready I was for a dhrum o' potheren to drive the cowl from my nose and fingers; so sure I turned in to the 'Irishman Rampin' to have one. It's not in the middle of the glass I stopped that mornin', nor at the botthum nayther, for I dhrunk right on to the end of the second; and thin I was comfortable. To complate my recovery I stamped wid my feet and struck my hands across, undher my oxtars, an' over my shoulders, an' all the time I was winkin' at purty Mary that sarved the potheren; when what should I hear from the room inside but the voice of Father Murphy spakin' of Rory Riggan—that's me, Mither,—and laughin' at me as if I was the best joke in the world. 'Whisht,' says I, 'Mary darlin', whisht, and let me hear what his rayverence has to say of me this mornin'.' So I goes aisy, and claps my ear to the keyhole, listenin' and holdin' up my finger to Mary to be quate. 'Finish your glass,' says Father Murphy to his friend. 'Finish your glass, Pether, and it's myself will pay for another; sure it's only a year I'll have to put on to Rory's purgathory, an' the poor boy will soon pay it off agin,' says he. 'Thruth,' says Pether, 'an' it's right you are, Brother Murphy, an' it's purgathory we could niver do wid out,' says he; 'it's better nor tides (tithes) an' an establishment,' says he; 'but is it thrue that Rory is goin' to be married?' 'Faith, thin,' says Father Murphy, 'an' it's too thrue; but it's myself that's sorry for it,' says he, 'for when the childer come, and it's the big pot they put on the fire, divil a half of what I get out of him will I get,' says he. 'Here's to purgathory!' says Pether, dhrinkin' his glass dry; 'and may it's fires niver quinch,' says he, 'and the people always belave in it.' 'Whee-ee-wu!' says I, whistlin', 'the top of the mornin' to you, Father Murphy, an' be d—d if Rory Riggan is the fool you take him for,' says I. An' wid that I buttons my coat up, claps my hat on my head, and walks off wid my stick; an', by japers, that was the last I heard of Father Murphy's sermons!

"Didn't I not tell you that I pay my tides? what more would you be askin' about? Sure, thin, an' I wish I hadn't to do it. Why, do yourself belave in the voutantar seestem? I never knewn what it was. You see when I pay my tides I can't help it, and when I used to pay Father Murphy it was 'can't help it,' all the same; an' the parson had an Act of Parliament, and the priest had purgathory. What other seestem is there of gettin' our money, that you call the voutantar seestem? Lavin' it intirely to myself! Sure, thin, I'd lave the money intirely in my pocket. Thrust me, Mither, for a knowledge of the humane crature; depend upon it he's raysonable at borthum, an' only gives when he expects to have vales received! But, Mither, tell me what the Prothestants say for themselves anint their establishment, for of coorse they're raysonable cratures? What! that they must externalize Popery; thruth, thin, they may take credit for the work, an' that's jist what they Papiests want, to do to them. By japers, the Prothestants and Papiests are like rival docthors, each wantin' to pison the other, in order to get the whole practice; but, bedad, it's too bad of the Prothestant docthor to make the Papist pay for the pison!

"I'm an industrious man, Mither, an' pays my rint an' tides, an' do every other thing that's honest or accordin' to law; an' there's some as would wish me under the ground for it; an' it's not but there's some rayson in them too. The Prothestants an' propriethors, isn't what they ought to be, more nor the Papiests and priests. Did I ever shoot a propriethor? Why, thin, an' no I niver did; but it's many a one of their breed that I've knewn put out of the way with satisfaction to my heart. I niver hears of a propriethor's beelin' shot but I says 'Glory be to God—Amin!' for you see, Mither, it's a eight hundred years' fight we've been carryin' on, and worsted in it always; for, thrue to spake, Providence is on the side of the English. What can I think of Providence for keepin' on that side? Thruth, thin, I don't think of him at all; he always sides with the strongest am thinkin', and if we was to be the strongest he would be with us, and thin, as Father Murphy says, who could be aginst us? In the mane time we must do our best for ourselves widout him, an' divil a thing is there for it but to shoot propriethors. Shockin'! What's shockin'? Isn't it shockin' to be forcin' the money from the poor boys to feed and clothe in luxury hell-fire heretics? Did you niver hear the like of that, which is no more justice becase it is law, than Mulligan is just, becase he's a lawyer. Shockin'! by japers, this is what's shockin'. There was Paddy Conor lived down by there, a decent, industrious man, wid a family of seven, and his wife Judy what bored them, and at the time I'm spakin' of she was goin' about wid the eighth—blessed be the Father of all! It was the time of the pratie desese, and we all was very bad off; but Paddy had more childer than praties, poor boy, and it was by the kindness of his neebors that life was kept in him and his. Well, sure enough, his rint fell due, and he couldn't pay it, as I say, and they was resolved to make him, or else dhrive him out of the country. Now, I say they was wrong. How can a man can what he cannot can? could you, or me, or another one do what we couldn't do? Thruth, thin, and we could not. But the propriethor couldn't see that, or if he did he wouldn't belave it, which comes to the same. Well, one cowl, frosty night, when the winds was whistlin' like divils over the country, comes the agents of the propriethor and dhrives Paddy and his out of their house, and took the roof of it and threw down the sides and put fire to the furniture—all in the name of the blissed Acts of Parliament; an', hell consume them, they said they'd do the same to them that took the poor things in. Well, it was that night that an ould friend of Paddy's—I'll not name names—saw Paddy, heartbroken in the cowl, repatin' patheranavies on his knees by his poor Judy—rest her soul,—who was dyin' before him, by the bare hedge, of the child she was barin' him; while the rest of the childer was shiverin' about her, their skin red wid the wind, and not juice enough in their bodies to enable them to shed tears; an' he saw her die, as I say, an' a day or two after, sure, Paddy and his were scattered like leaves from a tree that the wind forced off and thin drove away; and it was as if no one cared for them; but—Paddy's friend shoot the proprietor! Och! bother your raysonin' about it, it's niver in Nature to stand it, whatever be the Acts of Parlimint; and depind upon it, Mither, under an Irishman's cowl'd-bloodiness there's always a warm heart!"—London Leader.

CHURCH INTERFERENCE WITH SCHOOLS.

In New York and other cities where the adherents of the Catholic Church are numerous, and where they exert an influence in political affairs, the leaders have rarely failed to show a disposition to control the civil government, to direct the public revenues to the support of Church institutions and break down the public school system. These leaders have learned from experience that all direct assaults upon the school system will end in their defeat; so they restrain their followers and seek to undermine the system and indirectly control it. In New York city they secured the passage of an act by the last Democratic Legislature, in which it was proposed to ride over the school authorities and put into the schools as teachers, without the usual sanction of the representative of the Board of Education, as many nuns as they could find in their convents. The bill has been repealed.

Many years since, New York State established a non-sectarian institution for the education and correction of juvenile delinquents. This did not suit the Catholic leaders, and so they have taken steps which have resulted in the establishment of a school or house of refuge, and have secured the passage of an act which makes it incumbent on the justice committing such juvenile offenders to send them to such sectarian institutions as the parent or guardian of the offender may direct. Of course the State is obliged to pay for the support of such offenders, and at the present time New York is paying annually a quarter of a million dollars to a Catholic institution called the Westchester Reformatory.

Recently a trouble has occurred in the public schools of New Rochelle, New York. It has been the custom to read selections of the Bible, in no sense sectarian, and to repeat the Lord's Prayer; but from this exercise the children of Catholics were excused, and allowed to come into the school-room at a later hour. Recently, however, the pastor of a Romish church informally objected to the reading of the Bible in the school, and claimed it as a right that the children of Catholics should be excused from attending such exercises. The result has been that all of the children of Catholics were excused on request of their parents, numbering about one hundred of three hundred and fifty pupils. It soon came about that the opening exercises were so disturbed as to render it necessary for the discipline of the school to modify the rule excusing Catholic children, so as to require them to assemble in a class-room at the opening hour and there remain while the opening exercises took place in the general assembly room of the school. This was a fresh cause of offence to the parents of Catholic children, and a large number of them have signed a petition, indited in discourteous terms, to the Board of Education asking for redress. They also demand that King James' version of the Bible be excluded from the public schools, that the Catholic version be substituted therefor, and a Catholic teacher be employed to read the same to the pupils.

These are but indications of the hostility of Church leaders to our school system. Had they the power to do it, the non-sectarian public school system, so highly prized by Americans, would soon become an institution of the past.—Boston Journal.

ULTRAMONTANISM AND WAR.

The contest in France has more and more developed itself as a struggle of the clerical party to gain possession of power, and to drag the French people into the efforts of the papal party in Europe to restore the temporal power of the Pope. The Ultramontane press throughout Europe hail the act of Marshal MacMahon as a victory of the religious party and a return to the politique clericale. The leading members of the extreme Roman Catholic faction in France openly express their exultation. The Journal des Débats, which has represented so long and so ably the cause of moderate constitutional government and of reasonable religion, confesses that the clerical party now governs France. The German press—official and non-official—have received the deposition of the Ministry, and will receive the dissolution of the Assembly, as the triumph of Ultramontanism. The Berlin National Zeitung quotes Dr. Manning in a recent address to the Catholics, in words to the effect that "the victory of the conservative party in France and the solution of the Eastern question will mean the independence of the Holy See." How, asks the German organ, is the independence of the Holy See or the restoration of the temporal power of the Pope to be obtained but by a war with Italy? And how is a war with Italy to be carried on but by France? And how is Russia to be defeated in the Eastern question but by a holy alliance against her of the Catholic powers?

Even the Pope has avowed his sympathy with "the party of order" in France, and has openly prophesied to the Polish pilgrims the defeat of the Muscovites and the possibility of the restoration of the Polish nationality and kingdom. The whole German press regard the recent events in France as full of danger and threat to the peace of Europe.

The present condition of affairs in France and throughout Europe is undoubtedly perilous in the extreme, and one from which great disorders and even war might possibly spring. The Republicans and the moderate Constitutionalists of France should have the profound sympathy of lovers of liberty in every country. With great self-control and much care, they had built up an orderly and constitutional form of government, under which a sound constitutional habit of self-government would have gradually developed itself. They only needed time and experience to have founded whatever best suited the temperament of the French,—a monarchy with a parliament or a republic. Everything seemed to favor a calm and peaceful growth of free institutions. Suddenly the clerical party took advantage of the prejudices of an honest but obstinate old man, and plunged the country into what may produce anarchy or revolution. All the Legitimist and Bonapartist factions are now united against the Republicans. Free speech and free press are at once fettered. The servants of the administration are employed to force or deceive the people. The whole question of the government of the nation is to be thrown back on the country, and no man can say what the end will be. It certainly looks as if the excellent progress begun was to end in disorder and tyranny. The triumph of the party of repression and of clerical bigotry seems for the time being complete. Yet, with all these appearances of the coming victory of Ultramontanism, we hold to the opinion so often expressed in these columns, that the day has passed for any great triumph of the Roman Catholic Curia, whether in Europe or America.

The world has passed by the Roman Church as a great controlling power. Her history is too well known to all reasonable men. No large party could be formed now throughout Europe to make any great sacrifice for her. No war could possibly be entered upon in her behalf. The day of crusades or holy wars is passed. Italy, her home, rejects her, and France has not bigotry or even religion enough to receive her. The moral danger of Europe now is from indifference and scepticism, not from the triumph of bigotry and superstition. It is true that in the present state of affairs in Europe any alliances and combinations are possible. War brings strange bed-fellows together. Necessity might even put Catholic France on the side of Mohammedan Turkey against Italy and Germany. But there is little danger of this. The French peasantry care little for the Pope, compared to peace. And even if the Marshal becomes Dictator, he is the last to desire a war with modern ideas and the strongest forces of Europe. Even under a new coup d'état France will be peaceful, and the temporal power of the Pope will remain a relic of the Middle Ages.—N. Y. Times.

THE REV. DR. RITCHIE, of Edinburgh, though a very clever man, has met with his match. When examining a student as to the classes he had attended, he said, "And you attended the class for mathematics?"

"Yes."

"How many sides has a circle?"

"Two," said the student.

"What are they?"

What a laugh in the class the student's answer produced when he said, "An inside and an outside!" But this was nothing compared with what followed. The doctor having said to this student, "And you attended the moral philosophy class also?"

"Yes."

"Well, you would hear lectures on various subjects. Did you ever hear one on 'cause and effect?'"

"Yes."

"Does an effect ever go before a cause?"

"Yes."

"Give me an instance."

"A man wheeling a barrow."

The doctor then sat down, and proposed no more questions.

A MOTHER tried hard to teach her child the impersonality and omnipresence of God. How well she succeeded was shown by an incident which occurred just after. The little girl had the promise of an orange, half of it at the time and the other half when she had taken her daily nap. She twisted herself about and closed her eyes, but the prospective orange circumvented sleep. At last she cried, "Mother."

"Yes, my dear."

"Is God in you?"

"Yes, dear."

"And in me?"

"Certainly; my child!"

"And is He in the orange, too?"

"Of course He is!"

"Well, the God in me wants some orange!"

PRESIDENT ELIOT of Harvard says that, contrary to the usual course of Nature, he is growing younger instead of older as years advance. About twenty years ago, when he was a tutor and proctor, he was disturbed one night by a noise in the yard, and, going out to see what was the matter, he heard a voice exclaim, "Here comes old Eliot." But last winter, walking into town one evening, he met two undergraduates, and heard one say to the other when he had passed by, "I wonder where Charlie is going at this time of night."

THE superiority of man to Nature is continually illustrated in literature and in life. Nature needs an immense quantity of quills to make a goose with; but man can make a goose of himself in five minutes with one quill.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WITHIN THE FOLD.

The study-door was open wide,
And on the table by his side
The preacher's open Bible lay;
And on that book a work of skill,
His sermon—text, "The sun stood still"—
From out the book of Joshua.

Glad that his weekly task was done,
He sat and thought that he had spun
A mighty web of truth that day.

A shadow falling on the floor
Made him look up, and at the door
Stood Sarah Blink in dress of gray.

"Come in," the preacher kindly said;
And in she came with nipping tread,
Quite glad the summons to obey.

"I hoped that I should find you here,"
Said she; "but now I almost fear
To tell you what I have to say."

"You need not speak, for I can guess
The state of mind you would confess;
My sermon here will light your way."

And then he said, "Both far and near
Hold doubt asserts in accents clear
That Scripture's claims it will survey."

"And in our own beloved church
This self-same doubt is making search;
So here against it I inveigh."

His sermon he began to read;
It told how Israel's chosen seed
From cruel Egypt fled away,

And how the Lord made dry the bed
Of the Red Sea, and through it led
Those Hebrews to a brighter day.

How through the trials of that race,
Wonders adapted to each case
Were wrought, which none could e'er gainsay.

And that for God, who wrought them all,
It was a matter very small
To stop the sun at broad noon-day.

And they who doubt that act divine
Square all things by their little line
Of reason, and are far astray.

Such was the sermon; and Miss Blink
Then said, "Dear friend, you mustn't think
That I the faith seek to betray!"

"All that you've said is strictly true,
But yet there is no need that you
Such arguments at all display.

"For read your text, 'The sun stood still.'
Can any but a stubborn will Deny the fact those words convey?"

"My trouble is not baneful doubt,
'Tis not what's in; but what's left out;
'Tis what the Scriptures fail to say.

"Problems like these I strive to solve;
Was John the Baptist e'er in love?
Did Ruth or Esther dress in gray?"

"The mother of St. Peter's wife,
What fever threatened her poor life?
The scarlet, typhoid, brain, or hay?"

"Hundreds of questions like these three,
Pressing for answer, made me flee
To you, dear friend, in sore dismay."

"I'm pained to know your state of mind,"
The preacher said; "but you shall find,
In the next sermon I essay,

"Your needed comfort; for I long
To give to them whose faith is strong
All the assistance that I may.

"And soon I'll form a class, whose task
Shall be to thoroughly unmask
Each dim and hidden gospel ray.

"For you have shown how truly vain
Is the attempt to make more plain
My text, to those who look away

"From Scripture and the Church, and turn
To Science, at whose feet they learn
The true salvation to delay.

"So henceforth I shall strive to teach,
Souls that beyond the doubter's reach
Confess the Scripture's holy way."

"Tis well; and now, dear friend, adieu,"
Said Sarah; "may the Lord review
Your labors, and your faith repay."

The study-door was open wide,
And on the table by his side
The preacher's open Bible lay.

W. H. H.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 21.

W. F. Johnson, $3.20; G. Putzel, 10 cents; Dr. Aug. Huhn, $3.20; George Allen, $4; Mrs. E. Martin, $1.55; Dr. H. Nye, $1.30; T. Webb, $3.20; H. I. Carpenter, 7 cents; A. W. Harbaugh, 10; Mrs. H. S. Ware, $3.20; D. E. Ware, $3.20; A. Williams & Co., $6.72; Miss S. E. Dunn, $1; Miss Von Armin, 75 cents; Samuel Drew, $3.20; Henry Obermeyer, $3.20; W. T. Newton, $3.20; E. Howland, $5; W. C. McDonald, 80 cents; C. D. Child, $3.20; W. G. Mills, 25 cents; John Alexander, $5.60; S. M. Carroll, 10 cents; C. W. Boulware, $1; E. R. Potter, $3; E. A. Hodson, $2.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 26, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLKED Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
 OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, Editorial Contributors.

A BANGOR paper says: "The London Circus went from here to Farmington, arriving there on Sunday, and church-goers were much disturbed. One clergyman requested any of the members of his church who intended to go to the show next day, to call on him and get a dismissal first." The circus company ought to be fined for disturbing worshippers in their worship, and the clergyman ought to be crowned with a cap-and-bells for his bigotry and petulance.

"DOCTOR" —, says a correspondent, "in a city not fifty miles from Boston, advertises himself as a 'Christian Scientist,' and adds, after the announcement of his office hours—'No Medicine, Mediumship, or Mesmerism.'" If the last is true, he is no Christian; for Christianity offers medicine for diseased souls in "divine grace," a mediator or medium in "Jesus Christ," and mesmerism in "instantaneous conversion." This dubious Doctor ought to learn his own trade better, if he would not pass for a quack.

THE JUDICIAL OATH is rapidly coming to be a patent absurdity. Says the Tribune: "Judge Brown of Baltimore has decided that John Chinaman can testify in the courts. He held that the State Constitution in requiring that a witness should believe in the existence of a God, and admit his moral accountability for his acts, did not exclude witnesses who believed in a Supreme Being that worked in and through Nature, though they might not have faith in the God of the Christians. He added that there was no reason to suppose that the Chinese believed that there was no God, and that they were not accountable for their acts either in this world or the next. He therefore concluded to allow a couple of Chinese laundrymen to testify against a man who had assaulted them. This seems to be a roundabout way of establishing John's competency as a witness. The Chinese god only hears what is said in his presence, and an oath administered outside of a joss-house will not bind the consciences of these peculiar pagans. Chinese testimony is admitted in the consular courts of China, in California, in New York, and many other States, but no importance is attached to the oath."

IF THE LIBERALS of the United States had vigorously defended their principles last year with reference to the Sunday question at Philadelphia, and not suffered their cause to be lost by default, such paragraphs as this from the Christian Statesman would not be written: "The Board of Managers of the Permanent International Exhibition in Philadelphia recently decided by a unanimous vote to keep the Exhibition closed on the Sabbath. It is no secret to any who have watched the course of the Managers that there was a serious division of opinion on this question, and that the unanimity of the decision, as well as the fact of such a favorable decision at all, is wholly owing to the firmness of a number of Christian men. All honor to them for the renewed victory they have won for the cause of Christianity and good morals. It ought also to be remembered in this connection that, had the decision of the Centennial Commission last year been adverse to the Sabbath, it would have been almost inevitable that the Permanent Exhibition would have followed obediently the evil precedent. Thus one victory paves the way for another. Let the friends of the right thank God and take courage." Yes—and these successive victories of the crafty enemies of State Secularization will at last end in State Christianization, unless the adherents of secular freedom wake up and organize.

IN HIS FOURTH OF JULY oration at Oakland, Cal., Col. Robert G. Ingersoll said: "The school-house is now coming to be the finest house in every village and town in the land. Therefore I thank every Puritan that encouraged education. There are a good many people dissatisfied with the public schools. I think the worst thing that could happen to them would be the introduction into them of the teaching of religion. I do not think it is right to tax people to employ somebody to guess for them. Guessing ought to be free. I don't believe in taxing a Catholic to have a Protestant do his guessing. I don't believe in taxing a Protestant to have a Catholic do his guessing; and I don't believe in taxing the man who believes in neither religion, nor in none, to have any one do his guessing for him. The moment that any religion is taught in the public schools that moment will be the end of education in America. Let them have all the churches they want, all the books and the tracts they want, all the printing they want, and let those who believe in it pay for it and nobody else." Col. Ingersoll speaks as if this "worst thing" had not "happened." Is it possible that he can be ignorant of the fact that religion is taught in almost every public school in the country? Only in a few places, such as Cincinnati and Chicago, is it wholly discontinued. Here in Massachusetts it is positively required by law.

"I AM NOT a fatalist about progress," writes Rear-Admiral Maxse, in his recent little treatise on Woman Suffrage; "indeed, I regard the belief in insensible, inevitable progress—a progress to be attained without human striving—to be as pernicious as any old theological belief that sent men striving on the wrong track. It absolves the majority of men from responsibility. There is surely no law to make us wise. I cannot believe it possible that progress will come to a people that does not make constant effort to be worthy of it. Progress of course means improvement. Individual improvement is, to a great extent, the result of individual effort, but it is affected by external circumstances and institutions. National progress means the improvement of these circumstances and institutions for the general benefit (as for instance by an Education Act or reform of the Land Tenure system), and must be the result of national effort. I look around and do not observe much sign of this. The men who endeavor to initiate national or political effort—politicians being only a means to national effort—are too often ridiculed as theorists or decried as disturbers." Nothing so wise as this has fallen under our notice for many a long day. From lack of these perceptions, or sometimes from dread of the labor and cost of acting upon them, the liberal cause crawls at a snail's pace, or even slips backward. Men wait to be unendurably oppressed and stung to resistance, rather than be at the pains of preventing oppression.

THE Pall Mall Budget of June 30 lashes the Ritualists with a most unstinted liberality, as follows: "The letter which the Times prints from a correspondent signing himself G. M. C. contains a defence of The Priest in Absolution which ought not to be permitted to pass without a prompt and decided rejoinder. We may say of it at once that, if the writer's fundamental assumption could be admitted, his defence of the work in question would be very effective; but, unfortunately for him, the assumption is so far from being admitted by the great mass of Englishmen that they reject it with something like indignation whenever it is definitely put before them. G. M. C.'s argument is briefly this: that priests require the same sort of instruction as to the mode of treating the 'diseases of the soul' as doctors require for dealing with 'diseases of the body'; that The Priest in Absolution is 'one of the most valuable books we priests possess upon the study of the diseases of the soul'; that it is written 'expressly for the edification and instruction of priests, and not for the idle inquisitive gaze of a careless, worldly-minded laity'; and therefore that worldly-minded laymen have no right to be any more shocked by its contents than by those of a work on pathology. All this would be very plausible if we were prepared to concede the claim which tacitly underlies it, which claim is in effect this: that 'we priests'—that is to say, G. M. C. and his party in the Church—'possess, in virtue of our priestly office, a power over diseases of the soul similar in its effects to, but altogether higher and more certain in its mode of operation than, the power possessed by the physician over the diseases of the body.' And that is exactly the pretension which all but a weak-minded minority of G. M. C.'s countrymen regard as at once ridiculous and intolerable. For them the Rev. John Smith, after he has become a 'priest,' remains John (or may be even 'Jack' or 'Johnny') Smith as much as before,—a sensible and modest, or an empty-headed and prurient youth, as the case may be; and the notion that he is converted by his orders into 'Father Smith,' with a vested right to put indecent questions to married and unmarried women and little boys and girls, is one which is not to be borne with for a moment."

"FEELING A TRUTH-DISCOVERER."

Rev. Mr. Putnam, under the above caption, contributes a letter to this issue of THE INDEX which seems to require notice. He objects to the position that "emotion is always a subjective phenomenon which conveys no objective information whatever," and thinks that, if this position is implied by the scientific method, he must be more clearly opposed to the latter than ever as the "sole authority in religion."

1. The first objection he urges is contained in an extract from the Inquirer, where it is laid down that the intellect cannot show slavery to be wrong, and that sentiment alone condemns it; that "so far as the head is concerned, slavery can hold its own," but that "it finds its Waterloo in the heart of man."

In all this there is great confusion. The power of human sympathy is enormous, but it did not alone or chiefly overthrow slavery. If the intellect had not perceived that slavery, as such, is the denial and destruction of right human relations, which can only be understood by the understanding faculty, i. e., the intellect itself,—if the idea of equal natural rights had not, in the process of socio-moral growth, gradually acquired all the force of a supreme moral principle or law, which it could not have done except as the result of thought,—the conscience of mankind would have remained unstirred by all the evils of slavery, and the "heart of man" would never have been enlisted on behalf of its victims. The abolition of slavery has been caused by the general march of civilization, the growing conviction that one man's right to his liberty is as good as another's (a conviction which is the result of comparison, and therefore of a strictly intellectual process), and the increasing perception of the social, political, and economical evils from which slavery in modern times is inseparable. If "heart" alone is enough to discover the wickedness of slavery, why did not Jesus discover it? He certainly had "heart" enough; his religion is mostly made up of "sentiment" and "feeling"; yet he could live all his days in the actual presence of this measureless iniquity without leaving a word of protest against it. If it needs nothing but "heart" to rouse men against the slavery-system, then Jesus, who has always been considered the tenderest and most sympathetic of human beings, must lie under the reproach of utter heartlessness. But if, in order to discover the wickedness of slavery, the world must needs pass through long centuries of experience, education, and slowly maturing faculties,—if the evils of slavery become visible only in the light of an intelligence which civilization alone gradually creates,—then Jesus' insensibility to the wrongs and miseries of the slave is no reproach to him, but merely an inevitable consequence of the social barbarism in the midst of which he lived.

While, therefore, we unhesitatingly admit the necessity of a deep and strong sentiment against slavery, in order to arouse men to the point of abolishing it, we still hold that the true cause of this feeling, and therefore the true origin of the great reform to which it led, lay in the intellectual perception of the moral, social, and political character and effects of the slavery-system.

2. The next point we are asked to consider is a quotation from Hume, who disparages "that philosophy which ascribes the discernment of all moral distinctions to reason alone without the concurrence of sentiment." Mr. Putnam has found an able and distinguished coadjutor. But great names, merely as such, count for little with independent minds. "Discernment" is the perception of differences or characteristics; and to claim perception of any sort as a function of "sentiment" is an extraordinary slip for a writer usually so acute as Hume. "Moral distinctions" cannot excite any "sentiment" whatever, until they have first been "discerned," or perceived, by the intellectual faculties or "reason." On the face of it, the statement of Hume betrays a carelessness and inexactitude of thought quite surprising in one of his great ability.

But take Hume's own illustration. "Examine the crime of ingratitude, for instance," he says, "which has place wherever we observe good-will expressed and known, together with good offices performed, on one side, and a return of ill-will or indifference with ill offices or neglect, on the other. Anatomize all these circumstances, and examine by your reason alone in what consists the demerit or blame; you will never come to any issue or conclusion."

Let us see. In the first place, ingratitude as such is simply the absence of gratitude; properly speaking, it is not a "crime," which is an act and not a feeling, but rather a lack of those sentiments which ought to be reciprocally excited by kind sentiments and acts on the part of another. It is justly condemned by the moral judgment of mankind, because it manifests total insensibility to that law of reciprocity which is well expressed in the adage, "One good turn deserves another." Ingratitude is immoral because it is failure to pay a just debt—disregard of the obligation imposed by the voluntary acceptance of kindnesses; and mankind condemn it precisely as they condemn any other omission to discharge a manifest duty. This being so, the essence of ingratitude lies in the false, unnatural, and undesired relation between the benefactor and the beneficiary; everybody condemns the latter because he does not reciprocate, in feeling and act, the goodness he has experienced at the hands of the former. Now this relation of non-reciprocity, like every other relation, must be perceived, before it can excite any moral sentiment whatever. But the perception of relations is the distinctive function of the intellect or understanding. Hence it follows that the "demerit or blame" of ingratitude consists in the substitution by the ingrate of a wrong relation for the right one which he ought to hold towards his benefactor. Hume's loose statement shows that he has not applied to this case his usual critical acumen and power of analysis; he was evidently very sleepy when he wrote the passage Mr. Putnam quotes, and must be excused on the well-known principle that "even Homer sometimes nods." In every conceivable instance, it will be found that accurate analysis must trace all moral perceptions to the intellect, not to the heart; and that emotion, feeling, or sentiment is simply a subjective consequence attendant on these perceptions,—a subjective reaction to the outer or objective fact, but not a perception of it.

We have preferred to answer Hume's own statement, rather than Mr. Putnam's paraphrase of it, because the latter introduces more than Hume himself warrants. Of course we hold that a man, in order to be a moral being at all, must possess the power of moral perception; we admit that this power deals with relations of a special kind, but hold that the perception of all relations, no matter what their kind, is essentially an intellectual act, and never in any instance the act of mere sentiment. "The Moral Sentiment must declare that he is to blame," says Mr. Putnam. Not so. The moral sentiment cannot "declare" anything; it can only feel. That which "declares" (i. e., frames a definite proposition) is necessarily the faculty which conjoins subject and predicate; and no faculty but the intellect has power to do this, its own distinctive act. The proposition, "Ingratitude is wrong," is like every other; it simply enunciates or formulates a perceived relation; it is the affirmation of an objective truth; but it is the work of the intellect alone, not of the heart, which (to repeat a truism ad nauseam) can feel, but never think. It is the intellect, not the heart, which thinks; and why there should be so much repugnance to admitting a self-evident truth, it is difficult to understand. Until it can be shown that mere feeling constructs propositions with subject and predicate which formulate relations among existing facts, our position will remain impregnable: namely, that moral perception is the only avenue of objective information as to moral relations, that moral relations can be perceived and affirmed by the intellect alone, and that moral sentiment is simply the subjective reaction consequent upon moral perception. In other words, ethics are the science of moral relations, subject to the stable scientific method, and not dependent upon the endless and unaccountable freaks of shifting human emotions.

THE MYSTIC PIETY OF THE ORIENT.

One among the benign results which are sure to come from the free, thorough, and impartial study of religion in the large, will be the recognition, such as has never been made before, of elements of value, in some instances very rare and imperishable value, in faiths other and foreign to our own. Bacon said of Aristotle that, "after the manner of the Ottomans, he thought he could not safely reign unless he made away with all his brethren." So has it been with Christianity. In its insistence for itself of sole and exclusive claim, it has closed the eyes of its followers to whatever of merit and true beauty there might be in other religions, and so has done a grievous, a deep, and irreparable injustice to those religions. And this injury has reacted powerfully upon itself.

As religion is seen, now almost for the first time distinctly and clearly in history, to be in its elements a thing native to the human soul, not planted there by any communication from without, natural and normal, not exceptional or miraculous, a great change comes to the mind that reads. We have focal adjustment in the glass never before attained; things come into clear outline and pronounced character where before all was dimness and confusion. New light-points spring up in what had been only darkness, and we wonder at the spectacles of beauty never hitherto seen or even suspected. A great study is opened, one that must be prosecuted with interest and enlarging profit doubtless for ages to come.

I think there may be no fact in the Eastern world of more significance for the student of history than the appearance of the Sufi mystics. They are quite numerous still in the East, but little known as yet to us in the West. Sufism seems to have come, as much else has that is best in religious history, from a cross, cross of Mohammedanism in its best elements, by the poetic imagination and mystic piety of India. We find it first about one hundred years after the death of Mohammed, and it seems to have flourished greatly in the subsequent centuries, particularly the thirteenth, fourteenth, etc. Dschelaleddin Rumi (died 1282) is their great poet; but Rubia, eighth century, Ferideddin Attar, thirteenth century, and Dschami, fifteenth century, are names of high eminence in their calendar.

We find in these saints a clear recognition of the transcendence and utter incommunicability in speech of the spiritual, as also deep sense of its immanence, we may say its overshadowing sole presence and power. There are no loftier, more luscious strains anywhere than they employ in celebrating the loves and the satisfaction of the soul, its deep bathing and perfect exhilaration and ecstasy in the One, the object of its inmost uttermost longing and aspiration. All the vocabulary of affection, of passion, is exhausted in the language of these rapturous bards. They read, too, the symbolism, see eternity in time, the radiance of the everlasting in the forms and procession of the seen. Thus there is in all the ecstasy and boundless leap of their thought a sobriety, sanity, and poise, that we miss quite frequently in the utterances of the Indian mystics.

"These words," says Asiel, "although apprehended by the ear, are nevertheless addressed to the inner sense; for since the spiritual world is infinite, how can it be that its realities can be stated in speech? A certain similitude or hint, however small, is given in speech; but beware that you ask not more of this, since those things can never in any adequate or complete way be conveyed in language."

"This universe," says Dschelaleddin, "is a drop from the ocean of his beauty, unable from its fulness to be contained in that bosom."

"The beauty of woman," says Sururl, one of the commentators, "is a ray, not of the object we are drawn to love, but of God. The mystic looks upon the face of the supreme beauty in the manifestation of every individual nature, and loves, since he sees in this beauty the revelation of the glories of the divine name."

As religion is the attestation in the human soul of this supreme presence and the inner communing of the spirit with that same, all the special forms of faith become comparatively indifferent; they are partial, at best proximate and temporary, or, as Buddha expressed it, "mere raft to carry over the treasure." They are essays, and stand comparatively taken on the same plane. "As water from the glasses," says Dschelaleddin, "is all poured into one vessel, so all the praises are mingled together. Since he that is celebrated is wholly one, all religions form but one religion." One of his English critics lately has ascribed a like expression (we do not now remember to have seen it in his writings) to Mr. Emerson, that all religions are "the same wine poured into different glasses." "All men," says Hafiz, "seek their beloved, and all the world is love's dwelling; why talk of a mosque or a church?"

I have only room left here to give a brief extract showing their thought of prayer, its nature and the answer for it. Might not such a conception be safely and perhaps usefully imported into our Christianity of to-day? This which we give is by Dschelaleddin, taken from Tholuck's Anthology of Oriental Mysticism. I use Mr. Alger's translation from the German, as it is far better than I could furnish:—

"Allah!" was all night long the cry of one oppressed with care,
Till softened was his heart, and sweet became his lips with prayer;
Then near the subtle tempter stole, and spake: "Fond babblers, cease,
For not one 'Here am I' has God e'er sent to give thee peace."

With sorrow sank the suppliant's soul, and all his senses fled.

But lo! at midnight, the good angel Chiser, came and said:

"What ails thee now, my child, and why art thou afraid to pray?"

And why thy former love dost thou repent? Declare and say."

"Ah!" cries he, "never once spake God to me, 'Here am I,' son;

Cast off, methinks I am, and warned far from his gracious throne."

To whom the angel answered: "Hear the word from God I bear:

'Go tell,' he said, 'yon mourner, sunk in sorrow and despair,

Each 'Lord appear' thy lips pronounces, contains my 'Here am I';

A special messenger I send beneath thine every sigh;

Thy love is but a girdle of the love I bear to thee,

And sleeping in thy 'Come, O Lord!' thus lies 'Here, son,' from me."

C. D. B. M.

NON-SECTARIAN SCHOOLS.

It may be safely assumed that a large majority of the American people would say that they are in favor of non-sectarian public schools. And yet it must be doubted whether a majority of these same people, if more closely questioned as to what they mean by non-sectarian schools, would not answer in a way that would indicate that they have no idea what absolute non-sectarianism means, but have in mind a kind of school not indeed supported by any one sect or in the interest of any one sect, but in which, nevertheless, their own religious tenets are to some extent distinctly maintained and inculcated. The Boston Journal, in some recent remarks on the action of the Roman Catholics towards the public schools in New Rochelle, New York, very accurately represents the attitude of this large class of citizens.

The circumstances of this case were (according to the Journal's statement), that the schools were opened, as most of our public schools are, with reading of selections from the Bible and repetition of the "Lord's Prayer." From this exercise Catholic children, however, had been excused if their parents requested it, and were allowed to enter the school at a later hour. As most of the parents did request it, the schools became disturbed by so large a number of children coming in after the opening, and the new rule was adopted that the Catholic children should assemble at the usual hour in a separate room and wait there during the religious exercises in the general room. Whereupon the Catholic parents petitioned the Board of Education that their own version of the Bible should be substituted for the King James translation (probably for use of their own children only), and a Catholic teacher be employed to read it. This would seem to be putting things on the ground of equality and fairness, provided religious exercises were to be permitted in the schools at all.

But the Journal evidently does not see the case in this light. With great naïveté it says that the religious exercises authorized in the schools—the reading of the Bible and the "Lord's Prayer"—were "in no sense sectarian," and that the Catholic opposition is only a part of a bold and determined plan to break up and destroy "the non-sectarian public school system, so highly prized by Americans." And this is the exact position of a very large portion of the people of the United States. They see nothing sectarian in reciting the "Lord's Prayer" and in reading the Bible as a special religious exercise in the schools!

The people who take this position are Protestants—mostly Evangelical Protestants. And as between different sects of Evangelical Protestants, there may be nothing specially sectarian in such an exercise. But as between the great body of the Protestant sects and the Roman Catholics, such an exercise has always been regarded by Catholics as a distinctive mark of Protestant worship, and hence is sectarian from the point of view—that of the free State—which takes in both divisions of Christendom.

And from the same comprehensive point of view the exercise is also sectarian, of course, for other reasons. Why is the Bible read in this formal way in school except as a book of special religious authority? Why is the "Lord's Prayer" repeated except on the ground of the belief that Jesus was a teacher of religion specially commissioned by divine authority? To all those, then—and they make no inconsiderable portion of the American people,—who do not and cannot accept the Bible or Jesus as occupying any exceptional position of authority in religious history, this exercise, with which our public schools are generally opened, is sectarian and stamps the schools as sectarian. It is an exercise that helps strongly to uphold certain religious opinions—opinions concerning Jesus and the Bible—which may be dear to the majority of American citizens, but which are in direct opposition to beliefs of a large minority quite as sincerely held and as warmly cherished.

Why should a Jewish child be expected to join, even by passive silence, in a religious exercise from the New Testament, which, according to his faith, is not an authoritative religious book? Or why should a child who is taught by his parents at home the rationalistic view of religious history, by which Jesus and the Hebrew and Christian Scriptures are put, as natural productions, into the same company with other eminent religious books and teachers, be expected at school to pay even indirect homage to Jesus and the Bible by a religious exercise founded upon the prevailing belief of Christendom concerning them? It is clear that a large body of the American people need to be educated to a more correct definition of sectarianism—to a definition that will respect others' rights of belief as well as their own.—and that our schools will not become "non-sectarian" until all religious exercises as such are removed from them.

W. J. P.

Communications.

FEELING A TRUTH-DISCOVERER.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

In your letter to Mr. Chadwick, you say that "emotion is always a subjective phenomenon, which conveys no objective information." This statement is so utterly opposed to my own ideas that I feel as if I must say a word and ask if you really mean it. If this is a part of your "scientific method," then I am still more clearly opposed to it than ever as a sole authority in religion; for, if there is no "objective information" in the feeling, then it seems to me that both God and virtue are subjective beliefs altogether. Please consider candidly these few thoughts I offer.

In the first place, I would call your attention to an extract from an article in the Inquirer:—

"Take the question of slavery. Has any purely intellectual process ever demonstrated that it is wrong? The sentiment against it has not been founded upon reason, but the reason upon the sentiment. Calhoun has not been answered by mere logic; he has not been argued down, but crushed by the gentilities of advanced humanity. If one has a heart of stone, we can't prove to him that slavery is wrong. He must have feeling, emotion, in order to give reason something to work upon, and this feeling is the ultimate tribunal that gives the decisive condemnation. So far as the head is concerned, slavery can hold its own. It finds its Waterloo in the heart of man."

Let me now give you an extract from Hume to the same effect:—

"It is easy for a false hypothesis to maintain some appearance of truth while it keeps wholly in general, makes use of undefined terms, and employs comparisons instead of instances. This is particularly remarkable in that philosophy which ascribes the discernment of all moral distinctions to reason alone without the concurrence of sentiment. It is impossible that in any particular instance this hypothesis can so much as be rendered intelligible. Examine the crime of ingratitude, for instance, which has place wherever we observe good-will expressed and known, together with good offices performed, on one side, and a return of ill-will or indifference with ill offices or neglect, on the other. Anatomize all these circumstances and examine by your reason alone in what consists the merit or blame; you will never come to any issue or conclusion." Hume's position is this: that the intellect can only judge of matter of fact and relation; that in regard to the crime of ingratitude all it can do is show that certain facts and relations constitute ingratitude; but that these facts and relations are worthy of blame, that is, that they constitute a wrong, is the declaration not of reason, but of sentiment. He affirms that "morality is determined by sentiment," taking (as I understand it) the position of Mr. Chadwick, and in opposition to your own. It does seem to me that this position is incontrovertible. If a man affirms that a certain line of conduct is right, you prove by the intellect that his conduct comes under the term ingratitude. If he has the feeling of a man, he will submit. But if he has not the feeling of a man, but plumply admits that his conduct is ingratitude, and that ingratitude is not wrong, how can you convince him of error? Reason is exhausted in showing that he is ungrateful, but if he says, "I've a right to be ungrateful," reason has nothing more to say. The Moral Sentiment must declare that he is to blame.

Is not this proposition, "Ingratitude is wrong," an objective truth? Is it a mere "subjective phenomenon?" But our total source of information in regard to this proposition is, according to Hume, the moral sentiment. Does not the moral sentiment, therefore, give "objective information?" If this was simply my own individual conviction, I might yield, thinking that I was mistaken; but when I am fortified in this position by so keen and clear a thinker as Hume, one of the great champions of the rights of the intellect, as untrammelled by custom or prejudice as yourself, then I think I must be right, for it is not faith, but experience, that demonstrates what I affirm. I do not say that feeling is infallible, any more than the senses are infallible; but as the senses do give us truth, though we must sift their testimony, so I say the sentiments give us truth, though we must also sift their testimony. It is the office of the intellect to sift the testimony of both, but the intellect goes too far when it rejects the senses altogether as giving any objective information; so I say it goes too far when it rejects the sentiments as giving no objective information whatsoever. Human feeling is a truth-discoverer. It does come in contact with the outward universe, and conveys to the mind of man impressions of a reality outside of that mind. I am willing to submit my sentiments to the intellect (for a full and thorough analysis; but I am not willing that the intellect should throw them aside as mere "subjective phenomena." In the light of feeling there is a Revelation of God, of humanity, of Virtue, transcending what the intellect can give of its own motion. Without this light I could not traverse the paths of existence with any hope or courage. It is what comes into my heart, and flashes from it in joy and power, that fills the universe with its noblest and sweetest meanings.

But remember what I offer is not the outcome of my own passionate longing, but the perception of a hard-headed, unpoetic thinker like Hume. Perhaps I am a "Sentimentalist," but how will you answer Hume? Truly yours, S. P. PUTNAM.

NORTHFIELD, Mass.

THE CYNIC.

Cave canem. I am he. An honest hostile note is good to clear the air. If I have imbibed a spirit of hostility to the way of the world, it is perhaps my misfortune more than my fault. I have had grief enough to kill an acre of Canada thistles. If it had happened to have a softening instead of a hardening effect, I suppose things would have been better with me,—or at least different.

It is said to be policy to fall in with the popular current; but there must be an opposition party, and I constitute that party. I prefer to be on the unpopular side; the defeated, the wrong side. What is the right side? In purely mathematical questions, there is, I suppose, little difference of opinion; but everywhere else right means that which is backed by the largest count of noses, the strongest battalions, the biggest pile of dollars. But, you say, numerical superiority does not justify wrong; you claim the superior accuracy of the private judgment; right is right although under the ban of the whole world and upheld by only a single voice. Very well; I agree with you. I am willing to admit that perhaps I am right and the world is wrong.

Among all the creeds, parties, churches, and cliques with which the world is filled, I find no resting-place. My faculty of dissent is inexhaustible. To be one of a lot,—smooth submissive rogues confederated for mutual admiration, and to gain power over outsiders, and to give to their performances the justification of numbers? Not I; it is my fate to be a lone man. How reconcile magnanimity with success, courage with conformity? The more voices say "Ay," the more must I say "No," to keep the balance. It is a sphere on which we dwell; why all huddle to one side of it? I am devoted (without choice on my part) to the cause of the weak, the unsuccessful, the imperfect,—and the evil? What is evil? Poor despoiled wrong side of things, I will take up for you every time.

What is conservatism? Iron tension of a claw at the throat of the prey. Radicalism? Rebellion crowding for room to live; not merely for the necessities of physical existence—the contented thrall is surest of them,—but the freedom of movement and expression which the best men most value.

What is law? The sagging weight of mediocrity, the pitiless imbecile average social drift that hangs its Christs and Cartouches on the same gibbet. Government is the combination of the successful, the low flung devotees of gross material self-aggrandizement; law is the expression of their will. This stubborn inert Philistine viscosity holds the pudding together, and exhibits a strong tendency to collect around the plums. Law is the rules of the game of life, made by and for the winners.

It is they who can give rules to the game and enforce them,—would you expect the losers to control the game? Law is based on power; any pretence of deriving it from anything else is insulting hypocrisy. Law is always an interested opinion, never a candid speculative opinion. It is the conspiracy of the winners,—an artificial advantage with which they, insatiable, seek to enhance their natural advantage.

What is Christianity? A degeneration? A narrowing from free universal speculative thought to something smaller and more practical? Christianity is the prudent dweller in a snug little house; Paganism, the Nature-inspired wanderer under the wide firmament. Paganism, behind its husks, was the love of Nature, the involuntary worship of visible beautiful existence; Christianity is the real idolatry,—it worships the system it has constructed, the salvation-scheme of which it claims sole proprietorship; while the healthy heathen feels in himself no need of salvation,—he is saved from the start. Christianity (not Christ's kind but the available popular kind) worships logic rather than cosmic truth; always worships something artificial and man-shaped. Paganism always has been the cultus of genius; Christianity, or any systematic, logical, moral religion, the choice of the small, the prudent, the timid sycophants of fortune. Christ was not a Christian, and although saturated by inheritance and education with the ethical bias, was yet too universal a soul to allow it to eclipse all other truth to him; his struggles were toward the sunlight, away from the lamplight. Were he to live again to-day he would be thought a horrible irreligionist by Orthodox Christians, precisely as he was by Orthodox Jewry.

What is God?—this something invoked in justification of all sorts of deeds, this wall against which sanctimony backs itself? Cause personified; philosophical necessity of unphilosophical minds; grand labor-saving hypothesis; a taking hold of things by the wrong end, the end farthest from us; how clumsy and how natural! What is God? Mordant to the kaleidoscopic imagination of the people; desperate effort of confused dismayed ignorance to anchor itself. For practical purposes God is the Cerberus that guards the bourgeois Elysium. What is the Devil? The wrong side of God; the negative pole of theism; the hostile element in Nature. The Devil is equally worshipped with the God; God is pompously propitiated in the cathedral; Devil is feared and respected in the heart. To God they give faith, but to the Devil, works. Devil-worship has also its public shrines; they who bow lowest to him on 'Change shall not miss their reward—and punishment. How reassuring, how certifying to us of the universal unity, to know that the Church is built with stolen money pilated from labor in the labyrinthine chicanery of business. It is mercantile success,—the legal larcenous appropriation of more than equitable pay for the work of effecting exchanges, that has built the churches in every land. The trader gets possession of his over-wage by the grace of the Devil; but, feeling some secret misgivings, he repairs to the Church, and there by the grace of God he obtains a perfect title to his spoils.

The enlightened mind conceives in Nature neither favor nor opposition to man, but necessity; an impartial order, to be understood and made use of. A free man worships no God, fears no Devil. An honest man's code is the same in temple or marketplace,—the consequence of which is that there is little show for him in either place.

What is holiness? Childish attempt to grasp the sweet and avoid the bitter? Inordinate desire for happiness? Aspirants after the beauty of holiness make of their personal righteousness (with which they hope to secure eternal felicity) a grim idol to which every other consideration is sacrificed. The devout is the supremely selfish who hesitates not to make everything—the miseries of humanity, the misfortunes, errors, and sufferings of himself and his friends (especially his friends)—useful material in building up a preconceived style of character (or at least reputation) such as will give him an indisputable claim to an eternity of exclusive enjoyment. He waives the immediate necessities of healthful life in the interests of an imaginary future.

What is virtue? Brilliant profession, or obscure practice? Is it at all compatible with what the world calls success? The average social canons, estimating everything in that indiscriminate quantitative way we know so well, are simply revolting. The loftiest and the lowest natures seem about alike liable to fall under the social condemnation. Society has no mercy for extremism; will destroy it if possible; but if it cannot, will fall down and worship it.

Many have dreamed of a new age when moral quality should no longer be estimated all of repute, or of the overt act, but of the interior spirit,—when man might spurn the barriers which were necessary to fence the beast. But the golden age comes slowly; nowhere yet have we seen a whole man in happy harmony with a whole socialism.

Thus far snarleth the cynic—yes, farther, even ad nauseam. Who is he? No one in particular; a little of everybody,—of all those who have felt the gauzy pinions of their youthful enthusiasms collapse helplessly in the heavy atmosphere of real life.

G. E. T.

THE JESUITS vs. SECRETARY THOMPSON.

The Jesuits are about as much in keeping with modern society as the priests of the ancient Egyptian goddess, Isis, or the "Phrygian Mother," Cybele, would be. Three or four generations ago they were suppressed as a social nuisance. Since their revival by Pius VII., in 1815, they have been making hay while the sun of reaction shines. They evidently think themselves a terrible set of fellows,—mysterious, subtle, and sly, like J. Bagstock. And yet the history of their order, even in its palmy days, shows that in the long-run they have always brought themselves to grief by a lack of that very worldly wisdom which they are commonly reputed to possess in such large measure. Founded by a romantic Spanish lunatic and knight, Ignatius Loyola, who in the tedious hours of convalescence from a wound, had ecstatic visions and Platonic intercourse with the Virgin Mary, who has ever since been the patron goddess of the Jesuits and their sole object of worship, they arose contemporaneously with Luther and the great Reformation in the Teutonic world. In fact the Latin fanatic Loyola, set himself regularly to work to bring the Reformation to naught. Hume says in his History of England, in describing the machinations and plots of the Jesuits against Queen Elizabeth, whom they hated as venomously as they hate Bismarck now, that the order, which was then new, was specially devoted to teaching the young, not because it was friendly to the diffusion of knowledge, but, the dissemination of knowledge among the people being no longer preventable in the progress of society, the Jesuits took upon themselves the office of perverting it and dragging it so that it might not destroy superstition. So says Hume. The prominent American who just now enjoys the honor of Jesuit hostility above any other is Secretary Thompson of the Navy Department, who has written a book which undertakes to demonstrate that a Catholic priest cannot be a good citizen of the republic, and that the Catholic Church is in all respects un-American and anti-American, a menace and a peril to democratic institutions. We have just glanced through the book in question, and should judge from a mere cursory look at its contents that, while Secretary Thompson is full of information about his subject, he lacks the skill of a ready writer. His style is somewhat watery and diffuse, but he has gathered all the facts, so that the average reader will, after a perusal of his book, find himself in possession of a large fund of knowledge, in regard to Romanism. The Jesuits have advertised the book by their attacks on the author, so that it must find, sooner or later, an immense sale. For aught we know, it may come to bear the same relation to some near-at-hand encounter between Romanism and Americanism, which Helper's famous Irrepressible Conflict bore to the struggle between freedom and slavery. In their replies to Secretary Thompson, the gentlemen who write S. J. after their names affirm that they love American institutions, popular freedom, and freedom of all kinds, with a most ardent affection; and that the ultimate triumph of Romanism and Jesuitism in the United States, which they say is only a question of time, will show how fond of popular liberty they and their Church are. But how does it happen that the Jesuits and the Roman Church are such deadly foes of liberty in all European countries, and so friendly to it in the United States? Will Father Weninger rise and explain? In France just now, whose administration is under Jesuit control, editors are fined and imprisoned for discussing public men and measures, so that there is no freedom of the press there. A parliamentary majority is overridden and dispersed by a president who was the mere creature originally of the Corps Législatif; and MacMahon is substantially an absolute dictator doing his pleasure without regard to the will of a majority of the French electors. This is the kind of treatment which popular sovereignty receives at the hands of Jesuits in France. Why should it be dearer to them in the United States? An explanation is in order just here.

The Jesuits are a very sanguine lot of gentlemen. For long years they gave out that they were sure ultimately of capturing the great Empire of Russia. But unfortunately for them Russia has ceased to tolerate them and their Church. Doubtless it would be a fine thing for them to get control of a great, growing, modern community like Russia or this country; but the prospect of their doing so is not good. They are everywhere great intermeddlers in politics. One of their political maxims is that "through anarchy comes hierarchy," or the rule of priests. Some of their organs have announced that Secretary Thompson is to be removed from the Cabinet because he has offended their order. We opine not.

The Republican party is so far an American party that it has always found the Jesuits its foes; and its leaders are not likely to consult their wishes. The Jesuits may make Secretary Thompson President of the United States, if they keep up their attacks on him.

AMERICUS.

THE VEXED QUESTION.

DEAR INDEX:—

In the course of your late plucky and persistent warfare on the grounds of science and mystery, I have gathered, in my obscure corner among the eager spectators, steadily heightened estimates of its significance and value. Regretful impressions, of necessity, followed any sallies that were tinged with personal bitterness; but the cheering dominance of noble feeling among the wranglers easily throws that shadow into the background. I have often, in the past, arisen from the perusal of discussions on these topics, apparently so evasive and intangible, with an involuntary ejaculation of the elegant phrase, "Tweedledum and tweedledee!" Whether or not the obscurity lay in my own obtuseness, it seems now as if the contestants were picking up more available tools, with probability of making shorter work in deciding if the shield be gold or silver, or both. At all events, I am constrained to say,—blessed be agitation!

Through all the pros and cons of your sturdy editor and his assailants, I can never escape the conviction that they invest him in their judgment with attributes that are foreign to his nature and position. The clang of his armor is interpreted as the resonance of a warrior all brazen to the core, in whom there can be no thought of mercy or loving kindness.

His inexorable logic is supposed to man the forges for a cast-iron universe, belted with tried steel. But to his adherents the scintillations of that mental armor seem entirely compatible with the pulsations of a genuine human heart. To them his untiring struggles have for their aim the establishment in the convictions of mankind of the conditions essential for abiding love and peace.

For one, I fall to see how the pursuit of absolute truth can oppose any obstacle to what is held by common acceptance to be an upright and sympathetic life among men. If it should be shown by successful investigation that the grand motive power in this complicated environment of our consciousness is more diffusive than we had learned to believe; that the continuance of that consciousness yields to inevitable change; and that certain courses of conduct traditionally held to be just will not stand the test of scientific scrutiny, how can it cause a hair's breadth of swerving in loyalty to best results by evident proofs? To me it seems wholly possible, nay, certain, that the limitless depths of mystery are threaded by equally endless lines of rigorous law, strictly akin to those of physical science, narrow and feeble though it be in comparison with the realms unexplored. I regard it as wholly probable that the effort will not be fruitless, if we cast our line and plummet among spiritual treasures by a very similar method to that which yields results so substantial and satisfying in the world of matter. I am not in the least apprehensive, if the recoil from arrest and eager grasp for extended life and new attainment in the individual prove to be heralds of an indefinite future, that truth will fall for the hungry soul. I should be quite willing to take the risk of getting sated in this restless universe. And as to a grand source of emotional life, that theme which brings up the great heart-throbs and dearest hopes of all humanity, it seems to me the surest thing of all, that whoever lives an honest, earnest life in soul and body will find himself securely buoyed upon an unflinching support of kindred souls. What boots it to him in what form the refreshing current reaches him so long as it brings sustenance and inspiring force for his noblest faculties? If these notions seem wild and rampant to one whose belief is yet chained to traditional moorings, is the popular idea of deity any less so? Is there not rather a calmer and more rational dignity—although the searching may not find out God in any full or final sense—in continuing the search for him in accordance with the best maps we possess of the visible territory? It hardly seems wild to suspect that the vaster and finer domain, albeit as yet so elusive, may develop close analogies to the solid facts that have become the fixed property of experience. The elimination of factors that have served their ends in primary stages surely need not impair the vitality of a process that beckons toward infinity.

J. P. TITCOMB.

BEHIND THE AGE.

PROVIDENCE, June 24, 1877.

F. E. ABBOT, ESQ.:

Dear Sir,—I have been asked to send the enclosed to you. It was clipped from a paper entitled Every Evening and Commercial, Wilmington, Delaware, Monday, June 4, 1877.

It seems to me scarcely worth while to take any more notice of such a piece of stupidity than to remark it as fact, existing after nearly two thousand years of "the highest Christian civilization," that men possess mind and morals still so much in the dark. The idea is the old one of infant damnation. It comes from Delaware, where the whipping-post stands; and let us hope that all who sympathize with the ideas of the reverend gentleman are with him in that State, and that there they will remain.

Yours respectfully, D. F. THORPE.

Temperance Work.

REV. I. M. HALDEMAN PREACHES TO THE REFORM CLUB AND CONDEMNES THE MOVEMENT—TEMPERANCE MEN DEFEND THEIR ACTIONS.

Rev. I. M. Haldeman, of the Delaware Avenue Baptist Church, having complied with a request to preach a sermon to the Moral Suasion Reform Club, about one hundred and fifty of the members repaired to the church last evening. The reverend gentleman, in his sermon, condemned the whole temperance movement, on the ground that it was taking the work out of the hands of God. Reformation without redemption was a sin, and to sign the temperance pledge was a sin. It is God's business and not man's to raise men out of the gutter.

Mr. H. proceeded to show that man is by nature a sinner; that there is not one element in him capable of producing reformation; that he is by nature a child of wrath; that the wrath of God abideth on him; that he is subject to the judgment of Almighty God, and only through acceptance of Jesus Christ can this judgment be averted. He also argued that this movement led men to believe that there was something in themselves that could be improved and led Godward, and had a tendency to make humanitarianism Christianity. He also asserted that the commission of a sin did not make a man a sinner; but, because he was by nature a sinner, he committed sins, and in short took a decided stand against the entire movement as being only reformation without regeneration. He closed with an earnest appeal to all to accept Christ as their only hope.

The congregation was a very large one, occupying every available place in the church, and it is estimated that fifteen hundred persons were present. The Reform Club occupied the middle aisle of pews, which had been reserved for them. The discourse created a profound sensation and gave rise to a great deal of comment.

After the sermon, about two hundred of the temperance men adjourned to the tent, at Thirteenth and Market Streets, where a number of speeches were made; and, though nothing was said in condemnation of Mr. Haldeman, the work of temperance reform, as at present carried on, was defended.

Mr. Wells said that Mr. Haldeman was answerable to God alone for his convictions; but they had been taught a valuable lesson by his discourse, and that was to think and act for themselves. They could go to the Bible and find what Christ said and did, and from him learn their duty to God and man. They firmly believed that what they were doing was approved by God, as all through the Testament were the positive commands of God and his promises. The other speeches were to the same effect, Messrs. Dutcher, Lee, Winslow, Riggs, Leibrandt, and Rev. A. D. Davis being the speakers. Another meeting will be held at the tent to-night.

WHAT IS LIBERALISM?

Many young persons who have felt the impulse of the age to investigate religious and moral subjects, but whose convictions are not yet mature and fixed, are no doubt eager to know what Liberalism means. Enthusiasm cannot live on vague and speculative ideas. Neither can a cause inspire moral zeal in its supporters, unless it be founded on more than negative belief.

At the risk of being thought a dull pupil in the Liberal school, I wish to ask of those who understand the movement better, What does Liberalism mean? What affirmative principles constitute its basis? There are so many persons of different and contradictory views calling themselves Liberals—Materialists and Spiritualists, Atheists and Theists, Evolutionists and Creationists, and an indefinite number of other schools of freethinkers, all claiming the name of Liberals. Now before I enlist in a cause, I want to know what principles it is seeking to propagate and establish. If I am to preach Spiritualism, I want to know it; and if I am to preach Materialism, I want to know it. If all speculative questions like these are to be ignored, or made no test of fellowship, then I want to know what moral principles are to be the basis of our organization. Are we to reaffirm the moral principles of the Orthodox system, or are we to institute a new moral law? We cannot ignore these questions for the sake of accommodating different opinions. We cannot say that it is of no consequence whether the sum of two and two is four or five in the system of moral science. We must have well-defined and harmonious principles here; and before Liberalism can ever secure the earnest support of a moral reform, it must have a consistent, tangible, and affirmative basis.

I do not want to find fault with Liberalism, for with all of vagueness and contradictions it is very dear to me; but I have grown weary of its negations and indefiniteness. I think timid conservatism safer than blind, fanatical iconoclasm; and, however illiberal it may sound, I could as consistently join the "God in the Constitution" party as I could cooperate with all persons calling themselves Liberals. I would rather risk the ecclesiastic tyranny of Orthodoxy than the moral heresies of many who are loud in their professions of liberalism. I prefer a more limited fellowship with more harmony of principles; and if the present state of diversity of opinions on religious and moral questions will not permit Liberalism to affirm its belief on these momentous subjects, I shall be forced to still go alone in this world of thought and feeling.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo., July 6, 1877.

[Probably Mr. Neville has never read the first Index Tract, "Truths for the Times." It contains "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles," and was designed to be a succinct statement of "what liberalism is." When our friend has read this Tract (which we have mailed to his address), we shall be pleased to know whether it answers his question, and, if not, why not.—Ed.]

WIGGLESWORTH'S "DAY OF DOOM."

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

The article in the issue of THE INDEX of July 5, entitled "Joseph Cook and Jonathan Edwards," taken from the Newburyport Herald, furnishes me with just the thing which I have been looking for. I have an Orthodox friend who asserts that no recognized author can be pointed out who expresses a belief in the damnation of infants; and that all allusions, in the Bible and elsewhere, to fire as a means of punishment in hell are purely symbolical. I wish that we could have occasional quotations of a similar character from Evangelical authors published in THE INDEX, for it is evident that the Orthodox are sloughing off their old skin, and mean to deny that they were ever inside of it. It may be well to keep bits of it to show them from time to time. Meanwhile will you allow me to offer you something edifying?

The Rev. Michael Wigglesworth, an American verse-writer of much reputation, was born in 1831, and graduated at Harvard College soon after entering upon his twentieth year. His principal work, The Day of Doom, or a Poetical Description of the Great and Last Judgment, with a Short Discourse about Eternity, passed through six editions in this country, and was reprinted in London. A few verses will show its style.

After the "sheep" have received their reward, the several classes of "goats" are arraigned before the judgment-seat, and, in turn, begin to excuse themselves. When the infants object to damnation on the ground that .... Adam is set free

And saved from his trespass,
Whose sinful fall hath split them all,
And brought them to this pass,— the Puritan theologian does not sustain his doctrine very well, nor quite to his own satisfaction even; and the judge, admitting the palliating circumstances, decides that, although

.... in bliss
They may not hope to dwell,
Still unto them he will allow
The easiest room in hell.

At length the general sentence is pronounced, and the condemned begin to

Wring their hands, their catiff-hands,
And gnash their teeth for terror;
They cry, they roar for anguish sore,
And gnaw their tongues for horror.
But get away without delay;
—CHRIST pities not your cry;
Depart to hell; there ye may yell,
And roar eternally.

Wigglesworth died in 1705. What has been above written about him and the lines quoted are from Griswold's Poets and Poetry of America: Historical Introduction, p. xix.

BOSTON, July 12, 1877.

AT A YOUNG LADIES' seminary recently, during an examination in history, one of the not most promising pupils was interrogated: "Mary, did Martin Luther die a natural death?" "No," was the reply; "he was excommunicated by a bull."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Lode, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3 00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	3.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physica and Politica.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	6.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	4.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE B.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.50
Felix Holt.....	1.50
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.50
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Comic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayly Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Effective Aesthetics.....	1.50
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Cred of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unconscious Mind.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLEWORTH'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLEWORTH'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel- lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Hereditary" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saluts, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	8.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.25
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	2.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVAT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	1.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eckoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Redged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.). Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	2.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	3.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Hammond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.50
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.50
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.50
4. Four Georges, Hamlet, &c.....	1.50
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	1.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI., each.....	1.75
WALKER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS!

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 2, 1877.

WHOLE No. 397.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office of public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition of the National Liberal League have been received as follows since last week: from Mr. George Schumm, San Francisco, Cal., 99; from Mr. William H. Eastman, San Francisco, 37; from Mr. Seth N. Allen, Maple Rapids, Mich., 30. Total thus far received—7,256.

A NEW LIBERAL LEAGUE was organized last April at Stockton, California, with the following officers: President, G. C. Hyatt; Vice-President, Charles Haas; Secretary, F. C. Lawrence; Treasurer, W. F. Freeman. It has a list of thirty-one members, and proposes to sustain a series of lectures next winter in Stockton. Its Constitution has been very neatly printed in the form of a small pamphlet.

IN REPLY to an application for half-fare for those attending the proposed Grove Meeting at Wolcott, N. Y., it is announced by the R. W. and O. R. R. that they will comply with the request; and return free, on certificate from the Secretary of the meeting, all who pay full fare to Wolcott. Persons from the West can take this road at Niagara Falls, from the East at Rome, from the North at Ogdensburg, and from the South at Syracuse.

SAYS THE LONDON World of July 4: "On the walls of the bedrooms in the Granville Hotel are to be found large placards illuminated with Scriptural texts. Surely such things, though imparting somewhat of a cheerful aspect to the blank whitewash of hospitals and jails, are out of place at the Granville. This is a further manifestation of the fussy Christianity which induces hotel-keepers to occupy part of the meagre space on your toilet-table with a brown Testament, and railway companies to hang their mangy waiting-rooms with fluttering strips of Bible quotations of the most fulminating and denunciatory character."

THE FOURTH COUNCIL of the Union of American Hebrew congregations was opened at St. George's Hall, Philadelphia, on the tenth of July. Hon. B. F. Peixotto, late consul to Roumania, was elected President, and Mr. L. Levy, of Cincinnati, Secretary. The report of the Board of Delegates showed that the Jews have fourteen public institutions under their control, some of them not being limited to sectarian uses. They have fifteen newspapers and magazines devoted to the cause of Judaism, and four Jewish orders or secret societies, the objects of which are the advancement of Judaism, mutual assistance, and charity.

IT IS CLEAR that John Bull is not to be Romanized without some active exertion of his crural muscles. Punch makes various vicious observations on a book which has been of late very effectually advertised: "'The Priest in Absolution,' by a much needed application of soap-and-water to his dirt, will become 'The Priest in Ablution'; ducked in the most convenient horse-pond, 'The Priest in Solution'; and, in relation to the Church he does his worst to bring into hatred and contempt, 'The Priest in Dissolution—of the Establishment.'"—"The 'Priest in Absolution' will be followed, we hope, by the 'Horsewhip in Application.'"—"Suggested Vestments for the Brethren of the Holy Cross: tar and feathers."

THE SHEIK-UL-ISLAM, the chief Ecclesiastic of the Mohammedans, proclaimed the "Holy War" against Russia in this Fetwa, or proclamation, in the form of a regular interrogation, followed by the ceremonial reply of the Sheik-ul-Islam: "Question.—If, after the Commander of the Faithful—whose Khalifate may God prolong to the day of the judgment—has concluded a solemn treaty with the ruler of an unbelieving country, the Sovereign of such country makes unendurable and unacceptable demands which lessen the glory of Islam and degrade the Mohammedan nation, and, in order to impose these demands upon Mussulmans, insultingly makes preparations for war, transgresses the boundaries of Mohammedan States and devastates the same, and thus breaks the solemn treaty; in such a case, as soon as it is plain that the Mussulmans possess the necessary strength and resources for the contest, and that the contest on behalf of the Faith is meritorious, is it the duty of the Protector of the Faith, the Sultan of the Mussulmans—to whom may the Almighty God grant victory,—to send the conquering troops of Islam against that country, and, in confidence in God the Supreme Ruler, to undertake the War of Faith for the glory of Islam against the said country and people? It is an answer that is sought. Answer.—Yes, God knows that is so. Thus writes the poor Hassan Cheirullah, unto whom may God be merciful!"

A POWERFUL attempt is evidently making in this country to array the universities and colleges on the side of Christianity, in its great struggle with science. The Christian Intelligencer believes that, in spite of the determined efforts of unbelievers to array science against the Bible, and especially against all Evangelical and spiritual religion, the prevailing tone of education in our higher institutions is distinctly religious. Dr. Kranth, vice-provost of the University of Pennsylvania, in his late address to the literary societies of Rutgers College, denounced the anti-Christian materialism of the day as having organized into form the sin against the Holy Ghost. Dr. Bartlett, the new president of Dartmouth, in his inaugural, speaking of "Mental Docility and Reverence," warned his hearers not to "mistake the despotism of hypothesis for the reign of law." And he added: "True thinkers on the great I Am must respect other thinkers and God. Huxley cannot play fast-and-loose with human volition, nor juggle the trustiness of memory with a stage of consciousness, to save his system. It will be time to believe a million of things in a lump when one of them is fully proved in detail,—for instance, the theory of natural selection. I must believe that any mind is fundamentally unhinged that speaks lightly of that mighty influence that has moulded human events and has upheaved the world." The Intelligencer says, that from almost every other college in the land similar sentiments, uttered by leading men, indicate the powerful reaction of competent Christian scholarship against the ungodly science of the age, with its hasty imagination and its tyrannical spirit.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. W. M. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHENCK MANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSANTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALLS OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. CARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYLER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ KELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIHAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Elihuville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIBBE,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quitman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointments, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....131 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARRIS P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
 2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

Spinoza: 1677 and 1877.

ADDRESS DELIVERED AT THE UNVEILING OF THE MONUMENT AT THE HAGUE, FEBRUARY 21, 1877.

BY ERNEST RENAN.

On this day two hundred years, in the afternoon, and at about this same hour, there lay dying, at the age of forty-three, on the quiet quay of the Paviloen-gragt, a few paces hence, a poor man, whose life had been so profoundly silent that his last sigh was scarcely heard. He had occupied a retired room in the house of a worthy pair, who, without understanding him, felt for him an instinctive veneration. On the morning of his last day he had gone down as usual to join his hosts; there had been religious services that morning; the gentle philosopher conversed with the good folk about what the minister had said, much approved it, and advised them to conform themselves thereto. The host and hostess (let us name them; their honest sincerity entitles them to a place in this beautiful Idyl of the Hague related by Colerus), the Van der Spycks, husband and wife, went back to their devotions. On their return home, their peaceful lodger was dead. The funeral, on the 25th of February, was conducted like that of a Christian believer, in the new church on the Spuy. All the inhabitants of the district greatly regretted the disappearance of the sage who had lived among them as one of themselves. His hosts preserved his memory like a religion, and none who had approached him ever spoke of him without calling him, according to custom, "the blessed Spinoza."

About the same time, however, any one able to track the current of opinion setting in among the professedly enlightened circles of the Pharisaism of that day, would have seen, in singular contrast, the much-loved philosopher of the simple and single-hearted become the bugbear of the narrow orthodoxy which pretended to a monopoly of the truth. A wretch, a pestilence, an imp of hell, the most wicked atheist that ever lived, a man steeped in crime,—this was what the solitary of the Paviloen-gragt grew to be in the opinion of right-thinking theologians and philosophers!

Portraits were spread abroad exhibiting him as "bearing on his face the signs of reprobation." A distinguished philosopher, bold as he, but less consistent and less completely sincere, called him "a wretch." But Justice was to have her day. The human mind, attaining, in Germany especially, toward the end of the eighteenth century, to a more enlightened theology and a wider philosophy, recognized in Spinoza the precursor of a new gospel. Jacobi took the public into his confidence as to a conversation he had held with Lessing. He had gone to Lessing in hopes of enlisting his aid against Spinoza. What was his astonishment on finding in Lessing an avowed Spinozist! "Ev kai nūv," said Lessing to him,—this is the whole of philosophy. Him whom a whole century had declared an atheist, Novalis pronounced a "God-intoxicated man." His forgotten works were published, and eagerly sought after. Schleiermacher, Goethe, Hegel, Schelling, all with one voice proclaimed Spinoza the father of modern thought. Perhaps there may have been some exaggeration in this first outburst of tardy reparation; but time, which sets everything in its place, has substantially ratified Lessing's judgment; and in the present day there is no enlightened mind that does not acknowledge Spinoza as the man who possessed the highest God-consciousness of his day. It is this conviction that has made you decree that his pure and lowly tomb should have its anniversary. It is the common assertion of a free faith in the Infinite that on this day gathers together, in the spot that witnessed so much virtue, the most select assembly that a man of genius could group round him after his death. A sovereign, as distinguished by intellectual as by moral gifts, is among us in spirit. A prince who can justly appreciate merit of every kind, by distinguishing this solemnity with his presence, desires to testify that, of the glories of Holland, not one is alien to him, and that no lofty thinking escapes his enlightened judgment and his philosophic admiration.

I.

The illustrious BARUCH DE SPINOZA was born at Amsterdam at the time when your republic was attaining its highest degree of glory and power. He belonged to that great race which, by the influence it has exerted and the services it has rendered, occupies so exceptional a place in the history of civilization. Miraculous in its own way, the development of the Jewish people ranks side by side with that other miracle,—the development of the Greek mind; for if Greece, from the first, realized the ideal of poetry, of science, of philosophy, of art, of profane life, if I may so speak, the Jewish people has made the religion of humanity. Its prophets inaugurated in the world the idea of righteousness, the revindication of the rights of the weak,—a revindication so much the more violent that, all idea of future recompense being unknown to them, they dreamed of the realization of the ideal upon this earth, and at no distant period. It was a Jew, Isaiah, who, seven hundred and fifty years before Jesus Christ, dared affirm that sacrifices are of little importance, and that one thing only is needful: purity of heart and hands. Then, when earthly events seemed irremediably to contradict such bright Utopias, Israel can change front in a way unparalleled.

Transporting into the domain of pure idealism that kingdom of God with which earth proves incompatible, one moiety of its children founds Christianity, the other carries on, through the tortures of the middle ages, that imperturbable protest: "Hear, O Israel! the Lord thy God is one; holy is his name." This potent tradition of idealism and hope against all hope —this religion, able to obtain from its adherents the most heroic sacrifices, though it be not of its essence to promise them any certainty beyond this life,—this was the healthy and bracing medium in which Spinoza developed himself. His education was at first entirely Hebraic; the great literature of Israel was his earliest, and, in point of fact, his perpetual instructor,—was the meditation of all his life.

As generally happens, Hebrew literature, in assuming the character of a sacred book, had become the subject of a conventional exegesis, much less intent upon explaining the old texts according to the meaning in their authors' minds than on finding in them ailment for the moral and religious wants of the day. The penetrating mind of the young Spinoza soon discerned all the defects of the exegesis of the synagogue; the Bible, as taught him, was disfigured by the accumulated perversions of more than two thousand years. He determined to pierce beyond these. He was, indeed, essentially at one with the true fathers of Judaism, and especially with that great Maimonides, who found a way of introducing into Judaism the most daring speculations of philosophy. He foresaw with wondrous sagacity the great results of the critical exegesis destined, one hundred and twenty-five years later, to afford the true meaning of the noblest productions of Hebrew genius. Was this to destroy the Bible? Has that admirable literature lost by being understood in its real aspect rather than relegated outside of the common laws of humanity? Certainly not. The truths revealed by science invariably surpass the dreams that science dispels. The world of Laplace exceeds in beauty, I imagine, that of a Cosmas Indicoplestes, who pictured the universe to himself as a casket, on the lid of which the stars glide along in grooves at a few leagues from us. In the same way, the Bible is more beautiful when we have learned to see therein—ranged in order on a canvas of a thousand years,—each aspiration, each sigh, each prayer of the most exalted religious consciousness that ever existed, than when we force ourselves to view it as a book unlike any other, composed, preserved, interpreted in direct opposition to all the ordinary rules of the human intellect.

But the persecutions of the middle ages had produced on Judaism the usual effect of all persecution: they had rendered minds narrow and timid. A few years previously, at Amsterdam, the unfortunate Uriel Acosta had cruelly expiated certain doubts that fanaticism finds as culpable as avowed incredulity. The boldness of the young Spinoza was still worse received; he was anathematized, and had to submit to an excommunication that he had not courted. A very old history this! Religious communions, beneficent cradles of so much earnestness and so much virtue, do not allow of any refusal to be shut up exclusively within their embrace; they claim to imprison forever the life that had its beginnings within them; they brand as apostasy the lawful emancipation of the mind that seeks to take its flight alone. It is as though the egg should reproach, as ungrateful, the bird that had escaped therefrom. The egg was necessary in its time; when it became a bondage, it had to be broken. A great marvel, truly, that Erasmus of Rotterdam should feel himself cramped in his cell; that Luther should not prefer his monkish vows to that far holier vow which man, by the very fact of his being, contracts with truth! Had Erasmus persisted in his monastic routine, or Luther gone on distributing indulgences, they would have been apostates indeed! Spinoza was the greatest of modern Jews, and Judaism exiled him. Nothing more simple; it must have been so, it must be so ever. Finite symbols, prisons of the infinite spirit, will eternally protest against the effort of idealism to enlarge them. The spirit, on its side, struggles eternally for more air and more light. Eighteen hundred and fifty years ago the synagogue denounced as a seducer the one who was to raise the maxims of the synagogue to unequalled glory. And the Christian Church, how often has she not driven from her breast those who should have been her chiefest honor! In cases like these, our duty is fulfilled if we retain a pious memory of the education our childhood received. Let the old churches be free to brand with criminality those who quit them; they shall not succeed in obtaining from us any but grateful feelings, since, after all, the harm they are able to do us is as nothing compared to the good they have done.

II.

Here, then, we have the excommunicated of the synagogue of Amsterdam forced to create for himself a spiritual abode outside of the home which rejected him. He had great sympathy with Christianity, but he dreaded all chains; he did not embrace it. Descartes had just renewed philosophy by his firm and sober rationalism. Descartes was his master. Spinoza took up the problems where they had been left by that great mind, but saw that, through fear of the Sorbonne, his theology had always remained somewhat arid. Oldenburg asking him one day what fault he could find with the philosophy of Descartes and of Bacon, Spinoza replied that their chief fault lay in not sufficiently occupying themselves with the First Cause. Perhaps his reminiscences of Jewish theology, that ancient wisdom of the Hebrews before which he often bows, suggested to him higher views and more sublime aspirations in this matter. Not only the ideas held by the vulgar, but those even of thinkers on Divinity, appeared to him inadequate. He saw plainly that there is no assigning a limited part to the Infinite; that Divinity is all, or is nothing; that if the Divine be a reality, it must pervade all. For twenty years he meditated on these problems without for a moment averting his thoughts. Our distaste nowadays for system and abstract formula no longer permits us to accept absolutely the propositions within which he had thought to confine the secrets of the Infinite. For Spinoza, as for Descartes, the universe was only extension and thought; chemistry and physiology were lacking to that great school, which was too exclusively geometrical and mechanical. A stranger to the idea of life, and those notions as to the constitution of bodies that chemistry was destined to reveal—too much attached still to the scholastic expressions of substance and attribute,—Spinoza did not attain to that living and fertile Infinite shown us by the science of Nature and of history as presiding in space unbounded, over a development more and more intense; but, making allowance for a certain dryness in expression, what grandeur there is in that inflexible geometrical deduction leading up to the supreme proposition, "It is of the nature of the substance to develop itself necessarily by an infinity of infinite attributes infinitely modified!" God is thus absolute thought, universal consciousness. The ideal exists, nay, it is the true existence; all else is mere appearance and frivolity. Bodies and souls are mere modes of which God is the substance: it is only the modes that fall within duration; the substance is all in eternity. Thus, God does not prove himself; his existence results from his sole idea; everything supposes and contains him. God is the condition of all existence, all thought. If God did not exist, thought would be able to conceive more than Nature could furnish,—which is a contradiction.

Spinoza did not clearly discern universal progress; the world, as he conceives it, seems as it were crystallized in a matter which is incorruptible extension, in a soul that is immutable thought; the sentiment of God deprives him of the sentiment of man; forever face to face with the Infinite, he did not sufficiently perceive what of the Divine conceals itself in relative manifestations; but he, better than any other, saw the eternal identity which constitutes the basis of all transitory evolutions. Whatever is limited seems to him frivolous, and unworthy to occupy a philosopher. Bold in flight, he soared straight to the lofty, snow-covered summits, without casting a glance on the rich display of life springing up on the mountain's side. At an altitude where every breath but his own pants hard, he lives, he enjoys, he flourishes there, as men in general do in mild and temperate regions. What he for his part needs is the glacier-air, keen and penetrating. He does not ask to be followed; he is like Moses, to whom secrets unknown to the crowd reveal themselves on the heights. But be sure of this: he was the seer of his age; he was in his own day the one who saw deepest into God.

III.

It might have been supposed that, all alone on those snowy peaks, he would turn out in human affairs wrong-headed, utopian, or scornfully sceptical. Nothing of the kind. He was incessantly occupied with the application of his principles to human society. The pessimism of Hobbes and the dreams of Thomas More were equally repugnant to him. One-half, at least, of the Theologico-Political Treatise, which appeared in 1670, might be reprinted to-day without losing any of its appropriateness. Listen to its admirable title: Tractatus Theologico-Politicus, continens dissertationes aliquot, quibus ostenditur, libertatem philosophandi non tantum salva pietate et reipublice pace posse concedi, sed eandem nisi cum pace reipublice ipsaque pietate tolli non posse. For centuries past it had been supposed that society rested on metaphysical dogmas. Spinoza discerns profoundly that these dogmas, assumed to be necessary to humanity, yet cannot escape discussion; that revelation itself, if there be one, traversing, in order to reach us, the faculties of the human mind, is no less than all else amenable to criticism. I wish I could quote in its entirety that admirable Chapter XX., in which our great publicist establishes with masterly skill that dogma—new then, and still contested in our own day,—which styles itself liberty of conscience.

"The final end of the State," he says, "consists not in dominating over men, restraining them by fears, subjecting them to the will of others; but, on the contrary, in permitting each one to live in all possible security; that is to say, in preserving intact the natural right of each to live without injury to himself or others. No, I say; the State has not for its end the transformation of men from reasonable beings into animals or automata; it has for end so to act that its citizens should in security develop soul and body, and make free use of their reason. Hence the true end of the State is liberty. Whosoever means to respect the rights of a sovereign should never act in opposition to his decrees; but each has the right to think what he will, and to say what he thinks, provided he content himself with speaking and teaching in the name of pure reason, and do not attempt on his private authority to introduce innovations into the State. For example: a citizen who demonstrates that a certain law is repugnant to sound reason, and holds that for that cause it ought to be abrogated—if he submit his opinions to the judgment of the sovereign, to whom alone it belongs to establish and to abolish laws, and if, meanwhile, he acts in no wise contrary to law,—that man certainly deserves well of the State as the best of citizens. . . .

"Even if we admit the possibility of so stifling men's liberty and laying such a yoke upon them that they dare not even whisper without the approbation of the sovereign, never, most surely, can they be prevented from thinking as they will. What, then, must ensue? That men will think one way and speak another; that, consequently, good faith—a virtue most necessary to the State—will become corrupted; that adulation—a detestable thing—and perfidy will be had in repute, entailing the decadence of all good and healthy morality. What can be more disastrous to a State than to exile honest citizens as evil-doers because they do not share the opinions of the crowd and are ignorant of the art of feigning? What more fatal than to treat as enemies and doom to death men whose only crime is that of thinking independently? The scaffold, which should be the terror of the wicked, is thus turned into the glorious theatre where virtue and toleration shine out in all their lustre, and publicly cover the sovereign majesty with opprobrium. Beyond question there is only one thing to be learned from such a spectacle: to imitate those noble martyrs; or, if one fears death, to become the cowardly flatterers of power. Nothing, then, is so full of peril as to refer and submit to divine rights matters of pure speculation, and to impose laws on opinions which are, or may be, subjects of discussion among men. If the authority of the State limited itself to the repression of actions while allowing impunity to words, controversies would less often turn into seditions."

More sagacious than many so-called practical men, our speculator sees perfectly well that the only durable governments are the reasonable, and that the only reasonable governments are the constitutional. Far from absorbing the individual in the State, he gives him solid guarantees against the State's omnipotence. He is no revolutionary, but a moderate; he transforms, explains, but does not destroy. His God is not indeed one who takes pleasure in ceremonies, sacrifices, odor of incense, yet Spinoza has no design whatever to overthrow religion; he entertains a profound veneration for Christianity,—a tender and a sincere respect. The supernatural, however, has no meaning in his doctrine. According to his principles, anything out of Nature would be out of being, and therefore inconceivable. Prophets, revealers, have been men like others.

"It is not thinking, but dreaming," he says, "to hold that prophets have had a human body and not a human soul, and that consequently their knowledge and their sensations have been of a different nature from ours. . . . The prophetic faculty has not been the dowry of one people only,—the Jewish people. The quality of Son of God has not been the privilege of one man only. . . . To state my views openly, I tell you that it is not absolutely necessary to know Christ after the flesh; but it is otherwise when we speak of that Son of God; that is to say, that eternal wisdom of God, which has manifested itself in all things, and more fully in the human soul, and above all in Jesus Christ. Without this wisdom no one can attain the state of beatitude, since it alone teaches us what is true and what is false, what is right and what is wrong. . . . As to what certain churches have added, . . . I have expressly warned you that I do not know what they mean; and, to speak frankly, I may confess that they seem to me to be using the same sort of language as if they spoke of a circle assuming the nature of a square."

Was not this exactly what Schleiermacher said? And as to Spinoza, the fellow-founder with Richard Simon of biblical exegesis, was not he the precursor of those liberal theologians who have in our own day shown that Christianity can retain all its glory without supernaturalism? His letters to Oldenburg on the resurrection of Jesus Christ, and of the manner in which St. Paul understood it, are masterpieces which a hundred years later would have served as the manifesto of a whole school of critical theology.

In the eyes of Spinoza, it signifies little whether mysteries be understood this way or that, provided they be understood in a pious sense. Religion has one aim only, piety; and we are to appeal to it, not for metaphysics, but for practical guidance. At bottom there is but one single thing in Scripture, as in all revelation: "Love your neighbor." The fruit of religion is blessedness, each one participating in it according to his capacity and his efforts. The souls that are governed by reason—the philosophic souls that have, even in this world, their life in God—are safe from death; what death takes from them is of no value; but weak or passionate souls perish almost entirely, and death, instead of being for them a simple accident, involves the foundation of their being. . . . The ignorant man who lets himself be swayed by blind passions is agitated in a thousand different directions by external causes, and never enjoys true peace of soul; for him, ceasing to suffer means ceasing to be. The soul of the wise man, on the other hand, can scarcely be troubled. Possessing, by a kind of eternal necessity, the consciousness of itself and of God and of things, he never ceases to be, and ever preserves the soul's true peace.

Spinoza could not endure his system to be considered irreligious or subversive. The timid Oldenburg did not conceal from him that some of his opinions seemed to certain readers to tend to the overthrow of piety. "Whatever accords with reason," replied Spinoza, "is, in my belief, most favorable to the practice of virtue." The pretended superiority of coarsely positive conceptions as to religion and a future life found him intractable. "Is it, I ask, to cast off religion," he was wont to say, "to acknowledge God as the supreme good, and thence to conclude that he must be loved with a free soul? To maintain that all our felicity and most perfect freedom consists in that love—that the reward of virtue is virtue, and that a blind and impotent soul finds its punishment in its blindness,—is this a denial of all religion?" At the root of all such attacks he traced meanness of soul. According to him, any one who felt irritated by a disinterested religion involuntarily confessed reason and virtue to have no charm in his eyes, and that his pleasure would lie in living to indulge his passions if he were not restrained by fear. "Thus, then," he would add, "such a one only abstains from evil and obeys the divine commandment regretfully as a slave, and in return for his slavery expects from God rewards which have infinitely more value in his eyes than the divine law. The more aversion and estrangement from good he may have felt, the more he hopes to be recompensed, and imagines that they who are not restrained by the same fear as himself, do what he would do in their case,—that is to say, live lawlessly." Spinoza held with reason that this manner of seeking heaven was contrary to reason, and that there is an absurdity in pretending to gain God's favor by owing to him that, did not one dread him, one would not love.

IV.

He was, however, well aware of the danger of interfering with beliefs in which few admit these subtle distinctions. Cauté was his motto, and his friends having made him aware of the explosion that the Ethica would infallibly produce, he kept it unpublished till his death. He had no literary vanity, nor did he seek celebrity,—possibly, indeed, because he was sure to obtain it without seeking. He was perfectly happy,—he has told us so; let us take him at his word. He has done still better: he has bequeathed us his secret. Let all men listen to the recipe of the "Prince of Atheists" for the discovery of happiness: it is the love of God. To love God is to live in God. Life in God is the best and most perfect because it is the reasonablest, happiest, fullest,—in a word, because it gives us more being than any other life, and satisfies most completely the fundamental desire that constitutes our essence.

Spinoza's whole practical life was regulated according to these maxims. That life was a masterpiece of good sense and judgment. It was led with the profound skill of the wise man who desires one thing only, and invariably ends by obtaining it. Never did policy so well combine means and end. Had he been less reticent, he would perhaps have met the same fate as the unfortunate Acosta. Loving truth for its own sake, he was indifferent to the abuse that his constancy in speaking it entailed, and answered never a word to the attacks made on him. For his part, he attacked no one. "It is foreign to my habits," he said, "to look out for the errors into which authors have fallen." Had he desired to be an official personage, his life would no doubt have been traversed by persecution, or at least by disgrace. He was nothing, and desired to be nothing. Ama nesciri was his desire, as well as that of the author of the De Imitatione. He sacrificed everything to peace of mind, and in so doing there was no selfishness, for his mind was of importance to the world. He frequently refused wealth on its way to him, and desired only what was absolutely necessary. The King of France offered him a pension; he declined. The Elector Palatine offered him a chair at Heidelberg. "Your freedom shall be complete," he was told, "for the prince is convinced that you will not abuse it to disturb the established religion." "I do not very well understand," he replied, "within what limits it would be necessary to confine that philosophical freedom granted me on condition of not disturbing the established religion; and then, again, the instruction I bestowed on youth would hinder my own advance in philosophy. I have only succeeded in procuring for myself a tranquil life by the renunciation of all kinds of public teaching." He felt that his duty was to think. He thought, in fact, for humanity, whose ideas he forestalled by more than two centuries.

The same instinctive sagacity was carried by him into all the relations of life; he felt that public opinion never permits a man to be daring in two directions at once. Being a freethinker, he looked upon himself as bound to live like a saint. But I am wrong in saying this. Was not this pure and gentle life rather the direct expression of his peaceful and lovable consciousness? At that period the atheist was pictured as a villain armed with daggers. Spinoza was throughout his whole lifetime humble, meek, pious. His enemies were ingenious enough to object to this; they would have liked him to live conformably to the conventional type, and, after the career of a demon incarnate, to die in despair. Spinoza smiled at this singular pretension, and refused to oblige his enemies by changing his way of life. He had warm friends; he showed himself courageous at need; he protested against popular indignation wherever he thought it unjust. Many disappointments failed to shake his fidelity to the republican party; the liberality of his opinions was never at the mercy of events. What, perhaps, does him more honor still, he possessed the esteem and sincere affection of the simple beings among whom he lived. Nothing is equal in value to the esteem of the lowly; their judgment is almost always that of God. To the worthy Van der Spyck he was evidently the very ideal of a perfect lodger. "No one ever gave less trouble," was their testimony given some years after his death to Colerus. "While in the house he inconvenienced nobody; he spent the best part of his time quietly in his own room. If he chanced to tire himself by too protracted meditation, he would come down-stairs and speak to the family about any subject of common talk, even about trifles." In fact, there could never have been a more affable inmate. He would often hold conversations with his hostess, especially at the time of her confinements, as well as with the rest of the household when any sorrow or sickness befell them. He would tell the children to go to divine service; and, when they returned from the sermon, ask them how much they remembered of it. He almost always strongly seconded what the preacher had said. One of the persons he most esteemed was the pastor Cordes, an excellent man and a good expounder of the Scriptures; sometimes, indeed, he went to hear him, and he advised his host never to miss the preaching of so able a man. One day his hostess asked him if he thought she could be saved in the religion she professed. "Your religion is a good one," he replied; "you should not seek any other, nor doubt that yours will procure salvation if, in attaching yourself to piety, you lead at the same time a peaceful and tranquil life."

His temperance and good management were admirable. His daily wants were provided for by a handicraft in which he became very skilful—the polishing of lenses. The Van der Spuyck made over to Colerus scraps of paper on which Spinoza had noted down his expenses; these averaged about fourpence halfpenny a day. He was very careful to settle his accounts every quarter, so as neither to spend more nor less than his income. He dressed simply if not poorly, but his aspect radiated serenity. It was evident that he had found out a doctrine which gave him perfect content.

He was never elated, and never depressed; the equability of his moods seems wonderful. Perhaps, indeed, he may have felt some sadness when the daughter of his professor, Van den Ende, preferred Kerkering to him; but I suspect that he soon consoled himself. "Reason is my enjoyment," he would say, "and the aim I have in this life is joy and serenity." He objected to any praise of sadness.

"It is superstition," he maintained, "that sets up sadness as good, and all that tends to joy as evil. God would show himself envious if he took pleasure in my impotence and in the ills I suffer. Rather in proportion to the greatness of our joy do we attain to a greater perfection and participate more fully in the divine nature. . . . Joy, therefore, can never be evil so long as it be regulated by the law of our true utility. A virtuous life is not a sad and sombre one, a life of privations and austerity. How should the Divinity take pleasure in the spectacle of my weakness, or impute to me as meritorious, tears, sobs, terrors,—signs all of an impotent soul? Yes," he added, emphatically, "it is the part of a wise man to use the things of this life, and enjoy them as much as possible; to recruit himself by a temperate and appetizing diet; to charm his senses with the perfume and the brilliant verdure of plants; to adorn his very attire; to enjoy music, games, spectacles, and every diversion that any one can bestow on himself without detriment to character. . . . We are incessantly spoken to of repentance, humility, death; but repentance is not a virtue, but the consequence of a weakness. Nor is humility one, since it springs in man from the idea of his inferiority. As to the thought of death, it is the daughter of fear, and it is in feeble souls that it sets up its home. . . . The things of all others," he would say, "about which a free man thinks least is death. Wisdom lies in the contemplation not of death, but of life."

V.

Since the days of Epictetus and Marcus Aurelius, no life had been witnessed so profoundly penetrated by the sentiment of the Divine. In the twelfth, thirteenth, sixteenth century, rationalistic philosophy had numbered very great men in its ranks, but it had had no saints. Occasionally a very repulsive and hard element had entered into the finest characters among Italian freethinkers. Religion had been utterly absent from those lives not less in revolt against human than divine laws, of which the last example was that of poor Vanini. Here, on the contrary, we have religion producing freethought as a part of piety. Religion in a system such as this is not a portion of life: it is life itself. That which is seen to matter here is not the being in possession of some metaphysical phrases more or less correct: it is the giving to one's life a sure pole, a supreme direction,—the ideal.

It is by so doing that your illustrious countryman has lifted up a banner which still avails to shelter beneath it all who think and feel nobly. Yes, religion is eternal; it answers to the first need of primitive as well as of civilized man; it will only perish with humanity itself,—or, rather, its disappearance would be the proof that degenerate humanity was about to reënter the mere animalism out of which it had emerged. And yet no dogma, no worship, no formula, can in these days of ours exhaust the religious sentiment. We must confront with each other these seemingly contradictory assertions. Woe to him who pretends that the era of religions is past! Woe to him who imagines it possible to restore to the old symbols the force they had when they leaned upon the imperturbable dogmatism of other days! With that dogmatism we, for our part, must needs dispense; we must dispense with those fixed creeds, sources of so many struggles and divisions, but sources no less of such fervent convictions; we must give up believing that it is our part to hold down others in a faith we no longer share. Spinoza was right in his horror of hypocrisy: hypocrisy is cowardly and dishonest, but, above all, hypocrisy is useless. Who is it, indeed, that is deceived here? The persistency of the higher classes in unqualifiedly patronizing, in sight of the uncultivated classes, the religious reforms of other days, will have but one effect: that of impairing their own authority at those times of crisis when it is important that the people should still believe in the reason and the virtue of a few.

Honor, then, to Spinoza, who has dared to say: "Reason before all." Reason can never be contrary to the well-understood interests of humanity. But we would remind those who are carried away by unreflecting impatience, that Spinoza never conceived of religious revolution as being aught else than a transformation of formulas. According to him, what was fundamental went on subsisting under other terms. If he, on one hand, energetically repudiated the theocratic power of the clergy, as distinguished from civil society, or the tendency of the State to occupy itself with metaphysics, on the other hand, he never denied either the State or religion: he wished the State tolerant and religion free. We wish for nothing more. One cannot impose on others beliefs one does not possess. That the believers of other days made themselves persecutors, proved them tyrannical, but at least consistent; as for us, if we were to act as they did, we should be simply absurd. Our religion is a sentiment capable of clothing itself in numerous forms. These forms are free from being equally good; but not one of them has strength or authority to expel all others. Freedom,—this is the last word of Spinoza's religious policy. Let it be the last word of ours! It is the most honest course; it may, perhaps, also be the most efficacious and certain for the progress of civilization.

Humanity, indeed, advances on the way of progress by prodigiously unequal steps. The rude and violent Esau is out of patience with the slow pace of Jacob's flock. Let us give time to all. We may not, indeed, permit simplicity and ignorance to hinder the free movements of the intellect, but let us not either interfere with the slow evolution of less active intelligences. The liberty of absurdity in these is the condition of the liberty of reason in those. Services rendered to the human mind by violence are not services after all. That such as lay no stress on truth should exercise constraint in order to obtain outward submission, what can be more natural? But we, who believe that truth is something real, and deserving of supreme respect, how can we dream of obtaining by force an adherence which is valueless except as the fruit of free conviction? We no longer admit sacramental formulas operating by their own virtue independently of the mind of him to whom they are applied. In our eyes, a belief has no worth if it be not gained by the reflection of the individual,—if he have not understood and assimilated it. A mental conviction brought about by superior order is as absolute nonsense as love obtained by force or sympathy by command. Let us promise to ourselves not only to defend our own liberty against all who seek to attack it, but, if need be, to defend the liberty of those who have not always respected ours, and who, it is probable, if they were the masters, would not respect it.

It is Holland that had the glory, more than two hundred years ago, to demonstrate the possibility of these theories by realizing them.

"Must we prove," said Spinoza, "that this freedom of thought gives rise to no serious inconvenience, and that it is competent to keep men, openly diverse in their opinions, reciprocally respectful of each other's rights? Examples abound, nor need we go far to seek them. Let us instance the town of Amsterdam, whose considerable growth—an object of admiration to other nations—is simply the fruit of this freedom. In the midst of this flourishing republic, this eminent city, men of all nations and all sects live together in most perfect concord; . . . and there is no sect, however odious, whose adepts, provided they do not offend against the rights of any, may not meet with public aid and protection before the magistrates."

Descartes was of the same opinion when he came to ask from this country the calm essential to his thinking. Later—thanks to that noble privilege of a free land so gloriously maintained by your fathers against all opponents!—your Holland became the asylum where the human intellect, sheltered from the tyrannies that overspread Europe, found air to breathe, a public to comprehend it, organs to multiply its voice, then gagged elsewhere.

Deep, assuredly, are the wounds of our age, and cruel are its perplexities. It can never be with impunity that so many problems present themselves all at once before the elements for solving them are in our possession. It is not we who have shattered that paradise of crystal, with its silver and azure gleams by which so many eyes have been ravished and consoled. But there it is in fragments; what is shattered is shattered, and never will an earnest spirit undertake the puerile task of bringing back ignorance destroyed or restoring illusions dispelled. The populations of great towns have almost everywhere lost faith in the supernatural; were we to sacrifice our convictions and our sincerity in an attempt to give it them back, we should not succeed. But the supernatural, as formerly understood, is not the ideal.

The cause of the supernatural is compromised, the cause of the ideal is untouched; it ever will be. The ideal remains the soul of the world, the permanent God, the primordial, efficient, and final cause of this universe. This is the basis of eternal religion. We, no more than Spinoza, need, in order to adore God, miracles or self-interested prayers. So long as there be in the human heart one fibre to vibrate at the sound of what is true, just, and honest; so long as the instinctively pure prefer purity to life; so long as there be found friends of truth ready to sacrifice their repose to science; friends of goodness to devote themselves to useful and holy works of mercy; woman-hearts to love whatever is worthy, beautiful, and pure; artists to render it by sound, and color, and inspired accents,—so long will God live in us. It could only be when egoism, meanness of soul, narrowness of mind, indifference to knowledge, contempt for human rights, oblivion of what is great and noble, invaded the world,—it could only be then that God would cease to be in humanity. But far from us thoughts like these!

Our aspirations, our sufferings, our very faults and rashness, are the proof that the ideal lives in us. Yes, human life is still something divine! Our apparent negations are often merely the scruples of timid minds that fear to overpass the limits of their knowledge. They are a worthier homage to the Divinity than the hypocritical adoration of a spirit of routine. God is still in us; believe it. God is in us! Est Deus in vobis.

Let us all unite in bending before the great and illustrious thinker who, two hundred years ago, proved better than any other, both by the examples of his life and by the power, still fresh and young, of his works, how much there is of spiritual joy and holy unction in thoughts like these. Let us, with Schleiermacher, pay the homage of the best we can do to the ashes of the holy and misunderstood Spinoza:—"The sublime spirit of the world penetrated him; the infinite was his beginning and his end; the universal his only and eternal love. Living in holy innocence and profound humility, he contemplated himself in the eternal world, and saw that he, too, was for that world a mirror worthy of love. He was full of religion and full of the holy spirit; and therefore he appears to us solitary and unequalled, master in his art, but lifted above the profane, without disciples, and without right of citizenship anywhere."

That right of citizenship you are now about to confer on him. Your monument will be the link between his genius and the earth. His spirit will brood like a guardian angel over the spot where his rapid journey among men came to its end. Woe to him who, in passing by, should dare to level an insult at that gentle and pensive figure! He would be punished as all vulgar hearts are punished,—by his very vulgarity and his impotence to comprehend the divine. Spinoza, meanwhile, from his granite pedestal shall teach to all the way of happiness he himself had found; and for ages to come the cultivated man who passes along the Pavilioengracht will inwardly say, "It is hence, perhaps, that God has been seen most near!"—Contemporary Review.

BOSTON AND THE STRIKE.

AN OPEN-AIR WORKINGMEN'S MEETING.—ADJOURNED SESSION AT HAMPSHIRE HALL.—SPEECHES BY W. H. G. SMART AND J. M. L. BARCOCK.

In response to an advertisement in one of the daily papers, evidently penned by some one deeply in sympathy with the railroad employes now on a strike in different sections of the country, and displayed with inflammable head lines in large type, an out-door mass meeting was held in the small fenced inclosure of the city's domain in front of the Providence Railway depot last evening. The call purported to be an invitation of the Boston Section of the Workingmen's Party "to consider the outrage and wrong which have already driven the railroad employes in five States to the last desperate expedient to obtain justice, culminating in the wanton destruction of human life and imperilling the peace of the whole country."

Though there was no general idea that there was any element in Boston desirous of creating any trouble, or that this occasion would be seized upon for any disgraceful demonstration, it was deemed judicious to take some precautionary measures against the possibility that some persons of unduly excitable temperament might by some overzealous enthusiasm disturb the harmony which has usually prevailed at the meetings which have been held under similar auspices on the spot upon recent Saturday evenings to discuss different phases of the labor question. In this the city and State authorities cordially cooperated.

The meeting was called by several well known labor agitators, some of whose names appear among the speakers, and whose ideas are familiar to those who have attended the labor gatherings in the city for the past few years. It gave no evidence of having been called to create a disturbance, but simply that it seemed to them a favorable opportunity to advance their favorite theories in the presence of an audience somewhat larger than usual. In fact Hampshire and Cotton and John A. Andrew and Codman Halls have frequently echoed much more incendiary utterances from the lips of those who participate in Labor League or Social Reform Conventions. Many persons supposed that there would at least be a large crowd of people present, prompted by curiosity if no other motive, but at the hour named for opening the meeting the inclosure was occupied by a score or two of street Arabs, gambolling and frolicking in a good-natured manner, and on the rail was seated quite a number of people who were curious to see what sort of a demonstration it would prove to be. Pretty soon the speakers entered the inclosure provided with a small box for a rostrum, a small but dense circle was formed around them, and the speaking went on. The crowd slowly increased in numbers until there might have been at one time fifteen hundred people in the vicinity; but then the departures were more frequent than the arrivals, and while the good-natured demonstrations of the auditors made it somewhat annoying for the speakers, the audience was largely depleted in numbers before it was decided to adjourn the meeting to Hampshire Hall.

There was an attempt at one time to organize a side issue upon the prolific question of finance, but the speaker, whoever he was, was unable to make himself heard above the outcries, and subsided. After the departure of the speakers for Hampshire Hall a crowd remained for some time, cheering and making other noisy demonstrations which were generally, however, of a good-natured character. Finally the box which had been used as a rostrum was broken up and the pieces distributed to the crowd as souvenirs of the occasion, and the boys started for Hampshire Hall. Mr. Thomas J. Gargan did a very commendable thing in requesting the liquor saloons in the vicinity to close, a request which was generally complied with.

THE MEETING

was called to order at about a quarter to eight o'clock by a gentleman who mounted himself on an empty dry-goods box and announced that "this meeting is called by the Boston section of the Workingmen's party. The first business is to nominate a Chairman. You will please make a nomination."

MR. W. H. G. SMART

was nominated, and on taking the chair sharply intimated that the first requisite was order. The speeches which would be made were intended for their benefit, and the speakers had a right to expect a patient hearing. They were not stump speakers, and that fact must be taken into consideration. They were assembled to discuss subjects which were exciting public attention, and upon which the welfare of the whole country depends. The Workingmen's party feel a deep interest in these troubles that are breaking out in the West and in other parts of the country. We are not here to excite the people to anything like animosity against any class or interest. We are here simply to state the facts of the case, and to point out the remedy for the evils of the past. (Applause.)

Friends, I will now introduce to you the first speaker on this occasion, and when I tell you it is a gentleman who, like myself, has never been accustomed to speaking in the open air, I have said enough to give him your careful and attentive hearing. (A voice, "Where is the militia?" followed by derisive laughter.) He is a man who is among the teachers of the community—(a voice, "Is he a Democrat?") the editor of one of our newspapers, who has devoted himself freely to the cause of the people, Mr. J. M. L. Babcock. (Applause.)

SPEECH OF J. M. L. BABCOCK.

It is a very old custom (cries of "Order," and "What is his salary?") in times of great trouble and public danger to meet for consultation, and I suppose it is in this spirit that we have come here to-night; and certainly I come here in entire sympathy with my fellowmen. I have no feeling or purpose that does not sympathize with what is best for my fellowmen, and I came here in that spirit and purpose. I don't know as I would have come here to-night to speak on this topic while the result is still so uncertain, and while there is still so much excitement about it, except that I am considerably stirred up myself to find that all public expression in this city, so far as I have known, has been altogether on one side of this question.

A voice—"Which side?"

Mr. Babcock—"On the side of capital."

The voice (emphatically)—"No, sir," followed by cries of "Which side are you on?" "Don't mind; go ahead."

Mr. Babcock (good naturedly)—Now boys, I see how it is with you. You think I am something like the barber's razor; but I ain't. The barber says to the gentleman, "Does the razor take hold pretty well?" "Yes," says he, "the razor takes hold first-rate, but it don't let go worth a cent." (Laughter.) I ain't of that sort. Just be patient and I will come to the subject, if you will give me time.

Mr. Babcock then made an appeal for order, and hoped all present would keep calm, and if any wished to refute his arguments they should have the opportunity when he got through. (Cries of "He is an old man," and "Put that fellow out," meaning a partially intoxicated and boisterous man in the vicinity of the dry-goods box.) Mr. Babcock continued: I came here because the public expression of opinion upon this question which is now agitating the country has been altogether on one side of the question. (Hear, hear.) In a time like this, if a man undertakes to apply the moral and to teach the lesson that grows out of these troubles he should aspire at least to some spirit of fairness and impartiality. I suppose it is understood that in all heated conflicts there must be, at least, some blame on both sides. We must be perfect human beings to have it otherwise; but it has been constantly assumed in everything that has been said by the press, so far as I have seen in this city on this question, that in these disturbances and troubles the trainmen and the strikers were altogether and only to blame. I don't see it, and I wish to offset my opinion against that. I wish to present a brief view of the reasons why we are not to visit our condemnation altogether on one side in this affair. I wish to show why we are not to hold the workingmen of these railroads responsible for these troubles.

We came here to talk about riots and mobs. It is no new subject to an American audience. ("No!" "No!") We have been accustomed to mobs. All through our history we have had riots. We have had riots of every kind. We have had riots for almost every possible cause, and we have had riots of every character. (A voice—"That is what formed the country.") The riots that we are now to talk about have been marked by more self-possession and by more calmness of judgment on the part of the rioters than any of the riots that have marked our history; but a riot in itself is not a thing of infamy. Why, our official existence began in a riot! (Applause.) The very first flash of American Independence came from a riot in Boston (applause); and if you had read the London journals of that day you might have seen perhaps this platitude: "The people of Boston have a perfect right to decline to purchase tea if they choose; but they have no right to throw it overboard if they don't want to buy it." Every Boston paper quotes the same platitudes with wearisome repetition to-day, that a man has a right to decline to work for the wages that are offered him if he chooses; but he has no right to say that another man shall not work where he will not work for the wages offered. That is about all the moral doctrine that is laid down as the basis of judgment on this question. But what does that amount to? If Vanderbilt says to the trainmen on his road, "You are part and parcel of us," it seems to me that they do have some right to say who shall work on that road. (Applause.) Taking these men on their own ground, taking them by the doctrine they themselves proclaim, how, I ask, can they escape from the conclusion that it is the right of the trainmen to say who shall take their places when they strike.

We do not wish to say anything to add to the public excitement; but the press of Boston, whether in the interest of capital or not I will not say, whether through a mistake of judgment I will not say, have yet failed to lay down the foundation principle in this whole matter. (Applause.) The foundation principle is that "the laborer is worthy of his hire" (applause,) and if a man does an honest day's work he is entitled to honest pay for that work. (Renewed applause.) The very railroad whose action precipitated all this agitation has been paying eight or ten per cent. dividends per annum, and that, too, on watered stock. Such a corporation has no right to cut down the wages of the laborers, and reduce them to mere starvation for the sake of increasing its own gains and profits. It was the right of these men to be heard by these railroad officials. And what was left to them but to resort to a species of riot or war? They strike and blockade the roads as the only resort left them. What do nations do? Declare war; and the world has been again and again deluged with blood on account of the haste with which men have rushed in to shed blood. We thought arbitration was the means of avoiding war; and is it not a good way between employers and employed to settle their differences by arbitration? I am opposed to all violence and in favor of peace, and I charge the railroad officials and their abettors as being responsible for the results of the past few days. (Applause.) If these officials could not agree with these men, they should arbitrate; but they would not hold even a conference! The trainmen have acted like nations, simply blockaded the ports of the railroads. There was no violence until the men were stung to it. Everything was orderly until then. It was not until the military were called out and fired on the mob that these men were driven to madness and violence. I admit the military had some excuse at Baltimore; it is more than human nature can stand,—a shower of brickbats. At Pittsburgh and Reading there was no occasion for the firing by the soldiers; but then the working men did not lose their sense of right and wrong, and respected private property. (Applause.) This is the mark of the best sort of American mob, which remains true to its purpose. The militia is to be held responsible for the fatal acts.

At this point Mr. Smart said it was impossible for the speakers to be heard on account of the noise, and he hoped some member of the Boston Section of the Workingmen's Party would move an adjournment to Hampshire Hall, which was complied with.

AT HAMPSHIRE HALL.

A portion of the crowd from Park Square went to Hampshire Hall on Washington Street, near Elliot, and the first rush up the dark stairs filled the ill-lighted, badly-ventilated place of meeting. A meeting was organized in the midst of derisive yells and hoots, and then, when the speaking began, the crowd commenced to withdraw, so that during the last hour of the speaking only a score or two of persons were present. The speakers were the same old lot and the sentiments, incoherently expressed in most cases, were of the same old kind. The meeting broke up at 9.45, after having adopted the following resolutions:—

"WHEREAS, The workingmen's party of the United States is a political organization having for its purpose such a powerful reform of our industrial system as will take the control of our national industries, means of transport and communication, and all other national resources of wealth, out of the hands of monopolists and put them under the ballot of the people; and

"WHEREAS, The evils that have been constantly accumulating from the operation of the false principles in our social system, through which individual interests have been allowed to supersede public interests, and which have now culminated in actual war between the great mass of the people and the small minority of capitalists, who monopolize all the accumulated results of the past industry of the people, and who are fast obtaining the monopoly of our Commonwealth; and who, by virtue of which monopoly of the means of labor, have obtained the monopoly of all other public interests, including the executive and legislative functions of government, and have thus endangered the cherished and sacred institutions of the Republic; therefore—

"Resolved, That the Boston section of the workingmen's party, while it does not believe that the correction of the evils and abuses thus recited can be obtained by such methods as are now in operation in the great conflict raging throughout the country, and while it deprecates and deplors all violation of existing laws, either on the side of capital or on that of labor, and while it holds both parties, who are rivals in the present conflict, responsible for its results; nevertheless, it cannot withhold its deep and heartfelt sympathy from the oppressed laborers who have been driven to desperation by their wrongs.

"Resolved, That while we earnestly desire the restoration of peace and order and the supremacy of the law, we utterly repudiate the idea that the responsibility for the terrible events of the past few days rests wholly, or even largely, on the men who were the first to act in opposition to the law. We hold the employers of these men—the great soulless incorporated companies—the most guilty parties. But, back of these, we recognize the responsibility of the nation that permits such false relations to exist between its citizens, that are productive of so alarming results, and that threaten its very existence with anarchy and destruction.

"Resolved, That this Section commends to the civil authority the restoration of peace and order, with the least possible use of military power, and with the utmost forbearance, and invites all our fellow-citizens to a sincere investigation of the present relations of labor to capital, and to candid consideration of the claims of the former.

"Resolved, That, in our judgment, the daily press of this city is guilty of attempting to mislead public opinion in favor of the interest of capital as against labor, and hence is not worthy of the support of workingmen, and is to be held responsible for having aided considerably in prolonging and intensifying the present troubles."—Boston Journal, July 25.

WOMEN ARE FORGING right ahead in England as in this country. The senate of the university of London lately heard a petition of two hundred men doctors against the granting of medical degrees to women, the protest being grounded awfully on their fear of competition. The senate concluded to go on with its degree-granting, however. The chief prize in applied mathematics and mechanics in the university was won this year by Miss Ellen M. Watson, over a hundred or so young men; she has also won the Meyer de Rothschild scholarship of $250 per year. When Prof. Clifford called out her name for the honor, he said here was the finest mathematical mind he had ever met with in a pupil of either sex, and that a few more students like her would raise the young university above the older institutions. And yet Miss Watson is young and pretty. She was not the only woman to win distinction in the college; for Prof. Huxley's daughter Marion took the first prize in art, Miss Constance D'Arcy the first in art anatomy, and Miss Orme, sister of Prof. Masson's wife, gained the Joseph Hume scholarship in jurisprudence. We observe that the Paris faculty of medicine have given a doctor's diploma to Zenaide Oukonoff, a young Russian woman, at the same time complimenting her highly on her scientific attainments.—Springfield Republican.

GEORGE FRANCIS TRAIN talks at the rate of two hundred and fifty words a minute and occasionally pauses for breath. These pauses seem to annoy him, and it is his habit to fill them by putting the question before the house and calling for the yeas and nays. His auditors always like to make a noise, and an affirmative response follows as a matter of course, and then the lecturer, having regained his breath, proceeds with his remarks. An audience at Rochester on June 6, was betrayed by these tactics into a very unfortunate expression of opinion. He had been complaining that Christianity consigned to perdition such persons as Shakespeare, Byron, Franklin, and Washington, who were not within the pale of church membership. "If I ever know a hereafter," he exclaimed, "I want to be where I can feel the wondrous influence of these great men, and I want to be able to grasp their extended hands, even if I have to go to hell to do it. And, by the way," he added, gasping for breath, and apprehending the approach of a pause, "all those in favor of going to hell with me say 'Aye.'" From all quarters of the house came mechanically the thundering response "Aye!" Then they straightened themselves in their chairs, and reflected calmly on the pleasure-trip to which they had prematurely committed themselves.—N. Y. Tribune.

Poetry.

ON A NAUGHTY LITTLE BOY, SLEEPING.

Just now I missed from hall and stair
A joyful treble that had grown
As dear to me as that grave tone
That tells the world my older care.

And little footsteps on the floor
Were stayed. I laid aside my pen,
Forgot my theme, and listened,—then
Stole softly to the library door.

No sight! no sound! a moment's freak
Of fancy thrilled my pulses through;
"If—no!"—and yet, that fancy drew
A father's blood from heart and cheek.

And then—I found him! There he lay,
Surprised by sleep, caught in the act,
The rosy Vandal who had sacked
His little town and thought it play:

The shattered vase; the broken jar;
A match still smouldering on the floor;
The inkstand's purple pool of gore;
The chessmen scattered near and far.

Strewn leaves of albums lightly pressed
This wicked "Baby of the Woods";
In fact, of half the household goods
This son and heir was seized—possessed.

Yet all in vain, for sleep had caught
The hand that reached, the feet that strayed;
And fallen in that ambushade
The victor was himself o'erwrought.

What though torn leaves and tattered book
Still testified his deep disgrace!
I stooped and kissed the lanky face,
With its demure and calm outlook.

Then back I stole, and half-beguiled
My guilt, in trust that when my sleep
Should come, there might be One who'd keep
An equal mercy for His child.

—Bret Harte, in Harper's Magazine for July.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 28.

Fritz Schuetz, 25 cents; H. McHugh, $3.68; J. S. Howes, 10 cents; Mary E. Sawyer, $3; E. Wilcox, $1; E. L. Houghton, $1.20; F. Hyde, $5; J. A. Heinzelman, $3.20; A. Stewart, $3.50; M. A. Plam, $3.30; R. S. Barker, $2.20; Dr. J. F. Noyes, $3.20; W. L. Taylor, $3.20; E. H. Aldrich, $3.20; R. Burnham, $1.60; J. W. James, 80 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 2, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. ORRNEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

During the month of August, my friend, Mr. SIDNEY H. MORSE, will assume entire editorial charge of THE INDEX, and relieve me of all literary responsibility on its account. All letters and communications should be addressed, as usual, to "THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston."

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

F. E. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The report of the recent annual meeting of the Free Religious Association has been published in the usual pamphlet form, and can be obtained at the office 231 Washington Street, or at A. Williams & Co.'s, corner of Washington and School Streets, Boston. It contains the Essay by Rev. W. R. Alger on "Steps Towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and the Essay by Mr. C. D. B. Mills, on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; also Addresses by Messrs O. B. Frothingham, William Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson,—with tenth annual reports of the executive committee, treasurer, etc. Price, single copy, forty cents; four, or more, twenty-five cents each.

Persons sending for it by mail will address, "Free Religious Association," 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE BOSTON Sunday Herald of July 29 pleasingly mentions a friend of ours: "Mr. J. L. Stoddard, of this city, has just very successfully concluded in Bangor the course of lectures on European and Oriental cities which he delivered last winter in the parlors of the 'Bellevue,' at Andover, Anburndale, and other places."

THIS SENTENCE by Mr. Frothingham in a recent issue of the New York Inquirer deserves the attention of all who write about religious questions: "Perfect intellectual equity seems to be unattainable. A sentimental vapor called charity, which envelopes all distinctions in mist and then makes believe they are not there, is put forward as a substitute for the manly veracity that stands on intelligence and reason, and gives honorable entertainment to all opinions, awarding praise or blame according to their claims."

MR. WILLIAM D. LE SUEUR, of Ottawa, joins this week the number of our editorial contributors. He is a native of Canada, a graduate of Toronto University, and the author of some outspoken articles on theological questions in the Canadian press, particularly in the Canadian Monthly. Our readers will doubtless remember several thoughtful communications from him to these columns during the past few years; and his present article on "True and False Liberalism" shows that he is one to whom that word stands, not for mere negation or disbelief, but for something far higher and better than the Orthodoxy which it is gradually supplanting.

AS ANNOUNCED in the above "Notice," Mr. Sidney H. Morse, formerly editor of the Boston Radical, will edit this journal during the month of August, excepting only the present issue. Mental exhaustion, consequent on three years of uninterrupted editorial labor, warned us, though not sick, to ask for a month's vacation this summer, which the Directors of the Index Association very kindly and cheerfully granted. It is a perilous experiment to abdicate, even for a few weeks, in favor of so dangerously excellent a substitute; and we are prepared on returning to find our readers clamorous for an indefinite prolongation of our leave of absence! But it is pleasant to know that, come what may, the stout little ship will be guided meanwhile by a tried and faithful pilot; and we shall gladly resign her helm for good to any one who will only keep her headed straighter on her course.

THE RIGHT OF RIOT.

We have all heard of the "right of revolution"; that is something not unfamiliar to readers of American history. But it is perhaps a new thing to hear of the right of riot. At a recent meeting in this city, however, which may be found reported on a preceding page of the present issue, this important discovery was announced by one of the speakers. This speaker had a good word to say for riots in the abstract: "A riot in itself is not a thing of infamy." He had also many good words to say for the late riots in particular, since he holds the remarkable opinion that "it is the right of the trainmen to say who shall take their places when they strike."

1. Is it true that "a riot in itself is not a thing of infamy"?

A revolution is the forcible overthrow of one government for the purpose of establishing another government in its stead. But a riot is an attempt to overthrow all government without the purpose of establishing another in its stead,—which is an attempt to establish anarchy. Revolutions may or may not be permanently successful; riots can never be, for the end of all continued anarchy is military despotism. If in any civilized country the government, either from imbecility or from bad intent, fails to afford efficient protection to the fundamental rights of the citizens, revolution is inevitable and justifiable; society must protect these rights, and does not discharge a sacred duty in supplanting such a government by a better one. But nothing can ever justify a riot. It is everywhere and always a "thing of infamy." A good citizen is justifiable in refusing to obey a law which he cannot obey without violating his own conscience; but he must limit himself to the passive resistance of non-obedience—must break the law and endure the penalty as best he can. He may indeed find it his duty to engage in a revolution, but never in a riot; for a riot is the destruction of all moral order in society, while every justifiable revolution is an attempt to establish this moral order on a surer foundation. Riot is everywhere and always the extinction of the human in a wild outburst of the bestial. There never was a mob yet that did not rush with frightful rapidity to "unchain the tiger" of savage and unbridled passions. Fire and blood are its natural goal; and if it is true that "by their fruits ye shall know them," then "a riot is always a thing of infamy"—Mr. Babcock to the contrary notwithstanding.

The instance he quotes is not to the point. If the famous destruction of tea in Boston Harbor in December, 1773, had been an isolated act, it would have been a riot, and as such utterly indefensible. But it was not an isolated act. On the contrary, it was simply one in a long series of acts which together constituted one of the most completely justifiable revolutions that the world has ever seen. It was in no sense a riot; it neither aimed at anarchy nor produced it; it was a deed of stern resistance to the British government, prompted by passionate devotion to the loftiest principles of civil liberty and true moral order; and, though it was certainly a deed of violence, it was only such violence as culminated at Yorktown in the capture of Lord Cornwallis and at Philadelphia in the final adoption of the United States Constitution. It is only as a part of this great drama of revolution, only as one of the earliest throes which brought the birth of a new and mighty nation, that the destruction of the tea is entitled to honorable remembrance. Had it been a riot, it would have deserved, as all riots deserve, the unmitigated detestation of mankind.

Was there any analogy between this historic deed of heroism and the late railroad strike? Not the faintest. This was simply a quarrel about wages between corporations and their employes—both being merely private parties so far as the government is concerned. The strikers undertook by force, ending in conflagration, rapine, murder, and speedily suppressed rebellion, to compel their employers to pay higher wages. The means they used was outrage upon the rights of the entire body of their own unemployed fellow-laborers, outrage upon the rights of the entire public, outrage upon the rights of society and the freely chosen "government of the people, by the people, for the people."

The strike was a riot, and nothing else, in its essential idea and purpose, and not a revolution. It was a riot because for a brief period it overthrew by violence the fundamental principles of all organized society—equity, freedom of contract, personal liberty, security of property and life. It was an insurrection against all government, all order, all law but mob-law; it was the invocation of universal anarchy, and met deservedly the fate of all such mad appeals—suppression by the military power of the imperilled and outraged government. It was a riot, and therefore, in the estimation of every citizen not swept away by the delirium of reckless and unscrupulous partisanship, "a thing of infamy," and nothing else.

2. Is it true that "it is the right of the trainmen to say who shall take their places when they strike"?

True? A moral proposition more untrue was never uttered. As well tell the disappointed bidders for a government contract that they have the right to decide who shall have it; as well tell the domestic dismissed from your employ that she has the right to decide whom you shall hire in her stead; as well tell the grocers not patronized by Mr. Babcock, that they have the right to decide where he shall buy his flour. Freedom of contract is the very essence of modern civilization, the very citadel of civilized institutions. If the discharged trainmen of a railroad company have the right to dictate whom the company shall hire in their place, the company have just as good a right to dictate what other company their discharged trainmen themselves shall serve. The matter is just as long as it is broad. Freedom of contract means that both parties shall have the right of making or not making a contract as they please,—that, when they have made it, they shall execute it faithfully,—and that, when the contract is ended, each party shall be free to go about his business unmolested. Anything more than this is tyranny on one side or the other. The trouble with the strikers in this case is that they have tried to tyrannize over the companies, over their own unemployed fellows, and over the community at large. The defeat of this strike was foreordained, because the strikers attempted to tyrannize over so many parties that they could not but be overwhelmed by the indignant resistance of their would-be victims. And the very kindest thing that could be done to those who had appealed to riot as their friend was to put them down in the shortest, and therefore the most merciful way.

What has been said by the New York Tribune, as follows, is strictly true:—

The issue between the rioters and the companies never was really a question of wages; the point involved was nothing less than personal liberty. The railways offered to pay a certain price for a certain kind of labor. Ten thousand hungry men came forward to accept the wages; thereupon the strikers seized guns, torches, and brickbats, exclaiming, "No, you shall not work for a dollar and a half, or for any other sum, because we wish to be paid two dollars!" What compromise is possible with an outrage like that?

And again:—

It may be granted, without helping their case in the least, that they did not participate in or instigate the robbery and burning which disgraced that city [Pittsburgh]. Accounts differ widely; probably the truth is that some of the strikers did, while others did not, countenance or aid the destruction of railway property. But the responsibility lies farther back. Every striker made war upon all civilized society when he countenanced the stopping of trains. He robbed the railway company, which had a right to employ cheaper labor if it could. He robbed other laborers, who had a right to sell their services at the price offered if they pleased. He violated the laws of the State, undertook an armed revolution [riot], and necessarily emboldened all the dangerous and desperate classes to join in the war against rights of property. He who fires a shot into a crowd without authority is a murderer, though he may have had no malice toward the person killed. He who instigates a riot or revolutionary outbreak is not less responsible for the excesses and crimes which will follow.

We were once (and only once, so far as we know) accused of callousness to the wrongs and sufferings of labor. It was false at the time, as he well knew who said it (though we never noticed it); and it would be just as false to-day, if the stale slander should be revived. That the selfish lust of dividends leads often to cruel graspingness on the part of corporations is, alas, a fact which no honest man denies. In prosperous times we doubt not that the profits earned are distributed unequally and unjustly; and no lover of justice and humanity will for an instant apologize for the greed which drives a hard bargain with the poor because of their piteous necessities. The "accursed hunger of gold" blinds many an eye and steels many a heart; and every just person must long for some system of coöperation which, by identifying the interests of employer and employed, shall make them friends, and not enemies. Especially in these days of bitter want and woe, when honest industry reaps so meagre a reward, and when so many who would fain be industrious can find no work at all for the feeding of themselves and their dear ones, he must have the heart of an alligator who does not ache inwardly at the sight of so much human pain. But, unless he be an idiot, the beholder will not charge the pain to avarice alone; he will not forget the fact that, under the stimulus of a multiplied machinery which enables one workman (as among the paper-makers) to produce as much as eighteen used to do, the whole civilized world suffers from the effects of over-production, and that neither justice, philanthropy, nor strikes can possibly avert a general fall of wages in a glut of the labor market. Mr. McCormick, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, has stated a view of the whole matter which has too much truth to be overlooked:—

[The causes of the present trouble are], first, the want of confidence caused by enormous losses in all kinds of investments made during a period of great inflation; second, the falling off of the demand for manufactured products, especially of iron. This is not caused in any respect by the want of currency, but by over-production, not only in this country but in all the markets of the world. The present distress is general among commercial nations, with this strong advantage in favor of the United States,—that here our farming interests are in the highest degree prosperous, our crops are good, and our markets are excellent, mainly because of the war in Europe. In comparison with other nations, our financial condition is far better than any other, and now, just at the time when our prospects are most hopeful, comes this strike of laborers against labor. This effort of men now employed against men unemployed, this refusal to allow laborers to make their own contracts, forces distress and ruin merely that certain men now in employment should be kept in employment and paid higher wages. In the natural course of things, when crops commenced to move, wages would have advanced, and soon the money set in motion by the crops would quicken all industries and give employment to many idle people. The money now lying idle is ready for active use the moment it can be safely employed. A long period of dejection was about to be followed with activity and industry. Surely nothing has happened in the history of mankind so plainly injudicious as the present movement to prevent laboring men from working. Even if they were asked to work for insufficient wages, they had no right to prevent other people from working. The first effect of their movement is to make it still more difficult to get food and labor, and to bring distress upon the very class of people to which they claim to belong.

Instead of being heartless or indifferent towards the wrongs and woes of labor, we do not believe that there is one, among all the ignorant or cunning mischief-makers that have incited or excused the late excesses, whose sympathies for honest and peaceable laborers are profounder or tenderer than our own. We commiserate, far more deeply than we can express, their sufferings in this trying hour, and deplore our powerlessness to remove their causes. But there can be no way out of them that involves rioting or reckless disregard of equal rights; and for nothing do we pity the well-intentioned strikers more than for the fact that evil advisers have led them at once into the crime of riot and into its certain consequence—greater misery. May they have better and wiser friends hereafter! Such a circular as the following, which was distributed about New York city the other day, shows that not all workmen will submit to be fooled by the crazy counsels of misguided or interested leaders; and we print it here because it will have greater weight as the word of a workman who has not been misled by them:—

"Don't Unchain the Tiger!"

TO THE RAILROAD AND WORKINGMEN:

Comrades,—Stand still where you are, and think before you go further in the troubles around us. An hour's work may cost millions of money and hundreds of lives! All the lives lost will not be on one side only, and the money will come back on the people to be paid for out of the taxes on us all. Powder burns more than one hand when it is used. Don't burn your hands with it!

These strikes are doing great damage to business, and will cost a great deal of money. Neither capital nor labor can afford to stand such heavy losses, and it is better to work on, knowing that a peaceable and honorable course will gain in the end, than by doing wrong to get an advantage that cannot last.

Keep on the side of law, and keep the law on your side! If we want to right our wrongs, we must keep in the path of right.

There is a great deal of talk about capital being the enemy of labor. This is not true. Capital and labor must work together. The capitalist and the laborer are partners in business, and it requires good faith on both sides to make business profitable. Neither can prosper alone.

Beware of men who talk violence, riots, and bloodshed! They are your worst enemies. All the expenses and losses and damages will be paid by the city or State, and only add so much the more to your taxes. Every workman who talks about riots is preparing to lay more taxes on his own shoulders. The times are hard now. Will you make them harder? The best way is to go to work, keep the wheels moving in all branches of business, and avoid everything that makes an unfriendly feeling with those who have all the risks of the business, both for themselves and you.

Turn away from bad advisers, and above all "don't unchain the tiger!" A WORKINGMAN.

NEW YORK, July 24, 1877.

TRUE AND FALSE LIBERALISM.

"He who desires the office of a bishop," said the great apostle, "desires a good thing." Similarly we may say that he who desires the name of "liberal" desires a good thing. But just as a man might wish to be a bishop without being fit for the office, so many a man decorates himself with the name of "liberal," for whom "illiberal," "bigot," "egotist," "fault-finder" would be far more fitting designations.

What is it, let us ask, to be "a liberal" in any worthy sense of the word? We should say, in the first place, that a man cannot be a liberal who is not in hearty sympathy with his fellowmen,—not merely with the chosen few upon whom, perchance, he bestows his friendship, but with the great human family, the vast organism of which we all are parts. If a man is not in sympathy with his fellowmen; if he regards their opinions and habits and pursuits simply with a more or less contemptuous tolerance; if he sees in them simply the upholders of error, overlooking the fact that it is they, with all their imperfections, who give force and volume to every healthy moral sentiment, and that in them lie infinite possibilities of good; if he emphasizes all the points of difference between himself and the masses around him, and habitually overlooks all that he has in common with them,—what form, I ask, can that man's liberalism take? Is it liberalism or liberality merely to hold a great number of negative propositions? "The liberal man," the Scriptures say, "deviseth liberal things." What liberal things can this man devise? Supposing—a supposition that does not always hold good—that he is willing to make some sacrifices for the propagation of the opinions to which he himself adheres, we require to know in what spirit he does it before we can decide whether his course of action is liberal or not. It is liberal, if, and in so far as, he has had the general interests of society in view; it is illiberal if his main motive has been a spirit of opposition to other men's opinions, or a desire to bring into relief his own superiority, to current errors. The spirit of party or of clique is an illiberal spirit. A man must associate himself with others if he wants to give his views effect; but a minority which does not aim consciously and sincerely at the good of the majority is an illiberal faction, let it call itself by what name it will.

The great object with certain men who call themselves liberals is to bring Orthodox opinions into contempt; to cause every cherished symbol of the past to be trodden under foot; and one cannot therefore help asking what they would do, if the Christian religion were suddenly to lose credit with the world at large and sink definitively to the position to which they are so anxious to consign it. Their work would be done; their dream would be fulfilled; but would they be happy? I trow not. They would want another system to despise, just as Alexander wanted another world to conquer; for to these persons the habit of carping and contemptuous criticism has become a second nature, and they would have a most desolate, and, as the French say, desœuvré feeling, if the familiar objects of their contempt were suddenly withdrawn.

In the second place, I would say that the true liberal must be one who has risen from a lower to a higher view of things, from a lower to a higher standard of duty, and who, in so far as he has cast aside the opinions in which he was educated, has done so in simple allegiance to truth. Every man who claims the name of liberal should be prepared to answer the summons of St. James: "Show me thy faith (or thy liberalism) by thy works." He should be prepared to show not merely that he has abandoned, but that he has risen above, the Orthodoxy of society at large. He has burst his bonds asunder; what, then, is he doing with his liberty? What better things is he doing than those who are still bound? His mind and soul were cramped by old traditions. In what direction then are they tending now that the traditions have lost their power? Are they exulting in a free, noble, and beneficent activity, or have the chains of self grown heavier as the chains of doctrine have grown lighter? If a man has absolutely nothing to show in the way of quickened impulses to good, a steadier allegiance to truth, not merely doctrinal, but moral and practical,—a more habitual preference of good to evil in all the transactions of life,—then I say that man's liberalism is vain. What is it to me if a man holds all the disbeliefs of all the ages, if he is not one whit better than my Orthodox neighbor? Am I going to make much of him on account of what he does not believe? Not if I know it.

Many men plume themselves on their fidelity to truth, simply because they have been bold enough to avow their rejection of the current Orthodoxy. In these days, however, the penalties attaching to "infidelity" are not very serious, and to some minds are fully counterbalanced by the advantages of the situation. Before, therefore, we can regard any man as a shining light, we must know whether he makes as much of truth in all matters as he professes to make of it in relation to theology. Does he follow out all arguments to their legitimate conclusions, or is there a point at which he begins to be evasive or simply perverse? Above all does he make practical application of the truths that he recognizes? Is he a consistent man? If he is, then he is one whom we all should honor; he is a worthy standard-bearer of the "liberal" cause; but if not, then shall his "liberalism" alone be a title to honor? Hardly, I should say.

Once more, the true liberal according to my conception, should be a man of ideals. Discontent with any existing system implies conception of, and a desire for, something better. The liberal is dissatisfied with Christianity as represented by the churches of the day; he finds fault with the motives it brings to bear upon men; he condemns the restrictions it places upon reason and conscience. Evidently, then, he is "seeking a better country," though perhaps he might not add "even an heavenly." He has his dream of the future of society. He has his own lofty conception of what human life ought to be, may be, and will be. And of course he is laboring for the realization of his hopes. His gaze is onward; but what his hands find to do for the good cause he is doing with his might. Are there any claiming the "liberal" name of whom none of this is true,—who have no desires, no hopes, no aspirations beyond the common, who feel no interest in a general elevation of morality, and no call to a higher life themselves? Perhaps there are.

Lastly the "liberal" should be a man of faith—do not start, sceptical friends!—and he should, like the just, live by faith. That is to say, he should live and walk in the strength of great principles; he should believe in law, and should continually seek to adapt himself to the permanent truths of existence. The questions with him are, What kind of a world is this into which I have been born, and what is the course of action to which I am bound as an intelligent and moral being? A child of the earth, he will not rail at that which gave him being; he will not lightly speak evil of the laws and processes that have moulded him to his present state. He will take evil with good and be thankful. The charter of his liberties is the permanence of Nature's laws, and, armed with a reason capable of investigating those laws, he feels assured of a progressive improvement in the conditions of his life upon the earth. And should the whisperings of conscience, or the suggestions of philosophy, or the reasonings of science shape within his mind a belief that there is a Power of whom all that we see in heaven or on earth is but a feeble manifestation; a Power that intimately communes with the pure in heart, but to whom all mankind stand related as children to a parent, still happier is he. Upon him shall rest a peace that passeth understanding, and his hopes shall but brighten as his strength decays.

W. D. L. S.

HOME IN THE SCRIPTURES.

The ancient Scriptures, whether we regard them as poems or histories handed down from age to age by memory till Cadmus invented his alphabet, are of little more use to us in solving the mysteries of the universe, or teaching us the morality of life, than a traveller's guide-book in teaching him the geography of a continent, or rather less. This is not saying that one or the other can be dispensed with. It is only saying that if we are to travel over Europe we had better not spend all our time in car and hotel in reading Murray. And if we would learn life, and live it to good purpose, we must use our own eyes upon nature, human and other, mostly, and not those of Job, Homer, Solomon or Paul.

What strikes us in the poems and histories composed before the invention of letters, is the general absence of anything deserving to be called home, on account of the almost universal slavery of woman. Even the father of the faithful treated the mother of the faithful rather as a chattel than a wife, he having another chattel who was also a woman. See the twentieth chapter of Genesis. The repetition of the legend with regard to his son, at the court of the same king of Gerar, in the twenty-sixth chapter, gives emphasis to the fact of the degraded status of woman in those ages of chronic war. In the touching story of Ruth the Moabitess, we are told that Beaz "purchased" her to be his wife. Of the estimation of woman, and of her place in society in the days of David and Solomon, it is unnecessary to speak.

When woman herself speaks in the Hebrew Scriptures, she seems to accept the place assigned her by arbitrary man. Deborah, in her almost Homeric song, praises Jael for the treacherous murder of a fugitive enemy, and sings with unctious of Sisera's mother, destined to a cruel disappointment:—

"The mother of Sisera looked out at the window, and cried through the lattice, Why is his chariot so long in coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariots?"

"Her wise ladies answered her, yea she returned answer to herself:

"Have they not sped? have they not divided the prey; to every man a damsel or two; to Sisera a prey of divers colors, a prey of divers colors of needlework, of divers colors of needlework on both sides, meet for the necks of them that take the spoil?"

"So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord!"

Under such bloody piety as this, woman, as well as her needlework, must of course be a prey.

In the Bible of the Greeks we read of similar doings about the same period, in the neighborhood of Troy. It is all about the chattelhood of woman—grim old Achilles in his tent nursing his wrath because Apollo demanded he should restore a captive damsel to a father who happened to be his priest. In regard to woman, the only difference between the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures seems to be, that the Greeks had a higher idea of the value of woman as a chattel, and therefore fought more valiantly for the possession of her. One of the latest of the Hebrew Scriptures, composed long after the invention of letters, the book of Esther, shows that a Hebrew could make a use of woman which we can hardly believe possible for a Greek. It is not easy to believe the book anything but a pure fiction; yet, assuming it to be so, its reception into the Scripture canon shows that the Jews at its date did little honor to the nature of woman. There is not a word of commendation for the noble self-respect of Queen Vashti in refusing to be made a spectacle before a set of drunken men, and Esther is meanly offered to the tyrant who had deposed this noble queen by her own uncle, Mordecai. This is not represented as a sacrifice of Esther, but an honor, a piece of marvellous good fortune to her. Had Mordecai resorted to it as an admitted evil for the sake of saving his people from the malice of the wicked Haman, we might have a little respect left for him. But when he takes advantage of Esther's power over the tyrant, not only to hang Haman and his sons, but to massacre seventy-five thousand innocent Medes and Persians, one almost wishes to see him hanged on the same gallows. It is difficult to see how this Scripture, to use Matthew Arnold's phrase, "makes for righteousness." Its entire omission of the name of God is certainly very appropriate. If there is any gospel in it, it is the gospel of prostitution and revenge.

Yet though the ancient Scriptures are replete with evidence that woman was almost universally regarded and treated as a slave, it must not be understood that they do not furnish evidence that she ought not to be so regarded or treated. There are two unsurpassed, if not unsurpassable, pictures of the glory, joy, and sacredness of home,—one in the thirty-first chapter of Proverbs and the other in the latter part of the sixth book of the Iliad. They both shed infinite honor on woman. In the latter we look into a home, such as in that age there could have been but few, through the parting of a warrior and his wife and babe. The wife is no slave. The husband and father is no tyrant. They address each other as divine. Each is an object of worship to the other. The epithet which Homer puts in the mouth of each seems to have staggered the translators. They do not approach it in intensity.

The Hebrew picture is without the grim setting of war. It was a strangely rare one in that day, if not the pure imagination of the woman who painted it. But now it is the commonplace utilitarian English or American home. How many thousands of such in our day have realized all the paths of the parting of Hector and his divine Andromache! And yet this picture of what a woman, and none but a woman, can create in this world was probably drawn by the woman Bathsheba, one of the victims of that terrible tyranny which the male sex had so long maintained, if we may credit the commentators who think Lemuel was her pet name for Solomon. Plainly, in that lesson she did more for the morality and happiness of future ages than her son did in his gay and splendid life.

"She openeth her mouth with wisdom," says King

Lemuel's mother, "and in her tongue is the law of kindness."

What a pity that Paul did not have this Scripture in mind before he wrote, "I suffer not a woman to teach," etc. It might have prevented him from writing some of the most pernicious nonsense about woman which has ever been put forth in any language on earth,—nonsense which has been contradicted by facts and experience, and forever will be in secula seculorum. Paul made a terrible mistake, even in an ecclesiastical point of view. Paul, the celibate, and the men who have undertaken to run Christianity as a purely masculine priesthood, have made an awful botch of it. If Christianity was to be the religion of humanity, by all that is reasonable in human nature, woman should have been admitted to at least an equal share in the teaching and preaching. The men who would now save it as such, have lost their wits, or never had any, if they do not go back on Paul, and call women to their aid as equal and for this purpose more than equal to themselves.

Why, Paul had not been dead three hundred and fifty years before a Greek woman turned up at Alexandria, then the very centre of the Christian world, preaching in opposition to Christianity in the interest of a reformed and Platonized paganism, who was more than a match for any male preacher the Church could produce. The bishop of that see, Saint Cyril, is charged by the very historians of the Church with having been so smitten with rage and envy that he encouraged a mob of monks to drag her into a church and murder her. The indisputable testimony of history is that her character was as pure as that of any of the martyrs on the other side. One of her friends and correspondents was a Christian Bishop whose letters are extant, treating her with the utmost deference and respect. Had the noble and broad-souled Synesius stood in Paul's place, Hypatia might perhaps have been a Christian preacher. Her faint-hearted modern apologist, Charles Kingsley, said of her, "Hypatia is one of those whose names are glorified rather by wrongs than by merits; and had she not died, few would now know, and fewer care, whether she ever lived." Considering the unquestionable facts of the case, this was a pretty hard thing for a Christian to say. The dead woman, cut off so young, might retort on some of the worthies of the reverend gentleman's cloth with terrible effect. If scientific acquirement, reverence for truth, and masterful eloquence, are to pass for anything, Hypatia merits memory quite as much as old Origen, with his "necessitas mentiendi" (necessity of lying), which became the practical creed of the Christian hierarchy. If there is a sense in which we are saved by the blood of Jesus, in the same sense we are saved by the blood of Hypatia, John Brown, and every one who is murdered by the wicked while working to establish what he honestly believes to be right.

In the course of the next four hundred years, that celibate hierarchy evidently became conscious that Hypatia was exerting an influence on the human mind against them by the very fact of such a death, after such a life. So they manufactured a saintess on her pattern, Saint Æcaterina or Saint Catharine of Alexandria, who was said to have suffered about one hundred years before Hypatia, and put her into the calendar in the reign of the Emperor Basil, for the 24th or 25th of November. In contemporary history there is not a particle of evidence of the existence of any such woman. Yet the synaxarium of the calendar sets forth the acts of her saintship thus:—

"Æcaterina, an Alexandrian martyr, the daughter of a certain rich and noble officer, of excellent beauty and genius, when she had made herself familiar with Greek literature, applied herself also to the philosophical sciences, and cultivated the languages of all nations. But when an idolatrous feast-day was observed by the Greeks, and she saw a multitude of animals slaughtered, she went in sadness to the Emperor Maximin and expostulated with him, saying, Wherefore, having forsaken the living God, do you worship idols? Maximin therefore, having detained her, tortured her very cruelly. Then having called from all quarters fifty orators, he said to them, discuss with Æcaterina and convince her; for unless you do convince her, I will burn all of you (vos omnes flammis tradam). But they seeing themselves beaten, were baptized and then were burned (igni conflagrarunt). Æcaterina also was beheaded."

In the original menology, or calendar, is a picture of the fifty orators in the flames, and St. Catharine crowned and beheaded. But Joseph Simon Assemanus, in his universal calendar, published at Rome in 1755, quotes several Catholic writers who are much puzzled to find any verification for this story; among them Papebrochius, who winds up frankly by saying, "This is certain, that there is no saint whose fame and cultus was more unknown in the first centuries after the persecutions, or more celebrated in later ages, not only in the Eastern but in the Western Church."

And then Assemanus himself expresses the hope that before finishing his great work, by a careful study of the miracles performed by the invocation of this saint, he may be able to bring forward facts of such a nature, and so well attested as "to shut the mouths of yelping (obgambolentium) heretics." But he does not seem to have realized his hope. Perhaps when the new edition of the Acta Sanctorum, in some hundreds of volumes, gets down to the 25th of November, we shall see the proofs.

But whether we do or not, we have, as above given, the testimony of the holy, infallible Catholic Church that a woman of great learning converted fifty pagan orators, under the most difficult circumstances. Pretty good proof of Paul's mistake, if Hypatia was not.

E. W.

Communications.

THE INTEREST DOCTRINE.

See INDEX, June 28 and July 12: "A lends to B $500. B repays it in two hours without interest. A then lends it to C, who, at the end of a year, repays it with $30 additional, as interest. The question is—has C been swindled out of his $30?—Ed."

Answer: Not necessarily. Several circumstances, all extraneous to the nature of the loan per se, may make this interest of $30, or even more, legitimate.

1. We live at a time when the value of money is constantly depreciating, as it has been for the last forty years. He who lent $500 twenty years ago and to-day receives only $500 as full payment, having all the while received no interest, does not in reality receive the full value of what he has lent, but about its half; as $500 to-day can only purchase what $250 could have purchased twenty years ago. If it can be shown that the rate of depreciation is at present six per cent. per year, $30 interest on $500 for a year is justifiable.

2. If C is the heir of A, and the age of A is such that the chance is three to fifty that A being dead when the year elapses, C shall not have to repay him at all, then $30, being the three-fiftieths of $500, was the exact amount of the indemnity which C ought justly to pay to A for incurring that chance.

3. If the solvency of C is so doubtful, and at the same time so probable, that a competent banker would charge just six per cent. a year for adding his guarantee to C's paper, then A, in lending $500 to C for a year, may either require C to have his note indorsed by a responsible party who will charge C $30; or, which comes to the same, A may take upon himself the risk of C proving insolvent, and charge him $30 for it.

4. As any one of these three hypotheses would suffice to account for the legitimate payment of $30 interest, so might the combination of the three, each reduced to one-third of its intensity, satisfactorily account for the same interest. This would be the case if, the rate of depreciation of money being one-fiftieth instead of three-fiftieths a year, and the chances of death of A within the year being one to fifty instead of three to fifty; the probabilities of C proving solvent were to the probabilities of his proving insolvent as forty-nine to one instead of to three. The combination of the three suppositions in other proportions might also account for a yearly interest of $30, or of any other amount, on $500.

"... We believe that this sum is only a fair compensation for the year's use of the money.—Ed."

In any of the three above suppositions, to which others might be added ad infinitum, "this sum" (that is, $30 interest) is "a fair compensation;" not, however, for the use of the money, in the transfer of which use the nature of the loan consists, but for incurring some inconvenience the nature of which is totally extraneous and accidental to the loan. When a loan is divested of all accidentals, so that interest can be charged on it on no other title than for the use of the money (that is, for the loan itself), that interest, however small, becomes usury, and is an extortion.

"... If the Bishop believes otherwise, we submit that his belief should be capable of explicit proof, and that avoidance of the issue is not proof.—Ed."

The editor is one of the finest and fairest debaters in existence, but here his rule is at fault. Affirmantis est probare. He affirms that in a loan something is due, beside the return of the capital, for its use during the time of the loan. Affirming this, he has to prove it, which he utterly fails to do. I deny it; I affirm nothing, and consequently have nothing to prove. But without formally pretending to prove, I have informally shown that the proof he ought to give cannot be given, because there is no place where it can exist.

JULIUS FERRETTE.

[The Bishop says that he "affirms nothing, and consequently has nothing to prove." Begging his pardon, we venture to quote the following "affirmation" from the above article, containing all that is relevant in it: "When a loan is divested of all accidentals, so that interest can be charged on it on no other title than for the use of the money (that is, for the loan itself), that interest, however small, becomes usury, and is an extortion." This is the "affirmation" which the Bishop is bound to prove, if he can;

It is useless to try to escape that obligation. Premising that of course we meant that the only "use" of money is to use it—that is, to buy with it,—we call attention to the article below, as very apt in this connection.—ED.]

A WORD FOR BISHOP FERRETTE.

Money in itself is but dead inert matter—is of no sort of use as money except to buy with—to buy any and all kinds of useful things. The borrower (say of $2000) receives his money, counts it, and passes it right over out of his hands in pay for a flouring mill, which operation takes him just two and one-half minutes by the clock; and here his use of the borrowed money ends. Though he have twenty years to replace it, he gets no further use of his loan; for it has passed along entirely out of his possession and control forever. Now if the borrower pay an annual interest of $200 for twenty years, the simple interest alone will amount to $4000, just double the amount of the sum loaned. And all this is paid for the use of $2000 just two and one-half minutes? Is not this a dreadful wrong? Is not the poor borrower ruined? What! $4000 for the use of $2000 just two and one-half minutes! The poor borrower is ruined! ruined by the tyrant money-lender and extortioner! Yes; if you don't believe it, just ask him. Trust him to reveal his woe.

"Well, this was the best I could do," he communes, "after using the money; just in one single operation for two or three minutes I found I could use it no longer, for I had to hand it over as an essential part of the purchase. But during that two or three minutes, I managed to get me a good title for the flouring-mill; and though the use of the money ceased, the use of the flouring-mill into which I had converted the money did not cease. I have used it twenty years, and have it in use still, and it is good for life. And so by the use of my mill (I am a miller by occupation and run the mill myself), I paid all current expenses and saved $500 net annual gain. I could not pay off the loan till the twenty years were up; so I established a kind of sinking fund. I invested my savings in national bonds, railroad stocks, etc., just about after the fashion of my mill investment; and now at the maturity of my note I have my mill, and have cleared on it $10,000. So I now have to pay the amount of the note and interest $6000, and it leaves me still $4000, and I am the owner of the mill. Verily! this is not so ruinous after all!

Now to dissipate the whole mystery (if there be any) in this question, as to the moral justice or right to take interest on money loaned, it needs only to be stated plainly, to be understood and approved. Interest (so called) is paid not for the use of money, strictly speaking, but for the use of what money will buy—which is simply everything useful,—everything that is for sale. "Here endeth the first lesson!"

Again: A laboring man has saved from his earnings $1000, and is about to purchase a small house, cash down payment, which house will save him $100 rent every year. But Bishop Ferrette meets him and wants to borrow the money; that is he wants the use of the money. (It is rather singular that, that borrowers should want to use a thing that is of no use; if the borrower can use it, cannot the owner as well?) But no! the Bishop wants to borrow and use the man's money, and the laborer is very desirous to oblige his Bishop; so he, in the simplicity of his heart, says: "I'll buy the house on a year's credit; it will only cost me a year's rent more than a cash down payment, and you will then have the use of the money. In the meantime, Bishop Ferrette, you will of course see that my rent is paid." "Oh!" says the Bishop, "not at all; that will be the same as paying interest for the use of money,—which, you know, is very wrong. Don't you know that to pay anything for the mere use of money is usury? Usury is a very great sin, and very severely condemned, sir!" "Here endeth the second lesson."

Yours truly, E. W. ALLRIGHT.
CINCINNATI, O.

A VOTE OF THANKS TO GOD.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I find this beautiful specimen of ignorance and superstition going the rounds of the secular press of the country:—

"ON BOARD THE COSTA RICA, May 21, 1877.

"We, the passengers on board the splendid steamer City of San Francisco, wrecked off the coast of Mexico, render thanks to Almighty God for our preservation from death. We desire to express our appreciation of the conduct of Captain J. J. Waddell and his officers during the fearful ordeal through which we have passed. Captain Waddell, last to leave the ship, has proven himself, in our judgment, calm and self-possessed in the hour of danger, brave and prompt in action for our protection, and unselfish in providing for our necessities. We shall bear in our hearts a warm affection for the captain and his officers; and the memory of our danger and rescue will ever be moments of their faithfulness and devotion to duty. Signed by Moses H. Sargent, Charles Kingeland, Sutton Christian, Gabriel Edmund, B. Peck, J. Anton Boyneke, Fred. G. Shelbin, Dr. R. L. Rhein, and many others."

Now, if God saved these passengers from a watery grave, why return thanks to Captain Waddell? If, on the other hand, Captain Waddell, by his coolness and bravery, rescued them from the awful peril, which seemed almost inevitable, why slip in a vote of thanks to God first?

If, as the Church would have us believe, there is a God who continually deals out doses of his pleasure and wrath as the circumstances seem to require, will some of the good, pious souls that are always ready to tell us all about God's power and his love for his followers and his hate for heretics and disbelievers, please pass on the following? Perhaps the thankful passengers of the City of San Francisco could make the matter clear to the minds of sceptics:—

"The village of Mount Carmel, Wabash County, Ill., was visited by a destructive and fatal hurricane about half-past three o'clock on the afternoon of the 4th. A number of large buildings were blown down, including the Court-house, the Methodist and Presbyterian churches, and several business houses. Some twenty persons met with instant death by the falling walls, and many more were seriously injured. Fire caught in the debris of the ruined buildings and added to the horror of the scene."

What had the preachers in charge of the congregations who worshipped in the above named churches done, or what had their flocks done, to call down such a fearful thunderbolt of God's wrath? There was certainly something terrible in its nature to have caused the fearful destruction of this village and two of God's own sanctuaries.

If, instead of churches, some hall or building belonging to liberals had succumbed to the fury of the storm, the terrible judgments of God and his manifest displeasure toward infidels would have formed the basis for hundreds of sermons on the following Sunday.

When will people learn that the different phenomena in Nature are not evidences of the pleasure or wrath of a God that never had an existence save in the befogged minds of credulous people and corrupt priests?

J. R. BAKER.
CLARINDA, IOWA, June 18, 1877.

"JESUIT SCHOOLS."

AN EXTRACT FROM HUME'S "HISTORY OF ENGLAND."

Apropos of an article on the above subject published in the Advertiser of July 10, the following extract from Hume's History of England perhaps gives as satisfactory an account of the Jesuits as can be found elsewhere. The extract is from his history of the reign of Elizabeth, the lion-hearted queen. The Jesuits were in her time beginning to make themselves prominent. Hume, as everybody knows, regarded Christianity and all its sects with philosophic indifference. Speaking of Douay and other Catholic seminaries specially established on the continent by Philip II., the king of Spain, and others, to educate Romish priests to keep alive their communion in England, Hume says:—

"These seminaries were all of them under the direction of the Jesuits, a new order of regular priests erected in Europe, when the court of Rome perceived that the lazy monks and beggary friars, who sufficed in times of ignorance, were no longer able to defend the ramparts of the Church, assailed on every side, and that the inquisitive spirit of the age required a society more active and more learned to oppose its dangerous progress."

These men as they stood foremost in the contest against the Protestants, drew on them the extreme animosity of that whole sect; and, by assuming a superiority over the other more numerous and more ancient orders of their own communion, were even exposed to the envy of their brethren; so that it is no wonder, if the blame to which their principles and conduct might be exposed, has, in many instances been exaggerated. This reproach however, they must bear from posterity, that, by the very nature of their institution, they were engaged to pervert learning, the only effectual remedy against superstition, into a nourishment of that infirmity; and as their erudition was chiefly of the ecclesiastical and scholastic kind (though a few members have cultivated polite literature) they were only the more enabled to refine away the plainest dictates of morality, and to erect a regular system of casuistry, by which prevarication, perjury, and every crime, when it served their ghastly purposes, might be justified and defended. The Jesuits, as devoted servants to the court of Rome, exalted the prerogative of the sovereign pontiff above all earthly power; and by maintaining his authority of deposing kings set no bounds to his spiritual and temporal jurisdiction. They hated Elizabeth as intensely as they hate Bismarck now. Hume says, "Sedition, rebellion, sometimes assassination, were the expedients by which they intended to effect their purposes against" the great English Queen.

AMERICUS.

THE LESSON OF THE COMMENCEMENTS.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I have been a reader of THE INDEX for two years, and so feel at liberty to send a few lines which I feel constrained to write as I read the reports of the Commencements of the various colleges, and the favorable comments of many of the daily papers upon the addresses which show the mighty efforts made to Christianize America, and the great need of organized work by Liberals now. Considering the great demand for space in THE INDEX, I shall not be surprised if mine reaches your waste basket.

Can any Liberal read many of the Commencement addresses without being impressed with the fact that, unless he works, he must lose in the great struggle which is about taking place between Christianity and Rationalism?

Read Prof. Chadbourne's baccalaureate sermon at Williams College, Prof. Seelye's at Amherst, and witness the intolerance, and determination that Christianity must be upheld. They show the mighty effort that Evangelicalism is making to place God in the Constitution, enforce Sabbath laws, Christianize our free schools, and thus put our country back two hundred years. Liberals, we must awake! It is no sectarian cry which bids you work, but love of country and posterity, and we shall not have done our duty, or be worthy the blessings of a free country, if we do not commence before it is too late. Then circulate Liberal literature; vote for no party or man who does not believe your principle; and organize in order to meet your enemy on even ground. If you fail,—but you will succeed, for Truth and Right shall ever succeed!

Yours truly,
DEDHAM, Mass., July 3, 1877.

B. F. S.

LIBERTY vs. LICENTIOUSNESS.

A most irrational sentiment has been manifesting itself of late among us. It pronounces the licentious secular view of the State. Here is the formula:—

"No fast or thanksgiving days by public authority."

"No sumptuary laws for the proper observance of the Sabbath."

"No chaplains in public institutions."

"Abolition of the judicial oath."

"Expulsion of the Bible from the public schools."

All these, and more, of the same kind, constitute the creed of the "Liberal League" in the United States. It is claimed by these men that such practices are in self-evident violation of the great national principle of the absolute separation of Church and State, and ought, therefore, to be totally discontinued.

Very few, indeed, are they who advocate this in its full extreme development. It has a few erratic apostles, however, who tramp about the country and air their supercilious self-conceit and blasphemy before the foot-lights to all who care to squander a quarter for the opportunity of gazing on the sad exhibition of folly.

If we were to adopt the creed of Liberalism, it would transmute us into an atheistic nation. Some of its elements are embraced by public men who do not see whither it legitimately leads. In its rebound from the Papal extreme, the unreflecting and the illogical are in danger of being lured to this other extreme, which would be even more deadly in its influence on the land. And we are not sure but that it involves the greatest and most pressing of the political questions which meet us at the opening of our second century.

All this prating about "free action," "free religion," and this impatience of restraint by wholesome legislation, lack reason. Liberty is not freedom from restraint. That is lawlessness. Liberty that is under restraint is the only true freedom. It is only when liberty flows down the channel of law, that it is able to exert that ennobling and beautifying energy, and effect those glorious results which we behold around us in our Christian civilization. Lawless liberty is license. The State is but an individual with its many members, all subject to that rational will expressed in law, all energized by that rational life which is of God, and all together dependent each upon the other for harmonious development and vigor. The character of a nation is but the character of its individuals. The will of the government is but the manifestation of the individual will. Despotism cannot exist without popular abjectness. Tyranny is always the index of a willing slavery; a free government the exponent of a free people.

Now to illustrate the inconsistency of these so-called "Liberals," we will mention the following: A radical correspondent of the Boston Investigator suggested a law which he called "An Act to Protect the People from Religious Imposition," and by which he provides that it shall be a penal offence to conduct public worship, on the ground that those who do so are obtaining money on false pretence. This, mind you, is what is called "free religion"! What, then, is religious despotism? It is well to remember that the first persecutors were the Sadducees, the infidels of the first century. There is no intolerance like irreligious intolerance. Suppose, the Christians being in the majority, we were to pass a law making the delivery of an infidel lecture for money, or the publication of an infidel paper a penal offence, because we consider that infidelity is a false pretence; what would the Investigator, or the "Liberal League" say to that?

But the most pernicious doctrine set forth in the creed of such extreme free thinkers, is the views of the family relation. Here they make sad havoc. Let it be remembered that the family is the root of society. Whoever poisons it, loosens its bounds, despoils its sanctity, or overthrows any idea which causes it to be what it essentially is, sins against that which, if it perish, drags everything with it in a universal ruin. "Free love and easy divorces" are sins against society. The only thing the fall of man did not destroy, the devils, bodiless and incarnate, are endeavoring to overthrow. They show their sagacity in striking at the very heart of the social order. But the American people will show their sagacity by frowning upon these reckless attempts to sow the seed of licentiousness and anarchy.

Suppose we had a government of these so-called liberal-minded men, we would be a lawless nation, the worst set of slaves in existence. "Where the spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty," says Paul; but let the creed that denies that there is a God, denies the immortality of the soul, and consequently any responsibility to a power higher than man, rejects the Bible, blots out heaven, and scorns the idea of a hell, prevail among us, and we shall see our land degraded, and the boasted "freedom" become but lawless license.—Minneapolis Citizen, May 10.

A COCKNEY tourist met a Scottish lassie going barefoot toward Glasgow. "Lassie," said he, "I should like to know if all the people in these parts go barefoot?" "Part on 'em do, and part on 'em mind their own business," was the rather settling reply.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " 8 " " "
 " 26 " 51 " " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 80 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.
 EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.
 The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.
 Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.
 Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.
 The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM AND THE NEW FAITH.

By EDMUND C. STEDMAN.

12mo, Cloth extra, with Portrait of Mr. Frothingham, 75 cents.

A clear and effective presentation of what is known as Rationalism in Religion in an analysis, by an admirer of acknowledged genius, of the life and work of one of its leading teachers.

"A brilliant and appreciative essay."—Boston Post.

"Radical ideas are here formulated, and expressed in a strong, clear light."—Liberal Christian.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LEWES' NEW BOOK!

THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF MIND.

Being the Third Volume of "Problems of Life and Mind."

By GEORGE H. LEWES, author of the History of Philosophy, the Life of Goethe, etc. 8vo. $3.00.

CONTENTS.—THE NATURE OF LIFE.—THE NERVOUS MECHANISM.—ANIMAL AUTOMATISM.—THE REFLEX THEORY.

Mr. Lewes is widely recognized as one of the most acute and independent of thinkers, and a writer of remarkable force and perspicacity. The two preceding volumes of Problems of Life and Mind have attracted in an unusual degree the attention of scientific and philosophical minds, and have taken rank among the most important of recent contributions to the philosophy of life and thought. The present volume is of equal significance, and will doubtless win equal study and admiration from those competent to follow the author's speculations and argument.

Its interest is by no means confined to specialists, but all persons of intelligence will find it in a high degree instructive and engaging.

"The book is one which will inevitably find its way into the hands of every student of mental science who wishes to obtain the freshest view of physiology in its relation to mind."—Saturday Review (London).

PROBLEMS OF LIFE AND MIND.

Vols. I. and II. $3.00 each.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Paper, 25 cents.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. F. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK &amp; TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATIONAL PAPERS.

Published by

HAILMANN & DOERFLINGER,

Milwaukee, Wis.

(German) "ERZIEHUNGS-BLÄTTER," monthly, per year, $2.12.

(English) "THE NEW EDUCATION," a monthly tract for parents and teachers, devoted to Kindergarten Culture and Educational Hygiene in Home and School. Per year, 60 cents.

(English) The "New Education" TRACTS. Nos. 1 and 2 ready. Six copies (of any one number, or assorted) sent to any address on receipt of a 3-cent stamp.

A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS BOOK.

A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00).

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 85 cts. each; for 1876 40 cents; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($1) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

MADAME FOY'S

CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year,

And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY

FOY & HARMON,

New Haven, Conn.

GERMAN RADICAL PAPERS

Published by

CARL DOERFLINGER,

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

"ONKEL KARL," an illustrated juvenile monthly. Good reading for American youth studying German. Natural morals. No bloody crimes. No love-stories for "Boys and Girls." No hypocritical cant. Price per year, $1.50.

"FREIDENKER" (Freethinker); a weekly paper, devoted to the elevation of mankind out of the thralldom of superstition and ignorance. Price per year, $2.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seat, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRAITS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	40
FIFTY ".....	75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.55
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.45
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N.B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 9, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 39.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSSES.

S. H. M.

ERASMUS doubted Luther's discretion, and when he saw the Pope's bull blazing, he exclaimed, "Now I see no end of it, but the turning upside down of the whole world."

CHIEF-JUSTICE RICHARDSON, of old English puritan times, summoned before the archbishop and sharply reprimanded, said, as he came out: "I have almost been choked by a pair of lawn sleeves." Fortunate man! Many the souls "lawn sleeves" have extinguished utterly. Moral: Pin not your faith to a bishop's sleeve.

THE Boston Herald quotes Rev. W. H. Cudworth as saying "that religion is continually arriving to reconcile the capitalist and laborer"; and remarks: "This may be true of religion, but it is not true of the Christian churches which fail entirely to live up to the principles of the Founder of their religion, which are applicable to this matter, or to exercise the beneficial influence they should."

"I HAVE NO MORE right to differ with a man for holding a different opinion from me, than I have to differ with a man because he wears a wig; but if he takes his wig off and begins to shake the powder about my eyes, I shall consider it my duty to get rid of him as soon as possible."—Charles Wesley. One-half sympathizes with such a frame of mind, yet there is much danger in it. Powder from another's wig may not always be blinding.

OF THE RIVAL STATESMEN who under Charles the First for a time governed England, Mr. Rawson Gardner remarks: "If Elliot wished to found authority on public opinion, Wentworth condemned public opinion altogether. Authority must be founded on intellect, not on opinion, and of all living intellects he believed his own to be first." Of quite other mood the poet when urged for advice:—

"Day after day by you I'm pressed
To give you counsel. I can give it:
But, that I may not lose my rest,
Promise to hear, and not to live it."

LUTHER was astonished to find he was a "Hussite without knowing it; and that St. Paul and Augustine were Hussites." So have we heard of unsuspecting people awaking to the consciousness that they were Parkerites, or something as little calming to their fears. But, alarming as the situation at first appeared, when they found no lightnings out of heaven smiting them, they rather enjoyed it, and pitched their tents in the free fields beyond their sacred Jordan, with smiling faces.

WHEN CHILLINGWORTH lay sick at Chichester, he "was visited by Francis Cheynell, a rigid, zealous Presbyterian, exactly Orthodox, very unwilling that any should be suffered to go to heaven but in the right way. Cheynell gave the dying man no rest. He remembered the words of the Apostle, 'Rebuke them sharply that they may be sound in the faith.' 'I desired him,' he says, 'to tell me whether he conceived that a man living or dying a Turk, Baptist, or Socinian, could be saved. All the answer I could gain from him was, that he did not absolve them and he would not condemn.' Cheynell could not endure such lukewarmness as this. 'Sir,' he said, 'you have lavished so much charity upon Turks, Socinians, and Baptists, that I am afraid you have very little to spare for a truly reformed Protestant!'"

MRS. BARRETT's letter setting forth Mr. Moody's opinion of Mrs. Livermore as a "Christian woman," closed with the following sentence: "We aim to be a Christian organization; we utterly refuse to become sectarian, and welcome to our membership all Christian women who will join us in our efforts to abolish intemperance." We applaud the desire of this "temperance union" not to be "sectarian," and earnestly wish it would, as Mrs. Barrett says it does, "utterly refuse" so to be or become. But so long as it welcomes only "Christian women" to its organization, it is open to the suspicion, at least, that its members, like Mr. Moody, are yet in sectarian bonds. "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" is not so broad a name as it would be with the word "Christian" omitted. There are many noble women who would not like to call themselves "Christian" women; they are not only not Orthodox; they are not even "Unitarians or Universalists." Now a union that does not include all such people, but which by its name excludes them, is not so "broad" as it might be; nor is it in the true and good sense unsectarian. We wish our "Christian" friends would consider this point, and mend their ways.

EVEN THE Christian (there it is again!) Union fails to see the point in its reprimand of Mr. Moody. "Sympathy and aggregation, not separation and repulsion, is the genius of Christianity," it says. But a few sentences before, it illustrates just what far-reaching "sympathy" is to be expected of the "genius of Christianity," interpreted after its own anti-Gideon fashion: "The true principle of coöperation is, . . . we are to work with any and every one—Jew or Gentile, Orthodox or heretic, Greek, Romanist, or Protestant,—so long as they will work with us in promoting Christ's cause and by the use of Christ's methods." What more or else did Mr. Moody ask? He wished to "promote Christ's cause," and by the use of "Christ's methods," as he understood them; and he had no objection to Jews, Greeks, and heretics, would they but come under his banner, and make with him an "Evangelical Temperance Union." Now Jews and heretics dislike to be yoked with "The Christian Union's" "Christian methods" quite as much as with Mr. Moody's. And they don't see just why the one is more liberal towards them than the other. They would like to work for the "temperance cause." Why must they in order to do this in union with others, be called on to say it is "Christ's cause"? What has Christ to do with it? Why not, Christians, keep Christ to yourselves? Why ask Jews and everybody else, whenever it seems necessary to make a common effort in dealing with temperance, to take Christ for captain? Perhaps we shall yet come to have "Evangelical fire-engines." Mr. Beecher would apparently be satisfied with "Christian fire-engines." Liberals would prefer "fire-engines."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, N. Y.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTIER,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLOWELL,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....Providence, R. I.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Boston, Mass.
 REV. M. J. NAVAGE,.....Chicago, Ill.
 RABBI E. FELSETHAL,.....Sparta, Mass.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Providence, R. I.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. JAMES LICE,.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. HORACE BEAVER,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of "The Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGES,.....Thornhill, Mass.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE F. TITCOMB,.....141 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 E. P. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHERS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLMAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Easterville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBES,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. K. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 E. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. BAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quintman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN F. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION.

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The New Epoch in Belief.

BY D. A. WASSON.

In June, a pine forest might seem to the eye of a careless observer to have been smitten with some disease. The needles turn to a sickly yellow; some fall, having quite perished; some linger, pale and wan, upon the boughs; and all wears the aspect of age and decay. But the sad appearance is deceptive; that which seems death is only a renewal and fresh pulse of life. A closer look will show one that beneath this yellow shroud the young needles are putting forth, green and vivid.

The world is such a forest. Seasons arrive when the old verdure is verdant no longer; when traditional faiths, traditional schemes of social order, grow yellow and sere. Some fall and cover all the earth with autumnal hues; some cling to the places where once they were green and beautiful, but now in greenness and beauty no more. The sight is sad to many, and many there are who mourn over it, like Rachel weeping for her children and refusing to be comforted. But a close and hopeful look will show that the heart of man is still young and fresh, and is putting forth a vivid foliage to gladden a new time.

We live in such a period of transition. A double movement is going on,—death and birth struggling together, and each conquering on its proper field. The old traditions perish, perish inevitably. It was believed for many and many a century, that certain families were divinely commissioned to rule over nations. That belief is dead. Even where the forms of it remain, the life does not remain. It was believed for many a century that there is a particular institution, to which, as an institution, the grace of heaven is given first of all; and that men can obtain it thence only at second-hand. But Church-rule over the human soul ceases; all over the world it ceases. In some lands it remains as a mere piece of routine, from which the nation cannot free itself; but even there it is only a dead foliage on the tree of life, which a fresh growth is sure, sooner or later, to push off. It was believed that the whole mind of God, as made known to man, had been put in print and consigned to the bookbinder,—that the will and thought of God could be known only by extortion from texts, as the juice is obtained from an orange. But that belief also is dead; it survives only as a Sunday formula; in congresses, parliaments, courts, markets, men act from heart and reason, or else from brutal selfishness,—from somewhat good or bad in themselves.

The old leaves are yellow on the boughs of human life, even though they have not fallen to strew the earth. Their autumn has come, their winter is near.

Now there are those who find hope for the world only in the restoration of these dying traditions. They go about, as it were, with a paint-pot to give back their youthful green to those yellowing leaves. It avails not. To paint them of their first color does not give them back their first life. They are dead, dead.

But though art cannot restore, Nature can and will replace. She has an art above that of paint-pot and brush. The roots of humanity strike deep and forever into divine soil; forms of belief die, but the genetic principle of belief survives, works, triumphs in man's heart; the principle of belief is deathless; it has a perpetual youth, and quickly replaces the brown acres of autumn with the green blades of spring. In place of old and outworn despotisms comes an orderly republicanism, more orderly than despotism ever was. In place of a dominating Church comes free religious association, warm, earnest, full of promise. In place of text-worship comes a faith in God as forever inspiring the heart of man, and making of that a living Bible.

It is our lot to live in this time of transition, when the world is at once dying and coming anew to life. Our civilization is in process of moulting, losing the grace and consolation of the faith that blessed it of old, but losing only to replace them with a grace fairer and a solace surer.

Connected with this time there are certainly some discomforts. Not every one who is willing to go forward can as yet find his way. For many a one the golden bowl of the ancient faith is broken, the new not yet fashioned; he thirsts for the waters of life, and his thirst remains unsatisfied. There are those who fear that the modern world has got "switched off" upon some diverging track, and is daily plunging away farther and farther into the void-realms where no fountain sparkles and no sweet herbage grows. To some, everything is in question. There are good men in America who sigh for the restoration of monarchy. "The best government I know," said to me a highly-cultivated and worthy gentleman of New York, "is the Austrian despotism." There are liberals in religion who return and pledge their fealty to Catholicism. Grown dyspeptic with the strong meat of radical belief, they hasten to those withered breasts, and would fain nurse as adult babies there. In one aspect it is a troublous time.

But is it not also a most hopeful time? Who sees not that out of the heart of the people arises a new faith? Who discerns not the dawn of a new sense of brotherhood? Who does not hear borne upon the four winds of heaven the melodious breathing of a fresh divine aspiration for noble life? The very pain of the time is due in part to an accession of spiritual force. It is only the living who hunger and thirst. Why is it that so many are no longer content to be selfishly "saved" hereafter? Because there is a new stir of life in their souls; they feel, vaguely but powerfully, the divine meaning of man's existence. Earnest doubt signifies, not an indifference to truth, but a fresh attraction toward it, and a more sacred sense of the obligations it imposes.

Behold this heavenly abhorrence of injustice which has arisen in America. Is that a piece of "scepticism"? It is rather an inspiration. God is with him who so cleaves unto his brother.

This double movement is literally world-wide,—not found in America alone, nor in England, in Europe alone, but under the whole heaven. China, gray with immemorial age, rocks with revolutions and ferments with new ideas. "All civilizations," said a learned and highly intelligent mandarin in San Francisco, "have their seasons of growth, to be followed by seasons of subdence and decay. China, whose civilization culminated before that of Europe was dreamed of, is now in her lowest estate, yet is already showing premonitions of a new career." The English power in India represents a spiritual hiatus. There, too, the old ideas have fallen under suspicion; the old institutions no longer represent the spiritual forces which begot them, and are therefore a burden instead of being a support. But India is astir with new thoughts. Denial is there rejecting the old; faith is there preparing the new. The time surely comes when this people, so rich in speculative intellect and epic imagination, will arise in power and beauty, because in belief, once more. Turkey, with its narrower and duller mind, is in the same state, half palsied, half new-born. Russia wars for absolutism, and emancipates her serfs. Italy, the home of the Pope, leads in Europe the movement toward reconstruction on the basis of natural affinity; and her excommunicated king sends a badge of honor to the leader of the new religious philosophy in France. Louis Napoleon, with all his armies at his back, holds his throne only by trimming between the old tendencies and the new. England, the home and fortress of prudent conventionalism, has not a thinker of eminence who does not represent predominantly, though mostly in a cramped and partial way, the modern ideas; and a powerful reaction against obsolete ecclesiasticisms springs up among the very dignitaries of her national Church. Finally, in America, he is the popular preacher, as the instance of Henry Ward Beecher abundantly shows, who can put forth the utmost amount of fresh belief, with the least possible exciting of traditional timidities; while the moral and political ideas of Channing, Emerson, and Parker have been the inspiration of the nation in the struggles and sufferings through which it has passed and is passing. Everywhere is the same spectacle,—dying traditions and a growing faith. Everywhere the world struggles and chafes under the bondage of an institutionalism that can now only bind and never inspire; everywhere it feels within it the impulse and sacred heat of a fresh believing liberty. Enslaving institutionalism on the one hand, heart and intellect on the other,—that is the alternative between which the nations are trying to choose.

This movement has in America ripened more than elsewhere. In many parts of the world it is still in a very immature stage, being little better than a mere uneasiness, a dissatisfaction, a wish that there were somewhat more worthy to believe and to do. But here, with not a few, the period of transition is past; the desert, with its weary wanderings, doubts, distresses, lies behind; the happy land of sure faith and action stretches fair and near before, or is already in possession. Let me try to indicate briefly the characteristics of this new epoch.

1. The primary departure from the old schemes is found in this discovery, that faith is native to man; born in him, not injected into him; spontaneous rather than artificial; an energy which his spirit puts forth, not a constraint which it passively suffers. This one perception reverses, or will reverse, the entire attitude of the world toward the problems of religion and belief. So long as religion was looked upon as a kind of supernatural chloroform, not esthetic, but anesthetic, and designed to lock up and imprison the powers proper to man's being, so long the conception of freedom and free development in religion was logically absurd. Considered as a sheer imposition upon man from without, having the right of the policeman over the person he arrests, or the right of the court over the criminal; empowered to handcuff him first, and afterward to blind him over to keep the peace,—it made his plea of freedom simply ridiculous. It was, and must be, a mere piece of arrest; a putting of man under bonds; and the attempt of the Voltaires to sue out a writ of habeas corpus, and restore to the soul its liberties, was regarded, and could only be regarded, as a suit at the devil's court, an attempt to overthrow the kingdom of heaven and legalize treason.

Consistently, therefore, with its fundamental notion, the old theology came to man with a fixed scheme of faith, and said, "You must believe this, and just this, neither more nor less than this, under penalty." It could not appeal to his reason and his heart; for that were to acknowledge his freedom and disown its own claim. It could not submit itself to his judgment, for that were as if the policeman should say to the thief, "Walk with me to the lock-up, my good sir, if your judgment approves my invitation." It could not acknowledge a spiritual growth in humanity; it could not see in Brahminism, Parsism, Mohammedanism, Christianity one self-same native principle working out, under the common laws of man's intelligence, into various forms, more or less perfect; for that cannot be a growth from within, which is by definition an imposition from without; and that cannot develop itself under the common laws of human intelligence and natural influence, which is defined as a subjugation of natural influence and intelligence. It said, "You must believe thus and so," because it must say so, or say nothing. It was arbitrary in action because it came as arbiter, and was that or nothing at all; at least nothing good. Arbiter or usurper, autocrat or pretender, policeman or impostor,—it must confess itself one of the two, and must confess itself the worse of the two if it did not assert itself as the better.

Religion as a piece of spontaneity; religion as a piece of arrest,—here we get the two fundamental and opposite forms under which this matter is conceived of. Each of them has its inevitable logic; each must come to a conclusion in accordance with its premise. One of the two must be assumed; either being assumed, consequences follow which no skill can avert and no reluctance long delay. Assume either, and you must read history accordingly; and to read forwards according to the one, is to read backwards according to the other. The world of humanity under arrest, the world of Nature a house of correction, with the Hebrew people first, and afterwards their spiritual descendants released under parole of honor, and then sworn in as special constables, a posse comitatus of the Holy Ghost,—that is one way of reading history. The world of humanity under the aspect of free citizenship, and the world of Nature its lawful homestead; each man called upon to develop in freedom his divine resource, and to improve in freedom his natural estate, converting it to spiritual use as he can,—that is another way of reading history. And accordingly as we read one way or the other, there follows a whole economy of belief, of culture, of social and individual life.

I do not here seek to argue, but only to state. As matter of fact, we, the radical believers, have made our election clearly between these two. As matter of fact, the world is making between the two its election; that is, is changing its choice from one to the other. The new epoch in belief is constituted by the fact that the world is relinquishing the notion of faith as an arrest of natural faculty, a constraint which the spirit of man suffers passively, and is going over to the opposite notion of faith as spontaneous, an energy which man's spirit puts forth, different in its forms, but identical in its essence.

Those who still think, or try to think, religion the policeman of the soul, see in this change something dreadful. Of course they do. To their eyes it can appear only as an attempt at a rescue made by the friends of the criminal. To their eyes the logic that legitimates it is but a Judge McCune issuing a habeas corpus, or habeas spiritum, to favor rebellion. Of course, I say. A man who looks out of the back window to see what is in front of the house, will not see it. Assuming that the soul is not a free citizen to be furthered, but a culprit to be arrested, they must, they can see in those economies which cherish its liberties, instead of sustaining its incrimination, only irreligion, only treason to heaven. Two opposite points of view cannot give the same results; and the question here is one of the points of view to be assumed.

If God approaches the intelligence of man only by strong impressions upon the senses, as the old pre-naturalism avers, then he who turns his face toward the soul, turns his back on God. If God approaches the will only as an over-riding, despotic force, then he who assumes that the divine is to be found in the highest freedom of the will, is stiffening his neck against God. Now, we say that God approaches man, not by that which is lowest in him, the senses, but by that which is highest, the soul,—therefore that in turning the face soulward we turn it Godward. And again we say that the divine manifests itself in man by the spontaneity, not by the oppression of his spirit; by the freedom, not the enslavement of his will; by the utmost liberation and empowering of his being, not by constriction of its liberties and suspension of its powers.

Each of these points of view is, and must be comparatively irreligious to the other. The new epoch has chosen its master word,—spontaneity. It does not complain—it were puerile to complain—that the other sees it as irreligious, infidel. As well complain that a shorter man than yourself does not look over your head.

But there is this difference in their regard of each other. Assume spontaneity, and you can still see the old scheme of spiritual enslavement as one of the limited forms of religion. We do not accept Buddhism as a special form of spiritual development, and then raise a hue and cry against Calvinism as if it were merely evil. On the other hand, the adherent of the old notions can see in the new spirit only absolute irreligion. The greater comprehends the less, but the less does not comprehend the greater. The Jewish synagogue excommunicates Spinoza; but Spinoza does not excommunicate the synagogue. The foolish old woman who saw Sir Isaac Newton, when he was exegitating his doctrine of colors, at a window blowing soap-bubbles, was moved with indignation, and declared it a shame that a grown-up man should be wasting the day in such idle child's play; but Newton could not return her indignation; he could only smile. With a like tolerance the new faith listens when the old vents a pious anger against it. It is in the nature of things that the old should see the new as absolutely irreligious; while the new sees the other as only comparatively irreligious, and prepares to make its sepulture decent, or even to speak a kindly word over its grave.

As a necessary result of its fundamental principle, the new epoch prefers and favors spontaneous rather than imitative belief in the individual. Imitative belief has its place. There are multitudes of men who do their thinking rather by sympathy with some powerful mind than by an independent activity of intellect. There are multitudes of men who are moral rather by sympathy with custom, or even by a calculating submission to it, than by an original energy of conscience. Nevertheless, original thought and original morality are the high privilege and duty of man. The new epoch calls upon men to use this grand privilege, and to use it in the noblest direction. It says to every man, "Relate yourself to eternal verities by your native force, if you can. Indebted deeply to the past you are, as all of us are; but pay that debt, if you can, by making the future indebted to you. Make history richer for those who shall follow. Instead of idly living upon the grain which the past garnered, sow it, and raise harvest for other times to live upon while they also sow and reap. Yea, let the past, like a seed, die fruitfully in your souls, that it may come anew and more abundantly to life."

Hence it is assumed that the divine import of life is not merely conserved by the art of the printer and book-binder, but that it is, or should be, coming to light newly and vitally in every age. And moreover, it is a canon of the new time that each generation, each century, is required of heaven to put in use just that light which has come to it in particular. The divine import of life is revealed anew and ever anew in hearts that are really alive; man ever has his root in eternity, his resource in God; and the light given to each age is, with especial emphasis, the light to be used by that age. The mythus of the manna has a meaning for the present day. God of old revealed his truth to his Hebrews; God to-day reveals his truth to his Americans; and what he says especially to us, he especially means that we should attend to.

Would any one ask what God has revealed to his Americans? He has revealed the sacredness of freedom; the divine endowment of every man with rights which society is infidel if it do not respect and guard; the equality of man and woman; the claim of every male and female child to some education at the public charge; the prevalence and indestructibility of order in the universe; the divineness of nature; and, underlying all, he is making known that the normal activity of man's spirit involves his own activity; that a suffusion of the spirit of the universe goes into all effusion from the soul of humanity; that the pulses of progress are heart-beats of eternal life and law.

Now, there is not one of the least of these instructions which does not affect the whole aspect and significance of life. The least of them brings a new and pervading element into history, and is like a change in the hue and quality of the blood.

Consider, for example, the truth that has come to us through Copernicus, Kepler, Newton, through the chosen revealers and prophets of science. Set aside the outward uses of science, its enabling the earth to feed a larger population and to feed them better; think only what it has contributed to spiritual impression. Suppose this contribution taken away; suppose we were this instant to lose our knowledge that the earth is a ball, swinging in space, one of a troop of worlds more numerous than the sands on the seashore, but all arranged in systems moving in harmony, instinct with perfect law; and that we were left to think with men a few centuries ago, that the earth is a flat space of uncertain extent, without fellowship in the universe, that the stars are candles, and the sun a moderate sized ball of fire, going so near the earth, as even Lord Bacon thought, as to burn the snow off the higher mountain tops; sweep away from us, I say, this moving, magnificent spectacle of universal order; sweep away the very conception of natural law, which conception is a new birth in the world; make it impossible for our souls to be touched with that religious sense of unity, which now is ours when in the falling of a pebble and the sailing of a star we behold one and the same eternal force and law; landlock us once more within the limits of the horizon, and let us again see in the incidents of Nature, not order and everlasting perfection, but at best only celestial caprice,—and who will say that we should not lose truth and spiritual impression which reveal God to every eye, and feed and enlarge every soul? Who will deny that all this knowledge is part of that by which our spirits are this day expanded, our hearts this day touched and saved?

Science has its own evangel, such as it is. Not the highest surely; and it runs in the custom of my thought rather to limit than exaggerate its importance.

Again, the faith in freedom, which animates our best minds, I name a true piece of revelation. Is it true that God requires not obedience only, but freedom as the best part of obedience? Is freedom indeed a master-law of earth and heaven? Here and hereafter are we, by the disciplines of mortal existence and the powers of immortal life, to deliver, deliver, and ever deliver our souls; and by exalting them into a divine liberty shall we arrive at another and more heavenly order of obedience, which, so far from conflicting with freedom, is its very flower and perfection? The faith in freedom as divine means no less. And if it be not divine, away with it. If it run counter to the spiritual destiny of man, who will whisper a syllable in its behalf?

We, the radical believers, have accepted and consecrated the idea of freedom in no trivial spirit. Whither that leads we go; and our journeying is no piece of vagrancy. We walk in faith; and our faith is that God supports, animates, and is revealed by the freedom and spontaneous virtue of the spirit of humanity. We trust that human history is no petty stir on the outside of existence, but that the heart of heaven beats in the heart of man, and that, as Paul said, the eternal works in man to will and to do.

The faith of the new epoch, accordingly, is following God into the future. For it, he is not two thousand years behind, to-morrow to be farther behind, and by each rising and setting sun yet more removed. It doubts not but that the ideas which now stir and glow in the bosom of humanity gather their warmth in the bosom of eternity; thence is their origin, thither their tendency.

Thus our present existence and daily work attain an infinite depth of meaning. The charm and fascination of the infinite leads us on; its immeasurable solace consoles our fatigues; and we may still rest upon it even in our doubts. With the age of this faith we first see that we are true to heaven in being true to our own souls; that in thinking our thought and doing our work, we are coöperating with supernal powers; that in using the light of our day, we are walking by the light of that day on which no sun ever sets, the day without night; that in sailing by the magnetic needle of the soul we obey no mere private attraction, but give heed to eternal poles and the axis of the universe. Oh, a faith to live by and die by, sweet, healthful, bracing, vivifying! How it simplifies, while it deepens life! No longer compelled to ransack deserted lands, exhume buried cities, criticize doubtful documents, sift uncertain histories, and do labor for which centuries of learned toil were inadequate, ere we shall know how to live this day and hour, we may even live, inwardly assured that the heart of God goes with the heart of man, that the meaning of all days abides in this day, and that in every age the door of truth and duty is a door into the eternal temple, the sanctuary of absolute good.

The faith of the new time is characterized by a more exalted and spiritual respect for man's being, a more religious sense of its significance and sanctity. It has been considered an act of piety to speak evil of man. Time was that no prayer was thought complete, or right in tone, unless it were well strewn with terms of contempt toward the being of man. The whole rhetoric of reprobation and reproach was lavished on his head. That he is "a worm," "a worm of the dust," was an information vouchsafed to heaven in orisons innumerable. Preachers and devotees vied with each other in inventing terms wherewith to revile him. Dr. South, that great fish-woman of the pulpit, said, that "the heart of a newborn babe is a nest of snakes hid in a dung-heap."

Now, I should no more be at pains to say that the new faith forbears to sully its worship with this pious billingsgate, than I should to assert that my best friend is not a shoplifter. Not to be guilty of these grossnesses is no virtue; it is only freedom from a vice. But it is a virtue of the time that there has arisen in it a positive, pervading, daring reverence for the being of man; one which is destined to reform the politics, and write anew the creeds of mankind. It is indeed among the most radical and productive sentiments of modern time. Already it has borne fruit, and more fruit it is yet to bear, in the rescue of oppressed races, in new hopes for buried continents, in the liberalization of institutions, in a higher value set upon human life. It compels even those who chiefly impugn its sway, Carlyle, so bitterly impressed with the foolishness of multitudes, cannot refuse to these very multitudes his commanding interest. Writing a history of the French Revolution, he gives historical literature a new key-note for all succeeding time, by fixing his main regards, not upon governments, but upon men; not upon dead institutions, but upon the living nation. Slavery has found in this sentiment its one unconquerable opponent. The sense of slavery as a profanation of man's being was that inspiration which has swelled in noble hearts and prophesied by persuasive tongues against it: this it was which added the eloquence of religion to the eloquence of Phillips; this which lent itself as a grand organ accompaniment to the strong believing simplicity of Garrison; and it was the reverberation of their words in the nation's heart, the answering echo of this sentiment there, which made even its rage tremulous and timorous before them. It was this, too, which frenzied the South, and compelled it to destroy its own evil hopes by the preëminent blunder of civil war; the rebels took arms in their hands, not less to slay an intrusive faith in their own hearts than to pierce the heart of Northern courage.

This fruitful sentiment pervades the time, I say; it is in the air; we breathe it with every respiration; it is a salt upon the food we eat, and a sweetness in the water we drink. Unacknowledged in the formal instructions of theological schools, held in suspicion on Sundays, blasphemed against by the phraseology of traditional worship, it nevertheless penetrates the theologian, finds access to pulpit and pew, peeps out through the borrowed phrase of prayer. It cannot be suppressed, it cannot be excluded; it will have place, and it will have its way. To a large extent it is indeed crude and impure,—a religion, but pagan, sometimes scarcely less pagan than that which it supersedes. Yet crude or clear, derived or confessed, it is a soul of sovereignty, a root of power, an atmosphere of influence in the modern world. The faith the world really lives by to-day is better expressed by Burns's "A man's a man for a' that," than by all the catechisms, ecclesiastic confessions, and copy-beliefs of Europe and America. It is in Dickens and Thackeray; it is in Channing and Chalmers; everywhere man, everywhere the native interests of man are set up against the mechanisms of class and creed. Comte confesses it against his own theory that man is but a fragment in Nature; churches confess it against their own dogmas, that man is but a combination of snake and dung-heap; Russia utters it by the voice of her autocrat, and France forces the confession of it from the lips of Louis Napoleon.

And now, at length, this unacknowledged religion of the time is coming to be acknowledged, and to take its place in the forefront of conscious belief. This it is, more than all else, which makes the new epoch. We are learning why man's being has this sanctity. That vital intimacy, that living union of divine and human, which has been indicated in the old truth which has newly come to recognition; and no creed will henceforth respond to the felt and moving credence of men, wherein this does not appear as the second grand confession which faith has to make. First, God is; secondly, God is vitally implicated in man's being. Hence the universality and perpetuity of revelation; hence that awful undertone of meaning in all human history; hence the blasphemy that there is in baseness; hence the infinite, absolute worth of a human soul. It is by reason of this infinite depth of root that the tree of life can tower and spread forever; the illimitable stretch of immortality is above, because the illimitable resource of God's being is beneath. False to this life man may be, but so far he is not man; false to the eternal soul, he is by the same act, and to the same degree, false to his own. It is only when the fire of eternity gives a spark from its bosom, and then breathes to fan it across the field of time, that the flame is lighted which we name a human soul. True to itself, the soul is true to God. Burning purely, it reveals God; burying and quenching itself in the sloughs of nature, it denies God. Baseness is blasphemy; nobility is revelation; the Pharisee has crucified the Christ in his own heart, ere he crucified it in the person of Jesus. Yes, and to this day that tragedy is repeated whenever any man is false to his soul; while to this day the Christ rises from his sepulchre whenever a heart that was false to itself begins to be true, whenever through the ceremonies of sordid life the real life breaks forth, and flames again toward heaven, at once human and divine.—The Radical, February, 1866.

PAINE AT NEW ROCHELLE.

HIS VARIED LIFE ON THE OLD FARM NOW ADVERTISED FOR SALE IN PART.

The advertised sale of a portion of the old Paine farm at New Rochelle has awakened a fresh interest, apparently, in the place and its memorials, for the number of visitors to the Paine monument has been unusually large of late. The villagers who know Paine are dead, but there are many now living who have heard their fathers speak of the old man of the house on the hill, and these recollections are doubtless authentic. The older biographies of Paine, whether written by his friends or enemies, have a manifest bias, and on many important questions of fact the writers are diametrically opposed. From the mass of conflicting statements and traditions it is a difficult task to sift out those which are true, and to present a trustworthy picture of the man as he was and as he appeared to his fellow-townsmen.

At the close of the Revolutionary war grants were made to Mr. Paine by the legislatures of Pennsylvania and New York on the score of his labors in behalf of independence. The assembly of New York voted to give him the confiscated estate of Mr. Frederick Devoe, a royalist. This estate was situated at New Rochelle, and is now known as the old Paine farm. It contained something more than three hundred acres of cleared land, a portion of which was in a high state of cultivation, and a stone house was built on the highest ground, which was thought to be a spacious and elegant structure, as mansion-houses were looked upon then. The green fields rose in a gradual slope from the road, and a long lane ran through the fields up to the house, from the upper windows of which the country could be seen for miles around. The village of New Rochelle contained then only a few scattered houses, and the Devoe estate was on the outskirts of the little town. Paine was a famous and popular man in those days, however, and the neighbors flocked in from all sides to welcome him when he came down from New York to his new farm. He took possession, according to the custom of the time, with a grand house-warming, or village fête to which everybody in the neighborhood came, as a matter of course. The rooms of the house were thrown open and the guests rambled through them, overflowing upon the broad, shady piazzas outside, and wandering down under the spreading trees which grew on the lawn. All were greeted with a few pleasant words of welcome by the host, who sat in a shady seat on the front stoop breaking loaf-sugar for the prospective punch. Surrounded by admiring neighbors, Paine was in his glory and overflowed with good-nature and sociability. He had a merry or witty word for every one, and fascinated even children by his winsome ways. One little girl was there, who had heard of the notable pamphlet, Common Sense, which Paine had written before the war, but had somehow confused the author in his work, so that to her Paine was only known as Mr. Common Sense. He called her to him, and she went up timidly, saying: "How do you do, Mr. Common Sense?" at which Paine laughed out pleasantly, caught up the child in his arms, and talked and played with her till she felt quite at home with the kind-hearted stranger.

All accounts represent Paine, indeed, as a most attractive person, when he chose to be entertaining, at this time. He was but little past the prime of life, and his mental powers were in their full vigor. In person he was rather above middle size, being five feet ten inches in height, broad-shouldered and athletic. Later in life he was inclined to stoop as he walked, but then he carried his head rather proudly erect. His hair was long and inclined to curl, growing thickly about his forehead and ears. It was his custom to wear it brushed back and gathered behind in a cue, with side-curls falling about his neck. On all state occasions he was particular about the arrangement of it, and had it carefully powdered. His face was well shaped, though rather broad, and his complexion was florid. His features were large, but not homely, and his face singularly expressive. Perhaps the most noticeable features of his countenance were his fine sparkling eyes, which in moments of animation were bright with feeling and humor. Before strangers his bearing was grave and dignified, and towards those whom he had reason to dislike repellent; but in the company of his friends his manners were engaging, easy, and even playful. He was a welcome visitor at the tables of the most distinguished citizens, and was the life of the whole company. As a society man he was scrupulously particular, though not a dandy, about his dress, and his full starched shirt-front and fine broadcloth coat are well remembered in tradition for the care with which he kept them clean. He was an inveterate user of snuff, and not particular about stains as he grew older; but during his first residence at New Rochelle he was remarkably neat in his use of tobacco. Horne Tooke remarked of him at a later time, in prospect of a dinner-party, that "he would venture to say that the best thing would be said by Mr. Paine." As a conversationalist, he was inclined to be dogmatic and to do most of the talking himself, but he was not illiberal in his reception of the views of others. He was somewhat vain of the effect which his writings had produced, and irascible when he was crossed or contradicted; but his good nature was abundant, and his ill-temper never lasting. His residence at New Rochelle, before he sailed for France, in April, 1787, may be taken as the happiest and least troubled portion of his life. He was then free from care in regard to his income, through the grants which had been made to him, and lived on his estate, honored by his neighbors and the country at large, as a deserving and enlightened patriot.

Of Paine's position and character at this time there can be little question. In 1803, when he next took up his residence on the New Rochelle farm, he was an old man of sixty-six, broken in health and shunned by the great body of church-going people. He had suffered a long and unjust confinement in a French prison, during the latter part of which his life hung by a thread. His works had been condemned and his person proscribed in the country of his birth; he had maintained an acrimonious contest in defence of his political and religious views with hostile partisans, and it was but natural that these things should have left their impress on him. His spirit was not broken, but the native sweetness of his disposition was considerably impaired. He mentions, also, to Hickman, a most friendly biographer, that during hours of disheartenment and when smarting under the sense of injustice, he had sometimes used liquor to excess, but he hopes to make a change for the better in this respect on his return to the country of his adoption. He found, however, that this habit was not to be laid aside as readily as he supposed. Although he was in a measure prepared for a cold reception, he does not seem to have realized the extent or the strength of the feeling against him, intensified as it was by misrepresentation, until he reached New York. The Federalists were bitterly opposed to him as a representative of radical republicanism, and even many of the Republicans—his natural allies—shrank from him on account of his avowed religious tenets. Paine could bear anything better than the neglect and desertion of his former friends and admirers. He was deeply touched by the hostility and prejudice with which he was met, and his faults of temper were undoubtedly aggravated. Both in his writings and conversation he became more dogmatic, assuming, and ill-natured in his judgment of opponents. As society neglected him, he shut himself up with his books and manuscripts. He returned to New Rochelle, but this time he received no ovation. His old house had been destroyed by fire in 1780, and a new house had been erected for the use of the farmer who cultivated the land for him. This was the house which stands at present, practically unaltered, some twenty rods from the road, near the top of the slope. It had no pretensions to elegance, but was a comfortable farmhouse of medium size. The roof projected over in front and rear, forming a shelter to the stoops. The chamber which Paine occupied as a sleeping-room and study is at the north-east corner of the house, and the windows look towards the fields, away from the road. The room is oblong in form, with an iron fire-place in one side, by which two handsome fire-dogs, said to have been the property of Paine, are still standing. A door, which is now nailed up, then opened into a large wine-closet, constructed partly below ground, which is now used as a storeroom for milk and meats. The furniture of the room is said to have been simple,—a plain cot bed, a small writing-table and a few chairs satisfying the requirements of the occupant. In these modest quarters Paine lived, with occasional visits to New York, until June, 1806, when he left the farm-house to take up his residence finally in New York and the immediate vicinity. While living with the artist Jarvis, in the winter of 1806-7, he is said to have made occasional visits to the farm; but New Rochelle can only be considered as his home from June, 1803, till June, 1806. During these three years he had generally some work on politics, science, or literature on hand. He is said to have mixed a little, too, in party politics, and to have written in some papers and periodicals. About this time he published a number of fugitive pieces, which had been written long before for amusement in France or in England. One of these was the severe satirical poem on tithes in the style of "Chevy Chase," entitled "The Strange Story of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram." In 1804 he published an essay on the invasion of England and a treatise on gun-boats. His treatise on the yellow fever and modes of prevention was printed in 1805. When he came first to the farm in 1803, he boarded with Purdy, the farmer to whom he had rented his land. While in France he had resided at different times with a Mr. Bonneville, the editor of a French paper, from whom he had often occasion to borrow money, besides receiving other favors from him and his family. On the elevation of Bonaparte to supreme power, the press of M. Bonneville was stopped, and he suffered besides from pecuniary losses. Paine, at that time on the point of returning to the United States, offered an asylum there to M. Bonneville and his family. Bonneville accepted the offer, and his wife and three sons shortly afterwards crossed the ocean to America. He intended to follow them, but for some reason his departure was delayed till after Paine's death. Meanwhile Mme. Bonneville and her sons were provided for by Paine, with the exception of the elder son, Louis, who returned to France in 1805 to live with his father. When Paine went to New Rochelle the Bonneville children accompanied him, and Mme. Bonneville visited him several times at the farm, though she seems to have preferred New York as a place of residence. The neighbors remembered the Bonneville boys as bright, mischievous youngsters, running about the farm and village in summer barefooted and commonly bareheaded. During the winter they were sent to school in the village, but no particular care appears to have been taken of their education. The quiet farm-house on the hill was probably disturbed somewhat by the noisy children, but Paine does not seem to have objected to their presence, and took considerable notice of them in his way, though absorbed with other affairs. Paine seems always to have been fond of children, and not only the Bonneville boys but the children of the neighbors came to know him well, and would venture on many liberties and familiarities with him. He liked to sit by the country store, it is said, and watch the children playing in the road while fondling the head of some vagrant dog which had demanded a share of his attentions. To children and dogs, it is said, he rarely spoke harshly or reprovingly even. Once when a party of mischievous boys made a raid on his orchard they were surprised by Paine, who, however, only assisted them to gather the best fruit, talking and laughing with them pleasantly. A little boy who had kept at a distance from the others, who were older and bolder than himself, was called by Paine to come up, and the kindly old man saw that he got his share of apples with the rest.

He was not so familiar with the older villagers, however. They spoke of him as reserved and not inclined to make acquaintances, though when he did come out of his chamber-study he was affable enough, and would talk with the farmers and their wives on the current country topics with no lack of sociability. He was no longer particular about his dress, and the loose coat which he commonly wore was stained with snuff, as well as his crumpled shirt-bosom. Still, though he had grown careless about his dress and wore old clothes in his room and in his walks about the village, there seems to be little truth in the accounts which represent him as positively filthy in his person and dress. Probably he became more neglectful in this respect than his friends care to admit, for he lived aloof from society, often with no other company than the old black woman who took care of the house and prepared his meals. His books and papers were laid in piles about his chamber without any noticeable attempt at arrangement or order, and his table was always covered with writing materials and unfinished work. There is little room to doubt either that in these years he became too much addicted to the use of liquor. The habit had grown upon him until he found himself unable to break it off. Not that he drank to such an excess as his enemies allege, for this is sufficiently disproved by the clearness of mind and intellectual power which he retained to the day of his death, but in the privacy of his own apartments it was not unusual for him to exceed the bounds of a temperate use of wine and ardent spirits. In his old age, also, although capable of a liberal generosity in money matters, as his gratitude to the Bonneville family shows, he became parsimonious in little things. His accounts were scrutinized carefully, and any overcharge, the neighbors said, was sharply rejected. His personal expenses were light, for his tastes were simple, and he was not disposed to admit any extravagance, or what he chose to consider such, in his dependants. This closeness of dealing, although to his mind it seemed only a rightful objection to impositions, often provoked those with whom he had business relations. Not to speak of the angry and foolish letters which passed between him and Carver, an attempt was actually made by Christopher Derrick, who considered that Paine had withheld a portion of what was due him, to kill Paine as he sat writing in his chamber on Christmas eve, 1804. The shot fired by Derrick struck the wall of the room a few inches below the window, and the lower panes were shattered by the concussion. Paine hastily sprang up, ran to the door, and called out Derrick's name to warn him that he was detected, though the night was so dark that no one could be seen. Paine, who was always untroubled by the thought of personal danger, made light of the incident, though Derrick was afterwards prosecuted on suspicion, but acquitted on the ground of insufficient evidence.

During the last months of his life at New Rochelle, Paine's health was very poor, and he needed constant nursing and attention. The broad-shouldered, athletic man had become a weak invalid, moving slowly and with difficulty, assisted by a stout cane on which he leaned, when he was able to walk a few steps from his boarding-house in the village. He stooped over very much, it is said, as he walked, and it was plain that his bodily powers were fast becoming exhausted. His face still retained, however, much of its old expressiveness, and in the neighborhood to-day the impression is still strong among the old residents that he retained much of his former dignity and commanding air. He disliked very much any attempt on the part of visitors to obtrude upon him their religious principles, or to convince him of his erroneous religious standpoint. Towards the latter part of his life he refused flatly to receive such persons, and resented their intrusions as excessively impertinent. The old lady in the scarlet cloak who called upon him while he was living with Jarvis, a few months after leaving New Rochelle, fared better than others. He raised himself on one elbow as he lay in bed, and when she had delivered her message as one sent to him from God to tell him that if he did not repent of his sins and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, he would certainly be damned, he replied with something of his old humor, "Poh, poh; he would not send such a foolish, ugly, old woman as you about with his messages. Go way now; that will do. Shut the door." The old lady retired in mute astonishment, but Paine did not always see the humor of such visitations.

These traits of character and manner were apparent to those who knew him during his residence at New Rochelle, and it is his life there alone that it is intended to sketch. He died in Greenwich Village, June 8, 1809, and his body was taken to New Rochelle the next day, and there buried on his farm. A plain stone was erected to his memory, with the following inscription: "Thomas Paine, author of Common Sense. Died June 8, 1809, aged seventy-two years and five months."

Some years afterwards the bones of Paine were removed by William Cobbett to England, and the head-stone and rude wall about the grave were broken down by relic-hunters, so that the grave presented an appearance of neglect. In 1839, by the efforts of some friends of Paine, a monument was erected on the spot, and the grave was inclosed by a substantial wall and railing. At first the monument bore the same simple inscription as the head-stone, but different passages from Mr. Paine's works were cut in the stone in after years.—New York Herald.

A LABOR REBELLION.

We wonder if something new and worth while towards helping on the solution of that "question of questions"—the question underlying all questions of politics, health, morals, and trade,—the labor question, can't be got out of this gigantic brakeman's rebellion that has broken out in the passes of the Blue Ridge and now seems to be extending into the Ohio Valley. What is the use of repeating forever that stale truism that a laborer may stand out for whatever price he thinks fit to demand, but he must not prevent other men from working for whatever they choose to accept? It seems to us that we have heard this somewhere before. If we are not mistaken, we have heard it every time there has been a strike during the last quarter of a century, at least. No more edifying is the well-worn counsel to the strikers that they always lose in the end. All this is true enough; but are we never to have anything new on "the question of questions"? Why, there is a handsome prize in money offered by Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, a philanthropic lady of New York city, for an essay that will advance some fresh and useful ideas on this literally vital question: What shall be done with the starving men who can work and want to work, but cannot keep their families and scarcely their own bodies? Shall we thin them out by the starvation process, grinding them slowly down by a steady diminution of wages to the point where disease and death will come in play to take them off the overcrowded community and redress the balance? Would it not look better to transport them to some distant frontier where the natural attendant disorders would not result in the destruction of property and interruption of the business of those for whom there is business to do? Or would it not be more truly humane to recruit the regular army to a hundred thousand or two and keep a firing party in each leading centre of population to collect and shoot at once the superfluous laborers and their families? Shall we adopt Hamlet's prescription and forbid any more marriages, or turn Malthusian and legalize infanticide?

These are mere suggestions thrown out in sheer disgust at the poverty of the current talk on this great uprising of labor spreading along the main national highways, and forcing the national military arm to combat it. When John Brown, Osawatimie Brown, organized a resistance to the lawful authorities of the State, in the very next station on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to where the present rising broke out, in behalf of a different class of hopeless and desperate laborers, many people took little heed. It was the crazy, suicidal work of a fanatic. It was easily stamped out in blood. On his trial Brown indignantly repelled the defence of insanity offered in his behalf and went to his scaffold with a radiant countenance and the step of a conqueror, for his eyes had seen the glory of the coming of the Lord, and he knew that the soul of his rebellion would go marching on. How contemptible appears now the brief triumph of physical force over the social crisis then about to break! How stupid the easy confidence which dealt in trite platitudes on the wrong of violence under any circumstances, in the very shadow of the swift-rolling cloud of civil war! At Martinsburg to-day, it is impossible to rally the local militia, as then, against the insurgents. The citizens, too, appear to fraternize with them. A repenting striker is dragged back from his engine by his wife and children crowding with him into the cab imploring him to stand out for their sakes. A mother follows her son, who would go back to his post, with mingled prayers and reproaches, in the sight and hearing of the crowd and the soldiers.

In rural railroad towns, and even in the larger railroad centres of Pennsylvania and Ohio, the railroad is the principal embodiment and representative of society and authority. Its officials are the magnates of county and State politics, and the leaders in all local affairs. The railroad is the life of the community, the source and means of its business and enterprise, the largest employer of its labor. A revolt against the railroad is therefore in a large measure rebellion against the powers that be. The State and national governments are distant and shadowy abstraction compared with the power that visibly distributes wages, business, and the means of living to the people. This rising, then, that calls for the army and reaches even the women of the region, is well styled a rebellion. There is no fear that it can have long enough life to become a revolution. We are in no danger of a communistic triumph in such regions. But it is well to recognize the grave seriousness of the outbreak in all that it implies. Here is a tract of country in the heart of the republic struggling against the powers that be, as for life itself. The rebels say that their families are threatened with starvation. Their wives and children join in this piteous and desperate cry. It is offering no assistance to tell people in such a state that they must not combine and resist the laws. It is as useless to tell people who believe they are in danger of starving that they will be beaten, as it was to overawe the earliest American rebels with the armies of Great Britain. They must live, they say; and if public opinion replies merely that it "does not see the necessity," they will do what they can to help themselves. It is time for the thinking men of the country to rouse to the truth that there is a stern struggle for existence going on in the new adjustment of the expectations of both industry and enterprise to the altered state of capital, and that risings such as this in West Virginia and Ohio require some broader ideas than have served in ordinary times.—Boston Transcript, July 20.

ADDRESS BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS TO HIS FELLOW-CITIZENS ON THE SITUATION.

The crisis in the affairs of labor and capital which is now pending and imminent, is no accidental or unforeseen event. It is part of a necessary evolution of society to a higher and better stage of adjustment between those great interests involved. The transition has to take place between the lower and the higher form of civilization. Such a transition is like the birth of a new being. It cannot occur without the rending of old conditions, with some struggle and pain; but it makes all the difference in the world whether the nature of the case is understood, provided for, patiently waited upon, and lovingly served; or whether, on the contrary, it is met by ignorant alarm, violent resistance, and frantic effort to extirpate the cause of the disturbance. An ignorant surgeon who should mistake a perfectly natural case of pregnancy and incipient parturition for a malignant tumor, and who should resort to the knife, would kill both mother and child. The ordinary politician, military commander, or business man is that ignorant surgeon. The case is beyond their skill, and must have a different kind of treatment.

The simple fact is, that our form of civilization, based on an unequal struggle of competition between the strong and powerful few and the weak and helpless many (for so it has been), is, in the expressive language of the common people, "played out." Something else and something better has to come; or something worse from the desperate struggle to get the better. The simple fact is, that the laboring man—and he is the immense majority—GETS NO JUSTICE on the present plan of conducting business; and that he has discovered that fact and means to right things at all hazards. He has the power in his hands the moment he is thoroughly aroused,—in this country of all the countries in the world; with our political creed which concedes it to him, with his numerical majority, and with his wide-spread intelligence and daring enterprise. The ballot is his, but he can't wait to use it, and he might be cheated in the use of it, as he has been. The soldier is recruited from him! is him! and will fraternize with him! and then, instantly the bottom of our old civilization is fallen out. This, then, is the shorter cut. From the instant this happens—it has already happened in the small way, and it will happen in the large way—the poverty of the current talk about "enforcing the law, first and foremost," becomes evident. It is then mere babble. The case has gone into the higher court, where the question is of "establishing justice" first and foremost, and of enforcing the laws afterwards; and upon that basis only.

All this means, it is true, revolution; not political revolution merely or mainly, but social and industrial revolution; revolution in the world's way of doing business; of exchanging values and of compensating labor. There are a few dozens of men, and some women, in the United States, and a handful over the whole world, who have made the science of society a study for many years past, and who have tried to tell their busy contemporaries that just this time and these events were coming; but generally their contemporaries were too busy to heed them. I have been one of those students and John the Baptists, which fact is a reason why I feel now authorized to speak. Everything depends, from now on, upon the readiness of the wealthy classes to sense the situation in season to make terms with the new order of things; to sense the fact, first, indeed, that there is a NEW ORDER OF THINGS here now, or inevitably about to come. The trouble with the strikers is that there are too many of them; that they are, in effect, the whole laboring population, the immense majority of the people, so that the theory of shooting them down is futile. A ready acceptance of the situation on the part of the rich and great will tide us in safety over the crisis. Nothing else is safe for the country, and especially for the rich and great themselves, as the class of the population really most in danger. They should entertain at once, and discuss freely with the strikers and among themselves, such extreme and gigantic measures as the forced transfer of all railroads, magnetic telegraphs, and great public works to the government, with the laborers paid fixed and equitable prices, as government employés; the organization of great government workshops; or organized government colonization, and other similar enterprises, and the honest effort that government shall become the social providence for the whole people. They and the people should organize at once volunteer bodies of consultation, from among the wisest and best, and call into their counsels those who may know something of social justice, and of social tendencies and laws. It matters not if the immediate disturbances subside. Be not deceived by the lull. The storm only gathers force by the delay; and if the rich and great are obstinate or stupid or slow, God help them, when the real crisis comes. The labor question is now on for final adjudication, and 'tis just as sure to get itself settled, peaceably if it may, forcibly if it must, as the slavery question was to reach its finality, as it did, in blood. I know elements enough, in the single city of New York, the very best elements too, for good uses, if they were rightly met by the rich and great, to renew, in a week's time, all the horrors of the first French Revolution. It is dangerous sitting in a powder magazine, smoking the best Havana cigars at your ease, and carelessly throwing the burning stumps around you.

I might readily have procured the names of a considerable list of other socialistic students to sign this warning along with me, but that would have consumed time; and the value of the document, if it has any, lies chiefly in the ideas, and much less in the name or names attached to them.

STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

"THERE WAS another story," continued Peter, with a twinkle in his eye, but the same grumbling tone in his voice, "ferry wicked; but man's the time I will haf a laugh at that story. That was about two men in a boat, and the night it was so black that they could not find their way into the harbor at all, and the wind it was blowing ferry hard. And the one he says to the other, 'Duncan, you must gif a prayer now or we will nefer get into the harbor at all.' And Duncan says, 'I canna do it; you maun do it yourself, Donald.' And Donald he will say, 'Tam you, Duncan, if you do not gif a prayer we will be drooned as sure as death, for I can see nothing but blackness.' And so it was that Duncan will stay in the stern of the boat, and he will kneel down, and he will say, 'O Lord, it is fifteen years since I haf asked you for anything; but it will be another fifteen years before I will ask you for anything more, if you will tek the boat into the harbor.' And then, sure enough, at this moment there was a great sound of the boat going on the beach, and Donald, that was up at the bow, he will cry out, 'Stop, Duncan, do not pray any more; do not be beholden to anybody, because the boat's ashore already.'"—William Black's "Madcap Violet."

Poetry.

CHINESE POETRY.

The Willow Blossoms.

Brave yellow, passing into tender green,
The glory of the spring-tide's early day;
By eaves' side quivering, or in the sheen
Of lake reflected; every tender spray
Dancing upon the wind, by silken thread suspended,
Or sighing for the mellow eve and moonlight play;
O sweet and fair, too young as yet to bear
Plucking for love's last gift, with farewell ended,
O wilting flowers, ye steal my heart away.
The Eastern King, should he your beauties know,
Will look with kindly eyes; nor rain, nor snow
Will send, nor anything
To mar the crescent spring,
And breezes that your lengthening tassels sway.

The Mountain Outlook.

Yonder falls a peripitous cascade three thousand feet.
Here the mountain touches the sky and divides the orbs.
Drifting snows fly amidst the thunder.
I am like a white bird amidst the clouds:
I insult the winds and invade the deep abyss.
As I turn and look down on each neighboring province,
The evening smoke ascends from the dwellings in blue specks.

A Friend Revisited.

Men pass their lives apart: like stars that move, but never meet.
This eve, how blest it is that the same lamp gives light to both of us!
Brief is youth's day. Our temples already tell of waning life.
Already half of those we know are spirits: I am moved in the depth of my soul!
Could I have thought that after twenty years I should again be in your home?
—Johnson's "China."

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 4.

Dr. Topping, 15 cents; B. P. Elliott, 30 cents; E. W. Pike, $3.20; C. Griswold, $2.20; Mrs. A. Y. Hagar, $3.20; Mrs. H. T. Clark, $3.20; J. M. P. Batchelder, $5; Mrs. Benj. Sharp, $4; J. W. Graffam, $1.00; Giles A. Adams, $3.20; D. W. C. Priest, $3.20; Alex. N. Davis, $3.20; M. L. Weems, $3; S. B. Mumford, $1.50; Dr. N. H. Webster, $6; F. E. Abbot, $1.93; E. H. Sargeant, $1; Mrs. E. E. Walker, $3.10; J. Hendrie, $3.45; Mrs. B. Booth, $3.20; E. W. Gunn, $3.20; J. Russ, Jr., $3.20; T. McWhorter, $3.20; Edward Allen, $6.40; J. L. Hungerford, $7; Cash, 25 cents; O. B. Voss, $6; Harold Frederic, $3.20; W. C. Kelley, $3.20; J. C. Keams, $1.50; H. H. Howard, $3; J. J. Vertrees, $5.50; V. B. Martin, $3.45.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent, unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 9, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

During the month of August, my friend, Mr. SIDNEY H. MORSE, will assume entire editorial charge of THE INDEX, and relieve me of all literary responsibility on its account. All letters and communications should be addressed, as usual, to "THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston."

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

TO THE READERS OF THE INDEX:—

In assuming the editorial charge of THE INDEX for the remaining weeks of this month, I have only to say, by way of preface, that I am indeed glad that my poor services make it possible for our mutual friend to obtain the rest he so much needs, and so richly deserves. May he return to his post with vigor of body and mind restored to continue indefinitely his good and fruitful work!

Communications designed for my special attention may be addressed to 25 Bromfield Street.

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

F. R. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The report of the recent annual meeting of the Free Religious Association has been published in the usual pamphlet form, and can be obtained at the office 231 Washington Street, or at A. Williams & Co.'s, corner of Washington and School Streets, Boston. It contains the Essay by Rev. W. R. Alger on "Steps Towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and the Essay by Mr. C. D. B. Mills, on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; also Addresses by Messrs O. B. Frothingham, William Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson,—with tenth annual reports of the executive committee, treasurer, etc. Price, single copy, forty cents; four, or more, twenty-five cents each.

Persons sending for it by mail will address, "Free Religious Association," 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

FREE RELIGION turns to the absorbing themes humanity is everywhere and in manifold ways discussing, to see what is true and just, and help the world upward to harmony and peace.

THE ESSAY ON "The New Epoch in Belief," reprinted elsewhere from one of the earliest issues of the Radical, has always seemed to us a discourse of the highest order,—such a one as we are forced to confess it is the fortune of liberal literature rarely to find itself enriched. The author has written many notable things—this among them,—and we hope there is much more to come!

THE LABOR QUESTION is assuming a prominence in this country which puts most other questions for the time out of men's thoughts. It is a great question, far more difficult of solution than that of chattel slavery. How to deliver "free men" from the bondage of enforced poverty, surely transcends all questions else, for it lies at the basis of all hoped-for prosperity.

IN THE discussion of the labor question there ought to be no room for crimination and recrimination. The present condition of affairs is our common inheritance,—bad if we are contented with it; good if we put it under our feet as the ground whereon we stand to create that which is better. We shall undoubtedly pass through great excitement, and the end of violence may not yet have arrived. But the true motto for those who can entertain it is: "With malice towards none, and charity for all."

THE premiums offered by Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson for the best essays on the labor question, will, undoubtedly, add to the already growing interest in that subject; but let no one make the blunder of supposing that the awards determined upon by the committee appointed by the American Social Science Association will necessarily indicate the permanent solution of labor difficulties. The wisdom of our political economists carries, like the wisdom of the rest of the world, many grains of fallibility.

WE NOTICE that there is a disposition on the part of the press generally to speak in greater favor since the riots of General Sherman's notion of a "standing army." To our mind this is not the direction to look at all. For the matter of force, the extemporized "vigilance committees" did the most efficient service in Pittsburgh and elsewhere. Instead of arming to the teeth, and drawing the lines to wait the next onset, we need the effacement of lines,—the spirit of reconciliation. If the South can be forgiven Andersonville, the strikers can be forgiven Pittsburgh. One thing is sure: only a truce, not peace, can be secured by bayonets. We need more labor-reformers instead of more generals.

AMERICAN prejudice, like English, that sides with Russia in her war on Turkey is founded for most part on the massacre of Christians in Bulgaria. If the Turks were alone in such outrages on humanity there would be some reason why she should be wiped out of Europe. But, unfortunately, the fact is otherwise, as nearly everybody knows. There is this difference, however, and in the eyes of Christendom it is a difference that assumes gigantic proportions: it was a slaughter of Christians by Infidels. Christians themselves may slaughter other Christians, and especially heathen, as the English did in India, blowing souls from bodies from the mouths of cannon. Had the Bulgarians not been Christians, it is fair to assume that not half the indignation we have seen throughout the Christian world would have been aroused, and Gladstone's sensationalism would have been confined to the menace of the Romish Church. Nobody believes in Russia as the evangel of justice. The fate of Poland and of Hungary are too conspicuous to permit of such a conviction. The war is without shadow of excuse other than Russia's ambition. We have no special love for the Turks, but it is clear enough that more than one-half of their offence is that they are not Christians. However, Roman Catholic Christians get along well enough in their country. Perhaps it is because there are no Russian emissaries among them stirring them up to provoke a Bashî-Bazank assault.

AS ILLUSTRATING the "march of infidelity," we call attention to some statements by the New York Independent, as to the "transformation" going on in the Evangelical Church. It seems that one Dr. Blauvelt has been charged with "betraying the cause of Christ to his enemies," on account of certain new views of "inspiration" to which he has given utterance. The Independent points out that Drs. Tholuck, Lange, and others hold like opinions. Lange thinks "there is a difference of inspiration observable in the Scriptures," and Tholuck declares, "Inspiration is not real and total, but only partial, and is to be determined (i.e., limited) in reference to the truths necessary to salvation. . . . The Scriptures have a kernel and a shell. Upon the former there is the positive and direct impress of the Holy Spirit; but upon the latter it is indirect and relative." Rothe's position is stated in bolder terms:—

The books of the Bible must be regarded as the general product of the minds of their human authors. These authors have had their moments of inspiration, to which they owe much of the religious experience they have embalmed in their writings. But inspiration was not the normal condition of their minds, nor were their books written during the moments of such inspiration.

Our readers, many of them, who have in their experience passed over much the same ground, will remember and concede that this does very well for a beginning. These learned doctors in due season, when they have thoroughly shed the "shell" of inspiration, will discover that they themselves have marched out to keep company with the great body of "unbelievers." Every book may be said to have a "kernel and a shell." It is the "kernel" the "infidels" are after.

WHEN THE WAR of the rebellion was getting under way, it was the fashion of the press in many parts of the country to cry out, "See! this is the work of the abolitionists." Indeed, from the beginning of the abolition movement the leading journals of the country held only the profoundest contempt for Garrison, Rogers, Phillips, and their associates. The rope about Garrison's neck was thought generally to be only the fitting symbol of his deserts. Times have changed, and in that respect the public has seen how great was its mistake. "History repeats itself," however, and to-day all who have been foremost in the agitation of the labor-question come in for their share of abuse. They are, as the abolitionists were, "theorists," "fanatics," "sentimental fools," and worse—"villains deliberately plotting the destruction of social order." It is not pretended that everybody who has spoken on the labor-question has spoken wisely, or that all are equally earnest or honest,—though as to that we do not judge; but their critics would better serve their country by a greater display of candid consideration of the "questions of questions," than by any amount of ungenerous personality. If error abounds, expose it. Free discussion is not only to be tolerated, it is the urgent necessity. If it be trivial and irrelevant, make it grave and to the point. There was never a better opportunity. We are happy to add that this advice is in some degree gratuitous. After they have had their fling at "labor-reformers," there is quite a disposition manifest among editors to turn to and try their own hand solving the problem. We wish them, one and all, complete success! As a specimen, we print an initiatory and excellent editorial from the Boston Evening Transcript, which has been followed up by much other excellent writing. We predict that a few years hence the Transcript will have become a labor reform journal of the staunchest type.

THE NEW YORK Sun has an editorial on "The March of Infidelity," in which special reference is made to the discussion of the subject by the Pan-Presbyterian Council in Edinburgh. It says: "The question of proper and efficient means of meeting the serious hosts of the enemies of historical Christianity was made a prominent one." Dr. McCosh, of Princeton, was one of the chief speakers, and presented a "practical plan," which the Sun thus summarizes:—

Other speakers at Edinburgh, as for instance, Dr. Patton, of Chicago, contented themselves with abusing the new teachings, and warning the Orthodox against them; but the venerable Princeton President went at the enemy in a different and a wiser way. The materialists, as Dr. McCosh well understands, are not to be frightened by the beating of the Chinese gongs of the old theologians, nor are they to be dismayed by threats of punishing them with hell fire. His idea is that the ministers shall devote their time to planting the seeds of the gospel, to awakening men's consciences, to showing them the necessity of spiritual regeneration, and to the conquering of the old enemy of original sin. That is, they shall go on in the old ways, and not spend their time in random assaults upon an adversary, who usually can bring to the field of controversy better weapons of argument than they. The dealing with the infidel he would turn over to a special body of Christian knights, defenders of the faith, trained for the purpose. The modern knights of the cross would work side by side with the parsons, and would relieve the ministers of the labor of tackling the aggressive materialists. Drilled and disciplined for this particular work, they would have at their command arguments drawn from revelation, philosophy, history, and science, so that they could meet the foe on equal terms. . . . The great mass of theologians now are pretty sure to get confused, tripped, and demoralized in a controversy with the materialists; for while the materialists are naturally well-informed as to the old positions of Orthodoxy, and of course know the exact strength of their own, the theologians venture on ground with which they are not so familiar. It thus has happened that the materialists have treated the assaults of the theologians with a good deal of contempt, hardly deeming them foes worthy of their steel; while the theologians, though denying that they were vanquished and still confident of their cause, have expended themselves too often in unavailing abuse.

There is a vein of good sense in this which the "materialists" will doubtless appreciate and rejoice in. It will be well to remember, however, that the "enemies of historical Christianity," are not always and of necessity "materialists." But of that hereafter.

THE SECOND number of the Radical Review, to be issued August 15, will present the following table of contents: "Female Kinship and Maternal Filiation," by Elie Reclus; "Walt Whitman," by Joseph B. Marvin; "Nirvana," by Dyer D. Lum; "System of Economical Contradictions," Chapter I. Of the Economic Science, by P. J. Proudhon. Editor's Translation; "The Labor Dollar," by Stephen Pearl Andrews; "The All-Loving," by Sidney H. Morse; "The Orthodox Basis of Revivalism," by John Welles; "Paul at Athens," by B. W. Ball; "The Law of Prices: A Demonstration of the Necessity for an Indefinite Increase of Money," by Lysander Spooner. Current Literature: Harriet Martineau's Autobiography; Landor's Imaginary Conversations; Spencer's Principles of Sociology; Amberley's Analysis of Religious Belief; Foerster's Collection of Philosophical Discourses; Brinton's The Religious Sentiment. "Chips From my Studio," by Sidney H. Morse.

THE PRACTICAL SIDE.

The President of the Free Religions Association closed his address this year by declaring the Association to be a "Spiritual Anti-Slavery Society." Its aim was to "emancipate the human mind, that the human mind might bring all its powers to bear on the problems that deepest concern society." He thus recognized the present drift of all liberal thought and expectation. Religious emancipation is far-reaching and thorough. Let us indicate something of its scope.

1. It liberates from the early conception of God as a creator whose omnipotence casts a shadow over the earth, prostrating men in fear. It raises mankind to their feet; they may reason, judge, and be free. There is no God not amenable to human reason. To hold a place in human reverence, he must be as rational and well-behaved as human thought conceives he should be. He cannot hide in "inscrutable ways." He must approve himself to his own offspring. Man is born with judgment, and he will judge. If the God have no other claim to respect than his power, the free human spirit exclaims, "Though he slay me, yet do I defy him"; but immediately affirms, "There can be no such God in the universe." It says "God ought," and thereby renders highest homage. Thus, "sacred" books whose burden is, "Thus saith the Lord," cease to have authority. God from the beginning has spoken no more audibly than he does this day. What we hear is the human voice declaring humanity's sense of what all things mean. Its voice is the sole articulate "divine voice" ever heard. The "word of God," therefore, is the "word of man," newly interpreting itself to every new generation. It is the mind of man striving through the ages to tell the perfect truth, to unfold the meaning of the universe. With this striving, man's nature improves, and as he improves his God improves. The worship of power disappears. Joy and Jehovah die. The "Almighty" must go right.

2. This first step in spiritual emancipation leads to others of increasing importance. In reconstructing the idea of God, liberal thought has naturally partaken in good degree of that "other-worldliness" which has so long been the mainstay of the popular religion. It has said, "The God you picture disposing of souls in a hereafter, is horrible; therefore impossible." The old faith said, "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." The new has been singing, "No; it is a pleasing thing. God is love, and is pledged to the redemption of all souls." Both the new and the old gazing steadfastly to the life beyond. The question has been, What will God do in the next world? The discussion has been fruitful. Opinion is changing, approaching to a new unanimity. He will do what he ought to do. And he ought to be distressed, if he have in his fold but "ninety and nine," and go forth seeking the one that is lost, until he finds and restores it to a state of blessedness with the rest. So much for the "next world." God's government is vindicated there.

But now it begins to be seen that whatever would be "horrible" in the government of one world, must be "horrible" wherever it is practiced. Instinctively we turn our eyes homeward to our present habitation. Mr. Conway called his book My Earthward Pilgrimage. God is here. What have we to say? It is the same God. There cannot be a God of this world and a God of the next. One God, and one divine intent. It may be a far easier task to deal by anticipation with the affairs of a world where we have not arrived; but we are forced to take up the problem, difficult as it may be, here and now, for this world, before we depart. We want a season of this-worldliness. We do not go to God by dying. Dying is without significance. God is here as there. And here the question confronts us, What of God? Will the God fashioned by the liberal as the one only just, good, and wise, for a future life, fit into this present life? There is no alternative; we must answer, "yes," or give up the liberal ghost. We must have the reign of a righteous God on earth as well as in heaven. Liberal thought must do for the life that now is what it has done for the life to come. It must give us a new God for present use,—an earthly God; one that will save and not destroy. It must set its face against "endless misery" this side the grave. Its God must not stand for that. It must deal with humanity to further and help it on, not to stamp it out and punish, when criminal and erring. Its God must show such a face or none. It must live in the spirit and not in the letter; then its God will be alive. It must not separate righteousness and power.

Its God must win the homage of free souls. All this upon earth.

3. Again, it is not enough to see that God's government extends over this present life as actually as it ever will over any future life. It is not enough to recast our idea of God until he stands for absolute right as well as might. Where is God? What is God? are questions that cover far more practical ground. They suggest a third, How is God manifest in human affairs? As we have said the word of God is the word of man; so now we say the deeds of God are the deeds of men. Outside of human nature he can do nothing for human nature. His omnipotence is within man, not apart from and independent of him. He becomes man to make man, as he becomes a flower to make a flower. He can only help man as man. The attributes of God are our attributes. Jesus did well to say, "I and my father are one." It is a recognition that should become world-wide. "God cannot get along without strong men." "God helps those who help themselves." These and many like familiar and accepted sayings show how near the common-sense of the world has hit the mark. In plain words, our experience teaches this. Through it God says, "On you rests the burden of life. You are capable of reason, justice, truth, love, mercy, peace, the same as I am. I cannot exercise these gifts for you. You must do for yourselves and for each other. In my names speak; in my names act. My names are my attributes. Let these be your ever present help, your Supreme Ruler."

For all practical purposes, man is God; what he cannot do, God cannot do. The lesson is, we may not shirk our responsibilities. We have had a fashion of turning our fellows, whom we regarded as too bad for our treatment, over to God; sending them into the "next world." God can do no more there than here. It is by the use of our own God-gifts salvation everywhere is made possible to all. God's love? It will count for little outside human nature. His "tender mercies,"—of what succor are they to the needy until resident in the human breast? His forgiveness? It is man's business. He will establish justice? Never. 'Tis the work of man.

4. It is a little surprising, looking over the world to-day, to find that we are all, Liberal and Orthodox, dealing with each other for the most part, very much as we have been taught God is to deal with us in that "world to come." We bless the good and damn the wicked with just as free a hand as it is said he will do, when all souls have finally fallen into his hands. Orthodox hells are in full blast here on earth, and liberals support them apparently as eagerly as any other class. Our punishments are as endless as mortal life will permit. Our reliance, is the "majesty of the law"; our ability to give death-dealing blows. We entrench ourselves in our power, and consider the matter of right afterwards, if at all, at our leisure. In brief, we are all the old God's children. We need spiritual emancipation; growth into the new God-head. All that is unfit for another life, is unfit for this!

INDIVIDUALISM vs. COMMUNISM.

Conscience and intellect, be they two things or only one, belong to the individual. Without them the person or individual hardly reaches the dignity of an automatic machine, but is a mere tool. The first need of human society, the sole foundation on which it can rest with any stability and success, is that the one shall not surrender the right of either moral or intellectual thought to the many or the few. Despotism demands it, and that is the very wickedness of despotism. And doing so, despotism becomes the more wicked and intolerable the more you multiply the despots. Communism, as illustrated in the recent destructive strikes, is simply despotism multiplied, because it does not respect the right of the individual laborer to decide for himself the question for what wages he will work. If the strike had been a mere cessation from work by those so disposed in view of the wages, it might have been a sane example of prudent coöperation, or more probably a grave financial mistake; but it would not have been destructive of property, order, or human liberty. But it started with an organization, like a church, in which the individual was made to surrender his rights of conscience and intellect to the mass; and this has resulted, as it always must, in allowing the mass to be controlled by individuals with the least conscience if not the dullest intellects. The evil is dreadful, but will cure itself, as the evil of ecclesiasticism is curing itself.

Perfect freedom of labor, or individualism, is not inconsistent with either coöperation in labor or the protection of property. The communists, or rather leaders of despotic unions, who have begun by making war on railroad and corporate property, and who denounce the accumulation of even private property, make the mistake of fighting against the only form of coöperative labor that can possibly be successful. Capital, they pretend, should belong to all; that is, to the State. The State should employ all, no matter how fast they multiply, at comfortable wages. There is now no personal or selfish motive to accumulate, for all surplus belongs to the State. As brains are to be no better paid than muscle, there is little motive left to seek office, and consequently office will be administered with so little brain-force as to make industry managed by the State but moderately productive. The question arises, therefore, how the State shall raise or keep wages above their present level. Shall it kill all tramps and lazy people? Shall it regulate the production of children so as to keep mouths in due proportion to food? Shall it cut off or cut down spirits and tobacco, commonly supposed to be rather unproductive capital, but from which the State now derives a revenue of about eighty or ninety millions of dollars a year? We apprehend there would be rebellion in some quarters if it should, though not perhaps among the best workers.

It seems certain, and the more so from the recent outbreak, that before such a solution of the labor-question can work out the greatest good of the greatest number, or indeed anything like as much good as they have now, we must wait for a millennium in which both conscience and intellect are far better and more generally developed than now. For any favorable solution, we must look in exactly the opposite direction.

Millionnaires are doubtless evils, especially if they have become so by watering stock or manipulating the stock-market to the disadvantage of small stockholders. But the mischief they do to the receivers of wages is immensely exaggerated. The small investors in railroad stocks and bonds, whose little surpluses they have swamped, have far more reason to complain. The huge railroad property of the country has arisen chiefly from the coöperation of people of small means putting together the little surpluses of their earnings. Partly by miscalculation and partly by the fraud and trickery of managers, many have wholly or partially lost their rights in this property, while the public at large, including the employes, enjoy an almost incalculable benefit. The fraudulent absorbers, though numerous, are still as a drop in the bucket to the bona fide and honest proprietors, whose income from their capital, so immensely useful now to the public, is cut down on the average far more than the wages of the workers on the worst paying lines.

Any government is generally a more wasteful, arbitrary, and unwise employer of laborer than any subordinate corporation; any corporation than the private citizen. All employers of labor fall more or less in cultivating the independence and self-respect of the laborer. So that, foolish and self-destructive as strikes almost always are, they usually demonstrate a greater folly on the part of the employers. It may be impossible for employers to deal otherwise than they do with strikes when they come; but with the Golden Rule and a little foresight they might entirely prevent them. Instead of admitting the laborer as a sort of necessary evil or natural enemy, the capitalist should, by special treaty, make him a natural friend or ally. He should stipulate not only wages, but a certain share of the capital concerned in the business to be his for better or worse, on the condition that he is to forfeit it by aiding or abetting any strike that does more than to retire from labor. The difference between the wear and tear of capital in which the laborers should be interested and that in which they are not, to say nothing of immunity from strikes and mobs, would abundantly justify such a bargain. Laborers now pay a pretty large part of eighty or ninety millions of dollars of government tax on spirits and tobacco, without any corresponding benefit to themselves, to say nothing of the natural price of what they consume. Employers would find it very profitable to encourage them to save this item of expense, by agreeing to double for them whatever they would invest in the savings-bank in a year, provided they should abstain from the use of these peculiar subjects of taxation. This would be asking a terrible self-denial, to be sure; but it is no more than many of the comparatively rich have had to go through before they could consume, or rather consume, a dozen Havanas a day. Abstinence from spirits and tobacco for a few years often decides whether a man is to make a will or die in the poor-house. Now suppose all the railroads should increase the pay of their laborers twice as much as the strikers demand, which do we think would be most affected by it, the families of the laborers or the internal revenue of the United States?

What laboring men really need is not so much an increase of wages, which tends to reduce the profits of capital so as to kill the goose that lays all the gold they have, as a better custody for their possible savings, so that they may become capitalists themselves.

E. W.

LABOR NOTES.

S. H. M.

—The labor question is up.
—It is troubling the politicians.
—The strikers meant to bring it up. So far they have succeeded.

—The cry about the "Commune" is all nonsense. Nobody knows what the "Commune" is, to begin with.

—They say it means "division of property," robbery of the industrious and saving to divide with the lazy and profligate. If that is so, who and where are its advocates?

—They say it means government running railroads, telegraph-wires, etc., same as it now runs the post-office. There are champions of this latter notion. If they are "Communists," there are a few.

—The majority, however, of the day-laborers have no such idea. Probably they haven't any particular idea, only that somehow things ought to be so adjusted that they could have a more respectable time of it; and they are right.

—More right than our friend Ellzur Wright, who says "what laboring men need is not so much an increase of wages as a better custody for their possible savings." He thinks they might save enough to become "capitalists" themselves. He fears if they have too high wages they will "kill the goose that lays all the gold they have." Well, "let the old goose die." The people want a new one.

—The talk that the riots were instigated by "theorists" and "visionaries," "labor reformers," etc., is without foundation. Neither the "strikers" nor the "rioters" ever probably spent two minutes in listening to a labor reform speech, or even cared to. Their whole performance grew spontaneously out of the situation. Put any other class of people there, no matter how educated or how moral, and the chances are they would have "struck," got maddened, and ran to "riot," too. People are not so very different when they are reduced to the pinch.

—At the same time I confess it would have been a most inspiring spectacle could the world have witnessed a whole population gradually sinking into poverty's depth, yet pursuing a Christian-like patience and fortitude and serenity, either working on or refusing to work, it matters not, sending out little appeals to the ever-generous and always-ready public for help against their oppressors,—sublime indeed, and to be recorded for all time as memorable! But then, that isn't the way people get on in this world generally, and we can't look for great deeds as a regular thing. We are obliged to wait, thankful if once in many ages our earth gets lit up with their splendor.

—The Mayor of New York was requested to keep the police away from the labor-meeting in Thompson Square, and assured that that was the surest way to preserve the peace. He did so, and the result was as predicted. Individually, policeman, like soldiers, may be very estimable gentlemen, but their presence in uniforms and clubs at public gatherings has a tendency to stir up bad blood, which might otherwise slumber on unprovoked to mischief. On such occasions policeman should be invisible, and put in an appearance only on occasion of some great emergency. Nine times in ten the emergency in their absence would not arise.

—Vanderbilt's bribe may have greater or less success; but it will not change the fact that it partakes of the nature of an insult. Men don't want pay for doing their duty as men. If the men in his employ were fully paid for their services, they had no occasion for making any disturbance, let men on other roads do what they pleased. They remained quiet either because they felt justice was done them, or because they considered it the best policy. If justice was done, that was the end of it, and they ought to be held to be as capable of honor as Mr. Vanderbilt. If justice was not done, and they kept quiet because they couldn't help themselves, Mr. Vanderbilt ought to be ashamed to patch out their just dues with the parade of a gift. Either way, his "one hundred thousand dollars" has a bad look.

—Since writing the above we have discovered the following note in the columns of the New York Sun:

Refusing Mr. Vanderbilt's Gift.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE SUN:

Sir,—Many of my fellow-workmen will positively refuse to accept Mr. Vanderbilt's donation. We are not to be bought for $8 a man, nor for any amount. We want no charity. We want a just and proper remuneration for an honest day's work. It is true that bread and water will keep us alive; but what is life on such fare? Why should we subsist on it when the officers of the road live on the luxury of the land, and waste daily what would support many families? We, the brotherhood, intend to demand united, peaceful, fair-living pay, and look to the press and people for help.

ONE OF A FAMILY OF SIX LIVING ON $1.30 A DAY.

—There is much talk about "tramps." And it is true in these days that their name is something like "legion." But that is no justification of the abuse some people with well-filled bellies are disposed to heap upon them. The "tramps" are not volunteers; nine-tenths of them are drafted into the service of idleness, and are wandering about the country quite against their will. Let more prosperous times appear inviting them to hard labor and see how suddenly the tramp-brigade will thin out. Was it not so before these dull and dead times set in? As a specimen of the slander people out of employment receive, note the following: It was said "tramps" would not work if they had work to do. There came a little spirit of opportunity in the peach-orchards in New Jersey. Every train from New York went loaded with "the vandals." No wonder "tramps" get to nursing a little spirit of riotousness!

—The address issued to the people of the United States by Stephen Pearl Andrews is worthy of attention. Mr. Andrews is a keen observer of events, and is able, by his intimate acquaintance with the "logic of ideas," to predict as well as any one the course affairs will be likely to take in the future. He is doubtless right in presuming that the labor question will be carried into the arena of politics (that is where everything first goes in this country to get its eye-teeth cut), and demands will be made on government to take the great industries of the country that are of public character under its special guidance and control. A step in that direction has long been taken in governmental control of the postal-service of the country. This we say may be, as Mr. Andrews predicts, and apparently desires, the basis of future political agitation. Already the resolutions of Republican State Conventions in Ohio and elsewhere confirm this view. But, in our judgment, it is not a consummation devoutly to be desired. The farthest removed from political influence our interests are kept, the safer they are.

—That little circular, "Don't Unchain the Tiger," may have been written by a workingman, but we have our doubts. It is a mixed document at any rate. Its advice, like the advice mostly current, fails to comprehend the situation. The good part is well enough, but not very effective, being offset by the part that isn't good or sensible. To tell "railroad and workingmen" "there is a good deal of talk about capital being the enemy of labor. This is not true. Capital and labor must work together. The capitalist and the laborer are partners in business," etc., etc., in the light of their recent experience is simply silly. "Partners in business"! It looks like it. And then to say, "The best way is to go to work, keep the wheels moving in all branches of business, and avoid everything that makes an unfriendly feeling with those who have all the risks of the business, both for themselves and you (the italics are ours), is the height of folly and the grossest of insults. 'Partners in business'! It would have been good advice to Sambo twenty years ago down in the cotton-fields. No; workingmen, 'don't unchain the tiger,' but don't 'avoid' any manly statement of the right of the case, even though you do 'make an unfriendly feeling' with those who employ you."

—The following is from the Evening Transcript: "The coal-mining settlements and iron-mill towns along the Lehigh River, that rolls between two railroads and a canal richer in invested capital planted along its rocky banks than any fabled river of golden sands, are in fierce revolt, all the savager and more ominous for having been matured with deliberation and nursed and kept alive and hot after the contagious excitement in the country has died down. Anybody who has ever passed through this wonderful region and noted the hard wretchedness and hopelessness of the hordes of laborers burrowing in the midst of the sublimest natural beauty and the most imposing evidences of human ingenuity, wealth, and power, must have felt that apprehension that once existed in the very atmosphere of certain quarters of Paris, that he was treading upon a social volcano. Even the women and the little boys often return the harmless gaze of the tourist with the aggressive hostility of wild beasts disturbed in their lairs. The severity and perils of their work; the meanness, dullness, and lowness of their life outside the mill or the mine; the vices that alone furnish momentary oblivion of their condition; the weary, oppressive consciousness that such a thing as rising out of that condition is almost without the range of possibility,—all contribute to create a lawless and ferocious class, easily stirred to bloody violence by the appeals of demagogic organizers. Every year or two comes a great strike, whichlike the weekly drunk, though it beggars the family worse than before, at least brings forgetfulness of misery in excitement for a while."

—In considering the times we rate everything of value that will help create a wiser and juster public sentiment. We wish this end could be reached solely by peaceful discussion; but things go as they please, and the way of economy is to wrest from them all the good possible. But whatever be the course they take, finally, when they are settled, they are settled in a right public sentiment. It will be the force of an idea that rules within, and not the power of government over any class of people from without. "The Unwritten Law" is the only law whose authority will not be gainsaid. In this connection we quote with satisfaction from the Springfield Republican:

"The Boston Herald suggests that a public sentiment must be created which shall compel corporations to embody Mr. Vanderbilt's expression that 'our men are a part of us.' That is a good expression; but if 'our men are a part of us,' if it means anything, that is to say, it means that they should share in controlling, as well as in being controlled. So the plantation interest used to claim that the slaves were 'a part of us.' But any solution that will be ultimately and finally satisfactory to the wage-receiving class must give them form, organism, and representation as embodying an interest naturally antagonistic to capital, but by formal and express arrangement cooperative and harmonious. To assume that capital alone is wise enough and liberal enough to look out for its own interests and those of labor, too, is to assume that one set of intelligences was given for no purpose. But giving both labor and capital the formal control, each of its own, providing for the organization and expression of the interests of each, and providing for their harmonious and intelligent cooperation, seems to us to promise the best results."

Communications.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

No. XV.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

We are brought, at length, by the train of our explorations, to the grand basic philosophic discrimination between the Absolute and the Relative. Let us endeavor to ascertain, with something more than ordinary precision, what this discrimination really means. I have pointed out the fact, sinking usually behind the vagueness of generality, that we have three absolutes, or three kinds of the absolute; the first two differing, toto celo, from each other, and the third one reconciliative. There is first the theological absolute, the God-will, as first cause and rational fundamentum of all things (more largely the entical absolute). There is then the fixed inherency in the nature of things, the fate back of Jove, the self-existent necessity that things should be as they are, and not otherwise,—the logical absolute; and thirdly, there is the Schellingian and Hegelian, or what we may call the pure rational or ordinary absolute, which is the hinging nexus of difference in unity, and unity in difference, as between arbitrariness and logicism; and so as between the first two elements (the prime elements), factors, or momenta, out of which the nature of things is constituted, in whatsoever aspect it may be viewed.

Having distinguished these three kinds of the genus absolute, we fall back again upon the generality, calling them all collectively The Absolute, and proceed to contrast it, collectively, with its own appropriate antithet, The Relative; combining them, subsequently, in a trine which may be called The Existential.

Absolute means, etymologically, free from; that is to say, free from contingency, surrounding impediments, or surroundings. Hence it is self-centring or centring generally, or at-centreness. Relative (re-latus) means, per contra, folded-back-upon-the-side-of, or at-sideness. Pursuing, as part of our philosophic method, the habit of carrying back philosophic discriminations to their simple etymological and ideological fountain-heads,—as, for example, abstract and concrete to the simple, common words and ideas, thin and thick; so here we trace back the obscure and otherwise undefinable, but yet current and indispensable terms, absolute and relative, to the seemingly childish difference between centre and side. The absolute means, then, merely the at-centreness aspect, and the relative the at-sideness aspect of universal things. We perceive, therefore, how fundamental and necessary, and yet how vague and intangible, and oftentimes even reversible, such a discrimination is and must be.

We now know the earth to be a globular body floating in space. Let us take it as type or analogue of the universe or world; as popularly we call such a body a world. Viewed or considered with reference to its own centre, four thousand miles away from the surface, we have the counterpart of the ding-an-sich (the thing-in-itself) of German transcendental philosophy; which is also, in a general sense, the absolute. But this is not the way in which we, individually and actually, stand connected with the earth. Each of us, for himself, occupies a point at the surface; that is to say, upon the side of the planet, and four thousand miles away from the centre, of which we have no real knowledge; nothing, on the contrary, but a mental inference. It is in a manner exactly analogous with this, that we, individually and actually, come experientially in contact with the universe, which it is the object of philosophy to explain. The absolute is then the at-centreness of our philosophic world, known to us only as an inference; and the relative is the at-sideness of that same world, a point in and about which the individual knows actually or experientially for himself, and the various points of which are occupied by the collective humanity.

The compositeness of the at-centreness and the at-sideness, and what they imply as uniting and conjoining them, is then the existential. The absolute, the relative, and the existential are thus the grand tri-grade scale, the three-step ladder, of this class of philosophical discriminations. It is the usual habit and fault of philosophers, in such cases, to overlook and omit the third term or step, which is the end that crowns the work; and it is this omission and failure which prevents them from being integralists. At-centreness is unisimal; at-sideness (or at-surfacedness) is dualism (variant); and their compositeness is trisimal.

Existence, or the existential, is still, however, merely static or at rest. It fills space, but it has no connection, as yet, with time and motion. It is the Seyn as contrasted with the Werden of Hegel; omitting the finer discriminations of being and existence, properly or narrowly so-called. But before passing to the tempic and motic aspects of existence or being, let us observe, that in confining ourselves to the analogies of the earth-ball merely, as representing the universe, we have excluded certain broader exhibitions of Nature which the material heavens present to our observation. The heavens contain the sun, moon, earth, planets, and stars. Conspicuous among these objects are the sun and the earth, and their copulative connection, as typical of other similar conjunctions abroad. Where, now, in this more complex presentation, are we to look for the at-centreness and the at-sideness of things generally? The matter grows intricate; and no wonder that philosophers, starting out in their respective systems with a good show of explicitness and clearness, soon get themselves involved in inextricable confusion. The world of thought is just as complex as the world of matter; and it is the theorem of universology that one of these complexities is exactly adjusted in every detail and particular to the other complexity. If this be so, then we have, in the analogies of the outer world, an exact and scientific guidance in philosophy; a canon of criticism upon all our thinking, and a one consistent body of all possible human knowledge. And if it be not so, philosophizing may as well be abandoned; its intricacy being too great to be threaded without the aid of an objective clew of this order.

We must introduce here still other subdivisions of the absolute, one of which has been already glanced at. There may be recognized two entical absolutes: one coincident with the earth-centre—geocentric; and the other coincident with the sun-centre—heliocentric. Numerous minor discriminations are here involved; as, for instance, whether we shall compare the sun and earth as they are known to us inferentially and astronomically, or as they really present themselves or appear. We may dismiss for the present the more scientific but more remote aspect of the subject, and confine our attention to the sun-domain—including the sun as it shows itself, together with the dome of air and light over our heads—and the earth-domain beneath our feet. If, then, we at-centre ourselves with the sun, air, and light above, we posit ourselves analogically, in philosophy, at the spiritual pole of entity, and stand upon the spirito-entical absolute (theologico-spiritual). We are, in other words, idealists and Spiritualists. Swedenborg makes God to be the spiritual sun, whence emanate all spiritual heat and light, the heat of love and the light of intelligence. Air and breath are also everywhere the analogues of spirit. The coincidence is perfect, and scientifically absolute. If, on the other hand, we at-centre ourselves with the earth-centre and the solid framework beneath our feet, we posit ourselves analogically, in philosophy, at the material pole of entity or reality, and stand upon the matero-entical absolute (materialistic, secular, so-called scientific). In other phrase, we are materialists.

Over against both of these combined, or the whole of the entical or real sphere of being, is the matheia of the cosmos; the logical, mathematical, and mechanical outlay of the heavens and "the host of them,"—instance the three laws of Kepler. That theory of the cosmos which makes the at-centreness of things to reside in this plexus of necessary laws is, then, the analogue of the conception of the logical absolute, of the exactifying or logical method in philosophy, and of "the scientific method" much talked of in our day,—when the meaning of that phrase is carried high enough to do justice to its pretensions. (This is the reversal of the position previously glanced at, that entity is the within, and the network of relationships the without, of existence.)

The standing-point for observation of the perpendiculars and levels of exact science is nevertheless wheresoever the individual observer is; and this position we have seen is the at-sideness of his planet. At-centreness and at-sideness are, therefore, thus curiously at length brought to coincide with each other, the absolute and the relative to unite in the observant point of life which is the individual human mind. This same cognizing point is also the centre of contact between the spiritual hemisphere above and the material hemisphere beneath. It thus distinguishes, while it conjoins, and therefore hinge-wise-ly exhibits the entical and the logical (or logical-mathematical-mechanical) absolutes; and also treats in the same manner the two hemispheres of the entical or real world. It is therefore itself illustrative of a new absolute; the third form of the absolute, the Schellingian-Hegelian absolute, the trinomial absolute; of which the entical is the unisimal and the logical the dualism constituent or factor.

The difference between faith in freedom and faith in fixed law, as ruling the universe, is not a mere matter of metaphysical subtlety, nor of theological dogma, nor of both combined. It lies profoundly embedded in the structure of individual and of national character, and affects every matter of theory and practice; the divergence among men growing out of it clamoring for the discovery and recognition of a third absolute, some sort of double-faced unity which can reconcile the diversity. Without it no stable social synthesis is possible; no decent degree of mutual respect, even, among men sundered by so fundamental and radical a difference in mental constitution. I have previously assumed that the freedom-side (arbitrary) is orientalism, and that the fixed fate side (law) is occidentalism, in philosophy and character; but I have seen no clearer contrast sketched as between these two, than will be found in a recent short article by S. S. Hebbard on "The Orientalism of Plato," in the Journal of Speculative Philosophy, for April, 1877; and this writer makes fatality to be oriental, and freedom occidental; as by the common estimate. The solution of this reversal is that both orient and occident have both freedom and fate in their doctrines and characters, but exhibited in contrasted ways. The fatality of the oriental is intuited as revealed subjectively as part of his personality, and so of his transcendental freedom as one with Nature and God; and hence it goes back to and rests ultimately upon an absolute will, and so is transcendently on the freedom side (arbitrary). The freedom of the Greek was, on the other hand, the modern scientific spirit in embryo; the freedom to discover for himself the fixed laws or fate inherent in Nature, transcending any will; and to conform to them. His freedom rested therefore, transcendently upon law.

The following extracts from Mr. Hebbard's article will be found interesting in this connection: "There are always certain great thinkers who are not to be regarded so much as representatives of the civilization surrounding them, as protestants against it. They oppose the ruling tendency of their race or age; they invert its thought; they swim, as it were, against that special current which sweeps the national life resolutely onward." "To exemplify all this we shall take the single case of Plato. We shall endeavor to show the real relation which the great philosopher held towards the surrounding civilization. We shall present him as a protestant against the ruling spirit of his race,—as one drawing his inspiration from a different source, and steadfastly opposing those special impulses which constitute the very essence of Grecian life. To do so, it is necessary, first of all, to understand what those special and ruling impulses really were."

"The root of pure Hellenism is its steadfast, unconquerable determination to glorify the human. Even its theology is based upon that idea. The chief Olympian divinities are not, as those of the orient are, mere personifications of the forces of Nature. They are not incarnations or emanations of abstract being, clothed for a moment in the illusory forms of earth; they are a race of immortal and invisible heroes endowed with every essential characteristic of human nature. They are even characterized,—so determined was the Greek to make his gods like himself; by human finiteness. They all have finite attributes; they are not omniscient, but know much; they are not almighty, although they have great power; they are not omnipresent, but can move from place to place with an almost inconceivable rapidity. Their moral finiteness is still more clearly marked: they are sensual, jealous, meddlesome, even untruthful and malignant. Every essential element, good or bad, in human nature, finds its prototype in the Greek Olympus."

"Human nature, then, is divine. Closely connected with this proud conception was an invincible faith in human freedom. The oriental, glorifying Nature and despising humanity, is necessarily a fatalist; to him man is but an insignificant atom in the all-pervading system, bound by the same conditions, and subject to the same necessity which is imposed upon all created life. The Greek, on the other hand reverencing himself more than the universe, did not believe that he was thus bound." "These, then, constitute the three essential tendencies of Hellenic life: a proud reverence for humanity, as opposed to the oriental worship of Nature [and Nature's God]; belief in moral freedom as opposed to oriental freedom and slavery; a materialistic clinging to the present as opposed to oriental spiritualism and engrossment with futurity. Together, these three tendencies constitute the current on which the national life of Greece floated to its inevitable end. It remains to show how clearly Plato stands as a protestant against this movement, as one striving not merely to reform, but to revolutionize and transform the genius of his race."

It is thus that the ideas of freedom and fate and the different kinds of the absolute go over from the metaphysical and theological to the ethical and sociological domains.

AN OPEN LETTER TO HERBERT SPENCER.

31 E. 10TH STREET, NEW YORK, {
July 20, 1877. }

HERBERT SPENCER, ESQ.:

My dear Instructor and Friend,—For I regard you as both these, though without the least personal acquaintance with you.

Having been a devoted student of your writings for a dozen years, I have become deeply interested in your great system of philosophy, so fitly called by you the "Synthetic Philosophy."

I confess that from no other author, of any country or of any age, have I been able to learn so much. And yet there are some questions upon which you leave me unsatisfied and disappointed; and two of these are labor and the family. I regard the labor question as the most vital and pregnant of all questions for our present needs and condition.

The genesis—to use your own well chosen word,—the genesis of this conviction is as follows: when spending part of the day in Sunday-school and the meeting-house, and part in sportive sociability along the roadside and in the fields with my fellow country lads, I was struck with the incongruity between the admission in the precepts or doctrines taught in these former places, and the practice and ridicule with which these teachings were met and practically denied, on the part of these companions. And it occurred to me that if said precepts and doctrines are true, they ought not to be thus practically ignored, much less ridiculed, but obeyed, respected, loved,—and this for our own self-interest, even (for I even then thus seemed to have faith in truth, in the right). I sought for the evidence, the demonstration of their truth. I failed in this search. I then sought—and here Socrates was my first love,—I then sought for a system or science of ethics. Neither did I find this, though such a science seemed to me to be possible in time, but that the problem was yet too difficult for us, the sciences not being yet sufficiently advanced or evolved. (I had not then read your "Social Statics.")

Seeing and feeling the great need of some means of avoiding such incongruity and its consequences, and of ameliorating the general wretched condition of society, and still having faith in truth and some belief that it was possible to find it, even now, in some department of mental and social life, as it had been found and secured in the physical world of phenomena, and the labor question being then in practical and prominent agitation,—it occurred to me that perhaps it is in the industrial department of our relation where this special, timely, and saving truth is to be found. And of this (by special study) I became thoroughly convinced.

Now upon this great question of our industrial relations I regard your doctrines of competition and free-trade as a species of refined and developed cannibalism; as the principle of "dog eat dog" (which by the way even dogs won't do), changed from a primitive condition of "indefinite incoherent homogeneity to definite coherent heterogeneity of structure and function, through successive integrations and differentiations."

And thus far, and in your last word in your second essay on the "Family," in the July Popular Science Monthly, your attempt to solve that question, it seems to me, is a failure. I dare not attempt any criticism of a positive character upon your statements on this point. My objections are chiefly negative; but would ask whether the decline of the kind and degree of control of the husband over the wife, and the parents over the children do not suggest the individual, and not the family, as the unit of the state?

Now it is because I feel that we so much need your help upon these two great questions that I venture to write this open note to you, to ask you for a further and more explicit expression of your views.

There are two other points upon which I would like, at another time, to raise some queries; namely, that of currency, and that of the analogy which you say holds between the alimentary system of the individual organism and the industrial or labor system of the social organism, while you make the effort to obtain food, on the part of the former, analogous to the actions in war, on the part of the latter.

The currency question is a branch of the labor question which is prominently before our people at the present time. But no discussion of it, other than the most empirical and superficial, has been thus far appreciated, or permitted by the press. We have not yet got far enough, even in our classification of its facts, to discriminate or differentiate between the government finance and currency or money proper. We talk general finances while we profess to be talking on the currency problem.

With profound respect and admiration, I am yours truly,
W. M. BOUCHER.

THE FREETHINKERS' GROVE MEETING AT WALCOTT.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The three days' Grove Meeting, to be held near Walcott, N.Y., on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, the 17th, 18th, and 19th of the present month, I am confident, from information received from various quarters, will be one of the largest liberal meetings ever held in this country. The speakers who have promised to be present are Horace Seaver, editor of the Investigator; Dr. D. M. Bennett, editor of the Truth Seeker; C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, editorial contributor of THE INDEX; Giles B. Stebbins, of Detroit; Rev. J. H. Harter, of Auburn; Rev. A. M. Mann, of Rochester; Mrs. Matilda J. Gage, of Fayetteville, N. Y.; Rev. Dr. M. Landsberg, Rabbi of Rochester; A. B. Brown, of Worcester, Mass.; Mrs. R. M. Scott Briggs, of Syracuse; Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, N. Y.; J. F. Mendum, of the Investigator, Boston; and H. L. Green, of Salamanca, N.Y. There is hopes of obtaining the attendances of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and a number of other distinguished speakers. Prof. P. O. Hudson, of Indianapolis, Ind., known as the liberal "Sankey" of the West, will entertain the audience with his splendid singing. The veteran free-thinker, J. M. Cosad, the owner of the grove, and other friends are making arrangements to liberally entertain all who attend the meeting. Many railroads here agreed to carry persons at reduced rates, and the meeting has been advertised in all the principal papers in Western and Central New York. And for the accommodation of those who would like to attend, I will give the railroad fares as agreed upon from the larger towns in the vicinity of the meeting. The figures include the fare both ways. Rome to Walcott, $3.00; Syracuse to Walcott, $2.09; Ogdensburg to Walcott, $4.85; Cape Vincent to Walcott, $3.30; Suspension Bridge to Walcott, $3.00; Rochester to Walcott, $1.67; Auburn to Walcott, $1.38; Buffalo to Walcott, $3.50; Freeville to Walcott, $2.66; Oswego to Walcott, $4.02; Oswego, 78; Charlotte, $1.32; Utica, $3.56; and from Albany and return to Walcott, $7.36. These amounts, as before stated, cover railroad fares both ways. The Southern Central Railroad and the Ontario Southern Railroad have agreed to sell tickets at excursion prices at every station, and the Elmira and Canadagua Railroad will sell reduced fare-tickets at any station where ten or more are going to attend the meeting; and as stated in THE INDEX last week, the R. W. & O. Railroad returns free all who attend the meeting over that road. Therefore, the accommodations are such that thousands should be present, and for once show that liberals are alive and in earnest.

H. L. GREEN.

A MAN who was about to be hanged in Alabama, sang, as he stood with the noose about his neck, "O, the bright angels are waiting for me." Whereupon the local editor flendishly wrote, "And then the angels stirred up the fire and looked brighter than ever."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tennesse, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooks Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 80 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interest. Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tennesse, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	4.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rithing Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Friest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Letter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	5.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	2.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COERRELATION and Conservation of Forces! A Series of Expositions, by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Manners.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	2.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Bonola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.00
English Traits.....	1.00
Conduct of Life.....	1.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Poems.....	1.25
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformation of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Hours.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland.....	1.50
Book III. In France.....	2.00
Thoughts and Art from Various Friends.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of, Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bite of Travel.....	1.50
BUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Manners.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	3.50
INGELW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeel-Ug.....	1.75
Stories for School and Home.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Eye-View.....	1.25
Moses the Patriarch's Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Walter Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Begius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	2.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, A Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	2.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1843.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.25
Autobiography.....	1.00
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVATT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	3.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swings' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organisation of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeeds of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trothy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.00

PROCTER (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROBESSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Essays of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Condition of Man to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Book Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Deeds Dural, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamcora, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. OLIVIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Week in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 1 vol.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Heat of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TITTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Panacea. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTEE'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

[ADDRESS]

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON*English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM AND THE NEW FAITH.

By EDMUND C. STEDMAN.

12mo, Cloth extra, with Portrait of Mr. Frothingham, 75 cents.

A clear and effective presentation of what is known as Rationalism in Religion in an analysis, by an admirer of acknowledged genius, of the life and work of one of its leading teachers.

"A brilliant and appreciative essay."—Boston Post.

"Radical ideas are here formulated, and expressed in a strong, clear light."—Liberal Christian.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LEWES' NEW BOOK!*THE PHYSICAL BASIS OF MIND.

Being the Third Volume of "Problems of Life and Mind."

By GEORGE H. LEWES, author of the History of Philosophy, the Life of Goethe, etc. 8vo. $3.00.

CONTENTS.—THE NATURE OF LIFE.—THE NERVOUS MECHANISM.—ANIMAL AUTOMATISM.—THE REFLEX THEORY.

Mr. Lewes is widely recognized as one of the most acute and independent of thinkers, and a writer of remarkable force and perspicacity. The two preceding volumes of Problems of Life and Mind have attracted in an unusual degree the attention of scientific and philosophical minds, and have taken rank among the most important of recent contributions to the philosophy of life and thought. The present volume is of equal significance, and will doubtless win equal study and admiration from those competent to follow the author's speculations and argument.

Its interest is by no means confined to specialists, but all persons of intelligence will find it in a high degree instructive and engaging.

"The book is one which will inevitably find its way into the hands of every student of mental science who wishes to obtain the freshest view of physiology in its relation to mind."—Saturday Review (London).

PROBLEMS OF LIFE AND MIND.

Vols. I. and II. $3.00 each.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. . . . It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Paper, 25 cents.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE ORACLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.*CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.*PROGRESSIVE EDUCATIONAL PAPERS.

Published by

HALLMANN & DOERFLINGER,

Milwaukee, Wis.

(German) "ERZIEHUNGS-BLÄTTER," monthly, per year, $2.12.

(English) "THE NEW EDUCATION," a monthly tract for parents and teachers, devoted to Kindergarten Culture and Educational Hygiene in Home and School. Per year, 50 cents.

(English) The "New Education" TRACTS. Nos. 1 and 2 ready. Six copies (of any one number, or assorted) sent to any address on receipt of a 2-cent stamp.

A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS BOOK.*A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GERMAN RADICAL PAPERS

Published by

CARL DOERFLINGER,

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

"ONKEL KARL," an illustrated juvenile monthly. Good reading for American youth studying German. Natural morals. No bloody crimes. No love-stories for "Boys and Girls." No hypocritical cant. Price per year, $1.50.

"FREIDENKER" (Freethinker), a weekly paper, devoted to the elevation of mankind out of the thralldom of superstition and ignorance. Price per year, $2.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THREE COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876,

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!*CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT*EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	.40
FIFTY ".....	.75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N.B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 16, 1877.

WHOLE No. 40.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

F. E. A.

"IT IS STATED," says the New York Independent of July 5, "that no taxes are paid on $137,000,000 of church property in this city."

GENERAL STEWART L. WOODFORD, of New York, in an address before the literary societies of the State University at Oxford, Mississippi, on June 27, said: "We are in greater danger even now in this free land from lack of toleration than we are apt to admit, unless we think deeply and then act fearlessly."

WHEN JUSTICE STRONG, of the United States Supreme Court, was burned in effigy by the excited Democrats at Monticello, N. Y., on the seventh of last March, they attached a placard to him containing the legend: "I want God in the Constitution." This was a jocose allusion to the fact that he was once President of the National Reform Association.

MR. G. W. SMALLEY, the London correspondent of the Tribune, says that "Mr. Gladstone's definition of a Radical, as a man who is in earnest, is proved to be an imperfect definition by the fact that it would describe a bigot equally well." This is true. Radicalism is earnestness for truth, justice, and freedom, just as bigotry is earnestness for superstition, privilege, and spiritual tyranny.

A HINDU BABU, in a school essay on Cromwell, made the following display of his historical erudition, as reported in the Allahabad Pioneer: "Oliver Cromwell was a very stern man. He destroyed Charles I. by repeated beheadings. After this he was never seen to smile, but was frequently heard pensively to murmur, 'If I had only served my God as I have served my king, he would not have deserted me in my old age.'"

JOSEPH MAZZINI, one of the purest men that ever took part in public life, wrote in a hitherto unpublished letter: "Life is an aim—an aim which can be approached, not reached. It is not mine, now, to give a definition of the aim; whatever it is, there is one, there must be one. Without it life has no sense. It is atheistical, and, moreover, an irony and a deception. Life is no sinecure, no récherché du Bonheur to be secured, as the promulgators of the theory had it, by guillotine, or, as their less energetic followers have it, by railway shares, selfishness, or contemplation. Life is, as Schiller said, 'a battle and a march'; a battle for good against evil, for justice against arbitrary privileges, for liberty against oppression, for associated love against individualism; a march onward to self, through collective perfecting to the progressive realization of an ideal which is only dawning to our mind and soul."

REV. JOSEPH COOK certainly uttered a good thing when he said: "Do you want this delicate little shoot you call religious science shut away from the healthy winds of criticism? Is it to be kept behind the walls of some colossal authority, and not allowed to battle its way to its full size in all the tempests that strike it out of the north, south, east, and west? How is religious science ever to become a stalwart oak, throwing out its boughs in every direction, vigorously and graciously, and in no fear of tempests, unless it contend with all the shocks of criticism that beat on philosophy, and law, and literature? Religious science must take her chance according to the law of the survival of the fittest." Verily, "these be brave words"; but the Orthodox science of His Lectureship is less likely to illustrate the law of the survival of the fittest than it is to illustrate that of the death of the unfittest.

ONE OF Moody's illustrations was rather discouraging to the believers in the perfectionist doctrine: "In the tenth chapter of John we are told that he calleth his own sheep by their names. A friend of mine was telling me of having been in an Eastern country where they keep up that custom. He saw one day a shepherd with his flock, and said, 'I do not understand how you know all the different sheep. I wish you would call a few by their names.' So the shepherd called one by name, and it came up, and then another and another and another. So the gentleman said, 'I don't understand that; how do you know the difference, for they all look alike?' Then the shepherd said, 'Don't you see that sheep has lost a little bit of wool, and that one is a little squint-eyed, and that one toes in a little, and that one has a black spot?' And the gentleman found that the shepherd knew every one of them by their defects. He did not have a perfect sheep. That is the way the good Shepherd knows us."

FATHER LANGCAKE, while preaching in the church of St. Francis Xavier in New York, last March, frightened one of his audience of women into a fit of hysterics. The result was soon a disturbance, and at last a cry of "Fire!" In the panic seven lives were lost. The priest himself told the story thus to a Tribune reporter: "I had begun last Sunday to give a 'retreat,' or series of spiritual exercises, to the women of the parish, and the exercises were to finish to-morrow evening. The subject I was discussing this evening was 'Hell,' and in my remarks I strove to impress my hearers with a fear of offending God by picturing to them the horrors of the damned. It was near the close of my sermon when a woman who, as I believe, was in the gallery, fell into hysterics and began to scream. There was a momentary silence at first, when somebody cried 'Fire!' A few persons repeated the cry, and then a general flight began. From the galleries, which were densely packed, the occupants rushed to the doors, all in a state of the most uncontrollable excitement. The women in the body of the church were more calm; and though unable to see what to do, still did not act with as much excitement as the people in the galleries. I called out to them to be calm, that there was no fire; but my exhortations were but slightly heeded. It was then I descended from the pulpit. A moment after Father Merrick appeared on the altar, and again exhorted the people to be quiet, as there was no danger whatever, and he called to the choir to go on, as there would be benediction. The organist obeyed, and began to play the 'O Salutaris,' and shortly after the 'Tantum Ergo,' and the services went on, the people having become quiet in the meanwhile, and when the services were over they quietly left the church."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. F. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT D. LE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE BEAVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIHAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Sitherville, Iowa.
 HERMAN LITZER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER,.....Quitman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointments, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The State:

ITS NATURE, ITS OBJECT, ITS DESTINY.

BY P. J. PROUDHON.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY BENJAMIN B. TUCKER.

[From La Voix du Peuple, December 3, 1849.]

The Revolution of February raised two leading questions: one economic, the question of labor and property; the other political, the question of government or the State.

On the first of these questions the socialistic democracy is substantially in accord. They admit that it is not a question of the seizure and division of property, nor even of its repurchase; neither is it a question of dishonorably levying additional taxes on the wealthy and property-holding classes, which, while violating the principle of property recognized in the constitution, would serve only to overturn the general economy and aggravate the situation of the proletariat. The economical reform consists, on the one hand, in opening usurious credit to competition and thereby causing capital to lose its income,—in other words, in identifying, in every citizen to the same degree, the capacity of the laborer and that of the capitalist; on the other hand, in abolishing the whole system of existing taxes, which fall only on the laborer and the poor man, and replacing them all by a single tax on capital, as an insurance premium.

By these two great reforms social economy is reconstructed from top to bottom, commercial and industrial relations are inverted, and the profits, now assured to the capitalist, return to the laborer. Competition, now anarchical and subversive, becomes emulative and fruitful; markets no longer being wanting, the workman and employer, intimately connected, have nothing more to fear from stagnation or suspension. A new order is established upon the old institutions abolished or regenerated.

On this point the revolutionary course is laid out; the meaning of the movement is known. Whatever modification may appear in practice, the reform will be effected according to these principles and on these bases; the Revolution has no other issue. The economic problem, then, may be considered solved.

It is far from being the same with the political problem,—that is, with the disposal to be made, in the future, of government and the State. On this point the question is not even stated; it has not been recognized by the public conscience and the intelligence of the masses. The economic Revolution being accomplished, as we have just seen, can government, the State, continue to exist? Ought it to continue to exist? This no one, either in democracy or out of it, has ever dared to call in question; and yet it is the problem which, if we would escape new catastrophes, must next be solved.

We affirm, then, and as yet we are alone in affirming, that with the economic Revolution, no longer in dispute, the State must entirely disappear; that this disappearance of the State is the necessary consequence of the organization of credit and the reform of taxation; that, as an effect of this double innovation, government becomes first useless and then impossible; that in this respect it is in the same category with feudal property, lending at interest, absolute and constitutional monarchy, judicial institutions, etc., all of which have served in the education of liberty, but which fall and vanish when liberty has arrived at its fulness. Others, on the contrary, in the front ranks of whom we distinguish Louis Blanc and Pierre Leroux, maintain that, after the economic revolution, it is necessary to continue the State, but in an organized form; furnishing, however, as yet, no principle or plan for its organization. For them the political question, instead of being annihilated by identification with the economic question, always subsists; they favor an extension of the prerogatives of the State, of power, of authority, of government. They change names only; for example, instead of master-State they say servant-State, as if a change of words sufficed to transform things! Above this system of government, about which nothing is known, hovers a system of religion whose dogma is equally unknown, whose ritual is unknown, whose object, on earth and in heaven, is unknown.

This then, is the question which at present divides the socialistic democracy, now in accord, or nearly so, on other matters: Must the State continue to exist after the question of labor and capital shall be practically solved? In other words, shall we always have, as we have had hitherto, a political constitution in addition to a social constitution?

We reply in the negative. We maintain that, capital and labor once identified, society exists by itself, and has no further need of government. We are, therefore, as we have more than once announced, anarchists. Anarchy is the condition of existence of adult society, as hierarchy is the condition of primitive society. There is a continual progress in human society from hierarchy to anarchy.

Louis Blanc and Pierre Leroux affirm the contrary. In addition to their capacity of socialists, they retain that of politicians; they are men of government and authority,—statesmen.

To settle the difference, we have, then, to consider the State, no longer from the point of view of the old society, which naturally and necessarily produced it, and which approaches its end, but from the point of view of the new society, which is, or must be, the result of the two fundamental and correlative reforms of credit and taxation.

Now, if we prove that, from this last point of view, the State, considered in its nature, rests on a thoroughly false hypothesis; that, in the second place, considered in its object, the State finds no excuse for its existence save in a second hypothesis, equally false; that, finally, considered in the reasons for its continuance, the State can appeal to but one hypothesis, as false as the two others,—these three points cleared up, the question will be settled; the State will be regarded as a superfluous, and consequently harmful and impossible, thing; government will be a contradiction.

Let us proceed at once with the analysis:—

I. Of the Nature of the State.

"What is the State?" asks Louis Blanc.

And he replies:—

"The State, under monarchical rule, is the power of one man; the tyranny of a single individual.

"The State, under oligarchical rule, is the power of a small number of men, the tyranny of a few.

"The State, under aristocratic rule, is the power of a class, the tyranny of many.

"The State, under anarchical rule, is the power of the first comer who happens to be the most intelligent and the strongest; it is the tyranny of chaos.

"The State, under democratic rule, is the power of all the people, served by their elect; it is the reign of liberty."

Of the twenty-five or thirty thousand readers of Louis Blanc, perhaps there are not ten to whom this definition of the State did not seem conclusive, and who do not repeat, after the master: The State is the power of one, of a few, of many, of all, or of the first comer, according as the word State is prefaced by one of these adjectives,—monarchical, oligarchical, aristocratic, democratic, or anarchical. The delegates of the Luxembourg—who think themselves robbed, as it seems, when any one allows himself to hold an opinion different from theirs on the meaning and tendencies of the Revolution of February,—in a letter which has been made public, have done me the honor to inform me that they regard Louis Blanc's answer as quite triumphant, and that I can say nothing in reply. It would seem that none of the citizen-delegates ever have studied Greek. Otherwise, they would have seen that their master and friend, Louis Blanc, instead of defining the State, has only translated into French the Greek words monos, one; oligoi, a few; aristoi, the great; demoi, the people; and the privative a, which means no. It is by the use of these qualifying terms that Aristotle has distinguished the various forms of the State, which is designated by the word archè, authority, government, State. We ask pardon of our readers, but it is not our fault if the political science of the president of the Luxembourg does not go beyond etymology.

And mark the artifice! Louis Blanc, in his translation, only had to use the word tyranny four times, tyranny of one, tyranny of many, etc., and to avoid it once, power of the people, served by their elect, to immediately win applause. Every State save the democratic, according to Louis Blanc, is tyranny. Anarchy especially receives a peculiar treatment; it is the power of the first comer who happens to be the most intelligent and the strongest; it is the tyranny of chaos. What a monster must be this first comer, who, first comer that he is, nevertheless happens to be the most intelligent and the strongest, and who exercises his tyranny in chaos! After that who could prefer anarchy to this charming government of all the people, served so well, as we know, by their elect? How overwhelming it is, to be sure! at the first blow we find ourselves flat on the ground. 'O rhetorician! thank God for having created for your express benefit, in the nineteenth century, such stupidity as that of your so-called delegates of the working classes; otherwise you would have perished under a storm of blows the first time you touched a pen.

What is the State? This question must be answered. The list of the various forms of the State, which Louis Blanc, after Aristotle, has prepared, has taught us nothing. As for Pierre Leroux, it is not worth while to interrogate him; he would tell us that the question is inconsiderate; that the State always has existed; that it always will exist,—the final reason of conservatives and old women.

The State is the EXTERNAL constitution of the social power.

By this external constitution of its power and sovereignty, the people does not govern itself; now one individual, now several, by a title either elective or hereditary, are charged with governing it, with managing its affairs, with negotiating and compromising in its name; in a word, with performing all the acts of a father of a family, a guardian, a manager, or a proxy, furnished with a general, absolute, and irrevocable power of attorney.

This external constitution of the collective power, to which the Greeks gave the name archè, sovereignty, authority, government, rests then on this hypothesis: that a people, that the collective being which we call society, cannot govern itself, think, act, express itself, unaided, like beings endowed with individual personality; that, to do these things, it must be represented by one or more individuals, who, by any title whatever, are regarded as custodians of the will of the people, and its agents. According to this hypothesis, it is impossible for the collective power, which belongs essentially to the mass, to express itself and act directly, without the mediation of organs expressly established and, so to speak, posted ad hoc. It seems, we say—and this is the explanation of the constitution of the State in all its varieties and forms,—that the collective being, society, existing only in the mind, cannot make itself felt save through monarchical incarnation, aristocratic usurpation, or democratic mandate; consequently, that all proper and personal manifestation is forbidden it.

Now, it is precisely this conception of the collective being, of its life, its action, its unity, its individuality, its personality,—for society is a person, understand! just as entire humanity is a person,—it is this conception of the collective human being that we deny today; and it is for that reason that we deny the State also, that we deny government, that we exclude from society, when economically revolutionized, every constitution of the popular power, either without or within the mass, by hereditary royalty, feudal institution, or democratic delegation.

We affirm, on the contrary, that the people, that society, that the mass, can and ought to govern itself by itself; to think, act, march, and halt, as one man; to manifest itself, in fine, in its physical, intellectual, and moral individuality, without the aid of all these spokesmen, who formerly were despots, who now are aristocrats, who from time to time have been pretended delegates, fawners on and servants of the crowd, and whom we call plainly and simply popular agitators, demagogues.

In short:—

We deny government and the State, because we affirm that which the founders of States have never believed in, the personality and autonomy of the masses.

We affirm further that every constitution of the State has no other object than to lead society to this condition of autonomy; that the different forms of the State, from absolute monarchy to representative democracy, are all only middle terms, illogical and unstable positions, serving one after another as transitions or steps to liberty, and forming the rounds of the political ladder upon which societies mount to self-consciousness and self-possession.

We affirm, finally, that this anarchy, which expresses, as we now see, the highest degree of liberty and order at which humanity can arrive, is the true formula of the Republic, the goal towards which the Revolution of February urges us; so that between the Republic and government, between universal suffrage and the State, there is a contradiction.

These systematic affirmations we establish in two ways: first, by the historical and negative method, demonstrating that no establishment of authority, no organization of the collective force from without, is henceforth possible for us. This demonstration we commenced in the "Confessions of a Revolutionist," in reciting the fall of all the governments which have succeeded one another in France for sixty years, discovering the cause of their abolition, and in the last place signaling the exhaustion and death of authority in the corrupted reign of Louis Philippe, in the inert dictatorship of the provisional government, and in the insignificant presidency of General Cavaignac and Louis Bonaparte.

We prove our thesis, in the second place, by explaining how, through the economic reform, through industrial solidarity and the organization of universal suffrage, the people passes from spontaneity to reflection and consciousness; acts, no longer from impulse and enthusiasm, but with design; maintains itself without masters and servants, without delegates as without aristocrats, absolutely as would an individual. Thus, the conception of person, the idea of the me, becomes extended and generalized; as there is an individual person or me, so there is a collective person or we; in the one case as in the other will, action, soul, spirit, life, unknown in their principle, inconceivable in their essence, result from the animating and vital fact of organization. The psychology of nations and of humanity, like the psychology of man, becomes a possible science. It was this demonstration that we referred to in our publications on circulation and credit as well as in the fourteenth chapter of the manifesto of La Voix du Peuple relative to the constitution.

So, when Louis Blanc and Pierre Leroux assume the position of defenders of the State—that is, of an external constitution of the public power,—they only reproduce, in a varied form peculiar to themselves which they have not yet made known, that old fiction of representative government, whose integral formula, whose completest expression, is still the constitutional monarchy. Did we, then, accomplish the Revolution of February in order to attain to this retrogressive contradiction?

It seems to us—what do you say, readers?—that the question begins to exhibit itself in a somewhat clearer light; that the weak-minded, after what we have just said, will be able to form an idea of the State; that they will understand how republicans can inquire if it is indispensable, after an economic revolution which changes all social relations, to maintain, to please the vanity of pretended statesmen, and at a cost of two thousand millions per annum, this parasitic organ called government, and the honorable delegates of the Luxembourg, who, being seated in the arm-chairs of the peerage, therefore think themselves politicians, and claim so courageously an exclusive understanding of the Revolution, doubtless will fear no longer that we, in our capacity of the most intelligent and the strongest, after having abolished government, as useless and too costly, may establish the tyranny of chaos. We deny the State and the government; we affirm in the same breath the autonomy of the people and its majority. How can we be upholders of tyranny, aspirants for the ministry, competitors of Louis Blanc and Pierre Leroux?

In truth, we do not understand the logic of our adversaries. They accept a principle without troubling themselves about its consequences; they approve, for example, the equality of taxation which the tax on capital realizes; they adopt popular, mutual, and gratuitous credit, for all these terms are synonymous; they cheer at the dethronement of capital and the emancipation of labor; then, when it remains to draw the anti-governmental conclusions from these premises, they protest, they continue to talk of politics and government, without inquiring whether government is compatible with industrial liberty and equality; whether there is a possibility of a political science, when there is a necessity for an economic science! Property they attack without scruple, in spite of its venerable antiquity; but they bow before power like church-wardens before the holy sacrament. Government is to them the necessary and immutable a priori, the principle of principles, the eternal archeus.

Certainly, we would not offer our affirmations as proofs; we know, as well as any one, on what conditions a proposition is demonstrated. We only say that, before proceeding to a new constitution of the State, we must inquire whether, in view of the economic reforms which the Revolution imposes upon us, the State itself should not be abolished; whether this end of political institutions does not result from the meaning and bearing of the economic reform. We ask whether, in fact, after the explosion of February, after the establishment of universal suffrage, the declaration of the omnipotence of the masses, and the henceforth inevitable subordination of power to the popular will, any government whatever is still possible; whether a government would not be placed perpetually in the alternative either of submissively following the blind and contradictory injunctions of the multitude, or of intentionally deceiving it, as the provisional government has done, as demagogues in all ages have done. We ask, at least, which of the various attributes of the State should be retained and strengthened, which abolished. For, should we find, as may still be expected, that, of all the present attributes of the State, not one can survive the economic reform, it would be quite necessary to admit, on the strength of this negative demonstration, that, in the new condition of society, the State is nothing, can be nothing; in short, that the only way to organize democratic government is to abolish government.

Instead of this positive, practical, realistic analysis of the revolutionary movement, what course do our pretended apostles take? They go to consult Lycurgus, Plato, Orpheus, and all the mythological oracles; they interrogate the ancient legends; they appeal to remotest antiquity for the solution of problems exclusively modern, and then give us for answer the whimsical illuminations of their brain.

Once more: is this the science of society and of the Revolution which must, at first sight, solve all problems; a science essentially practical and immediately applicable; a science eminently traditional doubtless, but above all thoroughly progressive, in which progress takes place through the systematic negation of tradition itself?

II. Of the End or Object of the State.

We have just seen that the idea of the State, considered in its nature, rests entirely on an hypothesis which is at least doubtful,—that of the impersonality and the physical, intellectual, and moral inertia of the masses. We shall now prove that this same idea of the State, considered in its object, rests on another hypothesis, still more improbable than the first,—that of the permanence of antagonism in humanity, an hypothesis which is itself a consequence of the primitive dogma of the fall or of the original sin.

We continue to quote Le Nouveau Monde:—

"What would happen," asks Louis Blanc, "if we should leave the most intelligent or the strongest to place obstacles in the way of the development of the faculties of one who is less strong or less intelligent? Liberty would be destroyed."

"How prevent this crime? By interposing between oppressor and oppressed the whole power of the people."

"If James oppresses Peter, shall the thirty-four millions of men of whom French society is composed run all at once to protect Peter, to maintain liberty? To pretend such a thing would be buffoonery."

"How then shall society intervene?"

"Through those whom it has chosen to REPRESENT it for this purpose."

"But these REPRESENTATIVES of society, these servants of the people, who are they? The State."

"Then the State is only society itself, acting as society, to prevent—what?—oppression; to maintain—what?—liberty."

That is clear. The State is a REPRESENTATION of society, externally organized to protect the weak against the strong; in other words, to preserve peace between disputants and maintain order. Louis Blanc has not gone far, as we see, to find the object of the State. It can be traced from Grotius, Justinian, Cicero, etc., in all the authors who ever have written on public right. It is the Orphic tradition related by Horace:—

*Sylvestres homines sacro interpretisque decorum.
Credibus et victu fœdo deterruit Orpheus,
Dictus ob hoc lentis sigris rabidoque leones,
Dictus et Amphion, Thebæna conditor arces,
Sæva movere sono lætitudinis, et præce blanda
Ducere quo vellet.* . . .

"The divine Orpheus, the interpreter of the gods, called men from the depths of the forests, and filled them with a horror of murder and of human flesh. Consequently it was said of him that he tamed lions and tigers, as later it was said of Amphion, the founder of Thebes, that he moved the stones by the sound of his lyre, and led them whither he wished by the charm of his prayer."

Socialism, we know, does not require with certain people great efforts of the imagination. They imitate, flatly enough, the old mythologist; they copy Catholicism, while declaiming against it; they ape power, which they lust after; then they shout with all their strength: Liberty, Equality, Fraternity; and the circle is complete. One passes for a revelator, a reformer, a democratic and social restorer; one is named as a candidate for the ministry of progress; nay, even for the dictatorship of the Republic!

So, by the confession of Louis Blanc, power is born of barbarism; its organization bears witness to a state of ferocity and violence among primitive men,—an effect of the utter absence of commerce and industry. To this savagism the State had to put an end by opposing to the force of each individual a superior force, capable, in the absence of any other argument, of restraining his will. The constitution of the State supposes, then, as we have just said, a profound social antagonism, homo homini lupus. Louis Blanc himself says this when, after having divided men into the strong and the weak, disputing with each other like wild beasts for their food, he interposes between them, as a mediator, the State.

Then the State would be useless; the State would lack an object as well as a motive; the State would have to take itself away if there should come a day when, from any cause whatever, society should contain neither strong nor weak,—that is, when the inequality of physical and intellectual powers could not be a cause of robbery and oppression, independently of the protection, more fictitious than real by the way, of the State.

Now, this is precisely the thesis that we maintain to-day.

The power that tempers morals, that gradually substitutes the rule of right for the rule of force, that establishes security, that creates step by step liberty and equality, is, in a much higher degree than religion and the State, labor; first, the labor of commerce and industry; next, science, which spiritualizes it; in the last analysis, art, its immortal flower. Religion by its promises and its threats, the State by its tribunals and its armies, gave to the sentiment of justice, which was too weak among primitive men, the only sanction intelligible to savage minds. For us, whom industry, science, literature, art, have corrupted, as Jean Jacques said, this sanction lies elsewhere; we find it in the division of property, in the machinery of industry, in the growth of luxury, in the overruling desire for well-being,—a desire which imposes upon all a necessity of labor. After the barbarism of the early ages, after the pride of caste and the feudal constitution of primitive society, a last element of slavery still remained,—capital. Capital having lost its sway, the laborer—that is, the merchant, the mechanic, the farmer, the savant, the artist—no longer needs protection; his protection is his talent, his knowledge, his industry. After the dethronement of capital, the continuance of the State, far from protecting liberty, can only compromise liberty.

He has a sorry idea of the human race—of its essence, its perfectibility, its destiny—who conceives it as an agglomeration of individuals necessarily exposed, by the inequality of physical and intellectual forces, to the constant danger of reciprocal spoliation or the tyranny of a few. Such an idea is a proof of the most retrogressive philosophy; it belongs to those days of barbarism when the absence of the true elements of social order left to the genius of the legislator no method of action save that of force; when the supremacy of a pacifying and avenging power appeared to all as the just consequence of a previous degradation and an original strain. To give our whole thought, we regard political and judicial institutions as the exoteric and concrete formula of the myth of the fall, the mystery of redemption, and the sacrament of penitence. It is curious to see pretended socialists, enemies or rivals of Church and State, copying all that they blaspheme,—the representative system in politics, the dogma of the fall in religion.

Since they talk so much of doctrine, we frankly declare that such is not ours.

In our view, the moral condition of society is modified and ameliorated at the same rate as its economic condition. The morality of a wild, ignorant, and idle people is one thing; that of an industrious and artistic people another; consequently, the social guarantees that prevail among the former are quite different from those that prevail among the latter. In a society transformed, almost unconsciously, by its economic development, there is no longer either strong or weak; there are only laborers whose faculties and means incessantly tend, through industrial solidarity and the guarantee of circulation, to become equalized. In vain, to assure the right and the duty of each, does the imagination go back to that idea of authority and government which attests the profound despair of souls long terrified by the police and the priesthood: the simplest examination of the attributes of the State suffices to demonstrate that, if inequality of fortunes, oppression, robbery, and misery are not our eternal inheritance, the first leprosy to be eradicated, after capitalistic exploitation, the first plague to be wiped out is the State.

See, in fact, budget in hand, what the State is.

The State is the army. Reformer, do you need an army to defend you? If so, your idea of public security is Caesar's and Napoleon's. You are not a republican; you are a despot.

The State is the police; city police, rural police, police of the woods and forests. Reformer, do you need police? Then your idea of order is Fouché's, Gisset's, Causseidère's, and M. Carlier's. You are not a democrat; you are a spy.

The State is the whole judicial system; justices of the peace, tribunals of first instance, courts of appeal, court of cassation, high court, tribunals of prud'hommes, commercial tribunals, council of prefects, State council, councils of war. Reformer, do you need all this judiciary? Then your idea of justice is M. Baroche's, M. Dupin's, and Perrin Daudin's. You are not a socialist; you are a red-tapist.

The State is the treasury, the budget. Reformer, do you not desire the abolition of taxation? Then your idea of public wealth is M. Thiers's, who thinks that the largest budgets are the best. You are not an organizer of labor; you are an exciseman.

The State is the custom-house. Reformer, do you need, for the protection of national labor, differential duties and toll-houses? Then your idea of commerce and circulation is M. Fould's and M. Rothschild's. You are not an apostle of fraternity; you are a Jew.

The State is the public debt, the mint, the sinking-fund, the savings-banks, etc. Reformer, are these the foundation of your science? Then your idea of social economy is that of MM. Humann, Lacave-Laplagne, Garnier-Pagès, Passy, Duclerc, and the "Man with Forty Crowns." You are a Turcaret.

The State—but we must stop. There is nothing, absolutely nothing, in the State, from the top of the hierarchy to its foot, which is not an abuse to be reformed, a parasite to be exterminated, an instrument of tyranny to be destroyed. And you talk to us of maintaining the State, of extending the functions of the State, of increasing the power of the State! Go to, you are not a revolutionist; for the true revolutionist is essentially a simplifier and a liberal. You are a mystifier, a juggler; you are a marplot.

III. Of an Utterior Destiny of the State.

There arises in favor of the State a last hypothesis. The fact that the State, say the pseudo-democrats, hitherto has performed only a rôle of parasitism and tyranny is no reason for denying it a nobler and more humane destiny. The State is destined to become the principal organ of production, consumption, and circulation; the apostle of liberty and equality.

For liberty and equality are the State.

Credit is the State.

Commerce, agriculture, and manufactures are the State.

Canals, railroads, mines, insurance companies, as well as tobacco-shops and post-offices, are the State. Public education is the State.

The State, in fine, dropping its negative attributes to clothe itself with positive ones, must change from the oppressor, parasite, and conservative it ever has been into an organizer, producer, and servant. That would be feudalism regenerated, the hierarchy of industrial associations, organized and graded according to a potent formula, the secret of which Pierre Leroux still hides from our sight.

Thus, the organizers of the State suppose—for in all this they only go from supposition to supposition—that the State can change its nature; turn itself around, so to speak; from Satan become an archangel; and, after having lived for centuries by blood and slaughter like a wild beast, feed upon plants with the deer, and give suck to the lambs. Such is the teaching of Louis Blanc and Pierre Leroux; such, as we said long ago, is the whole secret of socialism.

"We love the tutelary, generous, devoted government, taking as its motto those profound words of the Gospel, 'Whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be the servant of all'; and we hate the depraved, corrupting, oppressive government, making the people its prey. We admire it representing the generous and living portion of humanity; we abhor it when it represents the cadaverous portion. We revolt against the insolence, usurpation, and robbery involved in the idea of the MASTER-STATE; and we applaud that which is touching, fruitful, and noble in the idea of the SERVANT-STATE. Or better: there is a belief which we hold a thousand times dearer than life,—our belief in the approaching and final TRANSFORMATION of power. That is the triumphant passage from the Old World to the New. All the governments of Europe rest to-day on the idea of the MASTER-STATE; but they are dancing desperately the dance of the dead."—"Le Nouveau Monde," November 15, 1849.

Pierre Leroux is a thorough believer in these ideas. What he wishes, what he teaches, and what he calls for is a regeneration of the State—he has not told us yet whereby and by whom this regeneration should be effected,—just as he wishes and calls for a regeneration of Christianity without, as yet, having stated his dogma and given his credo.

We believe, in opposition to Pierre Leroux and Louis Blanc, that the theory of the tutelary, generous, devoted, productive, initiative, organizing, liberal, and progressive State is a utopia, a pure illusion of their intellectual vision. Pierre Leroux and Louis Blanc seem to us like a man who, standing above a mirror and seeing his image reversed, should pretend that this image must become a reality some day and replace (pardon us the expression) his natural person.

This it is which separates us from these two men, whose talents and services, whatever they may say, we have never dreamed of denying, but whose stubborn hallucination we deplore. We do not believe in the SERVANT-STATE: to us it is a flat contradiction.

Servant and master, when we are speaking of the State, are synonymous terms; just as more and less, when applied to equality, are identical terms. The proprietor, by interest on capital, demands more than equality; communism, by the formula, to each according to his needs, allows less than equality: always inequality; and that is why we are neither a communist nor a proprietor. Likewise, whoever says master-State says usurpation of the public power; whoever says servant-State says delegation of the public power; always an alienation of this power, always a power, always an external, arbitrary authority instead of the immanent, inalienable, untransferable authority of citizens; always more or less than liberty. It is for this reason that we are opposed to the State.

Further, to leave metaphysics and return to the field of experience, here is what we have to say to Louis Blanc and Pierre Leroux.

You pretend and affirm that the State, that the government, can, and ought to be, wholly changed in its principle, in its essence, in its action, in its relations with citizens, as well as in its results; that, thus the State, a bankrupt and a counterfeiter, should be the sole source of credit; that for so many centuries an enemy of knowledge, and at the present moment still hostile to primary instruction and the liberty of the press, it is its business to officially provide for the instruction of citizens; that, after having left commerce, industry, agriculture, and all the machinery of wealth to develop themselves without its aid, often even in spite of its resistance, it belongs to it to take the initiative in the whole field of labor as in the world of ideas; that, in fine, the eternal enemy of liberty, it yet ought, not to leave liberty to itself, but to create and direct liberty. It is this marvellous transformation of the State that constitutes, in your opinion, the present Revolution.

There lies upon you, then, the twofold obligation: first, of establishing the truth of your hypothesis by showing its traditional legitimacy, exhibiting its historical titles, and developing its philosophy; in the second place, of applying it in practice.

Now, it appears already that both theory and practice, in your hypothesis, formally contradict the idea itself, and the facts of the past, and the most authentic tendencies of humanity.

Your theory, we say, involves a contradiction in its terms, since it pretends to make liberty a creation of the State, while the State, on the contrary, is to be a creation of liberty. In fact, if the State imposes itself upon my will, the State is master; I am not free; the theory is undermined.

It contradicts the facts of the past, since it is certain, as you yourselves admit, that everything that has been produced within the sphere of human activity of a positive, good, and beautiful character, was the product of liberty exclusively, acting independently of the State, and almost always in opposition to the State; which leads directly to this proposition, which ruins your system, that liberty is sufficient unto itself and does not need the State.

Finally, your theory contradicts the manifest tendencies of civilization; since, instead of continually adding to individual liberty and dignity by making every human soul, according to Kant's precept, a pattern of entire humanity, one face of the collective soul, you subordinate the private person to the public person; you submit the individual to the group; you absorb the citizen in the State.

It is for you to remove all these contradictions by a principle superior to liberty and to the State. We, who simply deny the State; who, resolutely following the line of liberty, remain faithful to the revolutionary practice,—it is not for us to demonstrate to you the falsity of your hypothesis; we await your proofs. The master-State is lost; you are with us in admitting it. As for the servant-State, we do not know what it can be; we distrust it as supreme hypocrisy. The servant-State seems to us quite the same thing as a servant-mistress; we do not wish it; with our present light, we prefer to espouse liberty in legitimate marriage. Explain, then, if you can, why, after having demolished the State through love of this adored liberty, we must now, in consequence of the same love, return to the State. Until you have solved this problem, we shall continue to protest against all government, all authority, all power; we shall maintain, through all and against all, the prerogative of liberty. We shall say to you: Liberty is, for us, a thing gained; now, you know the rule of law. Melior est conditio possidentis. Produce your titles to the reorganization of government; otherwise, no government!

To sum up:—

The State is the external constitution of the social power.

This constitution supposes, in principle, that society is a creature of the mind, destitute of spontaneity, providence, unity, needing for its action to be fictitiously represented by one or more elected or hereditary commissioners: an hypothesis the falsity of which the economic development of society and the organization of universal suffrage agree in demonstrating.

The constitution of the State supposes further, as to its object, that antagonism or a state of war is the essential and irrevocable condition of humanity, a condition which necessitates, between the weak and the strong, the intervention of a coercive power to put an end to their struggles by universal oppression. We maintain that, in this respect, the mission of the State is ended; that, by the division of labor, industrial solidarity, the desire for well-being, and the equal distribution of capital and taxation, liberty and justice obtain surer guarantees than any that ever were afforded them by religion and the State.

As for utilitarian transformation of the State, we consider it as a utopia contradicted at once by governmental tradition, and the revolutionary tendency, and the spirit of the henceforth admitted economic reforms. In any case, we say that to liberty alone it would belong to reorganize power, which is equivalent at present to the complete exclusion of power.

As a result, either no social revolution, or no more government; such is our solution of the political problem.

THEODORE PARKER AND HIS CRITIC.

A ship, says the critic, careens too far and does not recover itself, but goes over. Yes; and that ship sails the seas no more; there's an end of it. A tree, he continues, is cut into beyond the heart, and does not build up the wound with fresh wood, but falls and perishes. True; and that tree is down, is dead, and there's an end of it. There are the two fingers closed in plain death. If, now, a soul is ever so self-buried that it cannot recover, but goes down into sheer depravity, analogy says of it, Mr. Cook's analogy says, that soul is fallen, is dead, and there's an end of it. And I am confident that the whole world of Nature will yield no analogy to the contrary. So that those stone fingers, and with them the visible universe entire, are closed against the monstrous imagination of an endless survival in moral death.

But the tree is mortal at best; and if the soul be designed for immortal life, there is an infinite difference between the two cases. Hence it were rash, were indeed somewhat youthful, to assume that all the limitations of the one are to be found in the other. A larger logic would say that, if for the mortal tree there is a measured via medicatrix, or power of self-repair, there must for a spirit, in which are the seeds of immortality, be a similar power not thus limited, but having the scope of the destinies with which it is associated. The logic of Julius Müller may be formally perfect, only it is too small for the matter. One should not look to find the ocean swell in an ounce vial. To know at all the ways of Providence on the scale of immortality, reason should launch itself with generous courage, dare to lose sight of these mortal shores, and to sail by the unattainable stars. Induction in a closet, from observations made in a point of time, does not, perhaps, serve for the navigation of God in the spaces of eternity.

But the observation is itself uncertain. Who knows that the moral life can be quite extinguished? Who knows that any human being has sunk into a depravity helpless, hopeless, absolute? "Theodore Parker's guesses"; here is a guess that is not Theodore Parker's! And which of those that venture it dares say to a fellow-creature, "Useless for you to try; bad you are and bad you must be"? I am not so bold, and dare as little fling such words after men from this earth departed, as dash them in the face of any here. And, to encourage hope, do we not see examples almost of moral resurrection? Does not the Orthodox Church itself, at the death-bed of a wretch the most hardened, still say, "It is not too late"? And how small-minded, how unbelieving at bottom it is to assume that the mere physical fact, mere accident, it may be, of death determines all for the moral life,—that scarlet fever, a mad dog, a runaway horse, a falling brick or rusty nail may hedge up forever the gracious providence of heaven and fix a soul's fate for eternity! Such credulity is not spiritual faith, but the want of it. It indicates an eye to which providential purpose and law hinge upon small physical events,—the infinitely greater upon the infinitely less.

The Monday Lecturer, if I understand him aright, assumes, and as the basis of his entire argument, that at the moment of death every man is irrevocably determined in character; either he has so chosen the right and good, that through day and darkness, and all temptations and tests his choice would still endure, or with the determination of pure depravity has said, "Evil, be thou my good." But with what inattention to the facts is such a notion entertained! Here is a young man of twenty at work upon a high staging in which is a defective board. He steps upon that board; it breaks; the poor fellow is precipitated to the earth and killed. What, now, of him? He was not bad, and was not a saint. Like thousands of others, he would probably have done well under good influences, and under evil ones might have been quite led astray. Is any man so absurd a pagan as to say that a weak piece of pine lumber was commissioned to determine his soul's destiny forever? Or can paganism itself believe that God would take him, morally undetermined as he was, from the arms of death, thrust him down into nether places, and say, "You shall have no second opportunity; I will make an eternal sinner of you, whether you will or no; you shall be nothing else"? Horrible to think of! It is almost an offence against good taste so far to entertain the ghastly fancy as to give it words. These are imaginations which, could they become realities, would not only slay souls, but murder divine justice itself!—D. A. Wasson, in Radical Review.

OUR "RADICAL REVIEW."

BY REV. B. F. TEFFT, D.D.

Our radical thinkers of New England—that is, those professing a Christianity with the Christ left out—have started a periodical for the discussion and dissemination of their sceptical ideas. It is called by the name given at the head of this article; and it is to represent the opinions of those farthest advanced on the road that leads from the Word of God as held by the universal Church.

The principal writers thus far engaged are well known for their infidel publications. Such men as John Weiss, O. B. Frothingham, Cyrus A. Bartol are known throughout the country as leaders of irreligion; and their chosen associates—the two Morrises, Francis Abbot, Samuel Johnson, C. W. Buck, E. C. Stedman, J. W. Chadwick, Samuel Longfellow, Elle Reclus, and others of the same ilk—are less known only because less gifted with that combination of brass and brain required to constitute a genuine sceptic.

The first number of this infidel magazine is now before the public. Like the men employed upon it, it professes to have chosen science instead of revelation as the ground of human faith; thus taking for granted that there is an irreconcilable hostility between them, while all the rest of the world sees them only in agreement. Science, indeed, as held by these brainy people, knows no such thing as revelation. It believes only what it beholds in Nature; and Nature is merely a vast physical organism, the elements of which have existed from eternity uncreated, and the present condition of which has been brought about by that conatus of material atoms, forever tending upward toward perfection, known as evolution.

In such a system, there is, of course, no room for a personal God; no room for a personal revelation like our Bible; no room for a personal religion that calls God our Father and his Son our Savior; no room for the Lord's Prayer, or his divine life, or his glorious death as at all connected with man's salvation from sin. Sin, in fact, in accordance with this theory of things, has no existence. Nature is a machine working to perfection in obedience to its own laws; and these men therefore say with Pope:—

"Whatever is, is right."

And if there is no sin there is no hell, no heaven, no

repentance, no faith, no expiation, no Redeemer; and how in the world such people can call themselves Christians when in their system there is no place for Christ, is more than men of common sense can fathom. To our mind, they are such Christians as the Emperor Julian was after he renounced Christianity; only these later pagans have not the imperial apostate's honesty to tell the world plainly that their religion is simply the old-time pagan infidelity revived.

If any reader thinks this to be too severe a charge, let him read the poem of this number of the Radical Review, written by Mr. B. W. Ball, on the slovenly Jew Spinoza, the first line of which is open blasphemy. Addressing the Dutch-Hebrew philosopher, the poetaster exclaims:—

"O pure as Christ, as deeply-souled!"

Spinoza, indeed, according to this Radical Review religion, had as pure and deep a soul as the Son of God!

What is this but saying that Spinoza was in every way Christ's equal? If this shocks the reader let him remember that it is nothing new to these Radical Reviewers. They believe in just this sort of blasphemous nonsense; and their periodical is started for the express purpose of teaching it to us Americans,—that is, to make us infidels and pagans.

Their theory of evolution is instinct with this sceptical idea. The universe began as a mere cloud of matter, which, by subsequent condensation, separated into the infinite number of globes we now behold in Nature. These, at least our own, in process of time, produced a living germ, in which potentially existed all the forms of life now extant about us; and these forms, from the original germ to man, ranging through all the known and unknown grades of being, have been successively produced, in obedience to this principle of development, in the way of eternal progress. Having attained to the stage of man, some of the human beings thus raised would stand a better chance for all human traits than others; and so we have a line of illustrious personages running through all ages, and linking together all countries, within which we find such names as Buddha, Confucius, Orpheus, Socrates, Christ, Spinoza, and their contemporaries of every clime and period. Christ is only one of many of the same general character. He was no purer, no deeper-souled, no greater or better than the Jew Spinoza, or the Greek Socrates, or the Chinese Confucius. This is the doctrine of this new-born Radical Review; and this is what we are to be invited to believe, in its scandalously-blasphemous pages!

But the really Christian world has little to fear from such a publication, or from the men who have created it. There is too much common sense, to say nothing of true religion, among our American people, to give heed to the teachers of this perilous nonsense. The more they explain their theory, the more ridiculous it becomes to the general apprehension. As a theory, it is the absurdest thing among all absurdities; and its tendencies are so entirely monstrous as to sicken the taste of all well-organized intellectual natures. It has not even the advantage of novelty to give it momentary popularity. Let any man read Brucker's History of Philosophy, or Dr. Cudworth's Intellectual System of the Universe, or any other work giving a true account of the Greek and Roman schools of speculation in the earlier times, and he will find every element of this species of infidel materialism advocated exposed and stamped into annihilation by the intellectual giants of former ages; nor can we feel anything short of a personal contempt for a set of idiots, who, feathered out in the plumage of a long-since extinct speculation, are trying to make us regard them as the avant-couriers of an entirely new era of science and religion; and we cannot help but tell them, in plain English, that, instead of the admiration they covet, the great mass of our educated and intellectual countrymen, while religiously pitying their infatuation, most thoroughly despise the spirit and aim of their godless undertaking.—Zion's Herald.

"VICISSITUDES OF GENIUS."

It has been said that there is no great genius without some tincture of madness; but without assenting to so sweeping a charge, let us glance for a few moments at the past, and recall briefly the vicissitudes of some of those whose lives, by universal consent, "rising above the deluge of years," bear the impress of genius. We shall find, at least, that eccentricity is one of its attendant manifestations, and that it would seem necessary for genius, like herbs, to undergo the crushing process in order to give out their fragrance and virtue. We shall find, also, that the path of genius, like that of ambition, is beset by disappointment, and that those who are thus endowed are apt to be more admired than loved by the world at large.

The illustrations are so abundant, the pages of history so teeming with striking examples, the well-remembered figures so throng before the mind's eye, that the student is puzzled where to begin, what material to exclude and what to adduce. One is fain, therefore, to close the interesting tomes of the past, and trust to the ready panorama which memory itself may unroll to view. It will prove a sad as well as a vivid picture, if it be truthful, for it must exhibit many of the dark shadows which fill up the background of humanity.

Behold blind Homer, groping his way through the world, richly endowed in intellect, yet sorely afflicted, rehearsing his ballads to the vulgar crowd for subsistence. Milton, so poorly paid and ill-appreciated as to be glad to get even a starvation price for Paradise Lost,—he of whom it was said, "His soul was like a star and dwelt apart." See Columbus, the great Genoese pilot, begging bread for himself and his child, wandering from court to court to obtain the means of giving a New World to the Old, and afterwards languishing in chains and in prison. Spenser, the child of fancy, who endowed English verse with the soul of harmony, eking out a life of misery, and dying in abject poverty in an obscure lodging-house in London. Look at Sydenham, who gave us the best version of Plato, breathing his last in a miserable sponging-house; and Oliver Goldsmith, whose strains were to echo to all time, pulverizing drugs in an apothecary's mortar.

"Oh, gods! gods!" he exclaimed to his friend Bryant, "here in a garret, writing for bread, and expecting to be dunned for a milk score!" Like so many other children of genius, he was careless, extravagant, irregular, always in debt and difficulty, all of which hurried him to the grave. In that exquisite story, The Vicar of Wakefield, we have this explanation of how he supported himself on his travels: "I had some knowledge of music," he says, "and now turned what was once my amusement into a present means of subsistence. Whenever I approached a peasant's house toward nightfall, I played one of my most merry tunes, and that procured me, not only a lodging, but subsistence for the next day."

Handel, the greatest musical genius that ever lived, lost his entire fortune, and passed the last of his life in the awful gloom of blindness. His immortal oratorios were most of them produced under the stress of keen adversity, loss of fortune, and failing health, sufficient to have discouraged any one not truly inspired. So it was with Mozart, who, after seeking in vain for employment in various countries, was glad to accept the position of organ-master at a minor chapel. We are not told what remuneration he received for his services, but it is only too well known that, during the composition of many of his masterpieces, himself and family suffered for bread!

Beethoven was afflicted with an incurable deafness, which almost drove him to suicide. It was, perhaps, the most trying misfortune possible to one with his special endowments. "I was nigh taking my life with my own hands," he wrote; "but art held me back. I could not leave the world until I had revealed what lay within me." We all remember Beethoven's dying words, "I shall hear in heaven!"

Remember John Bunyan in Bedford jail, writing that immortal work, Pilgrim's Progress, the solace and delight of millions, as much an inspired work as the Book of Moses. Little did the humble and uneducated tinker realize that he was producing a textbook for all future time.

The victim of one age often becomes the idol of the next. Dante, ex-patriated and exiled from wife and children, became a poverty-stricken wanderer, broken in heart and in fortune. The greatest poetical genius between the Augustan and Elizabethan ages, an accomplished musician, a painter of no mean repute, and a brilliant scholar, yet he enjoyed no contemporary fame. He poured out the deep devotion of his youthful heart at the feet of that Beatrice whose name he has rendered classic by the genius of his pen, though she did not live to bless him. His later marriage was ill-assorted and unhappy. The sublime and unique Divina Commedia was not even published until after his death. Now the pilgrim bends in reverence over that grave whither he was hurried by persecution. How absurd are the transitions of which human appreciation is capable!

Let us not forget Schiller in his early indigence and distress, wanting friends and wanting bread, but bravely mounting the ladder of fame. The humble cottage is still extant near Leipsic, where he wrote the Song of Joy in those trying days.

De Foe, the author of Robinson Crusoe, says of himself: "I have gone through a life of wonders, and am the subject of a vast variety of providences. I have been fed more by miracles than Elijah when the ravens were his purveyors. In the school of affliction I have learned more philosophy than at the academy, and more divinity than from the pulpit. In prison I have learned that liberty does not consist in open doors, and the egress and regress of locomotion. I have seen the rough side of the world as well as the smooth, and have, in less than half a year, tasted the difference between the closet of a king and the dungeon of Newgate."—M. M. Ballou in the Cultivator.

JOTTINGS.

WHY will you contradict me, sir?

To speak, is to begin to err.—Goethe.

ALL people find time to do what they have a mind to.—Mary Wortley Montague.

AGAINST right there is nothing more futile than victory.—Proudhon.

IN things of the mind we look for no compulsion but that of light and reason.—Cromwell.

No spot has a permanent interest for any till it become the scene of some deed worthy of mankind.—Alcott's "Table Talk".

If I should worship the sun or moon like the Persians, or that pewter pot on the table, nobody has anything to do with it.—One of Cromwell's soldiers.

IN every affair retire a step, and you have an advantage.

Seeing men in haste, do not seek to overtake them.

Each grass blade has its drop of dew. The wild birds lay up no stores; but earth and heaven are wide. Strange, indeed, if you cannot rest in the duties of your sphere.

If you reject the iron you will never make the steel.

To starve is a small matter; to lose one's virtue is a great one.

If treated rudely, return it not, but examine yourself.

The modest gain; the self-satisfied loss.

Let the root be good, and the fruit shall not be evil.

Do you think that by bearing with insulting persons, I shall fall into dishonor?

They who say conscience may be good enough, but it does not supply one with food, are fit materials for the cord and the bamboo.

Set not others at variance.

Suppress slanders, and protect the innocent.

Maintain a love of harmony, that throughout your families the common speech shall be, "Let us help one another." Then shall the world be at peace.

Let young and old be as one body; their joys and sorrows as of one family. Let the instructed lead the way by example. Let the unity of the Empire extend to myriad countries, and spread harmony through the world.—"Sacred Edict," Johnson's "China."

Poetry.

FROM NIGHT TO LIGHT.

No more through blinding tears,
'Mid gloomy doubts and fears,
I mourn a vanished creed,
Whose forms I thought to need.

The night has passed away,
And Freedom's nascent day
In robes of cloudless light
Ascends the eastern height!

The conflict and the pain
I count not loss, but gain;
None prize the boundless sea
Like captives when set free!

A simpler faith is mine,
Whose elements combine
To leave the vast Unknown,
And deal with Man alone.

From dreams of heaven's glory,
From myths of church-born story,
I turn to certain facts,
And base on these my acts.

I know not what may be
This star-lit, shoreless sea,
O'er whose abyssal deep
Our sun-born planets sweep;

But near me is my neighbor;
Before me lies my labor;
I too must find a place
To aid my struggling race.

I hear the stirring call
Inviting one and all
To break the galling strain
Of superstition's chain.

Enough for present deed
My brothers' urgent need:
I crave no holier fires
Than those which this inspires!

I see in all the ranges
Of matter and its changes,
No God who interferes
On these swift-rolling spheres.

The myriad forces, blending
In union never ending,
Which fill the soul with awe,
Display but changeless law.

I doubt not God existeth,
But question if he listeth
To hear our feeble cry,
Or note us as we die.

For naught in Nature heedeth
The saint, how'er he pleadeth;
Th' unerring lightnings strike
The good and bad alike.

Not to a state of soul
Doth Nature yield control;
But rain and sunshine fall
Indifferent upon all.

No other code is needed,
If that be rightly heeded
Which in our frame prevails,
Nor in its judgment fails.

Its constant laws suffice
To sternly punish vice,
And amply to reward
The virtue we applaud.

O friends, whose love I cherish,
Let useless dogmas perish!
O'er-reach these narrow bands
And clasp my out-stretched hands!

Not mine the alienation;
My loyal heart's pulsation
Is yours through cloud and sun
Till life's last act be done!

F. L. STODDARD.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 11.

Jacob Stern, $1.50; Miss M. D. Devereux, $3.20; Thos. Marshall, $3.20; J. P. Lennest, $3; Thos. E. Moon, 50 cents; A. H. Morley, $1; Mrs. O. Gillett, $3.20; Chas. Coventry, $8.50; William Mackey, $1; D. S. Grandin, $1.40; Dr. L. F. C. Garvin, $3.20; Mrs. H. Grinnell, $3.20; N. W. Covell, $3.20; E. H. Price, $1; Mrs. C. R. Sherman, 80 cents; H. C. Hanson, $6.40; H. T. Appleby, $5.00; J. C. Fargo, $1; W. A. Clarke, 10 cents; C. E. Butler, 10 cents; Geo. Stickney, $8; F. T. Montell & Son, $3.50; Mrs. E. Crosby, $3.20; R. C. Walker, $1; J. Brockway, $1.20; C. H. Phillips, $3.20; G. F. Lapham, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 16, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, Editorial Contributors.

NOTICE.

During the month of August, my friend, Mr. SIDNEY H. MORSE, will assume entire editorial charge of THE INDEX, and relieve me of all literary responsibility on its account. All letters and communications should be addressed, as usual, to "THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston."

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

F. E. A. ANNUAL REPORT.

The report of the recent annual meeting of the Free Religious Association has been published in the usual pamphlet form, and can be obtained at the office 231 Washington Street, or at A. Williams & Co.'s, corner of Washington and School Streets, Boston. It contains the Essay by Rev. W. R. Alger on "Steps Towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and the Essay by Mr. C. D. B. Mills, on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; also Addresses by Messrs O. B. Frothingham, William Henry Channing, Rabbi LaSker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson,—with tenth annual reports of the executive committee, treasurer, etc. Price, single copy, forty cents; four, or more, twenty-five cents each.

Persons sending for it by mail will address, "Free Religious Association," 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass. W. J. POTTER, Secretary.

"GLIMPSES" by F. E. A., left over, were too good to be kept "standing."

MR. BABCOCK replies to Mr. Abbot. If the latter has anything further to say it will be on his return.

MR. POTTER vindicates Mr. Abbot from the charge that he desires to exclude certain people from the Free Religious Association. It had never occurred to us that Mr. Abbot had any such desire. His simple disclaimer, not now for the first time to be made, is quite sufficient on this score. It has seemed to us, however, that the logic of his position required him to say to Transcendentalists, for instance, that they, believing in what he calls "Authority," were self-excluded from being members of the Free Religious Association. We understand he will deny even that. On his return we may take the liberty to ask him a few questions which will serve for some more explicit statement.

OUR JEWISH friends seem to be as zealous to "stand up" for Moses, as the Christians for Jesus. Can they not pass by this hero-worship which is bent on tracing all good and all truth to their particular man? Grant that Moses was an important person in the world at the period in which he lived, and that he left as the legacy of his life much that the wisdom of the world approves; can we not have an idea of our own worthy respect, till we have consulted this ancient Hebrew law-giver? Is it not time for liberal Jews to get weaned from Moses? Some of them are.

IS THE criticism of the Radical Review, by the Rev. Dr. Tefft, "Christian" in spirit? Is that the way true Christians "hold the fort"? In the same issue of Zion's Herald in which the doctor appears, the editor exhorts as follows:—

As a believer in our Lord Jesus Christ, you stand publicly pledged to keep the peace. The world has no faith in a quarrelsome Christian. . . . The belligerent propensity is the survival of one of the worst qualities of the old man; it is earthly, sensual, devilish, and as such is to be utterly put away, if you would exhibit to the view of man any traces of the Gospel. To contend for the faith does not mean that you are to be a man of contention and strife. To contend for the faith is a very different matter from contending with your brethren. The one is a peaceful warfare, a devotion to the truth, the pursuit of a high and noble end; the other is a difference with fellow disciples, the outcropping of a restless spirit, the friction and unrest of a depraved nature.

Presuming this was specially intended for the benefit of Dr. Tefft, we leave him to its healing effects. But our readers will all the same read the doctor's remarks with regret, and they will find themselves amused over the ignorance displayed in his statements, some of which are glaringly ridiculous.

SAVING-LIFE.

