5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

WHAT THE New York Graphic says of France and the Catholic clergy applies to America, although with a difference: "It is a very wholesome sight to witness both the parties in France protesting that they are not ruled by the clergy,—each trying to outdo the other. The hand of the Pope in governmental affairs has been the curse of that beautiful realm, and the sooner the clerical influence can be expelled from politics and confined to churches, monasteries, and convents, and the laws and courts be made wholly secular, the sooner peace and liberty can be permanently established."

MR. JAMES PARTON sends us the appended extract with the pithy query—"What more can be reasonably asked?" What indeed, when here we have the soul of the Free Religious Association, "Freedom and Fellowship in Religion"? "The French Freemasons have long been divided upon the question as to whether a belief in the 'Grand Architect of the Universe' should be a dogma of their order. At the recent Masonic Convention in France, the second clause of the Constitution, which ran thus: 'Freemasonry holds the principle of the existence of God and of the immortality of the soul,' was altered by an immense majority to 'Freemasonry holds to the principle of an absolute freedom of conscience, and to the brotherhood of mankind. It excludes no one on account of his belief.'"

THE REPORT of the formation of the Liberal League of Tompkins County, N.Y., which was briefly anticipated in last week's INDEX, arrived just after the paper was sent to press. The meeting was held at Ithaca on October 19, as announced; and, after an exceedingly forcible and cogent exposition of the necessity of the Liberal League movement by Professor J. E. Oliver, of Cornell University, a Constitution was adopted, officers elected, and delegates appointed to represent the League at Rochester. The officers are—President, Dr. John Winslow; Vice-President, Henry B. Morris; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop. The delegates, besides the President and Secretary, are H. B. Morris, D. B. Morton, and J. E. Oliver. An adjourned meeting was appointed for November 1, to complete the list of officers, hear reports of the Rochester Congress from the returned delegates, and transact other business.

DEAN STANLEY, talking of Calvin and Burns not long ago, asked who could doubt that there were lessons of evangelical truth to be derived from the wit and wisdom and generosity of the poor outcast, which we should vainly look for from the stern predestinarian teachings of Calvin? "God forbid," he said, "that I should exalt the dissolute, reckless manners of the wayward genius above the unblemished purity of the high-minded pastor; yet still it may be that many and many a secret sin of pride, of intolerance and untruthfulness that has sprung up under the cloak of the professedly religious man and the stern, unbending divine, may be as hateful in the sight of God as the wild excess of which the other was so mournful an example." The Dean's charitableness is to be commended, as well as his insight into the sins of the "unco guid"; but why should he spoil his own point by the absurd prefix "evangelical"? Is not "truth" enough? One wearied of such interminable intrusions of cant into the discourse of otherwise liberal-minded men.

RETURNING from Rochester, N. Y., just before this issue of THE INDEX goes to press, there is only time to report briefly that the First Annual Congress of the National Liberal League was a complete and most gratifying success. The League voted to adopt the three principles of the "Call," unchanged, as their political platform for 1880, and to postpone the making of nominations to another year. Many of the most desired speakers failed to appear—Col. Ingersoll included. But the audiences, beginning with about three hundred, steadily increased at each session till Corinthian Hall, which is stated by the janitor to seat sixteen hundred persons, was almost completely filled on Sunday evening; their interest was sustained and intense, and the frequent and loud applause proved a degree of enthusiasm which the most sanguine had not dared to expect under the circumstances. The press of Rochester gave very long and respectful reports of the proceedings; numerous liberal organizations sent messages of sympathy to the Congress, and some sent delegates. Next week we shall give as full an account as is possible of the proceedings, but we can only say now that we have come home with a conviction that this movement is destined to be the greatest ever yet inaugurated in the liberal cause, and that the most sceptical will speedily be compelled to recognize the fact.

THE Sun darts a ray of truth, when it says of "Tottering Christianity": "Education is becoming more and more separated from faith; literature is permeated with the influence of the scientific theories so hostile to Christianity, and to all revealed religion; and we find the class of men who do not go to any church is on the increase. Indeed, that there is in progress a decline in the religious beliefs so long held in Christendom, no one who observes the tendency of modern thought can deny. Throughout the continent of Europe—even in Italy and Spain,—doubts of the old theology, and even a total rejection of it, and of all supernatural religion are very prevalent. This has long been the case to a very great extent in Germany; in France unbelief is wide-spread; and in Russia the fermentation of ideas antagonistic to those of the national Church, and to the existing organization of society, does not cease to show itself, in spite of the repressive efforts of the government. In England, too, the propagation of doctrines subversive of Christianity occupies many zealous workers of great intellectual force and unimpeachable honesty of purpose and purity of life; and they are making themselves felt. Here, in the United States, as we understand, the same movement is in progress, and it is constantly gaining impetus." Add to this that Christianity will die hard,—that its strong consolidated organization will never be surrendered without a bitter battle,—and that its enormous sociopolitical power can never be overthrown until it has found its Waterloo in the field of politics.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. S. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUMMELMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI S. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LOR,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....143 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 S. S. WALLIS,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN K. LEBY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 J. WILLIAMS THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quincy, Mass.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 H. L. GREEN,.....Salamanca, N. Y.

[The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.]

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N. B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Philaster, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.

JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, B. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kluge; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.

MISHKOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.

CHESAPEAKE, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.

DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.

PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elbur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. E. Urbino, John S. Verity.

PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, O. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, O. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, E. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. ABBOT; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
 Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi E. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi E. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, E. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermande, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunling.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

CHARTER MEMBERS

Of the National Liberal League.

[See alphabetical list of 170 Charter-Members, in Equal Rights in Religion: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, pages 181-183.]

LIFE MEMBERS

Of the National Liberal League.

JACOB HOFFNER, Cincinnati, O.
 DAVID FERGUSON, Waupun, Wis.
 E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 CHARLES A. GURLEY, Pulaski, N. Y.
 MRS. K. F. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.

ANNUAL MEMBERS

Of the National Liberal League.

IVAN PANIN, Boston, Mass.
 FRANK BACON, Boston, Mass.
 EMERSON BENTLEY, Morgan City, La.
 F. A. ANGELL, Passaic City, N. J.
 B. DOSCHER, Charleston, S. C.
 T. W. HIGGINSON, Newport, R. I.
 JOHN G. JENKINS, Denver, Col.
 MISS F. S. NEWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MISS S. T. STOREY, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. ELLA J. ST. JOHN, Washington, D. C.
 JOHN C. GRIERSON, Jacksonville, Ill.
 GILBERT BILLINGS, Chicopee, Mass.
 JOHN M. ARNOLD, Boston, Mass.
 T. M. LAMB, Worcester, Mass.
 C. A. SIMPSON, Saxonville, Mass.
 S. B. HONEY, Newport, R. I.
 DAVID B. HALE, Collinsville, Ct.
 ISRAEL BETZ, Oakville, Pa.
 O. H. GREEN, Atlanta, Ga.
 JOSEPH YORK, Meadville, Pa.
 H. K. OLIVER, Jr., Boston, Mass.
 F. G. FINCKE, Bella Sylva, Pa.
 PRESTON DAY, Castana, Iowa.
 J. E. OLIVER, Ithaca, N. Y.
 WM. ROTCH, Fall River, Mass.
 E. V. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.

E. S. ABBOT, Cambridge, Mass.
 BENJ. F. SMITH, Dedham, Mass.
 E. T. BILLINGS, Boston, Mass.
 L. A. SAXON, New Orleans, La.
 MRS. E. L. SAXON, New Orleans, La.
 THERON C. LELAND, New York, N. Y.
 WALTER F. JOHNSON, Cleveland, O.
 WM. H. HAMLEN, Boston, Mass.
 MRS. L. C. SLEEPER, Mt. Morris, N. Y.
 E. B. MCNAIR, Danville, N. Y.
 S. L. SMITH, West Winfield, N. Y.
 MISS MAGGIE DEVON, Jordan, Ind.
 JAS. HUMPHREYS, Boston, Mass.
 MISS MATILDA GODDARD, Boston, Mass.
 MISS SOPHIA B. CARTER, Andover, Mass.
 A. E. HINCHER, Burr Oak, Mich.
 JAS. WILLIAMS, Springs, Pa.
 J. M. BARNES, Lafayette, Va.
 CHAS. NASH, Worcester, Mass.
 MISS ELIZ. T. NASH, Worcester, Mass.
 GEO. STICKNEY, Grand Haven, Mich.
 E. C. DARLING, Ipswich, Mass.
 MISS ARTHUR HALL, Northampton, Mass.
 L. SPAULDING, Norfolk, Va.
 F. E. NIPHEE, St. Louis, Mo.
 CHAS. M. CUTLER, Albany, N. Y.
 C. F. GARD, Hillsboro, Col.
 JOHN VERITY, Cambridge, Mass.
 L. T. BUBON, Modoc, Cal.
 W. HANFORD, Etta, N. Y.
 M. L. WEEMS, Columbia, Texas.
 ABB. ROTH, Gettysburg, Pa.
 W. A. DUTTON, Cleveland, O.
 B. M. SMITH, Minneapolis, Minn.
 FRANKLIN GOODYEAR, Cortland, N. Y.
 WALTER C. WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
 WM. B. CLARK, Kalamazoo, Mich.
 GEORGE RIKER, New Philadelphia, O.
 WILLIAM GREEN, Orange, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, Tensley, N. J.
 DELANOEY CRITTENDEN, Rochester, N. Y.
 HARRY GRUNDY, Morrisville, Ill.
 M. REIMAN, New York, N. Y.
 CHARLES W. WENDT, Cincinnati, O.

The Scepticism of Believers.

BY LESLIE STEPHEN.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

While there is a general agreement as to a certain moral code, there is room for the most contradictory doctrines as to the mode of ascertaining that code,—the creed which it contemplates, the sanctions by which it is to be enforced, and the nature of the agents subject to it. The theologian alone possesses a sound basis for morality; but which theologian? On the showing of any one, his opponent builds directly immoral doctrine on the very same basis; and a theory which serves equally to conform vice or virtue has surely one of the marks of scepticism. But how should it be otherwise when one man's God is another man's devil? When, indeed, the devil is simply a deposed deity, or the product of a process of "differentiation" dating from a period at which there was no difference? Mr. Kingsley's special merit, says one of his admirers, was the clearness in which he drew this rather important distinction. His school of theology is fond of declaring that the God of the Calvinists, that is, of a very large section of their fellow-Christians, is in fact the devil, or at least possessed of diabolic attributes. If devil-worship and God-worship are so intricately blended, the resulting system of morality is not likely to be very coherent. It may be too much to say that the scientific morality gives a simple and coherent answer to all the doubts which infest theology. It would set aside some disputes as meaningless, while others will still continue to be seriously debated. But by excluding the arbitrary data resulting from the heterogeneous elements blended under the common name of theology, by settling the method and by limiting inquiry to questions capable of verification by experience, it at least brings the controversy within the possibility of final solution. The ultimate root of the theological contradictions is that they involve reference to the region of the arbitrary, where no test from experience can be applied; and the most opposite theories are equally plausible.

The theologian contends that his doctrines alone, however much they may have been perverted, can lay down an elevated code or provide sufficient sanctions. The first assertion usually takes the form of a denunciation of "materialism." I cannot here touch upon the metaphysical side of that perplexed controversy, nor repeat in feeble language the reasons which have been set forth by more competent thinkers for feeling tolerably at my ease in presence of this terrible but very indefinite bugbear. We are considering the moral problem; and the theological contention is virtually that, if the old bonds are dissolved, the race will discover the whole duty of man to consist in eating, drinking, and securing the maximum of sensual pleasure. Virtue will be discovered to be a sham; or, as Mandeville put it, the offspring begotten by flattery on pride. We shall accept as the highest good what Mr. Carlyle somewhere defines as an unlimited possibility of pigwash. Nobody, it seems, can deny the reality of the senses, or doubt that sensual indulgence is pleasant within certain limits. But the more ethereal essences, self-sacrificing heroism, devotion to ideal aims, the love which finds in itself its own surpassing reward, will turn out to be mere phantasms and fine phrases. They will vanish from this mad chaos of a world, and society become a blind scramble for the greatest share of the enjoyments appreciable by the lower animals. If man has been developed out of a monkey, he must still be a monkey. What is in the full-grown animal must have been in the germ. The monkey is a prurient lump of fleshly appetites. Man is the same being, plus the faculty of lying. If the lies are seen through, he will be the same being without disguise, and may gratify his passions without useless periphrasis.

One question naturally occurs: Are the doctrines imputed to the unbeliever true? If so, the sooner we admit it the better. Every saint and hero in the world is a humbug. He is a brute like the rest of us; a Yahoo trying to throw dust in our eyes. Morality is a clumsy system of rules, adopted by mutual consent to facilitate the distribution of pigswash. When we have come to an understanding, we shall be able to simplify our code. Even the lower animals learn to behave peaceably when the conditions of life force them into quasi-societies; and man can make rules better adapted for the purpose. The purest selfishness will secure the obedience of the majority to an arrangement in which all find their account. And as, on this showing, nothing but selfishness has ever really existed, we need not doubt its efficiency when it acts with less disguise. But the doctrine—as everybody will reply—is false. The disgust produced by a frank cynicism proves the existence of qualities invisible to the cynic. Virtue, it is said with unanswerable force, could not be invented unless it existed. The hypothetical pig (for I hold the actual pig to possess some rudiments of higher instincts) could not conceive of the existence of any appetite but hunger for pigswash. The argument is conclusive, but proves the futility of the doubt. If the higher instincts undeniably exist, can experience fail to prove their existence? Why shrink from accepting a test which, by its very nature, cannot contradict the testimony of consciousness? This appeal to experience is simply an appeal to that testimony by a definite method. I am conscious of some infusion of pure and lofty instinct in myself, and of sympathy with higher manifestations of them in others. Why should I fear that by any possible mode of interrogation my consciousness will be puzzled into a false answer? No scientific teaching can prove that my senses don't exist, and just as little can it prove that my moral ordinary sense does not exist.

It is, indeed, true that a scientific investigator may, or rather must, deprive this moral sense of its supernatural character. He must endeavor to trace it backward to more rudimentary forms, to determine the conditions of its development, and possibly to show that what we take for a simple is really a complex instinct. But to assume that something has been developed, cannot by any dexterity be twisted into a proof that it does not exist. The belief that the moral sense is the normal product of certain existing forces, instead of being an instinct mysteriously dropped into us from without, strengthens, instead of weakening, our belief in its importance; for such a belief alone can enable us to define the true functions displayed by it, and thereby lead to an external estimate of their vast importance. The conscience is no longer an inexplicable power, giving arbitrary directions upon inscrutable authority; but it is the name of a feeling, or a set of feelings, developed in all social progress, and seen to be essential to the vitality of the race. Nor can any analysis tend to throw a doubt upon the very facts which it begins by assuming, that men are capable of regulating their conduct from lofty and unselfish motives, and that conduct, so regulated, drives the most important wheels in the social mechanism.

The essence, then, of the unbeliever's contention is that the conscience or moral sense is a faculty to be explained (so far as we can "explain" anything) by the ordinary methods, because it is part of the normal process of human development. So far as the believer traverses that contention, he is a sceptic in his theory of human nature. He denies the possibility of virtue except under some external compulsion. He denies the reality of virtue except as conduct regulated by reference to a supernatural world. With him, if it is not disguised vanity, it is disguised fear. Man is a pig, though deterred by the rod of everlasting fire from unlimited devotion to his trough. This doctrine, indeed, is repudiated or masked by the higher theology. By using the same word alternately to describe Nature or a force which opposes and controls Nature—for a whole, that is, or a part,—room is secured for any quantity of evasion. It need only be said that, so far as the believer admits virtue to be natural, he is at one with the unbeliever. So far as he asserts it to be supernatural, he illustrates once more the scepticism implied in the argument from the moral character of Christianity; he disbelieves, that is, that any good impulses can arise spontaneously from the corrupt race of man. The tendency comes out more clearly when we turn from the questions about the reality to questions about the sanctions of morality. The believer cannot bring himself to admit that motives drawn from the world around us can be adequate supports of virtue. If he does not hold by hell-fire—a subject which in all seriousness we have ceased to mention to ears polite,—he still maintains that man must have a larger stake in the universe than that of his ephemeral existence in the visible world; unless he can look forward to an indefinite vista of futurity, his virtuous instincts will be asphyxiated. They will dwindle when the imagination is confined within the narrow limits of space and time. Our loftiest aspirations are but "survivals" from the time when they could be nourished by hopes and fears of wider date. The unbeliever, it is said, is under the disadvantage that he cannot argue effectively with the man who deliberately prefers evil to good. He may prove the sinner's conduct to be injurious to society, but not to be injurious to himself. The believer, and the believer alone, can demonstrate vice to be a bad speculation.

Now, it must be frankly confessed that, if hell existed, and could be proved to exist, men would act differently. If we believed in hell, that is, as we believe in Paris, we should be other than we are; though whether better or worse depends upon further considerations. The undeniable fact that the belief produces so little effect as preachers are always telling us, proves that the argument has some weak point in practice. Indeed, one remark is obvious. Allow me to assume the reality of my dreams, and

I will produce conclusive argument for any course of conduct whatever; but the assumption is rather a bold one. My argument, you say, would be powerful if its data were sound. That does not show that it is better for practical purposes than one which appeals to less weighty but more real considerations. A penny in cash is more satisfactory than a check for millions upon an imaginary bank. Nor, indeed, is the argument in any case so good as it looks. If virtue is a sham, and hell exists, then you can demonstrate that it would have been better for men not to have been born, but you cannot create in them good instincts. They can be coerced, but not changed without a miracle. If, on the contrary, virtue is a reality, it supplies real motives, which may therefore be sufficient without attempting to fabricate infinite motives. If there is such a thing as an altruist impulse, it can, like all other impulses, be set in motion by strictly finite considerations.

But the force of the argument is destroyed by another remark, which it is convenient to overlook. A law is not effective in proportion simply to the severity of the ruler, but also in proportion to his justice. A tyrant makes obedient slaves, not virtuous subjects. In your anxiety to enforce morality you outrage the conscience. You invent a judge who punishes savagely; who punishes one man for the sins of another, and who punishes frailties for which he is himself responsible. Is it strange that some men refuse to be cowed, and others invent devices for evading your law, as plausible as those by which you would enforce it? The ordinary common-sense of mankind clings to the conviction expressed by the irreverent Omar Khayyam:—

"He's a good fellow, and 'twill all be well."

Isn't he? Some believers think so, and infer that God will deal with his creatures by healing their diseases instead of tormenting the sick. A more numerous class has discovered that God, with all his severity, can be propitiated on easy terms. The proper ceremonies or the right state of emotion will induce him to clear all scores, and write paid at the bottom of the account. Science seems to say that Nature never forgives. What has been has been, and what will be depends upon what is. But omnipotence can make things be as though they had not been, and therefore a miraculous mercy will check the operations of miraculous vengeance. The worst of using dreams in place of efficient motives is, that dreams are surprisingly pliant to men's wishes. It is doubtful whether the conscience has been more stimulated by its fears of retribution or deadened by visions of pardon. Hell is a powerful weapon, for some purposes, to those who believe in it; but in practice it tends to provoke either revolt or evasion, as much as to enforce obedience.

Such considerations may help to explain why it is that the moral standard of the race has been so little affected by theological stimulants. If a theologian could prove that vice involves absurdities so great as to make it impossible, we might be grateful to him. But no one can assert, and the theologian persistently denies, that the unlimited application of this imaginary scourge has really made the race better. Thinking of all the atrocities perpetrated under the religious régime, of its frequent effect, in absolutely deadening the conscience, of the false standards which on any hypothesis it has often substituted for the true one, of the indirect injury done by crushing the intellect or the moral nature from a cowardly fear of possible abuses, one may be almost tempted to doubt whether its effect has been elevating or deteriorating. The truth is, that we are touching upon a problem of extreme complexity, which is obscured by all kinds of confusion. What, one may ask; is the relation between the creed and the moral standard actually recognized by a race? To approximate to an answer, we should have to distinguish between true and sham beliefs, to make allowance for the tacit repeal of one set of doctrines ostentatiously advanced by another set covertly insinuated, and to estimate the innumerable indirect influences of the creed upon the whole social structure. One consideration, however, will be enough for my present purpose.

Nobody will deny that men's actions are governed by their beliefs and emotions; but when we attempt an accurate analysis of motives, we are met by the difficulty of allowing for the complex reactions between the reasoning, feeling, and active parts of our nature. What we call beliefs may be really dreams; and, in early stages of thought, the element due to genuine observation and that contributed by the imaginative faculty are inseparably blended. The alteration of a genuine belief may alter conduct as the alteration of the external facts would have done. The facts, it may be said, are changed for the observer; and, therefore, his mode of behaving will change. But the alteration of a dream cannot be taken as the ultimate, though, of course, it may be the proximate, cause of such a change, for it must be itself due to some change in the character or surroundings of the dreamer. The dream represents men's desires; it shows what it is which they hope or fear, or what is for any reason impressive to their imaginations; a change in it must be taken to imply some change in those hopes and fears produced by an independent process.

Thus a changed belief as to a future world may greatly modify our conduct, so far as that belief was a real attempt to interpret experience. If, as Paley maintained, virtue meant simply action regulated by prospects of a future life, the destruction of that belief would destroy virtue. It would not directly alter character, but it would close one channel for the display of selfish impulses, and might indirectly come to modify character also. The doctrine of the unbeliever must be different. On his showing, the belief in another life was probably due, in the first instance, to an attempt to interpret experience. So far as we now interpret it differently, our conduct may be altered. But it is plain that all that colors the belief, all that makes the future life an object of hope and fear, must be differently explained. Since heaven and hell were not revealed from without, they must have been suggested from within. A given person may, of course, have believed in hell on the authority of his Bible, and have been guided by his fears as he would by any other fears. But since the whole phenomenon—the belief of a race or society in a "future state of rewards and punishments"—can rest upon no ground of outward experience, its genealogy is clear. It proves what men hoped and feared, not what they inferred from external facts. There is no presumption, then, that by destroying it you destroy the desires on which it existed. You simply force them to take a different form. Destroy the belief in the pagan gods, and you destroy the old poetic machinery, but you do not therefore destroy the poetic impulse.

The believer may, therefore, hold consistently that men are kept in order by external threats, and that the virtuous impulses, if they exist in the natural man, would droop and die without such support. To the unbeliever this explanation is not open. Fetters framed by men for themselves cannot be the ultimate cause of the restraint. It would be as unphilosophical to suppose that a man can lift the platform which supports him. We cannot look outside the world to explain the maintenance of a certain moral standard, any more than we need look beyond the solar system to explain why the earth does not fall into space. The existence of these imaginary worlds becomes with the unbeliever a conclusive proof of two things: first, that men, or the leading minds among mankind, must have hated vice, for the thought of its punishment was agreeable; secondly, that they aspired to a better state of things, for they constructed an ideal world where justice should be perfectly administered. If a man works because he believes that he is to be paid, the work may be done against the grain. If he believes that he is to be paid because he likes to work, the work must have some independent charms.

Is it possible, then, that the closing of this outlet for the imagination will cause the atrophy of the instincts which prompted its construction? The unbeliever hopes and believes better things. He thinks that men's hopes and aspirations will not fail, though directed to definite reality, instead of the boundless imaginary world. He regards it as a fact capable of strict scientific proof that altruistic instincts exist; that men have desires which can only be explained when man is regarded as a fraction of the social integer; and that those desires, depending upon conditions other than dreams, will survive the disappearance or modification of the dreams. The existence of such instincts may appear a paradox to some reasoners. A belief in them is the mystery of the unbeliever's creed, against which the pride of reason is apt to revolt. It is not my present purpose to justify the doctrine, or to show (as I hold that it may be conclusively shown) that it involves no real offence to reason. It is enough to say that, so far as it is an essential part of the unbeliever's theory, whereas it may be rejected by his antagonist, the believer may most fitly be called sceptical. He declares a fact to be contradictory because it will not fit in with his doctrines, and therefore throws a doubt upon the validity of experience. The scepticism in this case is merely one mode of stating the sceptical doctrine already illustrated; namely, the disbelief in the natural goodness of man. So far as the supernatural code or sanction is asserted to be necessary, the insufficiency of the natural is more or less explicitly maintained.

Which creed, then, is most sceptical in the sense already defined,—least calculated, that is, under existing circumstances, to produce coherent and consistent action? The unbeliever loses the use of certain phrases, or reduces them to intelligible meaning. The moral law, says the believer, is eternal, immutable, supreme, infallible, and founded on the nature of things. It is just as eternal, says the unbeliever, as the laws of Nature upon which it is founded. As all reasoning assumes the continuity of past and future, we can never look forward to a time when the law will be essentially changed. It is immutable in the sense that, while the conditions remain, the law must remain; but it is susceptible of modification and adaptation to new circumstances. It is supreme as it expresses the ultimate conditions of social welfare, and the race can never fail to observe those conditions without ruin to itself, and therefore to the component individuals. It is certain, if not infallible, for, though we renounce supernatural guarantees for our moral beliefs, and admit that they cannot be deduced from a priori necessity, we can place them on a level with other conclusions of inductive science. It is founded in the nature of things, if by things you mean, for example, man and his surroundings; but we know nothing of the transcendental nature of things, which is the home of the arbitrary, the absolute, and the self-contradictory. We cannot be more than certain, nor say what is "absolute morality" any more than we can say what is that absolute health which is independent of our physical constitutions. The attempt to get beyond this is an attempt to get off our own shadows; and only leads to a show of absolute conclusions at the price of finding them to be meaningless and arbitrary. And, finally, to use a much-abused term, the moral law is clearly "objective," if it is meant by that phrase that it does not vary arbitrarily with the fancies of different men, but expresses truths about human nature as sure and final as the truths of astronomy; though, if objective be used to imply an existence independent altogether of the constitution of our minds, we can only reply that such words are meaningless.

The unbeliever, then, cannot admit that he has really lost anything. If it be still asked what he has gained, he may reply that he has escaped from a scepticism of the most distressing kind. That creed is least sceptical in the practical sense which is most conducive to hope. When the early Christians believed in a coming millennium, or modern revolutionists in the perfectibility of the species, each creed must have been stimulating. The vision of the early triumph of the right was not the cause, but the effect, of a faith, flushed with excessive confidence, and capable of transforming, if not of regenerating, society. The difference is characteristic. In dropping the belief in a millennium for a belief in progress, the unbeliever holds that he is dropping the shadow for the substance. The hopes of the believer point to dream-land, and therefore to a world of catastrophes and surprises. They suggest convulsions instead of development. Everything is to be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sound of a supernatural trumpet. The world has been, and therefore may be, the scene of tremendous and spasmodic transformations, to be anticipated only in virtue of supernatural knowledge. God came upon earth to reveal the one truth, and to establish his divine kingdom. Strange to say, the light has grown dim as knowledge has advanced; and, when the next catastrophe occurs, faith may have disappeared from the world. The new kingdom has so little attracted the allegiance of mankind that the moral standard has improved slowly, if at all, and has often improved by absolute defiance of the acknowledged representatives of the ruler. The only hope is in another catastrophe which may shatter to pieces the whole existing order, and introduce a new system, in which good and evil, hitherto so intimately blended will be eternally divided. So strongly does this conviction color the believer's view, that the last defence of Orthodox theory rests on a scientific argument to prove that the universe must have gone through a complete catastrophe within some finite period, and will probably have another before long,—which is very consoling, and proves the existence of God.

What better proof that belief is, in fact, scepticism?—that it obtains a show of certainty by banishing all certainty from the world of experience to place it in an arbitrary world of abstractions? The assumption, which underlies all scientific reasoning, of the necessity of judging of the future from the past, is systematically rejected. The belief in the millennium has vanished and the outlook for this world is hopeless or uncertain. The devil is getting the best of it here, though he may receive his deserts hereafter. Faith grows dim as knowledge increases; or, in other words, reason destroys all ground of hope. Progress is a failure, for the past was better than the present. In presence of all the great movements which stir the world, the believer's attitude is one of doubt, suspicion, or absolute hostility. Increase of knowledge makes him tremble for his creed. Social changes involve the decay of the one sacred authority. If he forces himself to believe that, in some sense, a reconciliation between the old and the new is yet possible, he is forced to equivocate, to strain words into no meaning, and to look with doubt upon his allies. He is haunted by vague dread of materialism and atheism, and fancies that science will somehow be able to juggle him out of confidence in the most explicit testimony of his consciousness. Belief in progress is handed over to the unbeliever, not only because the winning side naturally believes that things are improving, but because he alone can assign some ground for the belief. Measuring the future by the past, he can infer that the evolution of which we see the earlier phases will pass through others, as yet but dimly discernible, though dimly encouraging.

The ultimate result, then, of the believer's scepticism as to human nature is that the belief in progress has been transferred to his rival. Now, the belief in progress in some one of its many shapes is the most characteristic product of modern habits of thought. It is simply the doctrine of evolution applied to political and social theories; and it must permeate and transform all such theories in proportion as they become scientific. A similar transformation must be effected in our moral conceptions. Theological language may, of course, be accommodated to this new doctrine, as there are no doctrines to which it cannot be accommodated. But the instinctive repugnance of theologians to such a belief rests upon a sound logical instinct. The theologian naturally denies the validity of the methods and assumptions upon which the belief in progress primarily rests, for he regards a knowledge of the unknowable as an essential condition of foreseeing the future. And the imagination still acts more powerfully than the logical faculty. The vision of a supernatural world becomes vivid precisely in proportion as our interest in this becomes dim. If the two conditions are not logically opposed, yet in practice one waxes as the other wanes. We cannot really walk with our eyes fixed both upon cloud-land and upon solid earth. Dreams and realities may blend for a time, and the dream be transformed instead of abruptly dispelled. But we have ultimately to choose; and, as we choose, we must become sceptical as to this world or the other.

By progress, it only remains to be said, we cannot mean a continuous and indefinite process of improvement. Periods of darkness and partial decay may always be destined to intervene between periods of growth and enlightenment. The planet itself will ultimately, we are told, become a mere travelling gravestone; and before that time comes men and their dreams must have vanished together. Our hopes must be finite, like most things. We must be content with hopes sufficient to stimulate action. We must believe in a future harvest sufficiently to make it worth while to sow; or, in other words, that honest and unselfish work will leave the world rather better off than we found it. Perhaps this is not a very sublime prospect. Life, says the most candid of theologians, and his arguments certainly support his conclusion, is perhaps but a poor thing. But it is a tolerable world so long as one can believe that one's fellow-creatures have plenty of healthy instincts, and enough of really noble instincts to secure a steady, if checkered, social growth; that those instincts do not depend upon our attaining impossible knowledge, and that they will survive all the petty systems founded upon irrational guesswork. It is something to feel a certainty, based upon experience of the case, that we have nothing to fear from unlimited freedom of inquiry, and that we may hope, not merely an indefinite increase of man's power over the external world, but a higher and more rational social order and more widely-reaching sympathies. Extended knowledge means a more accurate appreciation of the conditions of human welfare, and a more intelligent cultivation of the emotions and sympathies upon which it depends. We can work and think without fearing that some infidel Samson will suddenly bring down the pillars of the temple. We cannot flatter ourselves that our personal stake in the universe is more unlimited in regard to the future time than in regard to the past and the distant; but possibly the reflection is consoling to some people who think that they will have had about enough of themselves in the threescore years and ten! That, perhaps, is a matter of taste; but, in any case, when all intellectual progress is seen every day more clearly to depend upon the systematic interpretation of experience and the resolute repression of all incongruous elements of speculation, it is desirable that we should gaze in the direction in which alone experience can enlighten us, and accept realities instead of dreams. The scepticism which rejects the phantoms is less paralyzing than the scepticism which, when it expresses itself frankly, rejects realities, and, when it does not, attempts to mystify us by a jargon which hopelessly confounds the two.—Fortnightly Review.

THE BASES OF CHRISTIANITY.

SUPERNATURAL RELIGION: AN INQUIRY INTO THE REALITY OF DIVINE REVELATION. Vol. III. (Longman's & Co.)

The unknown author of the work called Supernatural Religion has continued his inquiries, undeterred by the attacks on minor points to which his former volumes were subjected. His belief in the validity of his opinions has not been weakened, nor his force of argument abated. Confident in the truth of his convictions, he prosecutes his task without fear or faltering. It is one sufficiently adventurous; but his boldness has carried him through it without turning aside. In the present volume he shows the same ample knowledge of the subject, with all its literature and bearings. Though the ground has been well trodden, he occupies it in his own way, putting forward his arguments in the mode he thinks most effective, with judicial calmness. There are three parts in the volume: the first discussing the Acts of the Apostles; the second, the direct evidence for miracles in the Epistles and Apocalypses, especially the evidence of St. Paul; and the third discussing the resurrection and ascension of Christ. The first part seems to us to show most ability; although nothing absolutely new is contributed in it. Indeed, after Scheckenburger and Zeller, it is difficult to see how much can be added to the arguments on that side of the question. The evidence of St. Paul is also treated most minutely, with the view of showing that it does not prove the working of miracles by himself, or the bodily resurrection of Jesus. The writer evades no difficulty, but enters into every passage bearing on the subject, examining it in detail. Having considered the testimony of the Acts of the Apostles on miraculous agency, the author thus concludes:—

"We have now patiently considered the 'Acts of the Apostles,' and although it has in no way been our design exhaustively to examine its contents, we have more than sufficiently done so to enable the reader to understand the true character of the document. The author is unknown, and it is no longer possible to identify him. If he were actually the Luke whom the Church indicates, our results would not be materially affected; but the mere fact that the writer is unknown is obviously fatal to the Acts as a guarantee of miracles. A cycle of supernatural occurrences could scarcely, in the estimation of any rational mind, be established by the statement of an anonymous author, and more especially one who not only does not pretend to have been an eye-witness of most of the miracles, but whose narrative is either uncorroborated by other testimony or inconsistent with itself, and contradicted on many points by contemporary documents. The phenomena presented by the Acts of the Apostles become perfectly intelligible when we recognize that it is the work of a writer living long after the occurrences related, whose pious imagination furnished the apostolic age with an elaborate system of supernatural agency, far beyond the conception of any other New Testament writer, by which, according to his view, the proceedings of the apostles were furthered and directed, and the infant Church miraculously fostered. On examining other portions of his narrative, we find that they present the features which the miraculous elements rendered antecedently probable. The speeches attributed to different speakers are all cast in the same mould, and betray the composition of one and the same writer. The sentiments expressed are inconsistent with what we know of the various speakers. And when we test the circumstances related, by previous or subsequent incidents and by trustworthy documents, it becomes apparent that the narrative is not an impartial statement of facts, but a reproduction of legends or a development of tradition, shaped and colored according to the purpose or the pious views of the writer. The Acts of the Apostles, therefore, is not only an anonymous work, but upon due examination its claims to be considered sober and veracious history must be emphatically rejected. It cannot strengthen the foundations of supernatural religion, but, on the contrary, by its profuse and indiscriminate use of the miraculous, it discredits miracles, and affords a clearer insight into their origin and fictitious character."

After examining the gospels, his conclusion is stated in the following terms:—

"We have now examined the accounts which the four Evangelists actually give of the Passion, Resurrection, and Ascension, and there can be no hesitation in stating as the result that, as might have been expected from works of such uncertain character, these narratives must be pronounced mere legends, embodying vague and wholly unattested tradition. As evidence for such stupendous miracles, they are absolutely of no value. No reliance can be placed on a single detail of their story. The aim of the writers has obviously been to make their narrative of the various appearances of Jesus as convincing as possible, and they have freely inserted any details which seemed to them calculated to give them impressiveness, force, and verisimilitude."

Having dispatched the evidence contained in St. Paul's writings for the resurrection of Jesus, our anonymous critic concentrates the essence of the whole into this passage:—

"What, then, does Paul himself tell us of the circumstances under which he saw Jesus? Absolutely nothing. The whole of his evidence for the Resurrection consists in the bare statement that he did see Jesus. Now can the fact that any man merely affirms, without even stating the circumstances, that a person once dead and buried has risen from the dead and been seen by him, be seriously considered satisfactory evidence for so astounding a miracle? Is it possible for any one of sober mind, acquainted with the nature of the proposition, on the one hand, and with the innumerable possibilities of error, on the other, to regard such an affirmation even as evidence of much importance in such a matter? We venture to say that, in such a case, an affirmation of this nature, even made by a man of high character and ability, would possess little weight. If the person making it, although of the highest honor, were known to suppose himself the subject of constant revelations and visions, and if, perhaps, he had a constitutional tendency to nervous excitement and ecstatic trance, his evidence would have no weight at all. We shall presently have to speak of this more in detail in connection with Paul. Such an allegation even supported by the fullest information and most circumstantial statement could not establish the reality of the miracle; without them, it has no claim to belief. What is the value of a person's testimony who simply makes an affirmation of some important matter, unaccompanied by particulars, and the truth of which cannot be subjected to the test of even the slightest cross-examination? It is worth nothing. It would not be received at all in a court of justice. If we knew the whole of the circumstances of the apparition to Paul, from which he inferred that he had seen the risen Jesus, the natural explanation of the supposed miracle might be easy. There were no other witnesses of it. This is clear; for, had there been, Paul must have mentioned them as he mentioned the five hundred. We have only the report of a man who states that he had seen Jesus, unconfirmed by any witnesses. Under no circumstances could isolated evidence like this be of much value. Facts and inferences are alike uncorroborated, but on the other hand are contradicted by universal experience. When we analyze the evidence, it is reduced to this: Paul believed that he had seen Jesus. This belief constitutes the whole evidence of Paul himself for the resurrection."

The conclusiveness of the arguments adduced in the volume on behalf of the perpetual operation of natural causes, or of unalterable laws, will affect different minds with various effect. The orthodox will be shocked to see cherished beliefs unparaphrasedly attacked: the rationalists will look with satisfaction on the alleged demolition of superstitious notions. We will not undertake to decide between the parties, or pronounce a judgment upon the issue. One thing is obvious: apologists must fairly grapple with the arguments in all their strength. They must not raise side issues to divert the attention from the chief matters in question. It is possible that the author may have tripped occasionally in his Greek; that he may have drawn a hasty inference from a passage, or dated a document too late. But these are very subordinate matters, and do not materially affect the question itself.

It would have been better if the learned writer had referred to apologetic authors much less than he has. His citation of them, both in the text and the notes, does not increase the value of his book, any more than his indiscriminate accumulation of the authorities which too often burden his pages. Here he should have exercised a judicious selection. We cannot see, for example, what good can possibly arise from citing such perfunctory authors as Wordsworth, Alford, Ellicott, Ebrard, Baumgarten, Hackett, Farrar, and others. The weak should have been ignored; the strong alone referred to.

The tendency of the reasoning is prominent throughout, so prominent at times as to evince a strong bias in favor of certain conclusions, which imperils impartiality. An eagerness to bring forth a single result alone thrusts itself forward with undue exhibition, as though the author had determined beforehand to make his witness speak only as he prompted him. Sometimes, too, the language is unguarded, as when it is said, "The expectation of the Messiah, under frequently modified aspects, had formed a living part in the religion of Israel," which is incorrect; or the reasoning feeble, as that about the mission of the seventy disciples in the third gospel not favoring the theory of Pauline tendency, which it does; or the special pleading manifest, as that about the words ἰουδαίῳ τε πρώτῳ καὶ Ἑλλήνι in which it is recommended to disregard the troublesome πρώτον altogether. We do not know why the writer should have quoted Zeller on the Acts through Lekebusch, as is done in pages 176, 177, instead of from his own work directly. As it is, he should have been accurate in reproducing the reference of the place in the Theologische Jahrbücher, for 1851, which is not page 107, but 187.

The volume contains abundant proofs of learned research, acute criticism, and intellectual ability. Opponents will doubtless discover its weaknesses, and assail its attack upon documents so long sacred in their eyes. Meantime, the anonymous author in his well-preserved concealment can watch the movements directed against him, and await the issue. He has on his side a phalanx of critics, weighty and learned; while they are also seconded by respectable names. But the subject cannot be resolved by authority instead of evidence; and the evidence of the documents themselves is the chief thing. Let such evidence be fairly treated and fully presented, both in its strength and weakness.—London Athenæum, Sept. 8.

MODERN ATHEISM.

THE CHANGE THAT HAS COME OVER DISBELIEVERS.

In former times, when atheism was vague and stammering, incomplete and unorganized, it was condemned and suppressed with horror, anger, and indignation. Its apostles were execrated as monsters doomed to eternal torments. The world cast them out, and the Church burned them. But now that atheism is complete and organized, without concealment and without shame, its name is not even a term of mild reproach. On the contrary, its most notorious professors are honored and looked up to by the world in general, and are listened to with a respectful patience by even their professed opponents. Deans avow friendship for men compared with whom Voltaire is Orthodox, and Cardinals with such men gravely discuss beliefs which Voltaire would have thought it horrible to have questioned. The reason of this is obvious: atheism has come forward under changed conditions. It is based upon new foundations; it is animated with a new temper. For the first time it rests itself not on the private speculations of a rebellious intellect, not on the ravings of a vile Parisian populace drunk with the wine of politics and suffering from political delirium tremens, but on the deep and broad foundations of research, experiment, and proof. It has thus lost all that insolence of private passion and of private judgment which used to make it as offensive to men's practical instincts as it was hostile to their theoretical convictions. Our modern atheists in profession, and, to a great measure, in fact, are entirely free of the old personal bravado. They claim to teach with authority, because they have been content to learn with humility. For they, too, have their church, their infallible teacher, to whom they profess an implicit and devout obedience. And this teacher is undoubtedly an august one. It is none other than Nature herself, as our powerful science compels her answers from her,—Nature, in the widest sense of the world, including the history of the universe and the history of the human race, and the laws in obedience to which this history has developed itself. Here, we are told, is our one source of knowledge; here we learn the truth, and the whole truth. Nature bears witness about every conceivable subject; there is no rational question which, if we do but ask it properly, she will not answer. She will require no faith from us; she will ask us to take nothing on trust. Everything that she teaches us she will prove and verify, and there is no variability in her, nor any shadow of turning. "Come, then [this is the appeal that our modern atheists make to us], and let us learn of Nature; let us listen to the voice of truth!" And what does truth tell us? Among many things truth tells us two, which are of prime importance, and which are universally intelligible to the human race. There is no God, and there is no future life. The notion of the first is unnecessary, and that of the second is ridiculous. In the name of truth, then, let us cast these lies away from us, however painfully for the moment we may feel their loss, however closely they may be bound up for us with memories of the past. But we are not left with this exhortation only. Something more is added to sustain and stimulate us. These lies, we are told, if we will but look them boldly in the face, instead of blinking at them out of deference to their supposed divinity, we shall see to be lies only, but profoundly immoral lies. It is, therefore, in the name, not of selfish indulgence, not of license and free living, but of sacred truth and all the severest principles, that we are invited to accept the creed of atheism and to cast out religion. Thus the atheism of to-day, though theoretically destructive, is practically conservative. It no longer assails society as it is, or any of those rules that sustain it, or the chastened affections that are supposed to make it worth sustaining. It is associated no longer with any dissolute wit, with any cruel and brilliant cynicism, or with the fascination of lawless love. On the contrary, it is on the whole somewhat dull, and, to say the least of it, it is eminently respectable. It is the atheism of the vigil, not the orgy, and its character when developed is solemn, almost puritanical. Study the language, the conduct, even the faces of its most eminent exponents, and signs will be apparent everywhere of gravity and severe earnestness. These are men, we see in a glance, who hold life a serious thing,—a thing not to be trifled away in idleness, however harmless, or in licentious self-indulgence, however refined or graceful. What is really of value in life, what men should really strive for, are things to be reached only by self-denial and labor, and a vigilant rigor in the guidance and control of passions. Those who pay no heed to the better part, but who saunter, who lounge, who smile, who sneer through life, are condemned by the atheists even more grimly than by the believers.—Boston Courier, Oct. 14.

ABOUT TWENTY years ago a somewhat abusive opponent of the Baptists was publishing a book against them at the office of the printer of the acts of the Mississippi Legislature. By some inadvertence the sheets got mixed, and before the confusion was detected several copies of the acts were so bound as to exhibit the following astonishing piece of legislation, the grand result of a thirty years' war against immersion: "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Mississippi that bat means to put under the water, and tizo means to pull out."

Poetry.

CONTRASTS.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

[MR. EDITOR: Several years ago, while passing through a small town in one of the older States, on a night train on which a "sleeper" could not be secured, I was in a drowsy, meditative mood and reclining in my seat, when the train stopped for wood and water. Just then the town clock slowly struck twelve, and the watchman in the tower droned out, "Twelve o'clock at night, and all is well." A moment after this cry the groans of the friends of a dying man (who had been injured by a passing train) were heard in a lighted room near by. The train soon rolled away, and passed a hall where a ball was being held, and music and dancing were heard. These painful confusions are poorly portrayed in the following lines.

J. F. D.]

The old town clock now strikes the midnight hour,
With slow repetitions on its ancient bell;
The faithful watchman in the distant tower
Proclaims in measured tones that "all is well."

All else is silent save his steps that fall
With solemn sound upon the lonely street,
And save the roundsman's well-known whistle-call,
To wake some drowsy sentry on his beat.

No other sound disturbs the deep repose
In which the gloomy world now seems at rest;
While dreamy man, released from all its woes,
By merciful forgetfulness is blessed.

But ere these sounds, now floating on the air,
On distant, slow-receding waves depart,
There comes a piercing cry of deep despair,
A moan of grief from some poor breaking heart.

By yon lone taper's feebly falling light,
Sad stricken ones with weeping faces appear,
Whose sighs now break the stillness of the night,
And fill with sounds of death each wakeful ear.

Now, mingling with the deep distressing cries,
Loud shouts of mirth and revelry are heard,
And in their wild conflicting accents rise
Till drowsy-slept indifference is stirred.

Still louder from these stricken ones of earth
The pensive tones of sorrow rise and swell,—
The voice of death, the merry songs of mirth,
Strange mingling with the cry that "all is well!"

Can all be well, when some with happy lot
May never know the pangs of want and care,
While others pine in misery's wretched cot,
And live and die the children of despair?

If this be well, then all that is, is right,
And sympathetic sorrow must be wrong,—
Then darkness must be just as clear as light,
And justice should be partial to the strong.

But, waking from some hopeful, restless dream,
Half-freed from pain by its delusive spell,
How multiplied earth's many sorrows seem
How sad the mocking cry that "all is well!"

How strange in Eden's fairest, shady bowers,
Where roses bloom, and streams enticing flow,
That poison reptiles lurk among the flowers,
That there the thorn and deadly upas grow!

The ocean, rising from its tranquil bed,
With towering wave beats wildly on the main;
The molten lava, by convulsions shed,
Flows o'er and desolates the smiling plain.

In forests wild, where man has never trod,
The savage brute devours his helpless prey,
And Nature's laws, just as they came from God,
The warring winds and dying leaves obey.

Who made convulsions desolate the land,
The thorn and thistle with its roses grow,
The angry billows lave the ocean's strand,
And dire afflictions fill the earth with woe?

If chaos reigned on the primeval earth,
When "without form and void" the world was made,
These conflicts must have had coeval birth
Before rebellious man had disobeyed.

For all the powers of universe combined
Cannot resist their own Creator's will,— Must each pursue the only course designed,
Must each their own allotted part fulfil.

And then there must have been a prior cause
That thus provoked the anger of the waves,
That under Nature's unresisted laws
Brought forth the lava from its burning caves.

For who can close his restless mental eyes
To thoughts that all their painful visions fill,
When with these universal conflicts rise
Impressions of the great Creator's will?

That will is law that nothing can evade,
That nothing can prevent, annul, or change,
That are the Earth's foundation-stones were laid
Embraced all destiny within its range.

For knowledge, with the power and will combined,
To every conscious being must declare
That all results occur just as designed,
That all things were designed just as they are.

Each ray of thought that penetrates the mind
Seems guided thither by the hand of fate,
Whose unseen forces ever press behind,
And make us choose the only course we take.

How oft some new and strange, unwelcome thought
Unbidden takes possession of the brain,
And with such all-conquering force is brought,
That every effort to resist is vain.

Where'er these dark mysterious guides impel,
All things within the universe proceed;
All forms of matter, and the mind as well,
Must follow where their silent dictates lead.

And thus throughout man's short and strange career
His thoughts and motives seem alike controlled;
His form, his will, his life, and actions here
Are formed and cast complete from Nature's mould.

Beyond the boundaries of this vast domain
If there is nothing, still there must be space;
For where there's nothing, that must yet remain
Instead of something there to fill its place.

Where it begins or where its bounds extend,
Are questions deeply veiled in mystery,
Without beginning and without an end,
Save in the unknown, dark infinity.

And could thought reach the end of endless space,
And all the countless worlds within explore,
It still would fall God's purposes to trace
Upon the sands of that mysterious shore.

For though "His footprints everywhere are plain,"
And though "His presence in the sunbeam shines," Creation's mighty records yet contain
No index to his ultimate designs.

Far in the future, rayless, starless night,
His plans and purposes are veiled secure,
And there beyond the range of mortal sight
Unknown to all but him they shall endure.

If to that vague and viewless outer world
Some wayward, wandering planet should be thrown,
And, driven onward, be forever whirled
Through space more distant, dreary, and unknown,

It still would follow in its wanderings there
Wherever led by that Almighty cause
That guides the roving comet everywhere,
In forced obedience to creation's laws.

For that controls as well the smallest mite
That floats away unseen upon the breeze,
As the swift meteor in its dazzling flight,
Or mountain billows on the angry seas.

When science peers beyond the far-off skies,
And brings the distant sun within our gaze,
We see its lurid flames in columns rise,
Its matter in an all-consuming blaze.

In every drop of water we behold
A tiny world of life which there appears,
Each just as much by Nature's laws controlled
As are the movements of the mighty spheres.

And when we turn our weary eyes to view
The worlds above or earth beneath our feet,
Some mystery still more wonderful and new
Our startled vision there is sure to meet.

Each type and order of the human race
Creates anew its own peculiar God;
One views Him with a smiling Father's face
The other arms him with a tyrant's rod.

"Lo, here is God," the Hindu priest will cry,
And point you to his idol deified;
While Christians rear their sacred Cross on high,
And tell you, "There the world's Creator died."

One sees him walk in lonely human form,
And hears him bid the rising waves be still,
And others, riding on the raging storm,
Or leading armies on to slay and kill.

One hears his whisper in the gentle breeze,
Another hears him in the thunder's roar,—
One in the gale upon the angry seas,
One in the "burning bush" upon the shore.

And others still, with faith to them as true,
With obscene images their God defile;
While some in stagnant, turbid waters view
His presence in the loathsome Crocodile.

Imagination, when inspired by fear,
Creates in Him a stern vindictive foe,
Brings down His ever-dreaded vengeance near,
Then pays the priest to ward the pending blow,—

Degrades him to the level of the beast,
Creates in him the slave of human will,
Transfers his sceptre to the grasping priest,
And leaves his vacant throne for him to fill.

But those who stand upon a higher plane
See God in Nature and in Nature's law;
For there, in reason's unpretending fane,
No priest inspires their reverential awe.

No chiming bells, or veepers soft and sweet
In lofty domes and gaudy temples grand,
Shall lure the steps of their unwilling feet
To tread the paths to such a dreamy land.

They stand erect amid the prostrate throng
Whose heads are bowed with superstitious fear,
While unseen harps their melting strains prolong
To charm the soul and captivate the ear.

Here reason, forced to abdicate its throne,
Is madly driven from their temple door,
And human gods are worshipped here alone,—
Their superstition teaches nothing more.

For, from the dawning hour of Nature's birth
Until the present last recorded year,
Not one of all the race who lived on earth
Knew more of God than reason teaches here.

But there is still one creed to which I hold,
That giveth rest to weary, dying man,
Embracing all within its ample fold,
And bridges Hell with reason's arching span:

A creed that should be held alike by all
That love our fellows here and everywhere,
That raises up the erring ones who fall,
And blesses man with sympathetic care.

And here upon eternal truth I rest,
Secure from fears of death or future woes;
For, when my form by mother Earth is pressed,
No frightful dreams shall wake its long repose.

So, when the final summons comes to me,
And kindly friends shall toll the funeral knell,
Then know that death has set another free,—
That all that is, is well, when ended well.

J. F. D.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich., Sept. 13, 1877.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 27.

Wm. H. Fitch, Jr., $5; L. G. Hoffman, $1; N. Grossmayer, $3.20; A. Miller, $3.20; Rev. J. Fisher, $3.20; M. C. Huling, $0.40; C. Lauer, $2; T. A. Kinney, $1.50; Alex. Kisk, $10; Dr. Edw. Mead, $3.20; G. A. & S. Hill, $3.20; M. H. L. Cabot, $3.20; Cash, $1; J. C. Saunders, 25 cents; W. C. McDonald, 80 cents; Geo. Engler, $2; Rev. E. Bartlett, $1.50; Hannah J. Scott, $1; Dr. E. Wigglesworth, $3.20; Titus L. Mann, $1.50; A. Bauman, $1.75; W. F. Wilson, $2.10; Cornelius Wellington, $3.20; Henry Grew, $3.20; Lewis Hunt, $0.40; J. S. Shaller, $1.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 1, 1877.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (Edinburgh), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Editorial
Contributors.

FREE RELIGIOUS CONVENTION.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association is to be held in New Haven, on the 8th and 9th of November, beginning on Thursday evening, the 8th, and holding through Friday, the 9th. O. B. Frothingham, T. W. Higginson, J. W. Chadwick, Felix Adler, F. E. Abbot, Miss Anna C. Garlin, D. H. Clark, and W. J. Potter are among the speakers invited, and most of them are expected to be present. Interesting and timely subjects will be presented for discussion, and the New Haven friends promise a successful gathering.

Further particulars in the local papers.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

OUR THANKS are due to Mr. George Jacob Holyoake for some interesting English papers, in one of which we find the following paragraph under the head of "Relics of Bygone Agitations": "The historic sword, which was to clear the way for the Charter, drawn by John Frost on the morning of the fatal affray at Newport, has recently passed into the possession of Mr. G. J. Holyoake. The nonagenarian agitator never saw it after his sentence for high treason in 1839. It was taken from him on the morning of the fray by Colonel Napier, the officer who apprehended and dispossessed him of it. It passed into the hands of Humphrey F. A. Burchell-Hearne, Esq., of Bushey Grange, near Watford, late sheriff for the County of Herts, who made a present of it some twenty years ago to the Rev. Theodore M. N. Owen, vicar of Rhodes, Manchester, by whose courtesy it was passed into the possession of Mr. Holyoake. It is a handsome straight duelling sword, with ivory handle, in leather scabbard, and good condition. On the sheath are engraved the words: 'Foster, St. James' Street, cutler to his Majesty, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of York.' Mr. Holyoake also possesses the only specimen known of the spear constructed by Colonel Maccaroni for resisting the cavalry in the Reform Bill agitation of 1830, and the flag of the 'Washington,' which carried Garibaldi's thousand to Marsala, and the last flag sent from England to the forlorn hopes which fought for Italian unity."

THE REMARKS of the Nation on the late Socialist meeting at Ghent will displease some of their sympathizers on this side of the Atlantic: "The Socialists have been showing signs of renewed activity by holding a Congress of the International at Ghent, in Belgium, consisting of about forty delegates, representing branches in all parts of Europe and in the United States. The discussions seem to have been attended with considerable difficulty, owing to the want of a common language; but in one way or another all were made acquainted with what was going on. The executive committee and the headquarters of the association are in Chicago. It appears, and a long communication from the committee, containing an account of the late strike here and its cause, was read by the secretary. It wound up by saying that 'great changes are proceeding in public opinion here,' and that 'it is evident to all that the false Republic cannot last much longer in its present form,' and that 'unless the Socialistic movement shall reform it, a monarchy, or rather an oligarchy, will be established in a few years,'—which brings it very near. The platform adopted by the Congress was the old one, with which the world is tolerably familiar, and which may be said in general terms to consist in the overthrow of all existing institutions. The fundamental plank is, however, the abolition of private property, and the 'expropriation' of land, machinery, implements, capital, and all by the State or 'Commune.' The new and appalling difficulty in the way of human regeneration which this plan raises—that of getting the owners of property to give it up,—and which may be said to be the greatest ever encountered by reformers in any age, was not treated at all in the discussions. It seemed to be taken for granted that it could be overcome by full discussion, and that as soon as people found themselves 'cornered' in argument by a humanitarian logician they would incontinently surrender their goods."

"TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES."

The great labor involved in making suitable preparations for the Rochester Congress has prevented us from writing in advance, as usual in case of brief absences, the customary editorial article for this page. Our readers will pardon us, we trust, for venturing to supply the vacuum by reprinting the following condensed statement of our general religious position. The "Fifty Affirmations" occupied the first page of the first number of THE INDEX, January 1, 1870; and the "Modern Principles" filled the same page in the first number for the year 1871. Since that time, so many changes have occurred in the mail-list that these carefully studied papers will probably be new to a majority of our present subscribers; and we hope that even those who have already read them will read them once more. There is scarcely a word we should wish to change, were we to re-write these papers to-day; and it is our hope that the systematic unity of thought in Free Religion which we have here tried to bring out into clear view will be found to be the chief element of such value as may be attributed to these papers, which constitute the first of the Index Tracts.

Fifty Affirmations. RELIGION.

1. Religion is the effort of Man to perfect himself.
2. The root of religion is universal human nature.
3. Historical religions are all one, in virtue of this one common root.
4. Historical religions are all different, in virtue of their different historical origin and development.
5. Every historical religion has thus two distinct elements,—one universal or spiritual, and the other special or historical.
6. The universal element is the same in all historical religions; the special element is peculiar in each of them.
7. The universal and the special elements are equally essential to the existence of an historical religion.
8. The unity of all religions must be sought in their universal element.
9. The peculiar character of each religion must be sought in its special element.

RELATION OF JUDAISM TO CHRISTIANITY.

10. The idea of a coming "kingdom of heaven" arose naturally in the Hebrew mind after the decay of the Davidic monarchy, and ripened under foreign oppression into passionate longing and expectation.
11. The "kingdom of heaven" was to be a world-wide empire on this earth, both temporal and spiritual, to be established on the ruins of the great empires of antiquity by the miraculous intervention of Jehovah.
12. The Messiah or Christ was to reign over the "kingdom of heaven" as the visible deputy of Jehovah, who was considered the true sovereign of the Hebrew nation. He was to be a Priest-King,—the supreme pontiff or high-priest of the Hebrew Church, and absolute monarch of the Hebrew State.
13. The "apocalyptic literature" of the Jews exhibits the gradual formation and growth of the idea of the Messianic "kingdom of heaven."
14. All the leading features of the gospel doctrine concerning the "kingdom of heaven," the "end of the world," the "great day of judgment," the "coming of the Christ in the clouds of heaven," the "resurrection of the dead," the condemnation of the wicked, and the exaltation of the righteous, the "passing away of the heavens and the earth," and the appearance of a "new heaven and a new earth," were definitely formed and firmly fixed in the Hebrew mind, in the century before Jesus was born.
15. John the Baptist came preaching that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand." But he declared himself merely the forerunner of the Messiah.
16. Jesus also came preaching that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand," and announced himself as the Messiah or Christ.
17. Jesus emphasized the spiritual aspect of the Messianic kingdom; but, although he expected his throne to be established by the miraculous intervention of God, and therefore refused to employ human means in establishing it, he nevertheless expected to discharge the political functions of his office as King and Judge, when the fulness of time should arrive.
18. As a preacher of purely spiritual truth, Jesus perhaps stands at the head of all the great religious teachers of the past.
19. As claimant of the Messianic crown, and founder of Christianity as a distinct historical religion, Jesus shared the spirit of an unenlightened age, and stands on the same level with Gautama or Mohammed.
20. In the belief of his disciples, the death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus would not prevent the establishment of the "kingdom of heaven." His throne was conceived to be already established in the heavens; and the early Church impatiently awaited its establishment on earth at the "second coming of the Christ."

21. Christianity thus appears as simply the complete development of Judaism,—the highest possible fulfilment of the Messianic dreams based on the Hebrew conception of a "chosen people."

CHRISTIANITY.

22. Christianity is the historical religion taught in the Christian Scriptures, and illustrated in the history of the Christian Church.

23. It is a religion in virtue of its universal element; it is the Christian religion in virtue of its special element.

24. The Christian Scriptures teach, from beginning to end, that "Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God,"—that is, the Hebrew Messiah. This, the Christian Confession, was declared both by Jesus and the Apostles to be necessary to salvation or admission into the "kingdom of heaven."

25. The Christian Church, from its origin to the present day, has everywhere planted itself on faith in the Christian Confession, as its divinely appointed foundation,—the eternal "rock" against which the "gates of hell shall never prevail."

26. The Christian Confession gradually created on the one hand the theology, and on the other hand the hierarchy, of the Roman Catholic Church. The process was not, as is claimed, a corruption, but a natural and logical development.

27. The Church of Rome embodies Christianity in its most highly developed and perfect form, as a religion of authority based on the Christian Confession.

28. Protestantism is the gradual disintegration of Christianity, whether regarded theologically or ecclesiastically, under the influence of the free spirit of protest against authority.

29. "Liberal Christianity"—that is, democratic autocracy in religion—is the highest development of the free spirit of protest against authority which is possible within the Christian Church. It is, at the same time, the lowest possible development of faith in the Christ,—a return to the Christian Confession in its crudest and least developed form.

30. Christianity is the religion of Christians, and all Christians are believers in the Christ.

31. The Christian name, whatever else it may include, necessarily includes faith in Jesus as the Christ of God. Any other use of the name is abuse of it. Under some interpretation or other, the Christian Confession is the boundary line of Christianity.

FREE RELIGION.

32. The Protestant Reformation was the birth of Free Religion,—the beginning of the religious protest against authority within the confines of the Christian Church.

33. The history of Protestantism is the history of the growth of Free Religion at the expense of the Christian Religion. As love of freedom increases, reverence for authority decreases.

34. The completion of the religious protest against authority must be the extinction of faith in the Christian Confession.

35. Free Religion is emancipation from the outward law, and voluntary obedience to the inward law.

36. The great faith or moving power of Free Religion is faith in Man as a progressive being.

37. The great ideal end of Free Religion is the perfection or complete development of Man,—the race serving the individual, the individual serving the race.

38. The great practical means of Free Religion is the integral, continuous, and universal education of man.

39. The great law of Free Religion is the still, small voice of the private soul.

40. The great peace of Free Religion is spiritual oneness with the infinite one.

41. Free Religion is the natural outcome of every historical religion—the final unity, therefore, towards which all historical religions slowly tend.

RELATION OF CHRISTIANITY TO FREE RELIGION.

42. Christianity is identical with Free Religion so far as its universal element is concerned,—antagonistic to it so far as its special element is concerned.

43. The corner-stone of Christianity is faith in the Christ. The corner-stone of Free Religion is faith in Human Nature.

44. The great institution of Christianity is the Christian Church, the will of the Christ being its supreme law. The great institution of Free Religion is the coming Republic of the World, or Commonwealth of Man, the universal conscience and reason of mankind being its supreme organic law or constitution.

45. The fellowship of Christianity is limited by the Christian Confession; its brotherhood includes all subjects of the Christ and excludes all others. The fellowship of Free Religion is universal and free; it proclaims the Great Brotherhood of Man without limit or bound.

46. The practical work of Christianity is to Christianize the world,—to convert all souls to the Christ, and insure their salvation from the wrath of God. The practical work of Free Religion is to humanize the world,—to make the individual nobler here and now, and to convert the human race into a vast Co-operative Union devoted to universal ends.

47. The spiritual ideal of Christianity is the suppression of self and perfect imitation of Jesus the Christ. The spiritual ideal of Free Religion is the free development of self, and the harmonious education of all its powers to the highest possible degree.

48. The essential spirit of Christianity is that of self-humiliation at the feet of Jesus, and passionate devotion to his person. The essential spirit of Free Religion is that of self-respect and free self-devotion to great ideas. Christianity is prostrate on its face; Free Religion is erect on its feet.

49. The noblest fruit of Christianity is a self-sacrificing love of man for Jesus' sake. The noblest fruit of Free Religion is a self-sacrificing love of man for man's own sake.

50. Christianity is the faith of the soul's childhood; Free Religion is the faith of the soul's manhood. In the gradual growth of mankind out of Christianity into Free Religion, lies the only hope of the spiritual perfection of the individual and the spiritual unity of the race.

Modern Principles.

I. CHRISTIANITY AS A SYSTEM.

1. Regarded as to its universal element, Christianity is a beautiful but imperfect presentation of natural morality.

2. Regarded as to its special element, Christianity is a great completed system of faith and life,—a coherent body of doctrines logically developed and organized as an historical power by the Christian Church. It claims absolute control over the collective life of society and the outward and inward life of the individual. It rests this claim on the supernatural revelation of the will of God; that is, on the principle of DIVINE AUTHORITY.

3. The chief features of this system are the doctrines of the Fall of Adam, the Total Depravity of the human race, the Everlasting Punishment of the wicked, and salvation by Christ alone. Through the transgression of the first man, all human beings lie under the consuming wrath of God, and are condemned to an everlasting hell, from which the only escape is by the Atonement of Christ.

4. This system demands absolute and unreasoning submission from the human mind. It teaches that doubt is sin, and that disbelief is damnation. It everywhere condemns freedom of thought, and persecutes it in proportion to its power. It is the worst enemy of liberty, science, and civilization, because it is organized DESPAIR OF MAN.

II. FREE RELIGION AS A SYSTEM.

5. Free Religion is a great and growing system of ideas, hitherto very imperfectly developed, but destined to become embodied in a world-wide Commonwealth of Man. It will claim absolute control over the collective life of society and the outward and inward life of the individual. It will rest this claim on the natural perception of truth by the universal human race; that is, on the principle of HUMAN FREEDOM.

6. The chief features of this system are the supremacy of liberty in all matters of government, the supremacy of science in all matters of belief, the supremacy of morality in all matters of conduct, and the supremacy of benevolence in all social and personal relations. It puts the Church on the level of all other institutions, the Bible on the level of all other books, the Christ on the level of all other men, leaving them to stand or fall by their intrinsic merits or demerits.

7. This system encourages the largest activity of the human mind, and asks no assent that can be withheld. It is the best friend of progress of every kind, because it is organized FAITH IN MAN.

III. ANTAGONISM OF THE TWO SYSTEMS.

8. Between these two great systems there exists an absolute conflict of principles, aims, and methods. The one ruled the world in the Dark Ages of the past. The other will rule the world in the Light Ages of the future. Their battle-ground is the Twilight Age of the present.

9. Free Religion emphasizes the Unity of the Universe, the Unity of Mankind, the Unity of the Person, and the Unity of the Unities.

IV. THE UNITY OF THE UNIVERSE.

10. Nature is an organic, living whole. All things are in harmony as parts of a perfect cosmos. All phenomena, physical and spiritual, are correlated in the unity of a perfect order.

11. The laws of Nature are elements of one underlying, all-permeating, all-comprehensive system of Law. Fixed and inviolable, from eternity to eternity they know no change. The belief in miracle is an infinite delusion.

12. The forces of Nature are modes of one omnipresent Energy, illimitable, uncreatable, indestructible,—the cause of all metamorphoses and the life of all that lives.

13. Thus Nature is infinitely many in her phenomena, and absolutely one in her order, laws, and forces.

V. THE UNITY OF MANKIND.

14. The origin of the human race is one, in virtue of a common descent from inferior types of being.

15. The nature of the human race is one, in virtue of the universal possession, in varying degrees, of the same fundamental faculties.

16. The destiny of the human race is one, in virtue of a slow but constant progress towards a universal and perfect civilization.

17. The human race ought to be a political unit, as a universal Republic of Republics based on the principle that the liberty of the individual is absolute except as limited by the equal rights of all individuals.

18. The human race ought to be a social unit, as a universal Co-operative Union based on free industry and free commerce,—labor and capital being reconciled by the education of ignorance and the reformation of selfishness.

19. The human race ought to be a religious unit, as a universal Brotherhood of Man, based on faith in human nature and love for all human beings.

20. Thus the human race is one in origin, nature, and destiny; and it ought to be one politically, socially, and religiously.

VI. THE UNITY OF THE PERSON.

21. Every human being is an independent consciousness, manifesting itself on the one hand in numerous unlike faculties (sensation, perception, locomotion, passion, affection, will, reason, conscience, etc.), and manifesting itself on the other hand in the absolute unity of personality (the I).

22. Every human being ought to develop the unity of personality into the unity of character, based on the principle that the liberty of every faculty is absolute in the exercise of its natural function.

23. The unity of character requires that the Intellect shall make experience its point of departure, reason its road, knowledge its goal, and the love of truth its inspiration and guide; that it shall count all questions open that are not shut by positive demonstration; that it shall reject all answers which have no better basis than ignorant assumption or dogmatic authority; and that it shall seek answers to all questions through the patient study of universal Nature according to the laws of scientific thought.

24. The unity of character requires that the Conscience shall govern all personal action by absolute and universal moral ideas (truthfulness, justice, benevolence, purity, honor, integrity, self-respect); that it shall speak in all places and at all times with the voice of absolute command; that it shall shine like a sun that never sets, flooding the soul with the light of an ever-beautiful ideal; that it shall unsparingly rebuke every betrayal of the right, encourage fidelity to it by approving smiles, and waken deathless aspiration towards it by unveiling the eternal possibility of virtue; and that it shall make the welfare of all a private duty to each, thus consecrating the private life to the public good.

25. The unity of character requires that the Affections shall irradiate life in all its relations with the splendor of unselfish love; that they shall make manhood more manly and womanhood more womanly by blending them in one pure and happy home; that they shall dignify existence with noble friendships; that they shall deepen the joy and lighten the grief of others by respectful and tender sympathy; that they shall reverence the good and pity the evil in every human soul, and broaden out into a mighty and self-forgetful love of universal man.

26. The unity of character requires that the Will shall serve the conscience and reason, and know no other law; that it shall master the passions and confine them to their lawful functions; that it shall be incorruptible in this servanthip, and unconquerable in this mastership; and that thus, harmonizing the animal and the spiritual, it shall bring the entire man into harmony with the laws of Nature.

27. The unity of character requires that the Sentiments and Imagination shall soar to the beautiful and sublime, and never trail their wings in defiling mire; that they shall venerate the truly venerable, delight in the magnificence of universal Nature, and thrill to its mysterious life; that they shall recognize the infinitude of the unknown, and add to the clear insights of science the deep glow of poetry and the deeper reverence of worship.

28. Thus the individual is one in the unity of personality, and ought to be one in the unity of a free, powerful, and self-harmonized character.

VII. THE UNITY OF THE UNITIES.

29. The Unity of the Universe is repeated in miniature in the Ideal Unity of Mankind; and the Ideal Unity of Mankind is repeated in miniature in the Ideal Unity of the Person. The macrocosm is mirrored in the microcosm.

30. The great inspiration of the nineteenth century is faith in these ideal unities as possible in fact. Its faith in Man is part of its faith in universal Nature; and its faith in universal Nature includes and necessitates its faith in Man.

31. The great endeavor of the nineteenth century, half-conscious though it be, is thus to reproduce the eternal harmony of Nature in the life of the race and the life of the individual,—to create a civilization grounded on universal reverence for freedom, truth, and the equal rights of all mankind.

32. The Universe is Many in One, and One in Many. Such also will be Humanity, when its ideals shall have been realized in the world and in the soul. The national motto of America has become the great watchword of the ages—E PLURIBUS UNUM.

TWO VIEWS OF THE BIBLE.

In a discourse specially addressed to young converts in Boston, Rev. Joseph Cook is reported to have said, "The Bible is the only book which will bear perfect translation into life. Shakespeare drips with inculcations that would not be fit for any one to immerse himself in. The same may be said of Milton, Plato, and others. We may take the whole inculcation of the Bible and find it healthful. There is no other book which you would be willing to have for your pillow when dying. Its whole inculcation, if absorbed into civilization, would work well."

On the same day that I read this report of Mr. Cook's lecture in a Boston newspaper, there came to me a circular containing a notice of a new freethought journal to be published in New York, in which the editor says, "I have long been of the opinion that the Bible is the one great obstacle to human happiness. To this book I attribute nine-tenths of the evil, the ignorance, and the wide-spread misery among the nations of the earth at the present day. I look upon it as a work of fiction emanating from selfish and designing brains, and with none but selfish and evil intentions."

We have in these utterances the two extremes of popular thought in America on the character of the Bible. Yet, far apart as these opinions are, one of them is the product of the other,—if not by the genesis of direct descent, at least by force of repulsion and reaction. That is, the extreme negative view of the Bible, which regards it as a fraudulent and evil book, would never have found any lodgement in the human mind, had it not been for the extreme Orthodox view, which regards the Bible as an exceptionally inspired book revealing infallibly from beginning to end the perfect will of God. Had the Bible been left in the position of other books, as a human composition—as, in the main, the natural literary product of the Hebrew people for many centuries of their history,—it may be safely said that we should never have heard the opinion expressed in this nineteenth century, that it is an imposture emanating from designing brains and the cause of most of the ignorance and misery existing among mankind. It is only the extraordinary claims made for the Bible which have led to the extraordinary attacks upon it. A book of which it is alleged that it contains for the whole human race an infallible rule of belief and practice, that its whole inculcation, in every part and particular, is true and pure and healthful, and would work well if absorbed into civilization,—a book for which such claim is made certainly challenges atten-

Mon. The claim is a challenge to the human mind to inquire and judge.

But when the human mind began to inquire, and as a result of inquiry began to question the claim, the ecclesiastics rushed to the defence of the threatened authority of the book, not always with a more learned inquiry, but with the power of ecclesiastical and civil law. They summoned the terrors of the Inquisition to their aid, and used all the spiritual appliances of hope and fear to keep the Bible in its place. Hence, naturally, the doubters and deniers of the claim began to transfer their hatred of the means used in defence of the Bible to the book itself, as if that were responsible for all the guilty instrumentalities employed in its favor, and as if its authors were somehow in collusion with the ecclesiastics who defended them, for the purpose of impeding science, and keeping the people in ignorance and superstition. And this is the mood of mind which the New York free-thinking editor inherits to-day.

But a later and broader scholarship has set aside both of these extreme views of the Bible as wholly unfounded. If critical research into any part of human history has settled anything, it has proved and settled, beyond a question, that the Bible is not an all-perfect book; that it is not an infallible record either as to matters of historical fact, or matters of intellectual truth, or matters of moral precept; that it is a book which has to be read, not blindly, but with reason and conscience alert to sift its errors from its truths. And the same research has proved that the book is no imposture, and no evil work of designing men. It has shown that the Bible is not one book, but many books,—of various contents, by numerous authors, in different languages and dialects, and covering a period of many centuries; that it is, in fine, the natural literary record of a people with a special genius for religion: not a heaven-born book nor a hell-born book, but an earth-born book,—a book born of humanity and sharing humanity's infirmities and aspirations; born of the human soul and bearing a faithful record of the struggles of the human soul out of earthiness towards moral and spiritual good.

W. J. P.

Communications.

A TIMELY AND NOBLE EXTRACT.

MR. ABBOT:—

In connection with those principles so forcibly enunciated by yourself, which are to come before the First Annual Congress of Liberals for consideration, and, I trust, consequent action, I should be much pleased if you could find space in THE INDEX for the following remarks by Prof. Ridpath, from his recently issued History of the United States. I think that you and your readers will agree that both the sentiments and the language in which they are clothed are very fine.

On page 620, in his sketch of the Centennial Exposition, occurs the following paragraph: "No structure of Fairmount Park was more characteristic of the epoch than the Woman's Pavilion. The building and its contents illustrated one of the grandest tendencies of American civilization,—the complete emancipation of woman. In ancient times her chains were forged; the Middle Age re-riveted them upon her; the Modern Era—even the Reformation—has mocked her with the semblance and the show of liberty. America sets her free, and lifts her to the seat of honor."

The concluding chapter is so good that I cannot resist the temptation to quote it entire:—

"What, then, of the outlook for the American Republic? What is to be the destiny of this vigorous, aggressive, self-governing Anglo-American race? How will the picture, so well begun, be completed by the annals of posterity? Is it the sad fate of humanity, after all its struggles, toils, and sighing, to turn forever round and round in the same beaten circle, climbing the long ascent from the degradation of savage life to the heights of national renown only to descend again into the fen-lands of despair? Is Lord Byron's gloomy picture of the rise and fall of nations indeed a true portrayal of the order of the world?"

"Here is the moral of all human tales,—
'Tis but the same rehearsal of the past;
First freedom, and then glory; when that fails,
Wealth, vice, corruption, barbarism at last;
And History with all her volumes vast Hath but one page!"

Or has the human race, breaking the bonds of its servitude, and escaping at last from its long imprisonment, struck out across the fields of sublime possibility the promised pathway leading to the final triumph? There are still doubts and fears, perplexities, anxieties, and sometimes anguish, arising in the soul of the philanthropist as he turns his gaze to the future. But there are hopes also, grounds of confidence, auspicious omens, tokens of the substantial victory of truth, inspirations of faith welling up in the heart of the watcher as he scans the dappled horizon of the coming day.

"As to present achievement, the American people have far surpassed the expectations of the fathers.

The visions and dreams of the Revolutionary patriots have been eclipsed by the lustre of actual accomplishment. The territorial domains of the Republic enclose the grandest belt of forest, valley, and plain, that the world has in it. Since the beginning of time, no other people have possessed such a territory, so rich in resources, so varied in products, so magnificent in physical aspect. Soil and climate, the distribution of woods and lakes and rivers, the interposition of mountain ranges, and the fertility of valley and prairie, here contribute to give to man a many-sided and powerful development. Here he finds bays for his shipping, rivers for his steamers, fields for his plough, iron for his forge, gold for his cupidity, landscapes for his pencil, sunshine enough for song, and snow enough for courage. Nor has the Anglo-American failed to profit by the advantages of his surroundings. He has planted a free government on the largest and most liberal scale known in history. He has espoused the cause of liberty and right. He has fought like a hero for the freedom and equality of all men. He has projected a civilization which, though as yet but dimly traced in outlines, is the vastest and grandest in the world. Better than all, he believes in the times to come. So long as man is anxious about the future, the future is secure. Only when he falls into apathy, sleeps at his post, and cares no longer for the morrow, is the world in danger of relapse and barbarism.

"To the thoughtful student of history, several things seem necessary to the perpetuity and complete success of American institutions. The first of these is the prevalence of the IDEA OF NATIONAL UNITY. Of this spoke Washington in his Farewell Address, warning his countrymen in solemn words to preserve and defend that government which constituted them one people. Of this wrote Hamilton and Adams. For this pleaded Webster in his great orations. Upon this the far-seeing statesmen of the present day, rising above the strifes of party and the turmoils of war, plant themselves as the one thing vital in American politics.

"The idea that the United States are one nation, and not thirty-eight nations, is the grand cardinal doctrine of a sound political faith. State pride and sectional attachment are natural passions in the human breast, and are so near akin to patriotism as to be distinguished from it only in the court of a higher reason. But there is a nobler love of country,—a patriotism that rises above all places and sections; that knows no Country, no State, no North, no South, but only native land; that claims no mountain slope; that clings to no river-bank; that worships no range of hills; but lifts the aspiring eye to a continent redeemed from barbarism by common sacrifices and made sacred by the shedding of kindred blood. Such a patriotism is the cable and sheet-anchor of our hope.

"A second requisite for the preservation of our American institutions is THE UNIVERSAL SECULAR EDUCATION OF THE PEOPLE. Monarchies govern their subjects by authority and precedent; republics by right reason and free will. Whether one method or the other will be better, turns wholly upon the intelligence of the governed. If the subject have not the knowledge and discipline necessary to govern himself, it is better that a king, in whom some skill in the science of government is presupposed, should rule him. As between two sordid evils, the rational tyranny of the intelligent few is preferable to the furious and irrational tyranny of the ignorant many. No force which has proved among men, impelling to bad action, inspiring to crime, overturning order, tearing away the bulwarks of liberty and right, and converting civilization into a waste, has been so full of evil and so powerful to destroy as a blind, ignorant, and factious democracy. A republic without intelligence—even a high degree of intelligence—is a paradox and an impossibility. What means that principle of the Declaration of Independence which declares the consent of the governed to be the true foundation of all just authority? What kind of "consent" is referred to? Manifestly not the passive and unresisting acquiescence of the mind which, like the potter's clay, receives whatever is impressed upon it; but that active, thinking, resolute, conscious, personal consent which distinguishes the true freeman from the puppet. When the people of the United States rise to the heights of this noble and intelligent self-assertion, the occupation of the party leader—most despicable of all the tyrants—will be gone forever; and in order that the people may ascend to that high plane, the means by which intelligence is fostered, right reason exalted, and a calm and rational public opinion produced, must be universally secured. The public FREE SCHOOL is the fountain whose streams shall make glad all the lands of liberty. We must educate or perish.

"A third thing necessary to the perpetuity of American liberties is TOLERATION,—toleration in the broadest and most glorious sense. In the colonial times, intolerance embittered the lives of our fathers. Until the present day the baleful shadow has been upon the land. The proscriptive vices of the Middle Age have flowed down with the blood of the race and tainted the life that now is, with a suspicion and distrust of freedom. Liberty in the minds of men has meant the privilege of agreeing with the majority. Men have desired freethought, but fear has stood at the door. It remains for the United States to build a highway, broad and free, into every field of liberal inquiry, and to make the poorest man who walks therein more secure in life and reputation than the soldier who sleeps behind the rampart. Proscription has no part nor lot in the American system. The stake, the gibbet, and the rack, thumb-screws, sword, and pillory, have no place on this side of the sea. Nature is diversified; so are human faculties, beliefs, and practices. Essential freedom is the right to differ; and that right must be sacredly respected. Nor must the privilege of dissent be conceded with coldness and disdain, but openly, cordially, and with good will. No loss of rank, abatement of character, or ostracism from society must darken the pathway of the humblest of the seekers after truth. The right of freethought, free inquiry, and free speech is as clear as the noonday, and boundless as the air and ocean. Without a full and cheerful recognition of this right, America is only a name, her glory a dream, her institutions a mockery.

"The fourth idea, essential to the welfare and stability of the Republic, is THE NOBILITY OF LABOR. It is the mission of the United States to ennoble toil and honor the toiler. In other lands, to labor has been considered the lot of serfs and peasants; to gather the fruits and consume them in luxury and war, the business of the great. Since the medieval times, European society has been organized on the basis of a nobility and a people. To be a nobleman was to be distinguished from the people; to be one of the people was to be forever debased from nobility. Thus has been set on human industry the stigma of perpetual disgrace. Something of this has been transmitted to the new civilization in the West; a certain disposition to renew the old order of lord and laborer. Let the odious distinction perish; the true lord is the laborer and the true laborer the lord. It is the genius of American institutions, in the fulness of time, to wipe the last opprobrious stain from the brow of toil, and to crown the toiler with the dignity, lustre, and honor of a full and perfect manhood.

"The scroll of the century is rolled together. The work is done! Peace to the memory of the fathers! Green be the graves where sleep the warriors, patriots, and sages! Calm be the resting-place of all the brave and true! Gentle be the summer rains on famous fields where armies met in battle! Forgotten be the animosities and heart-burnings of the strife! Sacred be the trusts committed to our care, and bright the visions of the coming ages!"

I think that the readers of THE INDEX will pardon the length of this extract in consideration of its many excellences.

E. C. WALKER.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Oct. 16, 1877.

AN UNHEEDED PHASE OF THE WOMAN QUESTION.

CANASTOTA, N. Y., Oct. 13, 1877.

DEAR SIR:—

In what I am going to say, I wish it to be understood that for more than thirty years I have upheld in the lecture-room, and by my pen, the entire equality of the sexes,—the right of woman to the same franchises in the "body politic" reached and claimed by man; that the measure of capacity is the measure of sphere to man and woman; that religion and morality are without sex; and hence all the highest and best that may pertain to humanity is the inalienable birthright of all, irrespective of sex, race, or color. Having thus given my bill of rights, I wish to propound some questions, suggested in part by an admirable article of Mr. B. F. Underwood in THE INDEX of Sept. 27.

He says: "Man may do with impunity in every part of this enlightened nation that which, if woman does it is to her worse than death. And it is considered a matter of course. It is something to which there is scarcely an objection, and yet it is simply an implication that woman is not the equal of man, else it would never be that that which shall bring disgrace and social infamy to one may be tolerated in the other without anything derogatory to his character." The italics are mine.

Is this a fair inference? Does it not rather imply, whether justly or not, that woman exercises a higher moral activity? That, despite of a false position and the oppressions of the long ages, she has, better than her brother, seized upon and adhered to the purer moralities, and has thus taught the world to expect more from her, and that, when she falls, she falls like Lucifer, from the high level she has claimed for herself.

Does not the priest stand in the same relation? Do we not demand of him, rightfully, purer moralities than we exact from the man of mere fashion? Again: when men insist upon the purity or chasteness of the women of their households, do they expect this from base or selfish motives? Rather is it not a question by itself, and may not this demand for moral excellence in woman have really been one method of preserving in the human mind the best intuitions of holiness?

Does a manly man ever absolve himself from the severity of moral obligations? Are not those who are lax in this respect the ignorant and the depraved by heredity? Is it necessary that a human being shall be a priest or a woman before he is qualified to give personally his testimony to the excellence of a chaste life? By the emphasis with which a man insists upon the high moralities in his family, has he not given his testimony in favor of them?

Are the moral aberrations of a man equally destructive to the family as those of the woman? If she sin, does not her crime strike, not only a blow at the marriage relation, but also at the rights of property, and the genuineness of paternity? And therefore does not a bad life in her tell worse upon society than a bad life in him?

I am not defending unmanly lives and immoralities in men; I am simply wishing to ask about what may rightfully be demanded of women.

Does not an immoral woman invalidate the rights of her child?

Is it desirable to preserve genealogies?

Is it desirable that offspring should be heirs of property?

If so, is it not doubly a duty to the woman to keep the family escutcheon free from blot?

Are we to see our old corner-stones of morality swept away because some declare that certain sins are no worse in woman than in man? I contend that, as society is now organized, they are worse. In the sight of God, in the light of eternal issues, all sin is sin, and we are not in a condition to grade it; but I prefer that my sex should adhere to the austerities of the virtues rather than loosen the bands that hold the family together. It is to be fervently wished that the other sex should come up to our standard, not that we should go over to theirs.

I suppose, when we were all troglodytes, the strong man drove marauders out of his cave with fist and club,—and we are not yet far beyond this savagery; but if this was the way that women took their moral suasion, and learned indirectly the sanctities of the person, society has grown up with certain ideas of the responsibilities, graces, and requirements of her sex, which I believe may be better enlarged than neutralized. It may be that the cave life had its attractions; but as civilization does not tend that way, the surest method for us to assert our equality with the other sex is, not to abate one iota of our own moral acquirements for ourselves, but strive to so enlighten the other sex that they will learn that the laws of paternity are mutual.

ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH,
Pastor Independent Church of Canastota.

[We are glad to find these very important and true positions insisted on by a lady; for they need emphasis in any thorough discussion of the "woman question," and yet seem ungracious if urged by a man.—ED.]

THE LESSONS OF THE STRIKES.

CASTLETON, Ill., Oct. 8, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is a source of much satisfaction to myself to note the interest that is being taken by so many writers upon the labor question. As E. L. Crane says, "The subject grows"; and from the comparison of the different views held by these writers, I am persuaded that there is yet abundance of room for it still to develop into greater proportion.

The contrast of views upon this question seem wide in the extreme. For instance, one will applaud the action of the strikers and the license of riot—revolution in their eyes,—for the reason that it elevates the dignity of labor, and calls into view the injustices which the laboring class, as a whole, have to bear; against which the laborer, in his attempt to use force to free himself, is entitled to as much praise as though he had, as a soldier in time of war, simply performed his duty in the attempt to gain a victory over the enemy.

Another writer, whose sense of justice towards all parties, from laborers to capitalists, seems in no want of keenness, sees naught but the most serious mistake in the late strike. The remedy for an existing evil, he thinks, is not to be brought about by the use of mob force; and to sanction or applaud in any degree, or any form, anything of the kind, will only tend to increase the instability of capital; compelling it ultimately to seek opportunities for investment where its security from accidents will seem best assured. To him the strike is a strike against justice, reason, and the interests of the laborer, as well as against capital, which suffers least of all and only for the time being; as in the end her demands are made good by the additional levying of taxes, the payment of which falls upon those who have never sanctioned or countenanced any act tending to array each against the other.

Looking at the labor question from my own standpoint, it seems that the want of unity in our views of this question results from the manner in which we have educated ourselves for its observation.

As man educates himself with a view to recognize facts, what appears to him as the greatest and most weighty, as a matter of course, will take precedence of all others. So with myself in viewing capital, for in it exists the providence of the laborer,—the means that has civilized and is still civilizing the human race; a minister, as it were, doing an outside service for humanity, greatly needed, and one that demands acknowledgment just as much as the religion which it always affords us so much pleasure to acknowledge, having served the within to the purpose of humanizing and socializing the race.

Capital being the lever, the aggregate energy or force of the laboring class is the fulcrum upon which this lever works, has worked, and will work for all future time. The refusal to labor here is to deny the means which capital must ever employ in order both to promote commerce and civilization.

It is often said that commerce is more effectual in its civilizing influences than religion, for the reason, undoubtedly, that it brings all portions of the human race to know each other by personal contact. If this be true, and it seems to me that no sane man can deny it, then it is easy to perceive that the labor which has built up the wealth of any nation to that degree that it gave the requisite stimulus for commercial intercourse has been the real missionary of the age.

It is probable that an undue weight of labor falls upon those whose means of knowing its precise value is so limited, that no other alternative exists than to accept its conditions. The men who have built our canals and our railroads—who have performed the heaviest part of the labor in their construction,—have been those less qualified to set a just value upon their labor in the degree of the obscurity to their minds of the utility attendant upon the completion of such enterprises.

But suppose the case to have been opposite, and that every person who has shouldered the greatest burdens of labor had been qualified to write essays upon the utility of canals, railroads, and commercial intercourse; what time must have elapsed before such intercourse could have been realized!

My own opinion is, that the labor which enables capital to realize the quickest return promotes the welfare of mankind in general, in the same degree that it insures the profits of labor.

The solving of this problem—how to reconcile labor with capital—rests mainly upon two conditions: the education of all laboring classes, and the abrogation of all laws tending to create or justify monopolies in whatever form. These conditions once secured, the attitude of the laboring classes will be such as to encourage the hope of justice, if not, in fact, to realize it. So here we have another argument for compulsory or universal education; for verily, it gives man the key that opens the door which, in his ignorance, he vainly attempts to demolish by using brute force,—by which he not only damages himself, but those who already have burdens of their own to carry, and to whom it is rank injustice to add more.

Yours for justice in education,
C. W. NEWTON.

THE "RIGHT OF RIOT."

EDITOR INDEX:—

I am not yet at rest on the question of the "right of riot."

Any noisily disturbance of the public peace, in which several individuals are engaged, may justly be called a riot; while a political revolution is, briefly, a material change in the constitution of a government. But I cannot see that this distinction has anything whatever to do with the right or wrong of riot. The simple question is this: Are ten men, or a hundred, or a thousand, ever justified in resisting by force an apparent wrong? If such action is justifiable, then it makes no difference whether this forcible resistance to a controlling power (governmental or judicial) be carried on by a "Boston Tea Party," or by a set of railroad employes a hundred years later. Looking at the matter in this light, Mr. Babcock's comparison does not strike me as being particularly "wild."

I challenge any one to dispute the right, at certain times, of "resort to private war for private purposes." Make the case your own. Suppose a gang of burglars should conspire to enter and rob your house; would you choose mildly to submit to their depredations? Not at all. And yet the opposite course would most certainly involve you in a sort of "private war."

Suppose, further, that a deep-laid plan has been matured into action, whereby several men are robbed, not openly, but secretly, of large amounts little by little. Is not resistance to such injustice quite as natural and praiseworthy as in the first instance? But the "private war" thus inaugurated, would not, in either case, be wholly for "private purposes." Never yet was a blow dealt in the name of justice, though the hand were weak, and the issue trifling, that its power was not felt outside of individuals, as a help and a blessing to all mankind.

If "in all civilized countries," such a thing as "private war" is "justly regarded as a high crime," then may I be permitted to emigrate at once to some savage land where the innate sense of right in the human soul has not become so dulled by an overwhelming deference to the "best policy," and a cringing subservience to might as to allow men to sit like slaves at the feet of power.

In heaven's name, if there is anything in life worth living for, let us not forget that, everywhere and under all circumstances, "RESISTANCE TO TYRANTS IS OBEDIENCE TO GOD!"

B. HARVEY.

BOSTON, Oct. 14.

[There is evidently a strong temptation to disregard the well-established distinctions we have already pointed out, since it is impossible to overthrow them. But we must be so impolite as to insist that putting down rioters, who are forcibly preventing industrious men from working, and forcibly preventing all travel on public thoroughfares, is precisely that "resistance to (mob) tyrants" which is "obedience to God." It is a melancholy confusion of thought to see no difference between such infamous acts as these and that justifiable self-defence against murderers or burglars which the law itself sanctions. We are perfectly willing to refer the case to our readers without further argument, for which we have at present no leisure.—ED.]

MISS ANTHONY'S ADDRESS.

It was a startling conviction which took possession of me, upon the occasion of Susan B. Anthony's late address to working-men, that she herself is not wholly insensible to well-digested instincts of coquetry.

She had fairly launched her subject into the deep waters of political discontent, graciously but inevitably weaving facts and figures relating to woman's rights into its meshes, when (at a point in which she divined that possibly, and more than likely, she would be misrepresented) she hesitated, and waved her hand in a half-entreating yet authoritative manner toward the "reporter," with the remark, "Don't mistake that." It was a gesture of graceful deprecation and womanly shrinking from abusive criticism,—which, I may as well add here, had its reward, in the next day's issue of the daily paper, of fair and just statements.

That reporter knows perfectly well, no matter what he may say, that, in the guise of a strong-minded fanatic, Susan B. Anthony is at heart a confiding, timid woman,—that beneath that armor of steel lies hidden a womanly woman's misgivings.

After all that has been asserted in proof of woman's graceful concessions and arts of pleasing having their outgrowth in inherited and life-long servitude, I prefer to think, and to believe with deep religious fervor, that these are gifts inborn in her nature,—that self-denial, tender compassion, long-suffering, and loving companionship abide with her from the laws of her being,—and that this power, which now permeates the domestic circle will, when conveyed to broader fields of citizenship, control the nation, overshadowing its discordant elements with the same influence by which the household is held in abeyance, neither chopping down trees nor drawing them to the door, peradventure, but with politic provision utilizing such material to the best interests of the family.

In every condition of life the mother's dispensation is recognized as next to that of the Supreme in beneficence. Why, then, in the government of nations, should she be represented by proxy, while this jewel of priceless value lies mouldering beneath the conservatism of the age?

Upon the whole, I was well pleased that this slight indication of kinship in our relations with one another should have been forced upon me,—and from such a quarter!—proving that conditions of oppression, injustice, and calumny have no power to change the mutual dependence of the sexes,—of deference and courtesy one toward the other.

An enthusiastic lady remarked that she fairly longed for the time to come when she should have the privilege of standing in the street-cars. But why stand? Why should the woman who holds a vote stand? In place of standing, she would be enthroned upon velvet, with courtiers kneeling at her feet. Modern knights of chivalry would vie with each other in assisting her from the street-car. Who talks of standing when equal rights are distributed? Meantime let the courtesies of life be continued though the heavens fall; let the bulwarks which hedge in the divinity of womanhood be preserved. And while the gentle dew of her influence falls upon administrations of law and equity, let her in no wise yield her just dues of reverence and courtesy to fancied views of independence, or in her zeal reject homage paid to her beauty and delicacy,—which compact between the sexes constitutes the very safeguard of civilization.

CONSERVATRIX.

TOLEDO, O.

A NEW PRAYER.

In a meditative mood, the other day, while lying in a hammock and enjoying the delicious languor that steals over one after emerging from a salt-water bath, the light of other days broke upon my mental vision, and I thought, among other things, of the "prayers of my youth." At that moment the baker halted at the door, and shot past me with a basket containing two loaves of fresh bread,—one white and one brown one.

Next to the pleasure of eating a thing you like, is the privilege of smelling it. In my meditative mood, the odor of this fresh, sweet bread was all the food I cared for. So with eyes upon that basket and its contents, I murmured slowly and thoughtfully: "Give us this day our daily bread." Suddenly, out from the kitchen window flashed a white hand and arm,—they were at work, for I noticed traces of flour upon them. I heard the jingle of silver, the baker puckered up his lips and turned away, whistling, "Put me in my little bed" (and I must confess he looked sleepy), leaving me still "at my prayers." "Give us this day our daily bread." Now that bread—I mean that which I saw in the basket—was paid for by the industry, thrift, and general "level-headedness" of the owner of that white hand and arm. If there be a heavenly bake-shop, she never got a cracker from it. Ah, "spiritual bread," you say, it means. Well, when you prove to me that a man or woman can have "spirits" of any kind without something in the stomach to generate them, I'll be ready with you to say: "Give us this day our daily bread." But I still kept "at my prayers." "Thy will be done." How can it be otherwise, when God is omnipotent? "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us." Holy-toity, that is a clever notion, upon my word! "As we forgive those who trespass against us"! How many of us, think you, "in the course of justice should see salvation," were our trespasses to be forgiven only in proportion as we forgive those who trespass against us? "Lead us not into temptation." If he do, will it be our fault? "Deliver us from evil." "Good" and "evil" are both notes on the same key-board. One cannot exist without the other. Once "delivered" from evil, all progress must be at an end. This very "delivery" for which men pray is the very one thing above all things that they ought not to ask for.

The storm created the steamship, pestilence is the parent of health, the sting of pain teaches us mercy, night makes day comprehensible. The naughty Romans and Jews are to be thanked for all our "saints," ay, for our very "Savior." Life is simply action and reaction, and we can't kick unless we have something to kick against. "For thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory for ever and ever." Of course there is no denying that, if he created everything, he must own everything.

But I still continued my prayers, only now they were addressed to those who need them most, and ran somewhat as follows: "Thou mortal who art upon earth, undefiled be thy name; thy prosperity come; thy justice be done on earth as if it were a heaven; share each day thy daily bread; forgive men their trespasses that they may be moved to forgive thee thine; go thou not into temptation, but be ever mindful of evil; for thine is the punishment, the joy, and the sorrow, come one day or many, amen."

INGERSOLL LOCKWOOD.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24, 1877.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of the Annual Meeting, 1872. 35c. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,

Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD (MATTHEW). Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Blazing Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tail Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 1 vol.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	5.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fables".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 4 vols., each.....	1.00
Compiling—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	5.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Bahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodor Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	5.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. I.

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq. Edited by Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	13.00
KERKE (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.50
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 4 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.50
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 4 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. E.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Steady Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	5.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Land.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eckoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Bampton Lectures.....	4.50
Phases of Faith, or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.90
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.0

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.). Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in the Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.25
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BESSMER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D.F.). The Old Faith and the New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 4 vols.....	7.50
The Last Days of Pompeii. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W.M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAYER'S (MRS. OKILLA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	4.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Biting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banisterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	5.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	5.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX.

231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1877.

WHOLE No. 411.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

READ CAREFULLY the report of the Rochester Congress in this issue, and ask yourself whether the movement which there took definite shape is not destined in time to sweep the country before it.

AT A MEETING of the Manhattan Liberal Club, in New York city, October 19, at which Professor A. L. Rawson was chairman and Mr. Porter C. Bliss secretary, it was voted by the Club to declare itself auxiliary to the National Liberal League, take out a charter, and elect as delegates to the Rochester Congress the following persons: D. M. Bennett, Hugh B. Brown, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Porter C. Bliss, and Theron C. Leland. This action was reported at Rochester.

PRESIDENT HAYES repeats the evil precedent of issuing a Thanksgiving proclamation in the name of the nation. He has no right to do this. Nobody goes to church because the President advises him to; but color is thus given to the dangerous and false claim that "this is a Christian government." It is strange blindness not to see through the strategic policy of the Church in thus getting State sanction for its creed and cultus. Liberals ought not to be so easily duped as to regard such customs as innocuous.

OF ALL the speakers at the Rochester Congress, none made a more favorable impression on the great audience than Mrs. Clara Neymann, who came from New York city to express the sympathy of our German fellow-liberals in the new political movement. Possessed of a charming personal address, and uniting transparent earnestness, unaffected simplicity, and delicate modesty in her manner, she spoke with such evidence of true culture and high ethical purpose as captivated all her hearers, and brought down the house with deafening applause on the conclusion of her thoughtful paper—which, by the way, we have received for publication in THE INDEX. Mrs. Neymann is desirous to enter the lecture field on behalf of liberalism, and her manifest ability to render important service in its cause makes us trust that she will receive invitations to lecture from all quarters. Her address for the present is 97 Maiden Lane, New York city.

REFERRING to the three monarchical factions which plot together to compass the overthrow of the French republic, Gambetta said in his famous Belleville speech: "The hand that draws them together is the hand of clericalism. It is the Ultramontane conspiracy in which lies the greatest peril of all; the one danger at which the country may fairly tremble; the faction which puts the Church before France, and which would set Europe in flames to restore the temporal power. Their last hope is in France. Austria has shaken off the yoke of the concordat. Italy has emancipated herself. Spain itself has dealt blows at the Ultramontanes. Germany wars upon them. Holland and England stand fast against their encroachments. Their sole hope is France, and it is they who seek by the act of the 16th of May to subdue France to their will and to make of this great country the tool of the Vatican. What Europe most dreads at this moment is to see France fall into the hands of the agents of Ultramontanism, of theocracy, and of the syllabus. . . . We have said before now—clericalism, that is the enemy. It belongs to universal suffrage to declare—summoning the world to look upon its work—clericalism, that is what we have vanquished."

THE NECESSITY of the second plank of the Rochester platform is illustrated by this paragraph in the Tribune of Nov. 1: "The country papers in South Carolina are, with one consent, demanding the re-establishment of the whipping-post. The argument is that larceny, highway robbery, and burglary have become so common in all parts of the State that no man's property is safe. The chickens in the coop, the corn in the field, the very clothes that a man pulls off at night in the expectation of putting them on again in the morning, become alike the prey of the midnight prowlers; and the cry comes up from all quarters: 'Give us what Virginia and Delaware already have—the whipping-post.' It is a popular theory in South Carolina that it is utterly impossible for a negro to be honest, and the whipping-post, if introduced, will be used exclusively as an instrument for intimidating and punishing the blacks. It is easy to forecast the results of such an experiment in a State where the color and race lines are so sharply drawn. The whipping-post would open the way for a merciless system of repression and cruelty. To its credit be it said that the Charleston News and Courier does not advocate so extreme a measure. It insists that the same ends can be better accomplished by other means, which will not be open to the same objections. It argues that labor is more distasteful to the criminal than the lash, and that he will prefer a whipping to a place in the chain gang."

THE NEW YORK Telegram, one of the most widely circulated daily journals in the United States, had the following very significant editorial notice of the Rochester Congress:—

The Liberal League Congress.

This is evidently the epoch of congresses. In some respects the most important of all these gatherings is that of the liberals at Rochester, which tends to mark the strong tendency of the times toward liberal feeling, as opposed to sectarianism and fanaticism. Every cultured gentleman, at the present day, is inclined to be liberal in his general views, although he may be distinctively Orthodox in religious matters. In fact, true culture and true liberalism now go hand in hand. The immense strength of the purely liberal party was hardly suspected until the congress at Rochester was convened, and the strictly Orthodox people—people whose views are narrow and antiquated—were inclined to look upon the party with a certain amount of unmerited contempt. The truth is, however, that liberalism is revolutionizing society, and when the effects of this movement are wholly ignored by bodies of people professing a religious creed, the evil consequences fall directly upon these short-sighted bodies. The Liberal League has shown, once for all, that in this country the progress of an enlightened policy, both in religious and national affairs, is bound to receive a strong support from a large community of citizens. The day is past when freethought was spoken of as inimical to elevated sentiment and religious faith. To-day the philosopher is on the side of investigation, and, when reason is outraged, he demands justice. Whatever may be our religion, we have no right to refuse him this much, we have no right to ignore the central spirit of the age. The effects of the Rochester Congress may be deplored by a certain class of people; but men of large views have watched its progress with honest satisfaction.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

- LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
- JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
- PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie E. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
- MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Brassch.
Issued to Anton Brassch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clausen, and Fred. Brassch.
- CHelsea, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
- STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grunlike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
- DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
- PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Meudum, Eliza Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
- PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
- BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. Abbot; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
- NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korne, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Glitz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
- TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
- HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Dr. Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James B. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
- CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
- NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Snow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. B. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
- ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunson.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
- NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erring, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld.
- ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Greagg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
- TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. B. B. W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
- NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

It is, of course, contrary to all recognized canons of taste to say that the pictures to be seen in Belgium soon tire. The frequent repetition of one treatment of the crucifixion, by however great masters, is annoying, and I should think must drive any but those whose souls are steeped in Catholic ideas into a more pronounced rejection of all that that representation implies. It was with growing feelings of strong distaste that one of us sat before a picture of this sort, and asked the attendant by whom it was painted, "Monsieur," was the answer, "c'est le 'Dieu Mourant' par—" These words at once gave form and definiteness to vague thoughts, and they took shape then and there somewhat as follows:—

- "I think if God had ever died
"Twere not like God to perish thus;
No spear had pierced a fleshly side,
God had not bled, sweat, groaned like us.
- "No tender women, stooping round,
Had kissed his pallid parted lips;
No shoddy forms had burst the ground,
In such half night of brief eclipse.
- "Nay, rather as some central star,
The fount of life, and thought and light,
Might send one flash of flame afar,
And then go out in lasting night.
- "God would have stood above the sky
Once, but then all revealed to man,
And every human thought and eye
Had turned on Him, while Nature, was
- "With presence of the coming gloom,
Had stayed her force; then God had said,
"I am no more," and with the doom Himself and all that is were dead."

—London Examiner.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

REPORT OF THE

FIRST ANNUAL CONGRESS,

HELD AT

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 26, 27, and 28, 1877.

[Specially reported for THE INDEX by F. P. Smith.]

The First Annual Congress of the National Liberal League was commenced in Corinthian Hall, Rochester, New York, on Friday, Oct. 26. The sessions continued three days, and were closed Sunday evening, Oct. 28. The attendance was large, and grew larger at each session; and a great degree of enthusiasm and interest was shown throughout. A report of the entire proceedings may be condensed as follows:—

Friday's Proceedings.

At half-past ten o'clock, Friday morning, the delegates and members, together with many others interested in the advance of liberal ideas, assembled and were called to order by the Rev. Newton M. Mann, pastor of the Unitarian Church of Rochester. He stated that probably those present were united neither upon religion nor politics. While he approved of the principles set forth by the association, he doubted the wisdom of the methods proposed; at the same time he welcomed the visitors to his beautiful city, which needed only the influences of liberalism to make it a paradise. In conclusion he tendered, on behalf of the committee of arrangements, the free use of the hall to the Congress during its sessions.

Mr. Abbot, President of the National Liberal League, responded on behalf of the Congress. He cordially thanked the committee for their hospitality and kind cooperation, and said there was a propriety in selecting Rochester as the place for holding the first annual meeting of the League, because it was the only city in the State, so far as he knew, that had completely secularized its schools. Thanking Mr. Mann personally for his freedom in expressing his own opinions on the proposed objects of the convention, Mr. Abbot said that, whether these objects were wise or not, the necessity of untrammelled discussion was evident to all; and that at least would be had here.

The reading of the Secretary's minutes of the Centennial Congress of Liberals was dispensed with, and the printed Report of that convention was adopted by vote as the authorized record of its proceedings. Mr. H. L. Green, of Salamanca, N. Y., then moved the adoption of the following order of business:—

Following the precedent of the Centennial Congress of Liberals:—

Resolved, That the proceedings of this Congress shall be governed by the general rules of parliamentary law.

Resolved, That, in order to secure the prompt and orderly transaction of the important business of this Congress, all resolutions, after being read, shall be referred to the committee on resolutions without debate.

Resolved, That the general order of business shall be to devote the evenings of Friday and Saturday and the morning, afternoon, and evening of Sunday to addresses, essays, and free conference, as shall be announced by the President from session to session; but that the morning and afternoon sessions shall be devoted to the special business of this Congress, which shall be taken up and disposed of in the following order:—

- 1.—Appointment of committee on membership.
- 2.—Opening address by the President.
- 3.—Report of committee on membership.
- 4.—Appointment of committees on nominations, on resolutions, and on finance.
- 5.—Report of the directors for the past year.
- 6.—Report of the treasurer.
- 7.—Report of the committee on nominations, and election of officers for the ensuing year.
- 8.—Report of the committee on resolutions, and free debate on the proposed political platform.
- 9.—Report of the committee on nominations as to a presidential ticket for 1880.
- 10.—Report of the committee on finance.
- 11.—Miscellaneous business.
- 12.—Free conference, short speeches, etc., etc.

The President read a communication from the National Executive Committee of the Union of Radicals, signed by Carl Doerflinger, of Milwaukee, Karl Heinzen, of Boston, and others, expressing sympathy and offering suggestions to the National Liberal League on this occasion; and it was referred to the committee on resolutions, to be reported on hereafter by them.

Prof. J. H. W. Toohy, of Chelsea, Mass., J. W. Truesdell, of Syracuse, N. Y., E. M. Seilon, of Castle, N. Y., were appointed as a committee on membership.

The President, Mr. Abbot, then delivered an address upon "A New Conscience Party in Politics."

The speaker mentioned the deplorable lack of conscience in business, in politics, and in social life. The time had come when conscience should assert itself in politics, and when something should be done to right certain political wrongs which prevail in this country. There were three great neglected national duties which demanded to-day a powerful movement to secure a conscientious fulfillment of them by the nation: first, total separation of Church and State; secondly, national protection for national citizens; thirdly, a system of really universal education.

In connection with the first proposition, the speaker said that the National Constitution was strictly secular, but that a strong attempt was now making to unite Church and State, taking advantage of the fact that most of the State Constitutions recognize Christianity to some extent.

Until 1833, every citizen in Massachusetts was taxed for the support of church-worship; but the tendency had been towards entire separation of Church and State. This idea was still gaining ground. There were, however, those who believed that this principle was wrong, and demanded the Constitutional recognition of God, Christ, and the Bible. To carry out this principle the "National Reform Association" was organized in 1863. Conventions were held all over the country and it was declared that no atheist should hold office. The strength of this party lay in the desire of the clergy for power. It closed the gates of the Centennial Exhibition on the Sabbath. This National Reform Association had just been emphatically indorsed by the State Universalist Convention of Massachusetts. The speaker also referred to the action of the Episcopal General Convention, which tabled a resolution sympathizing with the effort to separate Church and State in England. At the same time other resolutions were passed that declared the invalidity of marriage ceremonies not performed in accordance with "God's Word," and that the Church should "take an active interest in the education provided by the State, with the purpose of infusing into it as much as possible of religious influence and instruction." Another example of this was the introduction of a resolution by Mr. Blaine, in Congress, that prohibited any State from making appropriations in favor of religious corporations. This resolution was reported in the United States Senate by the Judiciary Committee in a form which practically protected forever the non-taxation of church-property and established the reading of the Bible in the public schools. The resolution only lacked two votes to carry it through, every Republican favoring and every Democrat opposing it. Had it succeeded, the divine authority of the Bible would have been recognized in the United States Constitution. All ecclesiastical bodies were combining to prevent the advance of liberal thought, and the time was not far distant when the Protestants would be as closely combined as the Catholics. The enforcing of Sabbatharian laws was an evidence of this, and it was necessary to make a protest against such steps. The object of the League was to prevent a union of Church and State. In regard to the taxation of church property, Mr. Abbot said that, since 1850, church property had been doubling in value every decade, and in 1870 amounted, by the census, to $354,000,000; that it could not be less to-day than $500,000,000; that, at a rate of taxation of $10 per $1000, the taxes thus evaded would be $5,000,000 annually, or, at the rate of $25 per $1000 (which is less than the rate in New York city), they would amount to the enormous sum of $15,000,000 annually. This was a great public burden, as well as injustice, since the country at large must pay these taxes evaded by the churches. It was the object of the League to remedy this wrong.

The second proposition demanded that women should be protected in all their rights (including suffrage) as well as men, black as well as white, infidel as well as Christian. Under the present system, the nation gave no personal protection, but referred its own citizens to the separate States, to get such protection as they could. As to the withdrawal of troops from the Southern States, although it was not the fault of President Hayes, it would be the fault of the American people, if the defect in our Constitution was not remedied and the freedmen efficiently protected as individuals.

Speaking upon the last proposition, Mr. Abbot contended that the separate States should be required to maintain public schools of equal efficiency for all, and that every child should be required to get an education, whether it attended these schools or not.

Prof. Toohy, chairman of the committee on membership, offered a partial report, which was accepted, and requested all delegates and members to notify the committee of their presence and present their credentials.

The following committees were then appointed:—
On Nominations—D. G. Crandon, of Massachusetts, William Barnsdall, of Pennsylvania, William Dudgeon, of New York, Charles Roth, of Colorado, John Verity, of Massachusetts.

On Resolutions—H. L. Green, of New York, W. S. Bell, of Massachusetts, Morris Einstein, of Pennsylvania, A. B. Brown, of Massachusetts, Moses Hays, representing the Liberal League of Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

On Finance—John Verity, George H. Foster.
The Secretary, William H. Hamlen, read the report of the Directors for the past year, which on motion was accepted.

The report of the Treasurer, J. A. J. Wilcox, was then read, showing the receipts for the year to have been $445.10; expenditures $115.75; and balance on hand, $329.35. On motion, the Finance Committee were requested to audit the Treasurer's report, which was done.

The Congress then adjourned to 2 o'clock, P. M.

Afternoon Session.

On re-assembling in the afternoon at the appointed hour, the committee on nominations reported a long list of officers for the ensuing year; and these officers (with the additional Vice-Presidents mentioned below) were then elected, as follows:—

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
MR. O. F. FROTHINGHAM.....New York.
MR. W. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. B. P. HALLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSENTHAL.....Chicago, Ill.

REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ABRAHAM WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Chester, N. J.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.....Tombury, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HANLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....143 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.....W. H. HANLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.....H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENNS, Monticello.
 California.....H. MOULINEAUX, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GALT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....ERNEST PRUSSING, Chicago.
 Indiana.....L. C. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....B. B. CLARK, Louisville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON RENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
 Maryland.....J. R. RUPPEL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....D. C. HAUSER, Battle Creek.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....J. S. HAYDEN, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....L. W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New York.....H. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THOMAS, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. FINCH, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. A. DUNBAR, Greenville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Benning.
 Virginia.....L. SPALDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....A. M. DEET, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FARRIS, Salt Lake City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....221 Washington St., Boston.

Mrs. Amy Post, at the conclusion of the report, said she was astonished that no women were named in the list of Vice-Presidents. She thought some should be added.

The President then said that the reason why no names of women were added was because some of the most distinguished liberal women of the country, being invited last year to allow the use of their names in that list, had declined the invitation.

It was then moved and carried that the names of Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, Mrs. Amy Post, and Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton be added to the list of Vice-Presidents.

The committee on resolutions reported a series which was adopted, with a few slight amendments as follows:—

I.
Resolved, That all those Christians who declare that "this is a Christian government," and that the government as such is bound to favor, promote, and propagate what they term "unsectarian Christianity," are drifting consciously or unconsciously into a dangerous and wicked conspiracy against the religious liberties of the American people, a fixing a deadly blow at that separation of Church and State on which the government is founded, and evincing a most reprehensible contempt for the equal rights of Christians and non-Christians under the United States Constitution.

II.
Resolved, That the success of the plot of the National Reform Association to "put God into the Constitution," and to incorporate the common creed of Christianity into the fundamental law of the land, would be the blackest treason and crime of the nineteenth century; because, under a government sacredly pledged by the Declaration of Independence to the equal liberties and equal rights of all men, it would covertly but effectively unite Church and State, to the total destruction of those equal rights and the total ruin of free institutions.

III.
Resolved, That the government of the United States is not a Christian but a secular government; that it would be a piece of flagrant iniquity and injustice for the government as such to patronize either sectarian or unsectarian Christianity; and that the treaty with Tripoli, approved by George Washington in 1797, did but recognize and proclaim the righteous equality of all citizens as to religious rights and liberties, when it solemnly declared: "The government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion."

IV.
Resolved, That every motive of national patriotism and of personal self-respect calls loudly upon the Liberals of the United States to defend the cause of secular government against the insidious, multiplying, and formidable dangers which threaten to overwhelm it; that the time for apathy and submission to ecclesiastical encroachments has gone by, and the time for activity, courage, and lawful resistance to these encroachments has arrived; and that the great principle of the total separation of Church and State, on which the national government is founded, needs now to be defended by stronger and more explicit constitutional guarantees and by the determined support of all true patriots.

V.
Resolved, That no government has a right to claim supreme allegiance from its subjects, except in return for direct and efficient protection in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; that it cannot without absurdity and injustice exact such allegiance while it shirks the duty and responsibility of affording such protection; and that any people which, through its government, persists in repudiating this reciprocal obligation of allegiance and protection forfeits all title to an honorable place among the nations of the earth.

VI.
Resolved, That, in the gradual development of the United States as a nation, it has become necessary that the national government should cease to present the humiliating spectacle of refusing to protect United States citizens at home, while yet it recognizes its duty to protect them in foreign lands, and of forbidding the separate States to claim the supreme allegiance of their own citizens, while yet it obliges the latter to look for personal protection to their own separate States alone; and that the United States Constitution ought to be so amended as to rid the nation of this humiliation and disgrace.

VII.

Resolved, That among the most precious rights in which the national citizen ought to be protected by the national government is the right to enjoy his independent opinions respecting religion, no matter what they may be, on equal terms with all other citizens before the law; that all State patronage of religion or of "unsectarian Christianity," so-called, unavoidably casts odium and ill-repute upon the minority on account of their honest thought; is intended to do so, and is gallingly unjust; that we protest energetically against the "clerical policy" which, by exempting church property from taxation, taxes every man for the support of the churches, and which, by requiring Bible-reading in the public schools, taxes every man for the support of a religion to that extent established by law; and that we demand national protection against the injustice of this oppressive and outgrown "clerical policy."

VIII.

Resolved, That we affirm the paramount duty of the national government to guarantee and effectually maintain by its own immediate authority the equal civil, political, and religious rights of all national citizens, whether white or black, male or female, rich or poor, literate or illiterate, Christian or non-Christian; that this duty ought to be discharged through the United States courts, and an amended United States Constitution, and not by the United States army unless there is overt rebellion against the national government; and that we therefore approve the Southern policy of President Hayes' administration, provided it is supplemented by adoption of the great principle for which we contend,—national protection for national citizens in their fundamental personal rights.

IX.

Resolved, That public intelligence and public virtue are the sole possible foundation for a free and stable republic; that the right to a good elementary education belongs to every child in the country, and ought to be protected by the national government as a measure necessary to the nation's prosperity and continued existence; that the only way to protect this right efficiently is to maintain everywhere good schools at the public expense; that, since it is confessedly right for a State to require its various towns and cities to maintain such schools, it is self-evidently no less right for the nation to require each State to maintain an efficient public system; that the United States Constitution ought to be so amended as to recognize and discharge this national duty; and that the crying evils of ignorant suffrage, especially at the South and in our large cities, forbid delay in establishing strictly universal suffrage and strictly universal education at the same time.

X.

Resolved, That public schools cannot be maintained in justice to all, unless they are confined exclusively to secular instruction; that to teach religion or sustain public worship in them unavoidably infringes on the reserved rights of conscience in some class or classes of the community; that nobody is wronged, if nothing is taught in positive violation of these rights; that the mere omission to teach religion where the teaching of it would be patent injustice is a wrong to no one; and that the self-evident rule of justice in this matter is briefly—secular schools in a secular State.

XI.

Resolved, That, postponing to future conventions the addition of such planks on other issues as future events may render necessary or expedient, the National Liberal League now adopts, as its political platform for the presidential campaign of 1880, these three great national principles of overshadowing importance:—

"(1) Total separation of Church and State, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

"(2) National protection for national citizens, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

"(3) Universal education the basis of universal suffrage in this secular republic; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public-school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education."

XII.

Resolved, That we respectfully but earnestly urge upon all who favor this platform, regardless of their opinions on other subjects, to cooperate with the National Liberal League in all practicable ways, and especially to organize everywhere, if possible, local auxiliary leagues for vigorous local agitation in behalf of the common cause.

XIII.

Resolved, That the members of the executive committee of the National Liberal League, to whom the supervision of local organization in their respective States and Territories is intrusted by the Constitution, are requested to prosecute this most important work as rapidly and energetically as possible, in order to secure a large delegate representation at our next annual Congress, and thus command the public influence which the magnitude and justice of our cause deserve; and they are hereby authorized to issue a call for a State or Territorial Liberal League in their respective fields, whenever in their judgment a sufficient number of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues has been organized to render such a step useful.

XIV.

Resolved, That we receive with the most cordial appreciation and reciprocation the very friendly address of the National Executive Committee of the Union of Radicals; that we tender them our sincerest thanks for their valuable cooperation in the past and their pledge of still further cooperation in the future; that, in the opinion of this Congress, the basis of the National Liberal League would be narrowed, and not broadened, by attempting to accomplish all reforms at once, and by thereby multiplying causes of disagreement when concentration of effort in defence of liberty is the supreme necessity of the liberal cause; that we regard the measures proposed by this League as at once simple, comprehensive, transcendently important, and certain, when fairly understood by the general public, to rally an immense number of the most intelligent voters of the country to their support; that we deem it the part of practical wisdom to make our platform so broad as to command the sympathies of all thorough liberals, rather than to narrow both platform and party by taking up issues on which liberals are themselves divided; and that the proposed project of a joint congress of all liberal and radical organizations in the year 1878 is hereby referred to the board of directors, with full authority to act in the premises as circumstances shall in their judgment render advisable.

John Verity moved that the resolutions be taken up singly and discussed.

The first and second resolutions elicited considerable discussion. Some desired the substitution of the words "civil and political" in the place of "religious" in the first; but, the matter being put to vote, the phraseology was unchanged. The draught of that resolution read, "the various religious sects of this country, declaring with almost one voice as they do that," etc., but was modified so as to read, "all those Christians who declare that," etc. The third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh were accepted without discussion. In discussing the eighth, one gentleman thought that it, as well as the others, favored too much the centralization of government. After several other delegates had defended the propriety of the phraseology of the resolution, it was accepted without change.

The eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth resolutions were accepted without discussion. When the thirteenth resolution was read, several delegates spoke of the prime importance of local organization. The liberals of this country should show that they are dead in earnest. This would command respect, even from those who oppose liberalism. By the organization of local leagues money could be procured and the work be effectively prosecuted. Mrs. Woodruff arose and made vigorous, enthusiastic, and very thoughtful remarks upon the importance of organization. When she took her seat, she was loudly applauded. Mr. Toohy said they should show that liberalism was generous in its spirit, and magnanimous in its policy, and that those whose work was the establishment of leagues should carry the olive leaf while they fought for their opinions. The fourteenth resolution was carried unanimously.

The committee on nominations, to whom was referred the matter of organization of a political party in 1880, not being ready to report, was permitted to do so at a future time.

General business being in order, Professor Rawson, of New York, read a letter from the Society of Humanity of that city, commending the work of the convention, and expressing great sympathy with its object. Mr. Verity moved that the thanks of the Congress be sent to the Society of Humanity for their letter.

The President read a telegram from the German Association of Freethinkers of Buffalo. It was moved that a proper recognition of this courtesy be made by the President on behalf of the Congress. This was done by a reciprocation of the courtesy by telegraph.

Several delegates in the convention spoke of the necessity of having liberals subscribe for those periodicals whose object was the propagation of liberal ideas.

Mr. Evans, of Toronto, extended a sympathetic greeting to the convention from the liberal society of that city. He was agreeably surprised to see that liberalism had made such headway in the United States, as the number present showed. He was greatly interested in the work, and should do all in his power to promote its interests.

After some further unimportant remarks the convention adjourned until half-past seven o'clock.

Evening Session.

The evening session was devoted to addresses by Prof. A. L. Rawson, of New York, upon "Compulsory Education, State and National"; by Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, N. Y., upon "The Ethics of Secular Education"; and by Elder F. W. Evans, of Mount Lebanon, N. Y., upon "The Origin and Mission of the American Government."

Prof. Rawson told the story of his conversion from orthodoxy, and then stated that in matters of public education religion should be left entirely out of consideration. He believed that every child should be educated, but not by priests. The result of education under the direction of priestcraft was seen in Italy, where not one in twenty could read or write. The Bible should be kept out of the public schools. The speaker said he read it, partly in a business way, partly as the grandest effort of the human mind, partly because it was so queer. The tendency of education coupled with religion was to make a person discontented, inclined to look upon life as a fleeting show. Men should be educated in real knowledge, and not in something entirely unknown.

If there is to be dominion over the schools, who are to have the direction of affairs? The Church says, "We must; there is only one name given among men by which men can be saved, and it is for us to teach religion." Protestants are becoming crafty in this matter, as much so as the Jesuits in attempting to accomplish their bigoted ends. It is our duty and our purpose to see that neither Protestants nor Catholics gain control of our schools. Said Mr. Rawson: "I believe in letting the future take care of itself. I am a Positivist. The desert may be made to grow plants. All that is necessary is water and cultivation,—nothing more. There are children in the streets who are called 'Arabs.' To make them good citizens we should educate them in good things instead of bad things. They now get a fearful education in villainy and mischief of all sorts. We should educate them in real knowledge instead of something we know nothing about. I picked up one of these 'Arabs,' surrounded him with good influences, and now he is an orderly young man earning his own living. In Rochester and in Cincinnati, schools have become secularized. This is good, and work in the right direction. I object to having children placed under influences which warp their minds against scientific knowledge. I was instructed in regard to God and Christ, and I dreamed about them. I believe in a future life, but, as a Positivist, I know nothing about it. We must banish the Bible from our schools. Until we settle the school question, our religious differences should be kept out of sight."

Dr. Brown considered the pursuit of positive knowledge as the only means of improving humanity. He opened by saying: "Our true guide to duty we obtain from our knowledge of matter, the motion of matter and its uses. What we know, not what we believe, is the most important aid in helping us decide our duties as moral, religious, or reasonable beings. A correct idea of the forms and conditions of objects and their relations to the good of man is never the result of faith or belief, but always that of knowledge. Investigation, demonstration, and experience place the facts in mind which move to proper duty all reasonable people. A worldly education is the basis of human character and useful thought. A worldly man naturally gives his whole time and attention to the knowledge of those facts which aid him in being the most useful son, husband, father, or citizen. He works for humanity, not for a supposed deity. He depends upon mind and action, not upon reported divine assistance. His providence is a proper use of the human knowledge as dictated by experience. He neither fears nor expects any interference from beyond the clouds, here or hereafter. Until he knows something about gods or clouds, he prefers to rely on himself or his honest secular brother, who has love of duty and fact to do with, and is within reasonable reach. What we leave to God or a believing friend of his is not done unless human knowledge and reason, obtained by a secular education, is appealed to and used. Our reliable helps in all our duties are within our reach and the limit of a secular education. Ignorance and not a personal devil is our foe; while knowledge is our best friend, not an unknown and imaginary God. To leave everything to God or Christ is to live in idleness and want.

"Take from a Christian his secular education, and he becomes a savage, frightened as of old by evil spirits, ghosts, and shadows. In such a state the clerical teachers have all the advantage, and scientists well know that such people are the sole property of theology and its revengeful God. How much longer shall we be taught from our sixty thousand pulpits and gospel-shops that theological religion is better than real knowledge and reason, or to love the world and its true educators is a fearful sin? Is it possible that the lean, weak muscles and soft brains of theology are preferred by a wise intellect instead of the healthy and whole ones produced by science? Who ever knew prayer, church-music, or preaching to save the sick from death without the aid of scientific medical advice or educated, faithful nursing? It is on the worldly, educated brain of man that this nation and the race must depend for future prosperity and goodness. To-day we think and vote for the truth of this world, in the honor of the recorded knowledge of man which so faithfully guides us into ways of health and long life. Loving humanity as honest secular teachers more, and God and idle dreams less, we shall excuse him from the national Constitution, leaving him to work by faith and belief, while we rely upon human knowledge and reason for the rightful and harmonious welfare of the living, remembering that our knowledge is science and theology the want of it."

Elder Evans, the famous leader of the Shaker community at Mount Lebanon, said:—

"I consider that the ideas set forth this evening have made our government. This movement is the continuation of the ideas of the American revolution. We must have entire separation of Church and State. Of their union nothing can be said too bad. We see what it has done in Spain. It has not been forgotten, and I hope it never will be forgotten."

"I am here to express my sympathy with your Liberal League. I consider you as the guardians of our government. Let the Bible be excluded from our public schools and the chaplains from our legislative halls. This will promote progress in every direction."

The speaker then detailed the origin of the Orthodox Church. He read in Revelations of the beast that rose up out of the sea: that represented Catholicism. "Another beast rose up out of the earth: that had two horns instead of ten,—Luther and Calvin. They did not leave the Catholic Church, but protested against indulgences only. The one was a shadow of the other. Both advocate the union of Church and State. This idea does not belong here. It arose in Europe, but will be purged from America. God's spirit is at work to pull down the Babylon that has been built. The Protestants are like Catholics. They have persecuted. Calvin burnt Servetus. They killed witches at Salem."

"Constantine united Church and State. The idea was continued down to the present. Protestants want to get God, Christ, and the devil into the Constitution, but we wish to keep them out. All the great men of our American Revolution worked as we are working. All but one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were infidels. They saw that, wherever the priest had anything to do with civil matters, the government became corrupt. Therefore they skillfully excluded the religious test, and it is our duty to maintain their ideas. We, the Shakers, believe and practise the principles of separation of Church and State. We do not vote, and have nothing to do with the government."

"I saw an angel come down from heaven," says the author of Revelations. This angel was Swedenborg. He introduced the idea of Spiritualism, and upon that our societies are founded. In our history the spirits told us they would leave us and go out into the world and visit every dwelling. For more than four years we heard nothing of them, and a few of us began to doubt what had been said. But soon we received news of the Rochester rappings. From that time the work has gone on and will go on till the whole world is spiritually enlightened."

"The union of Church and State has set men to kill each other, and kept people in ignorance. The separation and the acquisition of positive knowledge has promoted the welfare of mankind. The diseases which 'flesh is heir to' are the product of ignorance. The religion that would make men truly religious must begin with the stomach, whence proceeds many of the ills which so afflict mankind."

The speaker as he took his seat was loudly applauded.

The evening session was closed by an adjournment till Saturday, at 10 o'clock.

Saturday's Proceedings.

The attendance on Saturday was much greater than that on the previous day. The morning session and part of the afternoon session were devoted to a consideration of the propriety of nominating a ticket for the next Presidential campaign.

Mr. Crandon, chairman of the committee on nominations, reported the name of Miss Sallie Holley, of Lottsburg, Va., as a Vice-President.

Hon. Elizur Wright, of Boston, spoke in favor of this nomination, and in praise of her father, Myron Holley, of Rochester, who had been one of the founders of the old "Liberty Party," which had its birthplace in Rochester, and of which the Liberal League was a legitimate descendant. He said that the League should not be either a Christian or an atheist party, but a party of the whole,—that now, as a true child of the Free Soil party, we should come before the people as the Free Soul party.

Mrs. Sarah B. Otis, of Boston, spoke in favor of the total secularization of the government, and her remarks were greeted with loud applause.

The ticket was brought before the Congress by the report of Mr. Crandon, chairman of the committee on nominations. He said that the committee had concluded under the circumstances that nominations at the present time would be premature, and reported that the whole subject of Presidential nominations should be referred back to the Congress, sitting as a Committee of the Whole.

This report was accepted with great unanimity.

Mr. Green moved that the subject of Presidential nominations be postponed to the next Annual Congress.

Mr. Bennett, of New York, was in favor of putting up a ticket. Such a step would unite the party, he thought, and then read a letter in the Truth Seeker recommending the adoption at this Congress of a good platform, with Col. R. G. Ingersoll as the nominee for President, and Mr. F. E. Abbot as Vice-President.

Dr. Brown spoke on the same side of the question, desired to nominate Col. Ingersoll at once, and to keep nominating that distinguished gentleman till success attended their efforts. Col. Ingersoll was a noble and healthy man who believed that the Bible should be discarded as entirely useless for school purposes.

Mr. A. B. Brown, of Worcester, Mass., was opposed to making nominations on the ground that such a step would be premature. He moved to amend Mr. Green's motion by referring the subject to the Board of Directors, to be reported on by them next year.

Mr. Green did not want any committee to nominate a President for him. He was opposed to the amendment.

Mr. Brown explained that he had not proposed his amendment with any such view as that; but had only offered his amendment that the Directors might act as a committee on nomination, to report in due season to the League. However, he would withdraw the amendment altogether.

Mr. John Verity thought that, if Col. Ingersoll were present, he (Verity) would favor nominating him, with Francis E. Abbot as Vice-President; but as the case stood, he considered postponement preferable.

Mr. Abbot at this point asked leave to make a personal statement. He said that he should persistently refuse to allow his name to be used on any Presidential ticket; that he could be very useful to the League as editor of THE INDEX, or perhaps even as President of the League; but that he should be utterly useless as a candidate.

Prof. Toohy, Mr. Harwood, and Mr. Harding spoke upon the subject,—the latter being in favor of immediate nomination.

Hon. Elizur Wright objected to Col. Ingersoll. The people of the United States should be allowed time to consider the platform, which could not be done if nominations were made immediately. Moreover, Col. Ingersoll had already connected himself with a party.

Judge McCormick did not like Col. Ingersoll, because he was illiberal; and he was in favor of postponing nominations.

Mr. Morris Einstein spoke earnestly in favor of local organization. Mrs. Woodruff, of Rochester, declared that the speakers had missed the point,—which was organization first and nominations afterwards. This gave rise to a motion by Mr. Verity (which, however, was not seconded), to the effect that nominations be deferred till five hundred leagues had been formed.

The Congress then adjourned till 2 P.M.

Afternoon Session.

In the afternoon session, Mr. Green's motion to postpone nominations for one year was again taken up, and was carried.

Immediately after this matter was disposed of, the President urged the importance of local organization, and of raising money for this purpose. The work of liberalism could not be carried forward without money. If sufficient funds could only be procured to keep Mr. Green in the field, he thought it would not be long before the best results would be manifest. As to methods of obtaining money, there were several, and among them more memberships (life and annual), and contributions from individuals and from local leagues. He hoped this matter would receive the necessary attention.

Miscellaneous business was then announced to be in order.

Calling the secretary, Mr. W. H. Hamlen, to the chair, Mr. Abbot stated that at last year's meeting, at Philadelphia, he had been responsible for the introduction of a resolution which unjustly censured an individual; and that, though he had acted on mistaken information as to the true facts in the case, he now wished to rectify the injustice by moving the adoption of the following resolution:—

WHEREAS, At the Centennial Congress of Liberals a resolution was passed by which the Director of the Mint was censured for inscribing the motto "In God we Trust" on several of the United States coins "without authority of law and on his own motion alone"; and

WHEREAS, It proves to be the fact that the Director of the Mint did not inscribe this motto on the coins until he had first secured the passage of an act of Congress authorizing the inscription of it; therefore,

Resolved, That the said resolution of censure was unjust to the Director of the Mint so far as it charged him with acting in the premises "without authority of law and on his own motion alone," and to that extent is hereby rescinded; but that his successful attempt to procure Congressional authority for such inscription on the national coinage was a gross violation of the whole tenor and spirit of the national Constitution, a direct insult to all his fellow-citizens who appreciate and prize its purely secular character, and a fanatical invasion of the religious rights of the whole people.

This resolution was adopted by a unanimous vote.

Resuming the chair, the President read a letter of sympathy from the Rochester Turnverein; and a vote of thanks and reciprocal good-will was passed by the Congress.

The remainder of the afternoon was devoted to ten-minute speeches upon various topics. Remarks were made by Mr. Verity, Mr. Green, Prof. Oliver, of Ithaca, Dr. Brown, and Judge McCormick.

Prof. Oliver declared that every person who had the opportunity, by voting, to identify himself with the government was responsible for its justice or injustice. It was his duty to see that the government granted to all their equal rights. The great question before the Congress was not between the atheist and anti-atheist, but between the bigot and the man sincerely interested in the matter of individual liberties.

Judge McCormick believed Christianity to be intolerant of necessity. Yet its believers should be respected. They should be convinced of their error by argument, and not by ridicule. If liberalism was right, it would succeed in spite of everything, for truth was mighty and would prevail.

Prof. Toohy, Dr. Brown, and Mr. Green gave their views upon the subjects of tolerance and federal protection to the individual.

Evening Session.

The first address in the programme for the evening was by Mr. W. S. Bell, of New Bedford, Mass., upon "The Questions of the Day." He said in substance: "Equal rights should be granted by all. He who will not grant to others what he claims for himself is a scoundrel. If its truth will not bear out a cause, legislation will not achieve that end. We talk about equal rights. This is the claim that is most imperilled. Our Christian friends say that freedom of thought leads to freedom of action, and that to immorality. There is no connection between the two. To me it seems that, the fuller and freer men think, the more likely they are to be right. The charge is made against us that, if we think freely, society will become licentious. If we visit our prisons, we see but few liberals there. Man can be developed best by appealing to his manhood. In our platform we have done this. It is our aim to work for manhood and human rights. This will secure to each all his rights. This is the road to progress. We believe in the separation of Church and State. Our forefathers believed in it. It has given us a hundred years of prosperity. There are those who wish to incorporate a God into our Constitution. Will it do any good? The Southern Confederacy had him in their Constitution, and it fell. We demand the taxation of church property. We object to the reading of the Bible in the schools. We advocate universal education. We see that education has done good in Prussia. Would not a similar system do good in this country? We claim national protection for national citizens. There were some who objected to this. Their ideas would be changed, however, when they were placed where they could get no redress for their injuries. These are our principles." Mr. Bell concluded by telling how he came to leave the Church and to become an infidel. To use his own words: "I found a great many things in the Church which I did not like. I was led to investigate the principles of freethought. I took Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Spencer, and other men of equal celebrity as my guides, and became a devout believer in infidelity." He said he admired the platform of the Congress. He would show it to the people here and in Canada, and let it speak for itself; and "it would speak for itself."

Prof. Toohy was next introduced, and began an address upon "The Liberal League the Supplement and Complement of the Protestant Reformation." After he had spoken a few moments, however, he was taken with a severe fainting fit, and was compelled to retire from the stage. This was a great disappointment to the audience, for the few remarks he had made gave promise of a most interesting and instructive address. By going back to the Reformation, he showed that in Germany and in England it was primarily a political movement, and not a religious outburst. It was not Luther who introduced this great modern revolution; for Luther attempted to defeat it when he advised the princes to shoot down the peasants in the Peasant War. In England, it began in a place where there was no difference of opinion,—where all were good Catholics. Like Germany, however, England failed to perceive the significance of the moment,—failed to see that the need of the times was a complete separation of Church and State.

When Prof. Toohy retired at this point in the discussion of his subject, the Rev. J. H. Harter was called upon to speak.

He desired the introduction of a temperance plank in the platform of the Congress, and also one forbidding judicial murders.

Mr. Abbot followed with a few earnest remarks upon the paramount necessity of the separation of Church and State, and the necessity of hospitality in the hearing of unlike thoughts. He thought the members of the convention should unite heartily in contending for the great principles at stake, and allow all minor differences of opinion to pass out of sight. The League was neither Christian nor anti-Christian, but simply favored equal rights to every man, woman, and child; and he read a resolution to this effect from the Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals. This convention, he said, was pledged to perfect freedom; its platform was an absolutely free one. There were two ways of securing harmony: one by sacrificing the individual to the society and requiring him to suppress his peculiar opinions,—another by guaranteeing utter liberty of expression to each member, cheerfully taking the consequences, and offsetting one extreme view by its opposite. The League adopted this latter method; and all extravagances or harshnesses were sure to be restrained or corrected by the speakers themselves, when once they became convinced that there was to be no repression of their freedom, no encroachment on their equal rights. Each speaker was responsible for himself alone; the League took no responsibility for his words; and if he was bitter or ungentlemanly, he would be speedily punished by the inevitable reaction of his own violence. This was infinitely better than to attempt rigid discipline over the speakers. Personalities, of course, were to be ruled out of order; but the vehemence of heated but honest minds would be soon subdued by mutual freedom of criticism, if all would only preserve respect and kindness for each other. It was time to learn not to be "shocked" at all.

Dr. Brown took the stage, and declared that he was an iconoclast in matters of religion. He had a desire to do right and wanted others to do the same. Men must depend upon knowledge, not upon faith. He showed the difference between faith and doubt; one was ignorance, the other the source of knowledge. Doubt gave rise to inquiry and that to investigation, which produced positive results. The real object of life was to develop manhood. Although a materialist, he preferred to be called a "man" rather than anything else.

The last speaker of the evening was Judge McCormick. Substantially he said: "When we establish freedom, we allow men to think for themselves. When we begin to think for ourselves, we begin to grow in every direction. Although I am a Spiritualist, I believe in the largest freedom. I never feel so proud as when I say that I am a Spiritualist, and that I am going to live after death. This idea is the growing religion of the age. We must work in the present for the future. Life means that we should start out to live in view of our whole life. Everything we do reacts upon ourselves and others. It makes us and others better or worse. Orthodoxy is passing away, and with it the intolerance of the world." He agreed with Dr. Brown on the necessity of obeying the laws of Nature. No tears, no redemption, could commute the penalty of violating the laws of our being.

The Congress then adjourned until Sunday morning, at half-past ten o'clock.

Sunday's Proceedings.

The audiences that attended the convention on Sunday were even larger than those on the two previous days; and, as the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle stated, "great interest and enthusiasm were very apparent." Perhaps this was partly owing to the fact that the business of the Congress had been transacted, and the time was to be devoted to an exposition of ideas. The character of the audiences was even more remarkable than their numbers; they comprised the most intelligent and respectable citizens of the place. All were intently watchful of the proceedings, and listened with rapt attention to the speakers.

At half-past ten o'clock, the President called the assemblage to order, and introduced the Hon. Ellsbur Wright, of Boston, who read a paper upon "Republican Taxation." It was a profound and thoughtful discussion of the proper mode of taxation, and an exposure of the pernicious effects resulting from the present system of indirect taxation. [As we have been favored with this most admirable paper for publication, we forbear to injure its effect by printing a mere abstract here. It will appear in full in our next issue.—ED. INDEX.]

Mr. Wright's essay was enthusiastically and loudly applauded throughout, although its reading took up more than an hour. When he had concluded, Mr. Bennett, of New York, who was to have followed with an essay on "The Bible in the Common Schools," preferred to postpone his paper for a while, on account of the lateness of the hour; and the Congress adjourned to half-past two o'clock in the afternoon.

Afternoon Session.

The Congress re-assembled at half-past two o'clock, P.M.

Prof. Toohey, having recovered from his illness of the previous day, and being present, was called upon to conclude his address. He said that, when he was interrupted by his weakness, he was showing that the Reformation failed in England for the same reason that it failed in Germany; namely, it did not aim at the total separation of Church and State. Proceeding to analyze the true causes (which were always secular) of all great revolutions, he said it had been declared that French infidelity was the cause of the French Revolution, and that the Protestant Reformation was a mere result of Luther's activity. This was untrue. The causes which were at the bottom of the one were at the bottom of the other. These revolutions were the attempts of man to improve his social and political, as well as religious, condition. They began with a secular element, and this was the element that lay at the foundation of the reform proposed by the Liberal League. A union of Church and State had been the great evil of the past, and was still the great evil of the present. It disregarded manhood, and favored wealth. Liberalism knew no Catholic, no Protestant, but believed in the complete equality of mankind in their natural rights. All true Liberals demanded national protection for national citizens. In the height of Grecian glory, the idea of strictly secular nationality was unknown. Judaea did not comprehend it. Both struggled to realize the theocratic principle more or less completely, but both failed. The rise of Rome was the first great step toward a national unity grounded on the religious equality of all men, and that nation became a gigantic power. The misconception of the principle of union exposed itself in the late rebellion. In this country there were many elements—Irish, French, German, Italian, etc.,—and they should be harmonized and united. This could be done only by the fullest recognition of the idea of genuine secular nationality in the federal Constitution, with national protection for all individual rights.

The third principle in the Liberal platform, said the speaker, was that of education. The Church would never reform the evils of society. It stood committed in the matter of education to false theories. The separation of priestly influences from education should be accomplished. Religion presented a single book to be studied; while secularism was the gateway to all literature and all knowledge. The genius of our government was committed to an education which did not meddle with mysticism, but to one that was as simple and practical as the multiplication table. There should be no compromise in this matter. Till this great object had been accomplished, all could at least practise the principles of brotherly tolerance.

The well-known Spiritualist medium, Mrs. E. L. Watson, of Pennsylvania, was then introduced to the audience, and made an address chiefly upon "Woman's Rights." She said that she was in full harmony with the principles set forth in the platform which had been adopted. The discontent of the masses revealed the fact that there should be a change in the political administration of the nation and in the religion of the day. Politics ignored one-half of the intelligence of the nation. This was one of the most vital points that had been disregarded, by the so-called statesmen. This nation had set aside the intelligence of wives, sisters, and daughters, in questions of public policy and government. While it had hastened to make citizens in the South and to enfranchise foreigners, it had forgotten women. It was the object of the League to take advantage of this element, which had been so ignored.

Men had controlled the government, but it was permeated with corruption. They had made laws, but those laws were only for one-half of the community. When woman should be allowed to have a voice in public affairs, these abuses would be swept away. She had done well in the household, and been instrumental for good in the matter of local option. Men had professed to be her protector. In truth, they had too often been her greatest enemy. She had always been their legitimate prey. She would be no more injured by going to the polls than by remaining at home to receive the brutal blows and to hear the curses of a drunken husband. Moreover, in the matter of intelligence, she was just as capable of reading her ballot as Patrick in the ditch.

The speaker did not care what Liberals believed, and was a member of no sect. Religion was an inseparable part of man. The great need of the day was an ethical science, as well as a science of material things. Infidels as such, she said, could not do more toward reforming the world than the Christians had done. The old idea was to kill the body to save the soul; the new was to care for the body to promote the welfare of the spirit.

After discussing what she considered the truths of Spiritualism, she closed by saying that the "increase of our scientific knowledge is the promotion of our spiritual knowledge."

As he had been accused of being an atheist, simply because he belonged to the League, Mr. Moses Hays, of Rochester, took the floor, and said that he was a Jew, and believed in a God as much as ever. He was working for the emancipation of mankind and the protection of their equal rights; and to the accomplishment of this end he should forever work. This led the President to explain once more that the League was not committed to or against any particular creed or belief in matters of religion. In strong and emphatic terms he denounced it as a slander of the League to say that it was either theistic or atheistic, spiritualistic or materialistic, Christian or anti-Christian; and this position outside of and independent of all particular religious opinions was fundamental to its work. The National Liberal League was simply an equal rights party, and was founded to defend impartially the equal rights of all men with respect to religious beliefs. Christians, Jews, infidels, heretics, theists, atheists, pantheists—in short, men and women of all types of religious thought—composed its membership without surrendering or compromising their own individual convictions, or losing their right to express them publicly in all proper ways; and he called upon the audience to bear honest witness in this matter, and to vindicate the League from the slanders which bigots and fanatics might circulate against it.

Henry P. Stark, of Rochester, said he was proud to be present. The time he had he would devote to the defence of orthodoxy. At a meeting of Orthodox men in this city it was moved and carried that all church property should be taxed. He suspected that this was one of the reasons why the convention had been held in Rochester. The city had excluded the Bible from the school. The Orthodox have built hospitals, schools, manufactories, etc., and they should have credit for all this.

The Congress then adjourned till half-past seven o'clock, P.M.

Evening Session.

On re-assembling in the evening the Congress was called to order by the President, who, before announcing the speakers, submitted to the League the following resolution:—

Resolved, That the National Liberal League of America, convened in annual congress at Rochester, N. Y., October 23, 1877, hereby instructs the board of directors to transmit to Leon Gambetta, the great leader of the republican party of France, a message expressive of our profound sympathy for himself and his fellow-patriots in their brave efforts to defend the republic against the plots of the ultramontanes and to attain that total separation of Church and State which we are laboring to perfect here in America.

This resolution was interrupted by applause at the name of Gambetta, and adopted with the greatest enthusiasm by the immense audience.

Elder F. W. Evans, of Mount Lebanon, N. Y., was then introduced by the President, who welcomed him all the more because he was a Christian. Elder Evans made an address upon "Woman in the United States Constitution." He said his sympathies were with the infidels in this matter. The American government was an infidel government. While we could hate a system we could love those who lived under the system. In this matter we could oppose theology while we loved Christians. He considered those present as American men and women. It was left to them to preserve their own government. We should have a secular government, because it was for all the nation. Our ideal had not been entirely realized, but we were gradually completing the work of the framers of the Constitution.

When he became a member of a Shaker society, he was absolutely surprised to see Christians living together without quarreling and without getting mad at the opinions of infidels. The society was not perfect any more than the government. One, as well as the other, was in a state of transition. We should do what we could to make men progress, study natural laws, and follow the wisdom thus gained. All should study the preservation of health so that the race could be perpetuated.

The system of the Jews taught men how to live. In the wilderness they were fed upon manna for the purpose of being cured of the diseases of the Egyptians. They did not poison themselves with drugs. Their bread was simple, and they became hardy and healthy. It was not found necessary to eat meat. The attention of the audience was called to these facts, because the speaker would have them adopt such a plan to banish disease. First, it was necessary to study the body and let the soul not be troubled. None should allow money-making, acquisition of fame disturb us, but study the development of character. When this was done, wars would pass away, disease would be decreased, and happiness would be made general.

To come to the point, the speaker said he was in favor of women's rights. They should take part in legislation. Then and then only could the social evil be legislated out of existence. When they could vote, they would make better bread. They would not lace themselves up and make themselves such fools as they were. This was the fault of the men. Said the speaker, "Let us put Woman into the Constitution, and keep out a theological God."

The last address of the evening was that of Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York city, who spoke on "German Liberalism in America," and was enthusiastically applauded. The German liberals of her city, she said, sympathized profoundly with the measures of the Liberal League. The Germans in this country, like those in the Fatherland, were mostly liberals of a pronounced type, but until recently had not come as such before the American people.

There was no question which so aroused the Germans as the religious question. They were very enthusiastic and enlightened on this point. This was because, while other nations were studying politics, German philosophers contemplated the problems of life. Sometimes they might have taken wild flights, but they gave birth to the scientific method. The scientist became the complement of the philosopher. Reflections on philosophical subjects emancipated the people from theological prejudices. The intelligent German had outgrown a long time ago the absurd ideas of superstition. In this respect the Americans were far behind. They had studied no religious book but the Bible,—a book that contained more errors than any other. Was it at all strange dishonesty and immorality were increasing? Our social

[CONCLUDED ON PAGE 535.]

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 3.

E. M. Weir, $25.25; Rob't Davis, $2; O. C. Hampton, 10 cents; A. D. Newcomb, $2; W. W. Grant, $10; S. B. Morgan, $30; Wm. J. Ferris, 50 cents; Mrs. W. A. Stebbins, $3.25; Jacob Hoffman, $3.25; T. H. Knowles, $10; J. F. Johnston, $1; J. M. Hollister, $1.60; Geo. V. Chandler, $1; S. B. Ball, $1.60; Dr. A. J. Eaton, $3.20; Samuel Cosad, $3.20; Samuel Crump, $1.20; N. H. Ambler, $3.20; Aaron Bathrick, $2.20; F. Hays, $3.20; Geo. M. Wood, $1.60; W. C. Ferris, 10 cents; Henry Ahrens, 70 cents; Henry Lantz, $2.25; Jno. Sawyer, $10; Cash, $100; Hon. L. W. Billingsly, $1; W. P. Wilson, $1.34; Dr. C. H. Horch, $20; G. A. Lane, $3.20; Joseph Fritts, $3.20; Wm. Foster, $3.20; E. W. Mitchell, $3.20; Henry Quindy, $1.60; Homer McVean, $4.40; J. A. Strull, $3.20; John Baker, $3.20; H. P. Stark, $1.60; Mrs. Amy Post, $3.20; Jane Wilson, $3.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 8, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTATIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

THE NOVEMBER number of the Radical Review will contain an extraordinary article entitled, "So the Railway Kings Itch for an Empire, Do They?" by "A Red-Hot Striker," of Scranton, Pa. ("Being a letter to Mr. W. M. Grosvonor, whose slander of working people in the International Review has stirred me up mightily.") Contents for November: "Prostitution and the International Woman's League," (Henry Edger); "Spencer's Unknowables as the Basis of Religion," (J. Stahl Patterson); "Preacher's Love-Vacation," (John Weiss); "Transcendentalism," (Samuel Johnson); "System of Economical Contradictions," Chapter II. Of Value. Editor's Translation, (P. J. Proudhon); "The Warfare," (I. G. Blanchard); "So the Railway Kings Itch for an Empire, Do They?" ("A Red-Hot Striker"); "The Spirit that was in Jesus," (John Weiss); "The Great Strike: Its Relations to Labor, Property, and Government," (E. H. Heywood); "Mr. Spooner's Island Community," (Edward Stanwood); "Current Literature," "Chips from my Studio," (Sidney H. Morse). Benj. R. Tucker, Publisher, New Bedford.

SAYS THE New York Nation, in its last issue for October: "A statue of Roger Williams was dedicated last week in Providence by the city, which erected it. The orator of the occasion was Prof. J. L. Diman, and his discourse was in every way worthy of the subject. It is pleasant to find the last word on a problematic character, and his much-disputed career before his expulsion from Massachusetts Bay, in accord on the Rhode Island side of the line with the last word (Dr. Henry M. Dexter's) spoken on the other. The causes which led to Roger Williams' expulsion were independent of his views, subsequently incorporated in his new commonwealth, concerning the separation of Church and State—or, as is less accurately but more commonly said, concerning religious toleration. All this was conceded by Prof. Diman, and the shade of Cotton Mather himself might have listened complacently to this portion of the address. On the other hand, we should suppose that no apologist of the Puritans would now be disposed to deny Williams the full measure of eulogy here bestowed on him as the first statesman who established a form of government 'which drew a clear and unmistakable line between the temporal and the spiritual power.' Prof. Diman contrasts his protection of religious differences with the much-vaunted toleration of Calvert in Maryland, as two things not to be confounded; and he also ranks the Providence covenant above the Mayflower compact. The political maxim of government for the general good imbedded in the latter 'was implied rather than consciously affirmed, while the principle to which Roger Williams and his associates set their hands was intentionally and deliberately adopted as the cornerstone of the new structure they were building.' What follows is of course true: Williams 'cleared the path which even Massachusetts has been content to tread. The principle which he laid down is now the accepted and fundamental maxim of American politics.' But here the interesting inquiry is suggested whether the Puritan or the Providence principle had actually most to do with the separation of Church and State in our national government. Prof. Diman does not allude to this, and even leaves it a natural inference that but for Roger Williams this separation might not have taken place. Whoever has looked into the history of disestablishment in Massachusetts knows that it was brought about by development from within; and not only by the amelioration of the laws consequent upon the break-down of the theocratic idea of government, as by the 'Religious Freedom Act' of 1811, but by the strict application of them, as in the Unitarian dispossession of the Orthodox churches begun in 1820. Chief-Justice Parker, in the Dedham case of that year, insisted that he merely applied principles that had before been laid down—old principles that had been slumbering in the ecclesiastical law and policy of Massachusetts since 1780, and long before."

FREE RELIGIOUS CONVENTION.

A Convention of the Free Religious Association is to be held in New Haven, on the 8th and 9th of November, beginning on Thursday evening, the 8th, and holding through Friday, the 9th. O. B. Frothingham, T. W. Higginson, J. W. Chadwick, Felix Adler, F. E. Abbot, Miss Anna C. Garlin, D. H. Clark, and W. J. Potter are among the speakers invited, and most of them are expected to be present. Interesting and timely subjects will be presented for discussion, and the New Haven friends promise a successful gathering. Further particulars in the local papers.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

THE ROCHESTER CONGRESS.

MULTIPLY YOUR RATIFICATION MEETINGS!

A long report of the First Annual Congress of the National Liberal League at Rochester, N. Y., will be found in this issue of THE INDEX. It is not verbatim, but gives on the whole a very fair representation of the general character of the proceedings and the general tenor of the speeches.

The plan of the Convention was not fully understood by all at first, though it was very successfully carried out, and, when understood, commanded apparently universal approval. This plan was the result of circumstances to some extent. The impression had at first arisen in Rochester and its vicinity that the National Liberal League proposed only to hold a mass meeting, analogous to that which had been held in August at Wolcott Grove, N. Y., without any definite or specific purpose beyond having a good time and giving a chance for everybody to talk on any and all subjects. In order to meet this local expectation as far as possible, and yet accomplish the important work of the Congress, it was decided to devote part of the time to business and part also to general free discussion and conference; and notice of this intention was very early sent to the local committee of arrangements. Accordingly this plan was carried into execution. The four day-sessions of Friday and Saturday were reserved for the business of the League, which was transacted with admirable order, precision, and good judgment; while the evenings of Friday and Saturday, and the whole of Sunday, were devoted to addresses, speeches, etc., without any intention to restrict the range of topics within prescribed limits. Under the circumstances, no other course was possible; and the general feeling at the close of the convention was that, notwithstanding some disadvantages inseparable from a perfectly free platform, the advantages far outweighed them. Nobody, so far as we know, failed to perceive that the freedom of the platform was jealously preserved, and that perfect freedom of speech, even if sometimes abused in the heat of excitement, supplies a corrective for all mistakes of this sort far better than that of a coercive or repressive policy. There were no offensive personalities, no violations of decorum or courtesy; and if extreme views in different directions were made sometimes more prominent or expressed more aggressively than good taste would warrant, they offset each other, and were understood by all intelligent listeners to express the mind of the speakers individually, and not of the Congress. Christian and non-Christian, materialist and spiritualist, theist and atheist, all received respectful hearing without interruption, and without any other rebuke than that of temperate mutual criticism; and in this particular, as we said at the time, the National Liberal League set a greatly needed and practical lesson of respect for freedom for which one would apply in vain at the door of any church in Christendom.

There were points of peculiar interest in this convention.

1. Some of the most distinguished speakers who had given encouragement to expect their presence failed to appear. Col. Ingersoll was absent for unexplained reasons; Mr. Underwood was taken severely sick, and was obliged to leave Rochester for his home; Rabbi Landsberg cancelled his engagement; Mr. Seaver was detained in Boston in consequence of being assaulted on the street by a ruffian who probably mistook him for somebody else; and there were similar disappointments in several other cases. Col. Ingersoll's absence, in particular, was the cause of intense chagrin to the Rochester public, and threatened to diminish the audiences materially. But no such effect was visible. If he had lectured on Sunday evening, as was hoped, it would have been impossible to get many more into the large Corinthian Hall than were actually present. Nothing was more noticeable or more encouraging, in our own view of the case, than the singular independence of great names evinced by this convention. There were good speakers, and enough of them; but none of them possessed such wide reputations as would account for the constant growth in the size of the audiences. The causes of this growth were evidently deeper than any man's reputation; they were apparent in the intensity of interest that shone on every one of those crowded, eagerly attentive faces, as speaker after speaker struck the key-note of the occasion in the demand for equal rights for all. We have attended many liberal conventions before this; but never have we seen one whose strength was so manifestly that of the audience rather than of the platform—of the people rather than of the speakers.

2. In the peculiarity we have just noticed lies the chief significance of this occasion. Politicians had nothing to do with shaping the political action of the Congress; it was the action of the people themselves, and it turned on questions of real politics, not of mere electioneering or office-holding. Says the Hartford Courant in a recent issue:—

A celebrated Englishman who has recently been travelling extensively in this country was asked what had most impressed him in his intercourse with the people. He replied, "The lack of interest in politics." He was answered that, if he were here during a Presidential election, he would not complain of any want of excitement; the people take their interest in politics periodically and spasmodically.

"Ah," said the Englishman, "I did not mean the interest in elections; I meant interest in politics."

What an Englishman or a continental man understands as politics scarcely exists in the United States. Possibly the conception of nine-tenths of the voters of politics is in undivorceable connection with office. Nearly all the talk of a group of men who are called politicians, when they talk, is of offices or candidates; great policies are rarely discussed. Thus it happens that "politics" has become in the main a merely personal matter; and the intelligent Englishman finds our "politics" only a struggle between the "ins" and the "outs."

With a permanent civil service, the officers of which are selected solely on account of intelligence and honesty, and whose tenure is not liable to be disturbed by anything except their own unfitness, intriguing for office will no longer be "politics"; and we may hope that the voters will turn their attention to real politics.

It was "real politics" alone which gave all its significance to the Rochester Congress. Its wisdom in action was strikingly conspicuous, and of such a character that sagacious students of signs of the times will pay great heed to it. Probably for the first time in American history, the platform of a political convention commanded and concentrated its chief attention, to the comparative disregard of candidates. We were filled with admiration in noting the exceeding good sense with which the Congress treated the paramount subject of the principles that should constitute its collective word to the American public. If we had any misgiving before the meeting, it was lest private hobbies should be thrust forward so pertinaciously as to excite heated controversy, and perhaps irremediable division,—lest the platform should be loaded down with planks that would scatter, and not unite the liberal party. All such apprehensions proved to be absurd. With marvellous unanimity, the Congress agreed on the policy of saying just enough, and not too much; it saw the transcendent importance of the three principles of the "Call," and showed no disposition to break their formidable force by hasty and ill-considered additions. On this point great earnestness of purpose was apparent, and no little enthusiasm; and the result is that the platform is a bold challenge of the public attention to principles which can be sneered at by no one, but are fated to command more and more public respect as time goes on. The future belongs to us, liberal friends, if succeeding conventions shall exhibit equal wisdom. A party which plants itself resolutely on those great ideas, adheres to them inflexibly, and works for them actively and public-spiritedly, is just as certain by and by to sweep the country as the moon is certain to command the tides. Ideas govern at last; and these ideas will eventually make liberalism omnipotent in the United States. It is difficult not to indulge the exuberance of satisfaction we feel over the adoption of those terse, invincible, and magnificent principles as a basis of political action. There is unfurled a flag which will sooner or later attract every noble spirit in the country to its defence; all that is wanted is that its supporters shall bear it onward to predestined victory by proving themselves worthy of its glorious cause.

2. No less conspicuous was the wisdom of the Congress in dealing with the question of candidates. Several of the speakers expressed the desire to nominate a distinguished liberal on the spot, as a Presidential candidate who would well represent the platform before the country at large; but the prevailing temper of the Congress was to honor no man with their nomination who did not in turn honor them and their objects by his personal presence, or at least by a direct declaration of his consent to represent them. There was great unanimity in the conclusion to postpone all nominations for the present, and this was eminently wise. One or two years hence, it will be much easier than it is to-day to nominate candidates who are willing to bear the brunt of opposition, make the sacrifices demanded, and bear the standard of a new and of course unpopular party; but it would be hardly reasonable to expect these sacrifices until the liberals themselves have proved their own earnestness by becoming far more widely and actively organized.

3. This is the inexorable condition of real political influence. A splendid beginning has been made, but it must be persistently followed up in order to reap its advantages. Until Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues have been multiplied in every State, and thus a large delegate constituency has been ensured for the Annual Congresses of the National Liberal League, the importance of this movement cannot possibly be comprehended by the "average man." Politicians of the common sort, and the ordinary secular journals which never look beneath the surface of passing events, will be unable to discern the enormous vitality of this movement until they see it numerically powerful. Blind as bats to the power of ideas, and too ignorant to distinguish an acorn from a pebble, they will be likely to perceive no more significance in the Liberal League movement than in the famous convention of the "Three Tailors of Tooley Street," who met in a garret and issued a stately pronouncement beginning—"We, the People of England." One must pardon the stupidity of such critics, because they really do not know any better, and because there is some honest excuse for the contempt they entertain for the liberal party, in the fact that the liberal party are only just beginning to acquire sufficient self-respect to demand the legal recognition of their equal rights. Nobody respects a man who does not respect himself; and no man can be supposed to respect himself very much who submits silently to gross violations of his equal rights by the majority. All the instincts of manhood rebel against such ignominious submission to oppression; and the one feature in the Rochester Congress which marked the birth of a new and mighty moral power was the evident dawning determination to submit to the oppression of the "clerical policy" no longer. That feature of it filled our own soul with joy. Contented slaves will remain slaves forever; but discontent with slavery is the fountain of freedom. It is the spread of this noble discontent which will be the best service rendered by the Rochester Congress; and the rapidity with which it spreads will be accurately measured by the rapidity with which new Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues are organized.

4. To this conclusion, then, are we brought: the Rochester Congress must not be the end of a movement, but only its beginning. Other conventions are held, and very profitably held, too, for the simple discussion and presentation of ideas, without the least attempt to secure their practical embodiment in action. But this convention, adding action to thought, looks to results. Its object is to break the yoke of ecclesiasticism which now, heavy but unheeded, presses the neck of every unorthodox citizen of the United States,—to rouse him to a determined vindication of his equal rights before the law,—and to secure a political condition which shall make these equal rights of all, Orthodox and unorthodox alike, respected in theory and in fact. All whose souls cry amen to this great purpose will do their utmost to call RATIFICATION MEETINGS in their respective neighborhoods, for the purpose of organizing Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, ratifying the political platform of the National League, initiating an active local agitation in its favor, and securing a great delegate constituency for the nominating Congress of next year. This will probably be held in that Western city which shall offer to the National Liberal League the most encouragement and local coöperation, and furnish the most advantageous field of operations. But meanwhile let every Local League already formed hold a special Ratification Meeting, and get its proceedings published in every journal that will print the report; and where no Local League exists, let one be organized forthwith for the express purpose of ratifying the new platform and winning votes to its support. Men and women of America who comprehend the transcendent issues staked on the success of secular government, we call upon you earnestly to enlist in this great cause, and do some unselfish work on its behalf for the sake of our common country and your own posterity!

MISS MARTINEAU'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

We are very glad to receive the following letter from Mr. Chadwick, which will be read with great interest:—

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your correspondent in THE INDEX of Oct. 25 seems to be much displeased with my criticism of Harriet Martineau's Autobiography which appeared in the second number of the Radical Review. Her first issue with me is that, "calling in question the reliability of Miss Martineau's memory of certain transactions," I said: "But they are generally such as she was quite willing to forget." But this was written of literary performances which Miss Martineau herself declares she had forgotten. It was she who called in question the reliability of her memory. That the performances forgotten generally were such as she was quite willing to forget, she is again my witness, as your correspondent will discover on referring to the instances in question.

Her next issue with me is in regard to Dr. Channing. I am supposed to be "a little stung" by Miss Martineau's treatment of him because I am "a thorough-going Unitarian." As this is the first time I have ever appeared in this character, I find it very amusing. My Unitarian orthodoxy has always been considered doubtful. And yet there is a sense in which "a thorough-going radical" may be "a thorough-going Unitarian," and in this sense I am one, if I understand myself. Your correspondent cannot believe that Harriet Martineau "would take a man down because he was a Unitarian." To me it seems that Harriet Martineau could not help doing so; and that any person who can read her book and not see that she was intensely prejudiced against the Unitarians is incapable of any honest literary judgment. A self-styled "thorough-going radical" has sometimes quite as much sectarian bias as any thorough-going Unitarian, even in the offensive sense of your correspondent.

She claims that "Harriet Martineau could teach even so great a man as Dr. Channing something about religious liberty, for she had attained to a freedom of thought almost without parallel in all the world, and was untrammelled by any sort of creed whatever." This last sentence may be true of the Harriet Martineau of 1851, when the Atkinson letters appeared; but in 1855 Miss Martineau was quite as good a Unitarian as Dr. Channing. As to her "unparalleled freedom," your correspondent's reading must be very narrow to render such a judgment possible; and if her reading had included Dr. Channing's life, I doubt if she would think that Miss Martineau could teach him anything about religious liberty.

But my principal offence, it seems, consists in saying that Miss Martineau "denies that she is atheistic." This is "to show a white feather of timidity." On the contrary, it is simply stating the truth, as I was bound to do. She says expressly (Vol. II. p. 42) that she was "an atheist in the vulgar sense,—that of rejecting the popular theology; but not in the philosophical sense of denying a First Cause." Your correspondent says truly that "'J. W. C.' knows that Harriet Martineau was an atheist in the common acceptance of the term." She is right there. But why should I be limited to the common acceptance of the term any more than Miss Martineau?

I am not aware of any least anxiety to bulldoze Miss Martineau into the ranks of theism. Though she were truly atheistic, I should not feel obliged to say, "Poor God, with nobody to help him!" If she were atheistic in the profoundest sense, I should regret the limitation of her genius which compelled her to be so. But this she never was. Therefore I said so; not on God's account, or on Miss Martineau's, but for the sake of simple truth. If something else had been the truth, I should have stated it just as frankly. God is quite able to take care of himself, I fancy, without the assistance of Miss Martineau or even your Milwaukee correspondent.

All of which is respectfully submitted,

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 29, 1877.

[CONCLUDED FROM PAGE 533.]

structure was permeated with the worm-holes of evil. The liberals have a great work before them. They should educate the people; teach a morality based upon science; show that the neglect of natural laws shall be punished here. They must popularize science. "Do unto others as ye would that others should do unto you" was not a religious maxim, but a maxim of life. The doctrine of humanity would work out man's salvation. Christianity had departed from the excellent precepts of its Founder. The new ideal was more beautiful, more inspiring, but it only needed some one to spread it abroad. The liberals had a strong enemy to contend against. All should start out for a better life and a nobler existence.

The remainder of the evening was devoted to ten-minute speeches by Mr. Verity, of Cambridge, Dr. Brown, of Binghamton, Mr. Bretzner, of New Lebanon, Mr. Evans, of Toronto, Mr. Marsh, of Rochester, and many others. Mr. Evans expressed himself as delighted and astonished by the size of the audiences, and their enthusiastic response to liberal ideas. He should return to Canada to report that the Congress had been a wonderful success, and to encourage his own countrymen to greater efforts in the same cause. He very warmly thanked the League for its kind reception of himself and his fellow-delegate, Mr. Hargrave; and the audience loudly applauded the brief but cordial response to Mr. Evans' remarks made by the President.

Before adjourning, the President made a short closing speech. He urged those present to go to their homes to work, and not to slumber,—to multiply ratification meetings on behalf of the new platform, and to form new local auxiliary Leagues everywhere in support of the National League. Our cause, he said, was glorious beyond our own conception; it was a vaster movement than we ourselves comprehended, and the future belonged to it. Let us kindly, but resolutely, carry it forward, and deserve well of the Republic by our enlightened devotion to its true prosperity and public virtue.

The Congress then adjourned sine die.

Communications.

ORGANIZATION.

TO THOSE WHO FAVOR EQUAL RIGHTS FOR ALL.

At the National Liberal Congress held at Rochester, Oct. 26, 27, and 28, a platform was adopted which, I believe, future generations will regard as the second declaration of American Independence. The first duty of every friend of freedom should be to see that this platform has a wide circulation. Go to your local editor and request its publication; and if your request is refused, raise sufficient funds to pay for its insertion; for, depend upon it, when the people understand the full import of that document, those of them who are at heart American will indorse it. The three words that best represent it are EDUCATION, LIBERTY, EQUALITY. I repeat, friends of equal rights for all, see that it has a wide circulation.

At the Congress there was appointed a national Executive Committee, consisting of one member from each State and Territory, whose special duty is to organize Local Liberal Leagues in the various towns throughout the country. If we would succeed in building up a national political party, upon our platform of freedom, that shall be felt at the next Presidential election, we must engage in this work with a zeal and earnestness worthy of our principles.

As chairman of that committee, I desire to request each member of the committee at once to appoint, as the National Liberal League Constitution requires, four persons from his State or Territory to act with him as a State or territorial sub-committee, the duties of which are very important and are laid down in the National League Constitution. I desire that during the next thirty days these State and territorial committees may be appointed, so that we may be prepared to go to work immediately.

As it is proposed next year at our Annual Congress to nominate a President and Vice-President for 1880, it is very important that Local Liberal Leagues be organized everywhere, and delegates elected for that Congress. I hope at an early day the Directors may fix upon the time and place for holding the Second Annual Congress, and all who indorse our platform may go to work to make it one of the most important National Conventions ever held in the United States. I think by indefatigable work we can by that time have organized a thousand Local Liberal Leagues which would give us a representation of five thousand delegates.

With such a Congress, representing the intelligence, virtue, and patriotism of the nation, we could put into the field a ticket headed by some such man as Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, and go to the American people with great prospect of success. Will every friend of liberty and the equal rights of man, including women, work for so glorious an achievement?

H. L. GREEN,

Ch. Ex. Comm. N. L. L.

RADICAL THEOLOGY.

I have for some time ceased to ask anyone to either affirm or deny God; and decline to respond unqualifiedly to peremptory theological queries. If one asks me, "Do you believe in God?" I will answer, "Define God; I can then tell whether I believe in him. Take fifty years for it; the creature cannot be expected to comprehend and set forth in adequate language the Creator in less time than that; meanwhile I will go about my business."

I have never met the man who absolutely denied gods; in other words, all can see that the word god exists (with many variations), and all must know that words never exist without some meaning accompanying them. But when we come to ask, What, precisely, do all these names of supernatural personations mean? when we ask this, we are repulsed from all sides; no two agree in their definitions. We find, in fact, that there is no Orthodox theology. So-called orthodoxy is but a local fashion; it will not bear transportation. Travel a few days in any direction and the correct knowledge of theology is no longer correct, but is crowded out by a different kind.

In fact, when we see, the world over, how each individual mind and each mental type always provides itself with its own peculiar theological forms, we are forced to look upon the study of theology as in reality the study of human nature. I would as soon think of arguing seriously in denial of the existence of nixes and kobolds as in denial of gods and devils. I place all superhuman impersonations in the same category, as far as objective reality is concerned; they do all exist in the human mind. As to the universal belief in extra human correspondences to all egotistic forces, it is useless to attempt to disturb that. I object only to forced or ultra literal interpretations thereof. The almost infinite diversity of meaning which many men in many moods have sought to express by their multifarious theologies, is something which is not to be ignored, but rather studied in a scientific and sympathetic spirit.

So many men, so many gods, and truth in each and all. The God (for example) of Jonathan Edwards is a stern and cruel being against whom the humanitarian spirit rebels; nevertheless we are forced to confess him a too truthful emphasis of certain aspects of existence,—the pitilessness of force, the stringency of natural conditions, the grinding of supply and demand, the inevitable sequence of penalties, the hopelessness of forgiveness for too wide departures from the path of safety. The strength of the conception is in its full recognition of the supreme necessity to which we are all reminded sooner or later that we must bow; its weakness is in its pessimistic animus. The Calvinistic God was composed by exiles from beauty and happiness, he is too much the bitter product of cloudy skies and hypochondria. The fact of his having been as popular as he has been, shows what a vast amount of sin and misery the world has known, and should soften our hearts into pity rather than harden them in indignation. There is little in him to attract love; and indeed there is little pretence of loving him; other divine images have been necessary as objects of the world's affection. Fear God and love Jesus and Mary.

So many desires in the heart, so many ambitions and questionings in the brain, so many celestial or infernal personations will there be to answer them. God, in one of his leading rôles, is the patron of success; the incarnation of conservatism and law and order; the sanctifier of permanent power. In this respect Satan is his contrast, the God of the radicals, the defeated party, the natural rebels to whom capricious might is no right. Why is Jesus beloved even to this day and in spite of the sacerdotal distortion of which he has been victim? Because of his anti-theological quality; his Satanic (Promethean) affiliation was unmistakable; he was all radical, the friend of man, the defiant of the priest-monopolized incarnation of power in whose name he was crushed. All benefactors of mankind have been considered essentially Satanic by the cringing virtue and orthodoxy of their time; the friends and self-appointed agents of a good and powerful God have in all times been satisfied that the inevitable lot of the masses was to be bad, miserable, and oppressed, and all attempts at elevating them have been stigmatized, and if possible repressed, as devilish revolts against fixed conditions and the holy authority of God and his ministers. Alas! there is truth in this too; God is on the side of the strongest battalions; the cause of the weak, unfortunate, erring millions, often seems finally hopeless, and their closest sympathizer is sometimes tempted to exclaim in revulsion of despair: "Go to; let us be even as others, let us ally ourselves with power. The many are weak and bad, therefore they have no rights; let us rule them and tax them; let us eat them even as they would us if they could. Let the slow development of the race take its natural course, and meanwhile let us fight our way through as the rest do."

But this mood does not last. The true radical is so not by virtue of arguments or facts, but because it is his born nature. Would you ask his motive? It is love; and thereby is he, peacefullest of men, sworn fighter against the kingdom of hatred and force.

The gods are innumerable; they reflect every shade of human feeling. There is the cant god of him who swears or prays by rote,—God reduced to the minimum of significance, we may term this. There is the conventional god, the god of good society, patronized by the churches and constituting a sort of guaranty fund for the Pharisaism of the country. Then there is le bon Dieu of the Frenchman,—a happy, if not a very sublime, conception. He is not exactly the father of the human race, but rather their grandfather. He is a little superannuated, but his benevolence is inexhaustible; one may even feel a little affection for him without being accused of blasphemy or undue familiarity. Sometimes, in a moment of petulance, his grandchildren twit him of being little better than an old humbug; but he bears with them, knowing that they will believe in him as joyously and devoutly as ever soon as things go smooth again.

What multitudes of gods! What a God Philip of Spain, the heretic-roaster, must have had! How would you go about it to blaspheme or insult such a deity?

What a lovable God Fénelon worshipped! And yet Philip and Fénelon were alike good Catholics,—which shows how unimportant names are.

Every man's god is, at final research, an enlarged or idealized or intensified image of himself. Think of gods in this common-sense way and you will have little fear of blaspheming—some men's gods; and at the same time you will feel a profound respect for those of others. It is all a matter of personal taste and preference.

The attitude of the philosophical atheist is perhaps the most rational that can be taken. It is certainly the most modest, and is not necessarily the least reverent. He simply refrains from making any affirmations concerning the existence or nature of God. He does not assert that there is no personal deity or deities, but that we know nothing of any. He further asserts that if there be a supreme personal ruler of the universe, he must be, necessarily, of all things, the farthest removed from our comprehension, and of all things, what we cannot profess to describe. He is the unknown. Nothing in this world is quite so absurd, childish, and irreverent, as the various cut-and-dried schemes in which professional theologians pretend to display God's personal character, his inmost motives, and his general policy, together with a more or less extended history of his varying success in carrying out his designs. All theology, taken literally, is mere nursery-talk; although it has undoubtedly served as vehicle for some of the profoundest studies upon the nature and fortunes of man.

Many seem to make the existence of a man-shaped deity the essential pivot in the everlasting query as to the goodness or badness of the world. But there is no such real relation; the world is good or bad just as we make it. There is no system of theology that suffices in itself to make men happy; if there were, all men would eagerly accept it. A happy man will have a good and indulgent god; misery sharp and protracted enough will make almost any man suspect that the genius of the world is evil and that man is its puny victim.

It certainly is never necessary to lose a poetic faith in all the mythologies; they are the sublimated and condensed experience and insight of the past,—and genuine poetic faith in them seems to me as valid and worthy as any positive rigid forms of belief. In fact, creed seems generally to be arrested poetry,—the mark left by the ebbing wave. I believe in all the gods,—much as I do in all the men; some suit me better than others; all are interesting; none are entirely bad, nor entirely without a basis in truth. But when theology—any theology—puts forth its claims to be considered an exact science,—excuse me.

G. E. TUFTS.

BINGHAMTON, N.Y.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

No. XVIII.

The segmentation of the cube into eight cubules furnishing, as was shown in the preceding article, the logical basis of the musical octave (falling down practically to seven, and these repleated, by intercalation, to twelve), it follows from the fact of segmentation, that the cubules (taken to represent, analogically, domains of science) fall apart, become disengaged or free, and may now be arranged in a linear scale or single file. Indeed, this linear order, this gamut or scale, as the ultimate and practical arrangement, is already symbolically foreshadowed within the primitive cube by that diagonalism which is always and everywhere the type of practical nature. Let an ideal cord be stretched from a given corner of a cube through the body of the cube to the remotest and opposite corner, and we have the analogue and origin of the scalar arrangement or musical register along which the separate cubules come to be arranged, by some crowding-and-accommodation. This necessity for crowding-and-accommodation, inherently unavoidable (in all actuality or concreteness), is the reason why the musical intervals are unevenly distributed, and can never be adjusted otherwise than by a certain tempering,—analogue of that inexhaustible good temper, upon which the social adjustments and harmonies of society must ultimately rest, after all the exactitudes of scientific social solution. Because, however, Nature perpetually escapes from the trammels of scientific exactitude and bursts into the freedom of art, that is no sufficient reason why the exactitudes of scientism should be discarded or recklessly overleaped. Because musical execution rises again into spontaneity, after a thorough training in "harmony," that is no reason why the laws of "harmony" should never be studied. The primitive and untrained spontaneity in music is the naturism of music (singing and playing by ear). This gives way, in the true course of the evolution of musical education, to the study of the laws of "harmony." That is the scientism of music. After this basis of pure knowledge is laid in, which at first trammels and hinders the naturalism exercitatio, the spontaneity is again let in and accustomed to move within the limits and mathematical conditionings so furnished; and then we rise into the domain of true art. We have then a trained and rationalized spontaneity in the place of the unregulated exuberance of mere Nature. All art which ignores, dodges, or overthrows the middle step, the abstract and pure scientism, is pseud-art; whether we are talking of music, of the classification of the sciences, or of whatsoever; for everything whatsoever pursues these three degrees—naturism, scientism, artism—if it fulfils its normal destiny. Otherwise, it is aborted. Still, pseud-art may very closely approximate true art, as in Blind Tom; and provisionally, it is practically available as a matrix of true art; a necessary basis or ground, and even as an indispensable early substitute.

Pseud-art and true art, or high art, concur in the fact that they are both practical, as contrasted with mere scientism or pure theory. They are the LOW PRACTICAL and the HIGH PRACTICAL; but still both practical; and as the whole of life and of being itself culminates in uses, practicality is a great matter. We can subsist, after a manner, upon mere naturism or the Low Practical; we starve on mere Scientism (there is no real music in the mere mathematics of music); but we only truly live in the High Practical, where the natural spontaneity is based on and guided by scientism.

It is in this sense, as the Low Practical, but still the Practical, that I accord the practical superiority to Wakeman's system of classification (A Complete and Positive Classification of the Sciences—For the use of the New York Liberal Club) over any other system as yet published. By this I mean Comte and Wakeman, as Wakeman has absorbed the labors of Comte on this subject. On the other hand, Elsberg, absorbing Spencer and Haeckel in a similar way, stands representative, implicitly, for the scientism of classification. His fundamental discriminations are for thinkers; for the men of science as such, and do not pertain to the familiar hand-book of this classification for the practical initiation of the people at large into a curriculum of scientific education which is the leading and greatly-to-be-commended purpose of Mr. Wakeman and the positivists. For this grand popular educational purpose, the school of positivism and "the church of humanity" are to be congratulated upon the possession of such a treasure as this new positivistic tabulation of the sciences by Wakeman really is; and scientific men at large cannot afford to be ignorant of it.

The high practical, and in its connection, the integral or all-embracing and every-way aspected system of the classification of the sciences, is, in fine, universalological, and will be evolved by the further elaboration of universalology itself. What has now been said justifies, in a sense, the position taken by J. Stuart Mill, that there are many possible methods of classifying the sciences, one preferable for one purpose, and another for another. But it by no means justifies his licentious indifference on the subject. It is not true that there are many systems equally good. There is but one system which is truly best for the given purpose, and there are but the two or three great leading purposes. There is no more legitimate choice in the order in which the sciences shall be placed, in ascending scale, than there is in the order in which the musical notes shall be placed in the musical gamut. The instinct of the positivists is perfectly right on this subject; and Spencer is wrong. It is the universalological theorem, that whatsoever in the universe, that is orderly, is arranged in gamuts and octaves and registers after the type of music; and that all this, together with music itself, rests on and is derived from the regular or axiated segmentation of the globe and cube, as the two governing geometrical forms. With this perception, classification has a meaning; without it, it remains a chaotic agglomeration of chance observations only more or less approximately true.

One of Elsberg's divisions of the sciences is into the (1) General and (2) Special sciences, a discrimination which all tacitly adopt, but which other classifiers have treated as so obvious that it needed no mention. We shall see why it is so obvious if we understand that Generality relates to the total rotundity, as, for example, to the whole apple, and such minor divisions as can be made without destroying the rotundity, as when we pare the apple; as Speciality relates to the apple cut through the centre, divided into halves, quarters, and eighths, and presenting planes faces or facets, in place of rotundoid or general divisions. We find, in this difference, the origin of the thoughts which are consigned to the two words genera, allied with general, and species, allied with special, the two catch-words and heads, respectively, of the whole dominion of classification. Genus being totalist or whole-like, generates, or contains, and produces from its partition, or parturition, the species or face-presence, which is minor, and derivative from it. (Cf. Latin species, face.)

Another of Elsberg's divisions is into (1) Descriptive, and (2) Comparative. His descriptive is what I have called monospheric (of the single sphere); so that here we are in the difference to which I have given the names: Monospherology and Comparology. This is as when we consider the cut-up of the one apple, in whatsoever ways, on the one hand, and the cut-up of two or more apples, that of the one repeating, with some modification, that of the other on the other hand. In the case of comparology (comparative science), therefore, it is more specifically the schema of the cut-up itself which is under consideration, rather than either apple; and so we become transcendental, or pass into the science of classification, as such, and beyond the proper science of the things classified. Neither Comte, nor Spencer, nor Wakeman makes any provision for comparative science, which traverses all other sciences or sciences, finding identity of principles and laws (the substance or subject-matter of science) in different spheres, as the mathematician finds the same formula applicable to wholly different groups of phenomena.

The third of Elsberg's preliminary divisions distributes the sciences, as we have previously noticed, into (1) Aspectual, for which I have more recently adopted the term Ingrediential sciences, and (2) Departmental. Chemistry and psychology, for example, deal in a special and predominant degree with matter, substance, stuff, or material, and less with considerations of form; while astronomy, anatomy, and the like, are peculiarly morphological and departmental.

The full significance and importance of these several preliminary divisions of the sciences does not appear at once, nor until we enter upon the higher phases of the science of classification, properly so-called. It may be observed that the aspectual or ingrediential view of science conducts quite directly to comparology, or makes the true basis of comparative science by the traverse thus instituted of the diverse departments of science. The sameness of substance in different departments of being introduces, in other words, a new ground of unity, and so a cross-distribution, in the nature of comparison.

Recurring to the question of gamut or scale in the distribution of the sciences, Spencer wrote his essay on "The Genesis of Science" expressly, among other things, to show that "the sciences cannot be rationally arranged in serial order," and for contesting the propriety of Comte's assumption of this order. In this I have said that Spencer was wrong. I am not unmindful of the trenchant force of his criticism upon Comte's assumption that we proceed, in the development of the sciences from the general to the special. I agree with him (Spencer) that "it might contrariwise be asserted, that commencing with the complex and the special, mankind have progressed step by step to a knowledge of greater simplicity and wider generality." And especially I agree with him, that Comte's doctrine in this matter "is only a half-truth"; and that "neither proposition is correct by itself," and that "the actuality is expressed only by putting the two together" and that "the progress of science is duplex; it is at once from the special to the general, and from the general to the special; it is analytical and synthetical at the same time." But all of this does not authorize the denial that this evolution proceeds, on the whole, along a given line or track; any more than the fact that we put one foot before the other, and then the other before it, counterbalances the fact, that by this very alternation, we do walk; and do so, along a seriated pathway, and in a given direction. Neither does Mr. Spencer's other view, true and important as it is, of the tri-dimensionality of the primitive ideal outlay, countervail the fact that the general progression is along a jagged diagonal, as has been expounded above.

And, on the whole, I have numerous reasons which cannot be adduced here, for accepting Comte's distinct of the true order, as better than his reasons, like the judge who often decides right and reasons badly. The plain common-sense of mankind will perceive that the idea of constituting a science of society arose far later in human history than arithmetic for example. And so, Wakeman's revised and enlarged scale (upon that of Comte) will, I believe, in the main, stand the test of working experiment, despite the adverse criticism of Spencer, upon the rationality of "any serial order" in the arrangement of the sciences. I am not, however, to be understood as adopting it in all its details, as finally, but generally as the best extant epitome of the departmental sciences.

AN APPEAL TO LIBERALS ON THE GREAT NEED OF THE HOUR.

The great need of the world to-day is a higher standard and a more faithful practice of morality in all the relations of life. This, I repeat, is the one great need of the world to-day; and whatever system of belief (whether it be called religion or known by any other name) that is working to this end, is to be hailed as a friend of mankind and a gospel of righteousness. If liberalism is doing this—if it is elevating man's moral ideal and promoting the practice of those cardinal virtues on which social integrity and happiness rest,—then it is entitled to the sympathy and aid of all philanthropists. If liberalism is not doing this—if its prevailing tendency is not in the direction of a higher life, a more conscientious regard for duty both public and private,—it is not worthy the respect of any man or woman who is seeking to forward the cause of righteousness on earth.

On this subject I wish to be very explicit. The religions against which we Liberals protest as being false in philosophy and unfriendly to the advancement of civilization do teach morality in their way. Their methods may be false; their theories of morality may be unsound; but they do admonish men to be honest, upright, chaste, and benevolent. They do demand righteousness of their believers and condemn wrong. The teachers and followers of these systems may not at all practice the morality they profess; but still it forms a part of their belief, and shapes to some extent their conduct in life. Now, is liberalism doing, or preparing to do, this work of making men better in all the relations of society more successfully than those other systems that claim a monopoly in moralizing the world?

The answer to this question must in my opinion decide the fate of liberalism. If it is making men and women better citizens, purer husbands and wives, kinder fathers and mothers—if it is stimulating the nobler impulses of human nature,—then welcome it as a friend and patron of progress, and consecrate it at the altar of humanity. But if it is not doing this work, if it is lax in its demand for righteousness, if it is not holding up a higher standard of virtue for the conduct of life, let—"Weighed in the balance and found wanting"—be written over its pretensions.

I am not afraid to declare my moral creed. Neither am I afraid to declare that many who call themselves Liberals, and who are fellowshipped as Liberals, teach doctrines that are, in my judgment, subversive of the moral foundations of the civilization which we in this age enjoy and cherish. Many Liberals do the very thing which we condemn the Church for doing,—that is, they substitute belief for character, and let speculative opinions atone for immoral lives. I care much less what a man believes than how he lives. Still, I hold that it is eminently necessary that we have a correct view of life and its duties. The truest theory of man's moral relations must be the best basis of morality. But he who does right, though his system of belief be false, is a much greater benefactor to society than he whose conduct is immoral though his views of life are true.

I am eager to see liberalism put on the whole armor of righteousness, and battle against the sins that are degrading and damning man to-day. Let us dismiss some of our hostile feeling towards other religions and supply its place with a deeper interest in the improvement of society around us. It is a poor, pitiable way of living to do nothing but stand still and scowl and curse at orthodoxy. Yet this is all many Liberals ever do. They abuse the churches and the preachers incessantly, but they do not give the community in which they live any better example of a virtuous life than the priest-ridden victim whom they affect to commiserate.

If Liberals have been emancipated from the slavery of superstition that has so much retarded human progress, they ought to manifest the superior light they enjoy by leading better lives than their less fortunate neighbors. This is the logical result of their assumption; and liberalism is a fruitless pretension if it does not accomplish this end. I am very earnest on this subject, and desire to see Liberals everywhere give evidence of the faith that is within them. We are too slothful in discharging our duties, and too ready to combat other people's opinions. Let us come to the front in the work of elevating the standard of practical righteousness in society. The world is still debased by a multitude of sins and vices. In politics, fraud and corruption threaten to subvert our dearest liberties; in society, vice and crime multiply with alarming rapidity; in many homes, instead of those divine influences that should ever dwell in the family nursery to lead the tender lives of children to the light of virtue and happiness, only sensuality, ignorance, and all the loathsome forms of degradation are found. The cause of humanity everywhere cries aloud for aid. Will Liberals answer the call of duty and hasten to the rescue? H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo., Sept. 15, 1877.

THE INTEREST QUESTION.

SALEM, O., Oct. 12, 1877.

MR. ABBOT:

Sir,—In the discussion of the interest question, it seems to me that the main point has not been sufficiently emphasized,—that which makes it profitable to the borrower to pay interest for the use of money, sometimes even a high rate of interest. Bishop Ferretre ignores it altogether. According to him, it is just as well to have the use of one's money ten years hence as to-day.

It is well known that all performance is more effective, is productive of better results, if done at the right time than if done at some future time. Seed sown at the proper time will produce a better crop than if sown later. The crop harvested at the proper time will be of better quality and will suffer less waste than if harvested at any future time. There are a seed-time and harvest in all the affairs of life. Money will buy labor and enable us to have things done at the time when they will produce the most benefit. Money will buy goods at a time when they can be obtained on the most advantageous terms, thus enabling us to sell them at a profit. Money may enable us to start a profitable manufacture, or to embark in other profitable business now, and thus enable us to begin making a profit now instead of at some future time. Having the control of money gives us the power to seize time by the forelock.

It is taking a very narrow and superficial view of money to say that it is unproductive.

Money is society's acknowledgment that a service has been rendered to it by him to whom the money was first given, and it is the promise of society to return an equivalent for that service to him who presents the money. Labor judiciously expended is productive, goods judiciously used are productive, and money which gives us the control of these is practically productive.

But Bishop Ferretre will say that many who own money have not the ability or the enterprise to use it in a way to make it productive, and therefore they ought to be willing to allow some one else who can to have the use of it without charge. On the same principle he should require any one who owns any thing which he cannot himself utilize to give it away to some one who can: for instance, he who produces something which requires a subsequent process of which he is not master to render it available.

I can understand a person's denying the right of the individual to hold property; but, conceding the right to hold property, I cannot perceive the consistency of denying the right to claim payment for the use of it.

If the borrower makes a profit on the money which is lent him, why should he be unwilling to share the profit with the owner of the money? The result of doing away with interest would be to lock up capital or to induce the owners of it to employ it themselves, even when they lacked the ability to employ it to advantage, instead of lending it to those who had the requisite ability. After all, is it not best that a premium should be offered by society to the industrious, the intelligent, the provident, the self-denying?

Would it be equitable that the sluggard, the spendthrift, the self-indulgent, the procrastinator should in a measure be able to reap the advantages, without paying for them, earned by the industrious, the provident, the self-denying, and the forehanded?

Yours truly,

J. W. SULLIVAN.

[The above short article is full of condensed wisdom and truth, and we cordially say amen to it.—ED.]

A GREAT THEORY IN DANGER.

Among all the broad conceptions of modern science there is none that surpasses in grandeur the nebular hypothesis. It reaches back into an earlier period than even the history given by the inspired volume. It begins untold ages before creation; when the earth was not only formless and void, but had no separate entity, being part of a vast and shapeless concourse of atoms that had been scattered through space. According to this hypothesis, the original nebula from which the solar system was formed by condensation, may have had, and probably did have, a diameter comparable only with the inconceivable distances from us of the fixed stars. The elder Herschel has the credit of this magnificent theory, to which he was led by his telescopic studies of the nebulae. Laplace subjected it to the rigorous analysis of mathematics, and fully sustained it. One of our most eminent American mathematicians, some years ago, went carefully through Laplace's computations, and afterward said to a friend that while the theory answered the conditions of the problem, it was by no means to be regarded as the only possible solution. Nevertheless, it has gained a very wide acceptance, and has been used in partial support of other theories, such as that of evolution.

Since it was first put forth, the nebular hypothesis has passed through a crisis that threatened its overthrow. It had, from the first, to encounter the prejudice of ancient beliefs, but it steadily won its way among astronomers. But when the great telescope of Lord Rosse was turned toward many of the nebulae which had been classed as "irresolvable," that instrument separated them into star clusters; and the opinion gained ground that, if sufficient optical power could be applied, all the nebulae could thus be picked to pieces. With greater improvements in telescopes, that opinion was not justified. Then came the spectroscopic, with its astonishing train of discoveries. These, so to speak, set the nebular hypothesis on its legs again. The light of the unresolved star-mists was analyzed, and it was found to consist of glowing gases, such as form a large component in the outer atmosphere of the sun. On the other hand, these nebulous masses exhibited no metallic or mineral substances in a state of incandescence, as do the sun and the fixed stars. The inference, of course, was that the mineral constituents had not been raised to the degree of heat necessary to give light, because the mass was not sufficiently condensed; that we had before our eyes matter in process of being formed into suns with attendant planets, but as yet a primordial fire-mist in which the gases alone were luminous.

But some of the astronomical discoveries of the present year threaten the nebular hypothesis quite as much as did the earlier observations of Lord Rosse's telescope, while the recent testimony of the spectroscopic throws a doubt over the inferences that were so serviceable in supporting the great theory. To begin with, it has always been accounted one of the strongest points in the argument, that all the members of the solar system moved in the same direction around the sun, or, in the case of satellites, around their primaries; a direction which is also that of the rotation of the sun and planets. The chances against such uniformity being accidental, are so many to one, that the long row of figures which represents the proportion would be wearisome to the eye. For a while, however, there was a doubt as to this uniformity in respect to the satellites of Uranus. But closer observation showed that those satellites, though retrograde as to the ecliptic, were direct as to the equator. To explain this, it ought to be stated that their orbit is so far out of the usual plane of the planetary orbits as to be nearly at a right angle thereto. The new difficulty is with the satellite of Neptune. Professor Newcomb's recent tables show that its motion is decidedly retrograde, both as to equator and ecliptic. The fact is not at all fatal to the nebular hypothesis, but it is certainly not favorable.

The next of the recent objections (in the order of time) is the strange aspect of the new star in Cygnus, when latterly viewed through the spectroscopic. When that star was first observed several months ago, it was exceedingly brilliant. Its spectrum was like that of some of the fixed stars, and it was supposed to be one of them that had been rapidly formed by the condensation of its materials, causing it suddenly to blaze out where all before had been darkness. Here, then, was probably the quick formation of a sun from a previously invisible nebula. But the new star soon began to lose its light; it is growing fainter, week by week. Now it can be shown by calculation that if a star of the size of our sun were suddenly heated to incandescence, it would take several million years to cool. Therefore, this, which appeared like one of the fixed stars when first observed with the spectroscopic, could scarcely have been one. At present, when it is fading, its light is again examined, and, strange to say, it has entirely the appearance of being a planetary nebula. To meet the expectations of the friends of the great theory, this apparition ought to have begun as a nebula and ended as a fixed star; it has done precisely the reverse. True, Professor Lockyer says "the nebular hypothesis, in its grandeur and simplicity, remains untouched by these observations"; but it is not easy yet to bring the facts into line with the theory.

Last, and more formidable than the rest of these troublesome discoveries, come Professor Asaph Hall's new pets, the satellites of Mars, of which the inner one goes around that planet in seven hours and thirty-eight minutes, while the planet's own rotation on its axis requires more than twice that length of time. Manifestly, if the satellite was originally left out in the cold while Mars was cooling and contracting into shape, the speed of that little moon, in its orbit, should have been less, not more, than that of the rotation of the interior mass which ultimately became the planet. Professor Kirkwood says that something similar has been observed as to the interior ring of Saturn,—the third ring, with which astronomers have only become acquainted in recent years. It is suggested that the extra speed of the Martian satellite may be explained by supposing that, when it was part of a nebulous ring, it struck against some other portions of the ring, or was struck by them, so that it gained velocity at their expense. The pieces that were thus knocked out of time would fall inward, perhaps on the surface of Mars. Professor Kirkwood thinks that such a process is taking place in Saturn's rings. He adds these words: "Unless some such explanation as this can be given, the short period of the inner satellite will doubtless be regarded as a conclusive argument against the nebular hypothesis." Such words are the more startling, since they come from a mathematician and astronomer who has done good service for the nebular theory, by showing, among other things, that the distribution of the groups of asteroids is in strict and remarkable accord with its requirements.—Tribune, Oct. 9, 1877.

IN THE members of the Free Religious Association we have genuine specimens of the descendants of Diogenes. At high noon they are out, like their intellectual ancestor, with their little horn lanterns, in search of a religion. Claiming to be preeminently religious, they are not at all settled as to what religion is. They are in search of that valuable commodity. Of many minds, a motley crew, they grope at noonday, confident only that the world is a total eclipse. Sad would it be for the world if that were the case, and no other illumination at hand than that of these farthing rush-lights. If the blind lead the blind, according to the old proverb, how can they fall to fall into the ditch?—Zion's Herald.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every Liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MÜLLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Gailthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters &c., 6 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	3.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COERELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D., 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Magoon, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Sils Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	4.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahl. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
GREG'S (W. E.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbloss. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.25
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skellics.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Eye-View.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. I.	1.

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animals. Land, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with Dissection on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire. 2 vols. each.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols. each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIYART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Etymology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoon from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy, Doctrinal and Practical.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infidels and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROUTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.0

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROBESSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLLEN (H.) Spectral Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 26 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Tain. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Daryl, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamor, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Ope Ope.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada. And Mermaid.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.25
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Santorini.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 1877.

WHOLE No. 412.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

AN ABLE or more instructive paper than the opening essay of this issue was never, we think, published in THE INDEX. We commend it to all who can appreciate it.

ON SUNDAY afternoon, October 28, while the Rochester Congress was in session, the proceedings were considerably disturbed by a Catholic procession in the streets, which marched with a full band to consecrate a new "Church of the Holy Redeemer." What would have been said, if the Congress had marched in this noisy manner past the churches of Rochester while celebrating their worship?

PERSECUTION is not yet an old story in this country. Two Seventh-Day Baptists were recently fined $4 each in a town in Central Pennsylvania for working on Sunday. They refused to pay, and were sent to jail for four days. They claim that the State law of 1794 is unconstitutional, and that it is opposed to any Sabbath at all, since it abolishes the Sabbath of the Scripture and ordains a new one, which is really no Sabbath.

THE LATE Episcopal Convention in this city declared that "the clergy and laity of the Church should take an active interest in the education provided by the State with the purpose of infusing into it as much religious influence and instruction as possible, and that a joint committee of one bishop, one presbyter, and one layman be appointed to consider the matter." This is aggressive Christianity, aiming to subject the State to the Church as far as possible. Are the liberals going to suck their thumbs and go to sleep, or will they demand with energy that the principles of the Rochester platform shall be carried into effect?

How THE Catholic Church enters politics appears from two circulars. One was issued by the "Association de Notre Dame de Salut" in Paris, appointing a "Neuvaine et Triduum national" of public prayers for the success of the Ultramontanes at the elections of October 14. The other was issued by the "campaign committee" of Brooklyn, denouncing James Howell, Jr., candidate for Mayor, as an infidel and blasphemer of the Bible and the Virgin Mary, and declaring that "it is a sound political axiom that no country or nation or State can long exist without a distinct and positive recognition of divinity and attendant attributes." It is quite time to see that secular government is still only an ideal. Will you not help to realize it?

JOSEPH COOK, in one of his late "preludes," took pains to retail the vilest slanders of Thomas Paine, and to whoop like a savage over the misfortunes of "infidels," in connection with the sale at auction of the Paine Memorial Building. His eager credence of the worst possible of Paine, notwithstanding the vast preponderance of testimony in his favor, is so thoroughly in keeping with his own character as not in itself to be worthy even of the briefest comment; but when he adds, "There is evidence that his infidelity sowed the seeds of his bad habits," he invites a species of retort from which he is saved only by the self-respect which no gentleman forgets. We always pass unnoticed the cases of "clerical scandals" with which the daily papers teem, and prefer to leave to vulgar minds the unenviable distinction of attributing to [more belief or unbelief the vices which religion and "infidelity" alike condemn. If the question of truth as between Christianity and "infidelity" could be settled by a comparison of personal character between Christians and "infidels," the former would have far greater cause than the latter to hang their heads in shame. But we should scorn to attribute to Joseph Cook's Christianity the mean malignity of detraction, the loathsome delight in others' misfortunes, the disgusting offences against all magnanimity and decency, of which this "prelude" was an exhibition; his creed, little as we like it, gives no excuse for such things as these, and we credit them solely to the inherent coarseness and vulgarity of the man himself.

THE BOSTON Advertiser of November 8 (not a paper likely to go out of its way to do justice to "infidels") contained this editorial paragraph, which we commend particularly to those liberals who imagine that the National Liberal League is a useless organization, without any satisfactory reason for existence: "Texas has never been supposed to be a very religious community; but the current belief must arise from ignorance of the real fervor of the people when their notice is called to any case of immorality. Dr. S. I. Russell, one of the prominent men of Bell County, is an infidel. The other night he was taken from his bed to a wood ('inveigled into some woods,' another account says) by a company of men said to be led by members of a Baptist church, stripped and addressed thus: 'We know you are an honest man and a good physician, but we will tolerate no infidels in Bell County; so, by the help of God, we will stop your career of infidelity.' A hundred lashes were then laid upon his naked back. He was then freed, and a notice posted on the tree that hereafter infidelity in Bell County will be punished by the torch and halter. Sunday circuses, pocket revolvers freely used, and horse-thief hangings do not seem to these moralists to be contrary to a pure code, but they are afraid of brain power used against what they know to be necessary to social stability. There seems to be an excellent opening for public schools, besides the old-time missionary effort." We shall have something to say on this subject next week. Meanwhile we trust our readers will do a little hard thinking upon it on their own account.

THE CONVENTION of the Free Religious Association at New Haven, on November 8 and 9, was a very pleasant occasion. The meetings were held in Loomis' Temple of Music, which, as we were informed, seats about six or seven hundred persons. The morning and afternoon audiences of Friday were quite small; but on Thursday and Friday evenings the hall was nearly filled. The opening speakers of the four sessions were Mr. Frothingham, Mr. Potter, Miss Garlin, and Mr. Underwood; and addresses were also made by Col. T. W. Higginson, Rev. S. P. Putnam, Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith, Rabbi Wechsler, J. B. Stillman, Moritz Ellinger, and F. E. Abbot. Col. Higginson criticised the Liberal League movement in a way that showed how little he understands its real spirit or objects, misrepresenting it as growing out of a mere desire to "fight somebody," and betraying ignorance or disregard of the facts which have really created it. For instance, he declared positively that he "knew" that the statutes of Massachusetts do not require Bible-reading in the public schools; whereas not only is this expressly required by law, but the school regulations of some of the cities, at least, require the pupils to repeat the Lord's Prayer as an act of worship, and to commit portions of the Scriptures to memory. Direct and serious argument against the Liberal League is always welcome, since it gives the very opportunity we desire to make known the strength and justice of its cause; but we see neither intellectual nor moral utility in misrepresentation, whether conscious or unconscious. The New Haven audience have now heard both sides of the Liberal League movement presented; and a week from next Sunday they will have a chance to decide for themselves whether the Rochester platform is or is not worthy of their ratification. From the indications of sympathy with the more radical side of the case which we saw in this audience last Friday, we shall be much surprised if the conservative side gets many votes. A new spirit is beginning to stir the liberals to-day, and it will take more than anecdotes and persiflage to stop its spread.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman.....	Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
S. J. MATTHEWS.....	Monticello, Arkansas.
J. L. HATCH.....	San Francisco, California.
S. S. WALLIHA.....	South Water, Colorado.
HARWOOD G. DAY.....	Estherville, Iowa.
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....	Indianapolis, Indiana.
J. E. WALLACE.....	Florida, Florida.
MONROE A. BLANCHARD.....	New Orleans, Louisiana.
A. WARREN KELSEY.....	Portland, Maine.
FRANK J. MEAD.....	St. Louis, Missouri.
WILLIAM LITTLE.....	Minneapolis, Minnesota.
LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY.....	Manchester, New Hampshire.
J. WILLIAMS THORNE.....	Lincoln, Nebraska.
GEORGE LEWIS.....	Warren, North Carolina.
R. PETERSON.....	Providence, Rhode Island.
SAMUEL WATSON.....	Memphis, Tennessee.
ROBERT C. SPENCER.....	Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
WILLIAM H. SAWYER.....	Dorchester, Mass.
JOHN L. OUTLER.....	Quilman, Ga.
GEORGE M. WOOD.....	Washington, D. C.
H. L. GREEN.....	Salamanca, N. Y.

[The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.]

N. B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. NEWELL.....	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.....	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....	Irrington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. O. H. FROTHINGHAM.....	New York, N. Y.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.....	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. F. HALLLOWELL.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARSONS.....	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. B. F. FLETCHER.....	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.....	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZ.....	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEAY.....	Editor of the "Independent," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE.....	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT.....	Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....	Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD.....	Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER.....	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.....	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. R. S. MOCOMB.....	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER P. W. EVANS.....	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.....	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON.....	Tenafly, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....	Louisburgh, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE F. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.....	W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....	H. L. GREEN.
	D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....	J. H. HALL, Selma.
Arkansas.....	JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
California.....	H. MOULINBAUX, San Francisco.
Colorado.....	DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.....	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....	JOSEPH D. GORTZ, Greenville.
Florida.....	T. D. GIDDON, Enterprise.
Georgia.....	DR. A. A. BELL, Milledge.
Illinois.....	ERNEST PRUSSING, Chicago.
Indiana.....	L. C. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
Iowa.....	J. C. MICHELER, Adel.
Kansas.....	JOHN PARSONS, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....	B. S. CLARK, Wilkesville.
Louisiana.....	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....	M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
Maryland.....	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....	W. H. SAWYER, Boston.
Michigan.....	D. C. HAUSER, Battle Creek.
Minnesota.....	J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....	J. B. BODDEN, St. Louis.
Nebraska.....	L. W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln.
New Hampshire.....	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.....	H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....	W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....	SAMUEL GOLT, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.....	G. W. BALDWIN, Lewisville.
Rhode Island.....	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....	DR. E. H. FINCH, Chattanooga.
Texas.....	DR. A. DUNBAR, Greenville.
Vermont.....	B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....	S. SPALDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....	A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.....	D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
District of Columbia.....	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho.....	W. FROBOSH, Provo City.
Wyoming.....	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....	157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.....	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde. Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MISHICOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch. Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.

CHelsea, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohay.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]

Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lockhead, and others.

DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.

PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—[Officers not yet reported.]

Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urbino, John S. Verity.

PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.

Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. B. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. Abbot; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korps, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Glitz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.

Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. E. Norris, E. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]

Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, E. F. Shepard, and others.

St. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunner.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Elz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.

Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.

Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. B. B. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel E. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

A STRANGER wandered into a church in San Francisco, but the service not being of such a character as to agree with his peculiar temperament, he began to feel nervous and fidgety, and to wish he hadn't come in. At last the presiding officer remarked that "they would now proceed with the ordination service." The stranger picked up his hat and prepared to leave. "And," continued the minister, "after that is over there will be a big collation spread up-stairs, to which all are invited." The stranger settled back into his seat, and his hat dropped to the floor. To his neighbor, who had been eyeing him rather quizzically, he whispered, "I'll see this service out if it breaks every bone in my body."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Republican Taxation.

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE FIRST ANNUAL CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 28, 1877.

BY ELIZUR WRIGHT, OF BOSTON.

To the careful reader of our revolutionary history the wonder is, not so much at the success of the rebellion against British taxation, as that it did not result in a new monarchy, or a number of them. For though, with the opposition to foreign taxation without representation, there grew up a good deal of popular hatred of King George, and perhaps of kings in the abstract, there was little conception of the true nature of national republican government; that is, of "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people," or of that just method of taxation which is essential to its existence as defined by President Lincoln; and without which, whatever its form may be, it is but a monarchy minus the monarch.

Though in their elementary municipalities the colonies resorted to purely democratic and direct taxation, none of them seem to have discovered any injustice or absurdity in indirect taxation for colonial or national purposes. If they could have been fairly represented in the taxing body of the British nation, they would not have found fault with any indirectness in the method of collecting the tax.

What really resulted from the military success of our grandfathers, or great-grandfathers, was a union of certain groups of little democratic municipalities, under the name of States, into a nondescript nation, which, though not in form or fact a monarchy, had small right to be called a Republic, if we are to accept the famous definition made at Gettysburg.

I am not going to advocate direct taxation, or indeed perfect republicanism, as a sovereign remedy for all the ills to which human civilization is exposed. Those ills grow out of human imperfection. All men and women may be made equal before the law; but it is to be remembered that they will still be, by the nature of things, mentally, morally, and physically unequal. Under no possible form of government can indolence, improvidence, or vice escape want. All that the best government can do is to give to every one the best possible chance to develop the powers received from Nature, whether corporeal or mental. It is to this end that a good government should repress the industry of all parasites who seek to live and luxuriate surreptitiously and fraudulently on the labor of others. This class is by no means confined to the burglars, robbers, petty thieves, or plunders of society. It embraces multitudes of men whose methods of business are only partly fraudulent, and so obscurely so as to defy legal analysis or impeachment. Whenever a government resorts to indirectness in its methods of taxation it has the sympathy and is prone to fall into the power of this class. Of course it is no longer a government wholly for the people, but partly, if not mainly, for the parasites. Under all forms, this struggle of classes, wholly or partly parasitic, to grasp and wield government for their own purposes, is as old as history. They succeed just in proportion as they can get their ill-gotten gains protected, to themselves and their heirs, at the expense of those from whom they were fraudulently obtained. Indirect taxation is the atmosphere in which they best flourish. The comparative exemption from taxation of great wealth under all methods of indirect taxation increases the thirst for great wealth among the unscrupulous, and leads them to adopt in their private finances the indirect methods which they see so successful in the public.

After the adoption of the present Constitution the only hope of our country ever becoming a genuine Republic lay in the fact that it did not establish a Church or in any way chain opinion. It established simply a secular government in the sphere left to it by the groups of democratic municipalities called States. This abstention from tyranny over opinion, this establishment of the freedom of speech and of the press, was the great fortunate fact of the nation's infancy. It has resulted in the abolition of slavery; for abolitionism grew out of it, and could have grown out of no other soil. Not that abolitionism itself abolished slavery. The folly of the slaveholders did that. The Republican party shed rivers of blood rather than do it. But the pungent preaching of the abolitionists provoked the slaveholders to make pretensions which were intolerable to most people outside of the slave States, and resulted in a civil war in which the abolition of slavery became a military necessity. It is thus that when truth is left loose no evil is safe.

That giant iniquity being laid prostrate, we shall soon wake up to the fact that another wrong is flourishing in full vigor. If not a relic of barbarism it is a relic of the monarchy from which we sprang. Our Republic's method of nutrition is not worthy of a free government, but rather of a beast of prey. Its whole revenue is collected by indirectness. It does not draw its material resources from the persons it serves and protects according to their ability to pay, but rather according to their necessities of consumption. It taxes mouths rather than purses. It takes scarcely any thought whatever of the just and rightful incidence of the taxes which it exacts. There is, it is true, a possibility that in a nation property might be so distributed that consumption would be proportionate to income, in which case an indirect tax might fall on the people in proportion to their ability to pay; but there is no probability of such a thing. And if there were, there is another fatal objection to indirect taxation. Its incidence is neces-early clandestine; just as much so as if the tax-collectors were sent to the dwellings of the people with instructions to enter them while they were absent or sound asleep and deplete their wardrobes and store-closets to a certain extent. To tap the great arteries of exchange or trade and steal revenue by collusion with the merchants and manufacturers is the favorite method of kings, and in this respect our national government is rather monarchical than republican. If the great commercial distributors of the results of labor, foreign and domestic, can be brought into the arrangement by the faithful execution of what are called the Revenue Laws, it makes no difference to them, for they add the tax to the cost price of their goods, and charge their percentage of profit on the whole, cost and tax. Their advantage from thus seeming to pay the whole tax, is that, comparatively, they escape paying any tax at all.

It is the consumers who, generally without knowing it, pay the tax. This making people pay taxes without knowing it, whether the tax be just or unjust, leads to extravagance and disregard of the rights of the people on the part of their public servants. When the government gets its own revenue clandestinely, how can it be possible that its agents should not increase theirs clandestinely? Apparently an immorality lies at the foundation of the system.

I am well aware that the tariff taxes on foreign trade are thought by many to be justified by their effect on domestic industry. They are said to be for the protection of the home producer. But the encouragement of domestic industry by governmental subsidy is a wholly distinct question into which I do not now propose to enter, further than to say, it has nothing whatever to do with the mode of collecting the money wherewith industry is to be subsidized, and that subsidy by tariff, instead of by open, distinct, and definite bounty, has the special disadvantage, that it is about as likely to entice the home producer into a waste of his capital as to enrich him.

Indirect taxes on noxious products are also thought to tend to the suppression of vice. But this is a poor reliance in comparison with education and moral culture. If the government cannot by direct prohibition prevent the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks, for example, it had better charge all the expense they occasion it as a special direct tax on those who directly or indirectly derive a profit or income from such manufacture and sale, and thus drive the capital engaged out of the business. No really noxious business can flourish much if made to repair its own mischiefs. There is little cause of wonder that delirium tremens should rage as it does, when people who never taste alcohol or receive a cent of income from its sale as a beverage are as much taxed to build and run jails and almshouses as those who are made rich by it.

Nothing can be much plainer than that both openness and justice in taxation are essential to a government by the people and for the people. In civilization, as the race advances in the creation of material wealth by the use of natural forces and division of labor, property tends inevitably to distribute itself more and more unequally. And it is out of this unequal distribution of property that the expense, if not the necessity of government chiefly arises. If a man with the same family to support has twice the wealth of any of his neighbors around him, it probably costs government more than twice as much to protect his property as to protect that of one of his neighbors; perhaps four times as much. At any rate, a tax on him three or four times as large will not weigh so heavily on him as the smaller one on his neighbor. The principle of increasing the rate of the tax with the increase of the means, was once recognized by our government in the celebrated income tax occasioned by the war; and it is sad to think that the most equitable tax it ever laid was the first to be abolished after the war. Plainly, the mode of taxation should tend, as far as it justly can, to counteract the unequal distribution of wealth. The tendency of the indirect mode, which falls mostly according to the necessities of consumption, and not according to either wealth or income, is to aggravate the inequality of distribution. It is to make the poor poorer and the rich richer. It amounts, relatively, to a comparative exemption of the rich from taxation. What the rich now pay towards our national revenue they would not feel, even if they knew it. What the poor pay, if they knew it, would soon kindle a feeling which would make the country very uncomfortable for the rich. Domestic peace can be thoroughly secured only by having everything understood. In a Republic, as in a family, the way to avoid quarrels is to have no favoritism, especially none which is secret.

It is generally conceded that the only atmosphere in which a republic can exist is one of general intelligence. As soon as such an atmosphere is established, it will be impossible to support the national government by any system of taxation which virtually exempts the rich. The sooner, therefore, this fundamental subject of taxation receives the earnest attention of all thinking minds the better. It is of no use to talk, as some honest reformers do, of taking capital out of the hands of its proprietors, or the wages of labor from the dominion of the law of supply and demand. The acquisition of property is an attribute of human nature, one of its grand passions, to be governed but not eradicated. It is capable of the noblest uses and applications. The comfort of it is the natural and just reward of labor. If Nature had made mankind equal like the working-bees, communism would doubtless be the right thing. But inasmuch as human individuals differ from each other almost as much as all other animals put together, the righteous regulation of individualism is all that can be aimed at. To prevent fraud and theft by taking capital out of the control of its owners, is like trying to prevent occasional murder by the universal administration of strychnine. What can be done, and what only waits the more general diffusion of knowledge to be done, is to secure the protection of individual property in its natural and necessary rights, and to instruct its owners in those social and patriotic duties which give to property a large part of its possible value.

This brings me to another exemption of the rich from taxation, not because they are rich, but because they are supposed to be particularly good, or, to be more strictly correct, because they are presumed to hold certain opinions on the subject of theology. This exemption does not come from the same source as the other. It is not by the nation, but by the State. It is the remains of that very tyranny of opinion which the founders of the nation so carefully discarded.

The common assumption is, that Christianity at its origin appealed only to the human reason, which was addressed by the preaching of the gospel, and that this was made effectual to conversion by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, whatever that may mean. Whether this accounts for its triumphant prevalence, so far as it did prevail, over an effete paganism; or, whether we are to attribute it to an appeal to the religious instincts or prejudices of mankind coupled with a more social and democratic spirit and a warmer presentation of the doctrine of human brotherhood, certain it is that its greatest victories were achieved, and its grandest moral power was exhibited, before it received any support from secular government. The moment it accepted such support, it took the attitude which paganism had always held of a pensioned and subservient cult. It surrendered ignominiously its high claim to be a kingdom not of this world, and became in some sense a moral slave, responsible for the very wickedness of the secular governments whose bounty it consented to receive. The salt of the earth was thus decomposed and corrupted by the very world it was sent to sweeten and save.

The influence on the individual States of the purely secular form which our national government took under the present Constitution of the United States went to effect the disestablishment of the churches, which in the several colonies had not only been pensioned but wielded more or less of political power. But to a very large extent the ecclesiastical property of all Christian denominations was still exempted, as it is to-day exempted, from taxation. In 1870 this property amounted to over three hundred and fifty million dollars. It had doubled every ten years, increasing more than twice as fast as the population. Consequently it will take but two or three decades of exemption to bring the country to the deplorable condition of things which has been experienced in Italy, Spain, and Mexico.

This pernicious class-privilege is claimed on the plea that religion is essential to the safety of the State; that Christianity is the only true religion; that it teaches the only morality on which good government can be founded; that, therefore, it would be as absurd to tax churches as to tax the school-houses which the State itself builds; the churches doing a work which is as absolutely necessary to the welfare of the people as that of the schools.

This argument proves too much. If it is valid, Church and State should never have been separated. The Church, in fact, should be the State, and a theocracy should take the place of the Republic.

But admitting—that is by no means proven, and probably never will be—that Christianity is the only true religion and teaches the only effective morality, it by no means follows that as such it can afford to accept any exemption from taxation. Exactly the contrary. If these assumptions are well founded, it cannot and will not accept any such exemption, but will insist on paying its full and just share of all public burdens. It will rest its claims on the public conscience solely on the demonstrable truth of its dogmas and its precepts. By the very token that it holds credentials from heaven, it will decline holding any from earth, or accepting anything like a bribe from earth. It will of all things avoid making common cause with the parasitic classes that seek to live at the public expense, and be dead-headed through the struggle of life.

Supposing the Christian Church sincere in its claim of divine authority, inasmuch as its commission is not to supplant Cæsars or govern the world, but to convert it and give it a new heart, all it will ask of secular government is liberty to use its spiritual power, not exemption from its secular duties. It is the church-member himself who has the deepest interest in seeing this, and who will see it, unless the Church is doomed to perish in its own corruption. It was Cavour, a sincere Catholic, who did more than any other man to deprive his Church of its temporal power, in the very home of its power. And he appears to have done it quite as much in the interest of his Church, as of the State which he regenerated. His last words as he pressed the hand of a priest, in taking leave of life, were, "Brother, brother, a free Church in a free State." If either the Protestant or the Catholic churches in the United States have any Cavour in their communions, any far-seeing men who earnestly seek to make Christianity a salutary moral power and a principle of social health, they will outstrip us liberals in their efforts to subject all ecclesiastical property to fair taxation. No matter whether the amount of such property be more or less, it is the principle which tells on the Church, and it is the question of spiritual life or spiritual death to it.

In these days when men go to and fro, and knowledge is increased, the life of the Church depends mostly upon its social attributes. Its supernatural sanctions are largely out of date. Its dogmas about a future state have lost their hold on the minds of men. Something more than a thousand years ago when a Lombard king undertook by force of arms to recover from Pope Zachary some territory which that pontiff had coaxed out of his royal father, the Pope visited the camp, and in an interview with the king so frightened him by setting forth the terrors of hell as the punishment of violating the rights of the Church, that he not only desisted from his undertaking, but became a monk for the rest of his life. Nobody expects Pius IX. to repeat this on Victor Emmanuel. There is nothing left for which any Church can be much respected but the theory and practice of right living in this world. When a Church converts religion into a luxury, and asks that its luxury shall be exempted from taxation, what becomes of its moral power? Do we expect it to rebuke corruption in the government when it is itself a pensioner? If the Church as a whole seeks exemption from the public burdens, will not its individual members do the same? Is there any moral force in what to unregenerate human nature seems meanness? Do we expect good legislation about railroads when the legislature rides free?

The trouble is not merely that non-church members are taxed the more heavily by the exemption of church property, though that is a serious injustice likely to become more and more oppressive, but what is more important, considering how large a mass of population it comprehends, the Church itself is corrupted; its honor is sullied; its moral tone is debased; it becomes even worse than a total failure in regard to the moral elevation of the present world. It is perhaps easier even now for a good man to exert moral power out of it than in it. Not that there are not a great many good men in it—good for the visible duties of life, although straining their sight so vainly into the invisible world,—and always have been. In about the darkest of the dark ages there was Arnold of Brescia preaching bravely in the pulpits of Rome against the temporal power of the Church, and getting burnt alive by an English-born pope for his pains. It is on such men that the Church must rely for its salvation, if it is to be saved from becoming an intolerable fungus upon human civilization.

That there is need of all that moral force which organized Christianity assumes to be, to bring the nation up to the idea of a true republic, is too patent to be for one moment denied. The very chief objection which statesmen, so-called, and writers on political economy urge against direct taxation is, that there is not truth enough among the people to make it practicable. They say wealth will be concealed, and perjury resorted to to escape taxation. This is far too true; yet it is hardly credible that more lies are told or would be told to town and city assessors, than are now told to custom-house officers and internal revenue collectors. Nor would it be conclusive against direct taxation if it were so. A government is bound to aim at the thing which is right, however obstructed. If it aims to steal its revenue because private liars abound, it is not likely to find truth increase any where.

The overwhelming argument for the non-exemption of church property from taxation, is the very fact that in these last years, fraud, bribery, and lying are beginning to threaten the ruin of the social structure. Perhaps these vices are no more rife than in any former times; but they are in a position to do many times more mischief, because the material resources on which the life and happiness of our modern civilization depend are vastly more aggregated. This age, now in trouble, has been eminently an age of trust. In order to utilize the great chemical and mechanical discoveries of the age, the people have united their means into vast trust companies, far transcending in magnitude anything of the kind previously known in history. The demand for truth, honor, and private self-abnegation to manage these immense trusts seems to have far outstripped the supply. The people have trusted not only their savings already earned, but those yet to be earned. Hence a fatal facility for private aggrandizement by running the people in debt. As a consequence, we have seen a city robbed of $100,000,000. Everywhere we see commercial failures at the rate of about $200,000,000 a year. Some, but not the most, of this has come from ignorance and miscalculation, and bad legislation about money. The chief cause has been the want of truth and honor, the only cement that can hold together a civilization based on our present minute division of labor.

Very early in our history laws were enacted to prevent the perversion of justice by bribery. The offerer of a bribe, whether it was accepted or not, was made punishable as well as the receiver. Prosecutions, say the law writers, have been very few. Yet bribery has become a chronic disease. It has crept into the fountains of law, if not into the courts of justice. Let me mention a single fact as a sample of what might fill a library. A few years ago a legislative investigation, started with a purely partisan purpose, convicted an important supervising officer in the pay of the State of New York of receiving large sums of money from the officers of some of the largest trust companies of the world, which it was his business to watch. This supervising officer, so patent and flagrant was his crime, was deposed from his office by a legislature controlled by his own political party; yet the officers of the great trust companies who gave him the bribes, out of the funds entrusted to them, are still in office, unpunished; and, not only that, but many of them are respected pillars in the Church.

Those who are familiar with the operations of great moneyed corporations, such as banks, insurance companies, railroads, steamship lines, and telegraph companies, well know that the officers seldom scruple to use the money of the corporation to influence legislation or the administration of law in their favor. Some of the people may inwardly resent, but the government does not punish this giving of bribes, whatever it may do about the taking of them. Now, if the churches are the depositaries of moral power, here is their opportunity to exert it. Let them make bribe-giving at least as disreputable as unbelief. But, unfortunately, the churches are by exemption from taxation themselves pensioners upon the very legislatures which are virtually run by the bribers,—legislatures which seem to think that the sin of taking bribes consists in being found out. The Church, by its moral force, might move the political world, if it only had an independent fulcrum for its lever. But, by sharing in class favors, it makes common cause with the great body of parasites which seeks to live and flourish at the expense of the producing classes.

If what I have said about taxation as bearing on the interests of secular government should go for nothing, the interests of Christianity itself, as an organized religion seeking perpetuity, demand that it shall be wholly self-supporting; that it shall in no sense, nor to any extent, seek or accept either aid or immunity from the secular government.

Let us look at the history of Christianity. At the start, if it had any government within itself at all, it may be said to have been communism. It had no rulers, only servants. A few centuries saw this transformed to monarchy, or the rule of a supreme bishop. Regal splendor and temporal power ensued. The Church became not only an empire within an empire, but within all empires. Exalting itself in imperial Rome, whatever it may have done for the ultra-mundane interests of the millions who inhabited the vast and fertile peninsula of Italy, it ruined their mundane interests. Whenever its popes encroached upon the secular governments and were pressed back to the wall, they invited foreign princes to their aid, so that by their means Italy was overrun and spoiled by Goths, Franks, Lombards, Germans, Austrians; it seethed in blood for ages with the intestine feuds of the Guelphs and Ghibellines. It became a land of beggars, multitudes of them consecrated as such. So great a nuisance did the government of the Holy Fathers make of itself to poor Italy, that famine and pestilence on one occasion is said to have carried off two-thirds of its population. The luxury of some of the regal popes raised some of the finest edifices of the world, it is true, and partly by the wages of sin. This led to that revolution in the Church itself which has been called the Reformation. It wrenched off fragments from the great monarchical body of Christianity, and introduced government into these fragments more or less republican or democratic in form and character. This rupture was the most auspicious thing that ever occurred in favor of freedom of thought. Whether it was the pressure outward of the embryo of science which split the Church, or a revival of the spirit of primitive Christianity which did it, is a question I do not now care to discuss. The Reformation undoubtedly had a good moral effect on the great monarchical nucleus of the Church which still remained, as well as on the Protestant fragments which flew off. But the former, though much reformed in its bloody and fiery methods, still retained its nature.

That nature is everywhere to grasp all possible material power, and forestall freedom of thought by inoculating every child with superstition as a part of its primary education. The drift, tendency, and effort of Catholic or monarchical Christianity in every country where it exists, or ever will exist, is perfectly illustrated in the history of Italy since the Reformation. There it still had full sway, with wit enough to discard many of its old practices; but it set itself to resist, with its army of more than one hundred thousand priests, the progress of the times, whether that progress was urged on by the discoveries of science or the sword of Bonaparte. It reacted against every advance of civilization, always in favor of the worst political despots that would be subservient to it. During the reigns of Pius VIII. and Gregory XVI., from 1823 to 1846, the worst priests were put in the best offices, all independent and liberal teachers were banished from the universities, trade was taxed almost out of existence, and whenever the people resisted, insurrection was stamped out either by foreign or papal troops. The atrocities committed by the latter in the streets of innocent Bologna, in 1831, perhaps exceed any that stain the pages of history. The consequence was, that by the time Mastai Ferretti ascended the papal throne in 1846, as Pius IX., there was such an electrical antagonism between the Jesuitic monarchy on the one side, and scientific Italy and young Italy, chiefly embodied in the secret society of the Carbonari on the other, that a thunderstorm over the whole peninsula was imminent. The new Pope, undoubtedly in the spirit of humanity and with much of the wisdom of a Franklin, attempted to discharge the electricity innocuously by such concessions in favor of civil liberty as never before came from a Pope. They were hailed with delight, not only by the liberals of Italy, but by liberals all over the world. It was too late. Pius waked up in a little while to find he was the slave of the very hierarchy whose triple crown he wore. The bloodhounds of Austria were down upon him. Despotism and priestcraft, securely established in other Catholic countries, were by no means going to allow Italy to be made free and independent by a Pope. The Holy Father found himself, for any beneficial purpose in this world, perfectly fallible. The case is one of the saddest in human history, for he was not only thwarted but finally corrupted.

The renovation of Italy which we have lived to see, was brought about by two forces hardly in sympathy with each other at all, but either quite impotent without the other. The one composed of youth and science was represented by that child of genius, Mazzini, and the honest warrior, Garibaldi. They two were cordial brothers. The other was represented by Count Cavour, a born conservative progressive, with wit enough to see that Garibaldi and

Mazzini were fighting at fatal odds not only the enemies of liberty in Italy, but in Catholic France, Spain, and Austria. Mounted on the shoulders of these men—without whom Italy could no more have been freed than our slaves could have been emancipated without John Brown and Harper's Ferry,—as if he were trampling on and suppressing them, he had the wit, as a diplomatist, to outwit the Catholic powers of Europe, and establish a civil power in Italy, which, though it is still burdened with a pensioned Church, holds it rather as a servant than a master. Cavour saved this monarchical Church from condign punishment in spite of itself. But though it no longer dominates over the civil power in Italy, it does elsewhere, and seeks to do it everywhere. Nobody could know its nature better than Count Cavour; and as he had not a particle of prejudice against its theology, he is a perfectly unimpeachable witness as to the tendency of its priestcraft, if not as to the best way to counteract it. When the Jesuits had full possession of his own country, Piedmont, but were exciting apprehension and losing foothold in France, he wrote to a French lady these words:—

"If one would learn to know the true nature of that order, it is not where the Jesuits are struggling, and where they hold a precarious footing, that they should be studied; they are not to be appreciated fully as they are, except when, meeting no obstacle, they apply their rules in a logical and consecutive manner. They have learnt nothing, forgotten nothing; their minds and their methods are the same. Woe to the country; woe to the class confiding its youth to their exclusive education! Unless it be owing to fortunate circumstances that destroy in the man the lessons imparted to the child, they will, within one century, make a race utterly debased. . . . I wish, indeed, that, in the interest of humanity, we could come to an understanding with the Jesuits, and concede them in the countries from which they are excluded, three, four, ten times the degree of liberty that they are willing to grant in the countries where they dominate." [Life of Count Cavour, page 17.]

Though a few of the higher Catholic clergy are undoubtedly in accord with Catholic Count Cavour, and see the folly of resisting the science, civil liberty, and progress of the world, the great body of their clergy, having no family ties, have really no sympathy with society at large, and are substantially Jesuits, having no ruling motive in life but the aggrandizement of the priesthood.

Now I appeal to every thinking Christian of the democratic, republican Protestant sort, whether such an unnatural, necessarily mischievous body of men ought to be favored in a Republic, or any other government, by the exemption of the property of their order from taxation. Liberty to think what they please, liberty to do or not do what they please, inside of the law, including the liberty never to marry, they must have. But immunity from taxes on property used to propagate their peculiar notions, even were those notions not favorable to ignorance, superstition, and mental imbecility, they should never have. But if the Protestant churches claim immunity of their church property from taxation, the Catholics must and will have theirs free.

What we want, no matter what its name may be, is a religion of truth. The anthropomorphic theology, by turning with contempt from the teachings of actual life and the actual universe to an imaginary world of its own creation, full of gorgons and chimeras, has almost made an eternal sham of the eternal now. By looking to another world and to a man-made God, men have failed to find and reverence those laws of truth and justice, revealed in visible and tangible things, which no conceivable will, however potent, could either create or violate with impunity. Our salvation must come from knowing and obeying these laws. Whatever pleasure we may take in works of imagination they cannot save us, our social and political condition being such as we now see it, and such as the best prophets of all ages have deplored. The Hebrew-Isalah said of his country: "Thy princes are rebellious and companions of thieves; every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards; they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them." He was hopeful of a Savior, but how much has that Savior saved? And an English Isalah, of our own time, says of his country:—

Peace sitting under her olive, and slurring the days gone by;
When the poor are hovelled and hustled together, each sex like swine;
When only the ledger lives, and when only not all men lie;
Peace in her vineyard—yes!—but a company forges the wine.
And the vitriol madness rushes up in the ruffian's head,
Till the filthy by-lane rings to the yell of the trampled wife.
While chalk and alum and plaster are sold to the poor for bread,
And the spirit of murder works in the very means of life,
And sleep must lie down armed, for the villainous contre-bits
Grind on the wakeful ear in the hush of the moonless nights;
While one is cheating the sick of a few last gasps, as he sits
To pestle the poisoned poison behind his crimson lights.

And this is the nineteenth century of a Church which votes itself exemption from taxation because its morality is the only morality which can save the world! Wanted—a better one!

MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY.—Seniores, translating: "Wir sind von keinem Mannes Herzen sicher." "We are sure of every man's heart." Professor: "Not correct. Try again." Seniores: "We are safe in every man's heart." Professor: "Hardly." Seniores (blushing): "We are sure of no man's heart." Professor: "Correct."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

GERMAN LIBERALISM IN AMERICA.

A PAPER READ BEFORE THE ROCHESTER CONGRESS OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, OCT. 28, 1877.

BY MRS. CLARA NEYMANN, OF NEW YORK CITY.

Though I do not come among you as a delegate of any special German Society, I do not think that I assume too much when I express the great and warm interest our German Liberals take in your movement.

Our German independent newspapers, the Boston Pioneer, the Milwaukee Freidenker, and others of a like tendency, are rejoicing that their American brothers give decisive expression to liberal thoughts. They encourage and advocate cooperation, and consider it the best and purest means for success.

But, not only do our independent papers respond to your call and prepare the way for united action among the liberals of this country; I have also noticed that in more indifferent circles great pleasure is felt at the practical measures which the Liberal League is trying to introduce. You are aware, I suppose, of our German reputation,—that our country has ever had great theorists, idealists, and many subtle thinkers. The Germans of this country have inherited somewhat of that peculiar tendency; and, while our freethinkers have worked for years, diffused liberal principles, and educated freethought, they have not succeeded in bringing their views before the National Liberal League, and have only commenced last year to secure public action upon their proclaimed principles.

The American, on the contrary, is noted for his practical good sense. Very often it happens that, before an idea is fully developed, before he can realize the depth and magnitude of a question, even before the question has taken accurate shape in the minds of the people, he is willing to test it by a political indorsement.

The cooperation of the two nationalities with their diverse gifts and characteristics, each excellent if not carried too far, is therefore of great importance. The German gladly recognizes the quickness and intelligence of his American friend, and I hope that our American friends do equally appreciate the sincerity, the earnestness, and accurate reasoning of their German co-workers.

During the last two years the German freethinkers have made great progress in their organization, and every well-wisher to the Liberal cause ought to advocate a union; ought to use all his influence for the establishment of a mutual and harmonious activity. Single, we are weak; united, we shall be strong.

The endorsement and support of the German element will be gained so much the easier, as they have long ago felt and discussed the dangers which are threatening our free institutions. Catholicism is growing more and more daring every year; its widespread influence, its untiring efforts, its zeal is a constant anxiety to the liberal-minded. The Catholic religion would like to celebrate a new revival in this country; and well may they succeed, if their actions are not better watched, if they are left unopposed to spread their creed and its evil influences.

There is no question upon which our German population are so united; no question upon which their feelings can be so easily aroused, as the question of religious independence. They may differ about questions of finance, of civil service reform, of prohibition; they may find it even difficult to decide which of the two political parties is the most erect, the most trustworthy; they may bring weighty arguments against woman suffrage, and dispute her participation in public matters; but on the free religious question they are, on the whole, more unanimous, more enlightened, and, I think I may add, more enthusiastic. Why this is so, the student of the history and development of Germany will easily perceive.

While other European nations had directed their best efforts and talents to political affairs, to the national aggrandizement, to military and commercial glories, Germany's best talent was engaged in philosophical and literary pursuits. Our earnest men endeavored to unravel the mysteries of life; they were engaged in solving the problem of human existence. They were digging, searching, investigating the nature of the mysterious phenomena of life; they tried to explain man's destiny upon earth; his relation to himself; his duty toward his fellow-men; and his connection with and dependence upon surrounding Nature.

It is true that their way of reasoning was not always correct; that they lost themselves at times in their dangerous flights, and carried their speculations into untraceable regions. Still, their critical reasoning, their clear logic, the great ethical laws which they established independent of religious worship and Bible-teaching, took root in the mind and heart of the people, and prepared the way for the religious change which the new scientific revelations are now making more complete. The German philosophers had reasoned out deductively what our scientists to-day manifest through induction, by a verification of facts and actual proofs. The harmony of the universe; the laws by which our life is governed; the nature of man's duties and responsibilities; what effects good and virtuous actions have on the individual, on society, on the State—ethical, mathematical questions which form the basis of a higher life and a nobler being,—these and other problems they discussed ably and intelligently in their writings. Reflections of so grave a nature emancipated the people from the churches long ago, and greatly lessened the influence of the priesthood.

On my way home last year from Europe I met an American clergyman who had spent a few weeks in Germany. He told me that he was greatly puzzled about my country people. He had found them on the whole to be good, honest, trusty, inclined to walk in the paths of virtue and righteousness; and yet they were infidels! They did not support the churches; and the comparatively few churches extant were attended principally by women and children.

Very true. The intelligent German has long ago outgrown the established and popular creed. His morality is not dependent upon the Bible teaching; his ethics rest on a firmer basis, and his actions are not guided by the fear of an angry God, or a reward in a hereafter. It is not so with the majority of Americans.

'The Bible has been the only source—and alas! it is so still—from which this great nation has drawn its inspiration for right-doing and thinking. The Bible has been the book out of which they have received instruction in morality; their conscience has been formed according to its fallacious teachings. A book which was written nearly two thousand years ago, containing many noble sentiments, but more scientific errors than truths, more false statements than true ones, serves to-day an intelligent race as the sole instigator, the sole inspirer, to moral virtues, moral conduct, and moral excellences! Is it to be wondered at that our social edifice is trembling in its very foundation, that vice is multiplying, that sin is increasing, that the infection is spreading, and that the passions are breaking through their artificial restraints? Distrust is undermining our social, commercial, and political relations. Honest men are losing all confidence; theft has become a universal vice; stealing, defrauding, embezzling under some cunning device is an every-day occurrence. The temptation to go astray has taken a hold upon our people. And mind! it is not among the poor and needy, not among the lower orders of society that vice is increasing. There are many, it is true, who are driven by want and by a neglected education toward dishonesty and licentiousness. It is not to them I am referring now. The debasing propensities have reached our upper and middle classes as well. Our well-to-do and well-cared-for sons and daughters—the children of honest parents—are infected by the moral pestilence.

Their education has been first-class; they have attended the Sunday-school regularly; they have been devout church-members; and their love for God cannot be doubted. They have lately read about the new science. They have seen extracts from Darwin's Origin of Species, of Huxley's explanations of the Evolution of the Universe, of Spencer's Sociology, of Tyndall's lectures on Light and Electricity. They are puzzled. Why? This is all in contradistinction to what the Bible teaches; it differs widely from what they had learned,—what they had read in the Book of books. Either here or there there must be falsehood!

The average American is quick to see, intelligent to perceive. The new revelations are much more convincing; there is sense, proof, rationality in all this; he is beginning to doubt; his faith is tottering, and he has broken loose from the old before he is himself aware of it. But he dares not acknowledge it; he is not brave enough to break from the customary habits or to face his friends with the truth; besides, it would cost him his position. What would his friends say if he were to give up his pew in church? And so he goes on doubting until he doubts the very essence of all religion. He must practice hypocrisy to accommodate the old to the new. The voice of conscience is growing more faint as he advances; and the time comes when it is hushed down, and the love of self, the lower passions rule him throughout.

The anathema against the new revelations are of no avail. Its doctrines have already advanced too far. The spell of the Church is broken; and the sooner it is recognized the better for man's happiness and his ultimate advancement.

The Liberals have a great work before them. They have to educate the people's conscience, so that they may perceive the new truth. They have to establish a new morality derived from scientific experiences. 'The Religion of Humanity must have a fixed standard of morals. It has to show and explain the evil effects of vice,—how it acts upon ourselves, our children, and our posterity. The Liberals have to explain, teach, expound, make clear the laws by which our life is governed. They have to show that our actions are indeed foreordained by a wise unrelenting power of Nature, and that a neglect of these laws will be punished here among our own kind and kindred. Every noble act, every sacrifice for the good and the true, is a benediction to those nearest to our heart, and brings bliss and happiness to mankind. Righteousness means happiness in the visible world. Goodness and purity of action produce goodness and purity of sentiment. Goodness is and always will be good; badness is and always will be bad.

The Liberals have to popularize the sciences, show their bearings upon all the relations of life, and make the right application of the manifold beneficial discoveries. They have also to show the value of æsthetic culture; how inspiring, ennobling, and elevating the different arts and sciences have been in the past; that the cultivation of art is a necessity,—a necessary path in the education of a civilized community.

We have also to show that the most lovely and amiable, the most beautiful sentiments are an outgrowth of elevated and intelligent thought, leading us to higher spheres; that these lovely sentiments are by no means peculiar to the Christian Religion but belong to all ages and to every civilized country. Man's vanity, his ambition, his self-love, his egotism, have to be directed to loftier spheres, where there is satisfaction without satiety, gratification without repentance. What has been held out to be gained in a future life has to be realized here, and it has to be shown that this can only be when all men and all women know and fulfil their duties, love and show proper regard for their fellow-beings.

'Love thy neighbor as thyself,' 'Do unto others as you would have others do unto you,' are no religious tenets, but maxims of life, which have to be carried into our daily intercourse. These maxims have a deep meaning, a wide significance; they contain the wisdom of ages of experience. Love is indeed life; it creates, builds up, smooths the path, and magnifies every being, every emotion, every act. Hatred and ill-feeling are debasing, destroying, and leading us on to destruction. The Religion of Humanity, by teaching universal brotherhood, is carrying out the fundamental doctrines of the old creed, doctrines which have been obscured and neglected by outward formalities and coarse egotism. The Christian Religion, once pure and simple, has long ago forgotten the beautiful maxims of its Founder: its redeeming qualities are almost hidden by the selfishness, ignorance, and prejudice of its followers. The old ideal has to be renewed again; it has to be enlarged and placed on a new pedestal.

Life is full of sacrifice; but man wants to know why he shall sacrifice. He cannot soar on high without a clear ideal held out for his reach. The temptations to go astray are too strong, vice is too alluring, and his ignorance of causes and effects is too great.

The new ideal is loftier, more beautiful, more inspiring than it ever was, but it wants to be proclaimed,—it awaits its new apostles.

The Liberals must stand firmly together; we have a great, an arduous work before us, and we have a mighty enemy to contend against. Success can only be gained by a close alliance, by self-sacrifice, and by a clearness of purpose. We have to be magnanimous toward those who cannot sympathize with our cause; severe, unrelenting, but just toward our opponents. Many of us may have to give up our own less important schemes for the sake of the party and its success. Our demands are founded upon reason; and so let our actions, our deeds, be guided by a superior wisdom; and may we never forget the high aim we are pursuing! Let us have a clear perception of our ideal, and let the ideal stand out in vivid colors before the mind's eye, so that we may gain strength and endurance for the arduous task upon which we start out to a better life and a nobler existence.

PROPOSED ADDITIONS TO THE ROCHESTER PLATFORM.

BY ELDER F. W. EVANS.

MOUNT LEBANON, N. Y., Nov. 3, 1877.

ESTEEMED FRIEND ABBOT:—

The planks in your National League bridge, that is to pass us safely from the old to the new earth government, are good as far as they go. But there are not enough of them; we shall fall through, unless more are added. To make it safe, I propose to add:—

1. A distinct recognition of women as citizens, equal with men in all the processes of framing and executing the laws.

2. A warrant deed of all the land in the United States to all the citizens of the United States.

3. A land limitation law, defining the quantity of land that any citizen may purchase, or inherit and hold, after the year 1878. Heirs to inherit, but be compelled, by the limitation laws to sell all land above the legally limited number of acres. The government to legislate poverty out of existence, and each citizen into possession of a portion of land, from which to produce his daily bread by his honest labor. In the "wilderness," all owned the land, and each citizen gathered the "manna" with his and her own hands. This land legislation should respect existing vested rights of individuals and corporations, as is done in making highways, railroads, and canals, and as is done in times of intestine and national wars.

4. The abolition of laws for the collection of debts. It is stated that the collection of debts costs more money than the amount collected will pay, and that the lawyers and courts are thereby defrauded of their just or legal dues.

Dear friend Abbot, now that the National Liberal League is formed, I feel comforted in my spirit. The Inquisition, with its fires and fagots, its racks and screws, its horrible tortures and dislocations of the human form divine, seem further off in the coming future. Cause and effect are no more indissoluble, than it is that any religionist, who believes in war under any circumstances, will advocate the union of Church and State. When Church and State are united, and they have legislative power, they will think they are doing God and Christ and the Holy Spirit good and acceptable service in restraining heretics and infidels, Quakers and Shakers, Free-thinkers and Spiritualists. By the Constitutions of several States, those who disbelieve in a personal God and Devil, may not be witnesses in law.

As God liveth, and as human beings have inalienable right to life-elements—land, air, and sunshine,—let there be no peace, nor rest, until the American government is a joy in the earth,—until Shaker communities, and all infidels to Babylon Church-and-State fighting, monopolizing, persecuting theologies, are excluded and forever separated from the halls of legislation and courts of justice, that are for all peoples, nations, and tongues on the face of this earth. Let us all be known only as American citizens. Then shall those be blessed who inherit the earth,—the land; and wars shall cease to the ends of the earth, for its causes will have been removed forever and ever. Those theologies that make people to be hateful and hate one another shall be supplanted by the love of God and the love of man, that worketh no ill to its neighbor.

F. W. EVANS.

[1. By the first section of the fourteenth amendment of the United States Constitution, which provides that—"All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States, and of the States wherein they reside,"—women are already distinctly recognized as citizens; and this has been distinctly decided by the Supreme Court. The second plank of the Rochester platform takes the next step by demanding national protection for all national citizens in their equal civil, political, and religious rights,—which would secure to women-citizens all the political rights of men-citizens. This first "addition," therefore, is no addition to the Rochester platform at all.

2. The other three points would be real additions; but they need yet further elucidation to be quite clear. For instance, we do not see what the "warrant deed" mentioned would amount to, if "vested rights" are to be respected. That some form of land-limitation may prove to be at some time necessary, is quite likely; but we wait to be enlightened on many points before we can see our way clear to a practically just measure. Thoughtful discussion of these last three points, however, will be useful; and we should be glad to hear more definitely and fully concerning them from Elder Evans, for whom we learned at Rochester to entertain profound personal respect.—ED.]

THE SUNDAY-FREEDOM MOVEMENT seems to spread. Only lately the agitation in Queensland was noticed in your columns, and since then the movement has sprung up in Tasmania, where Mr. David Murray moved, in the House of Assembly, "that, in the opinion of that House, it would tend to stimulate and elevate the public taste for healthful recreation, if public libraries and museums were opened between 1 and 5 P.M. on Sundays." The motion was seconded by Mr. Meredith, Colonial Treasurer, and supported by several members; but it was decided to withdraw the motion, in order to bring it forward again when the estimates come under consideration. The result will be looked for with interest by many in this colony, as well as by those on the spot.—Melbourne Correspondent of the Maryborough Advertiser (Australia).

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE VEILED ISIS.

"I am all that ever has been,
And whatever existeth now;
I am all that ever will be,
And the veil which hides my brow
Mortal yet has never lifted."
Such was the inscription grand
O'er the statue veiled of Isis,
Which in Safé old did stand.

Were the mighty Mother's image
Carven now, as 'twas of yore,
Half-withdrawn, her starry peplum
Would her whole face hide no more;
Glimpses of her august beauty
To her suitors yields she now—
Stands no more a tempted mystery,
To which mortals blindly bow.

B. W. BALL.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

AN ENIGMA.

More subtle than sunlight am I,
The life of all action and thought;
Without me your best projects die,
With me your worst may be fraught.

Men invent many ways me to bind,
And exclusively make me their own,
And, when feeling most sure me to find,
They're surprised to find I have flown.

The Shakhnabs I build and forsake—
Contented in few long to stay;
Strange new ones 'tis my business to make,—
At this game forever I play.

My realm is all nature and art,
In high and low places I dwell;
Of heaven I am the best part,
And also the worst part of hell.

T. B.

WORCESTER.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 10.

Dr. J. S. Wright, 65 cents; Dr. A. A. Bell, $1; J. Peter & Co., $1.60; Jas. Davidson, 50 cents; Mrs. M. A. Livermore, $1.60; Sam'l Warbasse, $10; R. F. Hollowell, $3; Francis Alger, $3.20; Dr. C. H. Hornech, $3.75; L. A. Harbaugh, $6.40; Raynal Dodge, $1; Miss E. Homer, 80 cents; Jos. Warbasse, $10; Geo. M. Murray, $3.20; Wm. Phillips, $2.35.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 15, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 221 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FAWCETT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FEOTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. ORRNEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CODY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Editorial
Contributors.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Kenton, O., Nov. 14; at Marion, O., Nov. 15, 16; at West Liberty, O., Nov. 17, 18, 19; at Napoleon, O., Nov. 21, 22, 23.

THE SPECIAL attention of our subscribers in New York and Pennsylvania is invited to the committee's announcement of a Ratification Meeting to be held at Randolph, N. Y., Dec. 8 and 9, by the Cattaraugus County Liberal League. The more such meetings, the better.

SEE HOW timely is the demand of the Rochester platform for equal rights in religion, as illustrated by this communication to the Tribune, dated New York, October 26: "Sir,—It is somewhat amusing to note by your item of to-day, that a new question is being introduced into local politics which is hardly creditable to all concerned. Objection is made to a certain candidate for renomination for alderman because he is a Jew, and he is thereupon rejected by the convention. A similar reason is given for the withdrawal of an estimable gentleman from the canvass for the Marine Court judgeship. If this policy is to be perpetuated, let right-minded citizens understand it, and we will regard the 'religious liberty' of the Constitution a dead letter. Otherwise, let every candidate stand on his individual merits as a patriotic, intelligent, and useful citizen, and let his religion, or irreligion, be a matter between him and his conscience, his bishop, priest, or rabbi. We want no sectionalism, no sectarianism, in our National, State, or city politics. CITIZEN."

THE MOST DIVERSE phases of religious thought found unrestricted utterance at Rochester. Christianity was represented by Rev. J. H. Harter, a Universalist clergyman of Rochester, by Elder F. W. Evans and Emil Bretzner, of the Mt. Lebanon Shaker community, and by a volunteer spokesman in the audience who denied some radical statement of one of the speakers, and who, being called to the platform, apologized for his rudeness, but declared that the speakers were all "reeds shaken by the wind,"—positivism by Professor A. L. Rawson, of New York city,—"infidelity" by Mr. W. S. Bell, of New Bedford,—Judaism by Mr. Moses Hays, of Rochester,—materialism by Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, who was at first a little carried away by his own earnestness, and afterwards won all hearts by his frank request for forgiveness if he had wounded anybody's feelings,—spiritualism by Judge McCormick, of Franklin, Pa., and Mrs. E. L. Watson, of Titusville, Pa., who both spoke earnestly for their own convictions; and scarcely any type of belief failed to be represented by some one. There were a few present who, not fairly comprehending the magnificent breadth and catholicity of the platform, took offence at individual utterances, and were inclined to hold the National Liberal League responsible for them; but the great majority certainly soon caught the spirit of the occasion, and hospitably welcomed the widely variant views of the speakers without being offended by manifest sincerity and without forgetting that each speaker was alone responsible for what he said. Professor Toohy, of Chelsea, Mass., whose address on "The Liberal League the Supplement and Complement of the Protestant Reformation" elicited great applause, did great service in promoting the general good feeling by his conciliatory and admirable brief speeches. Altogether, the Congress gave a noble foreshadowing of the great moral reform which must follow in the wake of true reverence for equal rights before the law.

"THE INTELLECT AND SENTIMENT."

In a communication with the above heading, Rev. S. P. Putnam puts queries which we would not be so discourteous as to disregard, although to answer them will involve repetition of some points which we have already presented in replying to previous articles of his.

1. Mr. Putnam holds that the intellect can give no reason why "ingratitude is wrong" other than the bare, ultimate fact that "the sentiment of humanity" is against it. Stated syllogistically, his only argument to show the wickedness of ingratitude would run thus:—

Everything is wrong which is against the "sentiment of humanity";

Ingratitude is against this "sentiment";

Therefore ingratitude is wrong.

Now the first or major premise of the above syllogism is not true.

It is not very many years since the "sentiment of humanity" was universally against the man who refused to fight a duel; he was universally regarded as destitute of honor,—as a coward who deserved the scorn of all honorable men. To this false and mischievous code of conduct the illustrious Alexander Hamilton, who was slain by Aaron Burr in a duel, fell a victim; and thus one of the greatest, wisest statesmen whom this country ever produced was immolated in the prime of his vigor and public usefulness at the shrine of a tyrannous and bloody "sentiment." It required a long process of intellectual development, fostered by just such catastrophes as this, to open the eyes of mankind to the wickedness of duelling and the "sentiment of humanity" which commanded and sanctioned it. The intellect of the race became sufficiently educated to discern that the duellist is only a murderer, sacrificing human life through idolatry of an absurdly perverted "sense of honor"; and forthwith the horribly misleading "sentiment of humanity" began to be corrected, and to adapt itself to a more enlightened code of morals.

This illustration is only one of hundreds that might be adduced to show that the "sentiment of humanity" is no test of morality at all—that it shifts and changes as men's intellectual perceptions change—and that it has often sanctioned what is infamously wrong, while it has as often condemned what is as conspicuously right. "Sentimental" or "intuitional" morality is nothing but a tissue of unreasoning guesses, just as likely to be false as true, and in point of fact certain to put blind prejudice in the place of intelligent moral conviction. Consequently, if Mr. Putnam cannot bring some better argument than this to prove that "ingratitude is wrong," there is not the slightest certainty that a better instructed age will not pronounce it one of the cardinal virtues.

But he is mistaken in supposing that "the intellect can give no reason" why ingratitude is wrong. He should take a lesson from the heathen Confucius, who, when asked by Tze-kung—"Is there one word which may serve as a rule of practice for all one's life?" more than anticipated the Golden Rule by saying: "Is not RECIPROCITY such a word? What you do not want done to yourself, do not do to others." Here, in this great word "reciprocity," is foreshadowed the central principle of scientific ethics—the law of moral equations, the all-embracing principle of equal rights. Why is the ingrate a criminal, judged by that higher and broader law which the legislation of the State only imperfectly represents? Simply because he fails to reciprocate. He has received good from his benefactor, and he returns evil for it; he violates the beautiful relationship which ought to bind benefactor and beneficiary in a noble reciprocity of good; he destroys the moral equation which ought to subsist between every man and his neighbor, and above all between the man who has stretched out his hand in kindness and him to whom it has been stretched out. The sin of ingratitude lies in the breach of reciprocity, the practical denial of that moral relationship which requires an equal return for good conferred—a return of good in some other form, it may be, yet none the less equal on that account. Here, then, is the necessity of the intellect in all moral consciousness proved to demonstration; the intellect, and the intellect alone, perceives relations, no matter of what kind; and the "sentiment of humanity," if not perverted, adapts itself in every case to the decisions of the intellect respecting right and wrong. Nobody ever said, so far as we know, that the intellect can take the place of sentiment, or render it unnecessary; but we do maintain that the intellect must precede and the sentiment follow. Thought first—feeling afterwards: that is the natural and rightful order, and mischief always ensues if it is violated. Nobody can successfully uphold the proposition that "ingratitude is wrong" who will not ground it on the law of moral equations, and thereby concede the necessary priority of the intellect in all moral judgments whatever. In every healthy nature, the appropriate sentiment rises inevitably in the wake of each intellectual perception; and it would be a piece of dreary obtuseness to accuse our doctrine of being either cold-blooded or wanting in any element of the full-sphered truth of life. We do not, of course, imagine that our esteemed correspondent would so misunderstand us. We prize noble sentiment just as highly as he does; our difference touches only the order of genesis, precedence, and rank.

2. We cannot take back anything we have said touching the relation of the Free Religious Association, or its "expressed law," to the scientific method. Our interpretation of its Constitution commits and binds nobody else. There is the Constitution; interpret it for yourself. If anything is clear, it is that all who favor perfect liberty have an unquestionable right to its fellowship. If a Catholic should imagine that perfect liberty is compatible with obedience to the Papal theocracy, that is his affair, not ours, and he has an indefeasible right to join the Association. But we have just as indefeasible a right to say that such obedience is in our eyes incompatible with perfect liberty; and we certainly shall not hold ourselves bound to suppress this opinion for fear that somebody may take offence at it. Something is due to truth, as well as to fellowship; and the Free Religious Association would be a melancholy failure in point of fundamental principle, if it could not reconcile fidelity to truth with fidelity to fellowship. Just so long as Mr. Putnam cleaves to the conviction that perfect liberty is right and safe and good, he would make a great mistake in quitting the Association because he cannot in all respects think as we do; and we should profoundly deplore such a step on any one's part. We have not the slightest desire to see everybody thinking just as we do.

But there is indeed a great question to be settled—can perfect liberty of thought be found in any but the scientific method? Let it be discussed without reference to any consideration but that of the pure truth of things. Mr. Putnam says: "Is it wise to seek to commit the Free Religious Association to one side of an 'open question,' while there are still such profound differences of opinion among honest and liberal thinkers?" Why put so idle a question? We have never "sought to commit the Free Religious Association" to anything. We only say: there is its Constitution, and we think it means so-and-so. If any member differs from us in this understanding of it, we are just as much excluded by his difference from our interpretation as he is excluded by our difference from his. That is clear, is it not? There is only one "open question" on which the Free Religious Association is fairly and irrevocably committed—the question between "that absolute liberty of thought which is the natural right of every human being" and that usurped authority which would limit this liberty. Whoever does not mean to be committed on this question ought to give the Association a wide berth; he, and he alone, has no right to belong to it. The "scientific method," as we explained it last winter, is nothing but "that absolute liberty of thought which is the natural right of every human being"; and that is all that the Association is unequivocally committed to. Mr. Putnam should bear this in mind. Is he unwilling to be committed to the principle of absolute liberty of thought? Then he certainly is out of place in this Association. But if (as we suppose) he desires to be committed to that principle, there is not the slightest occasion for him to leave the Association; for, conceding that the Association is thoroughly committed to the "scientific method," as we contend it is by the terms of its own organic law, it is thereby committed, according to our own conception of that method, to nothing but perfect liberty—which it was founded to promote. We cannot comprehend why there should be any confusion on this point; but, if this explanation is not satisfactory, we hope for many reasons that the topic will not be dropped.

WHY IS UNCHASTITY VENIAL IN ONE SEX AND INFAMOUS IN THE OTHER?

Elizabeth Oakes Smith, in a thoughtful article in THE INDEX of Nov. 1, questions the correctness of the conclusion that, because man may do with comparative impunity that which, if done by woman, is considered infamous, he therefore regards or has regarded woman as his inferior. She thinks this fact rather implies "that woman exercises a higher moral activity"; that she "seized upon and adhered to the purer moralities, and thus taught the world to expect more from her." "Does not the priest," she asks, "stand in the same relation? Do we not demand of him rightfully purer moralities than we exact from the man of mere fashion? Again: when men insist upon the purity of chasteness of the women of their households, do they expect this from base or selfish motives?" "By the emphasis with which a man insists upon the high moralities in his family, has he not given testimony in favor of them?"

Now it still seems to me that man absolutely forbids in woman what he may himself do with far less censure, because his attitude to woman through long ages has been, and to a great extent now is, that of a master to a servant. The man with whom drunkenness is an habitual vice, is often very severe in condemning and punishing the slightest intoxication in his servants. He knows drunkenness is wrong, but his appetite craves the stimulating drink; and his position is such that he can gratify it, and he does so. He does not experience his servants' craving for drink as he does his own; he has seen the bad effects of drunkenness on servants; he knows it is wrong; and, having the power to make his servants abstain from this vice, he exercises it, actuated by various motives, some moral, some selfish perhaps. He becomes familiar with this vice in himself and those of his own rank in society, and in them its moral enormity seems much less than it did in early life. On the other hand, from his youth, among those with whom he has associated, and whose thought and expressions have helped to shape his own, he has heard drunkenness in servants spoken of only in terms of condemnation. He comes to look upon this vice in servants as a sign of disobedience, untrustworthiness, and inefficiency; and, since it involves opposition to the master's authority, which is acknowledged as rightful and supreme in his own household, it does indicate in the servants all the bad qualities which the master ascribes to them. Thus, while, as he grows older, he views with greater lenity drunkenness in himself and his associates, he regards it with more and more aversion in the servants who are socially below him, and subject to his authority and control.

The habit of sobriety in servants is, without doubt, worthy of encouragement, and of imitation by their masters; but, in such cases as I have referred to, the more temperate habits of the servants do not imply that they "exercise a higher moral activity," or, that there is any thing constitutional in them, or peculiar to their nature, that has led them to "seize upon and adhere to the purer moralities." The reason is in their subordination to their master's will and wishes; and the reason that he has no patience with drunkenness in his servants, while he excuses the same vice in himself and those of his own rank, is not because he regards them as his superiors morally, but because he has lived with them in a relation giving him power and authority over them. Drunkenness in them implies disregard of his authority, neglect of duty, incapacity to minister to his wants, and inefficiency generally. Drunkenness in himself and those of his standing, although not to be defended on moral grounds, is "their own business."

Thus, having the power, men will prevent vices in others (when it is to their interest to do so) which they find reasons for excusing in themselves; and when any habit or custom, however bad, has prevailed among a particular class for centuries, that class comes to regard it, if not as right, at least as entitled to toleration; when the same folly in those who have been strangers to it calls from them unqualified condemnation. We all know fathers who are habitually profane, but who would punish with severity anything like profanity in their children. Not that the children "exercise a higher moral activity" than the father,—not that they are recognized as moral guides or teachers,—but the father, conscious of his superiority over his children in power, in knowledge, in judgment and authority, and knowing that he can, to a great extent, control the language of his child, exercises that power from a sense of duty out of regard for his child, and to retain for himself and family the respect of the community. He punishes his child, if he hears an oath from his lips; yet is an habitual swearer himself. Why is this? Having the power and authority over his children, he exacts from them as far as possible conduct in conformity with his conceptions of right and duty. He falls far below the standard, excusing himself, perhaps, in various ways. Profanity becomes so confirmed a habit with him that it seems impossible to resist it; and, at length, it seems much less wicked than when he began to swear. But he has always regarded profanity in a child as horrible. "Everybody" thinks so; and long after the father has ceased to be disturbed, from moral consideration, by profanity from himself or other men, he is shocked to hear an oath from the lips of his child. And the child, when it grows to manhood, will, perhaps, do in this respect as its father did. In punishing the child, the father is not actuated by "base or selfish motives"; nor, when he is shocked by an oath from the lips of his little boy, does he regard it as we regard a crime in some great moral teacher whom we have looked up to as an example and guide. But, in the first place, having the power, the father has compelled his child to abstain from a vice or folly in which he has permitted himself to indulge; and, in the second place, he has not been accustomed to it in his child, while by frequent repetition through years he has become so accustomed to it in himself that it gives very little trouble on moral grounds.

So I hold that unchastity in man in our present society is excused, or but mildly censured, while in woman it is a sin never to be forgotten or forgiven in this world, because primarily, the position of woman has been subordinate to that of man. No doubt chastity in woman should be encouraged; no doubt it has been and is favorable to the improvement of society; and no doubt man should strive to elevate himself to the standard by which he expects woman to live. All these propositions I strongly maintain; but it is none the less true, I believe, that the inequality of the censure which is bestowed upon the two sexes for unchastity is due to the fact that in the evolution of society man has been superior to woman in power and authority, and has accordingly treated her as an inferior. Men have exacted from women a more rigid adherence to virtue than has been exemplified in their own lives, not because they have looked up to women as priestesses of morality, but because they have been in a position to cast aside "the higher moralities" of which Mrs. Smith speaks; and this has been done so generally and through so many ages, that the mind has become somewhat accustomed to it; while, on the other hand, woman's position has been such that man, for her interest and for his own, has discouraged and forbidden any disregard of those "higher moralities." Chastity in woman having been encouraged, strengthened, and fortified by education and selection, and relations dependent upon it having been incorporated into our social system through centuries of gradual growth, any departure therefrom now is naturally condemned with severity.

Mrs. Smith thinks that, "in the sight of God, in the light of eternal issues, all sin is sin, and we are not in a condition to grade it"; but, as society is now organized, she believes unchastity in woman is worse than the same offence in man. It is worse, she would say probably, because its effects are more ruinous in the one case than the other. But if we look a little deeper, we cannot fail to see that society is so organized, because during its evolution the idea has been prominent that man's position is one of superiority,—that woman's is essentially subordinate. When we consider that woman's condition has been improving with the progress of civilization, and that among the unadvanced nations her state is still very low, while even among the most enlightened peoples her position is far from what it should be, I do not see how this conclusion can be avoided.

It might have been added that the sin in woman implies generally greater moral depravity than in man, because society in various ways declares, and men and women recognize, unchastity in woman as a far greater sin than in man; and the moral depravity that will lead the woman to sin must be in proportion to the guilt she believes it involves. For it is the disposition and motive that determine the moral criminality of an act. But this is only an additional illustration that in the evolution of our whole system, social and moral, the idea has prevailed that woman's position is an inferior one. The very standard that society has formed, the very authority by which woman regards unchastity in her sex worse than in man, and in consequence of which her sin implies greater moral delinquency than the same does in man, has been formed through centuries, because man has controlled and governed woman, and has had the power to construct society, however unconsciously, so as to conform to his predominant desire and disposition in regard to his relation to woman.

In proportion as woman rises from her inferior position to one of equality with man, and both sexes are influenced by intellectual and moral considerations, will the obligations of chastity be regarded as equally binding on both; and any relations or institutions, inconsistent with what is so obviously just and right, however well they shall have served the race in attaining that state, will have to disappear and others gradually take their place. B. F. U.

Communications.

A NEW LIBERAL LEAGUE AT HURON, N.Y.

WOLCOTT, N.Y., Nov. 8, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:—

It affords me pleasure to inform you that at the close of my lecture in Cosad's Hall, in the town of Huron, Wayne County, N.Y., Nov. 1, the liberals organized a Liberal League with the following officers: President, J. M. Cosad; Vice-President, G. W. Smith; Secretary, Samuel Cosad; Treasurer, William Robinson; Councillors, James Chase, James Johnson, L. R. Ellis, Mrs. Effie Weed.

There are in this locality a few free spirits who are determined to carry forward the interests of free-thought in this Liberal League movement. I spoke three evenings to the liberal people of this community, and enjoyed myself very much. Mr. Cosad set the ball rolling last summer, in getting up the great three days' meeting in his grove; and he is determined to keep it rolling as long as he lives. Besides his heroic and patriotic efforts, others are coming to the rescue, and before a great while the Liberal League will be a power in the town of Huron.

Yours, W. S. BELL.

NOTICE—CATARAUGUS COUNTY LIBERAL LEAGUE.

THE ROCHESTER PLATFORM TO BE RATIFIED.—ABLE SPEAKERS TO BE ENGAGED, AND THE LIBERALS OF WESTERN NEW YORK AND WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA INVITED TO PARTICIPATE.

We, the undersigned, Freethought and Liberal League Committee of Cattaraugus County, propose to hold a mass meeting in the village of Randolph in said County, on the 8th and 9th days of December, to ratify the platform adopted by the National Liberal League at Rochester, Oct. 26; and we cordially invite all persons residing in Western New York and Western Pennsylvania who indorse said platform to unite with us in the proposed ratification meeting. The speakers who are to be invited to address the meeting are Hon. R. S. McCormick, of Franklin, Pa., Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York, Giles B. Stebbins, of Detroit, C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, W. S. Bell, of New Bedford, Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, and others. H. L. Green, who represented our League at the Rochester Congress, will make a report of the proceedings of that Convention. Liberal arrangements will be made to accommodate all who attend, and if possible reduced railroad fares will be obtained.

A. L. BRAINARD,
FREDERICK LARKIN, } Committee.
J. M. MATHEWSON,

THE INTELLECT AND SENTIMENT.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Not in any spirit of controversy, but simply to find out the truth, I would like to discuss more fully the relation of the intellect and sentiment in the attainment of moral conviction. I admit that the intellect must play a large part in this; but I also affirm that it must to a certain extent depend upon the sentiment, as the sentiment depends upon it; there must be an interblending of both to reach the final conclusion.

Take for instance the proposition, "Ingratitude is wrong." You will admit that this is an objective truth. I ask you to follow the steps by which I reach such a conclusion, and point out wherein I make a mistake. It is the intellect, of course, that declares the meaning of the terms "Ingratitude" and "Wrong," and it is the intellect that joins them together. But what reason can the intellect give for joining the term "Wrong" to the term "Ingratitude"? Here, I affirm, it relies upon sentiment; if there were no sentiment, the truth of the proposition could not be affirmed. The intellect perceives that the sentiment of humanity is against ingratitude. This sentiment is ultimate; the intellect can give no reason why it exists. The action of the intellect stops with the perception of the existence of the sentiment, which sentiment it must assent to as it assents to the proposition that two and two make four. One can give no reason for blaming ingratitude. He simply blames, and the whole heart goes with the blame, and the opposite feeling cannot for a moment be entertained.

In reaching therefore the conclusion that ingratitude is wrong, the intellect must depend upon the sentiment as an ultimate thing in human nature beyond which it cannot go; and if this sentiment is not objectively valid, then the conclusion is not objectively valid.

Do you say that this sentiment exists because of some previous action of the intellect? This I deny. The intellect does not create the sentiment; it gives opportunity for its exercise by pointing out certain relations; it is the occasional cause, but not the efficient cause. After pointing out the relations, giving clear knowledge, the operation of the intellect ceases. Out of human nature itself, from sources over which the intellect has no control, comes this irresistible feeling of blame, an original, spontaneous impulse, in view of which and in dependence upon which the intellect makes the declaration that ingratitude is wrong.

This is my reading of my own experience. This is the way in which I reach the objective truth that ingratitude is wrong. My sentiment is an original helper independent of, yet working with, the intellect. How do you read your experience; what are the relations of intellect and sentiment in the process by which you arrive at the objective truth that ingratitude is wrong? I would like to compare notes and see where we deviate. I appeal to your consciousness, as I have appealed to my own.

The authority of Hume does not settle the question; I arrived at my conclusion independently of him. I was surprised in reading his essays to find that he had read his experience in the same way that I have read mine, and of course this gives me added confidence in my reading. I hardly think you have a right to say Hume was asleep, since he devotes to this question a whole essay. Suppose the Orthodox affirmed that he was asleep when he wrote on Miracles, would that answer his argument?

Allow me in this connection to call your attention to the following point:—

It is perfectly right for you as an individual, believing in the sole authority of science in religion, to declare that the drift and outcome of Free Religion as a general movement in human history will be in favor of this sole authority. But are you not going too far in saying that the Free Religious Association, as an Association, by its expressed law is committed to this sole authority? For no matter how liberal your own soul may be, if I am convinced that your interpretation of the organic law of the Association is correct, I must withdraw from membership; for I do not believe that science is the sole authority in religion, and therefore cannot commit myself to the expression that it is. Is it wise to seek to commit the Free Religious Association to one side of an "open question," while there are still such profound differences of opinion among honest and liberal thinkers?

Truly yours,
NORTHFIELD, Mass. S. P. PUTNAM.

"REVEREND FATHER" EWER.

This eminent divine, whilom rector of Christ Church on Fifth Avenue, now the head and front of the ritualistic movement in our city, "father confessor," or plain "Father Ewer," has been letting off his theological pop-gun before the Church Congress at Chickering Hall. The "reverend father" hath a "honeyed tongue"; he speaks well; doubtless the "cloven tongue like as of fire" has descended and sat upon him. But when "facts" are against the "reverend father," they must look out for themselves. He rides over them rough-shod. There was a time when he was a great respecter of "facts," and then it was he wrote his pamphlet entitled Protestantism a Failure. But the "cathedral service" did the mischief. "Mark but my fall and that that ruined me." The "reverend father" wanted the confessional, incense, candles, and ritualistic millinery, and he got them, but not at Christ Church. "Ewer's circus," as the scoffers called it, came to an untimely end; so the "reverend father" crept, like the crab into the deserted shell, into the cast-off slough of Mr. Frothingham's society, and dubbed it "Church of St. Ignatius,"—whoever he may be. Doubtless "Father" Ewer first besprinkled the place with holy water, while his exorcist drove out the devils, of whom a legion must have lurked in the rafters.

Well, as already stated, the "reverend father" on the 30th of October spoke upon "Spiritual Forces in Civilization." He began by saying "spiritual forces" came into the world with Christianity and the gifts of the Holy Ghost!

Now we "have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost"; so here Father Ewer has a great advantage over us. But if by "spiritual forces" he means "love for the pure, the elevated, the refined, the ideal," surely he must know the world of ancient art proves the existence of this spirituality before any good came out of Nazareth. I think he may be defied to point to an indecent attitude or immodest pose in the works of the Grecian and Roman artists. The virtues illustrated are always noble, pure, godlike. The "skull and crossbones" are a Christian emblem, set up in the place of the sad-visaged angel with the inverted torch. The horrors of hell and purgatory are, with very few exceptions, all Christian inventions. In fact, the dread of death, that has so filled the world with needless suffering and misery, is entirely the work of this sweet (?) faith of which Father Ewer is one of the chief priests.

"Even the pagan temples," continues Father Ewer, "were shelters of crime." Can the father have forgotten the "right of sanctuary," which the advance of law and enlightenment so lately forced the Church to surrender?

"Christianity," says the reverend father, "has had an effect on private morals which is incalculable; it has also created a public conscience unknown before." Now is this a fact? Is not the very opposite the truth? "Private morals" of our age are, we confess, rather of the nature of "hot-house plants"; but, such as they are, they were forced into existence by the general spread of intelligence, the increase in material prosperity consequent upon the great inventions and discoveries of the past three centuries, the far-reaching power of the press, the triumph of liberal government, and the victory of human rights in the courts, parliaments, and constitutional conventions of the world;—these were the potential factors in the growth of "private morals." As to Christianity creating a "public conscience," it may be safely asserted that Christianity has always been the one great inert lump of laissez faire in the way of a public conscience,—that is, sense of and resistance to wrong. "Give Caesar his tribute"—has ever been its cry. The priest, the monk, the Jesuit, as keeper of the kingly (public) conscience has never hesitated to stain his hand with human blood, pile wrong mountain-high, stifle the cry of liberty, plunder the patient, brutalized people, burn the sceptic at the stake, and rivet the manacles of the slave.

"A prince," cried the reverend father, "who should imitate the excesses of a Tiberius would be hurled from his throne." True, father, but not by the efforts of the Church. Here, in our city, the infamous Tweed Ring found apologists among the ministry; one religious journal, (the Evangelist) openly defended the crew of public plunderers. "Give Caesar his tribute!" The Catholic Church grew fat at the Ring trough; Protestant ministers crowded Tweed's ante-chamber, and bore away the public funds to build churches with, to buy bells with, to pay off mortgages with, etc., etc.

But now comes the reverend father's most intensified misstatement of fact: to wit, "that slavery melted away under the influence of the Church!" Slavery, the very child of the Church! Rome, the very home for centuries, of the slave-pen and auction blocks! only think—the clank of the bondman's chain must have daily visited the ear of Jesus of Nazareth; his robe must have daily swept against the cringing, starving, captive; and yet no word, no remonstrance, no syllable of pity or encouragement. And Paul, too, that prince of turn-coats, that chief of time-servers, that avatar of Jesuitism, talks glibly of "bond and free." Was the voice of the pulpit, Protestant or Catholic, raised to condemn human slavery in our land, until the burning words of our Parkers, Phillipses, Smiths, Garrisons, Browns, rang through the North and roused the people to a sense of this glaring iniquity? No, indeed! To its shame be it spoken, the Church for years defended, excused, and palliated this infamous wrong, and, worse than all, supported it by references to Holy Writ!

"The same influence," continues Father Ewer, "changed the position of woman," etc. Here again the reverend father kicks against the pricks of facts. It was not until the year 1848 that this sovereign State of New York had the courage and honesty to rouse up and shatter the yoke which the Church had laid upon woman's neck. Until that date, the married woman was classed with idiots and felons; she could hold no property, make no contract; her husband owned her earnings. To the so-called Holy Bible woman owes her servitude. On the pages of that volume she is, with very few exceptions, a harlot or a slave! Paul tightened the rivets that hold her chains; his "successors and assigns" have but wrapped these fetters in the velvet of the confessional, and the silken fascination of mariolatry have but soothed her with the soft spoon-food of emotionalism.

One word more, and I have done with the reverend father. He says: "Christianity has erected hospitals and created respect for human life." Either this statement is maliciously false, or else stupidly erroneous. Not until the advance in medical and surgical science made hospitals necessary was Christianity able to construct them. Father Ewer mistakes effect for cause. Not until the medical science set up its glorious shibboleth, "My mission is to save; let not the meanest die!" did hospitals, infirmaries, and dispensaries spring up on all sides.

But why say more? It is the old, old trick of the Church to claim every triumph of the arts, sciences, and industries as her own! As her miserable miracles, so-called, "pale their ineffectual fire" in the glorious daylight of fact, we are enabled to see the commencement of the end! The splendor of truth may dazzle our eyes for a brief space, as we emerge from the darkness of theological systems; but ere long we shall be enabled to stand boldly up and face the dawn, like true children of light as we are!

INGERSOLL LOCKWOOD.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2, 1877.

BARRENNESS OF MATERIALISM.

The philosophy of materialism may at times seem very strong intellectually; it may stare us in the face as the only belief that cannot be refuted by scientific analysis. But morally it must ever be weak and defective while human nature remains essentially what it is. To say that the doctrine of materialism does not satisfy and encourage the highest aspirations of the human heart is to affirm a universal truth. The intellect may be forced to accept materialism as the only reasonable view of life; but it does this against the agonizing protest of every instinct of the soul. If one embraces materialism at all, it is from stern logical necessity, and not with that joy of heart experienced in receiving any new confirmation of the hope of immortality.

Materialism is the belief of despair, and the paralysis of the finest moral energies in human nature. It lacks every element of a true religion, for it destroys man's highest conception of life. What has materialism to give in exchange for the sublime and inspiring hopes it destroys? What moral tonic does it offer to brace human nature against the pressure of this life's ills? I do not say that materialism is false, but I do say that it does not meet the great spiritual wants of human nature. I do most sincerely believe that it has yet no compensation to give for the hope of a future life which it destroys. It may suit a few hardy natures, but it is repugnant to the great mass of men and women who think and feel.

If materialism is true, the human mind has wrought a sublime miracle in conceiving a destiny for itself so much nobler than that which Nature has given it. Admitting materialism to be true, we are then confronted by one truth that will not satisfy the spiritual aspirations of human nature. To round out this life into its most perfect spiritual symmetry man must create for himself an imaginary state of being following this. Destroy the idea of the permanence of character in some conscious form, and its sacredness, its beauty, is irreparably marred.

In the name of that religion which Mr. Abbot defines as "the effort of man to perfect himself," I impeach materialism and challenge its advocates to show that it does not paralyze this noblest ambition of human nature.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo.

A PLEA FOR COMMUNISM.

I am greatly surprised that so many reformers who have thrown off the yoke of superstition should still cling to so many of the ideas and customs that have grown out of the falsities they have rejected. Take, for instance, the article "Common-sense vs. Communism," in which the writer accepts all the erroneous and absurd conditions of society which have been forced upon it by the priests who have kept the mass of the people in ignorance, degrading them into slavery. If "modern civilization is based upon the inequality of the distribution of the productions of labor," why did we not see it exemplified in the Southern States? For the very good reason, "that all attempts to subvert the natural law governing the process of human and social evolution" is the cause why humanity has not attained a higher civilization.

The unnatural and false conditions on which this writer bases society leads himself and his readers to false conclusions, and his comparison falls to the ground. We do not expect "oak trees to produce cabbages." But we do expect an acorn to produce a grand, noble, gigantic tree, if "artificial restraints" are not brought to crush or dwarf it. We should remove all obstructions and allow the laws of Nature to produce her grand results.

Why will not thinkers shake off the shackles with which they have so long been bound, and boldly and courageously throw off their early education and prejudices? Let them consider how great and glorious would have been the condition of humanity today, if every means had been employed to educate and cultivate all individuals, allowing them to unfold the latent capacities within them.

The civilization of the world has been kept back by preventing the minds of the masses of the people from unfolding. How many geniuses of the order of Fulton, Watts, Newton, Franklin, and many others have been crushed and destroyed! No doubt the world has lost many inventions and improvements that they might have developed.

Common-sense teaches that communism would educate and develop the physical, intellectual, and affectional nature of humanity. And the people would live in love and peace, instead of the wars and strife which now afflict society. Communism affords the people leisure to cultivate the arts and sciences; and when they find any of their members possessing faculties which will be a benefit to humanity, those possessing the means can encourage and foster the genius that might otherwise be neglected.

How much more grand and excellent such a system would be than the present, which only allows a few "superior minds to force their way by diligent pressure into the superior social strata"! Now, if the scientific and literary men and women will not demonstrate to the class which are usually considered the refined and higher portion of civilized society, that there is a still higher condition of social life which shall be free from poverty and crime, then it is time for the working-men and women to let "the educated classes" know that they are no longer willing to live in the present social system, which the next evolution will denominate as barbaric; but that they are determined to unite together and work for each other's good, so that they may enjoy all the advantages of the "accumulation of wealth" and "the leisure essential to the better cultivation of the intellectual powers." As labor produces all the wealth of the world, you can by a true system of economy soon have your own libraries and scientific institutions from which you are now debarred by the false system, called civilization, which by its horrid wars destroys and wastes your labor, on the one hand, while idleness and extravagances consume the remainder. Civilization is filled with crime and poverty, while communities are free from these evils and are blessed with industry, love, and happiness.

GEORGE D. HENCK.

PHILADELPHIA.

CONWAY'S "EARTHWARD PILGRIMAGE."

Upon the fly-leaf of a book I have before me, entitled the Earthward Pilgrimage, I find that it was "entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1870, by M. D. Conway, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the Southern District of New York." The first intimation, however, that I had of the existence of such a literary treasure, was received, not long since, while looking over the catalogue of books offered for sale by the Index Association. This is not a surprising circumstance; but it does seem a little surprising that such a gem should not have found its way to the shelves of the Harvard Library until the year 1875, and equally so, that it is not yet obtainable from the Public Library of the not inconsiderable town of Woburn, where the writer of this is, at present, residing.

Indeed, I much doubt if it could be found in half-a-dozen of the public libraries of Massachusetts outside of Boston and Cambridge. Is it, then, strange that the Religion of Humanity spreads so slowly, when there is so little desire shown to know what that religion comprehends? Now, for many years I have been a pilgrim along the misty way of life in search of light and truth. In furtherance of that desire, I have read such freethought literature as I could command, and can truly say, that nothing has fallen under my eye more entirely soul-satisfying than this work of Mr. Conway's.

Indeed, I may exclaim, EUREKA! No doubt, tastes, as well as opinions, differ widely, and that a song may fall upon my ear in melodious cadence, which would grate harshly upon the tympanum of my neighbor; still, unless I greatly misjudge the average sentiment of my co-seekers after truth—in the realm of free inquiry,—the Earthward Pilgrimage will prove as great a boon to them as it has done to me. Its pages fairly sparkle with gems of sublimest truths, and blossom with flowers of sweetest odor and loveliest hues. The author's thoughts—always beautiful, often sublime—are borne smoothly onward upon the bosom of an abounding river of graceful diction and stirring eloquence, even as the thrilling tones of a prima donna's voice blend and float harmoniously upon the waves of melody, evoked by her orchestral accompaniment. A book that abounds in so much that is true and beautiful, and so little of the contrary,—one that contains so much to admire, and so little to condemn,—should have a more general reading than, I fear, it has had; and should, ere this, have passed through many editions.

The chapter under the caption, "Deo Erexit Voltaire," is in the author's happiest vein, and is alone worth the price of the whole volume. It contains a merited tribute to the honesty and genius of the great iconoclast, whose remorseless breaking of the idols set up by the Romish Church made it possible for the present generation to enjoy freedom of religious opinions, and—as the author conceives—prevented Protestantism from relapsing into popery. Possibly, I am enthusiastic in my admiration of Mr. Conway's book beyond what is warranted by the text, but my enthusiasm has, at least, the merit of sincerity; and I cannot refrain from speaking warmly in favor of a volume which, as I turned its leaves, first interested, then delighted, then electrified me.

Those who have enjoyed its beauties, I warmly congratulate; to those who have not experienced that pleasure, I as heartily commend its perusal.

DANIEL CONY.

WOBURN, Mass., October, 1877.

"CAUSE" AND "OCCASION."

GREAT BARRINGTON, Mass., Oct. 27, 1877.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Mr. B. F. Underwood's comments upon certain propositions affirmed by Rev. Joseph Cook lead me to ask a few questions which I hope your correspondent will consider worth answering.

Is experience the cause or the occasion of all our ideas? If the former, then the mind is a blank previous to experience; if the latter, then the germ at least of every idea exists in the mind previous to experience, and is merely quickened by its influence.

Both suppositions are unsatisfactory, because, if either be true, man is at the mercy of an element outside of himself,—in short, is just what his circumstances make him.

Either supposition leads to fatalism; for the occasion is of just as much consequence in determining whether or not an effect shall result as the cause itself. What does speculation upon the origin of ideas amount to? But more of this, if Mr. Underwood cares to reply.

H. J. CHASE.

P.S.—The above is written under the impression that sensationalism, as expounded by Locke, and others, leads straight to fatalism. This is what I have been taught. On my own account, I have formed the opinion that the opposite theory of the origin of ideas (that they exist beforehand in the mind and are aroused into activity by experience) leads to precisely the same result. For effect depends for existence just as much upon occasion as it does upon cause. If you think the last conclusion ridiculous, please throw this into the waste-basket.

H. J. C.

REMINISCENCES OF BENJ. HALLOWELL.

The beautiful reminiscence concerning Benjamin Hallowell, by A. G. Riddle, tendered in THE INDEX of October 11, was very grateful to my feelings. I knew friend Hallowell well, and was a frequent recipient of his beautiful and highly philosophical letters. He was a man of great scope of mind and breadth of thought, and was a free religionist in the full acceptance of the term. He was a man of deep and fervent faith,—a faith that worked by love and wisdom and truth. Faith other than this he considered irrelevant. In a letter dated in 1873, he thus writes: "The practical truth is, we must pray in action; live religion; put our own shoulders to the wheel, and then call on Hercules to aid our exertions. We must have unwavering faith in God, and faith in man as the child of God, whom he has made but little lower than the angels, and will crown with glory and honor, if only we coöperate with his gracious purposes and strive to serve him in his way, not ours. Then will our aspirations become inspiration."

He once told me of an Orthodox minister desiring that he should render an account of his faith, to whom he replied as follows: "This is a manifestation of the spirit of God graciously imparted to the soul of every rational, accountable being, which, if humbly and faithfully regarded and obeyed, will lead such soul into all truth necessary for its present well-being and its everlasting salvation."

Thus Benjamin Hallowell was a believer, and a follower too, of that "true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." He believed with Socrates that the soul was modelled after the eternal idea of the true, the good, and the beautiful. With

Paul that this was "the first-born of many brethren." Or in other language, that the a priori law of causality acts within us as the law of our being and intellect, depending not altogether on experience, because as a law a priori, it precedes all experience, making experience possible. He was much interested in the circulation of a book entitled Christ the Spirit, by Gen. Ethan Allen Hitchcock. In a letter to me he states: "This work gives a more connected, consistent, elevated, spiritual, and practical view of the Scriptures, than any other I have been favored to meet with, and its author removed nothing from Christianity but its superstition and its idolatry. He brings into greater prominence Christ, the Spirit of God, the divine attributes, manifest in all ages in the soul and conduct of man throughout humanity, which is the universal eternal Christ, the wisdom of God and the power of God, in which the true friend believes and trusts."

Benjamin Hallowell was a man whom the truth had made free. He was a lover of freethought, and herein I again quote from a letter written 2 mo., 26th, 1877: "In the calculus, it sometimes becomes necessary in the solution of a problem to integrate between limits; but in the search for truth, in the expression of a truth, there must be no limit; the mind must be FREE."

DAVID NEWPORT.

ABINGTON, Pa., 10 mo., 11th, 1877.

COMPARISON AND DISCRIMINATION.

At the Ministers' Institute held at Springfield, Oct. 8, and following days, Rev. Dr. Thomas Hill, of Portland, ex-President of Harvard College, read a paper on Erasmus Darwin, in the course of which he criticised the poet's famous grandson as follows:—

"There are two opposite faculties of mind enjoyed by men in different degrees. One is the power of observing likenesses and resemblances, the other the talent of detecting differences and making nice discriminations. Charles Darwin has an intellect in which the former power predominates. He assumes that species have become what they are by processes of infinitesimal change and modification acting through vast periods of time; and he sets species of similar forms into lines of graded connection. Now he may be wrong here; for although in the present state of knowledge we may be able to see but few and small differences between two species, yet numerous and wide distinctions may really exist, which keener and closer observation in the future may disclose. Language and definition so lag behind thought and perception that many differences about which common-sense makes no mistake, our scientific classifications cannot yet mark out. Prof. Asa Gray says that no botanical description of an oak can be given in which that of a chestnut is not included. Yet uneducated observation easily distinguishes between oaks and chestnuts."

Rev. Dr. Hill did not broach the large question of Evolution, but seemed to think that its a priori argument, as giving most glory to the Supreme Intelligence, was the strongest admissible; and that all a posteriori arguments as yet brought forward were imperfect and inconclusive.

G. I.

WHILE testifying the other day before the high and mighty commission appointed by Congress to inquire into the sanity of San Francisco upon the Chinese question, Dr. Meares was asked by Senator Sargent "if the disease existing amongst the Mongolians was the true leprosy of the Bible." To which he replied he didn't know, as "medical men were not in the habit of consulting the Bible as authority upon diseases." The discomfiture of the worthy senator may be better imagined than described. The reply was well-timed and admirable. It was an argument clothed in exquisite satire. The question that drew it forth was, in truth, a very fair specimen of the prejudice which is artfully instilled into the minds of the ignorant against the Chinese. The poor fellows have hitherto walked about our streets with this disease, and have entered our hospitals with it, and, deplorable as it is, and indeed all diseases are, yet no serious consequences have arisen to our people through its presence here. But then it may be made a bugaboo of. Attach to it an awe-inspiring Biblical name and origin, and it instantaneously becomes a worse scarecrow to certain people here than does the banshee woman to them elsewhere; whilst it would be in reality no more substantial. Very much more worthy of Christian statesmen would it be to propose the cure of the disease, rather than use it as a means to frighten ignorant people. If the commission will inquire as to its curability, they will be accomplishing a beneficent, humanitarian work, and, before they are through, may possibly astonish our medics at the amount of useful information revealed. The disease is by no means unknown or confined to the Chinese. In Norway there were, in 1856, as many as two thousand eight hundred and fifty advanced cases of it; by scientific treatment then commenced, the number of cures soon amounted to forty per cent. of the whole, and since then an average of fifty-six of the worst cases is cured annually, whilst the spread of the disease has been absolutely stopped.—San Francisco News Letter.

THE MORMON theology, as expounded by Joseph Smith and perfected by Brigham Young, is a fantastic compound of doctrines and practices borrowed from almost every form of religion the world has known. Mr. J. H. Beadle, long a resident of Utah, in a book on the Mormons published some years ago, says: "They are Christians in their belief in the New Testament and the mission of Christ; Jews in their temporal theocracy, tithing, and belief in prophecy; Mohammedans in regard to the relations of the sexes, and Voudoos, or Fetishists, in their witchcraft, good and evil spirits, faith-doctoring and superstition.

From the Buddhists they have stolen their doctrines of apotheosis and development of gods; from the Greek mythology, their loves of the immortals and spirits. They have blended the ideas of many nations of polytheists, and made the whole consistent by outdoing the materialists." The active conflict going on between the various Christian sects at the time Joseph Smith proclaimed a new revelation, seems to have led to his borrowing a variety of controverted doctrines from sources immediately at hand. Thus the Mormon theology takes from the Methodists their "witness of the Spirit"; from the Disciples their "first principles"; from the Presbyterians their "universal suffrage"; from the Second Adventists their belief in the speedy coming of Christ's kingdom; and from the Catholics their doctrine of an infallible head of the Church. In their faith that only a small portion of mankind will fall of ultimate salvation the Mormons are almost Universalists; and in their idea of the nature of Christ they might be called Unitarians. Their notion that unseen powers produce physical manifestations on earth brings them in accord with the modern Spiritualists, and their belief in evil spirits allies them with the ancient Manicheans.—N. Y. Tribune.

DEEP ARE THE WILES of the Jesuit, and wary must he be who would avoid him. There is in England an Evangelical paper called the Rock, whose editor buckles on his armor and writes to his confectioner to supply him with comfits free from crosses. Candy in the cruciform shape he guards against as a Satanic and, if it isn't superfluous to add, Jesuitical device for luring young and confiding souls to popery. The confectioner, good easy man, is not so deeply alarmed as his customer, though, to the possible destruction of some unsuspecting family who will have to take more than its share of crosses, the papistic devices are omitted from the package sent to the Rock office. Still, the candy-man is sensible that, under certain conditions, the cruciform sweets are liable to send a young and innocent child into the arms of the Scarlet Woman. "I have had many thoughts about these enclosures," says the conscientious Christian confectioner, "as to whether they might foster the tendency to popery; but I don't think there is this danger, as they are simply regarded by the children as an ornament." The editor of the Rock devotes a solemn paragraph to the subject matter of this correspondence. "We are," says he, "quite at the mercy of our confectioner, according to the whim of the moment. This matter will have to be thoroughly probed." While such zealous, thoughtful men are guarding the liberties of the world, it is safe from the aggressions of the papacy. Let it sweep back the cursed tide of cruciform candies and all will be well.—Cincinnati Telegraph.

GEORGE ODGER, the English working-man and radical who died lately, deserves a kindly mention by Americans. Professor Fawcett said at his funeral that one eminent service which Mr. Odger had rendered to his countrymen ought never to be forgotten. At one time it had seemed likely that England was about to commit a crime which would have branded her with indelible disgrace. It had seemed some fourteen years ago that this country, with its traditional love of freedom, was about to throw in its lot with the slave-owners of the Southern States, and to refuse its sympathy to those struggling for freedom in the North. It was in that hour of crisis he had first known George Odger, who then had done a noble work: for no one had more influenced the decision of working-men, who, to their immortal honor, when other people with greater advantages went wrong, kept true to the traditions of Englishmen, and never wavered for a moment in their allegiance to the cause of the North. He remembered going some fourteen years ago with John Stuart Mill to a meeting at St. James's Hall, called by the Trade Unionists of London to sympathize with the cause of the North. Mr. Mill said that it was such eloquence as he had never heard, and never expected to hear again; but he went on to make this significant remark of one whose early education had been neglected: "I never knew that the cause of the North could be put so forcibly till I heard the speech of that working-man," meaning George Odger.—N. Y. Tribune, March 26, 1877.

THE Tribune has been examining the books of the county register to ascertain how many and what churches in this city are mortgaged. It finds mortgages on fifty-three churches on record, representing the startling total of $2,387,886. But this probably does not fully represent the debts which the churches have incurred. There are, doubtless, many owing various amounts which are not secured by mortgage. The total of these debts may reach two or three hundred thousand dollars, so that the sum which the churches of New York city owe amounts to upward of two and a half million dollars. The fifty-three churches named in the Tribune's list belong to seven denominations. The Presbyterians have the heaviest load, $706,000; next are the Reformed churches, with $644,000; then the Protestant Episcopal churches, with $453,000; the Roman Catholic, with $229,000; the Baptist, with $212,000; the Methodist, with $79,000; and the Lutheran, with $44,886. The largest amount owed by a single church is that set against "the Reformed Protestant Dutch Church": viz., $471,000; the Phillips (Presbyterian) Church owes $260,000; the Church of the Disciples (Congregational), $189,000; the Church of the Puritans (Presbyterian), $155,000; the Church of the Heavenly Rest (Protestant Episcopal), $137,000; and the Memorial (Presbyterian), $130,000. The Tribune also ascertains that nearly all of these debts have been incurred in enlarging or rebuilding church-edifices, and not for purposes of charity or the increase of salaries.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 51 insertions, 6c per line.	For 52 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.
13	25	51	100
13	25	51	100
13	25	51	100

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STUBBS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-

ly, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OTHER

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh-Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.75
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physico and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thorstein: The Foot Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (Mrs. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (Mrs. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Portraits, and Fancies".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 6 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Scenes of Modern and Pictures of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GORTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 1 vol. Per vol.....	5.00
Selective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMBERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	1.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
INGERBOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. In	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.50
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.) What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 3 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (Mrs. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1835 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	3.25
Memorial Volume of his Life and Works.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVAT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.25
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkroes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	1.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	3.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. E. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I, and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truist Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait, Cabinet Edition.....	2.0

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
KENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROBERTSON (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in the Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.30
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 28 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.00
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statistics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Great-Boon Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.00
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Fendensale.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Fanny and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Demis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THEOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
God.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols. III, IV, and VI., each.....	4.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sanctaries.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (Mrs. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
Teacher Girls.....	2.00
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX.

231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 413.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 8, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

MR. L. W. BILLINGSLEY, the Nebraska member of the Executive Committee of the National Liberal League, has appointed his four associates on the State Sub-committee as follows: N. W. Smalls, of Fremont, Fulton Gault, of North Platte, H. W. Parker, of Beatrice, and W. E. Copeland, of Lincoln. SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from Mr. J. W. Frank, Dysart, Iowa, 68; from Mr. C. F. Gard, Greeley, Col., 59; from Mr. W. K. Smalley, St. Albans, Vt., 29; from Mr. W. U. Dame, Brentwood, N.Y., 15; from Rev. L. K. Washburn, Chelsea, Mass., 81; from Mr. John Ahrens, Longview, Ark., 28; from Mr. W. H. Crowell, Jefferson, O., 40. Total thus far received—8,891.

DISPATCHES from Panama not long since stated that "an attempt was made September 29 at San Pedro Jacopilas, near the Mexican frontier, to assassinate President Barrios of Guatemala. He was attacked while driving by a priest named Felix Pajes, who fired a revolver at him. The first shot missed, and before the second could be fired Barrios seized the assassin and struggled for the possession of his weapon. The President's body-servant at that moment entered the door, and, seeing the priest still endeavoring to fire the revolver, shot him dead. Barrios had just quelled a slight outbreak near the border, started by a party of Mexican brigands and dissatisfied Indians, of whom seven or eight were killed and a number taken prisoners, but pardoned. Pajes was supposed to be the instigator of the outbreak."

A "UNITARIAN" addressed this note to the editor of the Chicago Tribune recently: "Among the agencies to be employed in relieving the Third Unitarian Church of its financial embarrassments, the Rev. Mr. Herford (if correctly reported in your Monday's paper) cites faith, prayer, and courage. Being of the Unitarian household of faith, I had hoped that sentiments of this kind among our order were among the things of the past,—obsolete. They savor too much of 'Tabernacle' doctrine. Potatoes are made to grow by putting them into the ground, and then after, tilling. This planting and tilling is called work. This is the only way potatoes ever were known to be produced, and by the same natural process church-debts are paid. Faith, prayer, and courage never yet grew a potato or paid a church-debt, and it never will. Let us hope that among Unitarians, if not among other Christian sects, the use of sentimental gush or nonsense of this character is near at an end."

THE LIVERPOOL Mercury some time since published this droll account of "A Ritualist Curate's Apology": "The Sussex Daily News says that the Rev. E. G. Watson, who was for twelve years a curate at Christ Church, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, and who has left the Church of England, has published a printed 'apology' respectfully addressed to the clergy and congregations of Christ Church and St. John's, St. Leonard's-on-Sea.' The writer commences: 'My dear friends, acquaintances, and enemies,' and gives numerous reasons why he 'went over to the enemy's lines.' In the course of his apology occurs the following: 'I assure you I felt the humbug of the thing so bitterly that more than once when we were plausibly walking down the church singing,—

"We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in faith, in doctrine,
One in charity."

I was on the point of flinging my book at the boys' heads, and leaving you then and there.'"

IT IS STATED that "Father Cruci, editor of the Civita Catholica, a prominent Jesuit, has been expelled from the order for maintaining that the temporal power is not necessary to the well-being of the Church. The question involved, it will be observed, is 'the well-being of the Church'; not its authority nor its supremacy. It would seem that upon such a question some difference of opinion might be allowed. The view of the obnoxious editor and priest is not hostile to the Church, nor in any sense constructively disloyal. He believes, evidently, in rendering unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that are God's. It is held by his opponents, however, that the temporal power—that is the things that are Caesar's—belongs to the Church, as well as the spiritual power. Father Cruci is an eminent Catholic; and, until now, an eminent Jesuit. It is not to be presumed that he stands alone in his Church or his order, among its thinkers and scholars, opposed to the temporal power. The enlightened as well as the common-sense of the world rejects the assumption of temporal authority by any church or religious body whatever."

IT IS AMUSING to see the tables turned in this way, as described by the New York Tribune: "The heathen are organizing foreign missions for the conversion of Christians. The Hindus of the sacred city of Benares have founded a society for the propagation of Brahminism among the Christians of Australia. An eminent Brahmin of the name of Suradschi, a man of great authority, has recently been visiting some of the English colonies, and while travelling in Australia, was appalled and grieved at the fearful prevalence of drunkenness among the Christians. On returning to India he called together a number of thoughtful Brahmins, to whom he communicated his glowing zeal to do something for the salvation of their degraded fellow-men and fellow-subjects in Australia. The only perfect remedy, he considered, would be the conversion of these Christians to a better and purer faith. A large sum was collected for the pious and benevolent enterprise, and some of the Brahmins declared their willingness to devote themselves to the work, and to spend and be spent in this humane and holy cause. Suradschi is now engaged in translating fitting passages from the Vedas into the English tongue, for the use of the missionaries."

ESPECIAL ATTENTION is invited to the meeting of the Tompkins County Liberal League, at Ithaca, N.Y., after the adjournment of the Rochester Congress. The list of members contains the names of eleven Professors, presumably all of them in Cornell University. The addresses of Professor Oliver and of Mr. Giles B. Stebbins ought to give abundant assurance that the Congress has made a deep impression on the very best class of our citizens. Despite the injudicious utterances of some of the speakers, which were as much regretted by us as by any one, it is most encouraging to see that such cultured, intelligent, and high-minded listeners as Professor Oliver (Mr. Stebbins was not present at the Congress) were disposed to rate individual indiscretions at their true magnitude, and not to lose sight of the unspeakable moral importance and greatness of the movement itself. No brave heart will be daunted in the least by the absurd and exaggerated consequence attributed by some critics to the mere effervescence of long repressed feeling on the part of some who have for years been subjected to public contumely on account of their honest belief. These very speakers uttered no mean or cruel or dastardly words, such as charging "immorality" on all who differed from them, as Christians too often do; their zeal in behalf of unpopular opinions would have been accounted honorable, if they had been twice as enthusiastic in advocating the popular creed, and, although they stepped pretty hard on our own most tenderly cherished convictions, we felt not a particle of resentment on that account. It is the extreme of ungenerosity to raise a senseless clamor over such minor matters, as some have done; and we should scorn to disown anybody who speaks a vallant word for freedom. His is a petty soul who cannot forgive much to the spirit of liberty!

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.	FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Irvington, Mass.
HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. O. M. FROTHINGHAM.	New York, N. Y.
MR. W. M. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HOLLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM FAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FELSANTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Spargia, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. RILL.	Florida, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN.	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT.	Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD.	Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. B. S. MOOREHEAD.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. SALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN. 221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB. 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX. 3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT. W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX. H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.	J. H. HALL, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN A. HENNS, Monticello.
California.	H. MOULINBAUX, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.	EDWARD FRUSCH, Chicago.
Indiana.	A. G. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. OLARK, Wiltonville.
Louisiana.	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.	M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
Maryland.	J. S. ROSS, New Market.
Massachusetts.	W. H. BAYARD, Boston.
Michigan.	D. G. HAUSER, Battle Creek.
Minnesota.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	J. S. BOYDEN, St. Louis.
Nebraska.	L. W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.	H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORPE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STAKE, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL GOIT, Elsie's Basin.
Pennsylvania.	G. W. BALDWIN, Lewisville.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	DR. E. H. PIERCE, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. A. DUNBAR, Greenville.
Vermont.	R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.	S. SPALDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT C. SCHERER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. S. A. E. OTIS, 151 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE, 221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeld.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeld, Julius Philsterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.

JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clausen, and Fred. Braasch.

CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Tooley.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.

DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.

PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, John S. Verity; Secretary, Robert Cooper.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elzbur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.

PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Emerson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Emerson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Coe, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. Abbot; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Kerna, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gint, A. E. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornat.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
HUDSON, MISSOURI.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
CATARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hoppson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, E. Brunning.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Greeng, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boel, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madson, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State; granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

QUEER ORIGIN OF WORDS.—"Jet" derives its name from the Gatales, a river at Lycia, where was found the black stone which the French call agate, or jaet, which we abbreviate into jet.

Pamphylla, a Greek lady, who compiled a history of the world in thirty-five little books, has given her name to "pamphlet."

"Punch and Judy" are the relics of an ancient mystery play, in which the actors were Pontius Pilate and Judas Iscariot.

"Dollar" is from the German thaler, which is derived from Thal, the Valley of Joachim, in Bohemia, where the silver works were situated that made this coin.

"Bigot" is from Visigoth, in which the fierce and intolerant Arianism of the Visigoth conqueror of Spain has been handed down to infamy.

"Humbug" is from Hamburg; "a piece of Hamburg news," was in Germany a proverbial expression for false political rumors.

"Exhort" and "yeast" are from the same root, which signifies something boiling or overflowing.

"Gas" and "gust" have the same parentage.

"Gauze" derives its name from Gaza, where it was first made. Silk was first made at Damascus.

"Tabby-cat" is all unconscious that her name is derived from Atab, a famous street in Bagdad, inhabited by the manufacturers of silken stuffs called Atabi, our taffety, the wavy markings of the watered silk resembling pussy's coat.

IT IS TOLD for a fact that a little flaxen-haired boy of five years, who had passed the afternoon at the Boston Art Museum, looking up in his mother's face, said: "If all the mammas, when they die, turn into mummies, do all the papas turn into puppies?"

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Unitarian "Ministers' Institute."

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED AT COSMIAN HALL, FLORENCE, MASS., OCT. 21, 1877.

BY DAVID H. CLARK.

There was a few days since a very interesting and notable gathering of Unitarians at Springfield, Massachusetts. It bore the name of the "Ministers' Institute"; and, as such, was the introduction of a new enterprise of the denomination of a specially commendable and significant character in the line of progress. Its object, according to previous announcement and representation at the time, was the consideration and examination of theology and religion in the light of advanced knowledge and science,—to enable the younger ministers of the body, and those whose secluded and less favored situations prevent them from coming into ready contact with the freshest currents of thought, to become acquainted with the conclusions of the elder and more favored, the results of their best scholarship, thinking ability, and veteran experience in respect to these subjects, and those of professional interest,—to school these younger men in the tactics necessary to contend with the new exigencies and trials of faith incident to the intellectual transitions of the time.

Of course, it was not to be expected that this purpose (unintentionally, perhaps, implying a dilemma) would be fulfilled with that entire thoroughness, independence of position, and freedom from all theological bias and compromises which unchurched and radical minds might insist upon. It was not to be expected that (broad, free, and even radical as might be the discussions, and were in the main, as we shall see) they should not be in some degree qualified and colored by a regard for denominational reputation for soundness of faith, and by that dread of unsoundness which has always been more or less characteristic of all Christian sects, Unitarians as well as others,—by professional training and prejudices of which the genuine freethinker and truth-seeker knows nothing, and is, in consequence, unaffected.

But with all due consideration of such influences as these, and much must be allowed for them in any like instance, the occasion was remarkable for the disposition evinced to front with more or less directness the new scientific views and tendencies; to subject theology and Christian doctrines to the tests of the most advanced criticism. It was remarkable as an illustration of the steady, rapid, more and more potent, and in fact irresistible encroachment of science and modern enlightenment upon the Church. It indicated the gradual recognition that theology can no longer successfully elude the issues which they are thrusting upon it, and that it must, in some clearly satisfactory and reasonable way, adjust itself to the positions which the leaders in the world of knowledge and thought are taking. It is true that this was but reenacting what has often been witnessed in the course of religious history,—the sudden, eleventh-hour conversion when the fortunes of the day seem to be going against them.

The course of science and religion has been like that of competitive runners for a prize. Religion has hitherto taken the lead, but now begins to perceive that, such is the speed of its rival, it is in danger of being beaten, if it does not halt and transform the race into a friendly walk side by side. But as religion and science are of different origin and nature, and in their distinct character must be rivals, such a union cannot permanently exist without the loss of the identity of the one or of the other. The union of religion and science, if the former shall continue to be what it has been, and if we can trust the signs of the times, must eventually result in the undisputed dominion and leadership of science in every department of human interest and thought. There is nothing so sacred as to be independent of it; nothing that is not amenable to its laws, or that can be permitted to refuse to give account of itself before the bar of its judgment,—no rite, nor doctrine, nor system, not even the idea of God himself, since it is the necessary and ultimate expression of human intelligence. I speak of course of the method of science, not of any particular position it may have assumed to-day.

The Ministers' Institute was notable because of the deviation it marked from what has been the conduct of the denomination under whose auspices it convened. It was distinguished by breadth, toleration, and silent consent at least, in the intellectual developments of the time,—an apparent sympathy with the progressive spirit rather than a disposition to draw arbitrary lines of exclusion and proscription. It was noticeable, by one who had been accustomed to attend former conventions of the sect, that there was less alarm exhibited with reference to dangers which threaten Christianity within the fold; less fear that the reputation of the body might be damaged if certain vagaries of opinion, or those esteemed such, were suffered to abide in it rather than be cast out; less insistence upon the appellative, the "Lord" Jesus Christ; less heard concerning "statements of faith"; less abhorrence manifested of scepticism and infidelity and of the prospect of splitting the denomination in two if certain resolutions were passed, and less threat of leaving it if they were, than have been in years not far remote the distinction of its sessions. As one recalled some of these, it was impossible not to conjecture how different might have been the fortune of Unitarianism in this country and religious progress in general (not to mention the personal experiences of alienation, trial, and suffering which have ensued in numerous instances in consequence), if the same temper and wisdom could have sooner prevailed and more directly influenced its career.

But the scientific dictum that progress is from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous, the reflection that an advanced intellectual principle or policy is a gradual development must serve to reconcile us to the fact that it has been otherwise. "It must needs be that offences come, but woe to him through whom they come"—has been scarcely less characteristic of liberal Christianity than of the other divisions of the Church. It remains to be seen with what unshrinking courage, with what undeviating fidelity and perseverance, it shall pursue the path upon which it has entered. It cannot redeem the past, but it can in some noble measure atone for inappreciation of the great opportunity which it possessed,—for faithlessness to its professions of freedom, the ideal of liberty which it has always assumed to cherish, but to which it has never wholly preserved an allegiance.

A brief retrospective survey just here will render this more apparent.

Although the essential doctrines of Unitarianism have been held in every age of the Church, with less or greater distinctness (and it is claimed to have been its earliest accepted creed), it shows but few traces of persistent growth in this country until the closing part of the last century. It was a recoil from the inexorable orthodoxy of the time; an advance in rationalism inside of Christianity. It began with the renunciation of the doctrine of the Trinity, or a tri-personal Deity; Jesus was not both Father and Son in one, but Son only. At first it was entertained mainly as a private belief, quietly working in the minds of the more studious and critical of the day, appearing now here and now there more or less openly, but for the most part suppressed and concealed. As has always been the case in the Church, to utter the truth was perilous. Those who held it did not care to make the sacrifice, or did not deem it expedient. They might not experience the cruel fortunes of the Arians, their early progenitors,—nor of Michael Servetus, who was burned at the stake for his Unitarianism at the instigation of John Calvin,—nor the suffering in behalf of their faith of their brethren in Italy, and Poland, and various parts of Europe, after the Reformation. But they had good reason to believe that a free confession of their doubts, misgivings, and growing convictions would be attended with consequences they did not care to incur or provoke.

It is related that, as early as the year 1650, "the General Court of Massachusetts Bay" "convicted" before it Mr. William Pynchon, the distinguished magistrate of Springfield, on account of some "false, erroneous, and heretical" notions broached by him in a volume that had been published in London. His heresies referred to the method of atonement through the death of Christ, and he showed no disposition to retract all his "errors," though the elders conferred with him, and the Rev. John Norton was appointed to answer his book. A little more than a century afterwards, the Rev. John Rogers, of Leominster, came under the suspicion of unsoundness in respect to the doctrine of original sin, and the deity of the Lord Jesus Christ, and was driven from his office.

These and kindred occurrences were the natural antecedents to that gradual softening of the creeds which transpired during the last half of the eighteenth century, and out of which Unitarianism was evolved. It especially gained strength among the cultured class, through the influence of the fact that many of the most eminent philosophers and men of letters for a considerable time before, including the great metaphysician John Locke, the philosopher Sir Isaac Newton, and the poet John Milton, as well as renowned living divines and persons of various distinction, were either known or believed to incline to the growing heresy. But the movement, as has been indicated, was still, for the most part, an underground one. It was inside of the Church rather than outside.

The appointment of a professor to the Divinity School of Harvard College, in 1805, who was affected with the questionable views, served to kindle the flame which was long to break forth with greater volume and violence. It acquired additional intensity ten years later through the following incident: In the memoirs of Lindsey, a famous English preacher, by Belsham, another famous English preacher, a chapter was devoted to the progress of Unitarianism in America, in which a number of private letters, from clergymen and others in this country, were adduced as evidence. This convicting testimony was immediately seized upon by the Orthodox party as a sufficient warrant to sound the trumpet of alarm. A sharp strife of words in sermons, reviews, pamphlets, newspapers ensued, in which many of the most noted and valorous on either side vigorously participated. A sermon about the same time by Dr. Channing, at the ordination of Jared Sparks at Baltimore, in which the Trinitarian doctrine was directly assailed and the Unitarian avowed and defended, increased the heat of the conflict. A leading Orthodox publication urged "separation in worship and communion from Unitarians." The line now became distinctly drawn between the two parties. The exchange of pulpits between their respective clergymen ceased. Congregations became divided, and cases of litigation growing out of questions in respect to the rights of church property and the settlement of ministers were frequent. Much bad blood and acrimonious temper were displayed by both parties. The Orthodox endeavored to enforce a summary decision against the Unitarians by adopting the name of Evangelical Christians. The odious epithet of infidel was freely hurled at them; and, borrowing a damning charge from the New Testament, they were accused of "denying the Lord that bought them." To disclose more fully their abandoned condition parallels were exhibited between their writings and those of "Tom Paine" (I use the name as it was in customary use). Need there have been anything further to show the depth of infamy into which they had fallen?

But Unitarianism, beginning with the rejection of the doctrine of the Trinity, soon, as is inevitable in every step of mental progress, found all the correlative conceptions of the system undergoing a modification. It became unsound, if not upon all, at least upon most of them. It is true that many, at first, shrank from consistently and logically following out their positions to their conclusions, or encountering the consequences of an open avowal of these modifications of the old opinions. It seemed preferable to them, and more agreeable, to keep as closely moored as possible to solid and established orthodoxy rather than to venture far out upon the untried and uncertain waters of liberalism.

It was owing to this clinging to orthodoxy, notwithstanding their logical detachment from it (which has always been peculiar to Unitarians), that some have always demurred at the name Unitarian, which was not of their choosing, but thrust upon them by their adversaries. Others were opposed to any name which would give them a distinct sectarian character, or tend to separate them from the general body of Christians. As a consequence of this a considerable number of their ministers and churches have sought to be known as Congregationalists, from which body they originally chiefly came. As the Unitarian movement justified itself by a protest against creeds and against the limitation of reason and private judgment in matters of belief, as an impediment to the free development of truth—a principle which with singular inconsistency has frequently been lost sight of,—it has been reluctant to adopt a distinctive formula of opinions for itself. These circumstances have conspired to induce that vagueness and indefiniteness of belief with which Unitarianism has been, and with good reason, charged.

Starting with the educated and the higher social ranks, and having won at an early day in its history Harvard College and much of the culture of Boston as allies—with its comparative liberation from the trammels of creeds and emphasis upon mental independence,—it succeeded in rendering itself particularly attractive to scholars and those of literary tendencies. It has been foremost among the Christian sects in its susceptibility to liberal ideas and advanced criticism in religion and philosophy, its sympathy with social reforms and humanitarian efforts, and its practical philanthropy.

But while this has been the general character of Unitarianism, and while it has assumed to be the champion of reason in religion, it has always retained a very large residuum of conservatism. Although it has been the strenuous opponent of creeds, it has always tacitly held or publicly proclaimed certain religious conceptions as essential to its fellowship, and exercised, with but little scruple, exclusion upon those who refused to accept them. This was demonstrated in its treatment of Theodore Parker, as it has been in the general temper and conduct of its denominational affairs,—its repeated efforts to pass at its National Conferences resolutions confirmatory of certain definite articles of belief of less or greater tenacity, and the division of the denomination into a right and left wing upon these points, as well as many instances of personal experience indicative of a latent element in its nature of intellectual usurpation and intolerance. Nor has it always, even with its humanitarian tendencies, been as quick to respond to such appeals as might have been expected. In the days of the anti-slavery agitation, although embracing more of that sentiment, and as a whole more pronounced in regard to the great iniquity, than the other Christian sects, it nevertheless stands to its discredit that it was by no means a unit upon the subject, but was largely affected with lukewarmness and apathy in reference to it,—disposed to suffer its influence and sympathy to incline toward the cause of the oppressor.

This hurried sketch or summary of the historic antecedents of Unitarianism prepares us for a more adequate appreciation of the signal importance of the recent gathering under consideration. Apart from the intrinsic interest of the occasion, it possessed a special one for the large and growing class outside of the churches. Disappointing, halting, inconsistent as Unitarianism has been, it has nevertheless, as we have intimated, contained more of the spirit of liberalism and of hospitality to advanced ideas, and contributed more toward the promotion of freethought in regard to religion, than any other of the Christian sects. From it a large number of the ablest, most cultured, and influential leaders of radicalism in this country, impatient of its circumscribing limitations (among whom may be included the projectors of the Free Religious Association, and some of its most earnest conductors at present) have come.

It is in view of the fact that Unitarianism and radicalism intersect so largely each other's domain—that it is impossible not to recognize the closeness of their kinship and affiliations,—that I have been prompted to the introduction of this theme.

A collection of Unitarians such as that under consideration is always quite sure to be one of genial and cultivated people; and, whatever its intellectual purpose, scholarly and thoughtful in respect to matter, and unsurpassed in the literary form of its presentation. A three days' attendance at the recent gathering enables me to say that it surpassed even the usual standard in this respect. It occupied more than four whole days longer than it is common to give to the biennial National Conference, and embraced elaborate and able addresses or studies upon distinct themes pertaining to theology and religion and the minister's vocation, of an average of three per day, from most prominent representatives of either wing of the denomination,—all remarkable for freedom and freshness of treatment, signs of a vivid consciousness of the new issues, and pertinent to the time,—interspersed with meetings for business and social conference.

The Institute opened with a sermon by the Rev. W. H. Channing, of England, a nephew of the eminent Dr. Channing of the earlier days of Unitarianism, and for some years past the successor of the Rev. James Martineau in London. It is described (I am unable to speak of it but from report) as imbued with that mystic imaginativeness and refined religious sentiment which are the peculiar distinction of the author. It presented a very ethereal ideal of the ministerial office, one toward which the average mortal, even among ministers, they being assumed mortal with something of earth as well as heaven in them, may aspire, but must be content with small progress. Like the Madonnas, the exquisite music, and grand cathedral effects of mediæval time, it was very impressive and beautiful, but more adapted to dreamy, contemplative modes of life and thought of the past than the varied, stirring experience, relentless rationalistic thinking, and practical tendencies of the present; and yet, notwithstanding these characteristics, presenting an explicit and open admission and appreciation of the new enlightenment and demands of the time which rendered it harmonious with all that succeeded.

"We need," said he, "a new theology, a new statement of this religion of the light of life, and we should take up all that is highest and purest and noblest in the past, and should give it a new expression and bring it out into new form. Christendom is longing for a new and adequate expression of Christianity,—a Christianity which, while profiting by the criticisms of modern science, will not fear or recoil from any of the activities of our political or social life, but live in the heart of them and grapple with them."

There are some who would be tempted to ask in reply to this whether we do—whether society or the world really needs a new theology—whether it is the most promising cure for the ills of humanity—whether it has not in fact already had too much of such—and whether, "when we take up all that is highest and purest and noblest in the past," we shall not take up much which the Church has never acknowledged as such, and never can safely, and shall not construct something which shall be quite different from that which has a right to be called Christianity.

The formal preliminary exercises of the next day were enriched by an address from Dr. Bellows, whose noble presence, magnetic manner, rich voice, choice diction, power of imagination, and sparkling wit, and (as I suspect) correspondent dignity of character and genuine goodness of heart, render him, in spite of the occasional erratic impulses, seeming mental inconsistency, and despotism tendencies which have sometimes marked his career, the central preacher and the most influential mind of the denomination. Among the striking passages of his address were the following: "It is not too much to say that the popular doctrine of the verbal and plenary inspiration of the Scriptures is as thoroughly disproved as the Ptolemaic astronomy, and that scientific theology knows and can know nothing of it." And again: "There is nothing plainer to-day than the fact that Religion has outgrown the intelligence and care of her professed keepers. She is still watched and guarded like a restored lunatic, whose safety his professional keepers refuse to recognize. Those who need religious blindfolds and handcuffs find plenty of priests to put them on without any special strain upon their own consciences; while those who will not wear them themselves, ought to be forbidden by solemn scruples from doing any part of the work which, however lawful in others, it is a sin against the Holy Ghost for them to engage in."

One of the most extraordinary papers of the occasion was that presented by Dr. Hedge, for many years a professor in the Divinity School at Cambridge, and eminent for erudition, philosophic insight, and independent habits of thought, the epigrammatic terseness, rhetorical elegance, and beauty of his writings. It was a profoundly metaphysical discussion of "Personality," the constituents, relations, and limitations that are involved in the definition. Towards the close the Doctor adverted to the question of a conscious personal immortality, boldly and frankly submitting the startling confession that he attached little value to the common arguments in its behalf, and that as an individual he was indifferent to the speculation. That such a declaration could come from such a source and in such a place, and be listened to respectfully, though evidently received with much disfavor by many present, pretty conclusively attests the venture in the direction of liberty of discussion and freethought which Unitarianism has just taken.

Another very interesting and valuable essay, to which I can only make a passing allusion, was by the Rev. E. H. Hall, of Worcester, one of the most scholarly and critical of the younger clergymen. The theme was, "St. Paul and the Development of the Early Church." The first Christians for some time after the death of Jesus were Jews. They not only worshipped at the temple, but observed all Jewish rites, and showed no desire to sunder their connection with the mother Church. It was through the broader views of Paul that they were at length prevailed upon to take the first steps toward presenting the new faith to all who would accept it. But Paul himself, it is evident, made progress in this respect. Instead of the sudden and miraculous conversion on his road to Damascus, it is probable that he had been for some time before conversant with the new religion, and had examined its claims; and the event, regard it as we may, was simply the culmination of what had long been going on in his mind. The doctrines of predestination, election, and original sin may be deduced from his earlier writings. Eventually he grew into a more liberal application of them.

The essay by the Rev. M. J. Savage, of Boston, upon the "New Ethics," was a conspicuous illustration of the growing influence of science upon clerical thinking. Mr. Savage is a convert from the Orthodox Church of a few years since, and yet in comparative youth, with a robust physique, a good voice, a positive style of address, and the art of saying things in a straightforward, forcible, and piquant manner. The impression which he makes is that of the Western (in which section his professional experience began) rather than the New England type of preacher. It is safe to say, I think, that he is at present one of the most attractive and radical men in the Unitarian pulpit.

The moral sense or conscience, he maintained, although common to mankind, is not an infallible guide in respect to what is right and wrong. It differs in different periods and in different parts of the world at the same period. The only method he claimed for determining the origin of conscience is the scientific method; all others lead to more speculative results. The popular idea that conscience is the voice of God in the soul, a supernatural gift for the guidance of man, is an assumption entirely incapable of proof. We know nothing about the supernatural. After considering the various views of the origin of conscience, including a fall, a devil, total depravity, etc., the intuitive theory and others, he arrived at the conclusion that the modern scientific principle of evolution is alone able to offer a satisfactory answer to the question. Following the line of argument of Darwin, he traced the development of conscience from the social sympathies in man up to its complex manifestations in the highest civilization. A perfect conscience can only come, according to this view, through a development of intelligence that shall deliver from the errors of ignorance and superstition, and show men things as they are. Morality is independent of theology; though all faith in God should die, it would survive. Superstition, as Lord Bacon has said, is more dangerous than atheism. Morality is independent of the belief in a future life.

In the discourse of Rev. S. R. Calthrop, of Syracuse, N. Y., the successor to the pulpit of Samuel J. May, upon "The Spiritual Chronology of the Old Testament," it was contended that it is essential to a correct and intelligent apprehension of the contents of the book that its whole order should be rearranged. A cannot possibly be the grandfather of B, if A lived one, two, or five hundred years after B. It is startling to find that the whole race of the prophets knows nothing of the Fall of Adam or the Garden of Eden. It is strange that the most divinely illuminated minds of the Hebrew race, its formal spokesmen, were wholly unaware of the very foundation upon which the whole fabric of theology is built. Their look was not backward, but forward,—their paradise not in the past, but the future. Through many centuries the religion of the Hebrews was mixed up with idolatry. Jehovah was worshipped under the form of a bull, and there was no protest against it. Deuteronomy, which has been supposed to be the latest book of the Pentateuch, is now proven to have been the latest, and the whole composed long after the Mosaic period.

But most noteworthy of all these remarkable addresses and essays, in the way of evidence of the new spirit which has entered Unitarianism, the unmistakable change of front and bold advance to which it has committed itself, was that of Prof. John W. Draper, of New York, on "The Origin, Progress, and Consequences of Evolution," and the unbroken and respectful attention which it received throughout. Dr. Draper is not a Unitarian, if he is, indeed, identified with any division of the Church. In fact, he has long been regarded as one of the most learned and profound leaders of the sceptical school of philosophers and scientists, which made his appearance before an assembly of Christian ministers all the more strange and exceptional to the usual course of things, and but natural the hesitation which he acknowledged that he experienced into accepting the invitation. At the conclusion of his address, he admonished his hearers not to reject evolution, declaring, though differing from Darwin in some important particulars, he regarded it as an established verity of Nature.

It will be readily seen, I trust, from the foregoing hurried and inadequate review of the occasion referred to, and its correlative suggestions, that it marks a new era in the Church and religious progress in this country, in which all radicals and freethinkers may heartily rejoice.

The question will arise, in view of this and like events, in the minds of radicals,—if the Church is thus by its forward movement to meet us on our own ground, to plant itself alongside of us, is there any longer any need of our existence? Will it not ere long supersede us? To this it may be answered, that the Church, with all its growing liberalism, is still hampered and tied to a system of forgone conclusions, which must necessarily impede its progress, though that progress be of unlooked-for rapidity and thoroughness,—for a long time to come.

Still further, if it were otherwise, radicalism comprises, as a general rule, those who have been alienated from the Church, and have outgrown its methods and associations and are not likely to return to it. There is a work for us among these, which, whatever may be our sympathies in respect to the Church and estimation of its worth and mission, I believe as urgent, more untrammelled, and nobler in its possibilities. And yet, as I come in contact with the Church, certainly with the more advanced and attractive sections of it, like that which has been mentioned, I am persuaded there is much that we may learn from it, much of its zeal, enthusiasm, and spirit which we may profitably appropriate to the promotion of our broader, more uncompromising, and rational principles. We need its coherence and unity of devotion to a cause. We need with our critical and intellectual discussions, dissertations, secularism, and ampler provision for recreation and the cheerful side of life, more of the "enthusiasm of humanity," more moral aspiration and self-sacrifice and unquenchable longing towards a high ideal of life and character. And I confess that to my mind, so far as we fail to quicken these feelings and susceptibilities (if indeed we do fail), to kindle these yearnings toward the true, the beautiful, and the good, though we have all knowledge and wisdom, we are, after all, and in a higher sense than he conceived who uttered it, but sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal.

It is for us to show the effectual union of the head and heart, intellect and character, the development of lives of uprightness, purity, refinement, sympathy, benevolence, reverence,—the highest type of manhood and womanhood possible amid the circumstances of our civilization and age.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM.

ADDRESSES BY THE REV. H. W. BELLOWES, D.D., PROFESSOR DWIGHT, OSWALD OTTENDORFER, AND R. D. HITCHCOCK.

THE SPEECHES.

Association Hall was well filled Oct. 18, on the occasion of the meeting in favor of Civil Service reform. In the audience, Mayor Ely was noticed, sitting not far from the platform, and on the platform, besides the speakers of the evening, was Dorman B. Eaton, who introduced the Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows. Dr. Bellows said:—

"Civil Service reform is now fairly before the country, and has already received earnest study from a few who have made sincere efforts to inaugurate it; a general attention from the press, some vehement discussion as to its methods, and an appearance in the platform of all parties. What is the Civil Service in its nature or design? It is the extension of the executive functions and duties in distinction from the military, naval, legislative, and judicial functions of the government. It is composed of the persons who are employed by the nation in executing the laws appertaining to customs, taxes, postal facilities, and the clerical duties connected with all the great departments of the government. Now, what is required, from an ideal point of view, in the persons who fill executive offices? That they shall be competent, trustworthy, easily held accountable, and removable only for cause.

"Government is the greatest, most serious, and widely influential form of business. We all recognize the importance of sound principles in the selection of the agents and executors of the plans and operations of a great business house. Not that this is so easy. There is too often one wise and one foolish partner; but no one doubts that a great house owes its permanent success, next to the wisdom of its business plans, to the sound methods it steadily pursues, without deviation or exception, in the selection, promotion, and oversight of its employees. Now, the methods and rules recognized in private business as conditions of success, are obviously even more beneficent, more necessary, and more binding when the business concerns directly the whole country. Imagine all the employees of the government to be competent, responsible, faithful, suitable, carefully selected men, is it not obvious what economy, dispatch, exemplary excellence, and confidence would at once attend our governmental machinery and operations?"

Dr. Bellows spoke of the Postal Department as one in which, because its operations came more directly and constantly under the public eye of the largest number of people, its excellences and defects were more immediately felt, and more regularly commented on by the public press; a satisfactory exactness, a compulsory standard of competency was more nearly obtained. There the public would stand no nonsense. Parties did not often dare to keep notoriously inefficient or incapable officers in place, nor to nominate or support unworthy or incompetent men of their own stripe. The speaker continued:—

"This is a fact of singular importance, because it throws a strong light upon the only method by which we may hope to effect reforms in those other departments of the Civil Service which, while they equally and perhaps in many cases far more seriously affect the public interests, do it in ways that are not obvious and make no noise. Whatever methods are employed, and however successfully, in other countries, it is pretty certain that in this no satisfactory reform can be attained in the character and efficiency of our Civil Service except by the intelligent pressure of public opinion. But in the American nation we have pronounced, or our political progenitors for us, an absolute confidence in the people at large as the judges and controllers of public law and economy. The government is only as wise, as politic, as pure as the people are wise, politic, and pure. The efforts hitherto made for reforming the Civil Service are, in my judgment, none the less honorable and useful for having for various reasons been deemed unsuccessful. The main good, as in all such movements in this country, has been in arousing public attention and calling out earnest discussion.

"Civil Service reform in this country, is not a thing to be achieved by the intelligence, address, and devotion of a few noble political reformers who have studied the Civil Service reform of England in India or at home. The place to begin is with the people at large, in calling their attention to the working of the government machine, upon whose wheels they turn their tremendous and irresistible power without often considering how the machine works, what constitute its teeth, and how capable it is of maiming their interests, and wasting their strength, if they are careless or indifferent as to its defects and disorders. The American people have been well-educated in the principles of their government. It remains to educate them in the machinery of their government."

LIKE BUSINESS, LIKE GOVERNMENT.

Dr. Bellows said that he had been endeavoring to show that the Civil Service of the country would not be any better than the general business practices, the general morality, and the general carefulness in depositing responsibility. It was often assumed by Civil Service reformers that the personnel of the government departments, and the methods and morals of the public offices, were worse than were found in the private business of the country. He did not believe in this. Like priest, like people; like business, like government; like commercial service, like Civil Service. The speaker alluded to the recent experiences with corporations, with savings-banks, with railroad companies. Business of all kinds had here more enterprise, snap, and dash, than prudence, exact method, and rigid accountability. He said:—

"This is due to the fact that, until the close of the war, opportunity was so various that employees everywhere had their choice of pursuits, and held one place only until a better offered, and therefore with a diminished sense of obligation, and a weak kind of fidelity to present employers. One of the principal causes of demoralization in the country has been the extent of the territory and the facilities for change of place, with a corresponding independence of local reputation. It is a great support of fidelity to feel that one must earn one's living where one is, and in the limited sphere of one's opportunities. There will be no great improvement in National character until citizens live nearer to the bone,—until life is harder, and success requires longer and more patient devotion of all the faculties to secure it. But nothing is so fatal to honesty and virtue as the habits of easy living fastened by previous prosperity upon those who are suddenly left with their prosperity gone, but with their established tastes for luxury and comfort left, and with no honest means of gratifying them. I am very confident that our young people grow up with too careless a sense of the difficulties of success; with expectations that are not likely to be met; and with little preparation to encounter temptation when hardship drives their soft, irresolute spirits into its toils. It is because of the shrinking from the useful severities of labor and enterprises in new fields that so large a class of our people grasp eagerly at government employment.

"What, then, would the enlightened friends of reform in our Civil Service have? How would they have the offices in the gift of the government bestowed or obtained? What they desire, of course, is this: to have these offices filled by those best suited to their duties, and most capable of keeping the government machine in accurate, efficient, and economical order and activity. We have been so long ridden by the notion of 'rotation in office'—an absolutely fatuous principle in its application to the clerical and merely ministerial face of the government machine,—that we have come to think the offices of the government prizes in a lottery, to which every citizen has a ticket, and that it matters little into whose hands they fall. Rotation in offices requiring special training, experience, and fitness, is a folly that every merchant or corporation must know the madness of. The government business is not a school in which to educate blunders and non-competents. It does not change the case that territorial, local, and party claims have for thirty years had an unblushing influence and allowance. I deny that any claim other than that of superior fitness exists, in any section of the country, to any office.

"But there are principles which ought to govern the Civil Service which would leave very few changes or appointments at the mercy of any new administration. First, that candidates should be selected, first and foremost, for fitness and character. Secondly, that they should be made, as much as possible, a class of persons expecting to devote their lives to the business, and so narrowed to the smallest possible number,—a plan by which office-seeking would cease to be the delusive and injurious disposition of a hundredfold more than can ever attain office, and a fertile source of political corruption. Thirdly, that promotion for merit and length of service should be the rule and not the exception, so that faithfulness might expect its rewards in the natural course of that which had been adopted as a profession; and, lastly, that long and faithful services should end in a retirement on half-pay, like the military and naval commissions. Of course, I know that all this is opposed to the prevailing opinions or prejudices of the American people. But this is the very thing we are seeking to reform."

The speaker said that objections enough might be made to the method of administering the diplomatic and consular service. They should be made professions, entered like the military and naval service, for life, and subject to promotion for fitness and experience.

USES OF PARTY.

The speaker said that here was touched the real and obstinate objection to Civil Service reform. The country could not afford to diminish the interest in politics, and politics depended on party organization. He continued:—

"I freely admit the necessity of parties, and regard those Civil Service reformers who deprecate them, or purpose to diminish their influence, or to disorganize them, as Utopian and impracticable. What is party, in its legitimate sense and play, in our democracy? It is really the organization of the people about two poles involved in the constitution of the country, each of which has a legitimate right and necessity, and neither of which can safely be left unchecked by the power of the other. An opposition is necessary to the safety of every great policy. There are historical, temperamental, local, hereditary influences; why should we join one rather than the other of these parties? A man may not only be equally honest and equally respectable in either, but it does not follow that he is to desert his party because he sees that for the time the opposite one has better reasons for being in the ascendancy. Let the light-weights, the people on the fence, the Jack Robinsons of the country, of which there are always enough, shift with the rolling of the ship, and take the side that is uppermost. But the solid men must stay where they have been early led to think the chief danger of the country lies, and watch against the incursion of federal power, or the perils of local independence, as they have been providentially made to think one or the other most in need of watching."

It would be urged, Dr. Bellows said, that either party which adopted the doctrine of Civil Service reform would be unsuccessful. The organizations would decay and the people would lose interest. Very probably the ignorant and nose-led would lose interest, but there would be no more melting at one end than crystallization at the other. The valuable vote would increase, not as fast as the worthless would decrease, but with a vastly favorable result. Besides, a party which went before the people with a sincere determination to carry out Civil Service reform would be surprised at the preparation which existed to receive its doctrine, and maintain it with votes. Nothing that was base and corrupt could surprise the speaker in the history of human nature or human politics, nor, on the other hand, anything that was lofty or magnanimous. Dr. Bellows concluded as follows:—

"Human nature is not so poor that only one, and that a low method of dealing with it, is practicable. The Civil Service reform is not too noble in its purpose and spirit to win the race. Make it noble enough, firm and absolute enough, and it will carry the country."

THE OTHER SPEAKERS.

Dr. Bellows then introduced Professor Theodore W. Dwight. Mr. Dwight said: "In looking over one of the prominent city papers lately, I was struck by an expression new to me, 'Civil Service Humbug.' I had heard of Civil Service reform, and the thought impressed me that it was time that matter was explained to the people." He cited as the remedies for a corrupt system of office-holding: The emancipation of the appointing power, which, according to the Constitution, lies with the executive, but which, by him, is transferable to the legislative, and thence to the judiciary; the establishment, as the foundation of a Civil Service reform, the three principles of examination to insure efficiency, rigid scrutiny as to reputation, and probation as to a final test; the development of the efficiency of officers. He upheld the justness of the President's Civil Service order, and said that without exclusive attention to the duties of an office, the holder of that office could not do it justice. Among some of the popular objections which he presented, he asserted that the idea that Civil Service reform was anti-Democratic was a mistaken one. It threw open the whole field to any man who would take the trouble to qualify himself for an office in it. To those who considered the scheme Utopian and impracticable, he had only to say, that experience had shown its practicability in other countries, and only a trial was needed to prove it practicable here. In conclusion he said that the movement must be carried by agitation, and although at first the popular response might be only as a gentle breeze, it would certainly increase into the gale which sweeps everything before it.

Oswald Ottendorfer said he regarded the great subject at hand as a self-evident proposition. He numbered among those who were preeminently practical many "with whom temporary victory is everything, regardless of the means by which or of the purposes for which it is secured." He had seen it claimed that Civil Service reform was incompatible with the existence and preservation of political parties. If this was a fact, he argued, and if political parties could only be kept alive by the indiscriminate use of public patronage, it was the duty of every intelligent, well-meaning citizen to exert himself to the utmost to throw down those parties. "We boast," said he, "that we march at the head of the column of political liberty; and if this insinuation is true, it is the grossest insult that can be cast in the face of a people. The American people are apt to laugh at the nations of the Old World, when they are unable to conduct their own affairs without assistance from a source not controlled by the will of the people." He referred to the recent elections in France, as having been the result of a series of political endeavors, which our politicians would have thought it madness to undertake. He was forced to acknowledge that, "as they are now, political parties cannot live without patronage," but that was no reason why they should be permitted to carry on their nefarious practices. He said: "Our political parties, constituted as they at present are, have no right to exist. If we are in earnest for the promotion of the object of this meeting, we should make our strongest resolves to smash the political machines throughout the country." He was glad to know that there were a few men, even among prominent officials, who, although their elevation to the positions which they occupy was due to political parties, were awake to the present abuses of the Civil Service, and were willing to try at least to remedy existing evils. All that was now needed was the enthusiastic approval of all intelligent citizens to bring about immediate and beneficial results.

Rowell D. Hitchcock said: "Small beginnings are not merely consistent with great results, but they are indispensable to them." He was aware that the advocates of Civil Service reform were called sentimentalists and dreamers. He desired to say that "history teaches us that the dream of to-day, if it is true and honest, is to be the battle of to-morrow and the victory of the day following." He condensed the whole matter in giving, as the great question before the American people, "Shall we have our government work done by the best men we can get, or by the best of the men who run with the machine that is first at the fire?" He would not say that there was either brain or talent in or behind the movement for Civil Service reform, but he believed that there is a sentiment which inspired it, and which would cause both political parties in their turn "to learn what hurt them." He wished to warn these parties that there was a thunder-storm forming, which would not be heard until the lightning struck.—New York Tribune, Oct. 19.

MEMORIAL TO CONGRESS.

[We cheerfully comply with the request of Mr. Karl Heinzen, editor of Der Pionier, to present this memorial to our readers. Those who wish to circulate it can apply for copies to him at Roxbury Station, Boston, Mass.—Ed.]

Not only radical thinkers, but even very conservative statesmen of renown have long maintained that the soil, that part of Nature from which we all emanate and are nourished, ought not to be the exclusive property of individuals. Such a conclusion would also be reached by a correct conception of the meaning of "property." Only that can be rightly regarded and recognized as individual property which man has produced or gained through his own exertions without infringing on the equal rights of others. But Nature neither is, nor can she become, the product of human exertions. Man can only use her or make her useful, and all have an equal right to do this. Every association of free and reasoning men would doubtless act in accordance with these principles, if they intended to establish a commonwealth to-day in an unsettled territory or in a territory acquired by them in common. But primary social development, the consequences of which reach down to the present, was not shaped according to principles, but only according to the suggestions of greed and passion. Violence and oppression, arbitrariness and robbery, created the earlier conditions, and established laws and rights. And among these rights the privilege of private ownership in land is one, and one which, in the course of time, came to be guaranteed through custom, and finally recognized as a matter of course.

Whatever is unjust in principle cannot have a permanent existence; and whatever reason recognizes as a principle that stands the test of justice, must and will, in spite of all hindrances by historical institutions and arrangements, sooner or later force its way and be realized. Notwithstanding all the opposition and all the declarations of "rights" on the part of slaveholders and feudal lords, time-honored slavery and serfdom have at last fallen. In spite of their colossal power and means, and in spite of the "Grace of God," monarchies will fall and give place to republics; in spite of historical "rights" and the temporary recognition of these rights, the soil, now claimed by millions as their inviolable individual property, will in time become the common property of the people who live thereon, no matter whether this change be effected gradually and peaceably through gifts, expropriations, and alterations in the laws of inheritance, or suddenly and violently through general revolutions. In regard to that part of the land in the United States which is already in the hands of private persons, and is recognized as private property, we may leave to the future to accomplish the re-nationalization, and we do not propose to attack the rights of those persons; but we regard it as a most urgent necessity to apply the principle elucidated to those lands which are still the unappropriated property of the whole nation. After so many hundred million acres of the public lands have already been sold or given away, or, rather, squandered on greedy corporations and speculators, the remainder, at least, should be secured inviolate to the people, and should thus be preserved from the inevitable consequences which sooner or later grow out of the free and unlimited acquisition of ownership in land. For this purpose we desire that Congress pass resolutions in the sense of the following propositions:—

1. Henceforward no portion of the public lands shall be sold or given away, either to individuals or corporations.
2. A portion of land, comprising at least eighty acres as prescribed by the "Homestead Bill," shall be placed at the disposal of every actual settler, who is to pay for the use thereof a moderate yearly rental tax, to be determined according to the quality and desirability of the soil; this tax to be assessed after three years' settlement. The possession and use of the land shall be secured to the settler and to his direct heirs for so long a time as they cultivate it and live thereon. Furthermore, it shall be provided that smaller portions of land can be granted under the above conditions, in order to promote the settlement of non-cultivators and that no land may lie unused. Founders of manufactories, or merchants, whose wishes are limited to a house-lot and garden-lot, do not need extensive tracts of land as the farmers do who live by cultivating the soil.
3. The rental tax shall be applied, wholly or in part, according to its amount, to assist the indigent in settling upon lands they desire; they guaranteeing repayment of the amount so loaned, from their profits and personal property.
4. Lands needed for public squares, parks, institutions, roads, and forest culture, are to be reserved by the government.

5. All lands already sold and not cultivated up to a certain time shall be reclaimed by the United States. The owners shall receive the original price given by them. The sums needed for the repurchase of such lands may partly be derived from the rental tax.

6. An act of Congress, passed June 21, 1866, declared that the valuable public lands belonging to the United States, in the States of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Mississippi, should be distributed only according to the regulations of the "Homestead Bill." But that act was annulled by the forty-fourth Congress in a resolution passed July 4, 1876; and this land, once secured to the people, was again brought into the general market. Accordingly the President announced by a proclamation, July 19, 1877, that on October 1, at the Land Office in Harrison, Arkansas, there were to be sold at public auction several hundred thousand acres of "valuable government lands." By such action the people in general are robbed of the benefits of free settlement on the lands mentioned, and even excluded from the purchase of any; for it is evident that only capitalists and speculators can avail themselves of the purchase of land in such large quantities. For the prevention of future sales of the lands above mentioned, the resolution of Congress of July 4, 1876, must be annulled, and the lands in the States mentioned, and belonging to the nation, must be again placed on the same footing as other public lands.

Among the practical grounds (wholly excluding the theoretical principle, and considering only the rights and the prosperity of the whole people) which have induced the undersigned to lay the foregoing propositions before Congress for appropriate action, we present only the following:—

The most pernicious aristocracy, and the most difficult of riddance, is a land-aristocracy. In the United States that still has an abundance of lands at her disposal, such an aristocracy cannot, as yet, make itself felt, nor a landless peasantry to do its bidding. But the beginnings of such formations can be traced here even now. Leaving out of consideration the extensive possessions of former slaveholders, we refer merely to the fact, that in Texas and throughout the West there are already farmers who own tens and hundreds of thousands of acres of the best land. Every farmer of this kind or his heir should be looked upon as an embryo "English Lord"; and such lordships will increase in the future proportionately with the settlement of the West and the enhanced value of land. At the same time, the capitalists and speculators will make it more and more difficult for the poor to acquire a homestead, by raising the price of land, bought by them in large quantities. Without some limitation or regulation of the disposal of land, such as we propose, it will, in the course of time, be as impossible to prevent an ever-increasing accumulation of land-property in the hands of a few rich persons, and, arising from this, a land-aristocracy, in this country, as it has been in England or elsewhere. When the West is so far cultivated that it possesses attractions enough to induce the settlement there of rich men of leisure, then as in England and Scotland, the hunting-bugles of a luxurious aristocracy may resound through their estates embracing whole counties, while around them a starving peasantry beg for alms.

Pernicious as the ownership of land is in the hands of an aristocracy, it threatens to become still more dangerous in the hands of ecclesiastical chiefs. Whoever contemplates the vast amount of landed property already accumulated by the Catholic hierarchy in some States of the Union, will comprehend the danger that will in future arise to liberty from the power of proprietaries of this kind, unless preventative barriers are put up in season.

Statesmanlike wisdom manifests itself in not allowing evils—the commencement of whose existence logic and historical experience must foresee—to arise and grow until they become intolerable and lead to dangerous crises; it will prevent them by timely removal of their causes.

A remoter reason for our propositions is based upon our interest in the maintenance of the Union. The prospect of a possibility—which cannot be denied—that the varying interests which prevail in the Eastern, Southern, and Western parts of the Union, may at some future time lead to a separation of these parts, as has already been once attempted by the South, has often presented itself to us. If the danger of separation should again threaten, it is to be expected from the West when that portion shall have increased proportionally in number of inhabitants; but this danger will forever be averted if the greater part of the West is and is sure to remain the inalienable property of the whole American people.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 17.

Wm. Blinkhorn, $1; Geo. Iles, $4.20; J. H. Philcox, $2; J. S. Palmer, $10; Geo. D. Henck, $2.72; John Ahrens, $1.60; Warren Griswold, $1.20; New England News Co., $18.28; J. A. J. Wilcox, $10; J. A. Gager, $2; Dr. H. K. Oliver, $40; Edwin Brown, $10; Geo. Molnar, $16.40; Dr. G. Fraenkel, $3.20; J. W. North, $3; D. Fitzhugh, $3.25; Geo. Allen, $2.70; A. C. Erkson, $5; Mrs. S. J. Cheney, $1; Hon. A. Taft, $3.20; Zina Eager, $3.20; W. J. Hill, 25 cents; B. R. Tucker, $10; W. B. Studley, $3.20; M. J. Safford, $4.70; Mrs. E. W. Duff, $7.49; A. Kimpton, $1.50; G. A. Atwood, $1; Albert R. Brown, $13.20; J. B. Tenney, $1; Mrs. E. S. Miller, $10; Mrs. Maggie B. Stone, $3.20; Mrs. J. A. J. Perkins, 25 cents; L. O. Bass, $10; Fanny Werts, $3.20; A. Folsom, $51.25; Prof. J. V. Mages, $1; Mrs. M. C. Perkins, $10; Samuel Brooke, $4; W. H. Spencer, $20; Jane E. Curtis, $1; Dr. H. B. Clark, $30; J. W. Halliday, $3.20; J. M. Frost, 25 cents; W. E. Lakens, 20 cents; M. A. Shepard, $1.55; George Lewis, $3; J. S. Palmer, 75 cents; H. M. Smyth, $1; W. H. Jones, $3; Wm. Rotch, $20; Miss S. E. Dorr, $3.20; Samuel L. Young, $3.20; Mrs. E. L. Bigelow, $2.20; Dr. J. D. Peters, $15.50; American News Co., $7.96; E. W. Hooper, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 22, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 23 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBET, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

A CARD.

The Committee on the better establishment of THE INDEX, appointed at a meeting of its subscribers and friends last May, wish to enlist all the assistance they can to lay its claims before every liberal man and woman in our country. They have prepared a circular setting forth the method, motives, and objects of their action, and wish the names of all who are willing to assist them in placing it where it will do good. Please address the Chairman of the Committee, "Elizur Wright, P. O. Box 109, Boston, Mass."

THE FOLLOWING ANECDOTE of Emerson is certainly characteristic of that gentle seer and venerated man: "Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson addressed, twenty years ago, a literary society, during Commencement, at Middlebury, Vermont, and when he ended, the President called upon a clergyman to conclude the service with prayer. Then arose a Massachusetts minister, who stepped into the pulpit Mr. Emerson had just left and uttered a remarkable prayer, of which this was one sentence: 'We beseech thee, O Lord, to deliver us from ever hearing any more such transcendental nonsense as we have just listened to from this sacred desk.' After the benediction, Mr. Emerson asked his next neighbor the name of the officiating clergyman, and, when falteringly answered, with gentle simplicity remarked, 'He seemed a very conscientious, plain-spoken man,' and went on his peaceful way."

"It is now about fifteen years," says the Tribune, "since Bishop Colenso published his criticisms on the Pentateuch and the Book of Joshua, and brought upon his own head a storm of denunciation. He is now at peace, after years of angry controversy and litigation. Five years ago the Colonial Assembly passed an act vesting in him the property belonging to the See of Natal, and he found leisure to prepare two new works, in justification of his course. The cathedral congregation lately presented an address to him, and in his reply there were gleams of the controversial heat which is still glowing in him. He said that the time was not far distant when views like his own would be accepted in religion, like the conclusions of modern astronomy and geology. He expressed the belief that the new translation of the Bible would throw light on many dark places, and that the new lectionary would direct the attention of churchmen to some of the important conclusions of modern criticism."

IN A NEW BOOK entitled Some General Ideas concerning Medical Reform, Dr. David Hunt, of Boston, complains that the aim of the founders of our colleges has often been to establish institutions in which "Christian faith might dominate," and that the consequence of this voluntary submission to faith in the New England church has been a dearth of results in science and philosophy, like that caused by the oppressive tyranny of its Catholic rival. What else could be expected? Science and philosophy, if anything better than a fraudulent pretence, aim solely to discover the truth as it is, regardless of prejudice or prejudgment; and when the founders of colleges presume to dictate, in advance of investigation, that only such truth shall be discovered as bolsters up creeds born of ignorance, they simply create perpetual fountains of intellectual fraud. It is thus that Christianity has from the beginning debauched that conscience for truth which is the supreme glory and most priceless possession of humanity.

THE TEXAS INFAMY.

The outrage perpetrated upon Dr. Russell by the mob at Harrisville, Texas, solely on account of his being an "infidel," was briefly mentioned in last week's INDEX, as reported by the Boston Advertiser. We copy now a fuller account of this monstrous deed, taken from the Belton (Texas) Journal:—

There has been for a considerable length of time in the neighborhood of Little River Academy, in the lower edge of Bell County, an association of free-thinkers, with Dr. L. J. Russell as their acknowledged leader and advocate.

We are informed that on Saturday night, Oct. 6, a man went to the Doctor's residence and told him he was a mover, and had his family at a camp on a branch a few hundred yards away; that some one of them was sick and must have his services as a physician immediately. The Doctor and the man repaired to the place, only to find three other men, with six-shooters in hand. Dr. Russell was ordered to divest himself of his clothing, which he did. His hands were tied in front of him, and were held by one of the party, who stood with a six-shooter in his right hand, while he held the rope in his left. Russell was told that he "must take a whipping"; that they believed he was an honest man and a good physician; but "by the help of God" they would put a stop to his career as a freethinker in that section of country.

They informed him that if he made a noise it would be at the peril of his life, and struck him one hundred licks, inflicting a terrible and excruciatingly painful castigation. He was then released and allowed to go his way, "but not rejoicing," by any means, as such treatment is compelled to be very humiliating to any man of high spirit and a just sense of honor about him.

We have known the Doctor for several years and have never heard anything alleged against him, except his connection with the free-thinkers, which seemed to cause general regret so far as we have heard an expression.

We are no advocate of such a belief as seems to have brought about this trouble; neither are we an advocate of Lynch law; and justice demands that the unknown parties to this dark deed be arrested and caused to answer the State of Texas, that they may receive such punishment as may be prescribed by the laws of the land.

On Saturday, Oct. 6, the following advertisement was found near the place where the above deed was perpetrated:—

Notice.

"This is to certify that on Saturday night, the 6th of October, 1877, the Rev. Dr. Russell was called to see a mover's wife camped at this place, and on the Doctor's arrival three other men came out and captured him, and hit him a hundred licks with a leather strap, and let him loose on condition that he would not lecture or debate on infidelity any more in this county. Now a word to Nunnely, Posey, Marshall, and in fact to all the leading men of the infidel club: If any of you take his place, we will burn you out of house and home, and hang you until you are dead. If any man in this county is injured on account of what has been done, we will burn you all out. We have got fifty men to back us. Gents, we mean business. Infidelity has got to stop in this county as well as stealing."

Dr. Russell's own statement of the affair is contained in the following "Card":—

HARRISVILLE, Texas, Oct. 22, 1877.

EDITOR BELTON JOURNAL:—

Dear Sir,—I wish, through the columns of the Journal, to make a full statement of the facts in regard to the lynching to which I was recently subjected.

On Saturday night, the 6th inst., a few minutes before twelve o'clock, a man called at my gate, and told me that he was moving, and that his wife had taken sick, and that he wanted me to go to see her. He said he was camped at Mr. Young's, near Mr. Barber's. I asked him what was the matter with his wife, and he said she was about to be confined. I caught my horse and we rode on together; we had some conversation on commonplace topics. He told me he was moving from the Brazos; that his family had been sick nearly all the year. After passing Mr. Barber's he said that his camp was a little way further up; that he left a young man at his camp, and carried his wife up to Mr. Young's house. We rode on till we got about half-way between Mr. Barber's and Mr. Young's, when my horse began shying, and he remarked, "That is my camp." I said that I would ride around on the other side, and, when I got round, he said, "I will lead him by," and caught hold of the bridle and turned his horse's head towards the fence and stopped. At that instant some one said, "Well, you've got back; did you get the Doctor?" "Yes," he replied, "I've got him." Some person on my left hand, whom I had not observed before, then said, "Throw up your hands, Doctor; we've got you." Something of similar import was said by another person at my right. I was told that, if I made any resistance or any noise, they would instantly shoot me. I asked, "What do you mean?" The man who held my bridle replied, "I'll tell you what it means: It means that we have got you out here to give you a good whipping. We are not going to kill or rob you, but we are going to give you a good whipping." I asked, "What have I done that you are going to whip me for?" He replied, "You are an infidel; you don't believe in the Bible, and you are leading weak-minded souls to hell." One of them said, "We were advised to kill you when we left home, but we think that a good whipping will do you this time; but we will kill you next time. Infidelity has got to be put down." One said, "We know that you are an honest man and a good physician, and we don't want you to leave the country; but we are going to put down infidelity, God being our helper." I was further told that the debate between L. W. Scott and myself should not come off; that I should write and stop it. Of course, all remonstrance was in vain; they had me completely in their power. They tied my hands, took me off my horse, carried me about one hundred yards from the road, stripped me, and gave me a most unmerciful flogging. Whom the parties were I have not the remotest suspicion. They were all men whom I never saw before, and would not recognize them if I should see them. I don't think that they were disguised in any way whatever, and they are evidently men who do not live anywhere near here. They told me that they had been after me twice before.

Now, Mr. Editor, I have been living here for the last eight years, and am intimately known by the best men of this neighborhood, and indeed, I may say, by the best men in the county; and in regard to my veracity, honesty, and qualifications as a physician, I am perfectly willing that they who know me best shall speak. But of my own individual rights, and the rights bequeathed by our forefathers to every American citizen—rights baptized by the blood of revolution, and guaranteed to us by the Constitution,—I wish to speak myself. It is true that I am an infidel; and, while it is true, it is equally true that belief is not a matter of choice. I cannot help believing as I do. It is true that I could say that I believe otherwise. Should a man be more respected for concealing his thoughts than honestly expressing them? Is not an honest avowal of opinion on all subjects what we have a right to expect from every man? If he fails to give it, is he not deceiving us? Is not the charge that I am "leading weak-minded souls to hell" an imputation against him who made the mind rather than against me? Again, if the truths of Revelation are so glaringly apparent that the "wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot err therein," how is it possible that I can deceive any one? Are there any who really think that the suppression of freethought and free speech in Bell County will "put down infidelity"? Are not those men, in their mistaken zeal, trying the old argument that failed in the hands of such men as Calvin, Torquemada, Pope Urban, and others too numerous to mention? These are questions which I earnestly desire the readers of the Journal to ponder well. They are capable of but one answer, and that answer is not difficult to find.

In all my public lectures and debates I have never given utterance to an immoral sentiment, as those who have heard me will testify. I have asked no man to believe as I do—compelled none to listen—promised no reward for belief, nor punishment for disbelief. I have taught what I conceived to be true. Truth I am ever ready to accept, let it come whence it may, and am willing to follow, let it lead where it may. Learn what is true in order to do what is right, should be the motto of all men. It is the rule by which I hope to be governed in all future time, and in the search for truth I demand that liberty of thought and expression which I am willing to accord to all men.

DR. L. J. RUSSELL.

Who can read that letter, so simple, so manly, so marvellously free from all intemperate expressions under a provocation which is enough to make the blood of every decent man fairly boil and bubble with indignation in the recital, without sentiments of the deepest admiration and sympathy for the writer, and a heartfelt wish to see his equal religious rights vindicated against the fanaticism, malice, and cruelty of his persecutors? We envy the moral state of no one who can peruse that calm and moderate letter, evincing as it does in every line the self-respect and moral dignity of the true gentleman, and yet feel no impulse to protect him in the enjoyment of the most precious rights of the human soul. Is there to be no redress for such wrongs as these? In this nineteenth century, and in this land whose proudest boast is the possession of religious liberty by all its citizens, is there to be no means of maintaining free thought and free speech for men of irreproachable character like Dr. Russell, and of punishing such infamous violations of their rights as are above recounted? Are threats of arson and assassination, following positive acts of bloody scourging, to be suffered to extinguish the light of mental freedom in any part of this broad land?

Note that Dr. Russell speaks of his "own individual rights, and the rights bequeathed by our forefathers to every American citizen—rights baptized by the blood of revolution, and guaranteed to us by the Constitution." He seems to imagine that the "Constitution" (by which he evidently means the National Constitution) protects him in his "individual rights"; and this is a delusion shared by most liberals who are not lawyers. As a matter of fact, the Constitution of the United States does not guarantee to any citizen protection in his "individual rights"; and that is why the National Liberal League inserted the second plank in its Rochester platform. The nation claims Dr. Russell's supreme allegiance, even to the sacrifice of life itself, as against the claims of his own State of Texas; yet it turns him over to his own State alone for the protection which is the correlative duty inseparable from the allegiance it claims. If Texas is too much ridden by Orthodoxy to give him the protection he has a right to demand, the nation turns a deaf ear to his appeal for justice. What hideous unreason and immorality is this, to claim everything and give nothing! We are aware of the difficulties, inherent in the existing relations between State and nation, in the way of affording national protection against violations of individual rights; yet the way to obviate these difficulties will become very plain, just as soon as the principles of the Rochester platform are frankly adopted. If, for instance, Bell County were made liable, in case of the failure of local justice, to pay a fine of $10,000 or $100,000 to the national treasury for every such outrage as this assault on Dr. Russell, the "juries of the vicinage" would soon learn to give redress through the local courts. Without resorting to a "change of venue," the nation could easily compel every community to protect the personal rights of its own citizens, and yet refrain from all interference with the principle of local self-government. But it will remain an indelible disgrace on our American government, till the nation as such recognizes its own duty to afford the protection without which it has no right to demand allegiance.

It is an easy and cheap mode of evading the inexorable demands of justice in this matter to expatiate on the "curious state of civilization" which permits such outrages—to shrug one's shoulders and satirize the "semi-barbarism" of a State in which such deeds are possible. Such shallow evasions only excite indignation at the worse than "semi-barbarism" of the mind which is so obtuse to ethical considerations as to be capable of employing clap-trap of this nature, and of supposing that it can satisfy the intellect of any one over three years of age. The nation which demands allegiance owes protection. That is a proposition self-evident on its face; and it is the trick of a political Cheap John to dodge it by mumbling inanities about "curious psychological studies" and "semi-civilized communities." If the State is sovereign, then the individual cannot look beyond it for protection; but if the nation is sovereign, then it is meanness and disgrace unfathomable to exact supreme allegiance without rendering its only equivalent, personal protection. That is a species of reasoning not above the comprehension of the ordinary commercial understanding. "Nothing for nothing" is a rule as applicable in this matter as in the commonest bargain; and every man of honor objects to repudiation of the moral as well as of the financial obligations of the nation. The National Liberal League stands for principles which will certainly be at last adopted and incorporated into our political system; and every such case as this of Dr. Russell shows afresh the timeliness, justice, and pressing necessity of those principles and of the movement which has been started to give them emphasis in the public mind and conscience.

Texas is at a great distance from most of us, and human nature finds it difficult to radiate its sympathies very far. But Dr. Russell is not alone. The Orthodox Power is bestirring itself as never before to seize control of this nation, and it strikes blows which are not limited to Texas by any means. Mr. D. M. Bennett, editor of the Truth Seeker, has just been arrested in New York for sending "obscene and blasphemous publications through the mails." Now we have not a word to say about the first count in this indictment, provided it is sincerely brought and not made a cover for secret persecution of free thought; we shall simply watch and wait to see what evidences and proofs of obscenity are adduced, before making any protest on that score, since we emphatically and unqualifiedly approve of stringent legislation against the circulation of really obscene literature. But the prosecution of any man for "blasphemy" in New York city is a matter which vitally concerns all liberals alike. It is a new instance of the reviving intolerance of Orthodoxy, which liberals are very reluctant, as a general thing, to confess; and it warrants the most jealous susceptibility touching the freedom of the press. "Blasphemy" is just as much a purely invented crime as Sabbath-breaking or witchcraft; and it behooves all who prize the liberties of freemen to defend the press against every attempt, open or disguised, to put a gag-law into operation against the free publication of religious opinions. The fact that the prosecution of Mr. Bennett originates with Anthony Comstock, a bigoted representative of the Young Men's Christian Association, who has also just arrested in Boston Mr. E. H. Heywood, editor of the Word, on a charge of circulating "obscene literature," justifies no little suspicion as to the real object of those prosecutions. Believing as we do that Orthodoxy is mustering its forces and rapidly organizing itself for a renewed employment of legal means for the suppression of freethought, we believe also that liberals owe it to themselves and to their cause to make the National Liberal League a mighty power for the defence of their freshly endangered rights; and such startling cases of reviving persecution as these of Dr. Russell and Mr. Bennett ought to rouse a new, deep, determined resolve on the part of all who love mental liberty to join hearts and hands in the enterprise of rallying a great national party to the support of the Rochester platform. Friends, are you not yet ready?

HUMAN NATURE.

A few weeks ago, a superintendent of one of our city Sunday-schools held up a pear before the wondering gaze of the children, and said: "Children, you see this beautiful pear, with its russet and golden hues. It is very fair to look upon; but let me cut it open with my knife. Now see, the heart of it is all decayed. So, my little children, are your hearts. They are all rotten at the core." Another "slaughter of innocents," I cried. Sowing the seed of Calvinism in the fresh virgin soil, who can doubt what the harvest will be?

When the "infant class" is indoctrinated with such heart-rotten lessons, and the older youth are taught to sing,

"Oh, to be nothing,
Only to lie at his feet!"

or—

"Alas and did my Savior bleed?
And did my Sovereign die?
Would he devote that sacred head
For such a worm as I?"

Is it at all strange that, when these children become men and women, they are prone to believe their heart is rotten at the core; that they can do nothing of themselves because they are vile worms of the dust?

How this poor human nature of ours has been abused! Is there anything good in the natural man? It is robbed to adorn Christianity. Is there anything evil? It is the "natural" heart, rotten at the core. Christianity fills pennies with the "natural" man, and, like the tricky gamins, cries: "Heads I win, tails you lose," and every time the natural man comes under.

Of course, human nature is imperfect. It has some dreadful sores. But why parade the weaknesses of human nature, like a crippled horse through the streets, exhibiting its spavins, wheezings, and pitiable diseases? At least we ought to keep these things blanketed from our little children as long as possible.

Granting that our human nature has its moral diseases which can only be cured by directing the eyes to them and doctoring them, even with the most drastic remedies sometimes, yet isn't this eternal smell of liniment about the blood-of-the-Lamb religion enough to sicken any sound man? If we were as free from sin as the angels, we believe that this everlasting talk about "miserable sinners in a sick world" would almost make a sinner of us. Of course, the Christian would say to us: "It is not our fault if you are sickened by our gospel. Medicine is never agreeable to take. The trouble with you is, you are a moral pachyderm, a hard-shell sinner, or you would not be so insensible to the arrows of divine truth."

We do not think so, Christian brother. Have a little charity for us, for we need it. We admit that the Christian method of piercing the heart with a keen sense of its sin, awakening remorse, is quite essential, before you can right-about-face the sinner in the march of personal reform. We believe that Christianity has achieved very much by her methods toward the moral reformation of mankind. But it seems to us that she has exaggerated the depravity and helplessness of man and hurt man in her honest efforts to help him. While we would not recommend the old Stoic method as a substitute for the Christian method entirely, we do believe that the two should be combined. Let the preacher join the Christian's appeal to man's sense of sin, the old Stoic's appeal to his sense of virtue, and would not this pull at the doubled strand be a stronger power to lift the fallen? If the one method suited a St. Augustine, Luther, and Wesley, the other made an Antoninus, Seneca, and Epictetus; and who can say that there is not somewhat of the spirit of Epictetus as well as of Augustine in our modern human nature? It is evident there is, and the success of such men as Channing and Parker as moral reformers is largely due to the fact that they appealed to the sense of dignity and virtue in our human nature. They touched a chord that vibrated in quick response.

In the revulsion of feeling, however, from the old Calvinistic dogmas of the total rottenness of the natural man, have not the Unitarians and liberals generally swung to the other extreme and glorified this human nature of ours overmuch? Channing crowned all men king. Parker denounced slave-traders and sleek hypocrites; but, when he spoke of human nature, it was generally in compliments, and he, with Emerson and the most of the intuitionist school, have pictured the "soul" in rosy colors, whose "instincts" are all divine and infallible.

It seems to us that while the Calvinists have abused human nature by kicking it, the Channingites have abused it by kissing it. The latter certainly is the more admissible fault; but it is not wise to spoil a child even with kindness. Human nature is not all good,—it is sometimes "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," and deserves a cat-o'-nine-tails and six months in the reform school. A little more grape, Captain Bragg, in your liberal guns! If people do not deserve hell in the next world, it is because they get a little of it now and then in this. Human nature is good when it is good, and when it is bad it is bad; and let no man attempt to confound them by this sentimental, optimistic morality that sings: "Whatever is right." Let us have done with such nonsense! Some things in human nature and human society we know are wrong, if we know anything; and, so far as we can see, they may be eternally wrong, and no sect of theological jugglery ought to cheat us into the belief that such wrong is right. So far as it does this, it hamstring all effort at reform. See and say that man is a compound of sinner and saint. If it is a libel on the Creator to say that human nature is rotten at the core, it is no less a libel on common-sense to say that it is all sound at the core.

W. H. S.

EXTRACTS AND NOTES.

The instructive and popular writer, Professor William Mathews, in the chapter on "The Illusions of History" in his work entitled Hours with Men and Books, says:—

"Within a few years it has been found, by the discovery of the Sinaitic and other very ancient manuscripts of the New Testament, that some of its most admired passages are forgeries,—medieval additions to the original text. It is sad to learn that the utterance of our Lord on the cross, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,' is not to be found in some of the old manuscripts, and that the words in the Sermon on the Mount, in Matthew v., 44, 'Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you'—words which lie at the very foundation of Christian morality,—must be swept away from the sacred text."

But, lest in presenting these facts to the common reader he should offend the worshippers of the Bible, he adds:—

"To our mind the most cogent proof that the Holy Scriptures are from Him, is the fact that, while other histories have been found to swarm with errors, they, when subjected to the intensest, most microscopic scrutiny of modern criticism, have come forth from the ordeal substantially unscathed."

The perusal of the remarkable work Supernatural Religion might lead Professor Mathews to modify the latter statement. But he writes for the people, and must be cautious!

Mr. J. M. Peebles writes from Ceylon to the Religio-Philosophical Journal:—

"Buddhism is increasing in Ceylon. A while since Buddhist priests met the Methodist missionaries in an open public debate, lasting two days. The Buddhists gained a decided victory. I have the full and complete report of this discussion, which I shall publish on reaching America."

I hope Mr. Peebles will redeem this promise to the public. A fair report of a debate between Christian missionaries and Buddhist priests cannot but be interesting.

Many of the positions taken by Rev. Joseph Cook are quite unsatisfactory to his brother theologians. Rev. Washington Gladden, in his Review of Joseph Cook's Theory of the Atonement, says:—

"In Mr. Cook's own opinion, his theological masterpiece seems to be his re-statement of the doctrine of the atonement; but to those who look on more coolly from without, this judgment is open to some questioning. It may turn out, after a little space, that his credit as a philosopher has been damaged by his speculations on this subject more than by anything else that he has undertaken."

And yet Mr. Cook thinks he has "scientifically demonstrated" his view of the atonement as an "incontrovertible truth"!

Lecky, the brilliant author of The History of European Morals, alluding to the contrast between the treatment of men and women for unchastity, says:

"Much of our feeling on these subjects is due to laws and moral systems which were formed by men, and were in the first instance intended for their own protection."

The Sunday School Times, speaking of Girard College, says that "Christian influences prevail there, and services of Christian worship are regularly and well conducted." When we consider that the founder of this institution specially required, in his will, that the students should be instructed in the principles of morality, but that no religion should be taught in the college, and that through Christian bigotry and priestly scheming Girard's will, in this respect was virtually broken, and the conditions on which he made the bequest entirely disregarded, one would suppose a Sunday-school paper would prefer not to call attention to the subject. But, perhaps it thinks the end sanctifies the means. That principle is not openly defended now, as it was in the early centuries of the Christian Church; but it is nevertheless still acted upon; and it is too evident that a larger number of zealous Orthodox theologians would not hesitate to deprive a freethinker of any right, if they had the power and thought they could thereby "advance the glory of God." B. F. U.

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE AT ITHACA.

I.

The Liberal League of Tompkins County held an adjourned meeting at Library Hall last evening, to which the public were invited.

The President explained the purpose of the League, and its relation to the National Liberal League, by reference to their respective constitutions, as cited in our report of "A New Movement," in the Journal of Oct. 22. He particularly emphasized the independence guaranteed to the local association and its individual members by the following articles:—

The purpose of this association is to cooperate with the National Liberal League in effecting, by whatever means commend themselves to our individual judgments and consciences, the complete secularization of the government, both State and national; in securing equal rights with respect to religion, and in obtaining such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as shall guarantee these objects.

Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

Prof. Oliver presented the report of the delegates to the recent Convention of the National League at Rochester. We give it in full:—

The Convention was large, earnest, and remarkably harmonious. Several hundred men and women were in attendance from remote parts of the country, and the audience, on the last of the three days' session, numbered nearly fifteen hundred. It was noteworthy for its intelligence and culture, and recalled the reunions of the old National Anti-Slavery Society,—an impression which the presence of such venerable apostles of freedom as Elizur Wright served only to make more vivid. The prevailing spirit of the meeting was excellent; better even than your delegates had expected. For of course, as in all reform movements, it embraced persons of all shades of opinion, many of them anxious to give prominence to their own pet ideas. Taking advantage of the free platform which had been assured them, a few irrepressibles talked about capital punishment, woman's rights, temperance, and the equally irrelevant subjects of orthodoxy, spiritualism, and materialism, and in two or three instances in a manner to offend good taste and good feeling. But the effect of this was only to bring out the overwhelming rebuke of the Convention, in speech after speech of assurance that the purpose of the League was not to discuss differences of religious belief, but was simply to secure the equal rights of all. The President also repeatedly declared that only the most wilful misunderstanding could consider the League as committed either for or against any form of belief or unbelief. It simply had nothing to do with creeds or religions except to obtain guarantees that both State and nation should protect every individual in the right to enjoy his own views in perfect freedom, and to be responsible for no one's else. The applause with which these sentiments were received left no possible doubt of the catholic tone of the assembly.

The practical work of the Convention was embodied in a series of resolutions, the essential principles of which are embraced in the following:—

Resolved, That, postponing to future conventions the addition of such planks on other issues as future events may render necessary or expedient, the National Liberal League now adopts, as its political platform for the Presidential campaign of 1880, these three great national principles of overshadowing importance:—

First—Total separation of Church and State, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all measures necessary to the same general end.

Second—National protection for national citizens in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

Third—Universal education the basis of universal suffrage in this secular Republic: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public-school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

It was voted to postpone to next year the question of making independent Presidential nominations.

The Convention felt that, in the present breaking up of parties, when old issues are settled, and new ones of vital interest are pressing upon us for solution; when the times are ripe for a conscience-party, which shall seek political success only as the fruit of a moral success, of unswerving allegiance to principle,—the Convention felt that in the platform of such a party should be found the great principles of State secularization, protection by the nation of those whose supreme allegiance it claims, and universal education as the only safe basis of a republican government. It declared these principles, and left it to the individual voter to determine how far they ought to influence his own political action.

Now of these three planks, only the first is contained in the Constitution of the National League, and only the general statement of its principle in that of our own local League, which leaves all special measures to our private judgment to determine how far they are necessary results of that principle. Only to State secularization, equal rights in religion, and a constitutional amendment guaranteeing them, do we commit ourselves in joining the Tompkins County League. It should be understood, however, that the amendment sought is one which shall forbid the separate States, as Congress is now forbidden, to make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof. The most plausible argument against such an amendment, as well as against those proposed in the other planks of the platform, is that it tends to curtail State rights, and still further to centralize power in the national government. But the only power curtailed is that to establish injustice, just as in the provision concerning ex-post facto laws and the obligation of contracts; and this, as citizens of the United States, we have clearly the right to insist upon. For in case of insurrection in any State the national government is bound, upon demand of the proper authority, to support the State government with the whole force of the army and navy. Any citizen is liable to be called upon to aid in such support, and is to that extent responsible for the maintenance of the State government. He may certainly demand, then, that the organic law of the land shall preclude his being compelled to enforce injustice.

The question was raised in the Convention what was meant by the "abrogation of Sabbatarian laws,"—a phrase which in its brevity seemed ambiguous, or at least obscure. The answer given by the President and indorsed by the Convention was clear, decided, and thoroughly satisfactory. The government is not to enforce the religious observance of Sunday "as the Sabbath," since this lies wholly beyond its province; but it is left free to continue it as a legal holiday; to continue or make all needed provisions for securing it still as a day of rest, on secular grounds; and, moreover, to preserve the peace and quiet of the day as a part of its protection of the equal religious rights of all its citizens.

The question concerning chaplaincies was not brought up during the attendance of your delegates. But they have no doubt that the spirit shown in the treatment of the Sunday question would govern this also, and all kindred special measures advocated. While the State would not be allowed to employ Chaplains as representatives of, or as committing it to, any special views of religion, there could be no objection to its providing men charged to attend to the moral welfare of its prisoners or its pensioners. Had the second amendment proposed—"national protection for national citizens through the United States Courts"—been a part of the Constitution during the last few years, our Presidents would not have been tossed on the horns of the dilemma either to violate the Constitution in the use of military force at the South, or to leave the weakest portion of our citizens helpless against their oppressors.

The educational amendment, while enjoining on the States, as many of these now do upon their towns, the maintenance of a system of secular public schools, and the compulsory education of all their children, would of course not permit infringement of private rights by dictation, on the part of the States, as to where a "good elementary education" should be obtained,—whether in the public, in private schools, or at home.

In conclusion, your delegates were convinced that the moral force which stood behind them in our own League, just organized with its carefully guarded and thoroughly catholic principles, enabled them to exert a not inappreciable influence upon the counsels of the national association, though their own spirit but reflected that of the great majority of those attending. They could not fail to see, however, that other organizations calling themselves "liberal," but really devoted to uprooting the religious faith of the people rather than to planting the seed of perfect freedom for all faiths, are ready to take the field whenever opportunity offers; and they became more firmly than ever impressed with the conviction that the Liberal League movement, in all its breadth, should be sustained and extended as much to oppose the bigotry of infidelity as the intolerance of superstition.

Mr. Giles B. Stebbins next addressed the meeting at length upon the principles of the League. An abstract of his remarks, which is crowded out to-day, will be given in to-morrow's Journal.

The President announced that the membership of the League had increased to fifty.

The meeting proceeded to complete its list of officers by the election of Mr. Charles H. White as Treasurer, and of Prof. William R. Dudley and Mrs. S. E. Johnson as Councillors.

Adjourned to the call of the Directors.

Any persons desiring to join the League can do so by calling upon or addressing the President, Dr. Winslow, 11 East State Street, or the Secretary, M. E. Bishop, Esq., Willgas Block.—Daily Journal, Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 6.

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE AT ITHACA.

II.

The subjoined abstract of Mr. Giles B. Stebbins' address Monday evening, before the Liberal League of Tompkins County, was crowded out of our Tuesday's report. He said:—

The Christian Amendment movement, "to put God in the Constitution," or a religious amendment requiring a belief in the Sonship of Christ and in the Bible as a test of American citizenship, was a departure from the idea and spirit of our institutions. To-day this might prevail; to-morrow a Catholic majority might demand belief in the Pope, and so equal rights of conscience be repudiated. The Liberal League is not to build up or pull down any form of faith, but to guard the equal rights of all, and guarantee them in law and Constitution if necessary,—to see justice done to all. If we talk of excluding the Bible from the schools, it is held an infidel attack on the book; but it is not so. Rev. David Swing, of Chicago, who preaches to the largest Protestant congregation in that city, says: "The government has no more right to teach the Bible, than it has to teach the Koran," and that "no valuable moral results can ever come from reading a few verses hurriedly in a school-house, and social strife will be continually springing up from the practice." Zion's Herald, in Boston, the old Methodist newspaper, says: "The State deals only with temporal affairs," and that "the religious education of children may and should be remitted to the family, the Sabbath-school, and the Church." Thinking people of all classes are coming to see this. Here are six million Catholics to whom the Douay Bible is their sacred book. How unjust to demand that their children should hear our King James' Bible read in schools. In New Mexico a Catholic majority pass laws under which the Douay version is read in every school. Unjust of course, and the old Puritan blood boils in hearing it; but no more unjust than we are to them here. It may be said the ultramontane Catholics aim to destroy our school system at any rate. Be just to them and we are strong to resist such bad efforts. Have Jews and Freethinkers no right of conscience? Put the Bible out of school, and be just to all, and so help that liberty which helps us all to the truth.

At Des Moines, Iowa, in 1875, President Grant made a brief but golden speech to the people and the school children. He said: "Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of freethought, free speech, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not a dollar be appropriated to the support of sectarian schools; that neither State, nor nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning save those unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school. Keep the Church and the State forever separate." This is the aim of the League? Who can deny its justice?

Taxation of church property is another great step that must be taken. We have over six hundred million dollars invested in church property, and its exemption from taxes piles a heavier load on every poor man. This exemption fosters spiritual pride, and the building of costly churches covers the land with splendid mausoleums,—piles of stone and brick with carved and costly ornaments under which lies buried all spiritual life. Thinking men in every church feel this. From 1880 to 1870, the seating capacity of our churches increased but ten per cent., while our population increased double that; but the cost of these churches increased one hundred and seven per cent. Tax them and this would cease, and tasteful simplicity take the place of gorgeous display, human fraternity of pious aristocracy, all for the benefit and spiritual culture of the people.

The Catholic Church property is over $150,000,000, and the Pope owns and controls it all; and it grows rapidly. It is evil and dangerous for any foreign power to own such vast property here. Tax all churches, Catholic and Protestant, and we are impartial and just, and we put a check to this evil.

These are the leading objects of the League, and they are important, timely, and needed. Carry out these objects, and all will see and acknowledge their good results.

This is but a brief sketch of the leading points of an address which commanded close and careful attention for nearly an hour.

The following is a list of the present members of the League:—

C. W. Ames, Prof. William A. Anthony, George Arnold, Dr. John E. Beers (Danby), Myron E. Bishop, Esq., Henry Bool, Prof. A. A. Breneman, Prof. George C. Caldwell, Daniel Coon, Prof. Hiram Corson, W. Dennis, Prof. W. R. Dudley, Arthur Falkenau, Prof. Willard Fluke, Prof. Isaac Flagg, Dr. B. W. Franklin, Calvin Gardner, Gardner C. Gifford (Ludlowville), William S. Gottheil, W. Hanford (Etna), Warren Hutchins, Willie A. Ingalls, Mrs. S. E. Johnson, Zenas Kent, Merritt King, Esq., E. D. Larned (Groton), Prof. W. R. Lazenby, J. S. Lehmler, Prof. B. P. MacKoon, Irvine Miller, H. B. Morris, D. B. Morton (Groton), Prof. J. E. Oliver, G. Frank Otis, F. H. Parsons, H. H. Philes, William D. Pitt (Groton), P. Ruditsch, T. P. St.

John, George Schumm, E. H. Sellers, Prof. C. O. Shackford, Joseph Sinton, W. K. Sinton, Henry Stewart, A. L. K. Volkmann, Miss L. A. Wheelock, Charles H. White, Dr. D. White, Dr. John Winslow.—Daily Journal, Ithaca, N. Y., Nov. 8.

Communications.

IS SILVER HONEST PAYMENT?

What is honest payment, resolves itself into a question of interpretation of contracts. The contracts in question are promises to pay dollars. Of course a promise to pay dollars is exactly discharged by a manual delivery of the very thing promised, and the whole difficulty is solved by a correct answer to the question, What is a dollar?

The average business man and the "able editor" pressed for a categorical answer, will proceed to tell you that it is "anything that the supreme authority of the State," etc. Enough! Whoever commences the answer to such a question with "anything" ought to stop talking and go to studying. There is not another word in the language having a more definite and exact meaning. People do not trust their all to the keeping of a word whose meaning is "anything."

The dictionary is a good book,—a very good book. Where the interpretation of a contract involves merely the definition of a familiar word, the dictionary is entirely equal to the problem. When Webster made his, he was not so remiss as to leave undefined a word to civilized ears and eyes not less familiar than bread. Nor would it have been possible to get a community to select a thing into the terms of which they choose to translate and define all other values, if that thing were some nebulous "anything" the caprice of the hour might make it, or some complicated abstraction the understanding of which only learning and statesmanship are equal to.

The primary meaning of the word is, "A silver coin of the United States weighing 371½ grains of pure silver." The secondary meaning is "The value of that coin." The value of a thing is that definite amount of another commodity for which it will freely exchange.

If the reader will be good enough to stop and ponder on these definitions till they possess him and get such a grip on his understanding that they will not slip away from him during the discussion, I will undertake to conduct him to a satisfactory solution.

This secondary meaning is the "Abstract Dollar." "The dollar of account," etc. But because it is "abstract," it has not become thereby an indefinite, vague "anything." It cannot in the nature of the case be an amount of value greater or less than what goes with the coin itself. It is by definition bound to that precise value; and, cent being by definition a hundredth part of that value, it is downright idiocy to talk of that coin being worth only ninety cents. It is worth one hundred cents ex vi termini.

There is a notion current that the supreme power of the State has such relation to this whole business as that it may rightfully thrust into existing contracts some other thing than the true meaning of its words,—may knock the dictionary into a cocked hat and carry the whole question away out of the reach of the common understanding. But among all the financial legislation, bad during the war and wicked since, let us be thankful that Congress has not made an assault upon the dictionary,—has not directly or indirectly declared that the silver coin minted since 1798 down to 1873, and stamped One Dollar, should no longer be in law, or in fact that thing.

It has declared at various times that certain substitutes should in specified ways have the same legal power in payment, and in 1873 it resolved not to issue any more of those coins. That is all. It should be remembered that the silver dollar has been the only fixed money definition and unit known to our law up to 1873,—that coin has not varied from the weight of pure silver originally determined on, not by so much as the one hundredth part of one poor scruple. Only the intellectual debauchery caused by the legal tender and other bad acts has made many good people suppose there are other ways of honest payment open for us than to stick scrupulously to the definition once for all established.

If under the threat of national dissolution it became necessary, as we supposed, for a time to legalize something else, and events were so strong that the legal tender could not be kept to the definition value, not the least hurt of those calamities has been the intellectual demoralization consequent on it. That act has made it possible to array much of the culture, respectability, and conscience of the country on the side of injustice, to carry into operation and effect the most colossal commercial wrong the world ever saw.

The discount on legal tender or the premium on gold during the years 1870 to 1873 (namely, about fifteen per cent.), is popularly supposed to measure the amount of inflation caused by government paper. That is a great mistake. Fiat money comes in direct competition with coin money, making less demand for coin, and so lessening its value or purchasing power. It therefore happens that carrying debentures created during that period, up to coin values, as they will be when that competition is removed, is a great hardship upon debtors,—a hardship that has not the excuse of military necessity. But statesmen tell us any attempt to right that by scaling down debts is impracticable. In that case, then, it is not injustice, but simply hardship and misfortune, and we are discussing only the ethical question.

True, we had the double standard, and both coins were declared legal dollars; but in every adjustment and readjustment of the ratio of the two metals, the silver coin was always the theoretic unit and absolute fixity about which the other revolved. Our ratio of legal equivalence being about three per cent. more favorable to silver than the European, took our full weight silver coins abroad. That accident made the silver coin no less the true unit and legal definition than did the accident of no coin at all in circulation during the greenback period. It is a great mistake to suppose that no wrong was done by demonetization, because for years the silver dollar was only a theoretic and only to a small extent the practical unit in use. It was still a dollar in theory and in law, and was therefore a potential dollar in practical effect by the whole distance of at least forty per cent. of the world's stock of precious metals. It was a reserve corps constituting forty per cent. of the world's monetary forces ready to come to the front in an emergency. That emergency has come upon us when we need all the monetary forces possible to grapple with our enormous debentures, and Europe (our creditor) is trying to make us do it with gold alone. It is plain to see that with the competition of silver withdrawn from monetary use vastly more importance attaches to gold. It has a royal monopoly and values itself accordingly, and lords it over all other valuable things.

But the imputation is, that the silver dollar has come to be no longer an honest dollar, or the true dollar to pay debts with. The implication is, that the true dollar value has left silver and taken up its residence in the gold coin alone. If it has, it is by the force of the act of demonetization. I do not mean by the economic effect of the act, but by the direct legal force of change of definition. But I am not now discussing the legal effect of that act, but seeking to show that such a legal effect and the practical consequences was a legislative immorality. Nothing can be clearer than the right to repeal a law wrongfully enacted.

Now it is not denied that it is competent for government to establish a new definition; and if that definition is not made retroactive in its operation, perhaps no objection on ethical grounds can be made. But as to all contracts and promises to pay dollars made under a given monetary definition, it is a rank immorality to change the definition. The definition in force when the promise of the greenback and the great part of our bonds was made, was fixed in the only way it was ever attempted to fix a monetary unit; namely, by specifying the quantity of a particular metal. There is no question that those promises are honored by delivery of the silver coins answering the legal definition in force when they were made; precisely as a promise to deliver a ton of iron is by delivery of the identical thing. The value that goes with the iron or the coin will of course be determined by the economic law which determines all values; namely, supply and demand at the time and place of payment. As one or the other of those two forces predominates, will value go up or down. It is bound in the chain of that law as inexorably as the orbit of a planet is by the centrifugal and centripetal forces. Those two factors, and they alone, determine it, and it is no part of the duty of government either as debtor or sovereign to interfere with fair and natural operation of that law.

If it were true that the cost of production of the metal of which money is a denomination has become much less than ever before—if the experience of all the ages should be reversed and silver could be produced as cheaply as iron,—I hold that my promise to pay a hundred dollars, made when 371½ grains of silver is the definition, and when it costs a full day's labor to get out metal for that unit, is honestly and honorably as well as legally discharged by delivery of one hundred of those coins, though at the time of payment a day's work will produce one hundred of them, and it would take them all to buy a poor cigar. It was no part of my promise that the purchasing power belonging to that metal during all historic time should remain one year longer. My promise was that I would deliver the coins, whatever their value, or their equivalent. It is puerile for the creditor to complain that he expected no material change would take place in its value. No more does a man who invests in land suppose that an earthquake will swallow it up. Both proceed upon the experienced stability of the particular thing in which he invests his capital. The fact that those metals have shown themselves the least liable to fluctuation in purchasing power of all other products, has caused them to be adopted as money, but gives no ground of right or duty to attempt their control by government. Industrial progress makes labor more and more productive, and so all products are rapidly cheapening as compared to a unit of labor. Invention, division of labor, better social order brings everything down, and money and debentures are at bottom investment in the money metals, and must take the same chances as all other forms of investment. Government is as much in duty bound to keep up the value of cloth or railroad stock as of dollars. Indeed, if there is to be any discrimination, wisdom and humanity require interference to keep up the value of vested capital rather than creditor capital, because it is more closely related to the productive industries. The creditor has no business to raise the question of value when I offer him the specific thing. That inquiry becomes pertinent only when I offer to pay in something else. In that case, market equivalence is the criterion of equitable payment.

One suspects a sinister twist in the fierce passion for "an honest dollar" that inspires the rhetoric of "able editors" and statesmen. There is suspicion of alliance with the creditor interest. For that is where it comes in. It is insinuated that debtors shall not have the advantage of labor-saving inventions, superior skill, and a better social order. If the alleged decline in silver is due, as is now the current of European opinion, to the arbitrary act of Germany, it is no less a legitimate advantage to us. The act of payment in silver, that is, remonetization, will repair all the mischief in that direction. Our own arbitrary act contributed to that calamity.

Had our promises been made in pounds payable in London, honest payment would demand the English definition in force when the promise was made. No matter in that case to what extent foreign governments should combine to "bull" gold, we should be at their mercy. It is claimed that foreign holders of our bonds will be offended and disappointed. Our reply is, we made no promise that our dollars, when translated into pounds or marks, should yield any particular number of their money units. It is a phenomenon in the history of financial operations that one very powerful to influence values should join hands with his adversaries to "bull" the thing wherein he was "short." But such is the attitude of our government in its financial policy. The only way to restore the normal value to our monetary unit and regain the true and just equilibrium is to restore the old volume of coin-money by restoring the old definition.

E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, O.

[The whole reasoning of the above article hinges on Webster's definition of the dollar as "A silver coin of the United States weighing 371½ grains of pure silver." Now Worcester is at least as good as Webster in the estimation of competent judges; and Worcester, in his edition of 1860—before the war,—defines a dollar as "A silver coin of Germany, Holland, Spain, the United States, Mexico, etc., of different values; that of the United States is 100 cents, or 4s. 2d. sterling."]

In other words, the United States dollar, in the sense of the "contracts" referred to, must be not only a coin of silver, but also a coin equal to 4s. 2d. sterling. This will take more than 371½ grains of silver to-day. We hold the remonetizers to the old definition more strictly than Mr. Stark himself. Let him tell us exactly how many grains of silver are equal to 4s. 2d. sterling TO-DAY, and we would not object to a silver dollar of that value, if it could be shown that the fluctuation in the value of silver had ceased. But we do object, on the ground of simple honesty, to paying off a debt of "dollars" in a coin worth less than 4s. 2d. sterling, which is the dollar of the old definition.

In reply to the rather severe insinuation against the editors of the country, we feel obliged to state that all our personal interests are exclusively with the debtor class.—ED.]

THE STATISTICS OF OPINION.

BY BISHOP FERRETTE.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT: It will be the duty of the legislature to provide for Statistics of Opinion, all puber individuals, whether male or female, being yearly required, at the time at which they pay their taxes, or would have to pay them if taxed, to record on a public register their opinion, or absence of opinion, or refusal to state the same, on such leading questions, having a bearing on the course of legislation, of which the legislature will yearly make a list; and in order that the Statistics of Opinion may not be falsified by undue influences, it will be the duty of the legislature to provide by suitable legislation for the confiscation of all property held in trust or otherwise, to be enjoyed on condition of professing a certain opinion rather than another, whether on religion or on politics or on other matters on which men, when not bribed, are apt to differ; and persons offering or accepting such bribes, beside other penalties to be determined by the legislature, shall be incapacitated to vote or be elected, or to hold any office of authority, trust, or honor under the State.

FROM A NEW SUBSCRIBER.

CLAYVILLE, Oneida Co., N. Y. Nov. 12, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I inclose $3.00 to pay for THE INDEX one year, commencing next issue.

I first saw THE INDEX in Meadville, Pa., eight years ago, and have read it more or less since; though my intended subscription has been put off until now. Reading THE INDEX influences a man to think for himself; and when he has once commenced to use his understanding in a search after truth, he will be a more consistent man in many respects. I am not a freethinker simply because freethinking is in opposition to Christianity, but because those things which conduce to human happiness—and which are evolved by the experience of generations—can better be reduced to practice by bringing our reason to bear upon them, than they can by bringing any antiquated faith into requisition.

I am willing to render any assistance to you and the cause, which my time and means will allow. After hearing Col. Ingersoll's lecture on "Liberty," in Utica, on the 14th inst., I think the people of this county will be better prepared to read THE INDEX.

Yours respectfully, W. H. JONES.

"Is it not time that you paid me that five dollars?" said a farmer to his neighbor. "Tain't due," was the reply. "But," said the farmer, "you promised to pay when you got back from New York." "Well, I ain't been," was the reply.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 " 8 " "	For 26 to 51 " 6 " "	For 52 " 5 " "
---------------------------------------	----------------------	----------------------	----------------

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

1 8 7 7.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains various reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion": Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALLOTT (A. BROWN). Tablets	1.50
Concord Days	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl	1.50
Little Men	1.50
My Boys, &c.	1.00
Shawl-Straps	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism	2.00
New Poems	2.00
Literature and Dogmas	1.50
AURBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine	2.00
Edelweiss	1.00
German Tales	1.00
BACON'S Essays	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution	2.25
Physics and Politics	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition	1.00
1 vol.	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems	2.00
The Rising Faith	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Secretary	1.25
The World-Friest	2.25
The Tall Student	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 2 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions	1.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Biblical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age	.30
COXWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage	1.75
COBBELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibniz and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals	3.00
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated	4.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series	1.50
Essays. Second Series	1.50
Miscellanies	1.50
Representative Men	1.50
English Traits	1.50
Conduct of Life	1.50
Poems. With Portrait	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold	1.25
Poems	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.	1.25
Society and Solitude	1.50
EVANS (R. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity	1.50
Child's Book of Religion	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	5.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	5.00
Elektive Affinitäten	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments	2.00
Creed of Christendom	7.50
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France	1.50
Thoughts about Art	2.50
The Unknown River	5.00
The Intellectual Life	2.00
Chapters on Animals	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second	1.00
Child World. Part First	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures	3.50
2. Logical Lectures	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image	2.00
The Machinist	2.00
The English Note-Books	2.00
The American Note-Books	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers	1.50
Malbone	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment	1.50
Atlantic Essays	2.00
Oldport Days	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey	2.00
Suburban Sketches	2.00
Victorian Life	2.00
Italian Journeys	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three"	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses	1.25
Bits of Travel	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature	1.25
On the Origin of Species	1.00
More Origin of Species and Administrative Nihilism	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen	1.50
Songs of Seven	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings	1.75
Studies for Stories	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series	1.25
A Sister's Hours	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Glaciers, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot	1.

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Swimming, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India	4.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek, Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versifications, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGG'S Confucius' Life and Teachings	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2.00
LESLING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	1.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait	4.00
1 vol.	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series	1.50
Among my Books	2.50
My Study Windows	2.50
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife	1.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education	5.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	1.50
Representative Government	1.50
Autobiography	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works	1.0
Three Essays on Religion	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire	5.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.	2.50
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series	2.50
The Same. Second Series	2.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities	2.50
Three vols. uniform with the same	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle	1.50
Kirkcove from Kentucky	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	2.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings	1.50
Historic Americanism. Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar	1.50
The Trolley Book	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts	1.50
Hedged In	1.50
The Silent Partner	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROUTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition	2.00

PROUTER (RICHARD A.) Other Works than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus	1.75
ROBERTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante	2.50
ROEHLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies	5.50
SCIENCE PRIMER:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart, With Illustrations	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	25.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical	1.50
First Principles	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers	2.00
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 1 vol.	1.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	2.50
Philosophy of Style	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition	1.50
Sociology	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics	2.50
Universal Progress	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Classic Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair
The Newcomes
Adventures of Philip Pendennis
The Virginians
Ramond, and Lovel the Widower
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Sketches, Sketches, Daily Diary, &c.
4. Four Georges, Hamlets, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces
THAYER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait	2.00
The Maine Woods	2.00
Cape Cod	2.00
Letters	2.00
A Yankee in Canada. Second Edition	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	2.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People	2.50
Light and Electricity	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion	2.50
On Sound	2.00
Radiant Heat	4.00
Forms of Water	1.50
Lectures on Light	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall	.50
Lessons in Electricity	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each	2.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden	1.00
Sanctaries	1.50
Bank-Log Studies	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life	1.50
Essays and Reviews	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth	1.50
Success and its Conditions	1.50
Washington and the Revolution	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story	1.50
Real Folks	1.50
The Other Girls	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life	3.00

ADDRESS

THE INDEX.

231 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 414.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

MR. S. B. CLARK has filled out the Executive Sub-committee of the National Liberal League for his own State of Kentucky by appointing the following persons as his associates: Mr. J. F. Reed, of Fern Creek, Dr. Robert Gilbert, of Waterford, Mr. Milburn Gunn, of Jefferson, and Mr. William P. Beard, of Taylorsville.

ACCORDING to the St. Louis Times, a "Liberal Lecture Association" has been formed in that city with a capital of $50,000, in shares of $50 each. The organization is completed as follows: A. Robbins, President; John S. Mellon, first Vice-President; S. L. Boogher, second Vice-President; M. Van B. Wisker, Secretary; and Josiah Anderson, Treasurer. Books for subscription to the stock are in the hands of each officer. C. D. N. Campbell, the lecture manager and business superintendent, was to speak on the subject at Mahler's Hall on the evening of November 18.

GOVERNOR RICE, of Massachusetts, repeats his offensive precedent of last year by incorporating into his "Thanksgiving Proclamation" a direct recognition of the "redemption of the world by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Such encroachments of Christianity on the principles of secular government are multiplying on every hand; and yet too many liberals—good, easy souls!—think it folly to pay any heed to such trifles. It is our deliberate conviction that the measure of any man's radicalism to-day is the degree of his earnestness for State Secularization—the degree of his zeal for the principles of the Rochester platform. That question is sifting liberals to-day as with a sieve.

HON. RUTGER B. MILLER, of Utica, N.Y., a subscriber to THE INDEX almost from its origin, and occasionally a contributor to its columns, died recently in that city at an advanced age, to the grief of a very large circle of friends and admirers. He was one of the most eminent and respected citizens of Utica, which owed much of its prosperity to his ancestors and to himself. Col. Charles D. Miller, of Geneva, son-in-law of the noble Gerrit Smith, writes: "I take the liberty to send you the Utica paper noticing Rutger B. Miller's death, whose philosophic life is entirely ignored therein,—whose kindness, patience, and affectionate regard for all made his death peaceful and natural. He sympathized with Comte. But I think you knew him."

IN A VERY CORDIAL and interesting letter just received, Hon. George W. Julian writes: "I am delighted with the proceedings and evident success of the Rochester convention. I congratulate you, and I am glad that what the convention did was in no sense the work of politicians, but of the independent and untrammelled men and women who attended it, and whose judgment and conscience alone guided them. In speaking of politicians, you will of course understand me as meaning the office-hunting and trading class that have so long afflicted the country; for 'real politics,' and politicians in the true sense of the word, are exactly the things we most need. I have read the proceedings of the convention and your editorial comments with great satisfaction, and only hope that the work so well begun may be as well followed up. The cause has been admirably launched."

MR. BUSK, in his Roman Legends, relates this amusing anecdote of a great thaumaturgist of the Catholic Church: "Padre Vincenzo worked so many miracles that all Rome was talking about him, and the Father-General thought he would get vain, so he told him not to work any more miracles. Padre Vincenzo therefore worked no more miracles; but one day as he was walking along the street, he passed under a high scaffolding of a house that was being built. Just as he came by, a laborer missed his footing and fell over from the top. 'Padre Vin-cenzo, save me!' cried the man, for everybody knew Padre Vincenzo, and he had just seen him turn into the street. 'Stop there!' said Padre Vincenzo; 'I mustn't save you, as the Padre-Generale says I'm not to work miracles; but wait there and I'll go and ask if I may.' Then he left him suspended in the air while he ran breathless to ask permission of the Father-General to work the miracle of saving him."

THIS is the caustic comment which the New York Sun makes on the Texas outrage: "We have frequently taken occasion to arouse the churches to the danger in which they stand, owing to the spread of modern infidelity of the scientific sort, and we have advised them to prepare themselves to meet the enemy. But everybody must severely reprobate the method of overcoming infidelity adopted by certain Baptists of Bell County, Texas. It seems that Dr. L. J. Russell of that county is an infidel, and also a man of prominence. The other night, some Baptist brethren, who were outraged by his scepticism, took the doctor from his bed to the woods, and, having stripped him, thus addressed the infidel: 'We know you are an honest man and a good physician, but we will tolerate no infidels in Bell County; so by the help of God, we will stop your career of infidelity.' They then gave him a hundred lashes on his bare back, set him at liberty, and posted a notice on a tree that hereafter infidelity in Bell County will be punished by the torch and halter. Whipping and hanging infidels will not, however, stop infidelity. The only way to do that is to meet and overcome its arguments, as we have urged the Baptists and the other denominations to do without delay." The Sun knows as well as any one that the only reason why the Baptists resorted to whipping was because they were themselves whipped in argument already.

LAST SUNDAY evening the question of ratifying the Rochester platform of the National Liberal League was presented before the Free Lecture Association at Loomis' Temple of Music, New Haven, and answered affirmatively, heartily, and unanimously by the audience. Free liberal lectures have been sustained for some four years in that Orthodox city, chiefly by the zeal of a little knot of earnest, self-sacrificing radicals who have set a most noble example to their brethren throughout the country; and their labors have not been in vain. It is now proposed by leading citizens of the place, including professors of Yale College and even (as we understand) ministers of the gospel, to sustain this winter a series of lectures on secular topics on Sunday evening, not in a church, but in a public hall! Of course this movement is designed to take the wind out of the radical sails, and break up the great audiences which have gathered weekly to the hall of the Free Lecture Association; but it shows that Orthodoxy has been successfully flanked. Moreover, as a result of similar labors, the school question has been raised in New Haven, and a committee of the Board of Education have just reported unanimously in favor of abolishing religious exercises from the public schools of the city. This reveals how much can be accomplished even by a few liberals who are in live earnest. The resolutions above alluded to, passed without a dissentient vote, were as follows:—

"Voted, That we cordially indorse the political platform adopted by the National Liberal League at Rochester, N. Y., October 26, 1877, as embodying principles which are beneficent, just, and vitally important to the welfare of the people; and that the National Liberal League deserves the sympathy of all good men and women in its effort to secure the incorporation of these principles in the United States Constitution.

"Voted, That we approve the endeavor to unite all liberal and patriotic citizens, without regard to their religious views, in a great national party pledged to the furtherance of these objects; and that we appeal to all who love justice, freedom, and equal rights to cooperate with the National Liberal League in this brave forward movement on their behalf."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.	New York, N. Y.
MR. W. M. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. B. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUEMANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. F. SEVENTHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN.	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEAYER.	Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT.	Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD.	Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT C. LUTY.	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Chicago, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.	Frontier, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Bochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. SALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburgh, Va.
Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT.	W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.
Executive Committee.
Alabama.	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
California.	H. MOULINBAUX, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. B. LEWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Milledgeville.
Illinois.	ERNEST PRUSSING, Chicago.
Indiana.	L. O. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHEMER, Adel.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. CLARK, Wilmore.
Louisiana.	EMERSON BERRY, New Orleans.
Maine.	M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
Maryland.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.	W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.	D. C. HAUSER, Battle Creek.
Minnesota.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	J. S. BOYD, St. Louis.
Nebraska.	L. W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.	H. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.	G. W. BALDWIN, Lincolnton.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	DR. E. F. PIERCE, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. A. DUNBAR, Greenville.
Vermont.	B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.	S. SPALDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.	D. F. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.
Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	131 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde. Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Plisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.	JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.	PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.	MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch. Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, J. Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernest Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.	CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.	STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.	DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.	PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson. Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.	BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. Abbot; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
---	---	--	---	---	--	---	--	---

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gint, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harcerson, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Remmeling.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. E. L. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel E. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

MR. EMERSON has an article upon "Demonology" in the North American Review for March. "Mesmerism," he says, "is high life below stairs. 'Tis a low curiosity or lust of structure, and is separated by celestial diameters from the love of spiritual truth. It is wholly false to couple these things in any manner with the religious nature and sentiment, and a most dangerous superstition to raise them to the lofty place of motives and sanctions. This is to prefer halves and rainbows to the sun and moon. Demonology is the shadow of theology; the whole world is an omen and a sign. Why look so wistfully in a corner? Man is the image of God. These adepts have mistaken flatulency for inspiration. Were this drivel which they report as the voice of spirits, really such, we must find out a more decisive suicide. I say to the table-rappers:—

"I well believe
Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know,
And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate."

A NEW PRISON chaplain was recently appointed in a certain town. He was a man who greatly magnified his office, and entering one of the cells on his first round of inspection, he with much pomposity thus addressed the prisoner who occupied it: "Well, sir, do you know who I am?" "No; nor I dinna care," was the nonchalant reply. "Well, I'm your new chaplain." "Oh, ye are? Weel, I have heard o' ye before." "And what did you hear?" returned the chaplain, his curiosity getting the better of his dignity. "Weel, I heard that the last two kirks ye were in ye preached them baith empty; but I'll be hanged if ye find it such an easy matter to do the same wi' this ane!"

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Darwinism and Christianity

AS PRINCIPLES OF ACTION.

A DISCOURSE PREACHED AT HAYVERHILL, MASS., NOV. 11, 1877

BY REV. W. H. SPENCER.

"For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."—ROMANS VIII., 22.

In this passage Paul was preaching wiser than he knew. Of course he could have had no conception of the universal application of his words. He was thinking how, for centuries, the spirit of God had been brooding over the Jewish mind, to beget the divine man, Christ Jesus. At last he was born,—but what a labor-pain it was! So much so, he says, that "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now." In the light of modern science we see that Paul's words are true in a wider sense than he ever dreamed. Darwinism shows us how Creation or Nature has groaned and travailed in pain from the dawn of life upon our globe until now, and she has brought forth age after age a higher and better order of beings.

This morning it is my purpose to consider the relation of Darwinism and Christianity. Is Darwinism, as some think, repugnant to Christianity as a principle of action? I undertake to say that it is not, and I shall endeavor to make my assertion clear to your minds.

I grant that both Darwinism and the philosophy of evolution (for they are not the same) are hostile to Christian theology; but are they antagonistic to Christian ethics and the highest individual and social morality? If Darwinism were hostile to the Christian gospel of sympathy, love, benevolence, and helpfulness, then I for one would be most bitterly opposed to Darwinism; but I aver that not only is Darwinism in general harmony with the ethics of Christianity, but that Christianity, as a great historic religion, is a beautiful illustration of the principle of Darwinism itself.

What is Darwinism? It is this expressed broadly: "Natural selection in the struggle for life." Or, to use Herbert Spencer's phraseology, it is "the survival of the fittest in the struggle for life."

Several laws are involved in Darwinism,—such as (1) the law of over-production; (2) the law of heredity; (3) the law of variety; (4) the law of sexual selection; (5) the law of change in the physical environment,—from all of which there necessarily results a struggle for life and the survival of the fittest. It would be aside from my subject to trace out the working of these various laws. It will be important only to touch upon them briefly so far as they relate to ethical Christianity.

The first law which Darwinism affirms is (as I said) the law of over-production; which means, simply, that there is a tendency among all animals and plants to overstock the earth. To give but one illustration of this law: It is said that a single codfish has been known to lay six million eggs. If these eggs were all to become adult codfishes, and the multiplication were to continue two or three generations, the ocean would afford no room for them. Some of them must die that some may live. Nature furnishes her own checks against this tendency to over-production. The earth is a generous mother, but her cupboard has its limits. She can only supply a given amount of food as well as room. If she has six million young codfishes to feed and only meal enough in her pantry for six individuals, why, it is plain that five million nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand nine hundred and ninety-four codfishes must go without their supper. This, very naturally, all object to doing; and so they vote upon it, and it is decided that they will fight it out on the line of superior strength, speed, and general fitness. Hence ensues a desperate struggle for supper and for life. Now, large codfishes, like ourselves, are fond of fresh fish, and like cannibals, they do not object to eating their fellows; and so perhaps six thousand great codfishes pursue the six million little innocents, and breakfast, dine, and sup off them until only six are left, and they are the ones whose fins are strongest, tails are longest, wits are keenest,—are, in short, the smartest individuals in the whole school. Nature has selected them, in the struggle for life, to grow up and perpetuate the species. What is true of codfishes, Darwinism affirms is true of all plants and animals. There is a constant tendency to over-production, a necessary struggle for life, and consequent survival of the fittest. Does Christianity deny the fact of this law? She might as well deny the fact of the law of gravitation. Does she say that this law is repugnant to the spirit of Christianity? I never heard that Moses, Jesus, or Paul ever said that it was wrong for a large codfish to devour a little one. No; but, you say, it would be wrong for a large man to devour a little man. Certainly; and the principle of Darwinism, when carried up to the relations between man and man, as I will show hereafter, does not imply that man shall behave like a great codfish, wolf, or hyena. By no means. To suppose that it does, is entirely to mistake the higher application of the principle of natural selection.

Do you say that Darwinism, even if true among the lower animals, is a cruel law, for it is the rule of might, the rule of the strong over the weak, sick, and helpless? This objection suggests some wise observations of M. D. Conway to the point, which I quote: "I was conversing," says he, "with some gentlemen on the subject of evolution in its purely scientific aspects. A lady sat listening, and when the others had gone, she remarked to me, 'Darwinism is a most horrible doctrine.' I was startled by her look,—there was pallor on her face and an expression of mental suffering. 'What is horrible?' I asked. 'Why, that doctrine you have been all talking about,—the survival of the strongest. It may be that it is the law of Nature that the weak should be trampled out by the strong, but it is dreadful.' Her eyes were filled with tears. I answered, 'I believe in no such doctrine as the survival of the strongest, nor do these scientific men believe it. They believe in the survival of the fittest; but mere strength is not fitness. The survival of the strongest were indeed a horrible doctrine; but all Nature is against it. Huge, monstrous things that were only strong—moving mountains of force, the mammoth and megalosaurus,—have perished because they were merely strong, and so not fit to survive; the lions have decreased before the lambs; and man, weakest of all animals at his birth, has been awarded the sceptre, because he was fittest through his power to love, to consider, to deny himself for others.' Darwinism does not, then, as many suppose, enshrine mere brute strength; but it does crown fitness 'lord of all.' It declares that those plants and animals that are best adapted to their surroundings will stand the best chance in the race for life,—and who can doubt it is so! It is true, man, to gratify his fancy, may breed any sort of unnatural creature, such as the pouter and tumbler pigeons; but Nature only preserves those individuals and species that can best fight their way through the world. She ordains that the hawk shall pursue the pigeon, and the fleetest hawk shall catch the game and the fleetest pigeon shall escape; while the lazy hawk shall starve and the lazy pigeon shall be eaten; and thus, by selecting, generation after generation, the best hawks on the one hand and the best pigeons on the other, Nature succeeds in breeding a race of fleet and powerful hawks and pigeons.

Nature is thus a mighty breeder, because she selects from each generation those individuals that are strongest, fleetest, and fittest to live—lions with supplest muscles, deer with fleetest foot, hawks with strongest claws, doves with longest wings, wolves with keenest scent, mollusk with hardest shell, bees with surest instinct, flowers with sweetest nectar, and birds with brightest plumage,—until she has succeeded in producing a superior race of animals and plants. In this struggle for life, it is not the strongest merely, but the fittest that win,—those that ought to live do live. If this stern discipline of Nature seems too severe, what, I ask you, would have been the result if there had been no struggle for existence among animals and plants? Look at the Mauritius, where there were no animals to prey upon the birds, and you will find large, clumsy birds, like the extinct dodo, that have lost the power of flight, if they ever had it. Look at South America, where there were no large carnivora, and there you will find the huge, unwieldy megatherium, now extinct, a sort of ground sloth, that crept from tree to tree on its hind feet and elbows, the most stupid and ugly-looking animal imaginable. South America never produced any splendid specimens of animals, nor Australia of birds, because they had no watchful and ravenous enemies to develop them by a struggle for life. Now, while it is true that in some cases the struggle for existence has been so severe as to produce degradation of species, it is also apparently true that whatever progress there has been in the type of animals and plants has been due to sharp competition. The secret of progress among all the lower animals has been the spur of hunger and the animal instincts, by means of which Nature has selected those individuals and species fittest to survive.

If this struggle for life seems like a stern discipline, it was the only method by which life on this globe could have been developed, ennobled, and perpetuated. Does Christianity deny that this struggle for life has been going on for ages? Does she deny, moreover, the fundamental principle of Darwinism, that in this struggle for life, the fittest to survive will survive? No; but perhaps I am again reminded that this rule of might, this crushing out of the weak by the strong is repugnant to the spirit of Christianity, that teaches us to support the weak, succor the sick, and lift up the fallen.

But does Christianity deny that it is a fact that the strongest lion, fleetest deer, and generally the fittest plant, fish, insect, bird, and beast shall live? Darwinism simply affirms it as a fact; and if it be unchristian for a lion to eat a deer, or a wolf to devour a lamb, then I confess that the spirit of Darwinism is repugnant to Christianity; but I have never yet heard a dog called 'unchristian' or infidel, because he delights to bark and bite. I repeat, that Darwinism does not teach that man should behave like a tiger, and tear in pieces the weak and crush out the helpless and downfallen. If people would read the works of Darwin instead of picking up an idea here and there from denominational papers and magazines, they might save themselves from many misapprehensions and vulgar prejudices. I admit that the law of Darwinism, as it applies to the lower animals, is rather the law of war than the gospel of peace on earth and good-will among animals; but it is not therefore unchristian, for the gospel of Christ teaches, not the duty of beast to beast, but of man to man. And this leads us to the question, how, according to the Darwinian principle, could man's moral nature have been developed? How could the sense of right and duty, the sentiment of sympathy, love, and unselfishness, and all the higher virtues, usually called 'Christian,'—how could these virtues of civilized man have been developed by the struggle for life and the survival of the fittest? If it appears that the Christian virtues are exactly such virtues as 'natural selection' would generate, then we must conclude that the spirit of Darwinism is not repugnant to the noblest spirit of Christianity. This is the pith of my subject, and I invite your closest attention.

If man had always been a solitaire, he would have acquired no ideas of right and wrong.

It is certain that the human race did not begin to be moral until they began to be social; and it is equally certain that man could not be social without, at the same time, recognizing certain relations among themselves as right and wrong. The social state demands and necessitates a moral state. Those actions which would plainly be harmful to the interests of the tribe would be condemned and punished, and certain other actions which would evidently be helpful to the tribe would be praised and rewarded; and thus would begin the slow evolution of a moral nature, which, through accumulated and inherited experiences from age to age, would evolve all those sentiments which belong to man as a highly social and civilized being. It is impossible to say when man began to be a moral being, because we know not when he began to be a social being; but it was probably in an age so far back that man was not man. Many inferior animals that are social exhibit the rudiments of a moral nature. Social animals mutually defend each other. Many birds, like wild geese, cranes, and many animals like rabbits, sheep, chamois, station individuals to watch and warn their comrades of approaching danger, and they are as faithful to their duty as was ever old Roman sentinel. Social animals show unmistakable signs of sympathy and love, and a sense of duty and sometimes a spirit of heroic self-sacrifice.

When a herd of buffaloes is attacked by wolves, it is said that they hastily form into a hollow circle, the strong males outside to defend the mothers, with their little ones, inside. Could man do more than that? Darwin tells us how 'Brahm' encountered in Abyssinia a great troop of baboons which were crossing a valley; some had already ascended the opposite mountain, and some were already in the valley. The latter were attacked by dogs, but the old males immediately hurried down from the rocks, and with mouths wide-opened roared so fearfully that the dogs precipitately retreated. They were again encouraged to the attack; but by this time all the baboons had re-ascended the height, excepting a young one about six months old, who, loudly calling for aid, climbed on a block of rock and was surrounded. Now one of the largest males, a true hero, came down again from the mountain, slowly went to the young one, coaxed him, and triumphantly led him away,—the dogs being too much astonished to make an attack.' Was not that practicing the Golden Rule? It is certain that associated animals have sympathy and love for each other, and certain crude ideas of right and wrong: in short, the rudiments of a moral nature. Now, when we see that social animals inferior to man have certain moral instincts, we cannot doubt that the first animal that trod the globe erect, and was worthy to be called a man, possessed the social and moral instincts. History furnishes us with no race of men so low, that they do not possess some ideas of right and wrong.

What virtues were first developed? Those which were most useful to the community, or, rather, those which were deemed by savages most conducive to the welfare of the tribe. As, during rude times, no man can be useful to his tribe without physical bravery, this virtue is put in the very highest rank by savages. As the strength of the tribe depends on the unity of it, those virtues which would tend to cement that bond of union, such as loyalty, obedience, fidelity, truthfulness, mutual helpfulness, would be cultivated. But such virtues as prudence, temperance, and chastity, whose utility is not so apparent to the primitive man, were developed at a later stage in the evolution of the human race. But what I wish you to notice especially is, the operation of the law of Darwinism among races of men. The principle of struggle for life and survival of the fittest is just as applicable to man as it is to our six million codfishes or to any of the lower animals; but with this difference: that among the non-social animals, it is merely a struggle of individual against individual, while with social man, this struggle of individuals is subordinated to the interests of the whole body of individuals. The unit is the society. Among men, the principle of Darwinism is illustrated in the struggle of social units, of tribe with tribe, and race with race.

From the dawn of history we see race struggling against race, nation against nation, and what is the result? It is this: that the race that is on the whole the fittest survives. The conquering races of men have been the brave men, the strong men—the long-headed men, the men that were most virtuous, that is, most loyal to leaders, obedient to commanders, faithful to duty, and mutually helpful,—the men who were most vigorous in body and mind. Everywhere we see the higher races of men driving before them the inferior races. The red Indian, the Tasmanian, Australian, New Zealander, are fading out before the white race, because the latter is superior intellectually, morally, and physically, and therefore the best fitted to survive in the struggle for life between races of men. Perhaps you may remind me of the fact that Rome, enlightened, classic Rome, was once overrun by hordes of Northern 'barbarians.' I grant it; and it was because Rome had become corrupt and weak and imbecile that she fell before the vigorous blows of those hardy sons of the North. They conquered because they were the best men, most virtuous and courageous, and fittest to survive. Does Christianity deny that there has been and there is, this struggle of tribe with tribe, race with race, and that everywhere we see the survival of the fittest? It is a fact, which Darwinism simply affirms.

Do you tell me that Christianity is opposed to this war of races, that instead of killing out inferior races, she sends her missionaries to the Sandwich

Islanders, and to the degraded heathens far away, and prays for the reign of peace when swords shall be beaten into ploughshares, spears into pruning-hooks, and nation shall war against nation no more? I grant it; but meantime the war goes on, and the inferior races are slowly dying out. But Darwinism, like Christianity, looks hopefully forward to the time when the struggle between races shall rise from a struggle of sword against sword to a struggle of the enlightened mind against the benighted mind; of the generous heart against the selfish heart; and of a world-wide sympathy against this narrow, clannish, sectarian sympathy and creed-bound love.

Although Darwinism recognizes this struggle of race against race, by means of sword and spear, Darwinism by no means tells us that this is the noblest kind of a struggle that man should engage in. Above this struggle of swords is the struggle of ideas, and we are now living in the age when mind begins to rule muscle.

I said that among savages and military peoples physical bravery is exalted to the first rank among virtues. Why? Because then courage was the most useful virtue. But in an agricultural civilization like ours, the warlike virtues are not so beneficial as those virtues which conduce to peace on earth and good-will among men. In a densely-settled community like ours, men must live at peace, or not live at all. It is everybody's interest to be at peace with everybody else; hence, these peaceful, social, amiable virtues, such as love, sympathy, benevolence, charity, chastity, helpfulness, so beneficial, nay, so essential to our happiness and prosperity, are regarded by us as the highest virtues, and for this reason they are taught in the nursery, in the school, church, press,—everywhere. I believe there is a direct, practical utility in all these so-called Christian virtues, and that they are good simply because they are useful; and because they are so essential, Religion has lent her sanction to them and baptized them as divine and sacred.

Now, I believe that Christianity is the religion of the Western nations, because its gospel of peace and good-will, love and self-sacrifice, are best adapted to the demands of our agricultural civilization. Christianity has survived because its ethics were useful, and for no other reason. A religion grows, like everything else, because it is fitted to its surroundings.

Think you a band of Comanche Indians would adopt Christianity? No, indeed! They demand a Christ who carries a tomahawk, and whose gospel is, not blessed are the peace-makers, but blessed are the war-makers; their Christ is, not he who turns the other cheek to the smiter, but he who hits his enemy on both cheeks at once and scalps him alive. Christianity is not adapted to a horde of nomads and warriors. It is the religion of our thickly-settled agricultural civilization, because its ethics are best fitted to our social needs.

Christianity did not drop down out of the clouds a full-blown miracle. It started from small beginnings, away back in Judaism, the Persian, Egyptian, and Roman religions, and it has grown, little by little, to be what it is to-day. Christianity, as a religion, has had to struggle for its life. In the first three or four centuries it grappled in one long death-struggle old Paganism, until finally Christianity (half-Paganized) triumphed. Why did it conquer? For the simple reason that its dogmas and ethics were a little better adapted to the religious demands of the age.

And this religion that we call Christianity is struggling for its life to-day, and it only lives because it is adjustable to the changing demands. See how some of its principles have been modified within three centuries! It was once thought Christian to burn heretics; to hang witches; to disparage knowledge; to keep Saturday evening as sacred as Sunday; to disfranchise people who did not belong to some religious society; to compel people to attend church; to eschew all ornament on the person, and suffer no music in the churches; to teach children the catechism in the public schools; to doff the hat to the grave parson, and pass out the brandy-bottle to him when he called to inquire after the 'state of your soul.'

The truth is, this Christian religion of ours is silently modifying its faith and practice to fit the new demands of the new age. It is just as truly struggling for its life as ever did plant or animal. What is it struggling against? Not against a great historic religion. Mohammedanism is far away, in Africa and Western Asia; Buddhism is in China; Brahminism is in Hindoostan. Christianity has nothing to fear from these or any historic religion; but it has an enemy nearer at hand, and that enemy is Science. There is a deadly conflict between Science and Christian theology; and if Christianity survives, it will be because she is able to drop her narrow dogmas, her sectarian spirit, her irrational creeds, and re-adjust herself to the expanded wants of mankind. When I say that there is a struggle between Science and Christianity, mark you, I do not say that there is any conflict between Science and Christian ethics; but I do say that there is a life-and-death struggle between scientific truths and Christian theology. And where is this conflict? It is every man's mind who thinks. The arena of battle is the mind itself, and this brings me to the last thought of my discourse. We have seen that the principle of Darwinism, that is, the struggle for life and survival of the fittest, is true of plants and animals below man, and when we come up to social man it becomes a struggle between tribe and tribe, race and race. Now, let us see how true the principle is when carried up into the realm of pure mind.

Suppose you were brought up in the Calvinistic faith and were taught that there was a fiery hell where a merciful God plunged unbelievers hereafter. You believed it firmly. That thought, then, roamed ground through the green fields of your mind monarch of all it surveyed. Then you had no doubts, no struggle of beliefs. But years pass by; a change has come. Something which you once heard or read changed the environment, introduced a new idea into your mind, the idea that a good and just and loving and merciful God, could not and would not damn anybody eternally for believing what he could not help believing. Then, what happens? There are two hostile ideas in your mind, the old one of a hell-fire God, the new one of a humane God. The new thought is timid at first, as new thought always is. It trembles before the old idea that it can hear roaring afar off. But as the days go by, the young thought grows stronger and bolder. It ventures out of its secret corner in the mind. It sees now the old lion-thought in the centre of the plain, on a cliff of craggy granite, shaking defiance from his hoary locks. See, the two ideas are approaching, gnashing their teeth, with many a savage growl. They crouch face to face, they spring at each other, and fiercely grapple in our life-and-death struggle. It is indeed a struggle for life, and be sure, if you will let them alone, the fittest idea will conquer. Sometimes the new idea kills the old one outright; sometimes he mortally wounds him and suffers him to go off and die a lingering death in the bush; sometimes (and this is the worst result) people separate their conflicting ideas, and cage them up until both die of starvation, or they carefully cosset one until it becomes a mere living skeleton. Do not do this, I pray you. Doubt, I know, is not pleasant, but it is the cross every one must bear who would win the crown of truth. What is doubt? When two antagonistic ideas meet and grapple, doubt is simply the pain of that struggle. It is, indeed, almost unendurable sometimes, as every earnest, brave thinker has realized. Oh! the wounds of that mental struggle, the panting exhaustion, the bloody sweat, the gloom of hope, the laceration of heart, when two hostile ideas meet in the arena of mind, and bury their teeth in a death-grip. It is painful, but it is often the only road to truth. It is Nature's law and gospel. Out of the conflict of individual plants and animals, higher species have been evolved; out of the conflict of savage tribes, civilized races of men have sprung; and it is only through conflict of ideas in every mind, that error and superstition are destroyed and knowledge and truth become triumphant. People do not understand this law of thought-evolution. How many in our midst try to shut their minds against the advent of any new species of truth! No sooner do they see a new idea approaching than they seize their old idea in terror and flee with it to the inner sanctuary and cry back, "Begone! ye dragon Doubt; thou art the Devil, come to kill my sweet poodle Faith; begone, I say!" And thus they stop all mental struggle, and hence all healthy growth and natural evolution of ideas.

Can they not see that the struggle for existence has been the spur in the flanks of ever-ascending life? If Nature could have stopped the struggle she would have dead-locked the wheels of Progress. When she partially succeeded her offspring were abortions. As in those countries, like the lands of Polynesia and South America, where life had least to contend against we see arrested development; so in these minds where there has been no great struggle, of thought in the search for truth, you will find nothing higher than ideas of megatherium type. As Nature has ordained that without a struggle for life, then no noble life, so she has ordained that without a mental struggle, then no noble character or highest human thought. We must bear the pain of doubt, or we shall never catch the splendid visions of divinest truth. It has been so, is so, will be so, world without end. Then do not, my friends, fear the conflict of thoughts. The old ideas will not die until the new are better fitted to survive. Have faith in the integrity of law. If the principle of struggle for life has led to the survival of the fittest (and the fittest have generally been the highest and best) in the world of matter, can you not trust the free action of that same beneficent law in the little world of your mind?

Now, because of this struggle of ideas in every individual thinking mind of our age, there is an "irrepressible conflict" between physical science and Christian theology that will, at least, greatly modify the popular religion; yet I cannot see that there is any considerable antagonism between the ethics of Darwinism and the ethics of Christianity. On minor points, such as this too common indiscriminate charity, glorification of the submissive virtues, etc., they may conflict; but not on essentials and fundamentals in morals. If Christianity teaches us to do unto others as we would be done by, so does Darwinism teach the same Golden Rule among men. That nation, it says, shall conquer and prosper which best practices equality, justice, humanity, and the primal virtues that "shine aloft like stars."

If Christianity teaches us to observe the Golden Rule for Christ's sake, Darwinism tells us to obey it for Humanity's sake. If the one says do it in order to reach heaven hereafter, the other says do it in order to make heaven here.

If one says do it as a means to an end, the other says do it as an end in itself. Hence, though Christianity and Darwinism may differ as to the motives and the means (whether we aim to save our own souls hereafter, or to save all souls here, and let the hereafter take care of itself), they are agreed in this: that it is right to better the condition and character of men on earth; and to that end they can cordially join hands and labor to promote and practice temperance, honesty, purity, benevolence, brotherly sympathy, and mutual helpfulness everywhere among all men. Both agree that the Golden Rule is a good rule, and let each emulate the other to apply it best, and so illustrate the great law of struggle for life and survival of the fittest.

"Say not, the struggle naught availeth,
The labor and the wounds are vain,
The enemy faints not, nor faileth,
And as things have been, they remain.

"If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars;
It may be, in yon smoke concealed,
Your comrades chase e'en now the fliers,
And, but for you possess the field.

"For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
Seem here no painful inch to gain;
Far back, through creeks and inlets making,
Comes silent, flooding in, the main.

"And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the light;
In front, the sun climbs slow, how slowly!
But westward, look, the land is bright."

[FOR THE INDEX.]

A LITTLE BIT OF A THING.

BOSTON, Nov. 12, 1877.

Sir,—I send you the brief statement below, not for any immediate purpose that I expect it to serve, but in the hope that it may direct your attention to what I sincerely believe a real sign of the times, and well worth watching.

FREDERIC BEECHER PERKINS.

On the evening of October 16 last, I delivered in Boston a lecture on Voltaire, in which I showed that he was thrown into a furious antagonism to all Christianity, by seeing and feeling the evil workings of the only kind of Christianity that he had experienced; to wit, the French Roman Catholic Church. I also illustrated the stock charges against Voltaire, by quoting similar ones brought against Luther, in books by the late (Roman Catholic) Archbishop Spaulding, of Baltimore. And I "preluded" (a la Rev. Joseph Cook) by an appeal for honest municipal government in Boston.

In the next week's issue The Pilot, a Boston Roman Catholic weekly paper, claiming the largest circulation of its class in the world, printed the following editorial:—

"Mr. Frederic Beecher Perkins, nephew of Henry Ward Beecher, delivered a lecture on 'Voltaire' last week in Boston, and said he proposed to 'rub off some of the dirt that has been heaped upon him so long.' His lecture was a cheap rant, evidently delivered for the purpose of airing his views on local politics, and perhaps of lifting himself into notoriety in view of a certain vacant office. This Mr. Perkins, whose only hold on fame is the 'B' in his name, holds an obscure office in the Public Library of Boston, and exalts himself as a coming martyr in these words: 'If certain people can have their way, I shall be turned out of the insignificant office which I hold; but that is no matter. I long to have a clean government over this splendid city. I don't want a Democratic hat nor a Republican pair of boots. I want a good hat and a good pair of boots,' and so on, and so on. Mr. Perkins reverses the story of the ostrich; he is buried in the sand, but he thinks every one is looking at him. It would serve him right if some Democrat went round to the Library and picked him out with a needle. But no,—don't be afraid, Perkins; no one will trouble you,—only don't be too sassy. And take our advice; drop Voltaire, and turn your charity nearer home. Why don't you pick a little of the dirt off your uncle?"

To this I answered in the following communication, which, after the tone of the editorial, I was surprised that The Pilot should be so fair as to print:

"EDITOR OF THE PILOT:—
"I request you to print, as a matter of ordinary fairness, the following, in reply to your peculiar editorial of this week, about me:—

"1. I cannot be advertising myself, as your intimate, for a 'vacant office' (the Library Superintendency?); for, as you can easily find out, nothing could more effectually cut me off from any chance for that place than what I am doing.

"2. The views of The Pilot on corrupt city government are, I think, mine. If, therefore, they are right, you should not speak with contempt of them; if wrong, you should change yours.

"3. Your reference to a relative of mine was aside from my argument, and, I think, a mistake in point of manners. On reflection, I think you will admit this. It would be curious to see an influential religious newspaper imitating the small boy's revenge: 'I can't lick you, but I'll make faces at your sister.' But I am right proud to have Mr. Beecher as a relative, and I would at any moment risk whatever man can risk upon my absolute conviction of his absolute purity of character.

"4. It was controversially weak to attack me instead of my subject. Your article looks as if you followed the old lawyer's recommendation to his pupil: 'If you have no case for the defence, abuse the plaintiff's attorney.' Such personal attacks were the reproach of Voltaire's opponents and of himself. You will hardly wish to go on record as justifying the practice in Boston in 1877.

"Lastly. Please give me in a practical shape, the guarantee you seem to offer that I shall not be turned out of office. It might be some comfort, under your contempt, to have your protection.

"FREDERIC BEECHER PERKINS."

With this appeared the following second editorial: "On another page we publish a reply to The Pilot's criticism of last week from Mr. Frederic Beecher Perkins. This gentleman feels outraged at our personal arguments; but he forgets that at times this objectionable course is quite necessary. When we find a man flinging mud on creeds and parties, it is quite allowable to investigate his personality in order to find his authority. This gentleman began to preach charity to Voltaire, in doing which he spared no slur on the Catholics; and tacked on to his lecture was a tirade on local politics, in which he insinuated dishonesty and rascality and personal hatred of him by the Democrats of Boston. 'If they gain the election, I shall lose my office,' he cries; quite forgetting that the party now keeping him in office is the one he maligns. Mr. Perkins has threatened The Pilot with a newspaper fight. We are quite ready, Mr. P."

Now I personally am content with the record thus made up, and am safe in abiding by the judgment of any editor, or other gentleman or lady, on the right and wrong of the case, on its aspect as a newspaper phenomenon, and on the question of courtesy or discourtesy. For myself, therefore, I make no complaint. But the attack, little thing as it is in itself, seems to me singularly interesting as a symptom; and as the editor has distinctly refused the acknowledgment I asked of him, and justifies himself in full, I desire to draw as much attention as possible to the significant and dangerous proposition which The Pilot, by immediate and necessary implication, maintains, to wit:—

He who publicly discusses themes which Roman Catholics do not wish discussed, or in a manner which they dislike, shall be attacked and abused personally, and so shall his friends.

Now, bad intentions need not be imputed to the editor; but this proposition is insolent and base. But, what is much more important, this is that same ancient pedal base of terrorism, which has been the reproach of the Roman Church for centuries. A sect whose periodical organs will deliberately justify such doctrines now is a sect whose violence will always extend to the limits of its power.

The attack itself, on one obscure person, and on one relative of his, is a little bit of a thing. But the very naturalness, and spontaneous, voluble ease with which the personalities flew out, proved the established familiarity of the doctrine; and this doctrine is by no means a little thing. The term "freedom of speech" has not retained of late much sacredness of meaning, although there are certainly those who maintain full use of it themselves. But is it so that now we must ask leave of a Roman Catholic editor, before venturing to select a theme for public discourse? It may be dangerous in Boston to attack the Roman Catholic practices of France a century and a half ago, or to read to Protestants the printed and published utterances of a Romanist prelate about the greatest Protestant teacher and reformer, for Boston is believed by many to be a Democratic, Irish, Roman Catholic city. But who would have supposed any Roman Catholic editor so unwise as to say so? He is no priest, for certain!

There are a good many Protestants yet. And some of them think now that the vigorous and telling attacks of the Roman Church upon the heart and brain of our American nationality—our common schools—are a threat that already grows full loud, and that means danger. But if the Romanists feel so sure of the schools that they can take a step further and assume publicly to set the limits of their liking to freedom of speech, assuredly the foundations of our national life are seriously altering.

And how interesting is the false position into which his mistake in principle, has betrayed the editor himself! Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly, the editor of The Pilot, was transported as a felon for boldly trying to free his own country and his own people from the dominion of England,—a dominion which, however now mitigated, has often been an abominable tyranny. It is not strange, for it is human; but it is a shame, to see him, in the free country—for I believe it is free yet—which has welcomed him, and admired and in some measure rewarded his merits and abilities,—it is a shame to see him turn round and exercise on others the nearest approach that the case will permit, to the very same kind of wickedness that he hated so, and risked his life against. F. B. P.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WHAT IS THE SHAKER SYSTEM?

What is the Shaker system? is the first thought arising in my mind. The world, in which we live, is a large world, containing many nations, each nation many sects and people. Is it the Shaker idea and faith that all of these should become ascetics, celibates, Shakers in this world? It is not. What then is the "Shaker system" that they, as religionists, would aim to inaugurate? It is the God system of sowing and reaping the human race. The harvest is the end of the world, and the end of the world is the harvest of mankind. Two distinct and dissimilar operations, two orders, result from this condition of humanity: the civil government of a nation, which, according to Shaker religious faith, should be dual—male and female,—to begin with; woman and man, citizens, equal in wants, duties, and functions, conjointly making the laws, and unitedly administering them. But as no two things can exist in one and the same place at the same time, so neither can men and women occupy in two families—the private family and the public family—at one and the same time. The man or woman who has a private family to care for, cannot neglect that duty without being worse than an infidel to some false theology. They should not, while thus burdened, assume to care for or to rule the national family. He, or she, who is married, careth for husband or wife, how to serve and please, and how best to conserve family interest. Let all such stay at home, not for one year, as was the Jewish rule, to comfort wife or husband, but so long as that relation and its duties exist. In short, when a people have progressed beyond the patriarchal family relation, they should develop a class of intellectual celibates, who do not marry individually, but who marry the State, the State becoming their family. This is under a natural law of evolution that has hitherto been overlooked, disregarded, or ruinously violated. In all governments we have had men with man, working in governmental relations what is unseemly and destructive to private and public virtue; passing laws that are not just; class legislation; stealing; public sexual immorality; husbands and fathers being away from their proper sphere, the family homestead; hence result private vice, private divorces, family quarrels, and public wars. What else could result? Will not a tree bring forth its appropriate fruit?

In the God element, in humanity, is the germ of a new earth, new civil government, having no theological fighting God, Christ, nor chaplain, but RIGHTEOUSNESS in all the relations of human beings with each other, and with themselves individually. When society evolves a class of men and women, as now in England, in whom the Westminster Review declares that the marrying instinct has died out, these should fill the houses of Parliament and halls of legislation; these should enact righteousness: first, a law relieving all who have private families from public burdens; second, a law of citizenship endowing male and female as citizens; third, a law of property, giving the land of the nation to the people of the nation, and securing its just distribution and possession; fourth, a law of population, setting forth the physiology of reproduction, its rule of right, with appropriate checks and restrictions; fifth, the law of digestion, or the assimilation of food,—the kind, quantity, and quality that is scientifically right and best for the individual and the nation; sixth, the law of association, under which no one should live for himself or herself, in family, society, or nation, but each live for all. In each family and society, there should be a throne of judgment, unconditionally deferred to by the unit or individual. This would end private feuds and strifes; seventh, nations, when organized upon these principles of righteousness, can recognize a law of nations that would be God's justice and right incarnated, a supreme court of arbitration, all the nations commencing by universal disarmament. War creates war; it begins with warlike preparations. The girl, with her doll baby, is learning the rudiments of maternity. The boy, with his toy life, drum, and gun, is a germinal warrior. Cease to think war. Learn to think peace, and nothing but peace. Let the decision of the parent, the majority, the court of arbitration for nations, be as the fiat of the Almighty, or as the Persian-Medo decree of humanity, that a nation shall no more revolt from the decision of the grand Supreme Court of arbitration for nations, than law-abiding Americans revolted from the revolting decision of the United States Supreme Court, that "the black man has no rights that the white man is bound to respect."

Thus much for the new earth, under the Shaker system. Shall we try it?

Respectfully yours, F. W. EVANS.

A MANLY HERETIC.

THE REV. JOSEPH MILLIKIN RESIGNS HIS POSITION AS A MINISTER IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—HE HAS CEASED TO BELIEVE IN ALL THE DOCTRINES OF CALVINISM, AND WILL NOT BE PARTY TO A TRIAL FOR HERESY.

Letter read to the Presbytery of Columbus, Ohio, at its October meeting.

MR. MODERATOR AND BRETHREN OF THE PRESBYTERY OF COLUMBUS:—

When in 1862 I was licensed and afterward ordained by the O. S. Presbytery of Oxford, I sincerely accepted the standards of the Church "for substance of doctrine." But I feel bound in conscience to state that more years and longer subjection to the influences that form and modify belief, have bred in me convictions so much at variance with those standards that I can and ought to remain in the ministry no longer.

For years I agreed with the many ministerial and other friends with whom I counselled, in the opinion that, as I had always been candid and free of speech, both in public and in private, I could properly, and indeed should, preach so long as Presbytery did not warn me that I was outside the limits of permissible liberty in doctrine. Two things made the advice the easier to follow: I was not a pastor, and I knew that views like mine were held by a large and fast increasing number of ministers in the Presbyterian and other Orthodox denominations. But now the greater positiveness of my convictions, and various indications in the Presbyterian and other churches, make my position in the ministry illogical and impossible. I must be honest, and known to be honest, in this matter; I must be free to speak out what I believe, as occasion arises. It would be intolerable to be merely tolerated; and, in view of many and recent examples of the sins and passions attending trials for heresy, I shall be a party to no such trial. For you and for myself, then, I gain much and avoid much by this voluntary, explicit declaration; viz., that I am unorthodox as to many of the doctrines and inferences from doctrines essential to the Calvinistic and Orthodox systems. I cannot give here my beliefs, and it would avail nothing if I could. For your purposes and mine it suffices to say that I do not believe, and cannot pretend to believe, many things that a Presbyterian minister is rightfully expected to believe, teach, and conform to.

I think it due to all concerned to add that whatever God sees in my heart, there is nothing in my outward life making me unworthy your continued fellowship; that I have heresy to avow, not vice to confess. And as for my beliefs, they are neither the cause nor consequent of indifference to religious truth, or decay of religious feeling. I am not a mystic, drifting, befogged, nor a materialist, with the soul frozen out of me. I have beliefs that are as strong and dear as yours to you. God; Christ, in an incomprehensible way his Son, and, as an undeniable fact, his revealer and our helper; righteousness and duty; the endless life to come,—my faith in all this has been always growing in certainty, preciousness, and motive power; and God hasten the coming day when no man shall have a less and no church require a longer creed than that!

The Church has in it too many whom I love and reverence; it has had in it too many of my dead. There are crystallized about its very name too many of my best thoughts and purposes, for my leaving it to be other than unspeakably painful. But it is not so painful as would be living disloyal to what to me is truth, in a false position, and not free with the intellectual as well as spiritual liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.

I know that Presbyterian law admits no demission of the ministry,—self-avowed defection from its doctrine involving discipline of the same sort as does conviction on trial for drunkenness or lewdness. But, in fact, if not in law, the ministry can be resigned, and I hereby give up the rights and privileges, and loose myself from the duties and obligations pertaining to and binding upon me heretofore as a minister of the Presbyterian Church. I have no need, I am sure, to ask that the action to be had in my case be prefaced with a statement of the fact that it results from my own wholly unsought avowals.

For the great and manifold kindness I have received from my brethren during the fifteen years that are gone I shall always be most grateful, and I know I can trust to its continuance. My college duties have kept me personally a stranger to most of this Presbytery, but the loss has been mine, and I have felt it as a loss. But some day we shall all know God and each other far, far better than now. Meantime it remains that we follow whereso He seems to lead,—if need be, by paths seemingly lonely and lying far apart.

The severance of no outward bond can prevent my remaining in heart and with great respect, your brother,

JOSEPH MILLIKIN.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Oct. 2, 1877.

WHO WILL BE THE NEXT POPE?

"Who will succeed Pope Pius IX.?" is a question which is now discussed in European political circles. It was currently reported that the late Cardinal Sforza was the most promising candidate at the time of his death; but now Cardinal Panebianco is most frequently mentioned for the honor. It seems to be generally conceded that the next pontiff will be an Italian. Of the seventy members of the college of cardinals, forty of them are Italians, the rest being scattered among the other European nationalities. This supposition is also strengthened by rumors of expressions which have fallen from the pope's lips, and further by the belief that he has created enough cardinals in petto, and invested them with the suffrage, so as to control the election. Cardinal Panebianco is said to have been nominated by the pope, in his secret councils. He was born in 1808, and elevated to the cardinalate in 1861. He is seventy years of age, and one of the considerations in his favor is said to be that he is in poor health. A Roman correspondent of the Philadelphia Press says if he should be elected, he would be an ultra-reactionist. "He would admit of no compromise on the question of the education of the Roman Catholic laity, and would protest against mixed schools in Catholic States, and require the training of Catholic children in Protestant countries exclusively by the priesthood. He would put the papacy, in fact, in collision with all the governments of the world, for there is not one of them now, not even Spain, that tolerates clerical interference in domestic affairs." It is extremely probable that in the event of the election of such a man, Germany would attempt to interpose the veto, which Bismarck laid claim to in 1872, and which would undoubtedly be concurred in by Italy, and possibly by France and Austria. Much depends on the character of the man who shall succeed the present Holy Father. All the world will be interested spectators in the event, and will be eager learners of the characteristics and intentions of the new pope. It is thought that the elevation of Panebianco would precipitate an international-papal crisis and widen the breach between the mitre and the crown.

It is said that Cardinal Pecci might have been in the line of immediate succession, had he not been of such a compromising tendency and so liberal in his views, and had he not been relegated to the archbishopric of Perugia and kept there by the jealousy of Antonelli. To put him out of the catalogue of available candidates he has been shelved with the appointment of Camerlengo. By virtue of this office of grand chamberlain the duty of convoking the College of Cardinals for the purpose of electing a pope on the death of Pius IX., devolves on him, and he has much incidental influence on the subject. In order to curtail his power, the old rule that allowed ten days to elapse after the death of a pope before cardinals were called together has been set aside, and a new one established requiring him to summon the college within twenty-four hours, and before the interment even. Cardinal Pecci is sixty-seven years old, and is said to be a man of power, cool, deep, with a keen insight into character, stern and resolute, and always noted for his influence over others. It was for this latter trait, it is said, that Antonelli dreaded him at Rome, well knowing that he would soon undermine his authority and sap his influence with the pope.

Panebianco's chances are thought to be the most promising; but if a combination veto is made and is effective, it is doubtful if his election can be recognized, and without such recognition by the powers, he would not fare well on the papal throne. He is an uncompromising ultramontane. Prussia will be his bitterest foe. He will not abate zeal for the perpetuation of the present regime, and this will, in the eyes of the enemies of the temporal pretensions of the papacy, be prejudicial to his success. But, if the hierarchy has fixed upon him, it is exceedingly doubtful if he will not take the chair spite of all opposition. The policies between which he will have to make choice, the uncertainty of which constitutes a very great contingency to his election, are, first, either to renounce Pius Nonus's course and promote every species of humanitarian progress, abandon the proscriptive and persecuting dogmas of the past, encourage education to its widest range, inculcate universal charity and fraternity, adopt the principles of a free Church in a free State; or, second, oppose systems of universal education, the commingling of children of all faiths in public schools, unlimited explorations in the field of speculation and scientific research, and to insist on conforming social and political life to the Roman standard, and of making the papal edicts and dogmas the test of religious and secular truth. His training and habits will incline him to the second alternative. The world at large would prefer to see the first one adopted and enforced.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

VOLTAIRE.

Voltaire is becoming a very live topic, with the approaching centennial celebration of Voltaire's death in 1778, and the handling of the great wit by Mr. F. B. Perkins of the Public Library in his lecture last night foretells somewhat of the manner in which the verdict of the past century will be redressed by free and independent scholars and thinkers. He would use neither whitewash nor blacking, the lecturer remarked, but "rub off a little of the dirt that has been heaped upon him so long." If it were asked what is the use of explaining Voltaire, the answer was, "He was the foremost leader of free thought and free speech in that century which was the parent of this, and in that country whose action secured the national existence of this." It appears that the Roman Catholics do not get over the barbarous rage with which they execrate Voltaire. In 1815 they dragged his remains from the grave and flung them into a common sewer, and this year a book is published to attack the proposed Voltaire centennial; for the abuse in which Mr. Perkins furnished a very close illustrative parallel in a dreadful description of Luther's immoralities and debaucheries, from the writings of the late Archbishop Spaulding, of Baltimore, a highly respectable Roman Catholic prelate. Mr. Perkins touched off this first gun in the Voltaire centenary with some spirited preliminary remarks on a topic of the day after the manner of Rev. Joseph Cook, urging citizens to their political duties. The Voltairean politics of the present day were thus expressed: "If certain people can have their way, I shall be turned out of the insignificant office which I hold; but that is no matter. I long to have a clean government over this splendid city. I don't want a Democratic hat nor a Republican pair of boots. I want a good hat and a good pair of boots. I don't want a Democratic government nor a Republican government. I want an honest, good government." There was this sort of longing for honest government at the bottom of Voltaire's bitterness, according to the lecturer, against society toward the end of the seventeenth century. "Just as we might say in Boston, the words of the ordinance expressly called for a practical printer, and a mere politician was nominated. Such was the state of things that infuriated Voltaire. He himself suffered its abuses. Oppression maketh a wise man mad; how much more a sensitive and extravagantly irritable poet and man of genius! He struck at every abuse and wrong he could reach." Evidently there is to be some preaching to good purpose on texts furnished by the Voltaire centenary.—Boston Globe.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

NOW.

Ever hoping more than loving,
On the future still we muse,
Midst its vision-flowers roving,
But to cull the saddest hues.
What we seek is now abiding,
What we hope for nearer found;
Heart with heart in love confiding,
In our own shall peace abound.
Enough is now of good and beauty,
Enough of truth for trusting hand;
A loving faith, an active duty,
Need no distant vision-land.
Naught but hoping brings desponding—
With deeds we build the surer way;
For the Future, true responding,
Is but the reflex of To-day.

A. O.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 24.

E. D. Stark, 25 cents; Dr. L. P. Babb, $3; M. B. Linton, $1.50; C. W. Paige, $1.50; George Riker, $2; Mrs. M. H. Parry, $2.30; A. Osborne, 25 cents; F. W. Evans, 50 cents; C. W. Chadwick, $13.20; T. J. Crouse, $1.60; J. W. Bralley, $3.20; A. P. Prichard, 10 cents; J. L. Whiting, $10; G. H. Foster, $3.40; Clark & Co., $8.24; John Zlamer, $3.20; Warren Emerson, $14.40; Mrs. Sarah Emerson, $22.80; Mrs. G. E. Letcher, $3.20; Thomas Tasker, $3.20; E. B. Wolcott, $10; Charles Ellershaw, $1.50; W. E. Lukens, $1.10; T. O. Leland, 10 cents; Col. Chas. D. Miller, $1; Miss E. J. Leonard, $3.20; Mrs. M. J. Barker, $3.20; J. J. Dooley, $3.20; J. Lupton, $1; Cash, $4; Josiah Gooling, $1.50; P. S. Crowell, $3.20; Dr. O. Martin, $1; Darius Lyman, $23.50; Lizzie E. Dorr, $10.

The Index.

BOSTON, NOVEMBER 29, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLKDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIEUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Editorial Contributors.

A CARD.

The Committee on the better establishment of THE INDEX, appointed at a meeting of its subscribers and friends last May, wish to enlist all the assistance they can to lay its claims before every liberal man and woman in our country. They have prepared a circular setting forth the method, motives, and objects of their action, and wish the names of all who are willing to assist them in placing it where it will do good. Please address the Chairman of the Committee, "Elizur Wright, P. O. Box 109, Boston, Mass."

ANNOUNCEMENT: CLUB TERMS.

Until January 1, 1879, THE INDEX will be sent for a year to clubs of five or more NEW SUBSCRIBERS on receipt of $2.20 each, in advance, instead of $3.20, the regular cost of subscription. This is an excellent chance for all our friends to join in a vigorous effort to increase the circulation of the most earnestly radical journal in the United States, and thereby to advance the common cause. It is only just to show due public appreciation of the efforts of its friends, and we shall therefore (unless explicitly requested to the contrary) publish the names of all who send us clubs under the arrangement, with the number of new subscribers obtained by each. Shall there not be a little generous emulation to help forward the struggling cause of religious freedom?

F. E. ABBOT, Editor.

EVERY NOW AND THEN it becomes necessary for us to remind our many kind correspondents of our absolute inability to write many letters. To attempt it would totally prevent the fulfilment of pressing and immediate duties; and we trust that no one will infer intentional neglect, much less any failure of the respect due to the writers. The day has not hours enough, however rashly the night is shortened, to do justice to our correspondents. Will they not, one and all, do us the justice of excusing the silence we cannot possibly help?

THIS POST-CARD, dated Ann Arbor, November 16, is very pertinent to the questions raised by Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith and Mr. B. F. Underwood: "Mr. Underwood's question might be answered, in part, by leaving out the and and putting it: 'Why is unchastity venal in one sex, not in the other?' For the rest, an answer might be found in the proverb, 'It is a wise child that knows its own father.' Unknown and irresponsible parentage, not domestic tyranny, is at the bottom of the difference. In fact, most questions of social ethics turn more or less on that of population,—which is the last, I suppose, that radicals will ever consent to take up.—A."

THE ESSAY of Hon. Elizur Wright, read at Rochester and published a fortnight ago in THE INDEX, has excited so much admiration that several correspondents have urged its publication in pamphlet form. Col. Charles D. Miller, of Geneva, N.Y., writes: "Enclosed is $1.00, for which send equivalent in INDEX of 15th instant, containing Elizur Wright's article—a 'State Paper.'" The Directors of the National Liberal League had already deliberated on the republication of this masterly essay in pamphlet form, and would have taken this step immediately if other and imperative demands on the treasury had not compelled delay. Cannot this delay be obviated by the liberality of appreciative readers?

THE MORAL CLIMATE.

Among the most potent causes affecting the peculiar character and social development of races, modern science reckons the influences of climate. Neither in extreme cold nor in extreme heat have those races been developed to which civilization owes its origin; they have flourished chiefly in the temperate zone. The length and rigor of Arctic winters depress the intellectual life of the tribes which inhabit the far North, by compelling them to struggle desperately for a bare subsistence, and forbidding that accumulation of wealth and that consequent enjoyment of leisure which are indispensable to mental productivity. So, also, in the far South, Nature discourages the intellectual evolution of mankind, though in a very different manner; the prodigal exuberance of the soil forestalls the necessity of labor to procure food, while the high temperature renders clothing and house-shelter comparatively useless; hence the mind lacks stimulus, inventiveness finds no scope for its achievements, and man is content to lead an almost purely animal life, being freed from the stern pressure of those wants which in less favored regions compel him to mental alertness and fertility of contrivance. It is only in those parts of the globe in which labor is absolutely necessary, yet is easily able to provide more than is required for immediate consumption, that wealth accumulates, leisure becomes possible, and civilization appears. Not only in these ways, but equally in many others, climate plays an enormously important part in human evolution; and some eminent thinkers, like Dr. Draper, are inclined to consider it the chief or even the sole factor in producing the peculiar characteristics of different races. Without going to this extreme, or overlooking the concurrent action of other causes, it remains true that physical climate exerts an influence on human nature altogether unsuspected by those who refer creation to the arbitrary "will of God."

Now physical climate finds its analogue in subtler and finer conditions than those affecting the temperature or humidity of the atmosphere, the relative duration of the seasons, the configuration of the earth's surface, the annual rain-fall, the fertility of the soil, etc., etc. There is a moral climate, so to speak, created by the human institutions into the midst of which men are born—the human environment which surrounds us all with prepotent social influences, yet of which we think as little as we reflect on the air we breathe or the sunshine we enjoy. Infinitely more than we imagine are our characters shaped and our destinies determined by these things of which we are scarcely conscious.

By far the larger part of the opinions we hold, of the sentiments we are stirred by, of the ideals we aim at, come to us by inheritance as naturally and as inevitably as the cut of our faces or the color of our hair. We are born into them; we seldom think our way out of them; if we do, it is only in consequence of exceptional mental vigor and perhaps at the cost of a battle with our surroundings which may easily end in the sacrifice of much that we hold most dear.

For example, the public opinion of our own age and country operates upon us all with tremendous and yet invisible power; it exerts a pressure upon the mind which is never relaxed at any moment, and which, though it may be and often is resisted, tells all the same upon the quality of our inward life. The expenditure of the very energy with which we brace ourselves to resist it exhausts, impoverishes, saddens,—ennobles in some directions and deteriorates in others,—destroys the harmony and rounded beauty of a natural development, as the trees along the southern shore of Lake Erie are blown permanently out of shape by the prevailing wind, conquerors in the struggle though they are.

The moral environment is well-nigh omnipotent in this coercive influence over the individual; it constitutes a spiritual climate from which he can in no-wise escape; few indeed (the universe be praised that some such can be found) possess vitality enough to maintain the rights of an independent individuality in healthiness and happiness, and to shape their own lives and characters in obedience to an ideal that transcends and contradicts its mighty moulding influences. He who can do this without being fatally warped in the process is a natural miracle. Failures to succeed in the attempt strew the ground in all directions, appearing in the eccentricities, follies, follies, the extravagances and conceits and miserable moral distortions of many who essay to be reformers. They are not necessarily to blame; they are only spiritual consumptives, out of harmony with their immediate moral environment, and of natures not powerful enough to bring themselves into harmony with that nobler moral environment of the future which they are yet vaguely and yearningly striving to apprehend. "In the world, and yet not of it," because inhabiting that superior realm of ideas and ideals of which the world of to-day is only a stammering prophecy—of how few souls, alas, and yet how great, is that the just biography!

Few as they are, even this poor world of to-day knows enough to love them as a dog loves his human friend, with dumb, beseeching eyes full of unutterable things; laying his patient head on his master's knee and waiting for the caress with a pathos of wistful longing that moves even to tears. Ah, there is something in this humanity of ours—eternally hungry for that which appears not, and trudging painfully after the Golden Age that flies before it like the horizon—which looks up into the vastitudes of this universe with all the speechless eloquence of that poor dog, and mutely testifies of a climate in which it might indeed grow to be something more than canine. The dream of that climate is one which refuses to be dissipated, even under the exorcisms of an exultant prose-philosophy—refuses even to be shamed out of existence by the Orthodoxy that pretends to interpret it with all the assurance of Joseph before Pharaoh, and that would fain break its solemn silence with a hideous dissonance of devils and gold-harps, shrieks of the damned and eternal psalm-singing of the saved—aye, refuses to be vulgarized and put to flight even by the charlatanism of impostors who have learned the thrifty trick of trading on it, and do their miserable best to make honest people turn away from it with disgust as a device of sharpers and knaves. But it is a dream which abides, and will abide so long as characters now and then appear among men whose presence is a living proof of a Moral Climate far finer and purer than any social environment known to history or experience hitherto.

ABOUT JAPAN.

Professor Clark, of Amherst, Mass., has made a visit to Japan and is improving his opportunities to tell what he thinks of the country. The Professor does not hesitate to pronounce the people barbarians, and concludes that all they need is Christianity (which they are all ready to accept as soon as offered) to advance them to the perfections of our civilization. Of course we should not presume to question this encouraging and confident view of the case with one who is so well qualified to know what he affirms. And yet we must confess that, according to his showing, barbarism is better than we have been accustomed to suppose.

"It is a very easy thing," the Professor says, "to earn a living there in eight hours a day." Evidently our labor-reformers will have to dispense with this plank in their platform, if they emigrate to Japan. Is it not a sign of barbarism that it is there? "The Japanese," continues the Professor, "are the most contented people in the world. They have brought farming to great perfection, though they know nothing of the science of farming. The finest gardening can be seen there. They work the precious metals in a most beautiful manner. They make $40,000,000 worth of silk yearly, and spin and weave it by hand. They make a varnish of the poison sumac that will stand hot alcohol, but yet they know nothing of chemistry. They use no meat but chicken, but have all kinds of vegetables. They get forty bushels of wheat and sixty bushels of rice per acre. They can beat the world in grafting and in the planting and growing of forest trees. There is no people so capable of putting out of their heart every bit of conceit. If anybody can teach them anything, they want to learn it." That is not so bad, after all, for barbarians.

In another address, Professor Clark further informs us that he believes "this people are to exert a mighty influence in the evangelization of the world. They believe in eight hundred thousand gods. The Mikado is the vicegerent of the gods to save the people from their sins." Orthodox Christianity holds there are three gods,—or four if we count his Satanic majesty. The Japanese, it appears, are much better provided for. This, we remember, was the argument of one of these pagan people to the missionary who wished to convert him. The doctrine that the Mikado is the vicegerent of the gods to save the people from their sins, or the consequences of them, would seem to be very suggestive of the Christian atonement, and justifies in some degree the assurance of the Professor that they are prepared for the reception of Christianity. "All who have known Japanese in this country," he says, "can testify to their wonderfully genial natures and the regard for right which they habitually put in practice. During all my intercourse with Japanese students, I never heard any complaints of immorality; their conduct has always been exceedingly correct, and all their instructors have attested to their disposition to do nothing they knew was wrong."

This is certainly quite confounding testimony in regard to these barbarians. We should think that Japan must be the paradise of teachers and professors, when we consider the insubordinations which this class have frequently to contend with from those under their charge,—the pranks, annoyances, and insults which they are prone to perpetrate upon their instructors, and the cruel hazing upon their companions, and the immorality which often prevails in our schools and colleges; the indifference to and neglect of their opportunities. We are not sure but that it might be well to send some of these young students of Japan to our educational institutions as missionaries to those in pursuit of knowledge within them; of due respect for proper authority, for character, and good behavior. There is no doubt but good would come of it, if it were possible to forget that they are barbarians and we are Christians. But that is something which could not be expected. How could it? The Professor says of these young students with respect to temperance: "They smoked very much, and often, a peculiar pipe; but when told that it was a useless, foolish habit, the smoking-room in the new college at Bappro for the use of the students became vacant and unused, and no more smoking was seen. The same is true of their habit of drinking sake, or rice beer, which is drank extensively, but not commonly to excess." Anti-tobacco and anti-intoxicating liquor societies, it appears from this, are likely to find but small occasion for work or enthusiasm among these barbarians, as compared with what they find among Christians. It would seem, in view of this, advisable for them to cultivate as little association with Christians as possible, since (according to very reliable report) the influence of Christian civilization in such countries has been to increase rather than diminish these vices.

"These are the men," the Professor remarks, "of noble aspirations and of great capacity, who above all other people are destined to aid in Christianizing China; for the educated Japanese read the Oriental languages readily, and then are willing to perform whatever is right according to the light they have."

It is an interesting matter, for speculation, admitting that these barbarians are as ready for Christianity as it is claimed, whether they would be any better for receiving it. We are sorry to aver that we suspect there is here and there a Christian in good and regular church standing who is not disposed to practice the right according to the light he has. This seems at least to be the explanation of such pious frauds as Winslow, Gilman, and others of their type. The Japanese, we are told, show no extravagance in building their temples. In this respect it is clear they have much to learn from us. If they should become Christians, we have no doubt they would begin to improve their religious architecture, and learn the art of building tall-spired and elegantly furnished churches without anything to pay for them.

Among the principles of their religion are the following: "1st. Thou shalt honor the gods and love thy country. 2d. Thou shalt clearly understand the principles of heaven and the duty of man." Of course no further proof is necessary that the Japanese are barbarians; and, as Christianity has nothing else left for its energies and resources, perfection having been attained within its own dominion, it is very proper it should invade that of others and begin at once to convert them. It will be rather disappointing, though, if it should turn out at last after all the expenditure devoted to the effort that Japan should prefer its own religion, as has been the case generally in respect to other countries in which an incalculable amount of zeal and money have been spent in the same worthy enterprises; or if, as has also been the case, the last condition of the converted people should prove to be worse than the first.

Let it be understood that the foregoing casts no reflection upon and implies no distrust of the introduction of railroads, telegraphs, and schools, and such missionary agencies of our civilization in those countries. The Professor seems to attach but a secondary importance to these. The burden of his plea for these benighted people is in the interest of Orthodox Christianity, which we should consider of so little value to them that it would not be a serious loss, if indeed it would not be most fortunate, if it could be omitted altogether. D. H. C.

EXTRACTS AND NOTES.

"We have warned the people repeatedly that the Supreme Court of Heaven was in session; that the All-seeing Eye was fully cognizant of the affairs of men. Verily, 'things done in secret' are being 'proclaimed upon the housetops.' Where are the Tweeds, the Winslows, the Halls, the Spencers, the Gilmans? These men, who stood high in society, several of them church-members, are now known as criminals. The sifting is still going on in all grades of life. The Great Day of Judgment is even now. Sins in high places have been winked at too long. 'Beware, lest ye fall,' therefore, should be declaimed from every rostrum in the land."—Banner of Light, Oct. 27.

The Religio-Philosophical Journal evidently thinks too many Spiritualists are apathetic regarding, or even disposed to cover up, fraud practiced under the name of "mediumship"; and, after quoting the above paragraph, comments as follows:—

"Yes, we think we have heard about that court. It is a very just and impartial court, and there is no appeal from it. That All-seeing Eye, too, how handy to have it prying around into the affairs of our Orthodox neighbors. It is such a comfort to feel that our Christian friends can be brought up with a round turn by this Eye and turned over to the 'Court of Heaven' for trial.

"As Spiritualists, some of us have no use for this Court or that Eye. We are on a more advanced plane. We acknowledge allegiance to the 'Higher Law' (whatever that is), and feel that right and wrong are only relative terms, and that all the mean, dirty tricks, frauds, and swindles we perpetrate, are necessary to our development. Verily, 'things done in secret' (down cellar and through trap-doors for instance) are being 'proclaimed upon the housetops'; but then the religious opinions of a rascal make a great difference in our judgment of him; if he is a Spiritualist, why, 'the poor fellow, is not responsible'; 'low, undeveloped spirits have misled him'; or he is being 'persecuted' by the wicked unbelievers."

Tickell wrote on the death of Addison the following lines:—

"He taught us how to live, and, O how high,
The price of knowledge! taught us how to die."

A Western friend, some time ago, handed me the following lines, written for his father's epitaph. They are in my opinion an improvement on the above quoted:—

"A man he was, whatever his fault might be,
Who worshipped justice, loved humanity;
The world his country, all mankind his kin,
His love included all who dwelt therein.
How to live right with steadfast aim he tried,
And recked but little in what mood he died."

Says Albert Barnes, in his able and candid Lectures on Christianity:—

"The dominion of the Koran is the dominion of a book,—a silent, still, speechless thing, that has no will, no armies, no living energies, no chain spot, no cannon, and yet it exerts a power which the monarch and the conqueror never wield. It lives, too, when monarchs and conquerors die. It rules advancing generations, and subdues their wills, too. It moulds their opinions, leads them to temples of worship, and restrains their passions with a power which monarchs never wielded. It guides them in life, and is the last book which they consult or call to remembrance on the bed of death."

This is the sort of argument which the Christian clergy make use of to show that the Bible must be a superhuman production. Will it not apply quite as well to the Koran?

A friend who has been to the Black Hills writes me thus:—

"The Black Hills are the biggest fraud ever imposed upon a financially distressed public. The thousands of impecunious fortune-seekers who have visited that country, and who, like myself, have left it forever in disgust, will probably be glad to back that opinion. Nature plays as many pranks as anybody. She has sometime or other 'been on a drunk,' and in a spirit of diabolical levity she blew out a little 'dust' and a few patches of gold-bearing quartz and scattered it in spots over a rough, obscure corner of Dakota, in order to play a wicked joke on the American people and some John Chinamen. Her hand-maid, old dame Fortune, directed the steps of a few of her favorites to all of those 'spots' that were of any value, and the wealth was all gobbled up before I and several thousands of others had got our carpet-bags packed. The joke cost me about $600 in hard cash."

A correspondent of the Investigator writes:—

"I know sturdy old infidels who have been about all their lives with 'T. P.' on their shoulders as a chip for some Christian to knock off. When the belligerent Christian comes along and does it, then follows one of those heated controversies, which are always the same, and are nothing but a 'jaw' about the merits and demerits of Thomas Paine. I know of one fighting Christian who used to end such talks very effectively with the contemptuous expression, 'Oh! Tom Paine is your only stock in trade.'"

"The constant prominence which we give to the name in our publications tends to confirm this feeling among our opponents. The time was when the constant and virulent attacks upon the man and his works, from all sides, rendered this necessary for his defence," in every issue of our infidel publications. But that old time has passed by. The intelligent portion of the Christian people and press have of late years refrained from such assaults, and have seemed more disposed to recognize in some measure his service to humanity. With this view, it would seem useless that with every issue of our papers there should be from one to half-a-dozen articles about Thomas Paine."

The writer of the above evidently thinks that justice to Paine and appreciation of his services do not require that he shall be put forward as the great representative of freethought to-day. In this respect he is unquestionably correct.

B. F. U.

Communications.

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE MOVEMENT.

THE CATTARAUGUS COUNTY RATIFICATION MEETING.—MR. STANTON'S LECTURE ON "OUR GIRLS," AND SOME ENCOURAGING WORDS FROM HER.—WHAT OUR FRIENDS ARE DOING AND WHAT IS REQUIRED OF THEM.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It looks now as if our Liberal League ratification meeting, to be held at Randolph, Dec. 8 and 9, would be a large one. There are a number of very intelligent and earnest freethinkers residing at Randolph, and they are making liberal arrangements to accommodate all who may attend. A number of private houses will entertain visitors free, and the hotels will give board for a dollar per day. Judge McCormick and Dr. T. L. Brown have agreed to be present; and we also expect Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York city, and W. S. Bell, of New Bedford, Mass. Elder F. W. Evans, of Mount Lebanon, has also been invited, and it would add much to the interest of the occasion if he should accept the invitation. Large meetings attract much more attention than small ones, and I hope all residents in Western New York and Western Pennsylvania who indorse the Rochester Liberal League platform will attend this gathering.

The citizens of this town a few evenings since enjoyed a grand literary entertainment, listening to a lecture from Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton. The subject was "Our Girls," and it was a lecture full of food for thought. It was, of course, delivered from her liberal religious standpoint, and contained many telling hits against old Orthodox notions. It is encouraging to learn that such radical thoughts are everywhere received by the people with evident approbation.

After Mrs. Stanton left here, she had occasion to write me about her trunk that was left behind, and I will take the liberty to quote a few lines from her letter:—

"That paper of Ellsbur Wright, which I have just read, ought to be printed in tract form and scattered through our land. It is grand. My little INDEX follows me from point to point. It has travelled in my wake from Maine to Texas. It cheers many a lonely hour for me, waiting at depots and in dreary hotels. What a blessed peace that mind enjoys, emancipated from the gloom and mystery, the traditions and superstitions of the popular religion! Blessed are they who through ostracism and persecution have been the pillars of light to lead some of us through the wilderness of doubt to the happy land! I feel highly honored to see my name in the list of Vice-Presidents of the National Liberal League; but I have not done enough for liberal religion to merit the distinction. The subject grows on me every day in magnitude and importance."

Mrs. Stanton says, in relation to Mrs. Neymann, of New York, and the paper she read before the Liberal Congress:—

"I shall take the earliest opportunity to make the acquaintance of Mrs. Neymann. I have enjoyed reading her paper in THE INDEX."

I am pleased to inform the readers of THE INDEX that a number of Liberal League State sub-committees are already appointed, and in many places the question of organizing local Liberal Leagues is being agitated. But I am sure our cause demands more energetic action from its friends than it is receiving. To get organized one thousand Leagues this year, we must organize about eighty-three a month. Can we do that next month? Reader, commence the work in your own town.

H. L. GREEN.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., Nov. 20, 1877.

THE COMING RELIGION.

"Great Pan is not dead! He may have sent up a cry of despair, as he saw the doors of the Temple of Humanity closed upon the world and sealed by the dreamers of the Orient; but he has only been slumbering these many centuries. New prophets are now heard in the land. A new evangel is ringing in the ears of man. No signs are seen; no wonders talked of; no miracles performed; and yet all is not well with the followers of the lowly Jesus. They tremble at every sound; they peer anxiously into every thoughtful face; they scan the titles of books as they drop moist from the press; they organize 'sham battles' to try the strength of their defences; they provoke discussion that they may discover the mettle of their opponents; they proclaim aloud their perfect trust in their scheme of salvation; they protest they fear naught, though not thereunto interrogated. All is not well with them! Great Pan has turned over in his sleep! 'Universal humanity' is showing off the torpor of its nineteen centuries rest."

Such thoughts as these flitted through my mind as I entered Standard Hall last Sunday, and sat down on the outskirts of the vast assemblage that filled the auditorium. One would have imagined himself in the presence of a great social reunion. The loud murmur of greetings, the glad, smiling faces, the cordial grasps of the hand, the inquiries, the recognitions, the friendly glances, the red cheeks and bright autumn costumes, the anxious demand for seats, the quick, restless movement of gloved hands seeking to add grace to attitudes, the comfortable, easy, and at-home appearance of the thousand gathered there, proclaimed at once the existence of an admirably earnest and sympathetic understanding. What are these worshippers? you ask yourself. Is this a religious society? Is it not a concert or a social gathering? Surely they do not mean this to take the place of "church"? Why, yes, it must be so; for there, the organ is sending forth its silver tones, first soft and sweet, then loud and louder. All is hushed and quiet in the hall below. It surely does look like church. Suddenly a strong chorus of male voices fairly leaps upon the air. The effect is grand. Between the pauses the silence in the hall is almost painful. The assemblage now wears a look of sober earnestness. Not a hand moves; not a chair creaks. It surely does look like church.

But see, a short, vigorously-built, broad-browed, quick-spoken man of about thirty-eight, with a pale but pleasant, bearded face of the Jewish type, has entered the hall and taken his seat upon the platform. As the chorus ends, he steps forward and looks the assemblage calmly in the eyes for a moment. If respect can be measured by the silence with which they awaited their teacher's first word, that respect must border closely upon veneration. In fact, during his entire address, the greater eloquence was among the listeners. Not that Prof. Adler is not an earnest and forcible speaker, but his auditors outdo him both in force and earnestness. However, he has the "making" of an eloquent speaker in him, and only needs practice. As it was, he clung closely to his reading-desk with one hand and rarely raised the other; but once or twice the fire within overcame the bonds of diffidence, and the speaker's hand fell hammer-like upon the desk, clenching the argument most effectually.

He spoke of the progress of the liberal cause, the decay of the old faith, struck hard at the dogmas of hell, sin, total depravity, et id genus omne. He showed how intellectual progress had been impeded; he drew attention to the pitiful condition of American universities managed in the interests of Protestant denominations; praised Prussia for her liberty of research in all the scientific questions of the day; sneered at "Christian geology and astronomy"—as well he might,—and called upon the members of his society to entrust their children to him for religious culture—not in the myths and superstitions of orthodoxy, but in the bright and glorious principles of morality, and ended his discourse by calling upon his followers to give up all thoughts of retreat and to press on to victory, which surely awaited them.

Prof. Adler's society is no longer an experiment. Orthodox Judaism will have to confess this. Nay, more; the Orthodox, of all religions, unless they be wilful-blind, cannot deny that another star has gone up, this time not in the East, but in the Western sky, and that, if they will but follow this star, it will surely come and stand over the "Temple of Humanity."

INGERSOLL LOCKWOOD.

FROM A NOTE-BOOK.

In the best kind of teaching, the truth taught absorbs all the attention and the teacher is forgotten; that is a small banner of truth that does not hide the man that holds it up.

Stating a question well is half the answer.

A sound effort is heard farthest when musical, and so the most effective form of truth is poetry.

The imperfection of all attempts, so far, to explain and unify Nature is, that they take note of too few principles; and so in vain try to thread the facts we see on the few lines of philosophical connection as yet discovered. A tree nowhere in its structure presents either a straight line or a continuous curve; yet trunk, limbs, boughs, and leaves embody geometry. We must wait some centuries for an application of Euclid to botany.

Those unfortunate men who, in early life, assume the vows and offices of dogmatic religion, whose tenets their minds afterward outgrow, may be likened to young animals captured and caged. At first kindly nurtured, theirs is a pleasant state; but soon they find the cage a cage, and the ability to get food outside of it gone.

How much truth there is in that early similitude of knowledge as a tree! Whoever comprehends it has the heart of liberty in him. Knowledge does not increase like a honeycomb, cell simply added to cell; but like an oak whose every year of growth implies not only addition but complete transformation of structure. Nothing is fixed but the axis, from whence the branches and boughs spread as if they felt they had all space to expand into. A strippling a season or so old, is beautiful in its way; but, would it be wise to uproot it, shelve it in a museum, and declare it to represent a finality as to oak-possibilities?

Confession, when wrong-doing has been serious or mean, should not always be made. However sincere repentance may be, any one to whom the whole of a tale of sin has been told, can never get over a secret repugnance to the sinner. It is a help in trying to amend that others think an offender better than he is. The corrosions of shame and remorse are often usefully increased by the retention of the story of wrong; when confession has been made, a relief comes merely from that, which should not be earned so cheaply.

Agreeable, intelligible expression, embraces the power of thought; that is, increases the effective percentage of it. If a thinker of poor delivery or obscure manner improves his style, as far as others are concerned, it is as if he thought twice as much or twice as well.

No one now who demurs at theism, but admits the great usefulness and value of an ideal personification of the universe in its intelligent aspect,—if this be truthfully done with loyalty to fact. The essence of the atheist's (or agnostic's) complaint is, that the ideas of God which are held even by the most refined religions, do not correspond with the ideas of Nature which a wide and judicial survey of the universe gives a student of it.

The pride of an interpreter sometimes rises above that of a lawgiver. I have known a spectator say of a sunset that it was tawdry, when sunsets should certainly create the canons of taste. This reminds me of the ultra-Sabbatical Scotch dame who, when referred to the Gospel which tells how Jesus plucked ears of corn on the Sabbath, said, "Well, I never thought any the better of him for that."

The play of vice against vice is an interesting one to watch. The avaricious man would like to be ostentatious but for the expense. Conspiracies and impure sins are largely restrained by want of confidence. "Possible," like "choice," and other terms, is one that implies human ignorance. From a necessarily imperfect knowledge of forces at work in a particular case, we imagine certain consequences and call them possibilities; but the actual past, present, and future are all there is of truth.

Friend M. is a very sensible man. He makes good verses; yet I knew him intimately a year before he said a word about them.

The education that merely imparts information is defective. Above that is the training of the judgment; of the power of testing and balancing evidence; of detecting fallacies and sophistry. The intellect is not a mere cupboard, but an instrument for the discovery of truth to be vitally assimilated.

Instruction, intellectual and moral, is usually given too soon in life, so that matters of transcendent importance lose their interest before the reason which is needed to grasp them matures. One of the compensations for an education coming late in life, by one's own effort or otherwise, is, that the wonderfulness and suggestiveness of truths come to the mind undampened by any early and useless familiarity.

As the clergy deem the truths they teach of supreme value, and admit that they are not easily understood, why do they not leave children alone, and submit their doctrines only to those who have reached full intelligence? If they have confidence in their "truths," this plan might produce the "lively faith" in their flocks so earnestly sought. Or, would this postponement not have other and less agreeable results?

Friend F. looks at the system of things only through his own immediate atmosphere, and is often bitterly pessimistical. When he loses money or has a quarrel with anybody, his friends say, "Now the universe will catch it."

We cannot imagine additions to space or time, but we can to matter and motion. Space is unequally occupied by matter; and if all space were as full as some space is, there would be more matter than there is now. So with motion; some matter, as the equators of the spheres, moves more swiftly than other portions; if all moved as rapidly, there would be more motion than at present exists. From this line of thinking, as we can add ideally to matter and motion they cannot be infinite in amount, though diffused through infinite space.

Self-consciousness is the great mystery which baffles inquiry. I make this query about it with much diffidence: May it not be that part of the mind is conscious of another part, and not all of all,—so that, strictly speaking, there may be no self-consciousness, and that what is so-called does not differ in kind from consciousness of eternal things? G. I.

MONTREAL, October, 1877.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XIX.

In the review of Spencer's Principles of Sociology, by Thaddeus B. Wakeman (republished in THE INDEX of July 12, 1876), we have from Mr. Wakeman an epitome of scientific classification, from his latest and present point of view. There is in it, mere epitome as it is, an important advance upon anything contained in his larger work, Extension and Enlargement of the Positive Classification of the Sciences; and this we may take as the latest bulletin from the grand corps of scientific advance, on this subject of classification. It is introduced incidentally, to found an objection to Mr. Spencer's treatment of the doctrine of evolution, and the whole passage containing the epitome in question is as follows:—

"1. The point of the first objection appears from glance at the common or positive classification of the sciences, which may be condensed as follows:—

1. THE MINERAL KINGDOM. { Astronomy, 8.
Physics, 7.
Chemistry, 6.
(Protistology.)
2. THE VEGETABLE KINGDOM. { Vegetal Physiology, 5.
(Botany.)
3. THE ANIMAL KINGDOM. { Animal Physiology, 4.
(Zoology.)
4. THE HUMAN KINGDOM. { Sociology, 3.
Morality, (Ethics) 2.
Psychology (Education) 1.

"Now, it is claimed that the great laws of gravity, correlation, and chemical combination make the synthesis of the mineral, i. e., the material kingdom and its special sciences, and that evolution has no place there; that "stones do not grow," and that fluids and gases are like them in that respect; that the crystals and vapors are formed, but never evolved from each other; that the attempt to apply this law to inanimate matter, is an attempt to biologize the cosmos, just as materialism is the reverse error of applying the laws and properties of matter to vital and mental phenomena."

What Mr. Wakeman here calls the common or positive classification means Comte's classification as expounded and improved upon by himself (Wakeman); and the point that I refer to, as advance, is this reference of the grand divisions or groupings of the sciences, to the three (or four) kingdoms of Nature. Of course this relates only to the natural or concrete sciences, omitting the abstract sciences (logic and mathematics); but within this range it has the advantage of great simplicity and naturalness. Just this salient point of common knowledge, the division of Nature into three kingdoms, familiarly known by the whole world, is the most available point of departure, in the practical education of the world into higher scientific discriminations; and it is a stroke of genius with Wakeman to have brought back all the more high sounding, more profound, or more specific distributions of science, to this simple and practical starting-point. But it is not this alone, nor even mainly, for which I would commend it. The point of still greater importance is, that it virtually plants the whole business of classification upon the secure and appropriate basis of scientific analogy. The showing of this tendency or fact will be deferred for a more special treatment, to another article. At present, and as preliminary, I wish to call attention to the two very different orders of mind which are dealing with science, and with this subject of classification, and to the results which come from that difference.

The two classes of thinkers referred to may be called the simple-minded and the figurative-minded people. The simple-minded, among scientists and thinkers, will take naturally to departmental, descriptive, and general science; the figurative-minded to "aspects," comparative, and special science (with a new and transcendental generalization growing out of the minutest special and particular). The simple-minded people, whether in common life or in science, are far the more numerous. They are the commoners.

"The primrose, by the river's brim
A yellow primrose was to him,
And it was nothing more."

The figurative-minded are those who span the distance between one simple observation or one department and another, and trace resemblances in the midst of differences, and so trace out and delight in likenesses and analogies. They are comparatively few in number, and are called transcendental and incomprehensible. This term, transcendental, is not confined to philosophy, but is invading science also. Comparative anatomy is called, also, Transcendental Anatomy. Hickok speaks freely and frequently of transcendental science. The simple-minded or departmental scientists are apt to suspect the figurative-minded and comparative of being visionary and unsafe; the latter to despise the former as narrow-minded and commonplace. Cuvier stands representative of common or descriptive science in the department of natural history; Oken of comparative or transcendental science in the same sphere. Cuvier has led the great army of natural history investigators, and Oken has fallen into neglect; and yet, Oken had a far deeper insight into Nature than Cuvier. It is said that for a little time Cuvier became the disciple of Oken, but the analogical atmosphere was too attenuated for him to breathe long, and he sank back to the more commonplace range of observation and thought,—better fitted for the earlier stage of the development of any science. Oken was before his time, and did not fully understand himself. Scientific analogy was intuited rather than discovered by him; but his fundamental thought was the larger truth, and through universology it will be reproduced and precipitated. Agassiz said, speaking of Oken, that his thought dominated Germany for thirty years, but that analogy is not (was not) yet sufficiently understood to be made the basis of classification. He always believed that it would be so understood in the future. Richard Owen and St. George Mivart may be mentioned as living representatives of the transcendental school in science, the subdominant school of to-day, but destined to be the dominant school of a later stage of scientific development.

There remains to be mentioned a still smaller school of scientists, hardly yet distinctly defined to the popular apprehension, but paramount in rank to all others—Integralists, those who are equally at home upon the common plane of science, and upon the transcendental plane; who know and clearly discriminate the difference between them, but who accept and aid to develop both, and out of their conjunction and inter-relationship and inter-action, to evolve the total fabric, and to construct the completed temple of the sciences. Integralism is still more largely, if not more closely, allied with universological methods than comparology, and cannot be adequately attained to by any other method. Aimed at by the omission of scientific analogy, and so of universal comparology or transcendental science, the result can only be, at the best, pseud-integralism; analogous with the best music which can be acquired and exhibited without the knowledge of "harmony."

Scientific classification, to be complete, must, it is clear then, cover the whole ground. A classification of mere departmental and descriptive science is only a basis, foundation (platform or pedestal) for transcendental science, as the main elevation; and then for integral science, first as the dome and then as the entirety of the completed temple. Departmental and descriptive science give the mere facts and classifying laws of science; comparative or transcendental science gives the meaning of the facts and the rationale of the laws; or the soul of the facts and the reason of the order of their correlations. And, in fine, integralism colligates and makes entire the whole structure; or adds that element of unity, which in art, is so much insisted on. It is this which furnishes the philosophy of the sciences; or, in a word, sciento-philosophy.

Observe, in the next place, that departmental-and-descriptive science deals, in predominance, with the qualitative properties of things; weight, color, sound, taste, smell, form, etc., those aspects of being which a child would first observe and distinguish (with the addition of mere count); and that comparative-and-transcendental science (as developed universologically) deals, in preponderance, with the quantitative properties of things,—taking its departure wholly from unism, dualism, and trinitism, the qualitative extracts of the primal quantities, one, two, and three. Now it is Spencer who has clearly pointed out the fact (exceedingly important, though as yet hardly put to any use) that science progresses, and that its development is characterized by its transition from the predominance of qualitative to the predominance of quantitative considerations.

It may now be said, in universological technicality, that qualitisim is the naturism of science (and unismal); that quantitism is the scientism of science (and dualism), and that qualita-quantitism (or the conjunction, inter-relationship, and inter-action or mutual modulation of qualitisim and quantitism) is the artism of science (and trinitism).

It must not be understood that because Spencer has discovered and emphasized the higher grade and rank, in science, of quantitative considerations, that he has, therefore, discovered or distinctly perceived that new and grander and totally distinct development of science (comparative and transcendental) which is wholly derived from the essential attributes of quantity (embodied representatively in the first three numbers one, two, and three.) On the contrary, he has wholly failed to seize the spirit even of Oken's elaboration, which is a John the Baptist of this ultimate transcendental comparology. The quantity which Spencer appreciates is still mere quantity; the naturism of quantity; the analogue of mere count, within the naturism of science, as above specified—not the qualitative extract or spirit of quantity—universological—which is the scientism of quantity.

Rigorously speaking, neither Comte nor Spencer nor Wakeman gives any place to comparology. By inextinguishable and overlapping, comparative science, in a lower sense (never in the higher or transcendental sense as here defined), crops out, with all of them; but they must rank, as classifiers, by what they clearly are, by explication; not by what they may chance to seem to be, by implication.

THE IMPOLICY OF REPRESSION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

However widely you dissent from my views and methods of reform, I am sure you agree with me in the faith that conscientious thought, freely expressed, is needed in every community; that what stimulates inquiry and increases knowledge should be encouraged; and that efforts to stifle investigation are unwise and retributive. Twenty years ago next February, in the house of William Lloyd Garrison, 11 Dix Place, Boston, I was inducted into anti-slavery work by that then derided but now justly honored American citizen. Since then, for negro emancipation, peace, woman's enfranchisement, temperance, labor and love reform, I have incessantly worked, at a pecuniary loss which leaves me to-day heavily in debt to special friends, but which gives me assurance that, regardless of self, I have striven earnestly while in this world to make it better. To-day I am held as a criminal under United States law on the complaint, not of one who knows me or favors the beneficent objects to which my life is devoted, but of a person from another State, a prominent exponent of prevailing unreason, who, unable to answer my arguments against social evils, intends to silence me by fines and imprisonment. While lawfully and peacefully at work November 2d in Boston, as I had momentarily left the chair from which I was presiding over a public convention to transact business in an ante-room, a stranger sprang upon me, and, refusing to read a warrant or even give his name, hurried me into a hack, drove swiftly through the streets on a dark, rainy night, and lodged me in jail as a "United States prisoner." Beyond the vague charge of "circulating obscene literature," it was not until the next morning, from another officer who kindly permitted me to read the warrant, that I learned why I was imprisoned, for what, and that the rude stranger was "Anthony Comstock, special agent of the United States Post-Office Department," who even then made no specifications, but kept the books on which the charge was made under his own lock and key until I was arraigned for examination November 13, before Mr. Hallett.

Whether the forms of law can with impunity be overridden in ways by which any citizen might be kidnapped, taken out of the State, to Canada, or thrust into an insane asylum; by whose permit this man personates national authority and supervises our mails in the interest of sectarian intolerance, I will not now inquire. Neither will I ask why the United States clothes with its great powers a "special agent" to interfere with lawful business, and forge signatures to decoy letters, one of which Mr. Comstock wrote me under the name of "E. Edgewell," the following extract from which I printed in The Word, October, as genuine:—

"Press on as you are going, and be sure in the end justice will be done you. It is a long lane that has no turn. You have labored hard, but many eyes have followed your efforts."

Nor will I dwell on the spirit of the man indicated in this extract from a letter written to Hon. C. L. Merriam, M. C., by Mr. Comstock to induce him to vote for the "law" under which he conspires against the liberty and lives of American citizens:—

"There were four publishers on the 2d of last March; to-day three of these are in their graves, and it is charged by their friends that I worried them to death. Be that as it may, I am sure that the world is better off without them."

I will not now multiply facts to show that, masked under Federal law and the sacred forms of religion, we have here incarnate intolerance to which neither pro-slavery savagery, Puritan bigotry, nor High-Church proscription, nothing this side of mediæval inquisitions will furnish a parallel.

When Southrons invaded the freedom of the mails to suppress anti-slavery publications, which they called "incendiary literature," the Union rang with denunciations of the outrage. The same spirit of tyranny which assailed reformers then, now labels exposures of social evil "obscene literature"! Mr. Comstock's attempt to suppress Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly for ventilating clerical "scandal," the disgusting details of which afterwards filled American newspapers; his imprisonment of George Francis Train seven months in Ludlow Street Jail, and of John A. Lant eighteen months in Albany Penitentiary for criticisms of reigning sensualism; his infliction of fines and costs amounting to five thousand dollars, on Dr. E. B. Foote, for publishing physiological facts that all people, young and old, should know; and his recent arrest of D. M. Bennett, editor of the New York Truth Seeker, for "obscenity and blasphemy," should open all eyes to the relentless war he wages upon honest writers and publishers who favor theological and social reform. Twenty years, before the intelligent eyes and pure minds of New England citizens, have I pursued my work unmolested, except by sporadic mobs from the streets which all reformers have to encounter; never before was my ability to use intelligent and chaste language questioned. Now I am gravely arraigned for "obscenity" by a money-seeking exponent of sectarian repression who comes from "nest-hiding" Brooklyn!

My object in writing Cupid's Yokes was to promote discretion and purity in love by bringing sexuality within the domain of reason and moral obligation. As I expressed it on page 17 of the last edition, "I appeal" from the reprehensible sensualism of to-day "to the wiser future which will demand that the reproductive instinct be inspired by intelligence and placed under the dominion of the will." Whatever of truth it contains is above the reach of any court to adjudge. The more they suppress it the louder it will speak. My opinions may be right or wrong; but dearer than the reforms on which I have staked what there is of this world to me; dearer than the loved ones with whom I have the honor to share a home; than the children we rejoice in; than life itself, is my right to seek TRUTH and proclaim it; is the "liberty of unlicensed printing" which, since the days of Milton, by all English-speaking nations has been held in special reverence; is the natural right of American citizens to acquire and impart knowledge which in my person is now assailed. If my liberty and life are needed to teach non-thinking people the sacredness of that right, they will be cheerfully given. But are you willing, Mr. Editor, that the United States Government shall continue to sanction the persecution of opinions to which Mr. Comstock ignobly devotes it? Shall Federal Law, ennobled by the humane impulses of Lincoln, Sumner, and Garrison, by siding with repression become hostile to progress and repulsive to every right-minded citizen? E. H. HEYWOOD.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

So has long been called that prayer which Jesus recommended to his followers, when they asked him to teach them how to pray. If we are to give it any attention, this prayer is certainly entitled at our hands to an unprejudiced, all-sided, fair examination. Such an examination will, I think, lead us to about the following understanding of it, as being, although an under-expression of what the prayer contains, yet accurate as far as it goes.

The prayer is addressed to the Invisible Unity that binds together the phenomena of the universe, and which is felt to be leading them towards the production of right and kindness, and so is called our Father. It is no series of self-seeking requests; but rather a series of aspirations, of desires, expressed in the presence of the Invisible Unity, first for mankind, afterwards for ourselves. One sees this at once, when he considers the character of the opening wishes: they are no petitions for personal gifts. The first, "Hallowed be thy name," is the expression of a desire,—not the desire that men may show a respect for the name of God whenever they hear it mentioned; nor that they may reverence a theological personality; for the whole tendency of Jesus' teachings shows him to have been indifferent to such ideas as these,—but the desire that men may reverence the divine power wherever they see it working. The second wish, "Thy kingdom come," is to say, "Our desire is that the divine rule, the rule of right may dawn on the earth." The third, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," is to say, "We long to see the time when all men shall obey the rule of right."

We now come to the personal desires. The first of these, "Give us this day our daily bread," is no request to a mighty person to hand us down bread out of heaven. Common-sense ought to show any one that it was not spoken, and never was understood in any such sense. It is simply to recognize that the environment, being fitted to and provoking and responding to our efforts, has in the past furnished us a moderate subsistence such as is favorable to the development of character, and to express the hope that the same moderate subsistence will be continued. It recalls the prayer of Agur, which was no doubt familiar to the hearers of Jesus: "Give me, neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full, and deny thee, and say, Who is the Eternal? or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of my God." The real object of desire in both prayers is character; and the thought underlying them is that the favorable medium for the growth of character is a moderate and continued supply; neither poverty with its worry on the one hand, nor flush prosperity on the other.

The next clause, "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors," is to express the desire that our misdoings of the past may be trampled down, put out of sight, their evil effects nullified in our spiritual life; even as we try to put out of sight, turn into good, the injuries that others do us. It is undoubtedly a serious matter for even the most forgiving of us to utter this desire; and to the man who does not wish to conquer his natural revengefulness it of course sounds like mockery. The next clause, "Lead us not into temptation," is the expression of the dread lest such conditions of our environment as those which, occurring in the past, have been the occasion of our doing wrong, should in the future recur to us. This is a dread which one would think any one would feel who had acquired that reasonable distrust of his moral strength which experience should teach most of us. The next clause, "Deliver us from evil," is to say, "We earnestly desire that, if the temptation does come, we may successfully resist it, and not do wrong." The last clause, "For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever and ever," is the expression of that awe which any man of imagination and of sense of grandeur in things outside of himself, must feel in contemplating the universe, and feeling something of its vastness, unity, and orderly march.

The foregoing is an attempt to express in the language of modern exactness (and inadequacy because exactness) the very same feelings which in the original prayer are expressed in the language of poetry and religion. These are feelings which a man to whom good and evil are alike cannot share in; but which it would seem that any man, whatever his views of the philosophy of good and evil, who feels within himself the desire to overcome wrong and to do right, must sympathize with. Such desires, fervently felt, expressed in spontaneous manner by a man who cared nothing for philosophical speculation, in an age when men did not dream of being on their guard against anthropomorphic expressions, but spoke as they found it natural to, inevitably took the apparent form of petition to a person. That quality in this prayer, so far from being its body and substance, is only an accident in expression, and is not the thing to be looked at, which is the feeling that lay below the expression.

RUFUS WEEBS.

SUMMIT, N. J., Nov. 12, 1877.

HAD NO FUN IN HIM.

One of the members of the Methodist Conference, recently held here, was out for a walk at an early hour one morning, and while on Howard Street he encountered a strapping big fellow, who was drawing a wagon to the blacksmith shop.

"Catch hold here and help me down to the shop with this wagon, and I'll buy the whiskey!" called the big fellow.

"I never drink," solemnly replied the good man.

"Well, you can take a cigar."

"I never smoke."

The man dropped the wagon-tongue, looked hard at the member, and asked:—

"Don't you chew?"

"No, sir," was the decided reply.

"You must get mighty lonesome," mused the teamster.

"I guess I'm all right,—I feel first rate."

"I'll bet you even that I can lay you on your back," remarked the teamster. "Come, now, let's warm up a little."

"I never bet."

"Well, let's take each other down for fun, then. You are as big as I am, and I'll give you the under hold."

"I never have fun," solemnly answered the member.

"Well, I'm going to tackle you, any way. Here we go!"

The teamster slid up and endeavored to get a neck hold, but he had only just commenced to fool about when he was lifted clear off the grass, and slammed against a tree-box with such force that he gasped half a dozen times before he could get his breath.

"Now you keep away from me!" exclaimed the minister, picking up his cane.

"Bust me if I don't!" replied the teamster, as he edged off. "What's the use in lying and saying that you didn't have any fun in you, when you're chuck full of it! Blame it! you wanted to break my back, didn't you?"—Detroit Free Press.

POPULAR SUFFRAGE has been put to a singular test in a village of Awa Japan. The neighborhood was harassed by a midnight robber, whom nobody could detect. The head of the hamlet summoned the entire male population under his charge and directed every man to write the name of the person whom he suspected and to deposit the ticket in a box. Fifteen ballots bore the name of Abe Tanibel, the rest being blanks. The man whom everybody distrusted was so overcome with astonishment that he made full confession and went to prison. Never before in the history of popular government was a thief elected with such unanimity.—Tribune.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " " " "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 " " " "	6 " "
" 52 " " " " " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 9 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. E. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Knab, Underwood, Ben, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	1.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 8 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	3.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	5.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONIQUE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDS BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	3.00
The Descent of Man. 1 vol.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 8 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	3.50
Wife and Wisdom.....	1.50
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
KYANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Spahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	1.25
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 4 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREEN'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Ore of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) 'Their Wedding Journey'.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	3.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopes the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Regebot. I.	1.

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	3.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Mandesley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints. Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LEITCH'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.50
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	6.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	4.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848. Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	3.00
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols. each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	1.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROP. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Bonaparte. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLXV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truist Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	4.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	1.50
BENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.25
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectral Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	1.50
SCIENCE PRIMER: 1. Introductory. By E. H. Bailey, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Boece.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., readable cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Unions of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Station; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Payne.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip.....	1.50
Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Remond, and Love the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELLA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Forests.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Maine.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.00
Vols. II, IV, and VI, each.....	.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Mon.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Successes and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Panics. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX.

221 Washington St., Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1877.

WHOLE No. 415.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

REV. S. W. SAMPLE, of Meadville, Pa., wrote as follows to Mr. Green, in response to an invitation to speak at Randolph: "As I believe in the principles of the National Liberal League with all my heart and mind and soul and strength, it is with pleasure that I accept your kind invitation."

SUBSCRIBERS in New York State will bear in mind the approaching convention of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League at Randolph, December 8 and 9. It is called to ratify the Rochester platform, and will probably be a large gathering. Elder F. W. Evans, of Mt. Lebanon, N. Y., Rev. S. W. Sample, of Meadville, Pa., Judge R. S. McCormick, of Franklin, Pa., Mr. D. M. Bennett, of New York City, Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, N. Y., Mr. H. L. Green, of Salamanca, and others, are engaged as speakers; and Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York City, Mr. W. S. Bell, of New Bedford, Mass., and E. D. Stark, Esq., of Cleveland, O., are hoped for.

MR. JOHN C. BUNDY, manager of the Religio-Philosophical Journal of Chicago, wrote thus to Mr. H. L. Green on the twelfth of November: "The Liberal League movement has my hearty support. I shall do all I can to further its work. Care will have to be used not to antagonize the thousands and ten of thousands of very liberal souls in the church-fold who can be made to work in the movement at the right time, if the thing is properly handled." There is no little wisdom in these words; only let it be remembered that "the thing will be handled" by the liberals themselves as individuals, since a free platform gives them the opportunity to be antagonistic or catholic, just as they choose. We hope they will all learn to choose to sink their irrelevant differences out of sight.

EVERY SUCH experiment as that described below, in the Tribune of November 30, should be watched with anxious hope by all who have learned that the moral education of children, so conducted as to harmonize with scientific truth, is disastrously neglected by liberal parents and guardians everywhere: "Professor Felix Adler has established a school which he intends shall be to the Society of Ethical Culture what the Sunday-school is to the Christian Church. The children of his followers are to meet him for instruction on Monday and Tuesday afternoons, for an hour and a half. The boys are to come on Monday and the girls on Tuesday. Professor Adler says he proposes simply to impart unsectarian religious instruction to the children. He will begin his work with studies of religious history and lead his pupils on until they can comprehend the philosophy of ethics. Professor Adler says that he is trying an experiment, and he declined to admit visitors to the class Tuesday. About a dozen Hebrew lads were present."

SAYS THE NEW YORK Tribune of November 30: "St. Ann's Roman Catholic Church, in East Twelfth Street, was thronged yesterday at the annual mass of the Catholic Union. Cardinal McCloskey was in the sanctuary on a raised dais. He was attired in full Cardinal's robes, including the scarlet beretta. The celebrant of the mass was Father Lynch, of St. Ann's Church; the deacon, Father Hayes, also of St. Ann's, and the sub-deacon, the Rev. Mr. Cormick, of St. Francis Xavier's College. The assistants of the Cardinal were Vicar-General Thomas S. Preston, the Rev. P. F. Dealy, S. J., of St. Francis Xavier's Church, and the Rev. Father Farley, secretary to the Cardinal. Father Dealy preached on the teachings of the Catholic Church. He looked with alarm on the increasing cry for secular education. Education should never be separated from religion; especially in this country, where youth was surrounded by so many evil influences. The popular literature of the day did not seem to be in harmony with religious principles. It absorbed men's attention too much in science and the pursuit of material things. Science, as opposed to religion, was the root of great evil." It would be far more true to say that religion, as opposed to science, is the root of great evil; for it is religion opposed to truth, and must bear all the fruits of falsehood.

THE NEW YORK Herald of November 21 thus fittingly noted an event which has excited pleasure wherever free-thought has reached throughout the world: "It is now nearly nineteen years since Charles Robert Darwin published his remarkable work, The Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection, and although his fame has been sounded all over civilization, his theory, or a portion of it, accepted by nine-tenths of the scientists of the world, it was only yesterday that one of the great universities of his native land formally put the seal of its recognition upon his great labors in geology, botany, zoölogy, and all the branches of paleontology. The same influence which came so near making Galileo a martyr must be held to account for the tardiness of this recognition, the fear of Christian clerics that this painstaking inquirer's science was bound, if tolerated, to upset Revelation. Withholding the privilege of writing D. C. L. after his name was not a great persecution, and doubtless did not afflict Darwin much; but it shows that, for all our progress, the old leaven of intolerance can still rise even in Cambridge. For forty years Darwin has been a profound searcher after the inner and older secrets of life in Nature. The scarlet gown which he donned yesterday was emblematic of a great triumph, a fit supplement to the many honors he has received from the purely scientific world. It was 'the missing link' to the chain of his renown. He may not have fully proved that 'man is descended from a hairy quadruped, furnished with a tail and pointed ears,' but he has told us so much of the history of life on our planet that the number of educated people who would dare to contradict him is growing painfully small."

MR. P. V. WISE, President of the St. Joseph (Missouri) Liberal League, devised a most admirable manner of celebrating Thanksgiving Day, by calling a meeting to ratify the Rochester platform. He issued the following "Proclamation" in the local papers, which is just as legal, and many times as rational, as the proclamations of usurping Church-and-State Presidents and Governors:—

Proclamation.

The Liberals will have a Thanksgiving too.

All men and women who believe in the final triumph of GOOD over EVIL; all who have faith in humanity; all who desire the enjoyment of universal mental liberty, the equal and just taxation of all property, except national, State, county, and common school; all who desire the complete separation of Church and State, the total secularization of our public schools, and that the State shall give every child a practical common school education; all who favor human progress and individuality, and feel thankful to the indomitable spirit that actuated the great men and women who so courageously contended for the right against the minions of error, despotism, and superstition in the past, and through whose labors and sacrifices we have the knowledge and liberty that we enjoy in this age; all who toil, are heavy laden, and whose wages have been cut down, will assemble at Turner Hall on Thursday, the 29th day of November, in the year of our Independence 102, at ten o'clock, forenoon, sharp, to ratify the action of the first Congress of the National Liberal League held at Rochester, New York, in October last, and to give our earnest and warmest sympathies and thanks to all members of the human family who are struggling for more liberty and light throughout the earth. There will be a live sermon or address suitable to the occasion. Every friend of humanity, and especially the workmen, are cordially invited by the St. Joseph Liberal League.

We shall wait for the report of this meeting with no little interest. The "live sermon" was to be by the evidently very "live" President.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. FLOWELL.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
 DR. T. L. BROWN.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS.....Moum Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON.....Trenton, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.....Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN.....221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.....H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENNE, Monticello.
 California.....H. MOULINEAU, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BRAD, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GALT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....ERNEST PRUSSING, Chicago.
 Indiana.....L. C. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
 Iowa.....J. C. KICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARMER, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....A. B. CLARK, Louisville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. R. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....D. C. HAUKEWIST, Battle Creek.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....J. B. BODDEN, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. B. BRIDGEMAN, Lincoln.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Linesville.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....L. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. FINCH, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. A. DUBBIE, Greenville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....S. SPALDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....A. M. DERT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. F. WILCOX, Fankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. F. FREEDMAN, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH E. OTIS.....131 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Pfisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MISHKOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Bransch.
 Issued to Anton Bransch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Bransch.
 CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 PALMER HALL, BOSTON.—President, John S. Verity; Secretary, Robert Cooper.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
 BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. Abbot; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Biker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Biker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Glutz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.

Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harcourt, Philip Sewall.

CATARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. B. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Irving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.

Issued to Benj. Greege, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.

Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

YOUNG DR. TYNG'S church is elegantly described by an Orthodox paper of the most cultivated sort as "a soul-trap," in connection with a story of a little boy who looked over the banisters in the morning, and called out to the servant: "Julia, is there a rat in the trap?" illustrating how anxious Christians ought to be about their converts. This notion of trapping people into religion is something new; heretofore, the devil has been given a monopoly of traps, snares, and other trickery. But Tyng's ways are some of them undoubtedly cunning, and suggest the comparison. For instance, every Friday morning he gives a breakfast to intemperate men whom he and his workers are trying to reform, and every Sunday afternoon at four there is a special service for them in the chapel, followed by a free supper, where from five hundred to seven hundred ragged tramps crowd the large dining-hall, and are supplied with biscuits, sandwiches, tea, and coffee. He gets hold of the body, observe, as a "purchase" for reaching the soul.—Springfield Republican.

TWO SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS in Cussawago, Penn., have been fined and imprisoned for laboring on Sunday under an obsolete statute bearing date 1794. The men were not charged with disturbing their neighbors, but simply with working. We find the incident reported in the Examiner and Chronicle, and agree with it heartily in its condemnation of this act of bigotry: "Unless people wish to see Sunday given over to desecration and completely secularized as in Europe, such laws as the one which has been raked up from some rusty old statute-book of Pennsylvania must be repealed."—Christian Union.

Free Religion.

A DISCOURSE.

BY REV. L. K. WASHBURN.

I regard Free Religion as the religious demand of this age. It stands for innovation, for something new. It is opposed to Christianity. Free Religion is the belief that God has something more to reveal, and man something more to learn. Free Religion is the logical result of free inquiry and liberty of conscience. It is the world's latest Protestantism. It is a larger interpretation of the rights of the soul. It is infidel to everything beneath it, to nothing above it. Free Religion means departure, reform.

The mind of this age may be divided into conservative and radical tendencies. There exist in religion two forces: one progressive, the other opposed to progress. The radical mind—active, full of hope, and looking forward—is strong, daring, and aggressive. The conservative mind—passive, full of fear, and looking backward—is weak, cowardly, and on the defensive. Radicalism believes in the present; conservatism, in the past. The radical mind is open; the conservative mind is made up. The former says to science, We accept your spirit; the latter says to fable, We adopt your letter. The radicalism of the soul is expressed in Free Religion, the conservatism in Christianity.

Free Religion believes in going ahead, in exploring the unknown, in making better laws, better churches, better men. Christianity believes in standing still, in worshipping the known, in obeying the laws and customs of the past which it holds as of divine origin. Free Religion sees in the great glories of the past prophecies of greater glories in the future. For every large soul, it reads the soul larger. Man is only an expression of man-kind, an index. Nature is the whole of what he is a part. The present is the past grown older and wiser; it is time better understood. Free Religion is religion grown older and wiser; it is God and man better understood. The highest fruit of a religion is a better religion. We are to honor the Christian protest for the liberty it secured the world. It is not for the result that the Reformation produced, but for the precedent it established, that we value it. We respect the Protest, not the Protestantism, of the Reformers. That is the only true reformation that allows itself to be reformed. Free Religion is the assertion of man's rights, of man's freedom. It is humanity in freer relations with man and in truer relations with the universe. It is human life not bound by creeds, not limited by customs. Its attitude is not that of submission, but that of independence. It accepts the fate of Nature, and would live in obedience to it. Living is growing. Life is utterance. Seeds yield increase. Trees bear fruit; flowers, beauty. All Nature grows its proper harvest. The life of man is for the growth of man. Birth is pledged to attainment, as spring to autumn. New meaning breaks old forms, as new wine old bottles. It is expansion that breaks the cell. It is a larger faith that bursts the creed. It is a better idea that destroys belief. To grow is to leave behind; but we gain more than we lose. The tree cannot mature in the acorn; to be a tree it must come out of the acorn into the atmosphere. So the soul must have place to expand, and the free help of Nature, in order to reach its maturity. Development is revelation. All growth is from God.

A man, to be himself, must be infidel to others. We cannot live better than the world around us, without denying its culture. All progress is denial of authority. Our duty is to the present, not to the past. It is true ambition to aspire to a better life. This is what Nature does. Her best life lives to-day, and in that she is greatest. Improvement is true reverence. We honor our ancestors when we live better, think better, and do better than did they. That is a false veneration that builds a ship after the model of the Mayflower; that erects a house of Puritan architecture; that lives as they did in our grandfathers' days. Our forefathers showed their sense when they respected their own ideas. That is the lesson that Plymouth Rock inculcates. It is not a symbol of attainment; it is the rude attempt, the apprentice hand, that foretells the column of beauty, the full power of liberty. No form is so perfect that it shall be copied forever; no method so fit that it shall never be supplanted. Life is progress; the world must be emancipated from models. Candles may be run in moulds, but not human beings.

For four thousand years, according to the data of history, has man been stumbling over the same old roots of imitation; and more than a hundred nations have broken their necks over this one error. Not more than one man in a thousand million men has passed this point; and when he stopped, the next fifty generations felt themselves in duty bound to fall over his dead body, rather than go outside of it. If the path of right is so narrow that it will not allow a man to walk in it, in God's name, let us widen it! Reason was given man to be exercised, not to be stifled. Destroy that, and you dwarf man to a brute. Take reason away from man, and you take all that is noble in him; it is the motion from the air, the hue from the flower, the light from the sun. Reason bids man throw off his false reverence of customs, and embody his life in higher forms. Reason is radical. It does not believe that goodness is all known, that greatness is all dead, and that man's whole duty is to worship the former and weep over the latter; but it points him forward, and says, "There are holier truths to be learned, loftier heights to be reached, and a better humanity to be lived." The conservative sits in his theological ark, and thinks it the only safe vessel. He denies every natural method, and regards every new thing as a bad thing. He looks upon life as an enemy to man, and calls everything he cannot understand the devil. He walks around the walls of his belief, and thinks he performs the circuit of the universe. The conservative imagines that truth is all corked up in his creed, and that he has a specimen of God in his theological cabinet. He calls immortality a little longer time to eat and drink, and has no higher idea of heaven than a place where Christians will rejoice over the miseries of infidels and congratulate themselves upon their security. He sings of the stars as though they were lighted tallow candles, and speaks of the firmament as though it was the ceiling of the earth. He makes not sandals for his God, but brogans; and talks of spirits as though they were engaged in earthly pursuits. His thoughts never go above the tops of the trees, and the highest aspiration of his soul is to make his neighbor like himself. The Christian's idea of religion is something that ought to suppress freethought and inquiry, get possession of the government, control legislation, govern the schools, regulate public libraries, and run the world generally. The Christian believes in schools, if he can teach them; in books, if he can write them; in governments, if he can administer them; in laws, if he can make them; in churches, if he can preach in them; but he is opposed to anybody else having anything to do with politics, literature, education, or religion.

Christianity is the religion of an earlier experience. Free Religion is the religion that now is. It demands human freedom; freedom for man's feet that walk the earth, and for man's thoughts that search among the stars. It demands the right to appeal from statement to fact, from dogma to truth. It demands individual goodness. Let a man be honored for the good he does. Free Religion is not to be known by its theology, but by its humanity. It has no idea of God which it wants worshipped by the world, no bible which it wants read as a sacred book. It has no day that it regards as holier than another; if we do right every day, which day will be the Sabbath? It has no scheme by which to save mankind; salvation is the heart educated, perfected, not changed. It has no manner of worship, no method of praise. We meet together to hear a man, not to appease a God. We come for new ideas, not to observe old forms. Obedience to our best thoughts is the truest sacrament. One man's dying for the world will not save it. Every man must live for it, or it will be lost. Free Religion, while it will try to deepen the affection that preserves the virtues of a good life, the name of a good man, will also work to destroy the superstition which clings to our affection for men, and to our reverence of their virtues.

The magic of a name is not sufficient to keep the world in innocence and purity. There is no power in amulets, because there is no belief in the devil. That is sacred which is in the soul, not that which we pin on the sleeve. Ornaments are not worn today to keep away witches. A cross on the bosom is not a symbol of the religion in the heart; neither are charms around the neck protections to virtue. The soul must arm itself; and when that is strong in the principles of right, no power can prevail against it. It is what we think, not what we hear, that protects us.

Free Religion is a faith grounded in the knowledge of the universe and in the hope of the soul. It is a life founded upon the lives of all brave, noble men and women. It is the religion which the freethought of this country has made too broad for churchcraft and too pure for priestcraft. It is the religion of the soul. It meets the present with a brave heart, the future with a brave hope. It puts no fetter on man. Its liberty is as broad as the possibility of human nature. It is a sad fact, which all history confirms, that when freedom grows old it becomes a tyrant. No religion had birth in a wider liberty than Christianity; no religion has used oppression with a sterner hand than the Christian religion.

Free Religion, to preserve itself, must sacrifice numbers to liberty. Everything must be done by man for man. Better for us to keep our freedom, than to win the whole world for disciples by losing it. Aristocracy, wealth, and power are always conservative; freedom, democracy, and radicalism are always young. They die in the soul before the soul dies. This strange destiny is produced by fear. Nature is overcome by luxury and old age. When the Puritans left England, they fled from oppression; they soon became oppressors. Let us be willing to be surpassed. Our only safety is to give the prerogative which we claim. We must invite criticism. If our faith will not stand, it is not sound. If we cannot defend our position, let us abandon it. Free Religion should aim to be just rather than victorious. The soul must honor the highest life. Franklin is surpassed; electricity now plays beneath the ocean's depths, and sports across every continent. Jefferson and Hamilton never saw our political triumphs in their farthest thoughts. The Pilgrim Fathers never dreamed of the religion that to-day constitutes the best and noblest life of America. Duty changes with progress. Our respect belongs to our age. The failure of the past claims none of our grief. The glory of the past adds nothing to our deeds. We are saved by our own efforts; we are lost by our own faults. Egypt throws no shame on our successes; Rome throws no lustre on our reverses. Away with borrowed virtue, vicarious purity, atonement by proxy! We stand or fall by our own choices. Let the world have more than one pattern; let it make more than one style of man. Let us honor the mighty virtues of the past, but let us also excel them. It is our duty to live better than did our ancestors; our duty to claim every right and good thing that will lift us socially, politically, or morally.

Free institutions are to make free men; and when the principles of our government are vindicated, liberty will be the grandest word of our political or religious life. Free Religion, while it warns the world of the danger of assuming authority, must heed the warning. The accumulation of land, money, or ideas is the birth of despotism. Wherever there is a creed, an estate, or a fortune, that belongs to class, family, or sect, there is the bud of oppression. Is America to be only Europe's heir? Is freedom's grave to be dug by freedom's sons? Politically and religiously we are approaching a monarchy. Too many Americans are playing nobility. They will soon act in earnest. America has now to fear one-man power at home. Every religious sect in the country has already its denominational pope. Every church is looking towards Rome. A creed means, so far and no farther. When thought is restrained, liberty begins to die.

The power of Bible-caste that is so dominant in our land—this mongrel Catholicity—must be broken up. It is opposed to all advancement of true religion. Freethought is the only honest thought. The sectarian names given to Christianity are only different perfumes put into the common body of beliefs to suit different religious noses. Every Christian Church is purely and terribly sectarian. Each one would build its altar so as to speak its own peculiar belief; it would have its building in the shape of its faith; and, if it could control it, would make the bell ring out the Thirty-nine Articles, the fall of man, the day of judgment, hell and endless misery, and all the heathenism of Christian theology.

Free Religion stands for the eternal in religion, for the virtues that are common to all humanity. It stands for a religious liberty and a religious life. It demands that all men shall have equal rights in the justice of man, and equal rights in the justice of God. It stands for the religion in us, not for a religion that we are to join. I can adopt no man for my authority. I must be my own authority, or be without. God cannot come to me through another. I must have him at first hand. No man is an agent for God, and the samples of divinity that pious houses send around the country are only chips broken from some idol of the world. Free Religion has no worship but thinking of divine things. If there is anything sacred, it is a human soul; and if there is anything that man has no right to direct, it is that soul's thought. If God is ever with us, it is when we are thinking of him. The temple in which the soul worships is not built with hands. Man is as holy as God. The thought which separates them is profane. We must not divide the oversoul. God has but one name. There is but one kingdom of heaven, for human and divine. God does not say to man, "This is mine," and, "That is yours." He has not made one place for man and another for himself; God and man live together. Free Religion is the religion which man has by nature. It is no separate experience, no part of life; it is his whole experience, his whole life. There is no particular season of human existence when God visits the soul; no hour set apart for his coming. There is no time when he does not appear to man; we are always conscious of divinity.

The duty of this age is not to make forms for men, but to break what they already have; to free man from the bondage of a creed, and give him the freedom of the world. The Free Religion of the age, arrayed against the Christian dogmas, is not another attempt to enslave the world, not a change of idols, but a movement against all idolatry. It is not to stop with a ten days' march, but to go on forever. It is pulling out as well as setting out; showing what is false as well as telling what is true. It is the weeding element in religion. I know that many regret that hard words are used against Christianity, and we regret that hard words must be used; but the hardness of the words is their truth. They would not be hard words if they were false. Truth is always hard towards error. The Sermon on the Mount was hard to the Pharisees; the Emancipation Proclamation was hard to the slave-holder; and so Free Religion is hard to Christianity. But we do not ask, Is it hard? but, Is it true? Is it just? Is it right? It is hard to wound human hearts; but it is our duty to tell the truth. It is hard to take human life; but it is our duty to protect our homes and families. It is hard to attack the religion of our fathers; but it is harder to leave our children to learn a lie. This is the reason that Free Religion attacks Christianity: because the true interests of the soul demand it. It is the religious demand of to-day, and we must not be false to Truth out of respect to Falsehood's gray hairs. The only safety for liberty and truth is the downfall of Christianity; and the only way to avoid taking the sword in their defence in the future, is by being honest, and fearlessly speaking the truth in the present. I am not talking to hear the echo of my voice: I am uttering the conviction of every free heart in America. I know, if it be necessary to put human life between the true and the false, that mankind will spring to the sacrifice; but a brave word may prevent a hard blow, and an honest stand against the dogmas of the Church may prove easier than armed resistance of its tyranny. It is a small thing for one man to say to another, "Thou art the Christ"; but, when it is declared that this man is Almighty God, that his words are infallible, and that only by believing this are we good and worthy of honor, it is an insult to truth and every instinct of our souls; and every man that has one spark of Nature's fire left burning in his heart should proclaim the declaration a lie, an outrage upon humanity, and a reproach to the name of God. It is a sad sight to see men and women clinging in this age of progress and truth to a human idol, kneeling before a God that is no larger than their own forms, forsaking their own manhood and womanhood, and depending upon his assumed merit to stand in the place of their own moral worth. It is sad to hear a minister, man-grown, pray to this human idol, address his petitions to a being that has been dead over eighteen hundred years, and ask that he will give mankind blessings which only self-denial and moral purity can bring. We can imagine delusion going no farther.

The religion of to-day that opposes this idolatry demands that men and women be honest to their convictions, true to the God that speaks in their own souls, and above giving support to this false and base worship. If the Church fears the truth, let the world publish it on every corner. If ministers will not preach the truth, then let men do it. The time has come for honest words and for honest action. We know that Christian churches are dedicated to no high purpose; that no new thing will ever come from Christian pulpits; that Christian ministers are hired to put out the light of truth; and that only the death of Christianity will give freedom to the world. Then our duty is to kill Christianity; kill it with a better religion; kill it with the truth,—that sword of God that sooner or later will sever every Christian Church. The religion that says one man is savior is a false religion. All men are saviors; all truth lights the world; all virtue saves mankind. I believe in self-religion, self-atonement, and self-salvation. This religion wants no man-god, no book-god, no creed-god. Christianity says to other forms of idolatry, "My Christ is better than your Christ, my Bible is better than your Bible, my creed is better than your creed; I am the only authorized agent of Deity, and he has revealed to me alone the way, the truth, and the life."

I honor all great men; they stand next to God, and have saved much to the world that smaller men would not have dared to defend; but no man is great enough, nor can be great enough, to stand to this age for God. I love all good books; they are the true wealth of the world, the most sacred and most precious testament of the human mind; and those books wherein man has written his thoughts of God, of brotherly love and hope,—those books of religion which nations have written and which nations have read,—are doubly sacred and precious; but no word of human heart, however pure and true, is the infallible word of God. I respect the faith of mankind and the expression of its faith in words, defining its relation to God and man; but no expression can be broad or true enough to accommodate the growth of human life and the change of human belief; and so every creed that is set up as the final and full expression of human faith is certain to be cast down. Every man, every book, every creed, that is removed from its proper and natural sphere, is in the way of man's progress, and blocks up the road to truth; and it is man's duty to remove them, asking not, Shall I offend men by my act? but, Shall I do right if I do not remove them? I believe that the religion that is free from Christian names and associations, that cares not for Church or dogma, will yet redeem the world from the idolatry that covers the earth with its base worship; that free religion will redeem bound religion, and save the truth, while it destroys the idols in Christian churches. I do not say what weapon the new faith will use; but that God will put into its hand a sure one, I most sincerely believe. If it is really in earnest, it will conquer; but we shall not succeed by being indifferent, and letting the world take its course. We must direct its course. Faith must fight,—fight what it believes to be wrong; and if we mean our faith we shall prove it by every word we utter, and every act we perform.

The Old World was satisfied to paint virtue or carve it, and then worship its work; but this age must make it living and make it speak. We cannot kneel to the gods of Greece,—to that once pious marble that was the embodiment of power, love, and truth, on whose brow a nation hung its praise, and whose feet a nation offered its vows and put up its prayers; and although Greece, in making her God-images, made man more divine, yet we cannot accept her stone idols, her marble Jupiter, and answer the religious demand of to-day by going through with the ceremony of Grecian worship. We cannot bow to a man dressed up to look like God, who was deified by superstitious faith, and whose divinity was a heathen ideal; and while we honor the human nature of Jesus, and thank the Jewish people for preserving his manly words, we cannot accept the Christ of Hebrew fancy, and answer the religious demand of the soul by calling him Lord and Master. We want no Lord and Master, no slaves. We want brave and noble men,—men who do right because it is right, who tell the truth because it is the truth. Religion to-day demands manhood of men and womanhood of women; not faith in heathen fancies, not thoughts for heathen altars. We do not want man to do those things which he can square by somebody's else idea of right, but what his own soul says is right: I am to follow my own thought, no matter what lies in the way. Do you tell me that I ought not to speak against other forms of thought, of faith? But I must, if I have a different thought, a different faith.

Christianity is not the judge of man; man is the judge of Christianity. The soul is not to ask the Church, "Am I right?" The Church is to ask the soul. Human hearts are purer than human altars, and souls are higher than priests. The world is better by its life, not by its worship. The millennium will not be when everybody is a Christian, but when all are good and true; not when Christ comes in the clouds of heaven, but when there is "on earth peace, good-will to men." Men say, "Why attack the Church? Why say anything against Christianity? Wait, and everything will come out right." But everything will not come out right, if we wait. How long would the Pharisees have asked God to wait before he sent Jesus into the world? How long would the slave-holder have asked Garrison, Phillips, and Parker to wait before they denounced slavery and demanded its abolition? How long would Catholi-clism have asked Luther to wait before he protested against its sensualism and oppression? Shall we wait to do right? Is there any particular hour set apart for right-doing? Yes! It is this hour. If man had waited for God to plant and reap for him, he would have starved, as he deserved, centuries ago. God never does man's work. Wait is not the word for earnest men, but work. Let us have no compromise with wrong, no treaty with tyranny; but make wrong surrender to right, and tyranny abdicate in favor of justice. We must have a higher standard of life. We want man compelled to duty, not by law but by conscience. He must make duty his law, and obey it as the supreme command of God. He must be pure himself, not seek for legal purity. He must be better than society requires, better than the Church demands. He must live so as not only to be able to look in the world's face, but in the face of his own soul, without a blush. We are not to have a life that men call pure and above reproach, but a life that we know is above reproach. Let all come up to their own ideas of right, live as well as they know, and leave other ideas to take care of themselves. Too long has the world taken some one's estimation of this life, who lived in a manner too base to know the worth of human life. Solomon, who, according to some Bible writer, was "wiser than all men," cried, "All is vanity"; but had he said, "All is vanity that I have found in my licentious course and dissipated life," and warned others not to follow his example, posterity would have thanked him for the confession, and respected his words of warning; but all is not vanity, only to Solomons. All is reality to true men and women; and it is time that we put the true above the false, by placing the words and lives of the upright men and women of the world before the soul, instead of the vile example and false words of a vile and false Hebrew king. The Christian Church, so long as it stultifies the soul by making it believe that its Bible is a compilation of God's truth, is the enemy of true religion.

I want no religion that depends upon what one man said, upon what one book holds. I want the religion of all men, as far as I can know it. Jesus was a good man; so was Epictetus, so was Socrates, so are thousands good men to-day. The things that men and women do in the name of religion shame our human nature; the things that ministers say in the name of Christ shock our moral sense. We cannot enter a Christian Church without a feeling of degradation. We have a sensation of stooping in such a place. What is called worship of God is only silly adulation of a man. One would think there was no God, to hear Christians in their acts of praise. Jesus Christ means Jesus God to every Christian Church in America; and to speak of Jesus as a man is considered blasphemous. Christianity may be the true idolatry, but it is hardly the true religion. There is something supremely ridiculous in the Christian Church sending missionaries to believers in the one God of Nature, to convert them to the doctrine of the Trinity and human idolatry. Christianity virtually says, there is no God,—only a Jesus. Free Religion acknowledges one God, and no substitute for God. It honors all men who deserve honor, and helps all who deserve help. If those persons who go to church to worship God would do it, instead of worshipping a man, they would deserve the world's respect. If those persons who go to prayer-meetings would spend the time that they now waste in professing and praying religion, in practicing it, if they would go about doing good two hours of the week, instead of going to a meeting to ask the world to see how pious they are, they would then have some claim to the regard of honest men. If men and women who lament the evils of Free Religion, and tell what bad men infidels are, would be better themselves, the world would have more faith in their Christianity. Religion begins at home. It is false to assert that only one man has been nailed to the cross to give life to humankind. Did every risk of life for truth and humanity deserve the name of Christ, crosses would spring from the ground thick as flowers, and every land be covered with these tokens of renunciation. Sacrifice is old and new, and men have died for country, for love, for faith, ever since the world began; and the offering is as pure and hallowed now as eighteen centuries ago.

We are forever trying to reach some ideal height of the past; and, in our essay to touch our idol, we surpass it. We have to whisper our thoughts when they are not compliments to our follies or superstitions; but I wish to say aloud, that real life was never so high and pure as at this hour. The ideal height that we should strive to reach is ahead, not behind; not an individual attainment, but a personal aspiration; not what some other has done, but what we think ought to be done.

The religious demand of to-day is religious truth, and men who dare speak it. Better that the truth should sever the Church, than that a lie should be told to keep it together. If the truth would prove everything that we now hold holy and sacred false and base, we must still say, "Let us have the truth."

WHEN LORD B— died, a person met an old man who was one of his most intimate friends. He was pale, confused, awe-stricken. Every one had been trying to console him, but in vain. "His loss," he exclaimed, "does not affect me so much as his horrible ingratitude. Would you believe it?—he died without leaving me anything in his will,—I who have dined with him, at his own house, three times a week for thirty years!"

"HAVE YOU poached eggs?" inquired a customer of a colored restaurant-keeper in Mississippi. "Yes, sah; all our eggs is poached,—leastways de chickens dat laid um is," was the reply.

IS RELIGION DYING OUT?

A DISCOURSE BY REV. O. B. FROTHINGHAM ON GOD AND THE CHURCHES.

After having read a chapter from the Hebrew ecclesiastics and a selection out of the Persian anthology, the Rev. O. B. Frothingham preached an impressive sermon on the unfruitfulness of formal religion. The eloquent speaker's audience was large, attentive, and seemingly highly appreciative.

In the course of his sermon the preacher said, in substance, that he laid particular stress on the words "formal religion," the religion of custom or convenience, as contradistinguished from the religion of thought. Real religion is the inspiration of life, not the limitation of it. No one is weaker for giving force to his best ideas or sweetest hopes. It never injured any one to have a mind open to the most delicate impressions, looking upward to the highest happiness. True religion makes people worshipful, thoughtful, pure of character. The formal religion that people practise without thinking—call it Jewish, Christian, or what you will,—in becoming a mere formality is converted into a real clog. A great question with denominationallists is how to reconcile religion with the progress of the age. The best way to do that, according to the preachers, is to put life into the form; fill the vase, but do not break it; keep up the force on the machinery, do not strain it. It is never recognized that the machinery may be worthless and rusty, and therefore require to be broken up. The speaker alluded to an able article on religion which lately appeared in one of the daily journals, and drew inferences therefrom which tended to illustrate his argument that the usefulness of formal religion is gone.

NO FEAR OF HELL.

People no longer fear hell and the devil; they do not look to the Judgment Day with fear and trembling, nor live under the authority of what is called divine law. With the decay of belief we see religion go one way and the world another. Religion is no longer the educator of the people; it may be found among the most ignorant of the mass, who throw themselves on the protection of the priests, and not on the strength of intellect. No solution of the anomalous struggle between religion and intellect presents itself excepting this: that religion must disappear before the march of a cultivated, higher intellect. The force of discipline would, it was claimed, greatly aid the work of progress. The examples afforded by the merchant, the railroad, the army and navy, were used to illustrate the line of argument and to show the necessity of the economy of time; and it was urged that the discipline of the army and navy is the noblest education and the grandest to which the race has been subjected. It is a machine to do great and noble works.

WHY BUSINESS MEN DO NOT ALWAYS SUCCEED.

Why, it was asked, do business men fail? Because really they are not business men. They are feeble, infatuated, and carried away by some special scheme. They were men who expected assistance from the clouds, calling upon the Church or the priest to aid them. Finally, when they see that the God whom they called upon did not respond, and the Christ they cried out to could not be relied upon, they become sceptical of the efficacy of formal religion, which failed them because it is false, and they failed because they were not practical. In New England, half a century ago family worship was the custom with the head of nearly every family. It is said that in those days families were more happy and parents received greater respect than now. If so, was this due to family prayers or to the peculiar make-up of society in the long ago? At present, in this great city, that exact discipline of old times is not brought to bear in domestic circles. The heads of families have their own affairs to call them away, and children leave home sooner than they did formerly. If anything is wrong now in society, must the remedy come from the reestablishment of family prayers? Not so; but by considering society as it is, and applying a remedy suitable to its wants. A Greek sage has said that those sitting down to food must remember that there are two to be filled, the body and the mind; therefore, the physical and intellectual wants of society must both be attended to.

RELIGION AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

On one side religionists claim that the public schools make atheists, and on the other that the influence of religion in them is cramping the power of education. The Catholic Church says that the schools cannot flourish without its benediction, and the Protestant Church contends that if the Bible is taken from the schools religion will be lost. But in the din of this controversy, the people are beginning to know that learning is not necessarily associated with any particular dogma or denomination. Their Catholicism, Protestantism, the Bible, priests, and persons, all stand in the way of progress. They throw all the higher responsibility of the scholar away with the mumbled prayer. Is it possible that this should have the power of quickening the mind or of making the pupil more fit to meet the Master? The public schools will not be perfect until they are completely unsectarian. There must be no priest, no pastor, no sacrament, no Bible in them. The whole question must be to rationally educate the young mind for the best enjoyment of an intellectual life. The office of teaching must not be condemned to a subordinate; let religion lift its hand off and leave the results to conviction only. The intrusion of formal religion breeds sectarian strife. We have Catholic and Protestant text-books, histories, interpretations of the sciences and all the rest, none of them having a comprehensive view of their subjects, and all bent on imposing their own peculiar views upon the American youth. This is an outrage of indescribable magnitude; it is a doing against which every man in the country should array himself. We know that history, philosophy, and the sciences need not be sectarian; that Romanism, Protestantism, the Greek Church, all are but sects; that they are ethically the same and seeking identical interests. In the light of this knowledge of truth, the books put into the hands of our boys and girls should not be on the side of Romanism or of Protestantism, but on the grounds of eternal truth. Unless the schools be anti-sectarian they must degenerate, and can never fulfil their mission to educate Americans.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Certain people believe that we would be more happy by constitutionally avowing ourselves a Christian people; that our not saying this by the voice of Congress leaves us in the place of outlaws among nations. The opponents of this measure think it is illogical, useless, and unconstitutional, having nothing whatever to do with the working of the laws. The idea that the avowal of Christianity in the Constitution would make the American people more happy or prosperous is absurd, and it is hard to believe that any set of men could entertain such a frenzied notion. What expectation is there in the heart of the people that this alteration of the Constitution would make the millions better off? Many of them are unable to read it, and more who cannot understand the meaning thereof. It is needful that Americans should call their attention from abroad and fix it sharply at home. Let religion appoint no chaplains in the army, navy, or legislature upon whose idle prayers the ignorant should depend; appoint no Sabbath to be kept in any particular way other than that of the general desire. Let religion set no fast or feast days, telling people when they ought to be sorrowful or glad. The people can find these things unerringly enough for themselves. We have not had an opportunity, because of the struggles between Church and State, to see what an unsectarian government could do. Let the State mind its own affairs and religion bless the world as best it knows how.—N. Y. Herald, Oct. 29.

HON. RUTGER B. MILLER.

The Hon. Rutger B. Miller, an old and honored citizen of Utica, died this morning at his residence in this city, in the seventy-third year of his age. Mr. Miller's health has been failing for some time, and his death was not wholly unexpected, but it sends a thrill of grief through the community, while it recalls the events of a rare and exceptional life.

The family from which Mr. Miller came has linked its fortunes inseparably with the history of Utica. Rutger Bleeker, his grandfather, owned almost the whole tract of land on which the city now stands. His father, Morris S. Miller, represented this district in Congress from 1813 to 1815, during the most exciting period of the last war with Great Britain. He was also a Judge of the Common Pleas under the first Constitution. It is not too much to say that the Miller and Bleeker families contributed more than all others combined to lay the foundations of our local prosperity.

Rutger Bleeker Miller, the subject of this sketch, was born in Lowville, Lewis County, on the 28th of July, 1805. His boyhood was passed in Utica, where, in school, he early developed a strong taste for study. Later he was placed in the Catholic College at Montreal, where he graduated with high honors. He afterwards spent some time at Yale College, continuing his study of the classics. His fondness for Latin was very great. To the last year of his life Horace and Cicero were his companions, and in his young manhood he was the peer of any college professor in his scholastic attainments. He graduated at the Old Litchfield Law School, which half-a-century ago was widely celebrated. He then returned to Utica, and entered the law-office of Hiram Denio, where he remained for some years. Thus thoroughly equipped, he entered upon the practice of his chosen profession; but the management of a cumbersome estate and his natural fondness for purely intellectual pursuits occupied his time, and prevented him from seeking distinction at the bar. Soon after entering on his professional duties Mr. Miller was married to Miss Mary Seymour, the eldest daughter of the late Henry Seymour and sister of Horatio Seymour.

In 1829-30-31, Mr. Miller served as one of the trustees of the village of Utica. In 1832, he was elected to the Assembly, and to his efforts in that year Utica owes the passage of her city charter. He was averse to office-holding, but he consented to serve in the legislature that he might bring Utica into the list of cities. He also consented to act as an alderman in the first Common Council elected under the charter. In 1836, Mr. Miller was elected to Congress to fill the vacancy caused by Judge Beardsley's resignation. He served with great credit, and established a high reputation among the old school of politicians, who remembered him kindly while they lived. Mr. Miller also served for a time as clerk of the United States Court. These honors he gained without striving for them before he was twenty-five years old. But for nearly forty years he neither sought nor would he take places of preferment. He was a Democrat of the most pronounced type. The Jeffersonian doctrine of State rights met his thorough and hearty approval. He was a deep student of politics. He carried his opinions to their logical conclusion, and never trimmed his sails to catch the breath of popular applause. As late as 1872 he stood out almost alone in this community against the indorsement of Greeley's nomination, and gave his vote and influence to the O'Connor electors. The desire for success never changed or modified his convictions. He knew what he believed, and was quite as ready to maintain his faith in the storm as in the sunshine. His business relations with Utica were of the most important character. He erected the block on the lower corner of Genesee and Whitesboro Streets, the block on the corner of Liberty and Genesee Streets, the dwelling-houses on the corner of Devereux and Genesee Streets, the house where Senator Conkling now resides, the old mill, and very many other buildings. When it was proposed to extend the Albany & Schenectady Railroad to Utica, he embarked heartily in the enterprise. It was vigorously opposed by many of our leading citizens. They argued that it would interfere with the stage business; that it would lessen the patronage of the hotels; and that it would eventually diminish the population of the town. It is hard for the present generation to understand that such arguments were received with favor only a few short years ago. But they were, and all the power which Rutger B. Miller, John Butterfield, Charles A. Mann, and two or three other enterprising citizens could command, was required to combat them. Mr. Miller was also largely instrumental in building the Black River Canal, and in making Utica the outlet of the Chenango Canal.

Before and above all, Rutger B. Miller was a philosopher. As he advanced in life he retired more and more from an active participation in affairs, but he never lost his keen interest in what was going on about him. Prosperity did not lessen his desire for the welfare of the poorest, and adversity did not sour his cheery nature. By his own fireside, in his own home, he was indeed a host. A good husband, a most loving father, a genial friend, a brilliant talker, he had few equals in the social world. His reminiscences covered a wide range. As a boy he sat on the knee of John Randolph, of Roanoke, and witnessed the great horse-race in which Eclipse won his laurels. As a young man he was the friend of Calhoun, of Clay, of Webster, of Jackson, and the other giants who lived in those days. He was on terms of personal intimacy with Winfield Scott. But while enjoying the friendship of those who differed with him in politics, he never hesitated to maintain his opinions with a strength and fire which compelled admiration even when it did not carry conviction.

In the evening of his life the calm philosophy which he long ago espoused, satisfied and comforted him. In no fear of death he passed through the valley of the shadow. His name will be remembered and honored while the city which he helped to found holds its place.—Utica Observer, Nov. 12.

RUSSIAN SOCIALISM.

The mode of operation of the propagandists was so simple as to be extraordinary. The real origin of the society (or rather its introduction into Russia, for it is undoubtedly an off-shoot from the commune of Zurich and Paris) is a matter of doubt; but as fast as members were enrolled here they bound themselves to give all their property into the common fund, and devoted themselves to the making of converts to the doctrine of the propaganda. These were simple: First, everything was to be broken down. There was to be no individual property, no religion, no government, no laws, and no class distinction of any sort. Everybody was to return suddenly to the condition of Adam and Eve, excepting in the matter of clothing. Then, all starting even, all were to work.

It seems incredible that such ideas could captivate educated and refined people of recognized position and great wealth; but some of the best-known ladies in Russian society, and some of the wealthiest and proudest men in the Empire, in all the principal cities, and many of the smaller towns, actually gave up their position and wealth, and became units in the headless body. Beginning among the higher classes, the movement spread downward, and a strong effort was made to secure an army of work people. While many of the members retained their former habits of life ostensibly, and sought to influence those with whom they were naturally thrown in contact, many others were too impatient for this mode of working, and sought positions as workmen and workwomen in the great factories near Moscow. In the seven factories of Shibaef, Goratchef, Nosof, Tulief, Sokolof, Lazareff, and Rochfort, all in the neighborhood of this city, numbers of these emissaries have been at work for two or three years—employed by day as factory hands, having assumed the names and dress of common people,—and have industriously disseminated their doctrines, both by word of mouth and by means of books which the society procured from Paris, Dresden, and Zurich.

Singularly enough, the first news received by the government was from a workman in the factory of Shibaef, who brought to the police authorities a number of books which had been given him by a young girl, Mile. Vassilleff, who was an agent of the society there. This was in April, 1875, and the police, by carefully working on the information given, managed to arrest privately Miles. Vassilleff and Barrinoff. It was evident that these girls were involved in a conspiracy, and the whole force of the government was soon employed looking for the conspirators. Soon after, news was brought in a similar manner that at Lazareff a young girl, calling herself Anouska, was propagating the views of the commune. She was arrested and proved to be Mile. Bardina, a daughter of the well-known General Bardina. Other arrests followed from time to time, and the more the police discovered the wider the conspiracy was seen to be. Prince Tiltzianoy; Michael Djabardary, a Georgian nobleman; Tchekoezde, also a member of a noble family; Mile. Olga Lubatovitch, daughter of a councillor of State; Miles. Kaminskaya, Chorjevsky, Figner, Alexandrevna, Vedensky, and Georgievskay, and Messieurs Karadschve and Gamkreldze were among the most prominent who have been brought to trial, all of them belonging to families of distinction and position.

All these ladies (for such they are by birth and education) are between eighteen and twenty years old, and yet all of them left their homes, and, assuming peasant names and the peasant garb, sought and obtained employment in the factories and lived with the work people. In almost every case they were looked upon with suspicion by their mates, as they were unable to disguise themselves fully; but they persevered, and actually made many converts. One of them in her zeal went into the barracks, where the men sleep, night after night, and distributed her books, reading them to those who could not read. She was betrayed to the overseer by some of the men, and summarily discharged in disgrace for her immodesty, without being suspected at the time of treason.

While the society was thus industrious in making proselytes it was equally pitiless in striking its foes. Numberless corpses have been found, during the past two years, of persons who have met death in some horrible shape, and in nearly every case a paper has been found attached to the body on which was inscribed in rude characters, "It is thus we punish traitors." How many such assassinations there have been is only recorded in the secret archives, for the government keeps such details as privately as possible; but the tradition spreads among the people in spite of this care, and it is whispered everywhere that the propagandists have found another victim whenever another corpse is found. One of the latest of these assassinations of which I have heard was that of a young student in Odessa, who was literally drenched with vitriol and so burned to death. On his neck was one of the placards by which it is supposed the society designates its recreant members or those who, it is feared, will prove recreant.

But these are not the only ones who have to fear such a death. Last September a beautiful young girl, a daughter of the late General Andreevsky, met with an even more horrible fate at the hands of the propagandists. General Andreevsky was formerly the chief surgeon of Prince Worontzoff, then the military governor of Caucasus. He afterwards occupied the same position under Prince Bariatinsky, but some years ago left the service, and died about the year 1874. His widow, who was the Princess Toumanoff, went some time since with her youngest daughter to Tiflis. The elder daughter is married to Prince George Shervadshedze, son of the ex-reigning Prince of Abkhazia, in the Caucasus. Mme. Andreevsky made her residence on the banks of the Koura, and was engaged in settling the estate of her brother. She had noticed for a considerable time that her daughter was distracted and nervous, but was unable to learn the cause. There had been company in the house through the early part of one evening, and about eleven o'clock Mile. Andreevsky stepped out of the drawing-room across the hall to ask a servant if he cleaned her boots. Her mother heard the question, and expected to see her return in a moment; but she did not, and was never seen alive afterward. It was as sudden as though the earth had swallowed her. Search was made after a little time, and the next morning her body was found in the Koura, thirty versts below. It was found that she had been strangled and then trampled to death, her whole body being broken and torn to shreds. No trace was ever found of her murderers, or clew to the motive or mode of the murder, excepting such as her private desk disclosed. In it were found papers showing that the propagandists had made strenuous efforts to induce her to join them, as she was worth over 250,000 roubles in her own right. It seemed that she had finally refused to do so, but had been intrusted with so many of the secrets of the organization that it was not thought safe to allow her to live.—Moscow Letter to the New York World.

AMONG THE REQUESTS for prayers presented at the Tabernacle the other day was one "for an old gentleman, very careful to provide for the wants of others, but who neglects his own soul." We confess to a liking for the character here so briefly described in outline. We should like to make the acquaintance of that venerable man and enjoy his society. We feel sure that we should like him a great deal better than another person not "careful to provide for the wants of others," but constantly whining about his own soul, and selfishly seeking his own salvation in some other way than by doing his full duty to his fellow-men. We are at once reminded of the instructive story of Abou Ben Adhem, who could not tell the angel whether his name should be written in the book of those who love the Lord, but who only aspired to be written as one who loved his fellow-men. "And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest." We advise the brethren to let that old gentleman alone and turn their attention to a different class of subjects. He may be enjoying a higher state of spiritual health than they themselves. He may be unconscious of a soul, as a healthy man is of a stomach or a liver. At any rate, we feel sure that he has the root of the matter in him, and is better fitted to teach in the Tabernacle than some people who press to the front. He shall teach here, and the lesson that he teaches is the same that Jesus taught, who rebuked all manner of selfishness, and instructed his followers that service was the best test of discipleship.—Boston Herald.

IT WAS a genuine five-year-old young politician rebuking his sister of three: "Can't you pray better than that, Kattie? It's mean of you to pray just for your relations and nobody else. Now hold up and let me show you: 'God bless papa and mamma and Aunt Fanny and me too, and the whiskey ring and Sammy Tilden, and give the whole of 'em new hearts, so that everything'll go straight and nobody get mad and nothing come to pieces. For Jesus' sake, amen.'"

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

FREETHOUGHT.

What does he gain who dares to trust
In God's impartial love,
Leave blinded Faith in whirling dust
And Reason's pinions prove?

No thunder hovers overhead,
No mountains bar the way,
And Nights, unhaunted by a dread,
Are intervals of Day.

The jarring of unmeaning words
Rages, unheard, below;
'Tis only Heaven-aspiring birds
Bring him Earth's memories now.

He owns the highest realms of light
To which he can aspire,
And with a child's admiring sight
Feasts innocent desire.

No more a grim malicious Fiend
Lurks under every bias,
Nor is his hope's scant harvest gleaned
Where yawns Death's dark abyss.

For he has learnt no more to fear
The tyranny of lies,
But, testing truth, can still revere
Life's joyous mysteries.

Oh! is it not a priceless gain
To break Delusion's yoke,
And know that no predestined bane
With our first sigh awakes;

But Truth, who dwelleth in the Light,
Bids us his wisdom prove,
And search the secrets of His might
To find unfailing Love?

R. B. HOLT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE UNATTAINED.

BY ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

Alone, alone, we solve all doubt;
Alone, we work salvation out,
Casting our feeble hands about;

For human help, for human cheer,
Or even for a human tear,—
Forgetting God is always near.

We live, we breathe all unexpressed;
Our holiest, noblest in the breast,
Lie struggling in a wild unrest—

The poet in his highest flight
Sees ranged beyond him, height on height,
Dreams that elude his utmost might.

And beauty born of highest Art
Slips from the painter's hand apart,
And leaves him aching at the heart.

The sweetest face hath never brought
Its sweetest look; the deepest thought
Is never into language wrought;

And music borne by echo back
Fines on a solitary track,
Till faint hearts cry,—Alack, alack!

The quaint old litanies that fell
From ancient seers, great hearts impel
To nobler deed than poets tell.

The great God knocks upon the door,
Ready to run our chalice o'er,
If but the heart will ask for more.

Onward, where lights supernal shine—
Onward, with no unmanly pine
Our royal Amarantus we twine.

The wine-press must alone be trod,
The burning ploughshare pressed unshod;
There is no rock of help—but God!

CANASTOTA, N. Y.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 1.

Wm. Coleman, $1.50; J. G. Walker, $4.67; A. S. Wheeler, $5; E. W. Gunn, $1.25; Rev. A. B. Camm, $3.75; George Stickney, 20 cents; Francis J. Goodwin, $3.20; A. E. Macomber, 25 cents; W. C. Gannett, $50; W. L. Coffenburg, $3.20; D. K. Hall, $6.94; Dyer D. Lum, $1.60; Chas. D. Gambrill, $5.20; H. W. Moore, $3.20; E. W. Hitchings, $3.20; Dr. John Winslow, $1; J. D. Froet, $23.20; Henry T. Rogers, $5; W. H. Ovington, $3.25; W. Constantine, 50 cents; J. Van Raa, 10 cents; Mrs. Julia A. White, $1.50; John Soule, $1; W. H. Campbell, $3.20; D. W. Cooke, $5; H. Andriessen, 50 cents; O. Ladynski, $1; M. H. Howard, $1.05; Dr. Jos. P. Robbins, $3.20; Herman Lieber, $15; G. E. Corbin, $1.20; Junkerman & Haas, $1; S. G. Corray, $6.40; Leopold Goepfer, $3.20; J. L. Stoddard, $1.10; M. A. Hoering, 10 cents; J. C. Allen, $1; Clara M. Holmes, $3.20; T. M. Newcomb, $3; Miss H. E. Stevenson, $3.25; C. A. Thompson, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 6, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

A CARD.

The Committee on the better establishment of THE INDEX, appointed at a meeting of its subscribers and friends last May, wish to enlist all the assistance they can to lay its claims before every liberal man and woman in our country. They have prepared a circular setting forth the method, motives, and objects of their action, and wish the names of all who are willing to assist them in placing it where it will do good. Please address the Chairman of the Committee, "Elizur Wright, P. O. Box 109, Boston, Mass."

ANNOUNCEMENT: CLUB TERMS.

Until January 1, 1879, THE INDEX will be sent for a year to clubs of five or more NEW SUBSCRIBERS on receipt of $2.20 each, in advance, instead of $3.20, the regular cost of subscription. This is an excellent chance for all our friends to join in a vigorous effort to increase the circulation of the most earnestly radical journal in the United States, and thereby to advance the common cause. It is only just to show due public appreciation of the efforts of its friends, and we shall therefore (unless explicitly requested to the contrary) publish the names of all who send us clubs under the arrangement, with the number of new subscribers obtained by each. Shall there not be a little generous emulation to help forward the struggling cause of religious freedom?

F. E. ABBOT, Editor.

A CARD from B. F. Underwood, received just after we went to press last week, informs us that he lectured at London, O., Nov. 25; at Nevada, O., Nov. 26, 27, and 28; at Riverton, Ill., Dec. 1 and 2; He lectures at Milan, Mo., Dec. 4, 5, and 6; at Fairfield, Ia., Dec. 8 to 12; at Red Oak, Ia., Dec. 13 to 21; at Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 23.

THE ARKANSAS Executive Sub-committee of the National Liberal League has been completed as follows: John Ahrens, Chairman, Monticello; W. D. Killian, Lacy; R. F. Foster, Monticello; S. J. Matthews, Monticello; D. H. Rousseau, Star City. Mr. Ahrens writes that the liberal element is strong in Arkansas, and that a local League is soon to be formed in Monticello.

ANOTHER liberal journal has issued its first number—Payne's Age of Reason, of New York. It aims to represent "infidelity," and begins by sweeping the country clear of all its predecessors as follows: "The fact is, there is not an avowed liberal newspaper in this country to-day, and so far as we can learn there never has been one." Our readers will please take notice that no such paper as THE INDEX was ever published—it is a myth. It is evident that the editor of the Age of Reason has not "learned" very "far" as yet,—probably because he has not lived down so late as the nineteenth century, but still resides in the eighteenth.

WE ARE very glad this week to welcome Mr. Albert Warren Kelsey, of St. Louis, among our editorial contributors. Careful readers of THE INDEX will remember many striking articles from his pen during the last five years; and that which he contributes to our present issue will be certain to command their attention. Men who have strong convictions, and who know how to express them with force, clearness, good taste, and courtesy, are precisely the writers whose cooperation we most earnestly covet in this journal; and that Mr. Kelsey belongs by right in this class will be disputed by no one who is competent to appreciate his present paper. No doubt some of our readers will dissent from it. Very well: let them excel him, if they can, in these respects, and they shall have no cause to complain of want of hospitality for their thought in THE INDEX. A fair field and no favor—that can always be had here.

"OBSCENE LITERATURE."

Two resolutions reported to the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876, by Mr. B. F. Underwood, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, acquire new significance and force in the light of recent events. They were as follows:—

Resolved, That this League, while it recognizes the great importance and the absolute necessity of guarding by proper legislation against obscene and indecent publications, whatever sect, party, order, or class such publications claim to favor, disapproves and protests against all laws which, by reason of indefiniteness or ambiguity, shall permit the prosecution and punishment of honest and conscientious men for presenting to the public what they deem essential to the public welfare, when the views thus presented do not violate in thought or language the acknowledged rules of decency; and that we demand that all laws against obscenity and indecency shall be so clear and explicit that none but actual offenders against the recognized principles of purity shall be liable to suffer therefrom.

Resolved, That we cannot but regard the appointment and authorization by the government of a single individual to inspect our mails, with power to exclude therefrom whatever he deems objectionable, as a delegation of authority dangerous to public and personal liberty, and utterly inconsistent with the genius of free institutions.

These resolutions, which were shown to us by Mr. Underwood before he reported them to the National Liberal League, commanded our cordial sympathy and approbation at the time, and command it even more to-day, when the need of such principles is more than ever apparent. The arrest of Mr. D. M. Bennett for circulating "obscene and blasphemous" publications, by an agent of the Young Men's Christian Association who has been clothed with extraordinary power over the mails by a special act of Congress, shows that the suspected purpose of perverting this power to the disguised persecution of free-thought is no mere chimera of the imagination, but rather a serious danger which threatens the freedom of the press and ought to make clear to all liberals the necessity of defending their own equal rights before the law. What right has any United States official to prosecute any man for "blasphemy" under United States statutes? Is not such an oppressive act a proof that Church and State are not yet practically separated in this country, and that the cause of the National Liberal League is the cause of every individual freethinker? Is it not a proof that the national Constitution, secular though it is in every line, fails to protect adequately the equal religious rights of the citizens, and is in urgent need of amendment in order to protect them? How can any candid mind fail to acknowledge the rightfulness and practical need of just such a movement as that which the National Liberal League was organized to promote?

We are aware (and we deeply regret the fact) that the prosecution of D. M. Bennett raises a mixed question, and that the cunning conjunction of "obscenity" with "blasphemy" in the indictment will inevitably and lamentably operate to the injury of the defendant in the community at large, and even with the better and more cleanly-minded portion of the great liberal party. There is no more fondness for "obscenity" in the majority of liberals than there is in the majority of Christians; and whoever asserts that there is makes himself guilty of a foul and wicked slander. Yet it is a familiar artifice of the Christian party, with some honorable exceptions, to assert a necessary connection between so-called "infidelity" and "immorality," and by means of this villainous falsehood to excite wide-spread suspicion of all whose honest devotion to truth places them outside of the churches. Unjust as it is, this suspicion lays a double duty upon every liberal to keep himself above all possibility of being charged with immorality, either of act or of word; for if he suffers himself to be smirched, there are multitudes all ready to cry out, "See what a vile set these liberals are!" and a part of this calumnious reproach falls even upon the best and purest. When a "scandal case" occurs among Christians, it is regarded, as it ought to be regarded, as involving ignominy to the parties actually guilty, and not to their associates in belief; but when anything scandalous is done or said by a liberal, the unrighteous prejudices of the public incline them to impute the blame not to the offender as an individual, but rather to his religious opinions.

For these reasons, every writer for the liberal press who has a keen sense of honor will feel himself peculiarly called upon to avoid any and every expression which violates the recognized laws of decency. If, however, he is insensible or callous to this obligation of honor, and allows himself to be tempted into indecencies, he has no just right to call upon his fellow-liberals, whose cause he has publicly disgraced and upon whose heads, as above explained, he has drawn a most undeserved odium, to defend him in these indecencies. The principles of free thought, free speech, and a free press, precious as they are, give no right to violate the unwritten but well-established canons of public propriety; and it is nothing but effrontery to invoke them as a sufficient justification for offences against it. There is no justification for such offences; and any liberal who is guilty of them is the worst enemy of the liberal cause. Whether committed by Christians or liberals, such offences ought to excite disgust, and do excite it in every mind which has no natural or acquired love of dirt; and, for one, we repudiate emphatically all obligation of defending any person who betrays the noble cause of intellectual liberty by abusing his own liberty so far as to insult the purity of his readers.

In what we have said above, let no one misunderstand us as prejudging the case of Mr. Bennett or of Mr. E. H. Heywood, who has also been arrested on a charge of circulating "obscene" publications. Until they have been adjudged guilty, they must be presumed to be innocent; and we are even ignorant of the specifications of the charges brought against them. Moreover, all that we have said above concerns only the moral, and not the legal, side of their case. If they have really fallen into what the unprejudiced public conscience shall pronounce "obscene" in fact, we shall not say a word against the moral judgment which must be entered against them in that court; but when suit is brought against them in the courts of the United States, we have many words to say against any judgment which may be entered against them there.

1. In the first place, nobody, not even Anthony Comstock himself, will pretend that either Mr. Bennett's Truth Seeker or Mr. Heywood's Cupid's Yokes is an "obscene" publication in the sense of being primarily designed to excite lewd passions or to corrupt the public morals. Mr. Bennett has published his paper, beyond all question, for general purposes highly honorable to himself and useful to the community; he has sought to uphold principles which are just and righteous, and to propagate what he believes to be true respecting religion. That he has intended to deprave or corrupt the public mind, we utterly disbelieve; on the contrary, his whole course gives the lie to any such supposition. Similarly, Mr. Heywood has written and published his pamphlet to advocate what he himself positively believes to be a higher and not a lower morality. Although his "free love" theory of morals, as set forth in this pamphlet, is one which we just as positively believe to be false, one-sided, logically ridiculous, and morally mischievous in all its tendencies, nevertheless we concede his full and entire right to plead his case as best he can before the public, and should consider it equally an absurdity and a crime to invoke the aid of the law in putting down a theory which will most assuredly put itself down, and all the more quickly in proportion as it gets unprejudiced consideration. In other words, both these men have intended to do good, and not evil, by their publications; their motives have been honorable, and not base; and the law cannot punish them, or suppress their publications, without coming itself under the just condemnation of all who prize the just freedom of the press. Their publications do not belong in that vile class of "obscene literature," expressly intended to make money for its propagators by pandering to the passions of the young and the inexperienced of both sexes, which alone ought to be suppressed as a manifest crime against those whom the community is bound to protect.

2. If either Mr. Bennett or Mr. Heywood is condemned, it can only be on the score of alleged obscene expressions occurring incidentally in pages devoted mainly to the advocacy of the writers' sincere opinions. Whether any such incidental expressions can be shown to be obscene, or not, is a question on which we do not feel called upon to express any opinion whatever. The ground we take is that all publications should be judged by their manifest main intent, not by any incidental expressions whatever; that, if this main intent is not self-evidently a depraved and depraving one, the law should not interfere at all; and that, even if some of the expressions complained of should be justly adjudged obscene, it would be an act of oppression, and a most dangerous infringement of the freedom of the press, to suppress the publications as a whole, or to inflict legal penalties on their publishers.

The justice of this position will be apparent on the very slightest reflection. If it is to be ruled by our courts of law that every book, no matter what its main intent or character, shall be suppressed, if it Contains a single expression which may fairly be adjudged obscene, then a large part, and the most valuable part too, of all English literature must be absolutely discarded! What would become of Shakespeare, of Milton, of nine-tenths of the great classics of all languages? Nay, put the case which will touch most nearly the wofully misled parties who are active in these prosecutions: what would become of the Bible? There is more obscenity in the Bible than in almost any other book of the size that can be named; and we protest against the suppression of the Truth Seeker or of Cupid's Yokes, merely on account of alleged obscene incidental expressions, unless the Bible is also suppressed on the same ground. There has got to be common sense in this matter, and in the long run there will be. It will not do to suppress every book which may contain really obscene expressions; and if the courts undertake to do it, then they should be compelled to do impartial justice in this matter, and not only imprison D. M. Bennett and E. H. Heywood, but Anthony Comstock himself, and everybody else who has helped to circulate the Bible. Fair play, gentlemen prosecutors! The guillotine at last cut off the head of Robespierre himself: let his fate be a warning to you!

Even on the ground of "obscenity," therefore, it would be a most unjust and impolitic course to convict these defendants,—yes, even if it should be overwhelmingly proved that their publications do contain some incidental expressions of an obscene character. If this is the case, the higher court of the public conscience will pronounce all the condemnation they ought to receive. But, on the ground of "blasphemy," to punish these men would be an outrage so bold, and in these latter days so perilous, that it would make them martyrs at once, and multiply the effect of their works beyond all calculation. It would be an act demonstrating to the most careless that Orthodoxy is resorting to measures of sheer desperation in its conflict with modern thought and scientific truth. This we believe; but the consolation is that, when any bad cause is driven to desperate measures, its end is near.

COMMON-SENSE vs. COMMUNISM.

Evolution is not revolution, as some of our rabid reformers appear to believe. Every age is but the result and inevitable outgrowth of its predecessor. The fatal fallacy which underlies such arguments as the "Plea for Communism" (published in THE INDEX of Nov. 15), is the belief that it is possible to reconstruct modern society de novo. The admirable article in the same number of this journal, by the Hon. Elzsur Wright, entitled "Republican Taxation," contained the annihilating answer to all such crude opinions of the mutual relations of human beings as must be held by sincere communists.

As it is not easy to improve upon Mr. Wright's concise statement, which will bear repetition and the most thoughtful consideration, we reproduce the brief paragraphs in which he sums up the actual facts of the case, thus: "In civilization, as the race advances in the creation of material wealth by the use of natural forces and division of labor, property tends inevitably to distribute itself more and more unequally. . . . It is of no use to talk, as some honest reformers do, of taking capital out of the hands of its proprietors, or the wages of labor from the dominion of the law of supply and demand. The acquisition of property is an attribute of human nature, one of its grand passions, to be governed but not eradicated. It is capable of the noblest uses and applications. The comfort of it is the natural and just reward of labor. If Nature had made mankind equal like the working-bees, communism would doubtless be the right thing. But inasmuch as human individuals differ from each other almost as much as all other animals put together, the righteous regulation of individualism is all that can be aimed at. To prevent fraud and theft by taking capital out of the control of its owners, is like trying to prevent occasional murder by the universal application of strychnine. What can be done, and what only waits the more general diffusion of knowledge to be done, is to secure the protection of individual property in its natural and necessary rights, and to instruct its owners in those social and patriotic duties which give to property a large part of its possible value."

This question as to the proportional distribution of the results of labor is older than civilization, and almost coeval with humanity. The Ninevites under Sardanapalus, the Grecian Helots, and the peasants of old Rome, doubtless discussed it, as did the Israelites at Babylon, or before Moses led them out of Egypt. Always and everywhere the laboring producer has been dissatisfied with the scanty portion allotted to him over and above his daily needs. The dissatisfaction has consisted in the standard adopted as the minimum measure of comfort to be tolerated by the average workman. History only repeats itself, in a different way, and the analogical method and inductive philosophy alike forbid us to believe that future ages can do more than perfect the present system which the experience of past generations has proven to be the best for humanity at large.

The whole idea of the commune is founded upon a false assumption, inasmuch as it presupposes that men are unselfish, and willing to work as hard for their race, as a whole, as for themselves and their wives and families. Such certainly is not the case; nor is there the slightest reason for believing it ever will be.

Communism is defined by Worcester as "communism of property"; that is to say, the denial of the right of individuals to the exclusive possession of more than the air they breathe, the food they eat, the clothes they wear, and the ground they stand upon. It is evident that this principle applies as well to the right of a man to have and to hold the person of one woman as his wedded wife, as to his home or horse. Not that women are to be regarded in the same light as property, but that the primal unit of modern civilization, the monogamous family, is rather based upon property and the laws governing its inheritance than upon monogamy. Even polygamy does not do away with the modern usage of dividing an estate among the children of its deceased owner. But communism strikes straight at the very root of the family relations, and thus it is nearly always the case that modern communists are found to be "Free Lovers." The Oneida Community is a logical instance in point. Children there are not permitted to know their own parents. A mother must not ask to have the exclusive charge of the babe she has born into the world; and for a man to monopolize the possession of a single female is frankly admitted to be impossible, and the very desire is stigmatized as "selfish." Now human nature, as at present constituted, will not accept such conditions of existence except in the very rarest and most exceptional instances.

No instinct of ordinary human nature is stronger than the desire to accumulate a personal fortune, except perhaps that of perpetuating a family; and communism must first extirpate each of these two natural traits of character before it can hope for success. Plato in his Republic has sublimated the communistic idea, even going so far as to advocate the very theory regarding community of wives and children adopted by the Oneida Communists. He puts into the mouth of Socrates, in the fifth book, the following words: "The law, I said, which is the sequel of this and of all that has preceded, is to this effect: 'That the wives of these guardians are to be common, and their children also common, and no parent is to know his own child, nor any child his parent.' But, farther on, in the same book, Plato confesses that "we are unable to prove the possibility of a city being ordered in the manner described." Now what was impossible when Plato lived is again held up, after all the centuries which have since elapsed as the modern millennium. To quote the author of the "Plea for Communism": "Common sense teaches that communism would educate and develop the physical, intellectual, and affectional nature of humanity, and the people would live in love and peace, instead of the wars and strife which now afflict society."

It is the old, old story over again: there is nothing novel or original in the plan. Legislation is to remake human nature. Sir Thomas More in his Utopia; St. Augustine in his City of God; John Locke's Constitution for the Better Government of the Carolinas; Cicero in his De Republica; Jean Jacques Rousseau and Jean Paul Richter; Goethe in Germany; Milton in England; Fourier in France,—have, in one way or another, given expression to every form of the communistic idea, and still ordinary human nature will have none of it; and whether under a St. Simon in France, or a Brigham Young in Utah, or even under the democratic principle of a "Brook Farm" organization, in Massachusetts, the invincible "individualism" of mankind reasserts itself and claims its inalienable right of independence.

If Plato could but reappear to recognize the bastard progeny of his ideal State, he would again, perhaps, repeat that "royal lie" in which, however, there is more of truth than will ever be crammed into modern communism:—

"Citizens, you are brothers, yet God has framed you differently. Some of you have the power to command, and these he has composed of gold, wherefore also they have the greatest honor; others of silver, to be auxiliaries; others again who are to be husbandmen and craftsmen he has made of brass and iron; and the species will generally be preserved in the children. But, as you are of the same original family, a golden parent will sometimes have a silver son, or a silver parent a golden son. And God proclaims to the rulers, as a first principle, that before all, they should watch over their offspring, and see what elements mingle in their nature; for if the son of a golden or silver parent has an admixture of brass and iron, then Nature orders a transposition of ranks, and the eye of the ruler must not be pitiful towards his child because he has to descend in the scale and become a husbandman or artisan, just as there may be others sprung from the artisan class who are raised to honor and become guardians and auxiliaries. For an oracle says that, when a man of brass or iron guards the State, it will then be destroyed."

A. W. K.

A CANADIAN LIBERAL LEAGUE.

From the November issue of the Toronto Free-thought Journal, the new Canadian monthly paper so ably edited by Messrs. Evans and Hargrave, we learn that the Liberal League movement is extending itself to Canada, with reference to the separation of Church and State in the Dominion. The proposal to take up this great issue at the approaching convention of the Canadian Freethought Society commands our heartiest sympathy, and we append in full the call for this convention, signed by President Evans and Secretary Hargrave, both of whom were present as delegates at the Rochester Congress, and were welcomed to seats in it by a cordial and unanimous vote of the convention:—

Canadian Freethought Convention.

A mass Convention of the freethinkers of Canada will be held in Albert Hall, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Jan. 22 and 23, 1878, when it is hoped a very large number of the freethinkers of Canada will be present for the following reasons:—

1st. Honest freethinkers are now debarred from seeking their just rights in any Canadian Court of Law, or from any place of honor or emolument requiring the taking of the Christian oath, while the dishonest hypocrite, by taking the oath prescribed by law, may cheat or despoil the freethinker, whose very honesty has been a bar to success.

2d. The immense amount of church property exempt from taxation in Canada, and consequently receiving to that extent aid and support from the State, makes it incumbent upon freethinkers to take measures for the entire separation of Church and State. At present this is only so in theory, for the simple fact that millions of dollars of extra taxation are paid by the people that should be paid by the Church, conclusively shows that practically there is now in Canada the closest union between Church and State.

3d. The exclusion from our public schools of every shade of theology that the children of all may receive the best practical and secular education, without the introduction of the Bible or other sectarian books. In a community of mixed religious beliefs every good citizen should bestir himself to obtain this end.

4th. For the more thorough organization of the freethought element of Canada, whereby the freethinkers of the Dominion may become united and known to each other. The freethinkers of Canada are sufficiently numerous to make their wishes respected in the councils of the country, and therefore the fault is theirs if they do not procure the remedies for their legal, social, and other disabilities their position, numbers, and influential character at once demands. In union there is strength.

In making the above call for the second convention of the freethinkers of Canada, the officers of the Canadian Freethought Society are not unmindful of the fact of the thoroughly independent character of freethinkers generally. Unlike the members of religious bodies they do not give play to the mere emotional part of their humanity, and consequently there is always absent from their proceedings every element of blind enthusiasm. But in asking for thorough union of freethought its promoters are only asking for the propagation and continuance of that which has only just sprang into life from the smouldering ashes of former persecutions. Let the freethinkers of the Dominion testify by their next convention that freethought in Canada is a living entity, worthy of the respect of its numerous enemies, and prepared to claim forever the esteem and gratitude of its many friends. J. ICK EVANS, Pres. C. F. S.

W. J. R. HARGRAVE, Cor. Sec.

THE NEW YORK Sun states, as an illustration of the inconsistencies of professional Christians, that, in a certain fashionable up-town church last Sunday, $16,000 were subscribed for foreign missions, while in the four weeks previous a charitable association had applications from five thousand nine hundred and sixty-eight families for relief from starvation. A visiting committee found in the Sixth Ward thirteen hundred persons without shoes. It was the sight of such inconsistencies as these that prompted Ebenezer Elliott, England's poet of the poor, to write:—

"Their Bibles for the heathen load our fleets;
Lo! gleaning eastward, they inquire, 'What news?'
'We die,' we answer, 'foodless, in the streets.'
And what reply your men of Gospel views?
Oh, 'they are sending bacon to the Jews.'
Their lofty souls have telescopic eyes,
Which see the smallest speck of distant pain,
While at their feet a world of agonies,
Unseen, unheard, unheeded, writhes in vain."

Communications.

"RADICAL REVIEW" FOR NOVEMBER.

The Radical Review for November, 1877, is a book of six hundred and twenty-four fair and solid pages,—pages, too, for the most part, full of excellent reading for intelligent and thoughtful persons. Indeed, in attempting to write any appreciative notice of it, one is led first of all to express surprise that the editor can afford to give his readers so much for their money. If (as I sincerely hope is far from being likely) Mr. Tucker should finally be forced to discontinue the publication of his exceedingly valuable quarterly, one cannot but surmise that such a literary catastrophe will be owing largely to his too great liberality in dealing with his patrons as respects the quality and quantity of the banquet which he periodically spreads before them. To carefully husband his resources, that he may indefinitely prolong the noble enterprise on which he has so gallantly ventured, is the advice which spontaneously slips from the pen that here would call attention to this third number of the Radical Review.

There is a galaxy of unusually splendid star-papers in this number, which shine with a lustre sufficient to distinguish any magazine on this or on the other side of the Atlantic. I refer to the first, fourth, eighth, and ninth articles, severally by Henry Edger, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, and E. H. Heywood. Mr. Edger discusses "Prostitution and the International Woman's League." The motto with which the writer prefaces his paper is pregnant with needful counsel to all who enter the arena of controversy. It is from Richard Congreve: "Human questions need for their effectual study to be regarded from all points of view, and from all points of view simultaneously." In other words, he who fails to understand and appreciate his opponent's position cannot be supposed to understand his own, and might better lay down his pen. I wish Mr. Edger's paper might be read by every Woman's Rights champion, and by every one who undertakes to discuss the "social question." After that, it should be read by every intelligent man, and especially by every man who would be a good husband and father. Among the more striking passages in this altogether admirable essay are the following: "Morality and religion are to find in this our day a new logical anchorage ground. The various social relations will repose, in a fast approaching future, on a new ideal. Fictitious solutions of the various social and moral problems will be replaced by demonstrable solutions." "There are marriages which a really delicate moral sense will esteem infinitely baser, more impure, and in every way more wicked, than whole classes of extra-legal intimacies; and some of these intimacies that are immeasurably farther removed from prostitution than are vast numbers of legal marriages." "Society needs that all useful members be adequately sustained, and all their real wants adequately provided for." "For the sake of the better future, . . . woman must still condescend to perpetuate the race." "There can be no possible solution of the question of prostitution save in the social installation of a higher and much higher, moral ideal than any now recognized." "It is within the conjugal bond itself that restraint is most important. We need in fact an entirely new ideal of the marriage relation." "The influence which woman can exert upon public opinion in the drawing-room is incomparably more powerful than that which she can wield from the platform."

Samuel Johnson's paper on "Transcendentalism" is, I think, by far the grandest essay on that subject which has been presented to American readers since 1842, when Emerson read his famous lecture in the Masonic Temple in this city; and in some respects Mr. Johnson's production is superior to Mr. Emerson's. He has a masterly grasp of his subject, and his exposition of what Transcendentalism is, as well as his vindication of it as a method of thought, is simply superb. His style of writing is beyond praise, being full not only of the power of reason, but of the fervor of feeling and the beauty of imagination. Mr. Johnson is not only a philosopher, but a poet: he sees at once with the eye of the intellect and the eye of the soul. He has a mind which, while it is incapable of slighting the scientific method, is capable of perceiving its limitations, and of indicating its necessary antecedent and supplement. Mr. Johnson holds that "analysis of thought as essential and primal leads to the recognition of certain ground-forms of thought as universal, and therefore as known only by transcending the observation of facts. . . . Such ideas as unity, universe, law, cause, duty, substance, permanence, are thus affirmed to be intuitively, or directly perceived; because while not to be accounted for by any observed and calculated data, they are yet fundamental, and must be referred to organic relations of the mind with truth." Hence Mr. Johnson affirms that "on this intuition the sciences rest; by this they live, and move, and have their being." It will not do to attempt to quote from, or to give an outline of, this remarkable essay: it should be read entire by every one interested in the important discussion between science and intuition.

John Weiss's paper on "The Spirit that was in Jesus" shows that it is entirely possible for an audacious radical to have a fine appreciation of the wonderful Galilean. I think that Jesus himself would have been delighted to sit for such a portrait of his essential character, and to know that it was to be handed down the ages for all his friends to admire. I should not wonder if, after all, the true "holy sepulchre of our Lord" should be discovered by the investigating radicals, and Jesus be brought thence where he has lain so long and put on the only real throne from which it is possible for him to receive the enduring homage of mankind. Mr. Weiss also has in this number an exquisite poem on "The Preacher's Love-Vacation."

In "The Great Strike: Its relations to Labor, Property, and Government," E. H. Heywood appears in a rôle wherein, I think, he must prove exceptionally pleasing to those whose attention he has been wont to challenge. It is that of a calm, judicious, and weighty reasoner upon subjects that he has long considered and much talked of. It has never been my fortune to see a piece of writing from Mr. Heywood's pen, so worthy to arrest attention and so powerful to lead, persuade, and convince the reader as this. It shows the best points of his really admirable brain and heart. I am sure that this strong, brave, dispassionate, and eloquent paper will make some of his friends wish that he would be content to do more of this work and less of some other kinds. Mr. Heywood is a man of unusual ability, and a real natural leader of men. How important that all such should be free from the least taint of fanaticism; that their most daring radicalism should be tempered by an indispensable modicum of conservatism! Mr. Heywood's article should be taken as an antidote to Tom Scott and Mr. Grosvenor.

Mr. Morse's "Chips" are never dry, and he has a large pile of them in this number, which furnish an excellent dessert to the bountiful repast which precedes them.

A. W. S.

MINGLED PRAISE AND BLAME.

PARKMAN, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I have read your paper at intervals since its commencement in Toledo, and the Radical previously. The present year now near its close, I believe, I pay half the price of subscription on the single copy that has found its way to this corner of the world, and take the paper after it has gone the round of the community; usually getting it a week or two after the date of publication, and occasionally missing a No. altogether. I plead broken health and chronic poverty as an excuse for not having been a full and regular subscriber from the first.

I regard THE INDEX as actually leading the religious thought of the age. Moreover, it is, so far as I know, the only paper in the land or the world which, in the discussion of religious questions and topics, deals primarily and fundamentally with the nature and truth of things. Considering the proportion of the people in this section whose religious conceptions and theological views are mainly in accord with its fundamental tenets—theoretically at least,—this township ought to furnish a list of fifty subscribers to such a paper, leaving such as do not feel able to take it entirely out of the question. Yet, such is the indifference among liberals in regard to anything and everything pertaining to religious thought and culture, that I doubt if one-tenth of that number would reward a special and thorough canvass. Here as elsewhere, generally, I think, the Orthodox are the only class of people who, as a class, seem to attach any special importance to their religious convictions.

I have been greatly interested, and not a little edified, in the discussion of "The Scientific Method in Religion," particularly that phase of it recently presented in the shape of what may be stated as "Science vs. Transcendentalism" in your columns. Agreeing with the position of THE INDEX in the main, there yet seems to me to be great and important truth on the other side not yet fully brought out and clearly defined; though the subject has been most ably handled on both sides thus far, and in a most excellent spirit. That religion can ever become an unmixed blessing to the world, or in this or any other age of general intelligence a blessing at all, on the whole, except as it adopts the "Scientific Method" in settlement of questions coming within its jurisdiction, particularly to the extent of the how and the wherefore of applying the principles of its requirements to actual life in society, is to my mind beyond question or doubt. But, admitting this, it seems to me equally certain that there are questions, or rather conceptions or intuitions—or whatever word best expresses that something which language is utterly inadequate to express fully,—concerning which the SOUL alone is authority, and its utterances oracular; questions which are in their very nature super-scientific, in any sense in which science is known and applied, or, as representing the intellect, the understanding, the reasoning powers of man, can be applied—preceding and transcending all intellectual conclusion and scientific demonstration, and, in the absence of which, leaving man as he is in other respects, all development and progress must inevitably tend in the direction of increased facilities—though by a more and more polished process—for ever-grasping selfishness and refinement of cruelty. But I have not space to particularize. I hope the subject will not be allowed to rest without further elucidation in your columns.

The one single important failure on the part of THE INDEX, to deal comprehensively and justly with a question of great and absorbing interest, that I remember to have noticed, appears in an editorial in the 2d of August No., headed "THE RIGHT OF RIOT." Had my reading of this article constituted my sole acquaintance with the paper, I fear I should have found it difficult to feel any further interest in its behalf, or in behalf of any Free Religious or Liberal League of which it was the accredited exponent and organ.

According to my observation—and that of a respectable and, in these latter days, rapidly increasing number of other people, not altogether of the baser sort, as well,—it is not an unusual thing for the general press of the country, with a great flourish of trumpets in behalf of "Constitutional obligations,"

"vested rights," "protection of property," "law and order," and the like, to array itself on the side of the oppressor when there is power, in opposition to the claims of natural justice and the common rights of human nature, at whatever point the irrepressible conflict involved breaks out into open and violent rupture,—as in the nature of things it must, sooner or later. I am an old-time abolitionist; and, having drank in something of the spirit and logic of that great movement at an early age, I instinctively resent and despise and execrate whatever is tainted with that treasonable and cowardly, though in many quarters respectable and popular heresy,—more particularly when it manifests itself in connection with a public profession of especial devotion to the requirements of freedom and humanity.

Fortunately, however—for me at least, and for the interests of a free and natural religion, so far as my limited influence might go towards helping or hindering the circulation of the paper,—I had long ago become convinced of its high character and aims, and that its editor is really one of a thousand, not only in point of ability and integrity, but of a broad and generous and self-sacrificing philanthropy, as well. And I can but feel assured that if his labors in another and different field of thought and activity had not been of so constant and absorbing a nature as to preclude his giving the attention necessary to become familiar with the evil nature and oppressive workings of the unjust and unnatural system of things, out of which the late strike grew, and out of which, if allowed to continue, other disturbances similar in character, but of vastly more extended and disastrous results, are sure to follow, he could not have failed to perceive the fallacy of attempting to fix the responsibility at the point of outbreak, and fasten the stigma wholly, or mainly, upon the parties immediately concerned, or to cure, or even mitigate the evil by an appeal to the bayonet or the hangman's rope.

There are several points in the editorial in question, which to my perception will not bear close scrutiny. The position that a riot—as there defined—is necessarily "a thing of infamy," does not seem to me to be at all tenable, except by a line of argument that logically places all armed revolutions in the same category.

But I have already transcended my prescribed limits, and fear I am trespassing too freely upon your valuable space. I had designed but the briefest reference to this matter in this communication. But, as one of your correspondents recently said, "the subject grows."

Whatever may be said as to the real character of the strike, at least, one good effect of the sudden and simultaneous uprising of so large a body of men, over so great an extent of territory, is already manifest in the discussion it has aroused throughout the country, concerning the rights of labor,—a subject having hitherto attracted but little attention. This is a great gain. The sparks emitted by the clash of honest opinions on the field of earnest and free discussion light the way of truth. Moreover, the interests involved in this question seem to me to be closely allied to those to the advocacy of which THE INDEX is so ably and manfully devoted. The material and spiritual rights and interests of humanity are essentially one and inseparable. On the other hand, the assumed right to invade the realm of honest toil and industry, and by superior ability and tact, through trained foresight and sharp practice made legal and respectable, monopolize and control the fruits of other men's labor, the means of material subsistence and comfort, and of mental development and culture, is exactly identical in character, and in essential moral effect, with that of dominating and lordling it over the soul in matters of faith and conscience in the name of God. On either side they stand or fall together.

In this last half of the nineteenth century, these two questions—the rights of labor and the rights of conscience—are up for a serious hearing, and will down at no man's bidding. The latter, demanding full and thorough consideration on its merits, feeling strong in the truth and sure of the result, is, in the main, cool, collected, and dignified,—patiently, hopefully, and confidently biding its time. The former, more importunate and threatening in its attitude, because nearer the pressing and imperative needs of every-day life, and therefore cannot wait, is, I think, up for immediate settlement, at all hazards and at any cost,—the leading feature of which settlement must be the recognition by government and society of the right of labor, whether of hand or brain, to the fruits of legitimate industry, as against all claims of railroad kings, millionaires, stock-gamblers, speculators, and monopolists, whatsoever. This to my mind is, beyond doubt, the real meaning of all labor-strikes, riots, disturbances, whether, on the part of the actors launched with definite conscious purpose, or stung to reckless outbreak and blind resistance by actual privation and want, and a human sense of wrong and outrage. Whether or not there is enough of wisdom and justice among the wealthy and ruling classes, and enough of comprehension of the true nature and source of their wrongs, and of a just and enlightened spirit in seeking the remedy, on the part of the toiling masses, to effect a peaceable solution of the problem—if, indeed, our day of grace is not already past,—will, I feel sure, depend largely on how far, and the degree of power and authority with which the radical press and pulpit—we have nothing to hope from the conservative and time-serving—shall proclaim and enforce the sentiment of the heaven-inspired declaration that Righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is not only a reproach, but a source of imminent and infinite danger to any people.

But I am again forgetting that my pen is running counter to space not altogether unlimited.

Respectfully yours, J. H. PHILLIPS.

THE SILVER DOLLAR.

WEST MERIDEN, Ct., Nov. 23, 1877.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I think our friend, Mr. Stark, should have based his silver argument on the statute definition, instead of a dictionary one. In this case, the original statute definition nearly coincides with that of Webster.

In our first coinage act, April 2, 1792, the dollar of 371½ grains pure silver (416 standard silver) was made the unit. The amount of alloy was subsequently changed (making 412½ grains standard); but, until 1873, the United States dollar always contained 371½ grains pure silver, and was a legal tender in the discharge of all money obligations. (The gold dollar became also legal tender in 1849.) In 1873, silver was demonetized,—some say surreptitiously. It is said that President Grant, who signed the bill, did not discover the fact of demonetization until a year after the act.

This act of 1873 prohibits the issue of all gold and silver coins, except such as are therein authorized. In the authorized list, the old silver dollar is omitted, and the gold dollar retained, and the unit of value transferred to the latter. In the Revised Statutes, issued soon after, the section which created the old silver dollar was dropped, and the gold dollar declared the unit of value. (v. Section 3511, Rev. Stat.)

Hence, all obligations to pay coin, made prior to the act of 1873, can be discharged in the silver dollar of 371½ grains pure silver, which was the unit of value to that date.

All coin obligations exceeding $5, made since the act of 1873, must be discharged upon the basis of the gold dollar as unit, unless otherwise specified in the contract.

All United States bonds issued prior to 1873 are contracts whose principal and interest are payable in coin. As gold and silver coin were both legal tender at the issue of these bonds, our government has the option to pay in either metal. United States bonds issued since 1873 state specifically that the interest is payable in gold or silver coin of the standard value of the United States in June, 1870. As in June, 1870, both gold and silver were legal tender, we must conclude that all United States bonds may be legally paid in either metal.

The same is true of all private coin contracts made previous to 1873.

But if silver dollars are not coined, how can debtors take the benefit of their option? They will be compelled to pay in the dearer metal,—made dearer by no fault of theirs, but by the demonetization of silver in Germany, the subsequent course of the Latin Monetary Union, and the consequent demand for gold.

Let silver be remonetized and made legal tender in full, and there is every reason to believe that the consequent demand for it will raise its price nearly, if not quite, to that of gold. Even those of our political economists who are not in favor of remonetization admit this.—D. A. Wells for example; and they admit also our right to pay in silver.

So there is no real reason to suppose that either debtor or creditor will be injured by payment being made in the terms contracted. Some creditors may fall of anticipated gain, expected to accrue from the rise of gold, from its continually increasing demand.

The predicted return of our bonds from Europe will probably never take place; or, if it does, not for the reasons assigned. But if it did occur, we could not surely be greatly harmed by having a larger portion of our debt held at home. Now about one-half, I think, is held abroad, so that the interest paid annually abroad on our public debt is not far from $100,000,000. Besides this, about $50,000,000 are paid on railroad and other bonds held abroad, and as much more expended for foreign travel.

But I am making my letter too long, and must close.

Yours,

EMILY J. LEONARD.

MR. NEVILLE ON MATERIALISM.

I always read the short and pithy letters of H. Clay Neville to THE INDEX with great interest. The form of impatient protest in which many of his comments on the tendencies of modern thought shape themselves is highly provocative, and I yield to an impulse, before felt, to offer a few suggestions in reply. Mr. Neville's dissatisfaction with the ultimate conclusions of the scientific school is not unusual nor difficult to understand. Most of us have probably felt the same doubts,—doubts which on closer reflection, it seems to me, we must decide to be quite irrelevant to the main issue. We have to bear in mind that Truth cannot always wear a beneficent aspect; and part of her work is iconoclastic. She must destroy as well as reveal. When, therefore, any new thought or system is presented to our consideration, we are to determine, not how far it coincides with preconceived notions, nor to what extent it adds support to life-long and cherished convictions, but whether it is in itself true. Having once become convinced of its truth, we have then made it the test and standard for whatever errors of judgment or delusions have preceded it.

For instance, having once admitted the truth of materialism, we are bound to discard the old notions of life and duty which do not accord with it, as so many mistakes and foolish fancies. That often we cannot do this without great pain and sorrow, without an "agonizing protest of every instinct of the soul," argues nothing against the new belief, but only proves how deep-seated superstitious hopes have become, when their uprooting seems to tear up every vestige of faith and joy, and ruin even life itself.

I understand Mr. Neville's position to be this. He will, if need be, grant the truth of materialism; but he will never pretend that he likes it. He will always consider himself in some sense defrauded.

He accepts the doctrine in much the same fashion as one receives an unwelcome guest, acknowledging its claims and merits, and consigning it to some cold upper room of "the intellect" quite set apart from comfortable family uses. Mr. Neville writes: "I do not say that materialism is false, but I do say that it does not meet the great spiritual wants of the human race." Now does it not necessarily follow that, if the materialistic conception of the universe is the true one, it must meet all man's natural wants? Is it reasonable to suppose that these natural wants will not be responded to in some way? As for those so-called "spiritual wants," are we not justified in concluding them to be in great measure superficial, wants which have arisen through long ages of intellectual codding, and in no way representing actual necessities? If the doctrine of materialism is true (and I confess to sharing Mr. Neville's very evident hope that it is not),—but if it is, then may we not rest secure in the trust that it contains a complete solution of the problem of life than any ever offered in the sweet hope of immortality or conjured from the fantastic workings of our inner consciousness?

Farther along Mr. Neville says: "If materialism is true, the human mind has wrought a sublime miracle in conceiving a destiny for itself so much nobler than that which Nature has given it." The fine and finished satire of this sentence is thoroughly enjoyable, and does much to atone for the slight gap in its logic. What is Mr. Neville's warrant for supposing that, because she has failed to provide immortality, Nature has therefore fallen below the human mind in the projection of a noble destiny for man? Are we so sure that the hope of immortality is the highest incentive to human action, and the noblest aspiration of which man is capable? On the contrary, is it not becoming a serious question whether this confident expectation in another and better life is not enervating in its influence over both thought and morals? On general principles, is not any ethical system which endeavors to allay present distress and unhappiness by pointing to some future compensation, unsound in theory and unsafe in practice? Man has been a heavenly-minded creature quite long enough. It is time he bent his gaze earthward. The conviction that "heaven is his home" has in many cases, led him to feel only a tenant's interest and care for his present establishment.

"Materialism is the belief of despair," says Mr. Neville; but surely the doctrine is not to be blamed for this. It is not accountable for the reaction which comes from the rejection of older and more illusory creeds. When a new truth fails to make real the vain and delusive expectations fostered by old dogmas, ought we not to wait and see if it has not new beauties and inspirations of its own? Harriet Martineau did not find a materialistic creed to be one of despair; and if she is one of the "few hardy natures" whom such a religion suits, we cannot but wish the number would increase. She made it the basis of a life devoted to the service of mankind, a service in which she never tired or lost enthusiasm. Contrasted with the rich and fecund growth of those creeds whose root and nourishment lie in the imagination, and whose topmost branches we fondly alight to as "spiritual aspirations," the doctrine of materialism may seem very barren; but its barrenness is one which, if turned to right uses, may be made to blossom like the rose. Materialism may have no heaven to offer us, no God to explain, but it surrounds us on every side with opportunities for work; and if it does no more than teach us a stern self-reliance, a love of work for work's sake, of humanity for humanity's sake, its lesson will have been most salutary. Under the old regime, we have become somewhat effeminate in our ways and fastidious in our tastes. The new order is more Spartan in its methods, and cares more for the whole than the individual. It is just possible that man and his little hope of a future life are not such important factors in the great sum of race and world-development as he is wont to think.

CELIA P. WOOLLEY.

CHICAGO, Nov. 23, 1877.

THE ROCHESTER PLATFORM.

FRIEND ABBOT:—

1.—Technically women are citizens, even as they are human beings; practically they are not.

Where the full rights of citizenship—voting and office-holding—have been claimed under the Constitution, the courts have ruled that, if the letter concede such rights, the spirit does not. It was not the design of the framers of the American Constitution to change the relative position of the sexes, as they have stood for ages under the British Constitution. Primogeniture and slavery also remained. The rights of male citizens are denied to female citizens, and will continue to be denied, until a distinct recognition of women as citizens, equal with men in all the processes of framing and executing the laws is made by Constitutional amendment. The cost to procure such amendment will be less than to obtain the recognition under existing legal conditions.

2.—A Constitutional declaration that by inherent rights the land of America belongs to the people of America, and that by law each citizen shall be secured a portion thereof, would be of force against wages, slavery, and vested rights of corporations and capitalists,—as the declaration, that all are born free, was against the vested rights of slaveholders and oldest sons. It is an axiom in law that, where public and private interests conflict, the public is paramount. And so of Nation and States. A warrant deed to all the people would be a reiteration of the right of eminent domain.

Highways, railroads, canals, and intestine wars override all vested rights of individuals and corporations.

In our providential nation, the march of human rights, by Constitutional amendments, is towards the axiom that human beings have inalienable rights that neither fraud nor force can subvert, except temporarily.

When the conquering legions of Sherman swept onward in their march to the ocean, the inhabitants of plantations, villages, and cities saw that the inscription on his banner conflicted with their State rights, the decision of their courts, and their dearly-loved vested rights in human beings.

Human chattels were freed, but just so far as those freed men and women are not put in possession of land, their freedom is imperfect,—the march to the sea not finished, intestine war between capital and labor continues, the American Revolution is still in progress, chattel slavery is displaced by wages slavery,—and as the American Socialist judiciously puts it: "Thus far our representatives have failed to deal wisely with social and economic problems. They have not known how to settle great questions without resort to force. Neither party, nor both combined, had the sagacity to abolish slavery without violence; and they do not know how to adjust the claims of capitalist and laborer with or without violence; nor to institute equitable commerce; nor to institute representative money; nor has State or Church succeeded in arresting the development of dangerous classes, constituted on one hand of the mighty marauders of the money market, and, on the other, of a hireling labor contingent. On the contrary, crime is increasing; pauperism is increasing; commercial revolutions and bankruptcy are increasing; monopoly is increasing; labor-strikes, lock-outs, and riots multiply. We are following the same road that England has travelled; and, but for our larger territorial area, our landless class would be as great as that of England, and, like England, we should have our hereditary professional pauper and beggar class.

"This is a down-hill road, and must end somewhere,—either in a war of extermination, as in France when the land was redistributed; or our obvious perils may at last open our eyes to the fact of this antagonism of interest which sets every man against his neighbor and also divides society into hostile classes, and at the same time, perhaps, sets us to inquire whether this antagonism is a final necessity of human relations, and whether Unity of Interests may not also become a practical fact."

Land limitation is possible, feasible, in any State, without the Constitutional amendment. That is a great point gained to start with. It is a grand idea, and, like "Vote yourself a farm" in the days of Jackson, it would be a rallying cry to unite all reformers and liberals.

Please ponder the matter deeply, calmly. Limit the quantity of land to be owned by one citizen, on the ground that they who take the land of a citizen take the life of that citizen. Life and land are inseparable.

We are off the track: let us get on, without bloodshed, violence, or spoliation, which are sure to ensue if we neglect our duty.

No existing vested right would be infringed by a land limitation law. The land of the monopolist would be subdivided among heirs, and the sale of the overplus would increase the number of freeholders. None would be harmed or disturbed. It would fall upon the public mind like dew from heaven, quietly, peacefully; but, with the certainty of death, it would begin to produce practical results from the hour of its enactment.

Suppose Vanderbilt's millions had all been invested in land like Wadsworth's, in the Genesee flats, the best part of the State of New York, a land limitation law would, upon his demise, simply necessitate its redistribution.

Vanderbilt wanted to keep his property together,—to entail it. Is that best for the country? Who has the best right to the land of the American nation, and to determine its uses,—a dead man or living Americans? Shall departed generations—dead people, ghosts in the spirit world,—in their ignorance and selfishness, legislate the elements of existence away from the existing generation of living men and women? SOVEREIGN PEOPLE, let it not be!

Should all land-owners, at death, dedicate their lands to form parks to raise wild beasts, as is done in England to the extent of affecting the food question, what would the decisions of our Legislatures be in the matters of the invested rights of the dead versus the right to life on the part of the living?

F. W. EVANS.

THE COST OF EUROPE'S STANDING ARMIES.—A short essay, entitled The Question of Money, has recently appeared in Paris from the pen of M. de Girardin, in which it is made to appear that all existing governments, excepting those of England and America, are fast hastening to a bankrupt condition. This is caused mainly by the elaborate armies and fleets which a mutual suspicion compels all the powers of Europe to maintain as a standing threat to all encroachments of their neighbors. The result is that Europe is one vast camp, the soldiers of England, France, Germany, Austria, Italy, and Russia, costing those governments about $500,000,000 annually. England's army of 108,000 men costs $53,258,160; France's 480,000 men, $112,913,298; Russia's 575,000 men, $137,034,925; Germany's 412,000 men, $92,784,603; Italy's 205,000 men, $37,176,086; and Austria's 278,000 men, $47,708,914. The support of the various navies also costs $135,000,000 a year, of which England expends $60,000,000; France, $35,000,000; Russia, $24,000,000; Germany and Italy, $7,500,000 each, and Austria, $5,000,000. M. de Girardin concludes from the estimate of naval expenses that the danger of universal insolvency will never be removed until rulers shall cease to prosecute their search for an armament which no projectile can pierce and a projectile which no armament can withstand.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 ky, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.50 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OTHER

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Della Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeub Chander Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Faxon, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laquer, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 ky, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined list, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.50
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 8 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-4. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
DOBBS (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old. of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	3.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compiling.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life; The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	5.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	3.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
I. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
II. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAUTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lig.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.00
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Knowledge. By Bal-four Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.50
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	3.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MAHN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.00
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion.....	2.25
II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	1.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kakooe from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmases Celebrations—A. D. I. and MDCCLXV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Rook.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Redged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROBSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEUCHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmund, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Deals Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Walden.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Recent Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farwell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS!

THE INDEX.

231 Washington St., Boston.

E. P. BOON, 86 NASSAU STREET, has for sale Pamphlets relating to the following subjects: Atheism, Deism, Future Life, Infidelity, Mysticism, Natural Religion, Rationalism, Reason in Religion, Spiritualism, Supernaturalism, Liberalism, Free Thought, Moral Philosophy. Lists of above subjects will be furnished on application to E. P. BOON, 86 Nassau Street, New York.

LECTURES AND SERMONS.

BY
JOHN W. CHADWICK.

THIRD SERIES.

1. The Simplicity of True Religion.
2. The Rising Faith.
The following numbers of the first and second series can also be supplied: Thomas Paine, Best Use of Sunday, Higher Reverence, Self-Respect, God on Our Side, Economy and Waste, Piety of Modern Science, Immortal Life, Moral Aspects of Belief in Immortality, Idealizing the Real, The Coming Man, A Rational Church.
Sent to any address, postage paid, at 5 cents per copy, by
JAMES MILLER,
779 Broadway, New York.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

Is an ever-interesting eight-page Liberal family paper devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth.
Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds; it has no reverence for bibles or man-made gods, and it opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasures in another.
It has a variety of departments, is chaotic and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a first-rate Liberal paper. It must be the best, for it is the only one of its kind on this continent.
PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published
WEEKLY AT ONE DOLLAR A YEAR,
or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and in all cases stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address all communications to BETH WILBUR PAYNE, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street (near Broadway), New York.

CHRISTIANITY AND INFIDELITY!

A DISCUSSION BETWEEN
Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian, New York, and
D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the Truth Seeker.

SUBJECTS DISCUSSED:
Part I. The Relative Services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Independence.
Part II. The Relative Services of Christianity to Learning and Science.
Part III. Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that infidelity is true?

A thick 12mo volume of over 500 pages, well bound, sent post-paid by mail for One Dollar. Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST ORBED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.
Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Savior meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Paper, 25 cents.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by
THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS PAINE!

PAINE! Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer. Just issued. Clear—Concise—Vigorous—Logical—Eloquent—and Unanswerable! Just what every Liberal wants. Only 25 cents. Address E. C. WALKER, Box 36, Florence, Iowa.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN,

at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. John E. Williams, Pres. Met. Nat. Bank, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.; Mr. Moses H. Grinnell, N.Y.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.
EDITED BY
CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWO PENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.
Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM AND THE NEW FAITH.

By EDMUND C. STEDMAN.

12mo, Cloth extra, with Portrait of Mr. Frothingham, 75 cents.

A clear and effective presentation of what is known as Rationalism in Religion in an analysis, by an admirer of acknowledged genius, of the life and work of one of its leading teachers.

"A brilliant and appreciative essay."—Boston Post.

"Radical ideas are here formulated, and expressed in a strong, clear light."—Liberal Christian.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS BOOK.

A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 and '77 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1873, 1874, and 1875, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MADAME FOY'S

CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year, And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY

FOY & HARMON,
New Haven, Conn.

PROGRESSIVE EDUCATIONAL PAPERS.

Published by

HAILMANN & DOERFLINGER,

Milwaukee, Wis.

(German) "ERZIEHUNGS-BLÄTTER," monthly, per year, $2.12.

(English) "THE NEW EDUCATION," a monthly tract for parents and teachers, devoted to Kindergarten Culture and Educational Hygiene in Home and School. Per year, 50 cents.

(English) The "New Education" TRACTS. Nos. 1 and 2 ready. Six copies (of any one number, or assorted) sent to any address on receipt of a 2-cent stamp.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NEW ENGLAND

MUTUAL AID SOCIETY,

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

(Incorporated under the laws of Mass.)

THIS SOCIETY presents the simplest and cheapest method for making provision for the families of members in the event of disease, that has ever been offered to the public.

The membership may include nearly all persons of both sexes, who are not intemperate or of feeble condition, but will be divided into three classes, viz.:

Class No. 1.—For sound, temperate persons.

Class No. 2.—For equally healthy total abstainers.

Class No. 3.—For those who are not free from disease, but are able to attend daily to their usual avocations.

This arrangement is equitable for all, and the expense the same to enter either class. Applications are now received daily. Send for circular.

Persons who desire to become members, will please send their full address to the Secretary, or apply to nearest Agent.

Agents—both Ladies and Gentlemen are wanted as Canvassers in every Town and Village.

GEO. KEMPTON, Secretary,
New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.

2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.

3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.

4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.

5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	40
FIFTY.....	75
ONE HUNDRED.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED.....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED.....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED.....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND.....	12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 416.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSSES.

A MEETING of all friends of the Liberal League movement in Boston and vicinity will be held at Paine Hall, Friday evening, Dec. 14, at 7.30 o'clock. A full attendance is desired, and all interested will be welcome.

THE FOLLOWING Executive Sub-Committee of the National Liberal League for the State of South Carolina has been duly constituted: P. W. Fuller, chairman, D. B. Derasure, John Janes, and W. B. Stenhouse, all of Columbia, and A. R. Ahle, of Lexington.

REV. W. S. MESSNER, of Davenport, Iowa, has just left the Presbyterian communion, frankly assigning a change of belief as the cause. His request to have his name stricken from the rolls appears to us to be an example of the true and most dignified course in such an exigency.

MR. GLADSTONE has written an article for the Nineteenth Century in which he advances the theory that the so-called "color-blindness," now noted in exceptional instances, was once a common condition of the human race, and that the capacity to distinguish colors is a comparatively recent acquisition.

THE TOMPKINS COUNTY Liberal League announced a Ratification Meeting at Ithaca, N. Y., for last Monday evening, December 10; and THE INDEX will probably receive a report of its proceedings by and by. We are informed that this League includes twelve of the Professors of Cornell University.

MR. ROBERT C. SPENCER, of Milwaukee, member of the Executive Committee of the National Liberal League for Wisconsin, has issued a capital circular for the efficient organization of that State, suggesting that "it is desirable to form State, Congressional, County, and Township Leagues, auxiliary to the National Liberal League." We urge all our Wisconsin friends to cooperate with him heartily in this excellent object.

THE FIRST LIBERAL LEAGUE of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, has declared itself auxiliary to the National League, and taken out a charter accordingly. Its officers are—President, Robert C. Spencer; Vice-President, E. B. Wolcott; Secretary, Wm. A. Boyd; Treasurer, Wm. P. Merrill; Executive Committee, H. G. Benjamin, John Bentley, Arthur Bate, W. H. Sherman, H. H. Oldenbaga. There are thirty or forty Leagues in the country which have not yet affiliated themselves with the National League, and we trust they will all take this step, in order to secure greater influence for the movement as a whole.

ACCORDING to the Tribune, "it is stated that Colonel Robert Ingersoll has been challenged to a theological discussion in London, Dublin, or Chicago, by the Rev. Tresham D. Gregg, of Dublin. Mr. James Rea, formerly United States Consul to Belfast, says that Dr. Gregg is willing, if defeated in the contest, to retire from his work of propagating the gospel, and to withdraw from circulation his numerous theological works. On the other hand, if Ingersoll is beaten, he must forever afterward hold his peace against the Christian religion, and must also withdraw from circulation his book and other anti-orthodox documents."

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from Mr. Frank Hermance, New Haven, Conn., on behalf of the Free Lecture Association, 685; from Miss Phileas Carlin, Concord, Mass., 8; from Mr. Charles A. Simpson, Saxonville, Mass., 42; from Mr. Franklin Goodyear, Cortland, N. Y., 50. Total thus far acknowledged—9,651. The list received from Mr. Hermance is the largest yet returned; and collectors of signatures may well be encouraged in their efforts in other localities, when they see what success can be won by men in earnest. Why will not other liberal societies take up this petition, and by division of labor multiply the present list of signers by many thousands?

THE NEW YORK Tribune declares editorially, in its issue of December 8, that "the old party of Freedom" [by which it means the Republican party] is "still the party of the Churches and the School-Houses." If there had been less church and more school-house in it, it would never have become so corrupt as it is to-day. But the Democratic party is even worse. The permanence of free popular institutions in this country depends on the possibility of combining all good citizens in support of a government which shall know nothing of "Churches," but shall make "School-Houses" the underpinning of the whole republic. A party which should devote itself to the efficient protection of equal citizen-rights, religious as well as civil and political, to universal popular education, and to the honest administration of public affairs for the public good, is the one great need of American politics. If the people are incapable of originating and sustaining such a party, they are incapable of continued self-government, and must at last submit to such masters as Fate shall impose upon them.

THE BUREAU OF EDUCATION at Washington furnishes to the press the following dispatch concerning education in Germany: "The German Workingmen's Congress, held at Gera, Germany, in October last, unanimously resolved to petition the government that the standard of popular education be considerably raised, and that instruction in all the popular and higher institutions of learning be made gratuitous. The Congress also desires that the employment of children in factories be strictly forbidden, and the laws concerning the attendance of 'Fortbildungsschulen' (review schools, of three years' duration, for all graduates of elementary schools who do not enter secondary or technical schools) be vigorously enforced. The project of a new school law for Prussia has been prepared by the Minister of Public Instruction. It is believed that the bill will pass the Landtag this session. This bill changes denominational into undenominational schools, and makes religion an optional branch of instruction. The supporters of denominational schools petitioned the emperor not to sanction the bill if it passed the Landtag. The emperor declared that he would not sanction this or any other bill tending to abolish religious training in schools. He deems religious training essential to a good education."

OUR MILWAUKEE friends are not inactive in the good cause, as testified by the printed post-card, issued for a Ratification Meeting last week and only just received here, as follows:—

Liberal League Meeting.

Wednesday evening, Dec. 5, at half-past seven o'clock, in Boynton's Lower Hall, corner Milwaukee and Mason Streets, in furtherance of the following objects: viz.:

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

All persons in any manner interested in the above principles are invited to attend, and if favorable to the movement, are requested to lend it their active support.

ROBERT C. SPENCER, President.

WILLIAM A. BOYD, Secretary.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Frederick, Ind.
HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. C. H. FRUTTINGHAM,.....New York.
MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. E. F. FLETCHER,.....Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEAYER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thornville, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER,.....Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MCCORMICK,.....Franklin, Pa.
KIDNEY F. W. EVANS,.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
MRS. AMY POST,.....Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON,.....Trenton, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY,.....Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
California.....H. MOULINBAUX, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BELL, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GUBLT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....HARVEY PRUSSING, Chicago.
Indiana.....L. C. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
Iowa.....J. C. MICHELER, Adel.
Kansas.....JOHN PARKS WORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilmore.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
Maryland.....J. S. EUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....W. H. BAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.....D. C. HAUSERST, Battle Creek.
Minnesota.....J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....J. B. BOYDEN, St. Louis.
Montana.....W. ELLINGBLEY, Lincoln.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PIERCE, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. A. DUNBAR, Greenville.
Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....S. SPALDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....A. M. DEBT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming.....D. P. WILCOX, Fort Collins.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....177 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeld.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeld, Julius Philaster, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—(Officers not reported.)
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MICHIGITT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STROOKTON, CALIFORNIA.—(Officers not reported.)
Issued to Chas. Hsag, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
PALME HALL, BOSTON.—President, John S. Verity; Secretary, Robert Cooper.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elzbur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. E. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. ABBOT; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Biker; Secretary, C. M. Eitenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Eitenhouse, George Biker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korne, F. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gluck, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James B. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. H. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Marceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—(Officers not yet reported.)
Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Greegg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Cool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.
SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

A JEWELLER in New Haven, Conn., has a remarkable watch made by a foreign watchmaker, which Mark Twain describes as follows: "It comes nearer to being a human being than any piece of mechanism I ever saw before. In fact, it knows considerably more than the average voter. It knows the movements of the moon and keeps exact record of them; it tells the day of the week, the day of the month, and the month of the year, and will do this perpetually; it tells the hour of the day and the minute and the second, and even splits the seconds into fifths and marks the division by 'stop' hands; having two stop hands, it can take accurate care of two race-horses, that start not together, but one after the other; it is a repeater wherein the voter is suggested again, and musically chimes the hour, the quarter, the half, the three-quarter hour, and also the minutes that have passed of an uncompleted quarter hour,—so that a blind man can tell the time of day by it to the exact minute. Such is this extraordinary watch. It elicits to admiration; I should think one could add another wheel and make it read and write; still another and make it talk; and I think one might take out several of the wheels that are already in it and it would still be a more intelligent citizen than some that help to govern the country. On the whole, I think it is entitled to vote; that is, if its sex is the right kind."

THE NEW silver quarters have the device, "In God We Trust," but not the half dollars. No confidence in Him for any sum greater than 25 cents, evidently.—Ex.

On Science.

A LECTURE DELIVERED AT BIRMINGHAM, OCTOBER 1, 1877, AS PRESIDENT OF THE MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

BY PROF. JOHN W. TYNDALL.

A magnet attracts iron; but when we analyze the effect we learn that the metal is not only attracted but repelled, the final approach to the magnet being due to the difference of two unequal and opposing forces. Social progress is for the most part typified by this duplex or polar action. As a general rule, every advance is balanced by a partial retreat, every amelioration is associated more or less with deterioration. No great mechanical improvement, for example, is introduced for the benefit of society at large that does not bear hardly upon individuals. Science, like other things, is subject to the operation of this polar law, what is good for it under one aspect being bad for it under another. Science demands above all things personal concentration. Its home is the study of the mathematician, the quiet laboratory of the experimenter, and the cabinet of the meditative observer of Nature. Different atmospheres are required by the man of science, as such, and the man of action. The atmosphere, for example, which vivifies and stimulates your excellent representative, Mr. Chamberlain, would be death to me. There are organisms which flourish in oxygen: he is one of them. There are also organisms which demand for their duller lives a less vivifying air: I am one of these. Thus the facilities of social and international intercourse, the railway, the telegraph, and the post-office which are such undoubted boons to the man of action, react to some extent injuriously on the man of science. Their tendency is to break up that concentration which, as I have said, is an absolute necessity to the scientific investigator. The men who have most profoundly influenced the world from the scientific side have habitually sought isolation. Faraday, at a certain period of his career, formally renounced dining out. Darwin lives apart from the bustle of the world in his quiet home in Kent. Mayer and Joule dealt in unobtrusive retirement with the weightiest scientific questions. None of these men, to my knowledge, ever became Presidents of the Midland Institute or of the British Association. They could not fail to know that both positions are posts of honor; but they would also know that such positions cannot be filled without grave disturbance of that sequestered peace which, to them, is a first condition of intellectual life.

There is, however, one motive power in the world which no man, be he a scientific student or otherwise, can afford to treat with indifference, and that is the cultivation of right relations with his fellow-men, the performance of his duty, not as an isolated individual, but as a member of society. Such duty often requires the sacrifice of private ease to the public wishes, if not to the public good. From this point of view the invitation conveyed to me more than once by your excellent senior Vice-President was not to be declined. It was an invitation written with the earnestness said to be characteristic of a radical, and certainly with the courtesy characteristic of a gentleman. It quickened within me the desire to meet in a cordial and brotherly spirit the wish of an institution of which not only Birmingham, but England, may well be proud, and of whose friendliness to myself I had agreeable evidence in the letters of Mr. Thackeray Bunce. To look at his picture as a whole painter requires distance, and to judge of the total scientific achievement of any age the standpoint of a succeeding age is desirable. We may, however, transport ourselves in idea into the future, and thus obtain a grasp, more or less complete, of the science of our time. We sometimes hear it decry and contrasted to its disadvantage with the science of other times. I do not think that this will be the verdict of posterity. I think, on the contrary, that posterity will acknowledge that in the history of science no higher samples of intellectual conquest are recorded than those which this age has made its own.

One of the most salient of these I propose, with your permission, to make the subject of our consideration during the coming hour. It is now generally admitted that the man of to-day is the child and product of incalculable antecedent time. His physical and intellectual textures have been woven for him during his passage through phases of history and forms of existence which lead the mind back to an abysmal past. One of the qualities which he has derived from that past is the yearning to let in the light of principles on the otherwise bewildering flux of phenomena. He has been described by the German Lichtenberg as "das rastlose Urwesen," the restless, cause-seeking animal, in whom facts excite a kind of hunger to know the sources from which they spring. Never, I venture to say, in the history of the world, has this longing been more liberally responded to, both among men of science and the general public, during the last thirty or forty years.

I say "the general public," because it is a feature of our time that the man of science no longer limits his labors to the society of his colleagues and his peers, but shares, as far as it is possible to share, with the world at large the fruits of inquiry. The celebrated Robert Boyle regarded the universe as a machine; Mr. Carlyle prefers regarding it as a tree. He loves the image of the umbrageous Igdasil better than that of the Strasburg clock. A machine may be defined as an organism with life and direction outside; a tree may be defined as an organism with life and direction within. In the light of these definitions, I close with the conception of Carlyle. The order and energy of the universe I hold to be inherent, and not imposed from without, the expression of fixed law and not of arbitrary will, exercised by what Carlyle would call an almighty clock-maker. But the two conceptions are not so much opposed to each other after all. In one essential particular they at all events agree. They equally imply the interdependence and harmonious interaction of parts, and the subordination of the individual powers of the universal organism to the working of the whole. Never were the harmony and interdependence just referred to so clearly recognized as now. Our insight regarding them is not that vague and general insight to which our fathers had attained, and which, in early times, was more frequently affirmed by the synthetic poet than by the scientific man.

The interdependence of our day has become quantitative, expressible by numbers, leading, it must be added, directly into that inexorable reign of law which so many gentle people regard with dread. In the domain now under review men of science had first to work their way from darkness into twilight, and from twilight into day. There is no solution of continuity in science. It is not given to any man, however endowed, to rise spontaneously into intellectual splendor without the parentage of antecedent thought. Great discoveries grow. Here, as in other cases, we have first the seed, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear, the last member of the series implying the first. Thus, as regards the discovery of gravitation with which the name of Newton is identified, notions more or less clear concerning it had entered many minds before Newton's transcendent mathematical genius raised it to the level of a demonstration. The whole of his deductions, moreover, rested upon the inductions of Kepler. Newton shot beyond his predecessors, but his thoughts were rooted in their thoughts, and a just distribution of merit would assign to them a fair portion of the honor of discovery.

Scientific theories sometimes float like rumors in the air before they receive definite expression. The doom of a doctrine is often practically sealed, and the truth of one is often practically accepted, long prior to the theoretic demonstration of either the error or the truth. Perpetual motion, for example, was discarded before it was proved to be in opposition to natural law; and, as regards the connection and interaction of natural forces, prenatal intimations of modern discoveries and results are strewn through scientific literature.

Confining ourselves to recent times, Dr. Ingleby has pointed out to me some singularly sagacious remarks bearing upon this question which were published by an anonymous writer in 1820. Roget's penetration was conspicuous in 1829. Mohr had grasped, in 1837, some deep-lying truth. The writings of Faraday furnish frequent illustrations of his profound belief in the unity of Nature. "I have long," he writes in 1845, "held an opinion almost amounting to conviction, in common, I believe, with other lovers of natural knowledge, that the various forms under which the forces of matter are made manifest have one common origin, or, in other words, are so directly related and mutually dependent, that they are convertible, as it were, one into another, and possess equivalence of power in their action." His own researches on magneto-electricity, on electrochemistry, and on the "magnetization of light," led him directly to this belief. At an early date Mr. Justice Grove made his mark upon this question. Coiding, though starting from a metaphysical basis, grasped eventually the relation between heat and mechanical work, and sought to determine it experimentally. And here let me say that to him who has only the truth at heart, and who in his dealings with scientific history keeps his soul unwarped by envy, hatred, or malice, personal or national, every fresh accession to historic knowledge must be welcome. For every new-comer of proved merit, more especially if that merit should have been previously overlooked, he makes ready room in his recognition or his reverence.

But no retrospect of scientific literature has as yet brought to light a claim which can sensibly affect the positions accorded to two great pathfinders, whose names in relation to this subject are linked in indissoluble association. These names are Julius Robert Mayer and James Prescott Joule. In his essay on "Circles," Mr. Emerson, if I remember rightly, pictured intellectual progress as rhythmic. At a given moment knowledge is surrounded by a barrier which marks its limit. It gradually gathers clearness and strength until, by-and-by, some thinker of exceptional power bursts the barrier and wins a wider circle, within which thought once more intrenches itself. But the internal force again accumulates, the new barrier is in its turn broken, and the mind finds itself surrounded by a still wider horizon.

Thus, according to Emerson, knowledge spreads by intermittent victories instead of progressing at a uniform rate. When Dr. Joule first proved that a weight of one pound, falling through a height of seven hundred and seventy-two feet, generated an amount of heat competent to warm a pound of water one degree Fahrenheit, and that in lifting the weight so much heat exactly disappeared, he broke an Emersonian "circle," releasing by the act an amount of scientific energy which rapidly overran a vast domain. Helmholtz, Clausius, Thomson, Rankine, Regnault, Favre, and other illustrious names are associated with the conquests since achieved and embodied in the great doctrine known as the "Conservation of Energy." This doctrine recognizes in the material universe a constant sum of power made up of items among which the most Protean fluctuations are incessantly going on. It is as if the body of Nature were alive, the thrill and interchange of its energies resembling those of an organism. The parts of the "stupendous whole shift and change, augment and diminish, appear and disappear, while the total of which they are the parts remains quantitatively immutable—immutable, because when change occurs it is always polar—plus accompanies minus, gain accompanies loss, no item varying in the slightest degree without an absolutely equal change of some other item in the opposite direction. The sun warms the tropical ocean, converting a portion of its liquid into vapor, which rises in the air and is recondensed on mountain heights, returning in rivers to the ocean from which it came.

Up to the point where condensation begins an amount of heat exactly equivalent to the molecular work of vaporization and the mechanical work of lifting the vapor to the mountain-tops has disappeared from the universe. What is the gain corresponding to this loss? It will seem when mentioned to be expressed in a foreign currency. The loss is a loss of heat; the gain is a gain of distance, both as regards masses and molecules. Water which was formerly at the sea-level has been lifted to a position from which it can fall; molecules which had been locked together as a liquid are now separate as vapor which can recondense. After condensation gravity comes into effectual play, pulling the showers down upon the hills, and the rivers thus created through their gorges to the sea. Every raindrop which smites the mountain produces its definite amount of heat; every river in its course develops heat by the clash of its cataracts and the friction of its bed. In the act of condensation, moreover, the molecular work of vaporization is accurately reversed.

Compare, then, the primitive loss of solar warmth with the heat generated by the condensation of the vapor, and by the subsequent fall of the water from cloud to sea. They are mathematically equal to each other. No particle of vapor was formed and lifted without being paid for in the currency of solar heat; no particle returns as water to the sea without the exact quantitative restitution of that heat. There is nothing gratuitous in physical nature, no expenditure without equivalent gain, no gain without equivalent expenditure. With inexorable constancy the one accompanies the other, leaving no nook or crevice between them for spontaneity to mingle with the pure and necessary play of natural force. Has this uniformity of Nature ever been broken? The reply is, "Not to the knowledge of science." What has been here stated regarding heat and gravity applies to the whole of inorganic Nature.

Let us take an illustration from chemistry. The metal zinc may be burnt in oxygen, a perfectly definite amount of heat being produced by the combustion of a given weight of the metal. But zinc may also be burnt in a liquid which contains a supply of oxygen,—in water, for example. It does not in this case produce flame or fire, but it does produce heat which is capable of accurate measurement. But the heat of zinc burnt in water falls short of that produced in pure oxygen, the reason being that to obtain its oxygen from the water the zinc must first dislodge the hydrogen. It is in the performance of this molecular work that the missing heat is absorbed. Mix the liberated hydrogen with the oxygen and cause them to recombine, the heat developed is mathematically equal to the missing heat. Thus in pulling the oxygen and hydrogen asunder an amount of heat is consumed which is accurately restored by their reunion. This may be taken as prefatory to a few remarks upon the voltaic battery.

It is not my design to dwell upon the technic features of this wonderful instrument, but simply to illustrate by means of it the further play of the principle of equivalence and conservation, and to show the varying shapes which a given amount of energy can assume while maintaining unvarying quantitative stability. When that form of power which we call an electric current passes through Grove's battery zinc is consumed in acidulated water, and in the battery we are able so to arrange matters that when no current passes no zinc shall be consumed. Now the current, whatever it may be, possesses the power of generating heat outside the battery. We can fuse with it iridium, the most refractory of metals, or we can produce with it the dazzling electric light, and that at any terrestrial distance from the battery itself. We will now, however, content ourselves with causing the current to raise a given length of platinum wire, first to a blood-heat, then to redness, and finally to a white heat. The heat under these circumstances generated in the battery by the combustion of a fixed quantity of zinc is no longer constant, but it varies inversely as the heat generated outside. If the outside heat be nil, the inside heat is a maximum; if the external wire be raised to a blood-heat, the internal heat falls slightly short of the maximum. If the wire be rendered red-hot, the quantity of missing heat within the battery is greater, and if the external wire be rendered white-hot, the defect is greater still. Add together the internal and external heat produced by the combustion of a given weight of zinc, and you have an absolutely constant total. The heat generated without is so much lost within; the heat generated within is so much lost without, the polar changes already adverted to coming here conspicuously into play.

Thus, in a variety of ways, we can distribute the items of a never-varying sum; but even the subtle agency of the electric current places no creative power in our hands. Instead of generating external heat we may cause the current to effect chemical decomposition at a distance from the battery. Let it, for example, decompose water into oxygen and hydrogen. The heat generated in the battery under these circumstances by the combustion of a given weight of zinc falls short of what is produced when there is no decomposition. How far short? The question admits of a perfectly exact answer. When the oxygen and hydrogen recombine, the heat absorbed in the decomposition is accurately restored, and it is exactly equal in amount to that missing in the battery. We may, if we like, bottle up the gases, carry in this form the heat of the battery to the polar regions, and liberate it there. The battery, in fact, is a hearth on which fuel is consumed; but the heat of the combustion, instead of being confined in the usual manner to the hearth itself, may be first liberated at the other side of the world. In my youth I thought an electro-magnetic engine which was shown to me a veritable perpetual motion,—a machine, that is to say, which performed work without the expenditure of power.

Let us consider the action of such a machine. Suppose it to be employed to pump water from a lower to a higher level. On examining the battery which works the engine we find that the zinc consumed does not yield its full amount of heat. The quantity of heat thus missing within is the exact thermal equivalent of the mechanical work performed without. Let the water fall again to a lower level, it is warmed by the fall. Add the heat thus produced to that generated by the friction, mechanical and magnetic, of the engine, we thus obtain the precise amount of heat missing in the battery. All the effects obtained from the machine are thus strictly paid for; this "payment for results" being, I would repeat, the inexorable method of Nature. No engine, however subtly devised, can evade this law of equivalence, or perform on its own account the smallest modicum of work. The machine distributes, but it cannot create. Is the animal body, then, to be classed among machines? When I lift a weight, or throw a stone, or climb a mountain, or wrestle with my comrade, am I not conscious of actually creating and expending force?

Let us look to the antecedents of this force. We derive the muscle and fat of our bodies from what we eat. Animal heat you know to be due to the slow combustion of this fuel. My arm is now inactive, and the ordinary slow combustion of my blood and tissue is going on. For every grain of fuel thus burnt a perfectly definite amount of heat has been produced. I now contract my biceps muscle without causing it to perform external work. The combustion is quickened and the heat is increased, this additional heat being liberated in the muscle itself. I lay hold of a fifty-six pound weight, and by the contraction of my biceps lift it through the vertical space of a foot. The blood and tissues consumed during this contraction have not developed in the muscle their due amount of heat. A quantity of heat is at this moment missing in my muscle which would raise the temperature of an ounce of water somewhat more than one degree Fahrenheit. I liberate the weight, it falls to the earth, and by its collision generates the precise amount of heat missing in the muscle. My muscular heat is thus transferred from its local hearth to external space. The fuel is consumed in my body, but the heat of combustion is produced outside my body. The case is substantially the same as that of the voltaic battery when it performs external work or produces external heat. All this points to the conclusion that the force we employ in muscular exertion is the force of burning fuel and not of creative will.

In the light of these facts the body is seen to be as incapable of generating energy without expenditure as the solids and liquids of the voltaic battery. The body, in other words, falls into the category of machines. We can do with the body all that we have already done with the battery,—heat platinum wires, decompose water, magnetize iron, and deflect a magnetic needle. The combustion of muscle may be made to produce all these effects, as the combustion of zinc may be caused to produce them. By turning the handle of a magneto-electric machine, a coil of wire may be caused to rotate between the poles of a magnet. As long as the two ends of the coil are unconnected we have simply to overcome the ordinary inertia and friction of the machine in turning the handle. But the moment the two ends of the coil are united by a thin platinum wire a sudden addition of labor is thrown upon the turning arm. When the necessary labor is expended its equivalent immediately appears. The platinum wire glows. You can readily maintain it at a white heat, or even fuse it. This is a very remarkable result. From the muscles of the arm, with a temperature of one hundred degrees, we extract the temperature of molten platinum, which is many thousand degrees. The miracle here is the reverse of that of the burning bush mentioned in Genesis. There the bush burned but was not consumed; here the blood is consumed but does not burn. The similarity of the action with that of the voltaic battery when it heats an external wire is too obvious to need pointing out. When the machine is used to decompose water, the heat of the muscle like that of the battery, is consumed in molecular work, being fully restored when the gases recombine. As before, also, the transmuted heat of the muscles may be bottled up, carried to the polar regions, and there restored to its pristine form.

The matter of the human body is the same as that of the world around us, and here we find the forces of the human body identical with those of inorganic nature. Just as little as the voltaic battery is the animal body a creator of force. It is an apparatus exquisite and effectual beyond all others in transforming and distributing the energy with which it is supplied, but it possesses no creative power. Compared with the notions previously entertained regarding the play of "vital force," this is a great result. The problem of vital dynamics has been described by a competent authority as the "grandest of all." I subscribe to this opinion, and honor correspondingly the man who first successfully grappled with the problem. He was no pope in the sense of being infallible, but he was a man of genius whose work will be held in honor as long as science endures. I have already named him in connection with our illustrious countryman, Dr. Joule. Other eminent men took up this subject subsequently and independently; but all that has been done hitherto enhances, instead of diminishing, the merits of Dr. Mayer. Consider the vigor of his reasoning. "Beyond the power of generating internal heat, the animal organism can generate heat external to itself. A blacksmith by hammering can warm a nail, and a savage by friction can heat wood to its point of ignition. Unless, then, we abandon the physiological axiom that the animal body cannot create heat out of nothing, we are driven to the conclusion that it is the total heat, within and without, that ought to be regarded as the real calorific effect of the oxidation within the body." Mayer, however, not only states the principle, but illustrates numerically the transfer of muscular heat to external space. A bowler who imparts a velocity of thirty feet to an eight-pound ball consumes in the act one-tenth of a grain of carbon. The heat of the muscle is here distributed over the track of the ball, being developed there by mechanical friction. A man weighing one hundred and fifty pounds consumes in lifting his own body to a height of eight feet the heat of a grain of carbon. Jumping from this height the heat is restored. The consumption of two ounces, four drams, twenty grains of carbon would place the same man on the summit of a mountain ten thousand feet high. In descending the mountain an amount of heat equal to that produced by the combustion of the foregoing amount of carbon is restored. The muscles of a laborer whose weight is one hundred and fifty pounds weigh sixty-four pounds. When dried they are reduced to fifteen pounds. Were the oxidation corresponding to a day laborer's ordinary work exerted on the muscles alone, they would be wholly consumed in eighty days. Were the oxidation necessary to sustain the heart's action concentrated on the heart itself, it would be consumed in eight days. And if we confine our attention to the two ventricles, their action would consume the associated muscular tissue in three days and a half.

With a fulness and precision of which this is but a sample, did Mayer, between 1842 and 1845, deal with the great question of vital dynamics. We place, then, food in our stomachs as so much combustible matter. It is first dissolved by purely chemical processes, and the nutritive fluid is poured into the blood. Here it comes into contact with atmospheric oxygen admitted by the lungs. It unites with the oxygen as wood or coal might unite with it in a furnace. The matter-products of the union, if I may use the term, are the same in both cases; viz., carbonic acid and water. The force-products are also the same,—heat within the body, or heat and work outside the body. Thus far every action of the organism belongs to the domain either of physics or of chemistry. But you saw me contract the muscle of my arm. What enabled me to do so? Was it or was it not the direct action of my will? The answer is, the action of the will is mediate, not direct. Over and above the muscles the human organism is provided with long whitish filaments of medullary matter, which issue from the spinal column, being connected by it on the one side with the brain, and on the other side losing themselves in the muscles. Those filaments or cords are the nerves, which you know are divided into two kinds, sensor and motor, or, if you like the terms better, afferent and efferent nerves. The former carry impressions from the external world to the brain; the latter convey the behests of the brain to the muscles.

Here, as elsewhere, we find ourselves aided by the sagacity of Mayer, who was the first to clearly formulate the part played by the nerves in the organism. Mayer saw that neither nerves nor brain, nor both together, possessed the energy necessary to animal motion; but he also saw that the nerve could lift a latch and open a door by which floods of energy are let loose. "As an engineer," he says with admirable lucidity, "by the motion of his finger in opening a valve or loosening a detent can liberate an amount of mechanical energy almost infinite compared with its exciting cause, so the nerves, acting on the muscles, can unlock an amount of power out of all proportion to the work done by the nerves themselves." The nerves, according to Mayer, pull the trigger, but the gunpowder which they ignite is stored in the muscles. This is the view now universally entertained. The quickness of thought has passed into a proverb, and the notion that any measurable time elapsed between the infliction of a wound and the feeling of the injury would have been rejected as preposterous thirty years ago. Nervous impressions, notwithstanding the results of Haller, were thought to be transmitted, if not instantaneously, at all events with the rapidity of electricity. Hence, when Helmholtz, in 1851, affirmed, as the result of experiment, nervous transmission to be a comparatively sluggish process, very few believed him. His experiments may now be made in the lecture-room.

Sound in air moves at the rate of one thousand one hundred feet a second; sound in water moves at the rate of four thousand feet a second; light in ether moves at the rate of one hundred and ninety thousand miles a second, and electricity in free wires moves probably at the same rate. But the nerves transmit their messages at the rate of only seventy feet a second, a progress which in these quick times might well be regarded as intolerably slow. Your townsman, Mr. Gore, has produced by electrolysis a kind of antimony which exhibits an action strikingly analogous to that of nervous propagation. A rod of this antimony is in such a molecular condition that when you scratch or heat one end of the rod the disturbance propagates itself before your eyes to the other end, the onward march of the disturbance being announced by the development of heat and fumes along the line of propagation. In some such way the molecules of the nerves are successively overthrown; and if Mr. Gore could only devise some means of winding up his exhausted antimony, as the nutritive blood winds up exhausted nerves, the comparison would be complete.

The subject may be summed up, as Du Bois-Reymond has summed it up, by reference to the case of a whale struck by a harpoon in the tail. If the animal were seventy feet long, a second would elapse before the disturbance could reach the brain. But the impression after its arrival has to diffuse itself and throw the brain into the molecular condition necessary to consciousness. Then, and not till then, the command to the tail to defend itself is shot through the motor nerves. Another second must elapse before the order reaches the tail, so that more than two seconds transpire between the infliction of the wound and the muscular response of the part wounded. The interval required for the kindling of consciousness would probably more than suffice for the destruction of the brain by lightning or even by a rifle bullet. Before the organ can arrange itself, it may, therefore, be destroyed, and in such a case we may safely conclude that death is painless.

[TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

THE ROMAN PROGRAMME IN CANADA.

The readers of Mr. Parkman's Count Frontenac need not be told how thoroughly the Canadian government was under the Papal rule in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries; but it has been reserved Mr. Charles Lindsey, of Toronto, in the current North American Review, to tell us what the Ultramontane movement in Canada is at the present time, and his statement of facts is an instructive commentary on the way in which Romanism deals with civil institutions. Canada has for a long time been regarded at Rome as "the eldest son of the Church." The City of Quebec is the proud mother of sixty dioceses, and the province of Lower Canada is now specially demonstrative in its obedience to Rome. The man who has done the most to encourage this Ultramontane movement has been Mgr. Ignace Bourget, Bishop of Montreal for thirty-six years, whose resignation took place in 1876. He accepted the new departure at Rome, and publicly rejoiced over the Papal Syllabus of 1864. The Roman Episcopate in Canada have unitedly "approved everything the Pope approves, and condemned everything that the Pope condemns." With this policy, which has been thoroughly indorsed at Rome, the Canadian press, so far as it belongs to the Roman Church, has been made the mouthpiece of the Bishops, and whenever it has dared to differ from them in the least point, the particular journal has been quickly extinguished. The spirit of this new movement is indicated in one of Bishop Bourget's pastoral letters. He says: "No one is permitted to be free in his religious and political opinions; it is for the Church to teach her children to be good citizens as well as good Christians, by instilling into them the true principles of faith and morals, of which she alone is the sole depository. . . . Her divine mission is to teach sovereigns to govern with wisdom and subjects to obey with joy." A Jesuit priest of Montreal, Father Braun, puts the Bishop's principle into practice in words like these: "Protestantism is not a religion; Protestantism has not a single right." And the tenure by which Canadian Protestants hold their present religious liberty is whatever voting majority they can bring against the ignorant disciples of these intolerant priests.

The strong point which Mr. Lindsey makes is the attempt of the Roman Catholic Episcopate of Quebec to control elections to the House of Commons at Ottawa and to the legislature of the Province of Quebec. As late as 1867, the Bishop of Montreal taught his clergy that they should be neutral in all questions which did not involve religious privileges. Even as late as 1871, the Bishops had not agreed upon any common plan for the control of the elections. But this policy was distinctly changed in September, 1876, by the joint letter of eight Bishops, who claimed for the clergy nothing less than the absolute direction of political elections, and this letter has furnished the basis of an entirely new programme. The letter has been three times approved at Rome, the third time by the Pope himself; and when the Roman Catholic laity remonstrated, the Préfet of the Propaganda assured Bishop Ladéche that the doctrine contained in it was "perfectly sound and conformable to the teachings of the Holy See." The only result of the appeal to Rome was that the Bishop of Three Rivers had the happiness of bringing back with him to Canada a special brief from the Pope, dated Dec. 18, 1876, which gave a complete victory to the Ultramontanes. It is nothing but the same contest of the civil and ecclesiastical authority over again which prevented the development of Canada in the reign of Louis XIV., with the difference that the Pope, and not the Grand Monarch, is the arbiter of affairs.

When the priests attempted to put their instructions into practice, they made themselves liable to the charge of having used undue influence at elections. In 1873, the election in Charlevoix County was contested, and finally set aside, on account of the clerical intimidation of the voters. The Judge before whom the case was tried took the ground that, voting being a moral act, the conduct of the voter comes under the canon law of Rome, and sustained the priests in their threats against the people; but when the case was carried to the Supreme Court, it was easily shown by the Judges that "on the principles of common law and on the construction of the statute, of which we entertain no doubt, we cannot for a moment doubt that it is our duty to declare that undue spiritual influence is prohibited by the statute." It was shown in the court that the clergy had threatened to withhold the sacraments from the people unless they voted for the clerical candidate, and that the candidates were pledged beforehand to the Roman policy. One witness said: "My religious belief as a Catholic is that those who act in opposition to religion and their pastors go to hell when they die." "I was afraid," said another witness, "if I voted for M. Tremblay, I should be damned." At least one priest told his trembling flock that to vote for a liberal was a mortal sin. The people were to vote according to their consciences, but it meant according to their consciences enlightened by the instructions of the Bishops of Quebec. When the case was brought before the Supreme Court, it was so clear that a general system of intimidation had been practiced that the election was declared void. This court in Canada practically settles the law by its decisions, and accordingly it is the special object of hatred on the part of Roman ecclesiastics. The same judgment as to clerical intimidation was pronounced in other Canadian courts, but the Bishops endeavored to intimidate the Judges in at least one case, by insisting that Catholic Judges cannot in conscience administer such laws as control the parliamentary elections of Quebec, and have placed such Judges as are Romanists in a position of difficulty. The Bishop of Rimouski dared to press this point of conscience, and to defend his priests for their political interference, and Mr. Lindsey wisely says that "if a single Bishop has already embarrassed the highest court in the country, the united episcopate will no doubt hope to achieve a more signal triumph in the future." The result is, that the issue raised between the ecclesiastical and civil powers has developed into an open rupture. The Bishops, on the one hand, supported by Plus IX., claim the right to direct the clergy to use spiritual censures to compel electors to vote against their own wishes; and, on the other hand, the civil law, interpreted by a court from which there is no appeal, says that elections carried by such undue influence are null and void. Some slight modification of the position of the Bishops has been made by a new joint letter, read in the Canadian churches Oct. 21, in which they disclaim the intention of invading the domain of political parties; but the pastoral still claims that the Church is superior to the State, and the Roman population, one-fourth of whom can neither read nor write, are still terror-stricken by the violent denunciations of their priests.

The whole story is an instructive illustration, across the border, of what may be expected among ourselves when the Roman Catholics outnumber and can outvote the Protestants. The position of equal liberty to all, which is the Protestant maxim, means rank heresy to an Ultramontane, and political liberty is no safer in the hands of Roman Catholics here than it is in Canada. Is it rare that the mask of Romanism is so thoroughly taken off as it has been in the Canadian Provinces; and yet many separate instances of clerical influence on the part of Roman priests over their flocks, before election, are familiar to our readers in cities and larger towns. The end is not yet in the United States, and the present conflict in Canada is an instructive foretaste of the spirit in which modern Romanism meets the liberties granted by republican institutions.—New York Times, Nov. 28.

CHRISTIANITY IN INDIA.

In 1857 the mutinies broke out. The movement was at first regarded as a mere military revolt. It was soon perceived, by those at least who like myself were thrown among the native population, to be a national rising, and a rising against us not so much as English as Christians. There was a universal impression among all classes, both educated and ignorant, Hindu and Mohammedan, that our government intended their conversion to Christianity. As the English government had from the commencement of its rule not only itself abstained from any interference with the native religion, but had discouraged, at first actively, and later passively, the efforts of the missionaries,—that such a belief, so opposed to the truth, should have arisen, is from the English point of view, very surprising. It may be accounted for, but the explanation would carry me from my subject. The belief, from whatever cause it had arisen, was universal, and sufficiently strong to unite in common hostility to Christianity and Christians both the Hindus and the Mohammedans, a union which had hitherto been regarded as impossible. Christians, of whatever race or color, native as well as English, were equally obnoxious, and, when found, equally murdered. Toward the conclusion of the mutiny a very remarkable change of feeling was in many places exhibited. Our destruction had seemed so complete that our sudden recovery appeared to the natives, ignorant as they were of our unseen resources, to be miraculous. They thought like the heathen of old, that the Lord of hosts, the God of battles, the powers that then governed the affairs of men, were on our side; that our dominion was ordained of high, and should be submitted to. The Hindu mind is susceptible of such impressions; they are in harmony with the spirit of its religion. There arose among many of the Hindus a desire to embrace Christianity,—to adore that God who was now triumphant. Had this desire met with encouragement, large portions of the population would have embraced Christianity; but it did not, and it died out. With the complete restoration of order and the return to former conditions of life, the enthusiasm which had excited it subsided, and the opportunity was lost forever. The suppression of the mutinies was followed by great changes. The rule of the East India Company was abolished and India brought under the direct control of the Crown. The immediate effect of the change was little. In India, except in name, it was not perceptible, but formed, as the opening of the overland route had previously done, the commencement of a new era. It was the first of a series of changes that have entirely altered European society in India, a result partly, perhaps principally, due to its having been attended by the development of the railway system. The changes have to some extent affected the natives. They move more, they read more, they know more, they think more. Among the richer and educated classes the ideas of modern Europe have penetrated their tone of thought, and to some slight extent their habits of life have been modified by them. The number of Christians has greatly increased, but the increase is confined to the Europeans. There are more English soldiers, more English officials, more English traders, and the railways have introduced English artisans, and unhappily, as an indirect effect, also another class, formerly unknown, European vagrants whose numbers, degraded condition, and occasional atrocities have at length compelled the interference of the government for their repression, as a source of political danger. But among the native population Christianity has made no progress. There are more missions, more missionaries, more money spent in the work of propagating the gospel, and not less zeal displayed, but there have been no corresponding results. There are no converts. The gospel has been preached far and wide, but it has met with no acceptance, nor, save to the missionary mind, which hopes against hope, are there any indications that it will do so; rather the contrary. Among the Mohammedans generally, and among certain classes of the Hindus, there has arisen of late years a religious revival, the effect of which is hostile to Christianity. In place of an indifferent or defensive attitude one of aggression has been substituted. Of their present failure to make converts no men are more conscious than the missionaries themselves, but they do not on that account consider that their labors have been unproductive. Some among them think they can perceive some mental movement among the natives, which they regard as a forerunner of their acceptance of Christianity. Others who do not perceive such movement, or who like myself differently interpret it, are content with knowing that they have scattered the good seed "thrown the bread of life on the waters," and await with a simple faith that time when God shall cause the seed to germinate, the bread to return. But the future is a matter of speculation; we can speak with confidence only of the present. The present failure of the missionaries is indisputable. To what is this failure to be attributed?—Fraser's Magazine.

SECTARIAN EDUCATION.

Our Roman Catholic friends object to the public schools as "godless"; theirs we are left to infer are godly. In their schools the young are nourished with pure doctrine, are guarded from error, and taught the lessons of duty and charity. So confident are American Catholics of the superiority of their educational system that they have made every possible effort to secure for it the aid of the public funds. Here and there, as in Minnesota, they have obtained the control of district schools, and have supplied them with their own text-books. Fortunately a text-book is occasionally issued which discloses the spirit of their teaching without disguise. Such a one has lately come under our notice, which has appeared not in far-off Minnesota, but of all States in the Union, in Maryland, where it is claimed the Church illustrated its tolerant spirit in the early legislation of the colony. The volume is one of a series entitled, Familiar Explanation of Christian Doctrine, adapted for the Family and more advanced Students in Catholic Schools and Colleges, published in 1875 by Kreuzer Brothers, Baltimore, and sanctioned by Archbishop Bayley. Lesson XII. is called, "No Salvation Outside of the Roman Catholic Church." The questions and answers run thus:—

Question. "Since the Roman Catholic Church alone is the true Church of Jesus Christ, can any one who dies outside of the Church be saved?" Answer. "He cannot."

Question. "Did Jesus Christ himself, assure us most solemnly, and in plain words, that no one can be saved but of the Catholic Church?" Answer. "He did when He said to His Apostles, 'Go and teach all nations,' etc."

Question. "What do the fathers of the Church say about the salvation of those who die out of the Catholic Church?" Answer. "They all, without exception, pronounce them infallibly lost forever."

A little farther on may be found the following:—

Question. "Are there any other reasons to show that heretics or Protestants who die out of the Roman Catholic Church are not saved?" Answer. "There are several. They cannot be saved, because, 1. They have no divine faith. 2. They make a liar of Jesus Christ, of the Holy Ghost, and of the Apostles. 3. They have no faith in Jesus Christ. 4. They fall away from the true Church of Christ. 5. They are too proud to submit to the Pope, the Vicar of Christ. 6. They cannot perform any good works whereby they can obtain heaven. 7. They do not receive the body and blood of Jesus Christ. 8. They die in their sins. 9. They ridicule and blaspheme the mother of God and His saints. 10. They slander the spouse of Jesus Christ—the Catholic Church."

Again, page 97:—

Question. "Now, do you think God the Father will admit into heaven those who thus make liars of His Son Jesus Christ, of the Holy Ghost, and the Apostles?" Answer. "No; He will let them have their portion with Lucifer in hell, who first rebelled against Christ, and who is the father of liars."

Question. "Have Protestants any faith in Christ?" Answer. "They never had."

Question. "Why not?" Answer. "Because there never lived such a Christ as they imagine and believe in."

Question. "In what kind of a Christ do they believe?" Answer. "In such a one of whom they can make a liar," etc.

Question. "Will such a faith in such a Christ save Protestants?" Answer. "No sensible man will assert such an absurdity."

Question. "What will Christ say to them on the day of judgment?" Answer. "I know you not, because you never knew me."

Again, page 104:—

Question. "Are Protestants willing to confess their sins to a Catholic bishop or priest, who alone has power from Christ to forgive sins? 'Whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them.'" Answer. "No, for they generally have an utter aversion to confession, and therefore their sins will not be forgiven throughout all eternity."

Question. "What follows from this?" Answer. "That they die in their sins, and are damned."

These are the lessons instilled by Catholic teachers in the minds of American youth. A Protestant girl goes to one of the famous Catholic academies of Maryland, and soon learns of her parents, brothers, and sisters that the Christ in whom they believe is no true Christ, and that they will all "die in their sins, and be damned." This is not the teaching of an obscure priest, but of Archbishop Bayley, who is next to the American cardinal in churchly dignity. A Catholic school worms out of the public treasury an appropriation, and this is the faith to the building up of which the money is applied. The Protestant Episcopal Convention of Georgia, whose attention was called to this doctrinal teaching by Bishop Beckwith, resolved that it should be read, for warning, to all the congregations of the diocese. The bishop has done a valuable public service, and we here give these facts, brought forward by him, the benefit of a still wider circulation. We are sure our readers will agree with us in the opinion that schools in which such lessons are taught are schools to be shunned by all right-minded Americans, and that the Church which sanctions them by an archiepiscopal imprimatur is not entitled to be the educator of the American people.—Harper's Weekly.

VETOING A PAPAL ELECTION.

We noted the fact the other day, that the old rule requiring the lapse of ten days between the death of a pope and the summoning of the conclave of cardinals for the election of a successor, had been arbitrarily set aside, so that the college can be convened within twenty-four hours after the death and before it is officially or credibly announced that the pope is dead. The object of this change is to give the papists an opportunity to defeat those powers who may wish to veto or circumvent the election of a distasteful candidate, and also, so that the Italian cardinals, who live within twenty-four hours' ride of Rome, can come together and elect a successor without the let or hindrance of the powers. That it may be seen how the veto powers may thus be defeated, read the following from Macmillan's Magazine.

"When cardinals conspire to carry a man upon whom they have set their hearts, they do not resort to clumsy and transparent tricks. They try bold and ingenious plans. The imperial veto, for instance, has often been turned to account to clear the way for a man who, if proposed at once, would not have the slightest chance for election. A man is put up who is known to be obnoxious to one of the powers. He receives within a few of the requisite number of votes, and is at once blackballed by, say, the Austrian representative. Another candidate, obnoxious to France or Spain, is then put up, voted for, apparently, with great spirit, and vetoed by a French or Spanish cardinal; and the course is thus cleared for the nomination of the man whom the majority of the conclave have set their hearts upon electing, and who has till now, therefore, been kept in the background. The veto can be exercised but once, and the object of these manoeuvres is to draw the sword from its sheath. France in 1823, wished to keep Leo XII. out of the papal chair; but a veto, if it is to be recognized by the conclave, must be put in before the canonical majority has been attained, and the scrutators, knowing the intention of the French cardinals, and knowing also how the majority of the cardinals intended to vote, counted in Leo with such adroitness that he was pope before the representatives of the veto power could open their mouths to protest. Innocent X. was elected with a French exclusion over his head. Clement VIII. was excluded in three conclaves by the Spanish veto, and yet elected after all, and, to make his triumph complete, elected over the head of the Spanish nominee. Cardinal Santorio, the Spanish candidate, had, upon paper, the necessary majority of two-thirds of the college. His election was apparently secure. His friends carried him in triumph from his cell to the Pauline chapel to receive the adoration of the cardinals. The conclavists plundered his cell. The pope-elect graciously forgave all his enemies, and selected as his title that of Clement VIII. But his opponents, although in a minority, and apparently in a hopeless minority, detected at the last moment signs of a weakness in the ranks of the victorious party; and meeting in the Sistine chapel, one of the boldest of the Roman nobles, Cardinal Colonna, rose, and in a voice like Jove, declared: 'God will not have Sanseverina, neither will Ascanio Colonna.' These bold words of Colonna turned the scale, and when the votes came to be counted the cardinal of Sanseverina instead of having thirty-six votes had only thirty, and Cardinal Aldobrandino, although only put up as a supernumerary candidate, became pope, and to emphasize his victory over the Spaniard, took the title which Sanseverina had claimed as his own,—that of Clement VIII. It requires boldness and address to carry a candidate in the face of a veto and of a majority like this; but if the man is popular with the college the wit of twenty Italians pitted against that of one generally ends in the defeat of the veto and majority alike."

Hence, if the Austrian, French, and German representatives can be kept out of the college, it is evident that the designs of the ultramontanes must be consummated. Perhaps the powers, however, with common sagacity, have their agents in Rome, now, to assert their rights immediately upon the death of Pius IX.—Rochester Democrat and Chronicle.

SHAKESPEARE AND THE QUEEN.—There is a story afloat in the newspapers which is worth repeating. According to tradition Shakespeare played the part of a king with a peculiar grace and majesty. One day when the queen was in the theatre, Shakespeare mimicked royalty so well that Elizabeth, who was always ready to have a little fun, whispered to her ladies that she would try if she could not turn this pretended monarch into an awkward fellow enough at a moment's warning. Accordingly at a critical point in the scene, the queen (who was sitting just over the stage, which was then held to be the place of honor) let her handkerchief drop at the feet of Shakespeare. Her mischievous Majesty expected to see the actor start and reddened and lose his cue. Instead of that he finished his speech with all his usual power, and without seeming to notice the handkerchief. Then, stooping and picking it up, he gave it back to the queen with a bow, in which there was indescribable mixture of dignity and homage, saying, as he did so, these words to his train of stage courtiers: "But ere we get to horse and ride away, Let us pick up our sister's handkerchief."

Poetry.

THE GODS. [FOR THE INDEX.]

When, ope'd the portals of a temple proud,
The Priest drove far the awe and vulgar crowd,
The uninitiated standing hush'd around
Within the untill'd, consecrated ground.
As if, forsooth, their eyes profane might see
A radiant glimpse of Present Deity!

Seclusion is the shield of gods of earth
And heaven; the common eye,
Admitted, mars their deity.

Shrines, holies, penetrated with a cloud,
Of mystic incense godhead ever shroud,
The deities celestial ne'er were seen,
The Priests' taboo and menace intervene,—
Their earthly worshippers must kiss the dust,
And from the Hierarchy take his gods on trust.

When eyes profane investigate the shrine,
Silence and vacancy alone are there;
The gods dissolved have melted into air,
For stupid Awe alone sees forms divine.

B. W. BALL.

GOD. [FOR THE INDEX.]

What need is there of any printed book
To tell of God; when we have eyes to look?

What need is there to tell us he is wise?
His work defineth wisdom to our eyes.

What need is there to tell us he is great,
Since we have bowed so often to his fate?

What need is there to tell us he is good,
While our young mouths are tasting of his food?

What need is there to tell us he is near?
Have we not felt him with a longing fear?

What need is there to tell us he is far?
Can we not trace him in the distant star?

Of all that breathe, is there one man so wise
To know what is not patent to all eyes?

HARVEY HOWARD.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 8.

Wm. P. Chambers, $18.40; John Consaulus, $3.20; W. H. Crowell, $1.40; E. Mitchell, $2; George J. Adams, $9.70; Peter Hartmann, 25 cents; Warren Griswold, 50 cents; Emma Ives, 10 cents; Z. L. Hungerford, $1; Caroline B. Kingman, $3.20; Chas. G. Schaeffer, $3.20; George Thorn, $4.50; George W. Stevens, $3.20; L. G. Felch, $13; T. B. Harned, $1.50; Mrs. M. E. Bird, $14.04; James Parinton, $3; J. F. Smith, $1.60; A. T. Lilly, $1.25; Cash, $2.50; James Thompson, $3.20; Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, $4; William Harbour, $1; George Schumm, $2; Mrs. Charles Goodspeed, $3.20; Mrs. L. C. Sleeper, $3.20; E. A. Sawtelle, $3.20; C. J. Higginson, $3.20; C. R. Woodward, $6.40; J. Vankoe, 10 cents; F. M. Sanford, $3; Joseph May, $3.20; A. D. Sellers, 10 cents; Gen. Robert Avery, $8.20; C. A. Simpson, $1; Rev. M. J. Savage, $3.20; J. D. Frost, 15 cents; W. P. Wilson, $1.70; Clark & Co., $10.98; J. C. Kearns, $3.20; W. J. Potter, 25 cents; Charles Buffum, $10; Col. Chas. D. Miller, $3.20; Hon. L. W. Billingsly, 50 cents; J. M. Forbes, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 13, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 36 Monroe Street: J. T. FRET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENNY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH Cady STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELLEY, Editorial Contributors.

A CARD.

The Committee on the better establishment of THE INDEX, appointed at a meeting of its subscribers and friends last May, wish to enlist all the assistance they can to lay its claims before every liberal man and woman in our country. They have prepared a circular setting forth the method, motives, and objects of their action, and wish the names of all who are willing to assist them in placing it where it will do good. Please address the Chairman of the Committee, "Elizur Wright, P. O. Box 100, Boston, Mass."

ANNOUNCEMENT: CLUB TERMS.

Until January 1, 1879, THE INDEX will be sent for a year to clubs of five or more NEW SUBSCRIBERS on receipt of $2.20 each, in advance, instead of $3.20, the regular cost of subscription. This is an excellent chance for all our friends to join in a vigorous effort to increase the circulation of the most earnestly radical journal in the United States, and thereby to advance the common cause. It is only just to show due public appreciation of the efforts of its friends, and we shall therefore (unless explicitly requested to the contrary) publish the names of all who send us clubs under the arrangement, with the number of new subscribers obtained by each. Shall there not be a little generous emulation to help forward the struggling cause of religious freedom?

F. E. ABBOT, Editor.

WE HAVE already noticed Rear-Admiral Maxse's lecture against "Woman Suffrage" in these columns. It challenges the attention of all who wish to form a dispassionate opinion on that subject, no matter how fully persuaded they may now be in their own minds; for it is terse, direct, strong, and not to be dismissed with a supercilious shrug of the shoulders. For Admiral Maxse himself we entertain the highest respect, both as a thinker, a writer, and a man; and although we differ from him in the general conclusion, we believe he has told no little truth in these honest pages of his which woman-suffragists hurt their own cause by evading. One of these days we may state the reasons here why we have failed to be convinced by Admiral Maxse's vigorous paper; but meanwhile, since he offers it to the American public through THE INDEX, desiring his arguments to be thoroughly canvassed on this side of the water, we hope that his little book, advertised on our last page, will find wide reading and close examination.

THE QUESTION of equal religious rights, as between theists and atheists, threatens to introduce division and discord among Freemasons. In our issue of November 1, it was stated that the constitution of French Freemasonry had been changed by expunging the requirement in its members and candidates of a belief in Deity. This action has led to the unanimous adoption of the following resolution by the grand lodge of Freemasons in Ireland: "Whereas, the grand lodge of Ireland has received official notification that the grand orient of France has altered the first article of its constitution from its previous form, and omitted therefrom, as one of its fundamental principles, belief in the existence of God and the immortality of the soul, the grand lodge of Ireland hereby resolves that the grand orient of France having, by such alteration, rendered admissible as members of lodges within its jurisdiction persons who do not believe in the existence of a personal Deity, has thereby caused a breach in the foundation of ancient masonry, and acted in violation of the first great principle of the order: therefore, the grand lodge of Ireland hereby declares that it cannot continue to recognize the grand orient of France as a masonic body, and it hereby directs all lodges working under the Irish Constitution to decline receiving as masons any person hailing from the grand orient of France, or from any subordinate lodge under its jurisdiction."

A TEST CASE OF EQUAL RIGHTS.

Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, of Peoria, Illinois, has risen within the past year or two to great prominence in this country as an orator on the political "stump" and the lecture platform. Brilliant, imaginative, witty, and independent, he has the art of captivating mixed popular audiences to a quite unprecedented degree; and, were it not for his somewhat audacious "infidelity," there can be no doubt that he would have been fairly buried beneath the bouquets of his admirers.

But the Evangelical believers of the land have not yet learned the lesson of equal rights. Mistaking their efficient organization for numerical superiority (which is by no means assured to them), they have raised a hue-and-cry against Colonel Ingersoll which may yet react upon them in a way they little expect. There are more who sympathize with him than the churches like to admit; the question is not yet positively decided where the majority lies; and any attempt at proscription may possibly end in irreparable damage to the prestige of Orthodoxy.

Without pretending to a knowledge on this point which we do not possess, we wish to allude to two recent manifestations of Orthodox insolence, with reference to Colonel Ingersoll, which illustrate the painfully degraded position in American society which liberals as a class are content to occupy. Their equal rights are not only denied, but loudly and publicly scoffed at; and they receive this treatment with all the submissiveness of the man who, smitten on one cheek, turns the other meekly for a repetition of the insult. If Christians had a real respect for their own gospel, this mild and cowed demeanor would extort their admiration and applause, for it is the very conduct which is prescribed in the "Sermon on the Mount," and which they hear inculcated theoretically from all their own pulpits. As a matter of fact, however, Christians practically disregard their own impracticable ethics, and feel the same hearty contempt for those who neglect to vindicate their rights which is felt by the unregenerate. Equal rights in religion will never be established till those to whom they are denied show the very un-Christian but wholly indispensable temper which refuses to submit passively to oppression. Every enlargement of public liberty has been won by the stubborn old Anglo-Saxon spirit that resents and resists the spirit of despotism; and freethinkers, until they learn this stern lesson of resistance to the haughty and domineering power which now imposes on them the most humiliating disabilities, must make up their minds to endure as best they can the insults which follow in the wake of their own supineness.

The first of the two cases we allude to is that of the Berlin Mission, in connection with which Colonel Ingersoll's name has been prominently mentioned. Read a few of the press-notices which have chanced to fall under our eye.

A Washington dispatch to the Chicago Times early in November said:—

"Bob Ingersoll is here, waiting to be summoned to the State Department and sent to Berlin as Minister. There has been the usual amount of lying about this appointment, as about all others of any importance. A Peoria friend of Ingersoll telegraphs here privately that Ingersoll told him before he left Illinois that he was to have this mission. When Ingersoll arrived here, he was informed by several of the Illinois delegation that they had recommended him for the German mission, but as yet it has not been offered him. He has not received a word from the State Department on the subject. Secretary Evarts is represented as having said to Senator Oglesby and several Congressmen that the President intended to give the mission to some Illinois man, and asked for any suggestion the delegation might wish to make. A consultation was held among the members, and they decided to suggest Colonel Ingersoll as a good man for that office. There is no doubt that the delegation in Congress would like to see Colonel Ingersoll appointed; but a majority of them are opposed to making a formal recommendation with the case of Pennsylvania before them. Secretary Evarts was accordingly notified that, while the delegation had no name to present formally, they were of the opinion that Ingersoll's nomination would be very acceptable if the President were disposed to appoint him. These facts were communicated to Colonel Ingersoll at Peoria, by telegraph by a Congressman, and from the report grew the rumor that Ingersoll had received the appointment. Colonel Ingersoll says that, should he be appointed, he would accept; but he does not wish to put himself in the attitude of seeking the place."

On this report the New York correspondent of the Montreal Witness expressed the following flattering opinion:—

"There is an ominous report this morning that Colonel Bob Ingersoll, the blatant and offensive atheist lecturer and writer, is offered the mission to Germany by his old friend, President Hayes. That Ingersoll was invited to dine on Sunday at the White House almost immediately after Hayes took possession of it was regarded as an evil omen, as also his prominence in electioneering for the Republican party. The recent announcement made by him that he was going to reside in Washington indicated that he was going to follow the President like an evil genius, and perhaps it was a desire to get rid of this distressing proximity that induced the offer of an important foreign mission, if it has really been made. But only think of committing this whole Christian Republic to the deep, deep disgrace of being represented in the German Empire by a clever, loud, contemptuous scoffer at the Christian religion and the Bible! We may hope that if such an intensely foolish, and, I might say, criminal nomination is made, the Senate will not confirm it. But the traditional policy to exclude religion from politics may land the nation in even such a deep disgrace as this. Certainly no politician would venture to place opposition to Ingersoll on the ground that he is an atheist."

The Boston Congregationalist declared itself on the question as follows:—

"In our humble opinion, Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll is one of the last men to be appointed to any such representative position as that of United States Minister to Germany. We should be happy to see his nomination emphatically rejected. We say this on other than merely religious grounds, though those ought to rule him out."

The Jacksonville (Illinois) Journal, if more polite, was equally explicit:—

"The President has left the matter of selecting the representative of the United States at Berlin's court to the Illinois delegation in Congress. It is said that they are about equally divided between Hon. Jehu Baker and Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll. Recognizing the scholarly attainments, the political experience, the eloquence, and the party service of both these distinguished statesmen, we hope the avowed atheistical principles of the latter will militate against his appointment as the representative of our Christian nation."

The Boston Post fell into line as follows:—

"The religious community rises as one man to demand that he shall not be sent to Berlin to represent a Christian people."

Of course, the Brooklyn Catholic Review was bound to be a little more complimentary than any Protestant paper:—

"The country has been threatened with a great disgrace, but it now appears that we are to be saved from this ignominy. It was reported, and generally believed, that the notorious infidel, 'Colonel Bob Ingersoll,' had been offered the German mission by President Hayes. This would be rather worse than it would be for Queen Victoria to send Charles Bradlaugh to represent her government at some foreign court; for Bradlaugh, bad as he is, has the education and the manners of a gentleman; while Ingersoll is as coarse and ignorant as he is profane and vicious. There might have been a certain appositeness in sending Ingersoll to meet Bismarck; but the great Chancellor is no longer supreme at Berlin, and our Illinois ruffian would be sadly out of place in a court where at least the decencies of life are still observed. But the story now is that the appointment is not to be made. While it was supposed to be probable, however, we did not observe in the secular press any objections to it on the ground of the atheism and vulgar profanity of the man. When it suits the purpose of the secular press, it asserts that this is 'a Christian country.' The assertion is true only as far as it is true that this is a Catholic country. The Christianity that exists here outside of the visible or invisible pale of the Catholic Church is not worth talking about."

And so on. It need not be said that we should never dream of asking the appointment of any man to public office on the ground that he is a disbeliever in the Christian religion, which would be exactly as wrong in principle as to ask an appointment on the ground of belief in it; though we should like to see the principle fully and practically recognized that such disbelief is no bar to office in this country. But the fact is evident to all who do not wilfully shut their eyes to it that no man who is prominent for his outspoken "infidelity" (so-called) can to-day enter political life in any other capacity than that of a cat's-paw to pull Christian chestnuts out of the fire—his services gladly made use of, but himself treated with ill-concealed scorn. The Christian Church claims proprietary interests in the State to the extent of being scandalized, if any known and prominent non-Christian ventures to claim equal rights with Christians in the matter of office-holding.

The other case alluded to is that of some lectures which Colonel Ingersoll recently delivered in Utica and in Albany. In the latter city, especially, his lecture created a veritable "tempest in a teapot." One of our Albany subscribers (to whom we return cordial thanks for numerous clippings from the local press, some of which were racy in the extreme) wrote as follows under date of November 27: "Everybody appeared to be delighted,—in fact, wildly enthusiastic,—at hearing truths told which they had, no doubt, often thought, but were unaccustomed to hear plainly and honestly told. The Orthodox, of whom there were many, did not seem to know they had listened to anything sinful, until afterward so informed by their spiritual leaders, who sent to the Young Men's Association, under whose auspices the lecture was given, the card a printed copy of which I enclose. . . . One probable outcome of the affair will be an invitation extended to Colonel Ingersoll to address our citizens again within a few weeks."

The Executive Committee of the Young Men's Association, however, scared by the Orthodox clamor, published the following preamble and resolution in the Albany Times of November 23:—

"WHEREAS, In a public lecture delivered under the auspices of this Association, Nov. 15, 1877, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll made a violent and unwarrantable attack upon the religious belief of a large portion of this community, thereby alienating the friends of the Association and bringing its management under criticism; therefore

"Resolved, That while the Young Men's Association does not indorse the sentiments of its lecturers and does not hold itself responsible for their utterances, and while it maintains the broad right of freedom of opinion and of speech, it nevertheless regards the lecture of Colonel Ingersoll as a violation of the confidence reposed in him by the lecture committee. In the judgment of this committee no lecturer has a right to present, on the lyceum platform, extreme partisan views on any subject upon which the community is divided; still less has he the privilege of indulging in bitter denunciation of the most cherished and sacred beliefs of the great majority of his audience. This board of managers highly appreciate the liberal patronage extended to the Association by this community, and in the future entertainments which it offers to the public will endeavor to please its friends while giving occasion of offence to none."

The same journal, on the next day, published also this "Protest," signed by twenty-three of the local clergy:—

"To DR. MOSHER, PRESIDENT:

"Dear Sir,—The attention of the undersigned has been naturally and necessarily attracted to the fact, and to the comments of the newspapers upon the fact, of Mr. Robert Ingersoll's lecture delivered in Albany on Thursday last, under the auspices of the Association of which you are president. Among the comments especially noteworthy is the statement of two of the leading newspapers 'that hereafter no lecture course in Albany can be complete without Colonel Ingersoll.' In itself, illogical, inconsequent, and irreverent, coarse without strength, destructive without suggestiveness, the lecture deserves no notice. The right of an individual to such thinking, if it be considered a right, and if it can be called thinking, may well be conceded to anyone who counts such operations of the brain thoughts; and the right to utter such thoughts in their crudeness, which the law denies to the profane man in his oaths, to the libertine in his licentiousness, or to a traitor in his sedition, may perhaps better be tolerated for its general harmlessness than be dignified with denial or repression. But the whole matter assumes, in the judgment of the undersigned, a far more serious attitude when such a speaker is accepted, indorsed, and introduced by an Association composed of, and appealing for support and sympathy to, educated, intelligent, believing men, and when we are threatened with the same Mr. Ingersoll as the sine qua non of Albany lecture courses in the future. Having no controversy, therefore, with Mr. Ingersoll, the undersigned protest against the wrong done to the foundations of Christian civilization and society, as well as to Christian belief and the Christian institutions, by the protection thrown over such open and avowed blasphemy on the part of the Young Men's Association in introducing, and so far indorsing the opinions and expressions of such a man. Scientific unbelief; the earnest struggles of a thoughtful mind for light; the utterances, however startling, of a seeker after truth, who has lost his way,—even these ought not to find expression and indorsement from a general association, relying upon the good-will and sympathy of a Christian community. But that the Association should invite such a speaker as Mr. Ingersoll is known to be, is, in the judgment of the undersigned, an insult and outrage to a large proportion of the citizens of Albany, which the Association cannot safely repeat, and against which we earnestly and decidedly protest.

"William Crowell Doane; Walton W. Battershall; Irving Magee; John McC. Holmes; J. Livingston Reese; Frank Rogers Morse; Edgar T. Chapman; Fred. G. Granniss; S. L. Morrow; Samuel E. Smith, Rector of Holy Innocents; J. W. Thompson, Pastor North Pearl Street Methodist Episcopal Church; Philip Krohn, D.D., Pastor Hudson Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church; J. S. C. Sawyer, Pastor Ash Grove Methodist Episcopal Church; D. L. Schwartz; Richard Temple; James Haughton; Edwin Coan; Anson J. Upton; Henry Darling; Thomas Kelly; D. K. Bartlett; William S. Smart; Edward Selkirk.

Though I did not hear the lecture, yet I have read and heard enough respecting it to prompt me to most emphatically protest against it, as an outrage upon the Christian community and most injurious in its influences.

R. W. CLARK."

"Bishop McNeirny writes:—

"The protest which you were kind enough to place in my hands yesterday, and which, at your request, I herewith return, is well-timed. I sincerely hope that it may have the desired effect of inducing the officers of the Young Men's Association to disavow the shocking utterances of Mr. Ingersoll, and of protecting the citizens of Albany from similar insult and outrage in the future.

"Obliged to leave the city at an early hour this morning, I have no opportunity of conferring with the reverend clergy of the city. Their sentiments, however, I am sure are quite in harmony with mine. In the nature of the case, there can be but one opinion in regard to it.

"FRANCIS, Bishop of Albany."

Now the whole point of these remarkable proceedings, so far as they are worthy of notice here, is that they expose, to all but the mole-blind, that widespread dental of equal rights in religion which so many radical optimists complacently assume to be impossible in the United States. A man of Colonel Ingersoll's genius can ride over it; but less meteoric liberal lecturers are simply crushed out of sight by it, to the unspeakable detriment and retardation of the liberal cause. Observe that the resolution above quoted declares that, "In the judgment of this Committee, no lecturer has a right to present, on the lyceum platform, extreme partisan views on any subject upon which the community is divided." Yet this same Committee advertise Rev. Joseph Cook in their course for the evening of January 10 as "the most prominent opponent of modern infidelity." How is this? As the above shows, Albany is divided between Christianity and so-called (but mis-called) "infidelity"; yet the opponent of Christianity is publicly disowned, while the "opponent of infidelity" is still welcomed and advertised as such! What precious consistency is this! As to "coarseness," "denunciations," etc., Mr. Cook utterly distances Colonel Ingersoll; nay, there is not a "ribald blasphemer against Christianity" in the country who can equal the former in malignant and vulgar detraction of the beliefs he opposes or of those who hold them. Yet denunciation of "infidelity," carried even to the extent of falsehood and malicious slander, is received with applause on the public platform, while outspoken but kindly-spirited criticism of Christianity excites a storm of abuse. We demand the public recognition of equal rights as between the "infidel" and the Christian; we demand the application of one just and equal rule to both; and we say plainly that the first principles of self-respect imperatively call upon all liberals to make the same demand. Not to make this demand with all the earnestness of men and women who defend the dearest prerogatives of their humanity is—we know not whom we offend by the word—pusillanimity; and it wins from the Orthodox just what it deserves—contempt. The greatest good of the Liberal League movement will lie in the wiping out of this reproach against the liberal cause, and the birth of a virile self-respect for which it has languished too long. Have not our equal rights been trampled upon about long enough?

EXTRACTS AND NOTES.

The following decision of Grand Master McCurdy, of the Grand Lodge of Michigan, was approved by the Grand Lodge of the State, July, 1873:—

"We as Masons do not undertake to decide questions on which theologians themselves do not agree. The Bible, square, and compasses are recognized lights in Masonry; and we have no more right to demand that the Mason or the candidate shall declare what he believes to be the origin or the nature of the Bible, than we have to require him to declare what he believes to be the origin or the nature of the metal in the square. The former we leave to the theologian and to every man's conscience; and the latter to the chemist and to every man's investigation. The use we make of these Masonic lights do not require that these questions be mooted or decided by us." [Masonic Law of Michigan, 1874.]

That is sensible; but in some of the States the decisions of the Grand Masters and the action of the Grand Lodges have been less in harmony with the enlightenment of the nineteenth century; while requirement of belief in God, as a mere formality, is everywhere in this country insisted on as a condition of initiation into the mysteries of the Order. Let liberals either withdraw from the Order, or else use all their influence inside of it for the removal of the religious qualification. True, in most cases it means nothing, but it ought to be abolished, if for no other reason than that the more narrow and bigoted members of the fraternity shall have no chance to interfere with any brother's religious belief. At a recent convocation of the French Free-Masons, it is stated, the clause of the Constitution of the Order which read—"Free-Masonry holds to the principle of the existence of a God and the immortality of the soul"—was, by a very large majority, changed to read—"Free-Masonry holds to the principle of an absolute freedom of conscience and to the brotherhood of mankind. It excludes no one on account of his belief."

Freethinkers should be the very last persons to adopt the manners and habits of the camp-meeting. Let him who aims to be a teacher of advanced thought in this age, and who wishes to exert an influence not limited to an ignorant, indiscriminating few of his own party, treat opponents with respect and courtesy, and criticize their beliefs with candor and fairness. Radicalism does not consist in a bitter spirit and violent language. To impugn the motives of others; to treat habitually the opinions of opponents with contempt and ridicule; to indulge in offensive personalities and violent declamation,—is characteristic of the fanatic and the demagogue, not of the true radical, whose views come from profound thought, careful reasoning, and extensive acquaintance with the subject of his study.

In her little work, What Think Ye of Christ? Gall Hamilton thus alludes to the Smith sisters, of Glastonbury, Conn.:—

"All the world has had its laugh at them, and there is certainly something very droll in the idea of two quiet gentlewomen at the head of a regiment of Jersey cows making a stand against the whole constituted United States Government, almost as droll as it was for a handful of Boston folk to throw overboard a cargo of tea in the face of the British Empire a hundred years ago. But it is not in the least droll; on the other hand it seems to me altogether admirable, that fifteen years ago, in the refined conclusion of their country parsonage, for their own interest and amusement, two sisters, the daughters of an obscure, cultivated, country clergyman, should set about the translation of the Old and New Testaments. Their idea of the work, so far as I know, was wholly original, and is certainly reverential, scientific, and valuable. They determined to make what should be purely a translation and not at all a commentary. They would not put upon the sacred word any private interpretation. They resolved not to go astray after literary graces, not even after perspicuity and harmony, but simply, as the Germans say, to overset into one language an important book written in another. If the word hell was used twenty times in the Hebrew, they used the corresponding word twenty times in English, and did not attempt to vary the style by calling it hell in one place and the grave in another,—making thereby the Word of God of none effect by their traditions. When the Psalmist said of the starry heavens impressively, 'No speech nor language: their voice is not heard,' the Misses Smith did not consider it polite or necessary to contradict him, as King James' translators were forward to do, by affirming that 'there is no speech or language where their voice is not heard'; and I am free to confess that I am very impatient to see this new translation, which I understand is now going through the Hartford press; and I trust the solid men of Glastonbury will find some more ancient way of fighting for their principles than driving the Misses Smith's cows to pound, and so permit these good ladies to correct their proofs in peace."

Says Gunning, in his work Life-History of our Planet:—

"What was the court of justice among your ancestors a few hundred years ago? It condemned to death one of the first physicians of England for the crime of raising a storm by sailing over the sea in a sieve, in company with two witches on broomsticks; and King James of pious memory graced by his presence the tortures of the execution. Justice! why there was such a sense in the English mind in the time of James the First, and it demanded that Dr. Fithan, of spotless life, for the crime of brewing a storm in a sieve, should be burned for a few minutes by men, and then through the sons of eternity by the merciful God! Justice, the sense of what is just between God and man, so slow in coming, has not yet come into the minds of men in the third sense, the sense of what is just between man and animal. The injustice and cruelty to animals, so characteristic of the races called civilized, will be held in future ages as one of the crowning vices of a more primitive humanity."

The following advertisements read rather strangely to us in these times:—

"A very likely negro woman that has a child of about six weeks old, to be sold either with or without the child. Inquire of the printer hereof."—New England Weekly Journal (Boston), April 9, 1733.

"To be sold. A likely negro wench, about twenty-five years of age, that can do all sorts of household work, especially cookery; is very hearty and strong; has proved her faculty at propagation, and is very fluent in the English language. Inquire of the printer."—Boston Evening Post, Sept. 10, 1774.

B. F. U.

BEES ARE FOND of pleasant odors and bright colors, and, in the opinion of Sir John Lubbock, have been largely instrumental by fertilizing the beautiful flowers in increasing their numbers. The most lovely flowers, he states, have attracted bees, and consequently the finest blossoms of the year have been cross-fertilized each by the other. Thus, for century after century, flowers have been growing more and more beautiful. From these tastes on the part of bees, also, it has in the course of long years come about that the plants which bloom by day have bright colors and a sweet smell. Similarly night-plants, although as a rule colorless, are yet often powerfully scented; the reason being that they are fertilized by nocturnal moths which have a sense of odor fully as delicate as that of bees, and, like bees, are fond of honey.

Communications.

AN ILLUSTRATION OF ORTHODOXY.

The intensely eulogistic newspaper echoes of an intensely eulogistic biography of Rev. Dr. Kirk, recently published, bring to my mind an interview I once had with the subject of it. When his translation of Gausse's Theopneusty appeared, I read it with great eagerness, having already sought in vain for adequate grounds of the doctrine of scriptural infallibility. This book, published in 1841 or thereabouts, asserted with the utmost confidence, and assumed to demonstrate, the divine inspiration, and the consequent infallible correctness, in fact and doctrine, of the entire contents of the Old and New Testaments. The high reputation of the translator would have sufficiently commended this work to the confidence of the Orthodox public, but its soundness was also vouched for in an introductory notice by Rev. Dr. Woods, of Andover Seminary.

The book, however, seemed to me not only to fail of proving what it assumed to prove, but to abound in false assumption, fallacy in place of argument, and misquotation. Errors of the last sort were so abundant and palpable, that I thought I would inquire respecting one of them of the reverend editor and translator. So, taking the book to Dr. Kirk, I pointed to a passage quoted as scriptural evidence in proof of some assertion of the author, and inquired where in the Bible that passage could be found. The question seemed a puzzling one. After searching his memory in vain, Dr. Kirk said he would go up stairs and examine the original French. Returning, he showed me that the passage marked by the author as a quotation was much longer, and said that, "thinking it did not look exactly right, he had thought it better to omit the latter portion." Well, I asked, "But your amended quotation, where is that to be found?" He was obliged to confess that it contained fragments of three texts, taken from different places, and pieced together to seem like one declaration. I asked if either of those passages, in its original place, affirmed the doctrine which the compound was represented as affirming. He admitted that neither of them did so, and did not attempt to defend either his own unconfessed abridgment of a work purporting to be translated in full, or the author's unscrupulous dealing with Scripture in the attempt to prove his church-doctrine scriptural.

Dr. Kirk was, no doubt, eminent in piety, and in what the Church calls "saintliness," more accurately entitled "other-worldliness." He possessed fair average mental ability, and had acquired a fair average measure of intelligence. But it probably never occurred to him to apply either the ability or the intelligence to the work of discovering how far his theological system was founded in truth. That system (according to his teachers, and the teaching under which his generation grew up) was to be assumed true, and the appropriate work of ability and intelligence in the clergy was to make it appear true to their hearers and readers. Confident assumption on the part of teachers is one of the most effective modes of convincing the ignorant. Gausse's Theopneusty was great in pretension and fluent in quotation, and had naturally much weight with readers who, prepossessed in favor of its conclusion, never attempted either to sift its pretensions or to verify its quotations. Probably it was these very qualities which made the diffusion of the work in this country seem desirable both to Dr. Kirk and Dr. Woods. The latter would, no doubt, have approved the action of the former in covering up and smuggling away any obvious incorrectness of quotation. On the other hand, probably neither of them ever thought of gauging their commendations of the work by its correctness in argument, or of objecting to any particular misstatement which would seem sound and prove effective to the majority of readers. Their business, as church-members and ministers, was to gain partisans to their particular theology and ecclesiasticism. The end would sanctify the means.

C. W. K.

A WORD FOR MATERIALISM.

Mr. H. Clay Neville, in a short and terse article in THE INDEX of Nov. 15, says of materialism, after conceding its intellectual strength, that "morally it must ever be weak and defective while human nature remains essentially what it is." Certainly, it cannot afford the highest incentive to those who do not accept it intellectually, who look to a future, supermundane existence as the complement of this, as the sphere in which is to be enjoyed the greatest measure of happiness possible. But while this is true, it is no less true that to those who reject the idea of a future conscious existence, who regard all the themes of "heaven" and "summer-land" as mere unproven fancies, baseless dreams,—to such as these, the doctrines of materialism afford the means of as high and pure enjoyment, of as much, yea, of ten-fold more, happiness here. To me, materialism is an inspiration to the highest, the most earnest endeavor for humanity. I know not how it may be with others; but for myself I can say that I have seen more of real happiness, of quiet, true, unalloyed joy, since the doctrines of materialism became for me living truths, than I had in all the years before. I know that it has been to me a beneficent belief. It has given me broader, more catholic and liberal views. It has made me more charitable, and has cooled the fierce vehemence of my temper.

Mr. Neville says that "materialism is the belief of despair and the paralysis of the finest moral energies in human nature." How so? Despair of what? Is it of human goodness? Does not materialism claim more of that goodness for man than any other doctrine? Does it not claim that the mission of man is happiness, and that the way to be happy ourselves is to make others happy? Is this not in effect saying that he (Mr. Neville) only works for the right, only expends the "finest moral energies" of his nature for the benefit of his fellows because he believes that he will live eternally in some future world? Is it not a confession that, if this incentive were removed, he would lapse into utter selfishness? I do not believe this of the gentleman, yet it is just where the logic of his argument leads. There is no evasion of this.

Again, the gentleman says that, "If materialism is true, the human mind has wrought a sublime miracle in conceiving a destiny for itself so much nobler than that which Nature has given it." How has it conceived so much nobler a destiny than Nature has given it? What is the popular idea of the future life? Is it not viewed simply as a place of sensual enjoyment; a place given as a compensation for the sorrows of this? What work has human thought projected for itself in that ideal world? Has it thought of this future "home" in any way ennobling? Has it not always been looked forward to as a mere place of rest, of idle enjoyment, of idle psalm-singing? I see not where the "sublime miracle" is wrought in conceiving of such a purposeless future for the race. It would be a work of supererogation to show how immeasurably superior to this is the destiny given to humanity by the philosophy of scientific materialism. Quite likely it will not satisfy "the great mass of men and women." Still the child will cry for the moon, but it may not have it, and as it grows older and wiser it will seek something more attainable. So with humanity. It will some day learn that at the most these dreams of a heavenly future are but "hopes," and then it will turn its eyes earthward and seek to perfect itself and find its happiness here.

"Destroy the idea of the permanence of character in some conscious form, and its sacredness, its beauty, is irreparably marred." This is puerile. Is the rose less beautiful because its petals wither and fall in a day? Does not this very fact of its transiency enhance its value in our eyes? Would not the flavor of the luscious peach pall upon our palates if it were to remain there forever, or even for the space of a twelvemonth? In short, does not this very fact of the mutability of all things give them the major part of the value which they possess? We are told that the body is the casket of the soul. Is the casket less beautiful or lovable because the electric flash or the bullet may lay it in the dust to-morrow?

One quotation, and I am done for the present. This quotation shall serve as an answer to the closing paragraph of Mr. Neville's letter. There is much, bearing upon this subject, which I would like to quote; but the space in THE INDEX is precious, and I will not further trespass upon the patience of its worthy editor. But to our quotation:—

"Just as no single atom or smallest conceivable particle of matter can disappear or be destroyed in the life of Nature in general, so not the smallest deed or most insignificant thought of a man can perish or be lost in the general life of mankind. For both propagate themselves in unending sequence, by virtue of the impulse given by them, just as the oscillations of the surface of a piece of water produced by a falling stone vibrate onward in constantly larger and weaker circles. And although this movement itself must by degrees be lost or come to rest, just like these oscillations, it has in the meanwhile set free a certain number of other (physical or intellectual) movements, which on their part renew and continue the same action. Thus the life of the individual is at the same time the life of humanity, and the life of humanity that of the individual! Whoever cannot or will not allow this great truth to suffice for him, whoever is unable to find in it a sufficient impulse to virtue and honesty, will also be incapable of being kept permanently in the right path by any external force or agency. Neither philosophical nor religious creeds are capable of furnishing even distantly an equivalent for it, or of replacing by means of their mixed egotistical and imaginary motives that firm moral position which the individual must attain by the recognition of the imperishableness of his being in connection with humanity at large."—Büchner's Man, in the Past, Present, and Future, p. 236. Italics mine.

E. C. WALKER.

FLORENCE, IOWA.

ANOTHER WORD FOR MATERIALISM.

EAST BOSTON, Mass., Nov. 17, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:

Sir,—Your correspondent, H. C. Neville, in THE INDEX of Nov. 15, makes an attack upon materialism, to which, although no proof is adduced to support his position, I feel inclined to reply, seeing that from the pulpit we occasionally hear similar utterances. It is evident, in the first place, that H. C. Neville must in youth have had very strongly impressed upon his mind what he considers to be a fact, that there is a future life; and in still later years found out by investigation of some kind that materialism is so sound in its position as to seem unassailable, and thus accounting partially for his statement that materialism is a belief of despair. The fact of materialism presenting the elements of truth seems to afford him no satisfaction. Doubtless to our friend, and such as think with him, materialism may appear hopeless; but to me this is only the case where the brain, unduly imaginative, has figured out for itself a course of future life satisfying all the unconsummated desires of this life, which might have found satisfaction under a materialistic treatment, thus rendering the human being less likely to run into the error that this life is an incomplete one.

The sling against materialism, that it destroys the noblest aspirations, seems to imply a most prejudiced view of it. H. C. Neville, by being generous enough to admit that it may be irrefutable, gives ground for hopes that on this point he may yet make some concession. I would ask if he considers that there is conflict between the aspirations of man and the new inculcations of science? I maintain that the exercise of our faculties toward the possible good and improvement of society by possible and provable means is better than the possible good and improvement of society by uncertain and improvable means. Doubtless progress has been made in the past, and by people who have believed in future spiritual existence; but, at the same time, destruction seems gradually to be overtaking the belief in immortality, accompanied with the warning that the chimeras of the past afford no beacon light for the guidance of the future. Were it possible to think myself a believer in a God, I have little doubt that, instead of considering the belief in a future life a noble aspiration, it would seem the dictate of a thankless and dissatisfied disposition, chiefly suited to the sluggish and apathetic nature. By being more fearless, not afraid to contend with what is termed evil, and willing to accept life with its inevitable responsibilities, men would feel more contented with this life, and not importune for a life which there does not seem the slightest evidence to believe in.

If by H. C. Neville's statement that, if materialism is true, the human mind has wrought a sublime miracle in conceiving a destiny so much nobler than Nature has given it,—if he means that the imagination in its conception of a life so much happier than our life is evidence of immortality, I would urge that some proof be given that the conception will ultimately be realized. The Pope and his cardinals conceived that there was no other explanation to be given in regard to our terrestrial sphere but bare assertions of its immobility; and so, satisfied that they were right, they hurled all the contrary-minded to perdition nearly as fast as the earth was hurling them onwards through space. I would remind our friend, before accusing materialism, that the absurdity of a conception is no evidence of its truth. There is on the part of materialism a belief that man may be made here much happier through a better method; though we do not assume to effect this in realms we know nothing of, to work and act towards securing this result on this earth seems evidence of being spurred by a noble aspiration.

H. C. Neville says that, to round out this life into its most perfect spiritual symmetry, man must create an imaginary state of being following this. If he would allow it to stand thus, to round out this life into a more perfect symmetry man must conceive an imaginary state of being, we might agree.

Still further he remarks: "Destroy the idea of the permanence of character in some conscious form, and its sacredness and beauty are irreparably marred." Will he specify one mode of existence which is permanent in character? Even human beings, as conscious human beings, began to be.

In conclusion, let me urge that materialism seems to be the belief of hope for the future, curing the apathy which shows itself to be allied so closely with belief in immortality. Materialism, relying upon the real and adopting self-reliance, is making the effort to introduce what seems to me the only means to secure the progress and advancement of mankind, and is at least entitled to the credit of possessing noble aspirations.

DAVID KIRKWOOD.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Tempted I am to launch into a disquisition on definition. All our woes come of bad ones. A good definition is better than precious stones or much fine gold. Armed with a good definition of matter or spirit, I will bring Materialists and Spiritualists into perfect accord. But observe! No adequate definition is possible except in terms outside its own category. For example: if matter and spirit are two categories comprising all being, then is there no possible definition of either except in terms of the other.

All reasoning depends on definition; but it is a mistake to suppose that the validity of my silver argument in THE INDEX of Nov. 22 depends upon the doubtful issue of the "war of the dictionaries." It is also a mistake to suppose the definition I adopted carries only the weight of a great lexicographic authority. Because I wished my argument should have a general literary force and effect, as well as a law-logical one, and because I wished to emphasize the importance of definition,—this made me eulogize "dictionary" and build upon it. A careful thinker should have discovered that my definition had the backing of "the statute in that case made and provided."

It is an office assumed by all governments to define its own monetary unit. Ours did that by act of Congress nearly a century ago. I only took so much of Webster's definition as embodied the definitive portion of that act; and I marvel that my appeal to "dictionary" should be construed as building upon one lexicographic authority as against another. You and I are just as competent as either of those dictionary-makers and their coadjutors are, to construct a definition,—at least I am, and you will be by a little special study! Let us to it then.

Value, like weight, or any other form of force or meta-physical thing, can be known only by the sensible, material substance to which it relates. To define a unit of weight by the use of weight-terms alone would be only to multiply words about it. To say a pound was so many ounces or such a part of a ton would not help. You are only giving the quantitative relation between weight-terms,—which is all well enough for some purposes, but useless if the question is whether the pound, ounce, ton, and all the weight-terms have not come to have a greater or less meaning this year than they had last, while preserving just the same numerical relations among themselves. But when we go outside the weight-category and employ space-terms, and say a pound is that "amount of weight that goes with so many cubic inches of pure water," you have a scientific definition. So we define a unit of time by the length of a pendulum.

To define a unit of value in money-terms (which are value-terms) is to be trammelled up in that vicious circle that makes nonsense of most of the newspaper reading on this subject. To say a dollar is one hundred cents is only another way of saying we employ the decimal terminology in our monetary system. To define by giving foreign money names that are its equivalent gives useful information, indeed, and adds value to the dictionary-maker's book; but it forms no part of a scientific definition.

But since "all roads lead to Rome," let us see if under Worcester's guidance we cannot come via England to the same conclusion. Then a dollar is "a certain value equivalent to four shillings twopence sterling." That makes it necessary to treat the English shilling as our unit; and we must go over the ground with it we before travelled with dollar.

What, then, is an English shilling? Let us split on the dictionaries, we will let them all slide, and go directly to the act of Parliament. I have not its words; but I go into any broker's shop and get the thing those words describe, and we can derive the words from it. Take an English shilling,—scrutinize it, analyze it, and weigh it, and then define. You will find it coin,—silver,—87.6 grains 924 fine. Our dollar is 412½ grains 900 fine. Translate and you have $.225. Now arithmetic,—.225×4 1/8=936. So while Worcester's definition is correct in form and substance, it is off over six per cent. in quantity.

There is no escape from this but by denying that the silver-coin stamped shilling, and issued from the mints of Great Britain, has the true shilling value. You may claim that the British unit is pound, and that this is, and since 1816 has been, exclusively a gold coin; while her silver coins are what are called token or subsidiary coins, and not definition coins: that is, coins that derive an arbitrary value within the British dominions by sheer force of legislation, which declares them to be legal for certain aliquot parts of the unit to a limited amount.

But I must not enter upon "subsidiary coinage" and the double or single standard to show the wickedness of changing from the double to the single,—when the change causes (or, if you prefer, accompanies) a change in relative value of the two metals, much as I may desire it. I fear I have already drawn too heavily on your time and patience. Much study has convinced me that right views and sound legislation on this subject is the paramount need of the hour. Your ringing and brave words on religious freedom and scientific religion thrill me through and through; but when I see how much morality, social progress, and civilization itself is involved in the currency question, all other questions shrivel into insignificance. It pains me, too, that THE INDEX, to which more than all other periodicals I am indebted for right thinking on high themes, should drift into the current of respectable journals on the wrong side, and leave the truth to be vindicated by publicans and repudiators.

It seems to me exceedingly strange that all intelligent people do not comprehend that a money-word simply denominates a definite amount of a specified metal; that this is the only definiteness possible; that the nature of the case admits of no fixity or definiteness of any value-word except as we adhere to a specified amount of a particular commodity (which commodity has been in England since 1816 exclusively gold, but with us both gold and silver); and that the value of the commodity so adopted must be left to the operation of economic laws, whose unimpeded operation is justice, order, and social progress.

Will you be good enough to re-read my former article? Italicize the words "another commodity" in the fourth paragraph, and erase the period in the fourth line from top of the third column.

E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, O., Nov. 24, 1877.

WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

MR. EDITOR:—

In an excellent article in THE INDEX of November 15, over the name of Ingersoll Lockwood, New York, occurs the following sentence: "Was the voice of the pulpit, Protestant or Catholic, raised to condemn human slavery in our land until the burning words of our Parkers, Phillipses, Smiths, Garrisons, Browns, rang through the North and roused the people to a sense of its glaring iniquity?" Parker, Phillips, Smith, and Brown, are good anti-slavery names; and so are Jackson, Quincy, May, Pillsbury, Burleigh, Whipple, Foster, Wright, and a host of others, to enumerate which would fill the columns of THE INDEX to the exclusion of other matter.

But it was WM. LLOYD GARRISON who in his young days with fiery pen attacked slavery and the slave-trade in Baltimore, and was condemned to imprisonment in that city and to pay a fine of a thousand dollars, before any of the names above recorded were heard of by the public.

It was WM. LLOYD GARRISON afterward in Boston who lifted the trump of the Liberator to his lips, and sounded the blast "I will be heard," and rallied around him the anti-slavery host, startling the whole South, and causing "each particular hair" on the head of each particular slave-holder "to stand erect like quills upon the fretful porcupine."

It was WM. LLOYD GARRISON who first, in the history of the world, proclaimed the duty of emancipation unconditional and immediate, causing South Carolina and Georgia to shriek in mortal terror, "TEN THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR HIS HEAD!" words which remained on their statute books until slavery ceased, and which perhaps remain there still.

It was WM. LLOYD GARRISON who was stripped of his clothing in the streets of Boston in obedience and subervency to the slave power, and nearly torn to pieces by "the property and standing" of that city, and found a refuge from the broadcloth in Leveret Street Jail.

It was WM. LLOYD GARRISON upon whose head fell the thunders and anathemas of the pulpit, which accused him of all vices and crimes, and denounced him as the worst man living for the offence of loving liberty for all men equally.

It is not in good taste, in speaking or writing of anti-slavery worthies, to put the name of Garrison second to any other; it implies an inadequate knowledge of the history of the movement to do so. It is as if, writing of Revolutionary generals, one should say Generals Lee, Gates, Green, and Washington; or as if on a list of the Presidents, Washington should be named after some of his successors; or as if in writing of the inception of Christianity its propagation were attributed to the preaching of Peter, James, John, and Jesus!

In writing of American abolitionists, any time during the present century, the name of WM. LLOYD GARRISON is entitled, always, to stand first upon the record.

D. S. GRANDIN.

UPPER GLOUCESTER, Me., Nov. 20, 1877.

"IMPROVING THE OCCASION."

EDITOR INDEX:—

Talking of funerals recently with a liberal-minded man, I asked whether, if he thought it proper and right for a freethinker to prescribe ceremonies for his funeral in accordance with his convictions, such ceremonies would not be agreeable to his near relatives and friends. My friend thought it unfair for a man to cause his dearest friends to suffer annoyance and mortification for the sake of opinions which they do not concur in. In view of the proneness of Orthodox ministers, when called upon to officiate on such occasions, for persons who have never manifested any anxiety to avail themselves of "the means of grace," to "improve the occasion" by appropriating to themselves and their creeds every desirable subject, even on evidence as slight as words spoken during delirium or prostration of mental energy, this reply does not strike me as the highest possible view of the case. If you think the subject of enough general importance, I wish you would talk about it in THE INDEX. Very truly yours, S. W.

LA FAYETTE, N. J., Nov. 19, 1877.

[Have a man's "near relatives and friends" any right to save their own reputations for orthodoxy or even their own feelings, by making him appear to the world what he was not? Our own opinion is that such friends as these deserve the very slightest consideration. Something is due to truth as well as to love; and we cannot conceive anything more abhorrent to an upright man than being compelled, by foolish or weak-minded relatives, to give his posthumous influence in favor of what he believed, while living, to be false. This is to belie his best part—his honest and truthful thought; and, little as he may care what his survivors may do with his worn-out body, he ought to have a "ghost" that should rise, haunt, and torment those faithless ones that made him a traitor to his own soul. Since no man knows the future or its possible mischances, we take the liberty to leave it on record here that we denounce in advance that man as a slanderer who, after we are dead, shall dare to say that we ever sought refuge from the consequences of free thought by resuming the beliefs we have outgrown forever. We may become insane, idiotic, or intellectually paralyzed; but it will take that miserable fate to make us unlearn what we have learned. Nothing but insanity could ever convert us to Christianity again.—Ed.]

PERVERTED LIBERALISM.

There is one form of liberalism, so-called by its representatives, that I regard as the most unhappy state of thought and feeling into which human nature can be warped. That is, this snarling contempt for everything held sacred by people of more religious reverence than some narrow-minded, coarse-grained freethinkers exhibit. Many persons who claim to be representative liberals are the greatest burdens that true liberalism has to carry. They bring reproach on the cause wherever they go, by their bigotry and littleness of soul. Those chronic haters of every form of religious thought and feeling are to be found throughout society to-day, venting their anti-religious spleen to the disgust of all refined and liberal-minded people. Their scepticism has taught them hate rather than love. They have the false idea that they must fight everybody and everything, or prove themselves faithless to the cause of mental freedom.

Some of these pugilistic sceptics seem to think that the whole past must be unceremoniously knocked out of existence in order to save the world from superstition; and they go about on their knightly mission, attacking every institution that claims any history,—calling all other persons cowards and time-servers who do not join in their fanatical crumade. That many of those who represent liberalism to the religious world are of this type is one of the principal causes of the churches' repugnance to free-thought. They see this perverted form of free-thought and are naturally alarmed at its dangerous tendency. Good, sensible people who see only destruction and moral chaos in the crude ideas of these iconoclastic reformers, learn to look with suspicion on everything associated with liberalism. And were this state of thought and feeling the final result of freethinking, it would be something to fear and oppose. Better have Christianity in the Constitution and public schools than have this type of destructionists rule society. (If this be treason, make the most of it.) I say, emphatically, that those so-called liberals who have learned only to hate the churches and all forms of religion, who have not grown into some broader life of sympathy with the universal soul of struggling humanity, are no more capable of doing justice to their fellow-men, or of promoting the true welfare of society than are the most bigoted advocates of the constitutional establishment of Christianity.

I have not time to be as explicit on this subject as I should like to be. I mean just what I have said, and that it shall apply to all persons claiming to be liberals who construe liberalism to mean contempt for Christians and Christian institutions; but no earnest, thoughtful effort to construct out of such material as the world offers a better state of society than now exists. Let us not learn merely to despise, but to excel our opponents. H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo.

THE CATHOLIC CHURCH ON USURY.

Clergymen, especially the mass of the lower clergy, have generally the virtue (such as it is) of a cheap good-Samaritanism. They are glad to see the poor have plenty, at least plenty of pudding,—not culture for the mind, not that, but pudding for the belly; and, ignorant (as they commonly are) of the laws which govern trade, they often hit upon the crudest devices in their endeavors to alleviate distress. Their prohibition of usury (never formally rescinded) is a case in point; a measure which, if it were in any way possible, must produce a total stagnation of business. We need not inquire of the wisdom or unwisdom, justice or injustice of interest. Interest is one link in a chain, a necessary factor of our economical system. Interest may be abolished one day; but when (if ever) that takes place, property must disappear along with it. Property implies usury as the dial implies shadow. Vainly do priests and popes anathematize. In vain does Jehovah thunder from the peaks of Sinai. What must be will be, the gods notwithstanding.

Yet demagogism (even clerical demagogism) is never meaningless. There is a truth concealed behind this nonsense. Schopenhauer says that kings ought to begin their addresses, not, "We by the grace of God"; but, "We the lesser of two evils." Well, so it is with every institution. Proudhon proves, with tedious iteration, that property is not sacred. Of course not! Why, even Mrs. Grundy only half believes in that absurdity! No such thing is sacred. No such thing is tolerable, except by reason of the worse intolerableness of the alternatives, as in the summer we make the streets muddy to avoid the dust.

CHARLES ELLERSHAW.

SLANDER IN CHURCHES.

DENVER, Col., Nov. 20, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—I find the following in the Compiled Laws of New Mexico (published in 1865), under the head of "Crimes, Punishments, etc.," page 404:—

"Slander in churches (Injurias en los templos): an Act punishing slander used in churches. WHEREAS, various ministers of the gospel are frequently committing grave slanders against particular persons, in temples and chapels, losing sight of charity and evangelical meekness, and profaning those sacred places, which are dedicated exclusively to the worship of the Supreme Being; Therefore, Be it enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico:—Sec. 17. If in future any minister of the gospel of any denomination whatever, or any other person, shall by word or in any other manner slander any other person or persons within any temple, upon conviction, by complaint being made to any justice of the peace, or probate judge, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding fifty dollars, nor less than twenty-five dollars. Sec. 18. All fines arising under the provisions of this act, shall be paid into the treasury of the county in which the offence was committed. Sec. 19. This Act shall be in force from and after its passage. Approved January 10, 1868."

Respectfully yours,

HENRY L. DENISON.

A LITTLE boy of Des Moines, Ia., who writes to his "fran Jimmy" that he is going to run away from school and be an editor, thus closes his letter: "Tel yore suster Katy I don't hav nothin moar to do with that Jinks gurl, an I am troo to her. I wont git prowd and forgit her if I do be an edytur, nor you neether, Jimmy, if yore fokes is pore an ornery. Yores Truly, Johnny."

LONDON Punch: "Botanical old gent (in the Brighton gardens): 'Can you tell me, my good man, if this plant belongs to the "arbutus" family?' Gardener (curtly): 'No sir, it doan't. It b'longs to the corporation!'"

PROFESSOR: "In one evening I counted twenty-seven meteors sitting on my piazza." Class expresses great astonishment at the sociable character of the heavenly bodies.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 "13 " 25 " 8 " "
 "26 " 51 " 6 " "
 "52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most enlightened, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 ry, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MULLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1874, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OTHER

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Barleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,

Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 ry, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and .20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	6.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (RBY. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. HILKEY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. HILKEY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Compass-Bear in Religion.....	3.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Mental and Social Subjects.....	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	6.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibniz and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. GABRIEL H.). The College, the Market, and the Court: or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	3.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels, Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Widdowmach. 1 vol.....	1.25
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation. 3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	4.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Bernard and Derwent. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.00
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	1.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Hits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLEWORTH'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLEWORTH'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. S.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Hereditance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. I.	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Joseph P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Acrobatics. By Heli Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEIGHTON (W. R. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGG'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 1 vol.....	2.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origins in Greece down to the Present Day.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	6.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HUBERT). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868. Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.35
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.00
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—Both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.5
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUEN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Land.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Bousquet, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bodily Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Science. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoe from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Man's Place in Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Heresy of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PELPH'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tiptoe Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Begged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	3.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 21 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnets, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROBBETTS (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels.....	2.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.00
The Chaucer Room. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the best English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....	1.25
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Daur, &c.....	1.25
4. Pearl Fishery, Hamlet, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAYER'S (MRS. ORLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Forests.....	1.00
The Maine Woods.....	1.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
Letters.....	1.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.00
TYLER (EDWARD M.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	6.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Faneuil Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
TYLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sing and the Song. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sunbursts.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	3.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwaite's Life.....	1.50
Wo Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITNEY'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	1.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX.

231 Washington St., Boston.

A HOLIDAY OFFERING.

JUST PUBLISHED:

Poems of the Life Beyond and Within.Voices from Many Lands and Centuries, saying—

"Man, Thou shalt never Die!"

By GILES B. STEBBINS.

Price, $1.50. For sale by THE INDEX, 231
Washington Street, Boston.LECTURES AND SERMONS.

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

THIRD SERIES.

1. The Simplicity of True Religion.
  2. The Missing Faith.
- The following numbers of the first and second series can also be supplied: Thomas Paine, Best Use of Sunday, Higher Reverence, Self-Respect, God on Our Side, Economy and Waste, Piety of Modern Science, Immortal Life, Moral Aspects of Belief in Immortality, Idealizing the Real, The Coming Man, A Rational Church.

Sent to any address, postage paid, at 6 cents per copy, by

JAMES MILLER,

779 Broadway, New York.

T H E*NATIONAL REFORMER,Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.*

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.*WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,Of the British Royal Navy.*

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

RADICAL FREETHOUGHT

LECTURES for 1878.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Festive and Constructive Lectures:

1. The Demands of Liberalism.
2. The Positive Side of Free Thought.
3. The Genesis and Nature of Religion, Considered as an "Element of Human Nature."
4. A Scientific and Philosophic View of Religious Revivals.
5. Christianity and Civilization.
6. The Triumphs of Liberalism.
7. What Liberalism offers in the Place of the Christian Theology.
8. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
9. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
10. Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
11. Buddha and Buddhism.
12. Ancient Egypt: Her Laws, Morality, and Religion.
13. The Theory of Evolution.
14. Darwinism: Its Principles Stated and Defended.
15. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
16. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
17. Modern Scientific Materialism.
18. Instinct and Intuition: Organized Experiences of the Race.
19. Woman: Her Past and Present, Her Rights and Wrongs.
20. Paine. The Pioneer of Freethought in America.
21. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.

Critical Lectures:

22. The Fallacies of Rev. Joseph Cook regarding the Personality and Being of God.
23. Cook's Criticisms of Scientific Materialism examined.
24. Why I am an "Unbeliever."
25. Christianity and Intellectual Progress.
26. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
27. The Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible examined.
28. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
29. Popular Objection to Infidelity Answered.
30. The Crimes and Cruelties of Catholic and Protestant Christianity.
31. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
32. The Proofs of a Personal Intelligent Deity examined.
33. The Froes and Cons of a Future State.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
Thorndike, Mass.VINDICATION OF THOMAS

PAINÉ! Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer. Just issued. Clear—Concise—Vigorous—Logical—eloquent—and Unanswerable! Just what every Liberal wants. Only 25 cents. Address E. O. WALKER, Box 55, Florence, Iowa.

E. P. BOON, 86 NASSAU STREET, has for sale Pamphlets relating to the following subjects: Atheism, Deism, Future Immortality, Mysticism, Natural Religion, Baconianism, Reason in Religion, Spiritualism, Super-naturalism, Liberalism, Free Thought, Moral Philosophy. Lists of above subjects will be furnished on application to E. P. BOON, 86 Nassau Street, New York.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. John E. Williams, Pres. Met. Nat. Bank, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.; Mr. Moses H. Grinnell, N.Y.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

is an ever-prising eight-page Liberal family paper devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth. Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds; it has no reverence for bibles or man-made gods, and it opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasures in another.

It has a variety of departments, is chaste and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a first-rate Liberal paper. It must be the best, for it is the only one of its kind on this continent.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published

WEEKLY AT ONE DOLLAR A YEAR,

or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and in all cases stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address all communications to SETH WILBUR PAYNE, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street (near Broadway), New York.

CHRISTIANITY AND INFIDELITY!

A DISCUSSION BETWEEN

Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian, New York, and

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the Truth Seeker.

SUBJECTS DISCUSSED:

- Part I. The Relative Services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Independence.
- Part II. The Relative Services of Christianity to Learning and Science.
- Part III. Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that Infidelity is true?

A thick 12mo volume of over 500 pages, well bound, sent post-paid by mail for One Dollar. Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. . . . It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Paper, 25 cents.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $3.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS BOOK.*A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. B. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. B. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 15 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles M. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $9.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $9.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75. 25 cts. each; for 1876 and '77 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FAITHFUL AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!*CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT*EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	.40
FIFTY ".....	.75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.50
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.50
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 417.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N.B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Manchester (N. H.) Daily Union laments that Moody and Sankey, now at work in that city, make "very much less" impression there than was the case in Scotland and England.

THE NEW HAVEN Board of Education, by a majority vote of two-thirds, have voted to "dispense with" all religious exercises in the public school—a happy harbinger of the "New Dispensation"! Mr. W. W. Stow, of that city, has an interesting article on this subject in another column. The New York Sun and (mirabile dictu) the Boston Advertiser both approve the action taken. Verily, the Liberal League is doing its work well.

A LADY who is very active in good work writes (the italics are hers): "I have been surprised to find how much the discussion called forth by the circulation of a petition helps a good cause; especially in a place where large numbers of men are employed in manufactories." That is true. Everybody who helps circulate the Religious Freedom Amendment Petition is doing more than he or she perceives at the time. We liberals have very much to learn in the way of effective labor for principle's sake.

NEXT SUNDAY MORNING, at Paine Hall, we are to give an address on "The Liberal League and its Principles." This is the first of a series of meetings to be held for two months by the new Paine Hall Liberal League, and we have consented to give it a "labor of love," not because there are not better speakers to be had, but because Mr. Mendum gives the hall-rent, and because every one should do his share. Those who do not wish to hear any more about this tiresome League business will have their wish by staying at home!

IT WAS a mistake on our part last week to speak of the Liberal League meeting at Ithaca, December 10, as a "Ratification Meeting." It was rather for a discussion of the Rochester platform, "which," writes Dr. Winslow, President of the League, "we mean to make as thorough as possible before undertaking to 'ratify.'" That is better still. Nothing would delight us more than to see discussions of that platform held weekly in every town in the Union for a twelvemonth. The American people would be vastly wiser at the end of the year. The report of this particular meeting is so exceedingly interesting that we shall republish it in full next week.

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition have been received as follows since last week: from Mr. John Buntin, Newburyport, Mass., 609; from Mr. D. A. Robertson, Enon, Pa., 90. Total thus far received—10,350. We well remember that, in 1873, Mr. Buntin sent a list of signatures to the petition of the Boston Liberal League for the taxation of church property in Massachusetts, numbering over eight hundred names; and it is safe to say that the Old Bay State has not a more devoted or energetic friend of secular government than he. We cannot refrain from quoting his note attached to the present list: "The above six hundred and nine (609) signers are from Newburyport. They appeared to understand the object of the petition, and very much approved the taxation of church property. Among these signers are ministers, deacons, and church-members; and all are worthy and respectable citizens. L. A. Horton, as above, signed his name by holding the pen in his mouth, having lost both arms in the Navy Service during the late war."

SUCH WORDS as these, from a true-hearted Kansas subscriber, ought to bear encouragement to others than the few who can alone see his letter: "I cannot resist the promptings of my heart to say a few words in praise of THE INDEX—the dear, earnest, noble INDEX. May it go on in its brave course, and continue to be a light in the great darkness that now ever-shadows the land. Upright principles as laid down by the Rochester Congress, without fear and without faltering; and the day will come when they will be a power in the land. There are liberals scattered all over this State, but, on account of the lack of a central organization which might send out men and women to gather the liberal element into local organizations, they reluctantly join the 'Liberal Christian' associations." Another subscriber in Kansas said, in a letter received the same day: "I was sorry that I could not attend the Rochester convention. The objects of the League are dear and precious to my soul." Courage, brave and scattered workers! This sacred cause of Equal Rights in Religion is kindling heart after heart; you will yet see a harvest from the seed already sown.

NOT LONG SINCE, a Boston letter to the New York World had this cruel paragraph: "It is the fashion to go and hear Joseph Cook, and praise what he says, and applaud his metaphysical contortions, and become enthusiastic over his theological haziness. He is not understood by a tenth part of his admirers; but that makes no difference—no typical Bostonian expects to understand the half of what he admires, though he pretends to understand much more than double what he hears. The other day I clipped out a paragraph from one of Joseph Cook's lectures, and submitted it, one by one, to some half a score of his most intelligent and enthusiastic admirers. It was a paragraph which, for its meaning, was not in the least dependent upon the context. I asked, as I read it to one after another, 'Could you have imagined Wendell Phillips to have said this thing?' sometimes substituting another name for that of the 'silver-tongued orator.' Nobody recognized the paragraph, and pronounced it 'twaddle,' or 'a mere string of words,' or made some equally pungent expression of contempt. Then I had my triumph,—for I had verified my previously expressed belief that many of those who heard Cook oftenest and admired him most could not get below the surface of his marvellous flow of words."

THE MEETING of friends of the Liberal League movement in Boston and vicinity was held in Paine Hall last Friday evening, as announced. Hon. Eliza Wright was elected Chairman, and Mr. Robert Cooper Secretary. Speeches were made by the Chairman, Mr. Seaver, Mr. Mendum, Mr. Verity, Mr. Heywood, and Mr. Abbot; and the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—

Resolved, That we emphatically indorse the platform of the National Liberal League adopted at Rochester, N.Y., Oct. 26; that the principles it enunciates are so true, so important, and yet so much neglected, as to summon all liberal citizens of the United States, irrespective of their religious opinions, to coöperate in impressing them on the public mind; and that the only way to do this effectively is to form a national party which shall steadfastly vote for these principles at the polls.

Resolved, That R. P. Hallowell, John S. Verity, and G. H. Foster are hereby appointed a Committee of Public Work to consider and mature a plan of efficient work on behalf of these principles in this city and State; that they shall report the same at an adjourned meeting of this assembly, to be held a fortnight hence at such place as they shall appoint; and that every friend of the Liberal League movement here present is urged to attend that meeting, with as many of his own friends as he can persuade to accompany him.

Resolved, That the Liberal League movement cannot possibly be carried on without money, and that M. T. Dole, C. D. Place, and Robert Cooper are hereby appointed a Committee of Finance to report at the adjourned meeting the best plan they can devise for raising the necessary funds.

Resolved, That the taxation of church property, the abolition of all religious exercises in the public schools, and the repeal of oppressive Sunday-Sabbath laws, are steps which are indispensable to the establishment of equal rights respecting religion; and that we specially recommend these subjects to the attention of the Committee of Public Work already appointed.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ALBION WRIGHT, New York.
 MR. O. H. PRATTINGHAM, New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. B. F. HALLWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUMMERMANN-POTT, San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. NAVEG, Boston, Mass.
 RABBI E. F. ELSENTHAL, Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER, Springfield, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Chicago, Ill.
 MR. E. W. NEEDHAM, Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZ, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Frank Stocker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ KILLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. F. E. UNDERWOOD, Chicago, Ill.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Thomaston, Me.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Cairo, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN, Birmingham, N. Y.
 HON. E. B. MCCORMICK, Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Louisville, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, 3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
 California.....H. MULLINAUX, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GALT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. SIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....KARST BRUNING, Chicago.
 Indiana.....L. C. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
 Iowa.....J. O. HIGHERS, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN E. HANFORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. OLNEY, Williamsburg.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. BAYARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....D. C. HAUSER, Battle Creek.
 Minnesota.....J. B. EAGERTY, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....J. S. BOYDEN, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNTON, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Pawtucket.
 South Carolina.....L. P. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PINNIX, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. A. DUNBAR, Greenville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....S. SPALDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 District of Columbia.....D. P. WILCOX, Yonkers.
 Utah.....W. R. DEWITTE, Washington.
 Wyoming.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, 127 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 EARL P. HYDE, 221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeldt.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeldt, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, O. H. Dunbar, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Brasech.
 Issued to Anton Brasech, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, B. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clausen, and Fred. Brasech.
 CHILMARK, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Tooley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 BROOKLYN, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Hase, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 PAID HALL, BOSTON.—President, John S. Verity; Secretary, Robert Cooper.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elmer Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. B. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, E. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Owsad, and others.
 BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. Abbot; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Bitterhouse.
 Issued to C. M. Bitterhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel K. P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gint, A. B. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
 CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, J. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
 DECATUR, MISSOURI.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. O. O. Peirson.
 Issued to Dr. Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James W. Bode, Miles C. Bode, W. E. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. B. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Ropson, E. E. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. E. E. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert O. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

PERSONS who are exclusively intellectual, and have no feeling for art, often seem to suppose that while science delights in what is clear and definite, poetry and art delight in what is vague and dim; that these things, so agreeable to a class of gentle lunatics, are a certain preserved extract of moonshine and mist; and it is somewhat ludicrous to take note of the generous and condescending admissions in favor of a refining influence of poetry which are ordinarily made by such hard-headed persons. "I do not know what poetical is; is it honest in deed and word? Is it a true thing?" So Audrey questions, and Touchstone answers with a twinkle of pleasure (being in luck to find such a chance of gracious fooling). "No, truly, for the truest poetry is the most feigning." However this may be, whether we agree or not with Jeremy Bentham and Touchstone that "all poetry is misrepresentation," it is certain that the greatest poets love comprehensiveness and definiteness in their conceptions. The measureless value set by every great artist upon execution favors this tendency. Intense vision renders precise and definite whatever is capable of becoming so, and leaves vague only that which is vague in its very nature. "The great and golden rule of art as well as of life," wrote William Blake, "is this: that the more distinct, sharp, and wiry the bounding line, the more perfect the work of art; and the less keen and sharp, the greater is the evidence of weak imitation, plagiarism and bungling. Great inventors in all ages knew this. . . . Raphael and Michel Angelo and Albert Dürer are known by this, and this alone."—The Contemporary Review.

On Science.

A LECTURE DELIVERED AT BIRMINGHAM, OCTOBER 1, 1877, AS PRESIDENT OF THE MIDLAND INSTITUTE.

BY PROF. JOHN W. TYNDALL.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

The experiences of common life supply us with copious instances of the liberation of vast stores of muscular power by an infinitesimal "priming" of the muscles by the nerves. We all know the effect produced on a "nervous" organization by a slight sound which causes a fright. An aerial wave the energy of which would not reach a minute fraction of that necessary to raise the thousandth of a grain through the thousandth of an inch, can throw the whole human frame into a powerful mechanical spasm, followed by violent respiration and palpitation. The eye, of course, may be appealed to as well as the ear. Of this the lamented Lange gives the following vivid illustration: A merchant who had been sitting in his easy-chair, not knowing whether smoking, sleeping, newspaper-reading, or the digestion of food occupies the largest portion of his personality. A servant enters the room with a telegram bearing the words, "Antwerp, etc. . . . Jonas & Co. have failed." "Tell James to harness the horses!" The servant flies. Up starts the merchant wide-awake, makes a dozen paces through the room, descends to the counting-house, dictates letters, and forwards despatches. He jumps into his carriage, the horses snort, and their driver is immediately at the Bank, on the Bourse, and among his commercial friends. Before an hour has elapsed he is again at home, where he throws himself once more into his easy-chair with a deep-drawn sigh, "Thank God, I am protected against the worst! And now for further reflection!"

This complex mass of action, emotional, intellectual, and mechanical, is evoked by the impact upon the retina of the infinitesimal waves of light coming from a few pencil-marks on a bit of paper. We have, as Lange says, terror, hope, sensation, calculation, possible ruin, and victory compressed into a moment. What caused the merchant to spring out of his chair? The contraction of his muscles. What made his muscles contract? An impulse of the nerves, which lifted the proper latch, and liberated the muscular power. Whence this impulse? From the centre of the nervous system. But how did it originate there? This is the critical question. The aim and effort of science is to explain the unknown in terms of the known. Explanation, therefore, is conditioned by knowledge.

You have probably heard the story of the German peasant who, in early railway days, was taken to see the performance of a locomotive. He had never known carriages to be moved except by animal power. Every explanation outside of this conception lay beyond his experience, and could not be invoked. After long reflection, therefore, and seeing no possible escape from the conclusion, he exclaimed confidently to his companion, "Es müssen doch Pferde darin sein."—"There must be horses inside." Amusing as this locomotive theory may seem, it illustrates a deep-lying truth.

With reference to our present question, some may be disposed to press upon me such considerations as these: Your motor nerves are so many speaking-tubes, through which messages are sent from the man to the world; and your sensor nerves are so many conduits through which the whiplashes of the world are sent back to the man. But you have not told us where is the man. Who or what is it that sends and receives those messages through the bodily organism? Do not the phenomena point to the existence of a self within the self, which acts through the body as through a skilfully constructed instrument? You picture the muscles as hearkening to the commands sent through the motor nerves, and you picture the sensor nerves as the vehicles of incoming intelligence; are you not bound to supplement this mechanism by the assumption of an entity which uses it? In other words, are you not forced by your own exposition into the hypothesis of a free human soul? That hypothesis is offered as an explanation or simplification of a series of phenomena more or less obscure. But adequate reflection shows that instead of introducing light into our minds it increases our darkness. You do not in this case explain the unknown in terms of the known, which, as stated above, is the method of science; but you explain the unknown in terms of the more unknown. The warrant of science extends only to the statement that the terror, hope, sensation, and calculation of Lange's merchant are psychical phenomena produced by, or associated with, the molecular motions set up by the waves of light in a previously prepared brain.

But the scientific view is not without its own difficulties. We here find ourselves face to face with a problem which is the theme, at the present moment, of profound and subtle controversy. What is the causal connection, if any, between the objective and subjective,—between molecular motions and states of consciousness? My answer is, I know not; nor have I as yet met anybody who knows. It is no explanation to say that the objective and subjective effects are two sides of one and the same phenomenon. Why should the phenomenon have two sides? This is the very core of the difficulty. There are plenty of molecular motions which do not exhibit this two-sidedness. Does water think or feel when it runs into frost-ferns upon a window-pane? If not, why should the molecular motion of the brain be yoked to this mysterious companion,—consciousness? We can present to our minds a coherent picture of the physical processes,—the stirring of the brain, the thrilling of the nerves, the discharging of the muscles, and all the subsequent mechanical motions of the organism. But we can present no picture of the process whereby consciousness emerges, either as a necessary link or as an accidental by-product of this series of actions. Yet it certainly does emerge,—molecular motion produces consciousness.

The reverse process of the production of motion by consciousness is equally unrepresentable to the mind. We are here, in fact, upon the boundary line of our intellectual powers, where the ordinary canons of science fail to extricate us from our difficulties. If we are true to these canons, we must deny to subjective phenomena all influence on physical processes. The latter must be regarded as complete in themselves. Physical science offers no justification for the notion that molecules can be moved by states of consciousness; and it furnishes just as little countenance to the conclusion that states of consciousness can be generated by molecular motion. Frankly stated, we have here to deal with facts almost as difficult to be seized mentally as the idea of a soul. And if you are content to make your "soul" a poetic rendering of a phenomenon which refuses the yoke of ordinary mechanical laws, I, for one, would not object to this exercise of idealism. Amid all our speculative uncertainty there is one practical point as clear as the day; namely, that the brightness and the usefulness of life, as well as its darkness and disaster, depend to a great extent upon our own use or abuse of this miraculous organ.

We now stand face to face with the final problem. It is this: Are the brain, and the moral and intellectual processes known to be associated with the brain—and, as far as our experience goes, indissolubly associated—subject to the laws which we find paramount in physical nature? Is the will of man, in other words, free, or are it and Nature equally "bound fast in fate"? From this latter conclusion, after he had established it to the entire satisfaction of his understanding, the great German thinker Fichte recoiled. You will find the record of this struggle between head and heart in his book, entitled Die Bestimmung des Menschen.—The Vocation of Man. Fichte was determined at all hazards to maintain his freedom; but the price he paid for it indicates the difficulty of the task. To escape from the iron necessity seen everywhere reigning in physical nature, he turned defiantly round upon Nature and law, and affirmed both of them to be the products of his own mind. He was not going to be the slave of a thing which he had himself created.

There is a good deal to be said in favor of this view; but few of us probably would be able to bring into play the solvent transcendentalism whereby Fichte melted his chains. Why do some of us regard this notion of necessity with terror, while others do not fear it at all? Has not Carlyle somewhere said that a belief in destiny is the bias of all earnest minds? "It is not Nature," says Fichte, "it is freedom itself by which the greatest and most terrible disorders incident to our race are produced. Man is the cruellest enemy of man." But the question of moral responsibility here emerges, and it is the possible loosening of this responsibility that so many of us dread. The notion of necessity certainly failed to frighten Bishop Butler. He thought it untrue; but he did not fear its practical consequences. He showed, on the contrary, in the Analogy, that as far as human conduct is concerned, the two theories of free will and necessity come to the same in the end.

What is meant by free will? Does it imply the power of producing events without antecedents,—of starting, as it were, upon a creative tour of occurrences without any impulse from within or from without? Let us consider the point. If there be absolutely or relatively no reason why a tree should fall, it will not fall; and if there be absolutely or relatively no reason why a man should act, he will not act. It is true that the united voice of this assembly could not persuade me that I have not, at this moment, the power to lift my arm if I wished to do so. Within this range the conscious freedom of my will cannot be questioned. But what about the origin of the "wish"? Are we, or are we not, complete masters of the circumstances which create our wishes, motives, and tendencies to action? Adequate reflection will, I think, prove that we are not. What, for example, have I to do with the generation and development of that which some will consider my total being, and others a most potent factor of my total being,—the living, speaking organism which now addresses you?

As stated at the beginning of this discourse, my physical and intellectual textures were woven for me, not by me. Processes in the conduct or regulation of which I had no share have made me what I am. Here, surely, if anywhere, we are as clay in the hands of the potter. It is the greatest of delusions to suppose that we come into this world as sheets of white paper on which the age can write anything it likes; making us good or bad, noble or mean, as the age pleases. The age can stunt, promote, or pervert preëxistent capacities, but it cannot create them. The worthy Robert Owen, who saw in external circumstances the great moulders of human character, was obliged to supplement his doctrine by making the man himself one of the circumstances. It is as fatal as it is cowardly to blink facts because they are not to our taste. How many disorders, ghostly and bodily, are transmitted to us by inheritance? In our courts of law, whenever it is a question whether a crime has been committed under the influence of insanity, the best guidance the judge and jury can have is derived from the parental antecedents of the accused. If among these insanity be exhibited in any marked degree, the presumption in the prisoner's favor is enormously enhanced, because the experience of life has taught both judge and jury that insanity is frequently transmitted from parent to child.

I met some years ago in a railway-carriage the governor of one of our largest prisons. He was evidently an observant and reflective man; possessed of wide experience gathered in various parts of the world, and a thorough student of the duties of his vocation. He told me that the prisoners in his charge might be divided into three distinct classes. The first class consisted of persons who ought never to have been in prison. External accident, and not internal taint, had brought them within the grasp of the law; and what had happened to them might happen to most of us. They were essentially men of sound moral stamina, though wearing the prison garb. Then came the largest class, formed of individuals possessing no strong bias moral or immoral, plastic to the touch of circumstances which would mould them into either good or evil members of society. Thirdly came a class—happily not a large one—whom no kindness could conciliate and no discipline tame. They were sent into this world labelled "incorrigible," wickedness being stamped, as it were, upon their organizations. It was an unpleasant truth, but as a truth it ought to be faced. For such criminals the prison over which he ruled was certainly not the proper place. If confined at all, their prison should be on a desert island where the deadly contagion of their example could not taint the moral air. But the sea itself he was disposed to regard as a cheap and appropriate substitute for the island. It seemed to him evident that the State would benefit if prisoners of the first class were liberated, prisoners of the second class educated, and prisoners of the third class put compendiously under water.

It is not, however, from the observation of individuals that the argument against "free will," as commonly understood, derives its principal force. It is, as already hinted, indefinitely strengthened when extended to the race. Most of you have been forced to listen to the outcries and denunciations which rung discordant through the land for some years after the publication of Mr. Darwin's Origin of Species. Well, the world—even the clerical world,—has, for the most part, settled down in the belief that Mr. Darwin's book simply reflects the truth of Nature; that we who are now "foremost in the files of time" have come to the front through almost endless stages of promotion from lower to higher forms of life. If to any one of us were given the privilege of looking back through the eons across which life has crept towards its present outcome, his vision would ultimately reach a point when the progenitors of this assembly could not be called human. From that humble society, through the interaction of its members and the storing up of their best qualities, a better one emerged; from this again a better still; until at length, by the integration of infinitesimals through ages of amelioration, we came to be what we are to-day. We of this generation had no conscious share in the production of this grand and beneficent result. Any and every generation which preceded us had just a little share. The favored organisms whose garnered excellence constitutes our present store, owed their advantage, first, to what we in our ignorance are obliged to call "accidental variation"; and, secondly, to a law of heredity in the passing of which our suffrages were not collected. With characteristic felicity and precision, Mr. Matthew Arnold lifts this question into the free air of poetry, but not out of the atmosphere of truth, when he ascribes the process of amelioration to "a power not ourselves which makes for righteousness."

If, then, our organisms, with all their tendencies and capacities, are given to us without our being consulted; and if, while capable of acting within certain limits in accordance with our wishes, we are not masters of the circumstances in which motives and wishes originate; if, finally, our motives and wishes determine our actions,—in what sense can these actions be said to be the result of free will? Here, again, we are confronted with the question of moral responsibility which it is desirable to meet in its rudest form and in the most uncompromising way. "If," says the robber, the ravisher, or the murderer, "I act, because I must act, what right have you to hold me responsible for my deeds?" The reply is, "The right of society to protect itself against aggressive and injurious forces, whether they be bond or free, forces of Nature or forces of man." "Then," retorts the criminal, "you punish me for what I cannot help." "Granted," says society; "but had you known that the treadmill or the gallows was certainly in store for you, you might have 'helped.'"

Let us reason the matter fully and frankly out. We entertain no malice or hatred against you, but simply with a view to our own safety and purification we are determined that you and such as you shall not enjoy liberty of evil action in our midst. You, who have behaved as a wild beast, we claim the right to cage or kill as we should a wild beast. The public safety is a matter of more importance than the very limited chance of your moral renovation; while the knowledge that you have been hanged by the neck may furnish to others about to do as you have done the precise motive which will hold them back. If your act be such as to invoke a minor penalty, then not only others, but yourself, may profit by the punishment which we inflict. On the homely principle that "a burnt child dreads the fire," it will make you think twice before venturing on a repetition of your crime. Observe, finally, the consistency of our conduct. You offend, because you cannot help offending, to the public detriment. We punish, because we cannot help punishing, for the public good. Practically, then, as Bishop Butler predicted, we act as the world acted when it supposed the evil deeds of its criminals to be the products of free will. "What," I have heard it argued, "is the use of preaching about duty if man's predetermined position in the moral world renders him incapable of profiting by advice?" Who knows that he is incapable? The preacher's last word enters as a factor into the man's conduct; and it may be a most important factor, unlocking moral energies which might otherwise remain imprisoned and unused. If the preacher feel that words of enlightenment, courage, and admonition enter into the list of forces employed by Nature for man's amelioration since she gifted man with speech, he will suffer no paralysis to fall upon his tongue. Dying the fig-tree hopefully, and not until its barrenness has been demonstrated beyond a doubt let the sentence go forth, "Cut it down; why cumberest thou the ground?"

I remember when a youth, in the town of Halifax, some thirty-two years ago, attending a lecture given by a young man to a small but select audience. The aspect of the lecturer was earnest and practical, and his voice soon riveted attention. He spoke of duty, defining it as a debt owed; and there was a kindling vigor in his words which must have strengthened the sense of duty in the minds of those who heard him. No speculations regarding the freedom of the will could alter the fact that the words of that young man did me good. His name was George Dawson. He also spoke, if you will allow me to allude to it, of a social subject much discussed at the time,—the Chartist subject of "levelling." "Suppose," he said, "two men to be equal at night, and that one rises at six, while the other sleeps till nine next morning; what becomes of your levelling?" And in so speaking he made himself the mouth-piece of Nature; which, as we have seen, secures advance, not by the reduction of all to a common level, but by the encouragement and conversation of what is best.

It may be urged that, in dealing as above with my hypothetical criminal, I am assuming a state of things brought about by the influence of religions which include the dogmas of theology and the belief in free will,—a state, namely, in which a moral majority control and keep in awe an immoral minority. The heart of man is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked. Withdraw, then, our theologic sanctions, including the belief in free will, and the condition of the race will be typified by the samples of individual wickedness which have been adduced. We shall all, that is, become robbers and ravishers and murderers. From much that has been written of late it would seem that this astounding inference finds house-room in many minds. Possibly, the people who hold such views might be able to illustrate them by individual instances.

"The fear of hell's a hangman's whip
To keep the wretch in order."

Remove the fear, and the wretch, following his natural instinct, may become disorderly; but I refuse to accept him as a sample of humanity. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," is by no means the ethical consequence of freethought. To many of you the name of George Jacob Holyoake is doubtless familiar, and you are probably aware that at no man in England has the term atheist been more frequently peited. There are, moreover, really few who have more completely liberated themselves from theologic notions.

Among working-class politicians, Mr. Holyoake is a leader. Does he exhort his followers to "eat and drink, for to-morrow we die"? Not so. In the August number of the Nineteenth Century you will find these words from his pen: "The gospel of dirt is bad enough; but the gospel of mere material comfort is much worse." He contemptuously calls the Comitet championship of the working-man "the championship of the trencher." He would place "the leanest liberty which brought with it the dignity and power of self-help" higher than "any prospect of a full plate without it." Such is the doctrine taught by this "atheistic" leader; and no Christian, I apprehend, need be ashamed of it.

Not in the way assumed by our dogmatic teachers has the morality of human nature been propped up. The power which has moulded us thus far has worked with stern tools upon a very rigid stuff. What it has done cannot be so readily undone; and it has endowed us with moral constitutions which take pleasure in the noble, the beautiful, and the true, just as surely as it has endowed us with sentient organisms which find aloss bitter and sugar sweet. That power did not work with delusions, nor will it stay its hand when such are removed. Facts rather than dogmas have been its ministers,—hunger and thirst, heat and cold, pleasure and pain, sympathy, shame, pride, love, hate, terror, awe: such were the forces, the interaction and adjustment of which during the immeasurable ages of his development wove the triplex web of man's physical, intellectual, and moral nature, and such are the forces that will be effectual to the end.

Some may retort that even on my own showing "the power which makes for righteousness" has dealt in delusions; for it cannot be denied that the beliefs of religion, including the dogmas of theology and the freedom of the will, have had some effect in moulding the moral world. Granted; but I do not think that this goes to the root of the matter. Are you quite sure that those beliefs and dogmas are primary and not derived,—that they are not the products, instead of being the creators, of man's moral nature? I think it is one of the Latter Day Pamphlets that Carlyle corrects a reasoner, who deduced the nobility of man from a belief in heaven, by telling him that he puts the cart before the horse, the real truth being that the belief in heaven is derived from the nobility of man. The bird's instinct to weave its nest is referred to by Emerson as typical of the force which built cathedrals, temples, and pyramids:—

"Knowest thou what wove yon woodbird's nest
Of leaves and feathers from her breast?
Or how the fish outbuilt its shell,
Painting with morn each annual cell?
Such and so grew these holy piles,
While love and terror laid the tiles;
Earth proudly weaves the Parthenon

As the best gem upon her zone;
And Morning opens with haste her lids
To gaze upon the Pyramids;
O'er England's abbey bends the sky
As on its friends with kindred eyes;
For out of Thought's interior sphere
These wonders rose to upper air;
And Nature gladly gave them place,
Adopted them unto her race,
And granted them an equal date
With Andes and with Ararat."

Surely many of the utterances which have been accepted as descriptions ought to be interpreted as aspirations; or as having their roots in aspiration, instead of objective knowledge. Does the song of the herald angels, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men," express the exaltation and the yearning of a human soul, or does it describe an optical and acoustical fact,—a visible host and an audible song? If the former, the exaltation and the yearning are man's imperishable possession,—a ferment long confined to individuals, but which may by-and-by become the leaven of the race. If the latter, then belief in the entire transaction is wrecked by non-fulfillment. Look to the East at the present moment as a comment on the promise of peace on earth and good-will toward men. That promise is a dream dissolved by the experience of eighteen centuries. But though the mechanical theory of a vocal heavenly multitude proves untenable, the immortal song and the feelings it expresses are still ours, to be incorporated, let us hope, in purer and less shadowy forms in the poetry, philosophy, and practice of the future. Thus, following the lead of physical science, we are brought from the solution of continuity into the presence of problems which as usually classified lie entirely outside the domain of physics. To these problems thoughtful and penetrative minds are now applying those methods of research which in physical science have proved their truth by their fruits. There is on all hands a growing repugnance to invoke the supernatural in accounting for the phenomena of human life, and the thoughtful minds just referred to, finding no trace of evidence in favor of any other origin, are driven to seek in the interaction of social forces the genesis and development of man's moral nature. If they succeed in their search—and I think they are sure to succeed,—social duty would be raised to a higher level of significance, and the deepening sense of social duty would, it is to be hoped, lessen, if not obliterate, the strife and heart-burnings which now beset and disguise our social life. Towards this great end it behooves us one and all to work, and, devoutly wishing its consummation, I have the honor, ladies and gentlemen, to bid you a friendly farewell.

On the motion of Mr. Chamberlain, M.P., seconded by Mr. Bunce, a cordial vote of thanks was passed to Professor Tyndall for his address.—London Times, Oct. 2, 1877.

MODERN ORTHODOXY AND BELIEF IN HELL.

[In connection with Mr. Potter's editorial of this week, the following article, copied from the Boston Congregationalist of Nov. 14, will be of much interest. Observe that this journal, representing the best phase of New England Orthodoxy, declares that the belief in eternal punishment is still "one of the fundamental doctrines of our standards."—ED.]

Painful but Necessary.

The Boston Council of 1865, besides announcing, in general terms, "our adherence to the faith and order of the apostolic and primitive churches as held by our fathers, and substantially as embodied in the Confessions and Platforms which our Synods of 1648 and 1690, set forth or reaffirmed," declared the belief of the churches which delegated it, in a single direction, in these words: "We believe . . . in the final judgment, the issues of which are eternal life and everlasting punishment."

When the National Council was organized six years ago at Oberlin, it made a part of its fundamental constitution this article: "They (the churches herein represented) agree in belief that the Holy Scriptures are the sufficient and only infallible rule of religious faith and practice; their interpretation thereof being in substantial accordance with the great doctrines of the Christian faith commonly called Evangelical, held in our churches from the early times, and sufficiently set forth by former General Councils."

As no effort was made on the part of any member of the Council at New Haven in 1874, or of that whose session has just closed at Detroit, to have this expression of faith modified in any particular, it is fair, on the one hand, for the Congregational churches to understand that there is among themselves an entire substantial agreement on the doctrinal issues here involved; and, on the other hand, for other Christian denominations, and for the world at large, to assume that the Congregational churches are agreed in holding the Bible infallibly to teach the "everlasting punishment" of those who die impenitent. Individual members of the body may believe differently. Possibly here and there a Congregational Church may exceptionally admit to its fellowship persons, of whose piety, and sincere and useful life, it entertains no doubt, who are yet "weak in the faith" in this direction. But it still remains true that Congregationalism, so far as it is formulated in its solemn declarations of faith, endorsed and reendorsed by the deliberate action of a fair representation of all its churches, does hold and teach the "everlasting punishment" of those who die out of Christ. It would seem also to remain true that a council of Congregational churches in all Christian honesty is bound to regard this as an inevitable limitation put upon its right to endorse opinions, and extend the right hand of professedly Congregational fellowship to candidates for its ministry; or to individuals seeking to come in and be recognized as a church in its sisterhood. While the incongruity would be more manifest and startling, we do not see that it would differ in kind so much as in degree, were such a council to ordain as a Congregational minister, in good and regular standing, one who denies the being of a God; for the proposition of the divine existence is no more distinctly nor efficiently a part of our Congregational creeds, than the proposition that the Bible teaches the eternal punishment of the finally impenitent.

Under these circumstances we are not surprised to learn that a council last week, which had been called to advise with reference to the settlement of Rev. James F. Merriam, formerly of Farmington, Conn., over the Congregational Church at Indian Orchard, (Springfield), after long discussion, found itself obliged to decline to advise and fellowship the desired act. The candidate, as we learn from the Springfield Republican, read as a part of the written statement of his religious belief, the following:—

"In regard to the matter of the eternal punishment of those impenitent at death, I believe the Bible does not teach it; nor do I believe it teaches the contrary. It leaves the question an open one. Hence, in my public teaching and ministry, as a minister of the gospel, I would teach neither the one nor the other. In my private judgment and belief, I hold that future punishment, if eternal in any sense, is so in the sense that it is eternal death or annihilation. And I cannot promise to refrain from expressing myself privately, simply as an individual expression, a personal belief, to that effect, when in my judgment I can thereby do good."

This seems to be candid and explicit. The Council held long discussions on the subject, and finally adopted the following minute:—

"That this Ecclesiastical Council are not so far satisfied with the doctrinal views of Rev. James F. Merriam as to proceed to his installation as the pastor and teacher of a Congregational Church, while they would testify to their belief in his Christian sincerity and devotional piety."

On being urged by Mr. Merriam to mention more specifically the obstacle found in the way, the Council authorized the further statement:—

"In reply to the request of James F. Merriam, the Council would say that, while not satisfied with his views on the Atonement, they especially object to his views on eternal punishment as unsound and unsatisfactory."

Upon this issue the Council dissolved, and the many who had gathered in the expectation of an installing service were sent home disappointed; while, naturally, much surprise and dissatisfaction were felt by those friends of the candidate, who had not supposed there could be any question of his sufficient soundness in the faith.

The Council included Rev. Dr. Buckingham, and Rev. Messrs. Reed, Gladden, Eustis, Cone, and Morgan, of Springfield; Rev. Mr. Smith, of Farmington, Conn.; Rev. Mr. McDuffy, of Ludlow; Rev. B. Hart, of Fair Haven, Conn.; Rev. T. Lyman, of Jenkville, mostly with delegates, and Rev. Dr. Rice, Methodist, and Rev. J. W. Harding, as individual members.

It is stated that, on the following evening, about one hundred of his many friends of the church and society met at Mr. Merriam's house, and passed and presented the following preamble and resolution:—

"WHEREAS, A council of Congregational churches having been regularly called to install Rev. J. F. Merriam as pastor of the Congregational Church at Indian Orchard, has refused to install him owing to his disbelief in eternal punishment;

"Resolved, That we, members of this congregation, including members of the church and society, tender to Mr. Merriam our full sympathy and cordial support, and express our unqualified confidence in his piety and integrity of purpose, and our perfect willingness to accept him as our Christian teacher and guide, and earnestly extend to him an invitation to remain with us as our pastor and friend."

It is further stated that one of the deacons, "in behalf of the church," extended to him its unanimous request that he would remain with them as their pastor.

If this action were to be taken as the deliberate avowal of Universalism as the faith of this church and congregation, it could only be received by the sisterhood of Congregational churches with a pain tempered with gratitude that the action of the Council had stimulated a frankness which would seem to have been too tardy in its action. In point of fact, however, it should probably be rather interpreted as the sudden outflow of a feeling, stimulated by sudden disappointment, of personal affection for, and confidence in, a man who has earned a good degree among them by previous months of acceptable service. And this fact, that Mr. Merriam has already gained the hearts of this people by extended previous labor in their acting pastorate, suggests the inquiry whether a wiser course than that actually adopted might not have been for the Council, while—in the face of his distinct repudiation of one of the fundamental doctrines of our standards—declining to install him as a Congregational pastor, to have said: In view of the confidence of all parties in the genuineness and excellence of the Christian character of this brother, and of the providences which have led him and this church to the condition in which they are, we suggest that the church exceptionally install him as their pastor, independently, and not asking the fellowship of the churches.

As it is, we trust that all things may be done with charity. We can see no call for, or justification of, any hard feeling in such a matter,—although such is the imperfection of human nature, that the exposure to uncharitable thought and reproachful language is inevitably great. If we are Universalists, let us have the manliness to say so, and change our creed so that it shall honestly represent us before the world. If we are not, it does not seem a difficult conclusion for any man to reach, that it could have been calculated neither to win the world's respect nor the favor of God, had this Council been so false to its own convictions and to its fealty to the Congregational system which it represented, as to gratify personal feeling, and the desire to please people, at the expense of fundamental principle.

THE ANTONELLI CASE.

The case of the Countess Lambertini, who professes to be the illegitimate daughter of the late Cardinal Antonelli, and claims, in that character, a considerable share of his estate, has again been postponed, but it is not likely to be abandoned. Like a celebrated case on this side of the water, the dispute over the dead man's fortune will go on, with a ruthless disregard of the sanctities and decencies of life, and the claimant can only win the money she demands by defaming the memory of her father. Indeed, the Antonelli case appears to be one of peculiar atrocity. The brother and nephews of the deceased, to whom the estate was left by the will, are rich men, who owe almost everything to the late Cardinal, but they seem to have no scruple about submitting his private life to a scandalous examination before an unfriendly court: and the daughter, or alleged daughter, is willing not only to defile the grave of one parent, but even, according to the London Times, to produce her mother, who is said to be a lady of good repute and rank, and compel her to acknowledge in court that she was once a Cardinal's mistress. We can hardly understand in America a state of society in which such a suit is possible, or a system of law which affords a ground for it.

The Cardinal was a man more generally misunderstood than any other conspicuous character of his time; and it was his peculiar fate to be misunderstood alike by his friends and his enemies, most of all, perhaps, by the pontiff who employed him. Secret, reserved, plausible, adroit, and cold, he hid his heart from everybody, and he cherished no dangerous enthusiasms. He came of a family of mountaineers on the Neapolitan border, plain rustics in moderate circumstances. There were five brothers, and they all went to Rome to seek their fortunes, one becoming in time a banker, others merchants, and Giacomo entering the prelature. In the Papal States the prelature was the civil service of the government. Its members, even the higher ones, were not necessarily in orders; but a "prelate" in orders seemed to have a better chance of advancement than a layman; and so Giacomo went just as far into the Church as he thought his worldly interests required. He stopped short at the degree of deacon, never rising to the priesthood, even when he became Cardinal; never saying mass, hearing confessions, or discharging any of the other duties of the ministry; but he took the usual vow of chastity. He was not a churchman in anything but the dress and the name. His tastes, his pleasures, and his official functions were all secular. He was the last of the old school of statesmen in purple, who modelled themselves upon Richelieu and Mazarin, and covered diplomacy with the cloak of religion. Under Gregory XVI. he was a successful administrator of the finances. Pius IX. made him head of the Treasury in the first years of his reign, partly because he had shown ability for the place, partly because he was esteemed a liberal. It was in 1848, the year of revolutions, that he became Prime Minister, and his appointment even then was looked upon as a victory for young Italy.

If he was the last of the old school of cardinals, perhaps we should say that he was also the last of the old school of diplomatists. He made it a point of honor to be inscrutable. His own colleagues did not know what his policy really was. The Italian Liberals were equally deceived when they cheered him in 1848 and cursed him in 1849. In his intercourse with the foreign representatives, with officers of the government, with the clergy and the laity, with Romans and strangers, he talked copiously, but never said anything. He attracted visitors by his well-trained tongue and repelled them by his telltale eye; if they pushed him too hard toward dangerous ground, he amused and dismissed them by exhibiting the splendid collection of gems, in which it was generally supposed that he took his chief delight. That he was a believer in the policy of administrative reform, which made the first two years of the present pontificate illustrious, is no doubt true; but the extent of his liberalism was greatly exaggerated in the popular estimation. So, too, it is a mistake to suppose that the Republic of 1848 converted him to a policy of stern and uncompromising repression. His temper was always conservative; that remained the same, but the circumstances changed. His natural disposition was toward resistance wherever it was possible, and toward the acceptance of accomplished facts wherever resistance was imprudent. It was the Pope, and not the Cardinal, who dictated the reforms of 1846-48 and the conservative reaction of 1849-50. Antonelli approved of progress—a little of it—in the beginning, because he saw that it was inevitable. He approved of crying "halt!" after the return from Gaeta, because he saw that "reform" was exhausted, and that liberalism was leading straight to the destruction of the temporal power. Unless his associates belied him, he was never a hearty supporter of the policy of the Pope toward Victor Emmanuel and the kingdom of Italy. There was not the stuff in him for a resolute and painful resistance, such as the staunch old Pope opposed to the irresistible march of the Italian nation. He would have plotted and negotiated. Some say that he did negotiate privately. La Moricière and Mérode accused him of deliberate treason.

Between Antonelli and the other cardinals there was no cordial feeling. The Roman nobility, which furnishes the lay element of society on the side of the Church party at Rome, looked askance at him, though cardinals of humble origin are surely no novelties. He had few friends at the Vatican except his own appointees. Above all, he was not a favorite with the Pope. The two men were entirely antipathetic,—the one affectionate, trusting, generous, stout-hearted, devout; the other selfish, ambitious, cunning, and worldly. Antonelli was a valuable public servant, particularly in the regulation of financial affairs, and as such the Pope estimated him justly. But he had little influence with the Pontiff, except in matters of mere administration. He was for thirty years the minister of Pius IX., yet, dying in the Vatican, he left out of his large fortune nothing to his august master but a little crucifix of no particular worth; and it has been remarked that the Pope never alluded to his death in any of his allocutions.

Whatever obscurity there may be as to his political course, there was none as to his private ambition. Pare una famiglia, "to found a family," is always an object dear to the Italian heart; and from the day the young mountaineer entered Rome till the very end, his aim was to make Antonelli one of the great names in the history of the city. His position gave him enormous opportunities to increase the small private fortune with which he entered office; and he took good care of his brothers, too. All the accumulations were destined for the male offspring of these thrifty brothers. His extraordinary will left nothing to the Church, nothing to charity, nothing out of his rich collections to the Vatican Museum. All went to enrich the family which he had founded. We showed the other day, apropos of another case, how futile were almost all attempts to build distinction upon the weak, unstable basis of money. The cruel irony of fate turns to disgrace the badges meant for honor. The plan chosen by Cardinal Antonelli to make his name illustrious has only served to throw a stronger light upon his faults, and drag into the sight of the whole world the scandals which would otherwise have died in obscure corners of Rome. Whether the story of the Countess Lambertini is false or true, it would never have been told but for the attempt to "make a family" with money.—N. Y. Tribune.

MODERN CATHOLICISM AND BELIEF IN PURGATORY.

In St. Patrick's Cathedral, Rev. Father Hogan preached on the doctrine of purgatory, and said: Our natural mother nurtures, cares for, and watches over us during life; but our mother, the Church, folds us in her arms at baptism, watches, guides, guards, and nourishes us during our earthly pilgrimage, anoints us with the oil of extreme unction at death, and after death, when our bodies are returned to mother dust, she throws over our grave the shadow of the emblem of redemption. In death even we are not separated from her, for the souls of the faithful departed are still members of the Church. Now, God's law is inexorable, and he says that nothing defiled can enter heaven. Who, then, is so pure at leaving this life as to be worthy of admittance to heaven immediately after death? And would it be just in God to consign to everlasting torments those souls that are but tarnished by sin? Certainly not. And here we see the infinite justice and mercy of God in providing a middle state where those souls can atone for past transgressions or give sufficient satisfaction for sins pardoned, but for which sufficient was not done to satisfy God's justice. The doctrine of purgatory is no new one. We read in the Old Testament where Judas Maccabeus, after gaining a victory in battle over his enemies, ordered that a subscription be taken up in order that it should be sent to Jerusalem to have sacrifice offered in the Temple for the souls of the departed faithful. That sacrifice was to be offered in a public place and before the people; consequently it was known to everybody and could have been nothing new. We find in the Scriptures where it is stated that some souls shall be saved, yet so as by fire; and again, that there are some sins which will not be forgiven in this world or in the world to come. It is, therefore, evident that they must be atoned for in a middle place. If God be merciful, he is also just, and his justice requires that sin be atoned for either in this life or the next.

THE PAINS OF PURGATORY.

Theologians tell us that the sufferings which the souls endure in purgatory are similar to those suffered by the souls in hell, and, like them, of a two-fold nature. They are the pains of the senses and the pain of loss; but the soul in purgatory is conscious of the fact that it will one day enjoy the beatific vision. If, then, the sufferings be so terrible, how unjust, how cruel, and how ill-natured are not we to see a fellow-member suffer such dreadful torments and not relieve him when we can do so by our prayers, our alms, our mortifications and penances, and, greatest of all and more than all, by having the most holy sacrifice of the Mass, the sacrifice of Calvary itself, offered up for them! They are still members, the suffering members, of the Church, but are unable to help themselves. Should we, then, be unmindful of them? We may one day be so situated; therefore we should not forget that we will want others to do for us what they now want others to do for them. It is possible to go at once into heaven immediately after death, but in that case our lives should be exemplary indeed. If we committed but one mortal sin in all our life, and died without having obtained forgiveness, we would be lost for all eternity. If the eternal punishment of sin has been remitted, there is yet the temporal left, and that must be endured either here or in purgatory. We should not be unmindful of the sufferings of the elect of God, for they are continually crying out to us, "Oh! pity me. At least you, my friends, have pity on me!" We should do everything in our power to help them, knowing that when relieved from their sufferings they will be intercessors before the throne of mercy for us. And if we want that the term of our imprisonment should be short, we will so order our lives that the justice of God will not require much satisfaction.—N. Y. Tablet, Nov. 10.

THE LEAGUERS.

BY REV. HUNTINGTON LYMAN.

There is something of admirable manliness in the frankness of the spokesmen of the Liberal League. Nothing, it is true, can be more radical and abominable and anarchical than the sentiments and principles that they send forth. Yet when I see with what unflinching audacity they make their statements and disclose their schemes, right in the face of the Christian sentiment of this Christian nation, I am carried off from my attitude of displeasure, and even reach a sense of something that is pleasing, and, withal, ludicrous. I say to myself, May it not be that the League is actuated by a sense of wrong inflicted or impending? I cannot but hope that a tithe of them, after all, will repent and be saved. Such a result, indeed, cannot enter much into the faith of mere mortals concerning the red-mouthed German atheists who began their catechism under Strauss, and have even improved upon him. Yet that which is beyond faith may be comprehended in the depths of unfathomable grace.

But what I undertook to say is, "Don't be afraid of them." There was a time when I was enlisted in work for the anti-slavery interest. Sometimes I went on, day after day, working with exceeding heaviness and travail; lecturing to few, and meeting eggs and brickbats. No sun of hope shone upon all the dreary scene. Suddenly light sprang up. John C. Calhoun would arise in the Senate and propose some measure so monstrous that it awoke the sleeping Yankees. Then Buchanan and Cass and Hendricks would second the motion with a little reserve. Then I went to bed in peace and laughed all night. I knew that New York and Ohio, even Southern Ohio, could not stand that.

The Liberal League is doing about the same thing. Encourage them. They have a great annual gathering. If it be possible, get them to hold quarterly meetings. They do good every time. Secure, if possible, accommodating fare on the railroads, and (if that be not carrying the thing too far) offer them hospitality. Their meetings do good. The last thing to do is to be afraid of them.

Let us consider their composition. While it is true that they can be united in any work of pulling down, it is equally certain that they cannot unite in a single affirmative proposition. The League is a conglomerate very similar to the snow-knolls that the boys make in February. As they roll it about the yard it takes up chips and mud, old combs and buttons, apple-parings and horse-droppings, rags and cigar-stumps. There is no bond in the Liberal League with the exception of this negation: "The Bible is a myth and Christ is a pretender." There is no crowd that so well represents them as that which the great and noble Ananias brought over after the exile and set in the cities of Samaria, of whom it is said, "The men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth, and the men of Outh made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Ashima, and the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak. Every nation made gods of their own." (II. Kings, xvii.) Suppose that the League should try to set up something, no matter how shadowy. Suppose they say, Resolved, that there is a god of some sort, and that there is such a thing as a soul. If they pass it, the German atheists are alienated; if they vote it down, they offend the Jews and the Progressive Friends. Resolved, that the soul is immortal. They cannot pass that. Resolved, that the soul is mortal. They cannot pass that. Poor creatures,—I hope they will arrive at firm ground and be saved; at least here and there one.—Christian Statesman, Nov. 8.

COOK ON THE PAINE MEMORIAL.

EDITOR OF THE BOSTON TRAVELLER:—

The Rev. Joseph Cook, in the prelude to his lecture of last Monday, exulted over the sale of the Paine Memorial Hall by the mortgages, in consequence of the accumulation of demands which the receipts were insufficient to satisfy. This is fair enough from the Orthodox standpoint, and I suppose the infidel sentiment of the community would regard the sale of a church under similar circumstances with feelings not altogether unmixed with complacency. But there is one point which will strike the impartial observer as hardly in accordance with good taste, and certainly in striking contrast with the spirit of early Christianity,—the reference to the comparative poverty of infidels in a sneering fashion, as though it were a disgrace to them! Infidels are poor as a rule—and their infidelity is largely the cause of it,—because even in this age of free opinion, the expression of infidel sentiments in many places means social and business ostracism, and closes the door at once to many avenues of wealth. That it does so is a guarantee of the conscientiousness of men who are willing to make the sacrifice, and it ill becomes one who makes such high-sounding professions of sincerity and earnest conviction to sneer at those whose acceptance of the unpopular side proves their honesty of purpose.

There was another utterance which came with a very ill grace from a member of a class who are by law the favored pensioners on the earnings of their fellow-citizens. When Mr. Cook ridicules the idea of the infidels of Boston being unable to keep Paine Hall, he should remember that among the items of constant expense, as quoted by himself, is $1000 for taxes. By an unjust legal discrimination the churches are exempt from taxation. A yearly tax of $1000 would bankrupt half the churches in Massachusetts, as Mr. Cook very well knows. When the parsons and the churches have the common honesty to pay for the privileges they enjoy at the hands of the State and municipal governments, it will be time for them to ridicule the failure of infidels to support their organizations. Mr. Cook frequently disavows the title of "Rev." He probably is not so eager to decline the exemption privileges attaching to the ministerial status. Did he pay taxes while in pastoral charge at Lynn? and does he pay them now on the receipts from his lectureship?

With regard to his slander on the dead I say nothing. When he has the courage to venture out of his "coward's castle" in Tremont Temple and meet in fair debate Ingersoll, Underwood, or some other infidel champion, his rehash of the lies a thousand times related may be worth some consideration. But he dare not do it for the life of him. P. T.

Boston, Nov. 8, 1877.

COOK ON BIOLOGY.

Of Joseph Cook's Boston Monday Lectures on biology (James R. Osgood & Co.) very little can be cleverly said, although they have attracted much popular attention; first, because they are rather metaphysical dissertations than scientific discourses; and, secondly, because they add nothing to the current literature of attempts to bring theology and science into harmony with each other. But they may be conveniently used to point a moral to just such personages as Mr. Cook, who, without adequate training in the methods and culture of science, assume, with a dogmatism in ratio to their ignorance, to expound problems they have not investigated; for no book has probably been issued within the last ten years—so prolific in religio-scientific literature—which can be described as more decidedly and amusingly boyish than this dogmatic and pretentious volume. One of the points that Mr. Cook labors to establish is that of a life-force preceding and determining organization; and, having done so to his own satisfaction, he prescribed a course of scientific reading which may, perhaps, serve as a proverb to scientific men for the want of discrimination common to dabblers in biological studies. And the best of it is that, with the manner of a master, he tells his audience that he has found such and such volumes correct, quotes Carlyle as an authority in biology, indorses the disputed views of Lionel S. Beale, and adduces Ferrier's Functions of the Brain as conclusive evidence upon the very points where the book is most inconclusive. Indeed, not the whole range of literature can furnish a finer instance of unintentional burlesque than is furnished in our author's extraordinary dissertation on nervous and cerebral physiology. There is, in the judgment of the best masters, just a souperon of quackery about Beale and Ferrier, which renders it a little unsafe to quote either upon disputed points. However, perhaps Mr. Cook knows more of microscopy and experimental physiology than he has thought best to divulge in this series of discourses, and Dalton and Draper may possibly have to thank him for an immortality in the literature of their science. The moral is that science is a species of culture as well as a method of inquiry, and that its processes and spirit are not to be appreciated by special pleaders for doctrines such as Mr. Cook advocates.—N. Y. Library Table.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

FAITH.

A waif on time's restless tide,
And waft me how and where it may,
I need not aught mischance may hide
To meet me in the coming day;
For I must deem the Master's mind
Shapes out my course, to me so dim,
To me so dim, to him defined;
I am but weak and trust in him.

As when my thoughts the shadows o'er
Skim'd but the glit'ring fall of things,
So now, when mind's maturer power
Draws from the depths of deeper springs;
For wisdom humbled bendeth low,
As more it learns of what is dim,
It is but little I can know,
So weak am I; I trust in him.

A. O.

BROOKLYN, NOV. 16.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, &c.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 15.

Edmund Hudson, $1.00; Jas. H. Hulbert, $3.25; J. M. Douglas, $3.20; Mrs. C. A. Tucker, 25 cents; Mary N. Adams, $3.20; Clark & Co., $21.50; Cash, 50 cents; Daniel Johnson, $1.75; Mrs. Phoebe A. Palmer, $3.25; Judge E. W. Frazer, $3.20; Dr. John Green, $3.00; D. J. Cater, 50 cents; W. E. Lukens, $3.20; John Keppler, $3.00; Elmer Wright, 55 cents; A. H. Hoff & Co., $2.70; Chas. T. Fowler, $3.20; Jas. McArthur, $5.00; S. S. Zeitler, $5.00; D. B. Allen, $5.00; H. N. Winslow, $3.20; Geo. Miller, $1.50; Louise M. Thurston, $3.20; L. E. Washburn, $3.20; Dr. M. Samfield, $3.20; Lizzie Ramsdale, $1.50; Dr. L. P. Babb, 50 cents; G. W. McKennie, 80 cents; G. P. Putnam's Sons, $4.10; Jerry Brookway, $6.25; Chas. H. Lunt, $3.20; H. F. Kellogg, 80 cents.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 20, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FARR, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SURVEY, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

A CARD.

The Committee on the better establishment of THE INDEX, appointed at a meeting of its subscribers and friends last May, wish to enlist all the assistance they can to lay its claims before every liberal man and woman in our country. They have prepared a circular setting forth the method, motives, and objects of their action, and wish the names of all who are willing to assist them in placing it where it will do good. Please address the Chairman of the Committee, "Elizur Wright, P. O. Box 109, Boston, Mass."

ANNOUNCEMENT: CLUB TERMS.

Until January 1, 1879, THE INDEX will be sent for a year to clubs of five or more NEW SUBSCRIBERS on receipt of $2.20 each, in advance, instead of $3.20, the regular cost of subscription. This is an excellent chance for all our friends to join in a vigorous effort to increase the circulation of the most earnestly radical journal in the United States, and thereby to advance the common cause. It is only just to show due public appreciation of the efforts of its friends, and we shall therefore (unless explicitly requested to the contrary) publish the names of all who send us clubs under the arrangement, with the number of new subscribers obtained by each. Shall there not be a little generous emulation to help forward the struggling cause of religious freedom?

F. E. ABBOT, Editor.

PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

The following premiums for NEW SUBSCRIBERS to THE INDEX are offered with the hope that its sincere co-laborers will vigorously aid in increasing its circulation among their personal friends. To receive these premiums, $3.20 must be remitted in advance with each name sent in. Please read the list carefully, and see if you cannot afford to earn one or more of the works here offered by a little labor in a good cause.

For One New Subscriber.

Either a complete set of Index Tracts; a bound copy of the Report of the "Centennial Congress of Liberals" at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876; any three Reports of the "Annual Meetings of the Free Religious Association" since 1871; or any obtainable book not costing over $1.

For Two New Subscribers.

Either a set of photographs of "leading INDEX writers"; a copy of Ingersoll's Lectures; a copy of Freedom and Fellowship in Religion—a collection of Essays and Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, W. J. Potter, John Weiss, T. W. Higginson, F. E. Abbot, and others; Darwin's Origin of Species; Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science; Huxley's Lay Sermons; a bound copy of THE INDEX for 1871 or 1872; or any obtainable book not costing over $2.

For Three New Subscribers.

Either Longfellow's or Bryant's complete Poetical Works (illustrated); Darwin's Descent of Man; Tyndall's Fragment of Science; Lowes' Physical Basis of Mind; Frothingham's Transcendentalism in New England; Shakespeare's Complete Works; or any obtainable book not costing over $3.

For Five New Subscribers.

Either Pierce's Memoirs and Letters of Charles Sumner; Emerson's Free Works; Buckle's History of Civilization; Spencer's Psychology; Humboldt's Cosmos; Wise's Cosmo Philosophy; or any other obtainable book costing not over $5.

For Ten New Subscribers.

Either Webster's or Worcester's Dictionary (unabridged); Longfellow's Complete Works (306 illustrations, full gilt); either Dickens' or Waverley Novels, complete in six volumes, and illustrated; or any other book or books not costing over $12.

FREEDOM THE FRIEND OF PURITY.

It is incumbent upon us to say some further and very plain words on a subject which is repugnant in the last degree to every healthy mind—the subject of "obscene literature." A great danger threatens the liberal cause at this moment, which can only be averted by calling the attention of liberals themselves to certain facts which, it is safe to assume, are not fully known to the general public; and, much as we should prefer to write on more congenial topics, we should fail to discharge a grave duty if we forbore to speak in season on this.

What is the danger to the liberal cause to which we allude?

Briefly, this is the danger. By an abuse of existing United States statutes, D. M. Bennett, of New York, and E. H. Heywood, of Boston, have been arrested for circulating "obscene literature" by Anthony Comstock, special agent of the Post-Office Department—the charge in the former case including also "blasphemy" as well as "obscenity." We say "abuse" of the statutes, because these were doubtless intended to be applicable only to literature which is primarily designed to deprave and corrupt, and not to any and all publications in which incidental obscene expressions may possibly be discovered by mousing and malicious informers; and because, on any other construction of the statutes, nine-tenths of the greatest literary monuments of all ages could easily be suppressed, including the Bible first of all! Now the danger is that, in natural and just resentment against these tyrannical prosecutions, the liberals as a class may be unwarily drawn into taking an absolutely suicidal position before the public, by protesting not only against the existing statutes (which need to be jealously revised in the interest of freedom of the press), but also against all laws on the subject of "obscene literature."

What would be the result if any large number of liberals should take such a position as that? Simply that they would fall into one of the most cunningly laid traps ever set. The enemies of freethought desire nothing so much as to persuade the public that free thought tends to immorality; that it tends to destroy all social and legal protections of public virtue; that it tends to ally itself with all overt or covert attacks on morality as such. If the effect of these wretched prosecutions should be to inveigle the liberals as a class, or even in any great number, into a thoughtless public declaration that they are opposed to all laws against "obscene literature," then Anthony Comstock and his backers will rub their hands in irrepressible glee. They will have succeeded beyond their wildest hopes in striking a deadly blow at free thought, for they will have decoyed free thinkers themselves into striking this blow with their own misguided hands. Let all liberals who are ambitious to enroll themselves under the leadership of Anthony Comstock, to do exactly what the Young Men's Christian Association most eagerly long to have them do, and to fall blindly into the fatal pit dug for them by the craft of Protestant Jesuitism,—let all such, we say, make haste to demand the repeal of all laws against the circulation of "obscene literature." In no other way can they gratify this ambition so speedily or so well.

The real truth is, (and it vitally concerns all liberals to be well informed at this time), Anthony Comstock has done a great deal of dirty but most necessary work. Let us do justice to him and to those who have put him in the post whose dangerously ample powers he has certainly abused. It would be as sagacious to make an indiscriminate outcry against the public scavengers as against Comstock and his crew; sensible citizens would hold their noses, pass as quickly as possible, and cheerfully pay the bill for his useful services, provided he adhered strictly to the justifiable exercise of his powers. It is his flagrant abuse of power that ought, and alone ought, to call forth now the indignation of all lovers of freedom; to protest against the legitimate part of his work will have the certain effect, not to excite public detestation of Comstock's oppressive bigotry, but, as a consequence of their own folly, to overwhelm the protestants themselves with an avalanche of public suspicion, if not of public condemnation. Do the liberals, as a part of the community, deliberately intend to come forward before the public as apologists for all the villainy which Comstock has been engaged in carting out of society? Do they deliberately intend to declare that they approve the proposal to leave all this filth where it is, to breed a pestilence at last? Not at all! Whoever hopes that they can be induced, coaxed, or decoyed into any such position as that, even by way of protest against unjust prosecutions, commits a terrible blunder. There is a necessity of protecting society from certain crimes prohibited by the statutes under which Comstock is acting: the wrong consists in the fact that these statutes are too vague, indiscriminating, and sweeping, and are therefore liable to be perverted into instruments of oppression. That all our readers may understand the nature of those offences against the public which, being enormously facilitated by the United States mails, ought to be suppressed by United States legislation, we quote from the Boston Journal of March 22, 1877, the report of a speech made by Comstock on the preceding day in this city, simply premising that of course we cannot personally vouch for the facts he affirms:—

Mr. Comstock said that it would be necessary to recapitulate some of the facts presented at a former meeting, and he proceeded to show what the evil is, how it is carried on, and the extent of the trade in obscene literature. This consisted, first, of books and pictures of the vilest description; second, of articles of self-abuse; third, of articles to prevent conception; fourth, of articles to aid seduction, and fifth, to produce abortion. It might be said: "Surely this business cannot thrive in this country"; but it did thrive. There was a system of traffic in this debasing literature which jeopardized the sanctity of the best homes in the land, and this was known to the speaker from an experience of five years. This soul-destroying literature is introduced into schools, first by the second-hand dealers on the streets and in by-places; and second, by obtaining the names of boys and girls and forwarding them books, photographs, and articles which not only debauch the minds but ruin the souls of the recipients. One man sends out a circular representing that he is about to publish a directory of all the scholars in the United States, and promising to pay five cents apiece for the names of the boys and girls in the immediate circle of the party to whom the circular is sent. A second method of obtaining names is to send for catalogues of schools and seminaries, and to all these are sent in one form of deception or another advertisements of the vilest publications.

As agent of the New York Society for the Prevention of Vice, Mr. Comstock found in the possession of one man whom he arrested a large pile of catalogues of the best seminaries of learning in the land. In the stock of one party surrendered to the agent was found sixty-three thousand post-office addresses; and of another he seized fifty thousand circulars addressed and ready to be despatched to the youth of both sexes throughout the country. The dealers in the various articles mentioned sell these names one to another at the rate of from $10 to $25 per thousand. After orders have been received from the boys and girls for books or photographs their names are worth from $10 to $25 per dozen to the dealer in other articles and the abortionist. Advertisements in daily papers, in sporting, and even religious papers, convey information to the young of the most infamous character. A "musical album" is published for fifty cents, which a fond parent as a surprise to his boy orders to be sent to his address. In that book he finds a slip of paper containing a list of the obscene publications, and the advice that "should you choose to order any of the above, you will deduct the fifty cents paid for the 'album.'" Advertisements of games and puzzles are among the means employed to introduce this offensive literature into families and schools. Mr. Comstock sent for some of these, and in return he received a catalogue of vile publications. He had caught more men engaged in this nefarious traffic through their advertisements in a literary paper published in Boston than by any other means. An advertisement running thus, "Girls—secret—How to gain the Love of Any Man," was among those enumerated; and the dealers in this poisonous matter do not scruple to send it to little girls, to say nothing of boys. A vile woman in Des Moines, Iowa, who was arrested, and her trade broken up, had letters from girls in the best families and the best schools throughout the country.

The past year had yielded more evidence of this terrible evil in the highest institutions for the education of the young than any previous year. The sickening fact has come to light that ten or twelve of the best academies in New York City have been debauched by a French professor, who has occupied the position of teacher for ten years. This wretch had a large satchel filled with obscene books, pictures, and other articles, which he had exhibited to his pupils in private. The sons of leading clergymen, lawyers, and merchants in New York and Brooklyn had become the victims of this libidinous Frenchman. A book of the vilest description was found in the possession of a pupil in the Washington Avenue School, Brooklyn, whose father was a Sabbath-school superintendent, which book had been loaned to and read by ten or twelve other boys in the same school, and for two years had been on its mission of debauchery among the youth of Brooklyn, Harlem, and New Lebanon. The boys carried it home and read it in their chambers when their parents thought they were asleep. One of its victims will soon be in an insane asylum or in his grave; but, as an evidence of the progress of this reform it was stated that the price of that book when first published was ten dollars and a half; now the price is seven dollars and a half.

During the five years' existence of the society over twenty tons of obscene matter have been destroyed. Of this amount over seven tons were in stereotyped plates, sixteen hundred negatives of obscene photographs, three hundred and fifty steel plates, for illustrating obscene books, five hundred and thirty woodcuts for the same purpose, and eight tons of bound books ready for the market. By multiplying that one book found in the Washington Avenue Grammar School, in Brooklyn, by the eight tons of obscene literature destroyed, some idea of the extent of this alarming evil can be obtained. Through the medium of the United States mail, newspapers, and expresses, there are ample means for men to extend the business, and reach every home and school in the land. There is not a home or school in the country safe from this contagion. If, said Mr. Comstock, our country is to be anything in the future, we must have pure men and pure women, and in order to secure these we must preserve the purity of the young. In conclusion, Mr. Comstock asked the hearty cooperation of all patriots and parents in this important work, which was a national work, to be carried on in all parts of the country.

He appealed to his hearers as Christian men and women to lend their moral influence to this cause. Since the organization of the society nine-tenths of the obscene literature published in this country had been destroyed. He had the names of between five and six thousand dealers, but their business had been greatly curtailed, owing to their inability to obtain the publications. Of the parties arrested, two hundred and fifty have been convicted and sentenced to the prisons from ten days to ten years. Last year not a dozen obscene books were published, but the photograph business greatly increased. Several popular publications having extensive circulation among the youth of New England were named as containing some exceedingly offensive matter in the form of advertisements.

Now such facts as these will make it clear to all right-minded citizens, no matter what their religious opinions may be, that the United States mails ought not to be made the instrument of these vile conspiracies against the purity of the young and inexperienced. It is right and necessary that the statutes of the United States should make it a penal offence to use the mails for such infamous purposes; and we believe that no man in his senses will venture to tell the public explicitly that he is in favor of abolishing all legal restrictions of such a use of them. Inasmuch as the separate States have no power to meddle with the mails at all, whatever restrictions are imposed must be by United States authority; and for this reason, we hold that the law against the circulation of "obscene literature" ought not to be repealed, but simply revised and reformed so as no longer to be available for petty persecution for opinion's sake. We hold that innocent children ought to be efficiently protected against the human fiends above depicted; that, since they are defenceless by reason of their very innocence and immaturity, it is the duty of society to protect them; and that whoever attempts to persuade the community that this is not a social duty will knock his head against a stone wall, and find the wall much the harder of the two.

What we have said above has been called out by the fact that the following petition is now in circulation, and that efforts are making to obtain a large number of signatures to it:—

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled:

The Petition of the Undersigned, Citizens of the United States, residing at and near ———, respectfully shows:—

1. That they are loyal and devoted supporters of the Constitution of the United States and of the republican form of government, and that they are so principally from the conviction that under these personal liberty, freedom of conscience, of the press, and of the expression of opinion, together with equality before the law and the departments of government, had been for the first time substantially secured among men: and your petitioners rejoiced in the belief that the rights thus guaranteed had in our own country forever abrogated every form of political, moral, and religious persecution and inquisition.

2. That without the knowledge of your petitioners, and, as they believe, without the knowledge of any great number of the citizens of the United States, certain Acts were procured to be passed by Congress in 1873 (since incorporated into the U. S. Revised Statutes, as §§1785, 3878, 8893, 5889, 2491), for the ostensible purpose of suppressing "obscene literature," etc., which reversed the policy and practice of our government since its foundation.

3. That in the belief of your petitioners the government of the United States was established under the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution for the more general purposes of government only, and for the protection, and not for the limitation, of the rights aforesaid. That to that end, i. e., "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," Congress was prohibited from making laws affecting religion or conscience, or "abridging the freedom of the press, or of speech," or the right of petition; and the people were "to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects," etc. That the true construction and meaning of these great charters of liberty were declared by their authors, the founders of our government, to be, that all persons were, and of right ought to be, equal in their protection and privileges before the law, the courts, and all the departments of the government, without discrimination or question as to their social, moral, political, or religious character. That the statutes aforesaid are, in the opinion of your petitioners, plain violations of the letter and spirit of these fundamental principles of our government; and that they are capable of, and are, in fact, being used for the purposes of moral and religious persecution, whereby the dearest and most precious rights of the people are being grievously violated under the forms of legal inquisition, fines, forfeiture, and imprisonment.

4. And your petitioners further show, that they are convinced that all attempts of civil government, whether State or National, to enforce or to favor particular religious, social, moral, or medical opinions, or schools of thought or practice, are not only unconstitutional, but ill-advised, contrary to the spirit and progress of our age, and almost certain in the end to defeat any beneficial objects intended. That mental, moral, and physical health and safety are better secured and preserved by virtue resting upon liberty and knowledge, than upon ignorance enforced by governmental supervision. That even error may be safely left free, where truth is free to combat it. That the greatest danger to a republic is the insidious repression of the liberties of the people. That whenever publications, pictures, articles, acts, or exhibitions, directly tending to produce crime or pauperism, are wantonly exposed to the public, or obtruded upon individuals, the several States and Territories have provided, or may be safely left to provide, suitable remedies.

Wherefore your petitioners pray that the Statutes aforesaid may be repealed, or materially modified, so that they cannot be used to abridge the freedom of the press or of conscience, or to destroy the liberty and equality of the people before the law and departments of the government, on account of any religious, moral, political, medical, or commercial grounds or pretexts whatsoever.

And your petitioners will ever pray, etc., etc., etc.

While there is very much that is true and indisputable in the above petition, we must point out that it recommends leaving all legislation against "obscene literature," etc., solely to the separate States and Territories; which, since the States cannot meddle with the mails, is equivalent to recommending that there be no such legislation at all. Although the petition concludes with the prayer that "the statutes aforesaid may be repealed, or materially modified," the preceding recommendation of State and Territorial action alone will be construed as showing that the real purpose of the petitioners is to get rid of all legislation adverse to the hideous crimes against childhood perpetrated by the vendors of the sickening stuff now justly excluded from the mails. Everybody who signs the petition ought to know the character and consequences of his own act; and that is why we speak plainly and at once.

What will be the effect of this petition, if numerously signed?

1. It must be to create the impression that the signers are totally indifferent to the real evils at which these statutes were aimed; and this impression will be most unfortunate. Especially if the signers are supposed to represent the great liberal party of the country, the inference will certainly be drawn, and pressed upon public notice by the Orthodox party, that liberalism is proved to be in full sympathy with the nefarious business already referred to. Could anything be more certain to array against liberal ideas in religion the whole force of the moral sentiment of the country? Could anything more powerfully help the villifiers of free thought in their attempt to convince the public that "infidelity" and immorality are inseparable? Could anything be a more staggering blow to the cause of liberal principles than the prevalence of such a woful misconception of their practical tendencies? Can those who believe and teach that liberalism is the seed of a higher social morality afford to go before the world as the champions of "obscene literature" properly so called? If so, they go alone; we go not with them.

2. The effect of the petition now circulating can only work disaster to the defence of Messrs. Bennett and Heywood; for it seems to proceed on the assumption that their cause is identical with that of the vile persons engaged in the moral destruction of the young, and that the former cannot be defended except by releasing the latter also from all penalty. Nothing could put their case in a worse light than to permit this opinion to prevail. If these defendants consent to make common cause with the villains who deal out poison for little boys and girls, their ruin is assured. Their only hope is to prove that they have nothing in common with such wretches—that it is a wicked persecution to misrepresent them as coming under the same category. This we believe, and that is why we have already spoken strongly in their behalf; but if we should be driven to consider their case as really identical with that of the disseminators of "obscene literature" in the proper sense of those words, our mouth would be shut. Nothing could be more unfortunate for these defendants, we think, than to create the opinion that they are condemned by the existing statutes, when justly interpreted; and yet this is precisely the opinion that would be created by any attempt of theirs to repeal these statutes altogether as a part of their defence. Let them boldly plead that they are untouched by the true intent of these very statutes, since they have never dealt in the "obscene literature" therein proscribed; for if they cannot make this evident to the courts, their case is already lost.

For these two reasons chiefly—that it tends to the injury of the liberal cause and to the injury of the two defendants now threatened with unjust penalties—we deeply regret the issuing of the above petition, should decline to sign it, and must dissuade others from signing it. Another and different petition might be circulated with great propriety now, in which it should be urged—

1. That the statutory phrase "obscene literature" should be strictly confined to publications designed expressly to demoralize, pollute, and corrupt, by ministering to lewd passions for the sake of profit to the publishers; and that it should not be construed to include any publications not so designed, even if they do contain incidental expressions liable to be adjudged obscene by an unprejudiced moral judgment.

2. That, if the phrase "obscene literature" is to cover and condemn all publications containing incidental expressions of an obscene character, the Bible should not be exempted from the effect of this sweeping condemnation, but included in the same prohibition which is to suppress Shakespeare, Milton, Homer, Dante, Goethe, and almost all the greatest heirlooms of human genius.

3. That Anthony Comstock, having been proved unfit to exercise the great powers of his present appointment by manifest abuse of them to purposes of bigoted persecution for opinion's sake, ought to be summarily dismissed; and that the possibility of any similar abuses of authority in the future ought to be effectually guarded against by strict and precise legislative provisions.

This article is already too long, but we must add some extracts from a private letter recently received from a distinguished physician in New York city:—

"I have just read with much interest your article under the head of 'Obscene Literature' in your issue of the 6th inst. It is good. I agree with every word of it. . . . Sometime ago I wrote either to you or to THE INDEX that I believed Mr. Comstock was gradually feeling his way, and determining how much power he had, preparatory to seeking first upon the Truth Seeker, next upon THE INDEX, after that the Investigator, until he should finally attempt to suppress the circulation through the mails of the works of Stuart Mill, Herbert Spencer, Darwin, Huxley, etc. If I did not write this letter to you, I certainly did to somebody, and I was consequently not at all surprised to see the announcement of Mr. Bennett's arrest. . . . If my entire prediction should be fulfilled, I should not call myself a prophet, for it seems to me the blindest man in the universe can clearly trace in the signs of the times just what I have foreshadowed. Mr. Comstock and those who are behind him need only to be successful in each successive step to undertake to do the work which my suspicions have assigned to him."

We shall certainly await our turn with equanimity, knowing that there has not been a single expression of ours on which the Comstock tribe can fasten, and that "in that contest there will be blows to take as well as blows to give." Meanwhile let what little influence belongs to us be dedicated to the endeavor to keep liberalism on so high and pure a plane that even its enemies shall be compelled to respect it. With this end in view, we hope to prevent the making of a grave practical mistake in this matter of petitioning through inattention to important elements of the present situation, and to make patent to the world what is clear to every genuine liberal—that Freedom is the best friend of Purity.

THEOLOGICAL SURVIVAL.

It is frequently asserted, and asserted with truth, that the creeds of the Evangelical churches are rapidly changing in accordance with the more liberal religious spirit of the age,—that, even if the written creeds remain the same, they are interpreted differently, and that the pulpit to-day seldom gives utterance to the severer features of the Orthodox theology which were so much emphasized a century ago. Of this doctrinal progress, indeed, there are many evidences. Among the latest was the vote of six members of an Orthodox Congregational Council in Springfield, Mass., to install Rev. Mr. Merriam as pastor of one of the churches there, notwithstanding his explicit statement that he did not believe that the Bible teaches the doctrine of eternal punishment.

Yet there are still survivors of the old dogmas which have been so offensive to liberal religious thought, and they appear in places of influence and culture more often than liberal believers are apt to suppose. It shows great progress in Orthodox Congregationalism, it is true, that six members of a council of fourteen should be in favor of setting a man as minister notwithstanding a plain confession of heresy on the doctrine of future punishment. But, on the other hand, eight of the same Council voted that the candidate ought not to be installed, and he was not; though they affirmed their belief in his "Christian sincerity and devotional piety," and the extent of his heresy simply was, that, the Bible neither teaching nor denying eternal punishment, he should in his pulpit ministrations feel it his duty to leave it the same open question,—though in private, if occasion called for it, he might give his philosophical opinion that annihilation would be the destiny of the incorrigibly wicked. While we remember, therefore, the liberal position of the six, and rejoice in it as a hopeful augury, we ought not to forget that, with the eight who gave the decision of the Council, to believe squarely in eternal punishment is more important to a minister than the possession of the qualities of "Christian sincerity and devotional piety." Here is a survival of the old power of dogmatism.

But a much more (small) survival than this has recently been brought to my notice. It is often said, and it is claimed by Orthodox believers themselves, that the descriptions of the future torments of the damned that were common in Evangelical pulpits, two or three generations ago, are to-day obsolete and would be nowhere tolerated. Now I have before me, as I write, a freshly printed tract which contains the famous sermon of Dr. Jonathan Edwards, entitled, "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God." The tract bears the imprint of the "Presbyterian Board of Publication," Philadelphia. It is without date, but it has every appearance of having been printed in recent times and for modern distribution as a missionary publication: and it is, I understand, one of the tracts regularly distributed by the Presbyterian Board. Probably, not very many of the readers of THE INDEX have had the opportunity of seeing this tract. Let me quote, therefore, a few of the choicest paragraphs, to show a specimen of the theology which the Philadelphia Presbyterian Publishing House considers vital enough to issue to-day for missionary purposes.

The sermon opens with this statement:—

"There is nothing that keeps wicked men at any one moment out of hell, but the mere pleasure of God. By the mere pleasure of God, I mean his sovereign pleasure, his arbitrary will, restrained by no obligation, hindered by no manner of difficulty, any more than if nothing else but God's mere will had, in the least degree, or in any respect whatsoever, any hand in the preservation of wicked men one moment."

In the body of the sermon it is said:—

"The pit is prepared, the fire is made ready, the furnace is now hot, ready to receive the wicked; the flames do now rage and glow. The glittering sword is whetted and held over them, and the pit hath opened its mouth under them." . . . "The greater part of those who heretofore have lived under the same means of grace, and are now dead, are undoubtedly gone to hell."

In the "application" the preacher said to the "unconverted," and the Presbyterian Board of Publication repeats it to-day:—

"The bow of God's wrath is bent, and the arrow made ready on the string; and justice directs the arrow to your heart, and strains the bow, and it is nothing but the mere pleasure of God, and that of an angry God, without any promise or obligation at all, that keeps the arrow one moment from being made drunk with your blood."

"The God that holds you over the pit of hell, much in the same way as one holds a spider, or some loathsome insect, over the fire, abhors you, and is dreadfully provoked; his wrath towards you burns like fire; he looks upon you as worthy of nothing else but to be cast into the fire; he is of purer eyes than to bear to have you in his sight; you are ten thousand times more abominable in his eyes than the most hateful venomous serpent is in ours. . . . You hang by a slender thread, with the flames of divine wrath flashing about it, and ready every moment to singe it, and burn it asunder."

That the impenitent wicked have no hope is made to appear by the following paraphrase of a passage of Isaiah:—

"If you cry to God to pity you, he will be so far from pitying you in your doleful case, or showing you the least regard or favor, that, instead of that, he will only tread you under foot: and though he will know that you cannot bear the weight of Omnipotence treading upon you, yet he will not regard that, but he will crush you under his feet without mercy; he will crush out your blood and make it fly, and it shall be sprinkled on his garments, so as to stain all his raiment. He will not only hate you, but he will have you in the utmost contempt; no place shall be thought fit for you but under his feet, to be trodden down as the mire of the streets."

Dr. Russell, of Texas, as recently reported in THE INDEX, was barbarously whipped a short time ago by some of the over-zealous Christians of his neighborhood for what they deemed his "infidel blasphemy"; and occasionally we hear of freethinkers being legally prosecuted or punished for "blasphemy." When will Orthodox Christians learn that the language quoted above, however it might have been when first uttered, is "blasphemy" to-day to hundreds of thousands of earnest religious people, and is as shocking to the natural reverence and conscience of a large class of worthy citizens as any utterance of an "infidel" or even ribaldry of the street can be to a strict Orthodox believer? And when will the ecclesiastical powers learn that this natural reverence and conscience of so many worthy citizens has as much right and as much need to be protected by law against the publication of the sentiments of this tract, as the Evangelical believer has to the protection of his sacredly cherished beliefs against the blasphemous utterances, as he deems them, of the freethinker? W. J. P.

Communications.

"COMMON-SENSE vs. COMMUNISM."

NEW YORK, Dec. 12, 1877.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Permit me to play off one writer ("A. W. S.") against another ("A. W. K.") in THE INDEX of Dec. 6. The former, reviewing Mr. Edger, says:—

"The motto with which the writer prefaces his paper is pregnant with needful counsel to all who enter the arena of controversy. It is from Richard Congreve: 'Human questions need for their effectual study to be regarded from all points of view, and from all points of view simultaneously.' In other words, he who fails to understand and appreciate his opponent's position cannot be supposed to understand his own, and might better lay down his pen."

Your new editorial contributor, ushered to his promotion, too, with such a flattering editorial "send-off," does not seem to hold himself amenable to that wholesome rule. "Force, clearness, good taste, and courtesy" is a good deal to say of a writer who accompanies the commendation with a specimen of his wares, so that readers can judge for themselves. As his very first line opens with a fling at "rabid reformers" (implied communists, since he is treating of communism), it will fortunately be no difficult task to "excel" him in "courtesy."

Now let's try him on another of the quartette of qualities. He says, "History only repeats itself, in a different way." Now a perspicuous writer would have said, "History repeats itself, only in a different way"; otherwise his readers might get the idea that that is all that history does; but your editorial contributor, being only a "clear" writer, perhaps his way of stating it is passable enough. But he goes on to say that "the analogical method and inductive philosophy alike forbid us to believe that future ages can do more than perfect the present system which the experience of past generations has proven to be the best for humanity at large." The same could have been said of feudalism in the seventeenth century and of slavery in this; and yet the "perfecting" which future ages gave to these relations between labor and capital proved to be the bursting of them up in the cataclysms of war and revolution,—and only so late as the last summer, we saw a little more of that same "perfecting" of the most modern "standard adopted as the minimum measure of comfort to be tolerated by the average workman."

Again, your editorial contributor says, with that clearness of which he is so perfect a master: "The whole idea of the commune is founded upon a false assumption, inasmuch as it presupposes that men are unselfish, and willing to work as hard for their race, as a whole, as for themselves and their wives and families. Such is certainly not the case; nor is there the slightest reason for believing it ever will be."

Now in all other parts of his article, your editorial contributor treats of "communism" and "community"; but here, in order, I suppose, to be extra-lucid and clear, he changes to the word "commune," which has a different meaning. However, I guess he means communism; and, if he does, I deny that "the whole idea of 'communism' presupposes that men are unselfish." I have been a socialist, and a student of communism as one form of socialism, for forty years, and have had the personal acquaintance of many hundreds of communists, and I never knew one nor any who "presupposed" or proceeded upon the idea, that "men are unselfish." Common-sense is a common property with communists as with other folks, and they know that an unselfish man would be a piece of putty too worthless to be counted on, in any social organization. They know, in fact, that it is impossible to be unselfish; for that would be to be somebody else and not one's self. They believe the Creator knew what he was about when he made men selfish, and that it was for a wise and good purpose; and they do not propose to alter or amend the Creator's work, but to take it as the Author and Finisher completed it. But communists do believe and "presuppose" that selfishness can be educated, and that evolution and experience will train men to be enlightenedly selfish. For a body of men and women thoroughly trained in the knowledge and careful observance of rights and duties, communism is possible, practicable, and delightful. Communists dwelling and working together in a community, work for themselves and not "for their race, as a whole,"—or no more for their race than other workers do, except that their example is better. Each member of an organized community is a joint owner with the other members; and, in working for the community he gets his share and so works for himself,—feeds himself, clothes himself, houses himself, supplies himself with luxuries; and that is more than ordinary workers do.

Once more your editorial contributor says, "Communism strikes straight at the very root of the family relations." There is a sense in which that is true. If communism strikes at the root, it is only for not pruning, as any careful culturist of a family tree may do, to make a larger, thriftier, happier family. So far, however, from striking at the root in a destructive sense, communism, on the contrary, develops, enlarges, and perfects the family. It is one greater family, with all the good qualities of the single family perfected, and all the bad ones pruned out. Father, mother, children, grandfather, grandmother, brothers, sisters, fathers-in-law, and mothers-in-law can, and usually do, remain together in communities; so that those sad separations of sons going away to far-off business, and brides and daughters to distant and untried homes and husbands, are not necessary in a community. The fact is, compared with such a home, nearly all families, as now planted, have no root to strike at, but are just "drove in" like a stake, ready to pull up, move on, and scatter at the first breath of ill fortune; while there can be no such secure and permanent anchorage as a community of two, three, or more hundred members, with adequate residences, factories, and buildings founded on the firm earth.

"And thus," your editorial contributor continues, "it is nearly always the case that modern communists are found to be free lovers." Why modern any more than ancient? If "history only repeats itself," one would suppose the farther you go back the more common property and the more free love you will find. In a tribe of primeval men how much individual property was there for the young baboon clerks to inventory in an account of stock; and how much exclusive devotion of men to women and women to men? But if history does repeat itself, and especially if Mr. Andrews' formula—"the antithetical repetition of the lowest in the highest"—is true, these low forms will reappear in higher,—will become artistically modified, scientized, and perfected in the societies that are developing and preparing for the future.

But as a fact, now, to-day, modern communists are not "nearly always found to be free lovers." There are some five thousand people in the United States actually living in communities. Of these the larger branch comprises the Shaker Societies, and it is a misnomer of the most obvious character to call them free lovers. The disciples of Owen were not free lovers. The communities of Rapp, Zoar, and Cabot are not free lovers. Not one of the so-called Fourierist Associations of thirty-five years ago were free lovers; and even the Oneida community, the one example mentioned because some departure from the present Orthodox forms of marriage has been made, are not free lovers. Indeed, by his own terms, your clear editorial contributor contradicts himself and concedes that the Oneida people cannot be free lovers, for he expressly says that "the children there are not permitted to know their own parents. A mother must not ask to have the exclusive charge of the babe she has borne into the world." What kind of freedom is there to a love like that? One would suppose that free love would be free, and the lovers would be free to express their love to the objects and the progeny of their love. But the fact is, that children are permitted to know their own parents at the Oneida Community; and if a mother must not ask for the exclusive care of her babe, it is because her reason would guide her; since, under the admirable conveniences provided in the nursery for the care of children, she could not wish to ask for the exclusive care of her own child. Besides, in society as it is, is it so rare a thing, or so unpardonable a sin, for a mother to ask not to have the exclusive care of her babe? I fear your editorial contributor, when he wrote that, did not regard his statement "from all points of view," and from all points simultaneously.

I visited the Oneida Community a few weeks ago, and I saw children "knowing" or recognizing their own parents, and parents recognizing their children. I was introduced to this young person and that, as the son or daughter of such or such a person; and I saw children, and their parents were named to me. In one instance I was invited into the nursery of the children aged from one and one-half to two and one-half years. A group of some ten of them sat in their little chairs around a table, and two or three nurses were feeding them; and then and there I was asked to point out the grandchild of the lady who introduced me. Indeed I was rather "stumped" to make the selection, guided only by family resemblances. My eye glanced around the little faces, but I failed to satisfy myself enough to decide. Then I began again, taking special note of points; and, on a study of one face, I felt sure that that was the grandchild, and so announced my selection. Then there was a jolly laugh all around at my success. There were older children present, too, and there was no desire or suggestion of concealment of parentage that I saw or heard anywhere. Indeed, any well-informed writer might know that concealment would not be practicable or possible; for it is very generally known that the Community are raising their children according to the best known laws and conditions of breeding; and, to do that successfully, to trace crosses and strains accurately, parentage must be known and pedigree be made a matter of careful record.

Your contributor, in his editorial, writes repeatedly of what will or will never be. I commend to him the advice of Home Biglow, of Joliet, to people troubled with tendencies to predict the future: "Don't never prophesy—unless ye know."

And now it may be ungracious to haze your Freshman any farther. He must excuse me for indorsing your indorsement so literally, and making manifest the good points named. Quite likely he can turn upon me and convict me of all the literary and logical sins catalogued in the Index Expurgatorius; but then, I am only a lay writer and do not come heralded with such great expectations.

THEOBON C. LELAND.

RANDOLPH RATIFICATION MEETING.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., Dec. 9, 1877.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I hasten to send you a line by the first mail to say our Randolph meeting was a great success. Those who were there and who were at Rochester expressed the opinion that in many respects it was superior to the Rochester meeting. We had no random talkers. The speakers there were Elder Evans, Mrs. Neymann, Rev. Mr. Sample, and Judge McCormick. Each delivered two addresses. There were three sessions each day, and after the first session the audience filled the hall, which would seat about five hundred persons. Elder Evans outdid himself, and received the praises of everybody; but Rev. Mr. Sample, the young radical preacher, about twenty-two years of age, is a remarkable man. He electrified the audience with his first short speech in the conference meeting, at the first session; and after that he was immensely popular with the audience. He made the best argument for the Liberal League movement I have ever listened to, and received while at the meeting a number of invitations to speak in various places. He is a young Ingelsoll, and the American people will hear from him,—be assured of that. Never have I heard such eloquence from a man of his age. He is full of knowledge and enthusiasm, and causes every one to love him who sees and listens to him.

You have heard Mrs. Neymann, and know what a fine speaker she is; and it is enough to say her two speeches were in all respects equal to the one she delivered at Rochester. Judge McCormick delivered an ably written address on the question, "Are Matter and Force, Governed by Inherent Law, Sufficient to Create all Things?" He came to the conclusion that they were.

At the first session, which was a conference meeting, the President opened the meeting by reading the Resolutions and Platform adopted at Rochester. This conference, and one held on Sunday morning, constituted the most interesting portion of our meeting. The ten-minute speeches delivered by Hon. J. E. Wheaton, of Randolph, O. G. Chase, of Jamestown, H. Snow, from Massachusetts, and Dr. F. Larkin, of Randolph, were all excellent. Judge Wheaton's was extremely radical, but a very scholarly production. His time was extended to thirty minutes. What added to the interest of the occasion was an original poem in defence of our principles by A. L. Brainard, a young man from Salamanca.

The expenses of the meeting, amounting to nearly one hundred dollars, were paid by the audience, and the best spirit prevailed throughout the meeting. Many regretted the absence of Mr. Bennett and Dr. Brown,—the first kept away by the strong arm of the law, wielded by Comstock; the latter by sickness in his family. From this meeting went hundreds, I believe, convinced that the success of our cause is only a question of time.

The address delivered by Elder Evans, Sunday evening, that kept the audience in a roar of laughter most of the time, is to be published in the Albany Express. I hope it may appear in THE INDEX. Surely the Elder is a remarkable man. In private conversation he reminded me of the revered Samuel J. May. He is a lover of humanity.

The following are the resolutions which were presented by the committee, of which Hon. Joseph E. Wheaton, late Judge and member of the Legislature, was chairman, and were unanimously adopted:—

I.

"Resolved, That we cordially indorse the political platform of the National Liberal League adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877; and we urge the Liberals everywhere to organize Local Liberal Leagues in accordance with the doctrines and principles enunciated in the National Liberal Constitution, in order to establish a public opinion which shall be powerful in the maintenance of these doctrines and in disseminating the principles of the Platform connected therewith.

II.

"Resolved, That we protest, and we do here most solemnly, sincerely, and firmly protest, against any law, or the enactment of any law, authorizing the arrest and punishment of any person for presenting to the public what such person shall deem essential to the public welfare, when the matters so presented do not violate, in language or idea, the acknowledged rules of decorum; and we demand that all laws against obscenity be so clear, explicit, and well defined, that none but actual offenders can be punished, and that no one can be arrested without probable cause; and that such laws shall in no case be used to arrest, imprison, or persecute individuals for the expression of religious opinions, whatever those opinions may be, nor for expressions in repudiation of any particular religion."

III.

"Resolved, That under the laws of the United States there should be no such crime as blasphemy, and that all laws creating or sustaining such a doctrine should be at once repealed.

IV.

"Resolved, That the freedom of speech and of the press is one of the fundamental principles of our republic, and that the same should be guarded with the utmost care as being essential to the enjoyment of political and religious liberty."

Mrs. Neymann came from this meeting to my house, and on our arrival we found three letters from different cities of the Union, each from a Liberal German, making inquiries in relation to the Liberal League movement, each indorsing our platform, and conveying the intelligence that the Liberal Germans are much interested in it. These letters I read to my eloquent German lady guest, and they gave her great satisfaction. And I may add that Mrs. Neymann is to speak in Tompkins County on the invitation of Mr. Morton, of Groton, and probably before the Liberal League at Ithaca. She and our eloquent Sample should be kept constantly in the field.

H. L. GREEN.

A TRIUMPH OF JUSTICE: THE NEW HAVEN SCHOOLS SECULARIZED.

NEW HAVEN, Dec. 8, 1877.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—The work of Liberalism for the public good is becoming more apparent every day. By slow processes Liberalism has gained a point in the City of Elms. On Friday evening, Dec. 7, the Board of Education voted, by a vote of six to three, in favor of dispensing with all religious exercises in our public schools. It has been accomplished by honesty of purpose, agitation, and perseverance; or, in the words of Patrick Henry, "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." Thanks, then, to those honored representatives of the people who in nowise injured the majority, but took a burden from the shoulders of an indignant and helpless minority! At the beginning of the next term of our public schools that cancer which divides mankind, that bone of contention, will, I trust, be cast forever into oblivion, notwithstanding we dwell beneath the shadows of Yale College and her superstitious influences which have permeated society for many years past. To-day she witnesses an unwelcome sight: one of the sturdy sons of Yale, and a professor, too, casts his vote for the complete secularization of Church and State.

Who can say we do not live in an age of progress? How long will our sister cities and towns of New England sit in silence before they follow in the steps of New Haven, and join in one solid phalanx for making our schools what our country is, an asylum for the oppressed of all nations and all creeds?

You may ask what has brought about this noble work. Briefly will I answer. Four years ago a few magnanimous men and women established a free platform in New Haven, and for four long years free lectures have been given. Over three hundred free public lectures have been given to the citizens of New Haven; also a Sunday conference was organized. On this platform all sides have been expounded. Truth and science have met "superstition and creeds"; heated discussions have been prevalent; the people have been aroused, and agitation has prevailed.

Our work has been unpopular. We have been stigmatized and persecuted by our Christian brother. We have patiently borne individual chastisement, never meeting our enemies except with courtesy and logical arguments. We have appealed to their honesty, to their manhood, to their patriotism, to make our laws and our schools in harmony with the great Magna Charta of our civil government. We begin to see the fruits of our labor. We believe it to be high, noble, and wise. We feel encouraged. We propose to press upward and onward until the last vestige of bigotry and superstition is purged from all our civil institutions. All glory, then, to the Free Lecture Association! Long may she stand as an emblem of justice and moderation, and on her banner shall be inscribed, "Philanthropy and Universal Liberty."

Most respectfully yours,
W. W. STOW.

NEW HAVEN, 87 Bradley Street.

[Warmly congratulating our New Haven friends on their signal success, which we hope is to be permanent, we append an account of the proceedings in the Board of Education, copied from a newspaper extract enclosed by Mr. Stow.—ED.]

The question of the abolition of religious services from the public schools was taken from the table. An amendment prevailed substituting "dispensed with," for "abolished."

Mr. Earle had inquired concerning the schools at Washington, and found that the services there were optional. A gentleman from Plainville, a member of the school board, had told him he was glad to see that the question was being discussed. In Plainville services were had, but the Roman Catholic children remained away and were not marked tardy.

Mr. Tyler reported that he had written to school authorities in Cincinnati, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Toledo, Louisville, St. Louis, and other cities West, to learn the practice in the schools there. He had heard from only a few, and in these generally religious instruction had been abolished.

Mr. Bushnell said he had conversed with clergymen of all denominations, including Rev. Dr. Bacon, Rev. Dr. Carmody, and Rabbi Wechsler, and they believed that some form of religious instruction could be retained to suit all denominations.

Mr. Tyler said that the press, pulpit, and the public had remained apathetic upon a question which it had been prophesied would arouse fierce excitement.

Mr. Bushnell said that the question would create excitement if the services should be abolished.

Mr. Maher inquired what was intended to be put in the place of the present religious exercises.

The president then stated a motion that had been sent up by Mr. Bushnell, which was that the committee be instructed to report a prayer acceptable to all denominations.

Mr. Watrous said that he would like to see such a prayer, for it would be a great curiosity. He believed that no such prayer could be made, and if it could it would not be proper where there was no union of Church and State. He said that such a union had been one of the worst curses of any age. He said that no excitement would be occasioned until the fuse had been lighted. The question was one which touched the public deep down in their hearts, and it should be treated with moderation. It might be well to treat the matter now when the public were apathetic and not by the ears. He alluded to the trouble over the Bible in the public schools of Cincinnati, and this drew out the fact that the Bible had not been used in the New Haven public schools for seventeen years.

General Walker was ready to vote upon the question, and believed the solid sense of the community was with the advocates of the abolition of the services. He thought no one could successfully rouse the people on this point, for it was generally acknowledged that this was not an age of religious proscription.

Mr. Earle said that Superintendent Parish had prepared a programme which contained no religion, for the beginning of school sessions. Its character was not stated.

The vote on Mr. Bushnell's amendment to have some simple form of prayer prepared was in the negative. The two affirmative votes were those of Mr. Bushnell and Major Maher.

The vote was taken on the proposition to dispense with the services and resulted in the affirmative, Messrs. Heningway, Maher, and Bushnell voting in the negative. The vote was made to take effect next term.

[You observe the statement that the Bible has not been used for seventeen years. They do not call the New Testament Bible! The Testament has been read every morning regularly, and a prayer offered.—W. W. S.]

FOURIER.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I want to say a word to "A. W. K.," and so remind him that "human questions need for their effectual study to be regarded from all points of view, and from all points of view simultaneously," and that there is no error so dangerous as a half-truth. Communism, when put for the whole of social science, is a one-sided and hence untruthful statement; but the tendency to communism, or the unselfish side of human nature, is as essential an element as the tendency to individualism, or the selfish side of human nature.

True social science recognizes all the elements of character; or, as Fourier calls them, all the passions of the human soul; and no society evolution can be expected to be permanent except on the basis of harmonizing all, by giving each its highest development. In fact, were there no contrasts, discords, and contradictions, there could be no harmony.

A very little acquaintance with the doctrines of that mighty master of social sciences, Charles Fourier, would have taught your correspondent that Fourier was no communist, and that the idea that "legislation is to remake human nature," could never have had the slightest toleration from him or from any of his disciples. On the contrary, Fourier derived his whole theory from a profound study of human nature. He set out with the idea that the business of the human intellect is to discover the laws which govern the individual and social relations of man; and then to provide conditions adapted to human nature as it is, according to those laws.

Brook Farm was not a community, but a joint stock association; and the idea of a community of property was especially and explicitly denied by them; and the Brook farmers would have laughed at the idea that there was any need to "remake human nature," by legislation or otherwise, or any possibility of doing it.

What they tried to do was to evolve conditions better suited to develop human nature to its utmost perfection than the present imperfect and (relative to the ideal) anarchical society. They were before their time; but all real progress must follow on the same line, and will do it more easily for their labors.

It is easy to decry an imaginary Fourier; but he is the great social prophet of the future, nevertheless.

Dec. 9, 1877.

F. S. C.

THE RANDOLPH GATHERING.

MT. LEBANON, Dec. 12, 1877.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Friend,—I have just returned home from attending the Liberal League Convention at Randolph. We had a "good time generally." Held six meetings. A young man by the name of Sample is a prodigy. He delivered one discourse, in particular, that for matter and manner I have rarely seen equalled. Every position taken was impregnable, the logic faultless, the eloquence of the highest order. Friend Green is a sterling, staunch reformer. He presided with a firmness and urbanity that commanded our respect and excited our love.

The listeners were fully equal to the speakers. It was a successful and profitable gathering. Land limitation gained some important converts. The subject has only to be investigated, to take its place as next in importance to the citizenship of woman.

1. Men and women citizens.
2. Land limitation.
3. Inalienable homesteads.
4. Government secular. No form of theology.
5. Education, in secular public schools, up to fifteen years of age, of all children in the nation.
6. Taxation and protection, without exemption or evasion, by the government.
7. The general government as universal as supreme.

One of these times I shall give you my reasons for holding that all laws for the forcible collection of debts should be abrogated.

I enclose copy of my Sabbath evening lecture. If you can afford the space in THE INDEX, give it an appearance.

Respectfully and kindly your friend,
F. W. EVANS.

WHILE the tenor John Wilson was being "coached" to sing with Malibran in "Sonnambula" the maestro said to him: "Mr. Wilson, you must throw more passion into your manner. Remember, sir, you are making love to Amina." The Scotchman simply answered: "Man, I'm married!"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No out will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " 8 " " "
 " 26 to 51 " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STUBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MULLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of our country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 60 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OTHER

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debating character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Ten-

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.50
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism. New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AVERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Belvedere.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.50
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.00
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Hume and Her Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 3 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	5.00
CEVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. MILLER, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. MILLER). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. R. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.50
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONIQUE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE E.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches into the Geographical Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Man.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Poems.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Foundations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
CRISTO.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. For vol. Elective Affinities.....	2.00
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMBERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Asia and the Unknown River. The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	3.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Outpost Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.50
Suburban Sketches.....	2.50
Venetian Life.....	2.50
Italian Journeys.....	2.50
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skeltons.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. 2. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Phylacterics" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. 1.

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.50
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart. Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M. A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	4.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings. Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.50
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 1 vol. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	1.50
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.50
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.50
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1866.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Woman—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.25
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.00
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Land.....	1.50
MIVAT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	1.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.25
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkhos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	1.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defences.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEROPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Lovers of Nature. A Series of Popular Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.50
Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	3.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	1.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., &c. Flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	11.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 1 vol.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Inductive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III.....	6.00
Life, Correspondence and Scholarly Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	1.50
The Glass-Book Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THOREAU'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Advances of Philip Fendalens.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Sketches and Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the newest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snake, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamlet, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CHLIA) Among the Isles of Bhoale.....	1.50
THOREAU (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Sight and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 1 vol.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Heat.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The String and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 1 vol.....	1.50
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Man.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Emerson.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	4.50
Child's Life.....	3.50

ADDITIONS:

THE INDEX.

331 Washington St., Boston.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to the patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quick advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10¢ per line.
 " 13 to 25 " 8 " " "
 " 26 to 51 " 6 " " "
 " 52 " " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEUBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHERNEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 30 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenheim's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keahub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHERNEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 30 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined list, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	1.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	2.25
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics, 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.50
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	2.50
BROOKS' (CHARLEST.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	5.00
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.50
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience .....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.00
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. R. M.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Medical and Social Systems. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.75
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.50
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	1.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Panels".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	8.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compiling— Adam Bede.....
Domia.....
The Mill on the Floss.....
Felix Holt.....
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Man.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poetry Works. 2 vols.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	3.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.50
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Eliot's and New.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Liberty and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Mailbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wed- ding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Adminis- trative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel- ton's Feet.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Sec- ond Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tynd- all.....	1.50
II. Physics and Biology, or Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Besant. I.
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Bal- four Stewart, with an Appendix, treat- ing of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Disser- tion on Aeronomics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Trans- lated into English, with Analysis and In- troduction. By J. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Pro- fessor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.) Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augus- tus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	3.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Trans- lated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	5.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Founda- tions of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates..... 2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena..... 1.25
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts..... 4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Secondary, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc..... 5.00
The Expanse of Heaven..... 2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus..... 1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante..... 2.50
SOHELEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies..... 6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S..... .50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe..... .50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations..... .50
Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth..... .50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols..... 51.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition..... 2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help..... 1.00
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical..... 1.25
First Principles..... 1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers..... 2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to the Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed..... 2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols..... 5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols..... 5.00
Philosophy of Style..... .50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition..... 2.00
Sociology..... 1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each..... .50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics..... 2.50
Universal Progress..... 2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny..... 1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin..... .50
STRAUSS (D.F.) The Old Faith and the New..... 2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols..... 11.00
TAINES (H.A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols..... 7.50
The Classroom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske..... 2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems..... 1.75
THACKERAY'S (W.M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol. 1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.
The Virginians.
Emmond, and Lovell the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol. This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals..... 1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods..... 2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods..... 2.00
Cape Cod..... 2.00
Letters..... 2.00
A Yankee in Canada..... 2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers..... 2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind..... 2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols..... 5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN) Faraday as a Discoverer..... 1.00
Familiar Science..... 1.50
Popular Science..... 1.50
Light and Electricity..... 1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps..... 2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion..... 2.00
On Sound..... 2.00
Radiant Heat..... 2.00
Forms of Water..... 1.50
Lectures on Light..... 1.50
Proceedings of the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall..... .50
Lessons in Electricity..... .50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast..... .30
TYTLEB (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures..... 1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings..... 1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Shinarump and the Spence. Vols. I. and V., each..... 2.50
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each..... 3.75
WAGNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden..... 1.00
Sauterines..... 1.50
Back-Log Studies..... 1.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion..... 2.00
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols..... 6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life..... 1.50
Days and Hours..... 1.50
Chatter and Chatterboxes..... 1.50
The Literature of the Age of Emerson..... 1.50
Success and its Conditions..... 1.50
Washington and the Revolution..... .50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Lochs, Goldsworthy's Life..... 1.50
The Girl's Home Story..... 1.50
Real Folk..... 1.50
The Other Girls..... 2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems..... 1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols..... 4.00
Child Life..... 2.50
ADDRESS:
THE INDEX,
331 Washington St., Boston.

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX.

231 Washington St., Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion.

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A HOLIDAY OFFERING.

JUST PUBLISHED:

Poems of the Life Beyond and Within.

Voices from Many Lands and Centuries,
saying—

"Man, Thou shalt never Die!"

By GILES B. STEBBINS.

Price, $1.50. For sale by THE INDEX, 231
Washington Street, Boston.

LECTURES AND SERMONS.

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

THIRD SERIES.

1. The Simplicity of True Religion.
2. The Rising Faith.
The following numbers of the first and second series can also be supplied: Thomas Paine, Bret of Sunday, Higher Reverence, Self-Respect, God on Our Side, Eternity and Waste, Rites of Modern Science, Immortal Life, Moral Aspects of Belief in Immortality, Idealizing the Real, The Coming Man, A Rational Church.
Sent to any address, postage paid, at 5 cents per copy, by

JAMES MILLER,
773 Broadway, New York.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.*WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

RADICAL FREETHOUGHT

LECTURES for 1878.

By R. F. UNDERWOOD.

Positive and Constructive Lectures:

1. The Demands of Liberalism.
2. The Positive Side of Free Thought.
3. The Genesis and Nature of Religion, Considered as an "Element of Human Nature."
4. A Scientific and Philosophic View of Religious Revivals.
5. Christianity and Civilization.
6. The Triumphs of Liberalism.
7. What Liberalism offers in the Place of the Christian Theology.
8. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
9. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Preexistent Heathenism.
10. Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
11. Buddha and Buddhism.
12. Ancient Egypt: Her Laws, Morality, and Religion.
13. The Theory of Evolution.
14. Darwinism: Its Principles Stated and Defended.
15. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
16. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
17. Modern Scientific Materialism.
18. Instinct and Intuition: Organized Experiences of the Race.
19. Woman: Her Past and Present, Her Rights and Wrongs.
20. Paine, the Pioneer of Freethought in America.
21. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.

Critical Lectures:

22. The Fallacies of Rev. Joseph Cook regarding the Personality and Being of God.
23. Cook's Criticisms of Scientific Materialism examined.
24. Why I am an "Unbeliever."
25. Christianity and Intellectual Progress.
26. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
27. The Evidences for the Divinity of the Bible examined.
28. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
29. Popular Objection to Infidelity Answered.
30. The Crimes and Cruelties of Catholic and Protestant Christianity.
31. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
32. The Proofs of a Personal Intelligent Deity examined.
33. The Pros and Cons of a Future State.

For terms, etc., address

R. F. UNDERWOOD,
Thorndike, Mass.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS

PAINE! Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer. Just issued. Clear—Concise—Vigorous—Logical—Eloquent—and Unanswerable! Just what every Liberal wants. Only 25 cents. Address R. C. WALKER, Box 56, Florence, Iowa.

A C H E A P O F F E R .

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

Is an extraordinary eight-page Liberal family paper devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth. Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds; it has no reverence for bible or man-made gods, and it opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasures in another.

It has a variety of departments, is chaotic and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a first-rate Liberal paper. It must be the best, for it is the only one of its kind on this continent.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published

WEEKLY AT ONE DOLLAR A YEAR,

or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and in all cases stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address all communications to SETH WILBUR PAYNE, Science Hall, 141 Eighth Street (near Broadway), New York.

CHRISTIANITY AND INFIDELITY!

A DEBATE BETWEEN

Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian, New York, and

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the Truth Seeker.

SUBJECTS DISCUSSED:

Part I. The Relative Services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Independence.

Part II. The Relative Services of Christianity to Learning and Science.

Part III. Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that infidelity is true?

A thick 12mo volume of over 500 pages, well bound, sent post-paid by mail for One Dollar. Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently.... It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."— Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. John E. Williams, Free Met. Nat. Bank, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Otton, Free. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.; Mr. Moses H. Grinnell, N.Y.

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWO PENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $1.50.

MADAME FOY'S*CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year.

And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY

FOY & HARMON,

New Haven, Conn.

A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS

BOOK.

A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. S. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,*T. W. HIGGINSON,*W. J. POTTER,*W. H. SPENCER,*F. W. NEWMAN,*CHAS. VOTSEY,*A. W. STEVENS,*R. H. RANNEY,*F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

No. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $9.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $9.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 and '77 40 cts.; four for $1.50.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seat, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!*CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XIV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT*EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	40
FIFTY ".....	75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.00
TWO HUNDRED ".....	1.50
THREE HUNDRED ".....	2.00
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	2.50
ONE THOUSAND ".....	3.00

N. B.—Package of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage. Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1877.

WHOLE No. 418.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

WILL THOSE SUBSCRIBERS whose term expires at New Year be so good as to save this office the expense and trouble of sending bills by remitting the amount of their subscription without further notice? Their kindness in doing so will be fully appreciated.

THE ADJOURNED meeting of all friends of the Liberal League movement in Boston and vicinity will be held at the Woman's Club Rooms, 4 Park Street, Friday evening, January 4, at 7.30 o'clock. The Committees appointed a fortnight previous will make their reports.

IN COMPLIANCE with the request of Elder Evans, we publish this week his discourse at the late Ratification Meeting at Randolph, N. Y. It will be seen that his reasons for favoring the Liberal League are peculiar; but we have no quarrel with the reasons of any man who is in favor of equal justice to men and women of all beliefs.

B. F. UNDERWOOD was at Lincoln, Neb., Dec. 23, and at Norborne, Mo., Dec. 25 to 30. Engagements follow at Marysville and Pleasant Hill, Mo.; Independence, Kan.; Brighton and Nora Springs, Iowa; Toronto, Lindsay, Meaford, and Owen Sound, Ontario (commencing in Canada, Jan. 20); and Springfield, Riverton, Streator, La Salle, Peru, and Gardner, Ill.

LET NO READER of this journal fail to read the reports of the Liberal League meetings at Ithaca, Milwaukee, and St. Joseph. We rejoice in all such expressions of opinion in favor of the Rochester platform, for their effect can only be to compel public attention to principles of incontestable justice and national importance. May the example of these good Leagues prove contagious!

THE NEW YORK Sun of December 2 says: "Many local Liberal Leagues are springing up in all parts of the country, indorsing the platform adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, by the Liberal League party. At Ithaca, N. Y., one was formed the other day containing eleven professors of Cornell University." The Sun then proceeded to publish Mr. Green's notice of the Randolph meeting, as already presented to our readers.

THE FIRST NUMBER of the Anti-Sceptic, a new monthly magazine published in this city and devoted to "the impending conflict between Christianity and Infidelity," has been issued. It champions the cause of the Christian Amendment of the Constitution here in Boston, and is edited with ability, although the name of the editor is withheld. Of this new enemy of equal rights in religion we shall have more to say by-and-by.

ATTEMPTS ARE making to reverse the decision of the New Haven Board of Education, dispensing with all religious exercises in the public schools of that city. Petitions are in circulation there, asking for the reconsideration of the vote; and some of the teachers are reported as threatening to resign. It is to be hoped that the Board will not be browbeaten or bullied by public clamor out of a position impregnable in point of justice.

IT WILL be seen that opinions differ as to the question discussed in our last week's editorial. With the utmost cordiality we welcome these expressions of a different view from Mr. Wright and Mr. Tucker. Nevertheless, the opinion we expressed last week is unshaken; and we believe the time is not far distant when the liberals of this country will see abundant cause to be grateful to us for speaking just as we did with clearness and decision on this very subject.

MR. HEYWOOD makes this excellent suggestion: "To second your motion to exclude the Bible from the public schools, I would suggest that Liberalists have inserted in the warrants calling the next town-meetings in their respective localities an article for that purpose. This would secure a full discussion of the question, and hasten the triumph of a movement devoutly favored by the most intelligent people." We hope all our co-laborers will act as far as possible on this admirable hint.

THE RESOLUTIONS adopted by the Milwaukee Liberal League, published in another column, speak of their declaration in favor of woman suffrage as an "addition" to the Rochester platform. This it is not, since the second plank of that platform, accepting as a fact the "citizenship" which already belongs to women by decision of the United States Supreme Court, demands equal political rights for all citizens, and therefore for women. Let us all understand our own platform fully. It may or may not be advisable to specify all the various classes of citizens covered by that comprehensive principle; we think such an enumeration would only cumber it to no purpose; but certainly the enumeration would be no "addition" at all.

THE RUPTURE among the Free Masons of France over the question of a theistic creed threatens to extend itself to all countries in which Free Masonry exists. Says the Boston Advertiser of December 22: "The commotion caused among the Free Masons of Europe by the action of the Grand Orient of France, the highest Masonic authority of that country, still continues. The old formula of French Masonry was that—'Free Masonry has for its principle belief in the existence of God, in the immortality of the soul, and in the solidarity of man.' This formula, it will be remembered, has been abolished, and the new form only recognizes absolute freedom of conscience and the solidarity of man. Seventy French lodges resented the innovation and withdrew from the central body. The Irish Grand Lodge protested earnestly, and the English Masons, at a recent meeting representing seventeen hundred lodges, appointed a committee to report upon the subject—Lord Carnarvon, Grand Master, condemning the French departure altogether. The London Spectator, noticing the incident, and remarking that it reveals the depth of the chasms which are dividing modern society, nevertheless doubts whether the negative action of the Grand Orient is a sufficient ground for disunion."

A WASHINGTON DISPATCH of December 20 shows how persistent and cunning are the enemies of secular government, and how quick they are to seize every occasion of establishing new and dangerous precedents of "Christian government": "The new specimens of silver dollars, of which Senator Jones presented two to President Hayes the other day, are exceedingly perfect and beautiful pieces of workmanship, surpassing in sharpness and finish any coins ever struck, either in this or any other country. Two dollars have been made, each of the same size, and of the weight of 412½ grains, and conforming in device and inscription to legal requirements. The most marked change from the old dollar is the representation of 'Liberty,' which, instead of a sitting figure, is a large, sharply-defined female head, on one of the coins wearing the hair confined in a circlet, on the front of which is the word 'Liberty,' and on the other wearing a loose cap, wreathed with grain and flowers. Both bear the legend 'In God we trust,' one in old, the other in modern, English texts. Upon the other side of the coins is a spread eagle, the motto E pluribus unum, the thirteen stars, and the denomination of the coin. The eagles hold arrows and olive branches in their talons, and a wreath of oak and laurel encircles the lower portion of the coin. Only a very small number of the coins have been struck, and these only as specimens, but the demand for them from collectors is very great, ten dollars having been refused to-day for one. It is not certain that should the pending measure for inflating the silver coinage become a law, these designs will be finally approved; but the indications are strongly in that direction."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.....	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.....	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. NEWALL.....	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.....	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.....	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.....	Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.....	New York, N. Y.
MR. W. J. POTTER.....	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. F. HOLLOWELL.....	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.....	Bembridgeport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBERT.....	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PATNE.....	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. NAVAGE.....	Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FRIEDMAN.....	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER.....	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.....	Florence, Mich.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.....	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZ.....	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HOBART SEAY.....	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE.....	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT.....	Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.....	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD.....	Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER.....	Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.....	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.....	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MCCORMICK.....	Franklin, Pa.
MR. F. W. EVANS.....	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.....	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.....	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON.....	Tenney, N. J.
MRS. SALLIE HOLLEY.....	Lottsburg, Va.
Secretary.
W. H. HAWLEN.....	221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.....	149 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....	8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT.....	W. H. HAWLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX.....	H. L. GREEN.
Executive Committee.
Alabama.....	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....	JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
California.....	H. MOULINEUX, San Francisco.
Colorado.....	DAVID T. BRALL, Granada.
Connecticut.....	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....	JOSEPH D. GOMER, Greenfield.
Florida.....	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....	ERNEST PRUSSING, Chicago.
Indiana.....	L. C. UNDERWOOD, Indianapolis.
Iowa.....	J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
Kansas.....	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....	R. B. OLAK, Wilmore.
Louisiana.....	EDWARD BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....	M. A. BLANCHARD, Portland.
Maryland.....	J. B. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....	W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.....	D. C. HAUXHURST, Battle Creek.
Minnesota.....	J. B. BARNETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....	J. S. BOYDEN, St. Louis.
Nebraska.....	L. W. BILLINGSLEY, Lincoln.
Nevada.....	WILLIAM BENTLEY, Manchester.
New Hampshire.....	H. GREEN (chairman), Salamanc.
New York.....	J. W. THOMAS, Warren.
North Carolina.....	E. D. STARR, Cleveland.
Ohio.....	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Oregon.....	G. W. BALDWIN, Lanesville.
Pennsylvania.....	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
Rhode Island.....	F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
South Carolina.....	DR. E. H. FERGUSON, Greenville.
Tennessee.....	DR. A. DUNBAR, Greenville.
Texas.....	B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Vermont.....	B. SPALDING, Norfolk.
Virginia.....	A. M. DENT, Weston.
West Virginia.....	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wisconsin.....	D. P. WILCOX, Fenton.
District of Columbia.....	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Wyoming.....	W. FERGUSON, Cheyenne.
Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.....	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.....	137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.....	221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde. Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Pfisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.	JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.	MISHOOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch. Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.	STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lockhead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Orson Brooks; Secretary, J. H. Cotton. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.	PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, John S. Varity; Secretary, Robert Cooper. Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Eliza Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urbino, John S. Varity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson. Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritta, L. E. Keeler, J. J. White, E. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.	BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, F. E. Abbot; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse. Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C.

Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet. TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, O. M. Hayes. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.	HENDON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker. Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, E. R. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.	NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.] Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hornum, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.	NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson. Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Evinger, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post. Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. O. D. Dake, and others.	TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop. Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Cool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.	CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler. Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.
SECTION 1. —Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.
SECTION 2. —No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.
SECTION 3. —Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.
SECTION 4. —Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

WHEN RAPHAEL enjoyed at Rome the reputation of being the mightiest living master of the graphic art, the Bolognese preferred their countryman, Francesco Francia, who had long dwelt among them, and was of eminent talent. The two artists had never met, nor had one seen the works of the other. But a friendly correspondence existed between them. The desire of Francia to see some of the works of Raphael, of whom he ever heard more and more in praise, was extreme; but advanced years prevented him from encountering the fatigues and dangers of a journey to Rome. A circumstance at last occurred that gave him, without this trouble, the opportunity of seeing what he had so long desired. Raphael, having painted a picture of St. Cecilia to be placed in a chapel at Bologna, he wrote to Francia, requesting him to see it put up, and even to correct any defects he might see in it. As soon as Francia took the picture from its case and put it in a proper light for viewing it, he was struck with admiration and wonder, and felt painfully how much he was Raphael's inferior. The picture was, indeed, one of the finest that ever came from Raphael's pencil, but it was only so much more a source of grief to the unhappy Francia. He assisted, as desired, in placing it in the situation for which it was intended, but never after had he a happy hour. In one moment he had seen all that he had ever done, all that had once been so much admired, thrown quite into the shade. He was too old to entertain any hope by renewed efforts of coming up with the excellence of Raphael, or even approaching it. Struck to the heart with grief and despair, he took to his bed, from which he never rose again. He was insensible to all consolation, and in a few days, the victim of a sublime melancholy, he died, in his sixty-eighth year.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Pure vs. Adulterated Christianity.

A LECTURE DELIVERED BEFORE THE CATTARAUGUS COUNTY LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT RANDOLPH, N. Y., DEC. 9, 1877.

BY ELDER F. W. EVANS.

Our highest conception of human virtue is abstract Christianity; first in individuals, then in society.

Paine declared "all religion good that makes good men and women." The Catholic Church and Protestant sects, from the Episcopal to the Quakers, are to be judged by this standard,—by their fruits, characters; not by their creeds and dogmas. Paine again says: "Religion, considered as a duty, is incumbent upon every living soul alike; and, therefore, must be on a level with the understanding and comprehension of all alike." "I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy." We can all accept these utterances.

Paine further says: "That there was such a man as Jesus of Nazareth, I verily believe; and that he was the most perfect example of righteousness this world ever saw, I also believe; and if they who profess to be his followers would take more pains to imitate his example, and make less noise about it, it would be infinitely better for the world of mankind."

The parable of Jesus about the two boys whom their father ordered to do his will—one said, I will, but did not; the other said, I will not, but repented and did as commanded—may be applicable to Orthodox Christians, and infidels to Orthodox Christianity.

The Shaker Order claims to be the second Christian Church established upon earth. Its prominent traits are, property in common, celibate lives, plainness in dress, language, and equipage, non-swearing, non-fighting, all laboring with their hands,—believing that, in a community, he who will not work should not eat.

The social evil, poverty, and crime are removed. Shakers neither vote nor accept office; are a spiritual Church; a practical illustration of separation of Church and State when the new earth and new heaven are created. How far the characteristics of the first Christian or Pentecostal Church are exhibited in the Shaker Order, is open to inquiry.

But what of the intermediate Christian system that fills the hiatus of history between these two churches? Suppose we use the symbolic history of the spiritual medium John, written before the events occurred?

Revelations 8: 1 and 2.—Seven seals: The Lamb opened one of them,—there was a white horse. He that sat on him had a bow and a crown; he went forth "conquering and to conquer." White horse: pure Christian system, revelation of Christ spirit to Jesus, who sat on the horse. With his bow he had conquered himself, and was crowned as an overcomer of all human lusts, a victorious Christian who entered the spirit world to act as medium of the Christ spirit to his disciples on earth. By it they were led into all truth constituting pure Christianity. They formed the Pentecostal Church, which lasted some three hundred years, having fifteen bishops.

It is well known that celibacy was a foundational principle in that body of organized Christians; that they would not fight when drafted into the Roman armies; that they suffered martyrdom by thousands for such refusal; that they loved one another practically; would take no judicial oaths, nor take any part in governmental affairs of State or nation. They, like the Shakers of to-day, constituted a spiritual order, separate and distinct from the State. Their diet was simple, like the Last Supper, no animal food being used. Diseases not generated by violation of Mosaic laws, but cured by laying-on of hands and prayers. Allopathic doctors, with their poisonous drugs, were as unknown as lawyers and a hireling priesthood. The marriage system to generate human beings and the military system to destroy them, pertain to the children of this world, who marry and fight; not to the children of light, living in the Christ resurrection.

Verses 3 and 4.—Second seal: a red horse, denoting blood. To him (Constantine) who sat thereon, power was given to take peace from the earth, and cause human beings, calling themselves Christians, to kill one another, just as all Church and State Christians have done, and just as our God-in-the-Constitution people would do could they get the State sword in their possession. When Constantine was converted, he had a "great sword,"—the civil powers. He united Church and State. He killed many members of his own family, and carried on wars of conversion, baptizing his prisoners by forcing them into rivers by hundreds and thousands.

During the twelve hundred and sixty years' reign of the Beast and his Image—Catholicism and Protestantism,—war, in the form of religious persecution, inside the Church against heretics, and religious wars outside the Church against the Mohammedans and heathen, as the Crusades and the Spaniards in South America, has filled the earth with blood. The Church and State harlot was drunk with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus. She is still thirsting for the blood that the founders of our secular-infidel materialistic government will not let her have to drink.

The more pious persons are, who believe in war, in a union of Church and State, the more will they think they do God service in suppressing heresy, infidelity, and Shakerism by the sword.

It is certainly logical that infidels like Jefferson, Voltaire, Paine, Franklin, Bennett, and their class, could never torture nor destroy the bodies of men or women to save their souls. Under the second seal, war and marriage were new elements in the Christian system. The man of sin had got into the temple of God,—the Church.

Verses 5 and 6.—When the third seal was opened, a black horse appeared. His rider had a pair of scales in his hand, and he had a measure for grain, and the price of it was given,—“a penny and three pence.” Private property, with its concomitants, buying and selling, speculation, commerce, came into the Church. It was no longer all things common, with peace and a virgin life; but warriors, like Constantine the Great, and licentious, cruel men like Luther and Henry VIII., and cruel, wicked women like Queens Mary and Elizabeth. These fighting kings and queens were heads of the Church. They bought and sold kingdoms, or took them with the sword. Our preachers, when the Bible and Sharp's rifles fail them, buy their women with intellectual treasures and sell church-pews for money. Poverty, the social evil, and chattel slavery were, under this seal, as part of the seven plagues.

Verses 7 and 8.—The fourth seal: a pale horse,—unphysiological habits of generation and nutrition, that Moses had condemned. The law of reproduction, as taught by Moses, was to use marriage for offspring only. Under the law of nutrition, as in the wilderness and the Lord's Supper, animal food was not used.

But in the kingdom of anti-Christ—the Beast and his Image, Catholic and Protestant—a fourth part are killed with the “beasts of the earth, with hunger, with death, and with the sword.” They hunger, as did Israel, for flesh meat. They kill the beasts with the sword, eat them by their dyspeptic hunger, thus creating Egyptian and anti-Christian plagues and diseases, while eating the evil things they lusted after. Then come paleness, sickness, doctors, nurses, drugs, and doses—as with the millionaire Vanderbilt,—ending in death.

Verses 9, 10, and 11.—When the fifth seal opens, the historic scene is laid in the spirit world. “I saw under the altar the souls of them that had been slain by the war spirit, in the Church and State governments, for the word of God they had spoken, when the Church had decreed the canon of Scripture closed, revelation ended, and all spiritualism nothing but witchcraft. These witnesses were killed for the testimony they bore, and they cried for vengeance, ‘How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not avenge our blood on them that dwell upon the earth!’” For they were not yet converted to the peace principle. They were clothed in white and told to wait until the others of their fellows were killed as they had been, and the “ten horns”—rationalism, deism, atheism, materialism, etc.—had grown out of the Beast and Image, that would hate the harlot of Church and State. War Christianity; make her desolate; torment her with Paines, Browns, Ingalls, Lincoln, Abbots, Bennetts, and Liberal Leagues, who burn her with the fire of scientific truth, and eat her flesh, themselves as yet being part of the old system.

Verses 12, 13, and 14.—The sixth seal opened, and there was a great earthquake (American and French revolutions) produced by rationalistic infidelic powers,—Voltaire, Hume, Volney, Mirabeau, etc. The sun was darkened, the light of revelation put entirely out in the Church, and the moon (civil government) turned to blood, to war, as the business of Christian nations, from Constantine to our Russian-Turkish war, which is just as religious as any of them. And the stars (witnesses), Methodists, Quakers, and others, fell to the earth, into earthly, worldly marriages and selfish property, giving their spiritual power unto the Beast. The old heavens departed as a scroll,—the Church and State theology and system. “Islands and mountains were all moved out of their places.” The great day of the “wrath of the Lamb”—pure Christianity; against the red horse, war; the black horse, selfish, property, speculation, monopoly, commerce, with its rings; the pale horse, sickness, doctor's craft, animal, indulgence in the lusts of sexuality, of eating and drinking and dressing and poisoning with food and medicine—had come, and hiding by sophistry was in order, as Catholic, Greek, and Protestant Christianity.

Chapter 14.—We have another view of the spirit world, the Pentecostal Church, composed of converts from the Mosaic dispensation, twelve thousand from each tribe. “I looked, and behold a Lamb stood upon Mount Zion, and with him one hundred and forty-four thousand—twelve times twelve,—with the character of God written in their foreheads.” They were singing a new song, were redeemed from the earth, were virgin characters,—Shakers. They were like Jesus, being first fruits of a new system of human society.

Verse 6: Then an angel flew in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel of the one hundred and forty-four thousand to preach to those who dwell upon the earth, where again we find ourselves. One angel declared, “Babylon is fallen, fallen.” Another, that “if any man worship the Beast”—Catholicism,—“or the image of the Beast”—Protestantism,—“or receive the mark or sign of the cross instead of the cross itself, in the forehead or hand, he shall have no rest, day nor night,” no salvation from sin. Then cometh the second appearing of Christ, verse 14: “I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of Man—Jesus,—having on her head a golden crown, and in her hand a sharp sickle.” This was Ann Lee, the Shaker order. As harvest is the end of a field of grain, so is harvest-time the end of the world to those who are reaped therefrom; but not to all upon earth at any one time.

Chapter 21, verse 1.—“I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away, and there was no more sea or world.” Church and State governments began to pass away when the secular governments of the United States began to be formed. All monarchical governments received a death-blow when infidels framed the United States Constitution; and all the Church and State religions are shaking to their foundations in the presence of the Shaker order. Infidels and the Liberal Leagues are the earth that helps the woman by swallowing the flood of lies or accusations, and drawing the fire of persecution against the Shakers. The Liberals reject the principles that we are called blasphemers for rejecting the trinity, atonement, vicarious sacrifice, resurrection of the body. These “doctrines of devils” are passing away before the light of science of the new earth and revelation of the new heavens.

Chapter 7.—We have another scene in the spirit world. Jesus having preached the Gospel to the Jews in the New Jerusalem there, as he had done upon earth; there came converts from each of the twelve tribes of Israel; the twelve thousand from each not being a particular number but characters. Then there came converts from all nations and kindreds and peoples and tongues, who stood before the Lamb (Jesus) and before the throne of judgment, clothed in white robes (innocence), and palms of victory in their hands,—a great multitude, whom no man could number, the Christ-spirit being the connecting medium between God and created intelligences in all the earth and on all the earths. When resurrected, they neither hunger nor thirst any more for evil things. The Christ-spirit feeds them and leads them to living waters of truth, and God wipes away all tears from their eyes.

Chapter 8, verse 1.—The seventh seal being broken, there was silence in the old heavens for half an hour,—the Quaker order. It came in with a testimony against kings and princes, priests, hireling preaching and singing, Christian war, church marriages, oaths, tithes, steeple-houses, popular dress and address.

Then “fire from the altar was cast into the earth,” causing voices, lightnings, and an earthquake, that compelled the English government to legalize Quaker marriage without Church and State priests, Quaker evidence without legal Bible oaths, and to let them free from war-service and war-taxes, as also from Church and State tithes, priestly dues.

Seven trumpets were then sounded, denoting successive changes, all preparing the way for the Shaker order and the American government.

When the seventh angel sounded, the mystery of God was finished. Hitherto the Revelation—the vision of all—was as a book sealed, which the unlearned could not read, as it was written in foreign tongues; and the learned linguists could not read because it was sealed.

The anti-Christian nations were angry because God's wrath had come, and the time of the dead, in the spirit world, that they should be judged as those in the body were being judged, by pure Christianity (Shaker testimony), and when God should destroy them who have destroyed the earth,—destroy them by scientific rationalism and Shakerism.

Chapter 21, verse 2.—The Holy City (New Jerusalem) in the spirit world, is settling down like a cloud upon the earth. It is becoming incarnated. The tabernacle of God is with men, and is protected by the American secular governments.

If God is to wipe away all tears from all eyes, so that there is no more death, like the Orthodox infidelic death, where they put their friend in the ground, and stones at head and feet to indicate total separation until that same body comes up again; if there is to be no more sorrow, no more sighing, no more pain, physical or mental, because for the former things are passed away,—then there must be abolition, not of slavery only, but of land monopoly, poverty, oppression, sickness, and diseases,—of army, navy, doctors, lawyers, priests and landlords, debtors and creditors, rich and poor. In the new earth, each one sitting under his and her own vine, with mutual national cooperation; and in the new heavens, all being brethren and sisters,—they enjoy all things in common in a heavenly community.

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE AT ITHACA.

The Liberal League met at Curtis Hall, Monday evening, Dec. 10, the President in the chair.

Mr. W. K. Sinton was chosen Secretary pro tem., in the necessary absence of the regular officer.

The Chair read extracts from congratulatory letters and notices, by those high in the councils of the National League, fully endorsing the catholic spirit of the Tompkins County organization. He invited all present to participate in the debate of the evening upon the platform of the National League, including the questions of: (1) State secularization and its bearing on church taxation, secular schools, the Sabbath question, etc.; (2) national protection for national citizens; (3) compulsory education.

Prof. Oliver being called upon to open the discussion, confined his remarks to the statement of a few of the questions involved in State secularization, with some considerations pro and con. The State should not meddle with the religious interests of its citizens, if only because these are matters so delicate that it cannot touch them with its clumsy fingers without marring. But a reason more vitally important, one not of policy but of principle, is that practically it cannot do so without violating what lies at the very foundation of republican government, the principle of equal rights. This principle demands that the State shall treat A and B precisely alike in the consideration shown to their religious views, though they may be diametrically opposed. Whatever else State secularization may mean, it must mean first of all this absolute impartiality; and we may take this as our starting point in the investigation of the subject. If the government is to handle religious matters at all, it must be in a way that shall put Catholic and Protestant, Christian and anti-Christian, Theist and Atheist exactly on a level. Let us suppose for a moment, what all history disproves, that it can do so. This removes the controlling objection to its interference, and allows us to consider questions of policy, of expediency, concerning it.

Take the matter of church exemption from taxation. What is a church? In the eye of the State it may be regarded as an institution for the education of its members or of the public,—for discussion of or instruction in religious doctrines; or as an association for certain personal benefits,—consolation, “peace of mind,” “joy in believing,” etc., which are held to accrue to those who come within its pale, or are admitted to its fellowship; or, finally, as a benevolent organization for the moral improvement of the community.

Under the first aspect, it is conceivable that the government may say: “We consider the education of the people in these matters so important, and so unlikely to be adequately provided for by private enterprise, that we will encourage every effort, by whomsoever made, to teach any doctrine, true or false, or to discuss any subject, pertaining to religion. We hold that the truth is most likely thus to be discovered and accepted; and to this end we will subsidize every such effort to the extent of exempting from taxation the hall where such teaching is provided or discussion held.” This might be poor statesmanship, but in theory it would be no violation of equal rights. The practical difficulty would of course lie in determining what classes of subjects were “religious.”

Under the second aspect, it is difficult to see how associations for the satisfaction of the religious sentiments should be subsidized, except on a principle which would give like aid to all clubs for the gratification of feelings or tastes assumed to be innocent or beneficial—art societies, theatres, rifle clubs,—such an endless list that the most paternal government would shrink from carrying out the principle consistently, and one which like our own believes in leaving much to individual effort could not justly make a beginning.

The third aspect is undoubtedly that under which the churches present their strongest claims for subsidy. And they would seem to have good grounds if it could be proved that they were really doing the moral work they profess, and doing it freely for the benefit of all; and if the subsidizing could be made as impartial as we have above supposed, treating alike Trinity Church, Paine Hall, and the joss-house. In point of fact the mission chapel, devoted to inculcating those principles of goodness upon which all thinking and conscientious people are substantially agreed, can certainly ask our aid with far more grace than the consecrated club-house which closes its doors to the poor, to charm the senses with all that art can furnish, and lull the soul with the highest-priced eloquence. If any churches are to be aided by the States on public grounds, it should be only those that do public work. And in that case all associations for the benefit of the poor, the friendless, the criminal, should be similarly aided.

In illustration of the kind of test which the State actually does apply, was named the case of a free chapel in Massachusetts, whose minister, a man of deep religious faith and an earnest worker for practical righteousness, did not believe in being ordained. This chapel could not be exempted from taxation, for the law, which must draw the line somewhere, drew it around churches having regularly ordained ministers. Practically, then, the only way to escape injustice is to draw no line at all, but to tax all, and leave the whole matter to private benevolence.

It is necessary to add, in a word, that church property might perhaps justly come under general laws, exempting property to a limited amount from taxation, or exempting non-remunerative enterprises.

On the question of keeping the public schools wholly secular, while the principle of equal rights comes in just as strongly as in the matter of church taxation, there is another principle which, even if the first could be satisfied by division of the school funds, as some churches claim, should forever operate as a bar against allowing the children to be taught religion by the State. This is the principle of intellectual honesty or fairness. Whatever may be thought of the wisdom of fostering churches as educators of the mature, we certainly have no right to prejudice the minds of our children, at an age when they are wholly unable to decide intelligently, upon questions concerning which the wisest and best men never have been and never can be in accord. We have no right to anticipate the time when the experience of life shall bring these questions home to their riper judgment. By so doing we should only be making fanatics and not wise citizens. Let the child learn to approach the investigation of truth in that spirit of modesty and true reverence which recognizes that the facts of the universe must be greater than his capacity to grasp. Let him be taught those things upon which we are all agreed, and discipline his powers by scientific methods, before taking up the problems that we are none of us able fully to solve. He will find enough of the positively known to occupy all his years of tutelage. If parents and private teachers fail to appreciate this consideration, the State, while it may not interfere with them, can at least preserve its public schools from adding to the evil.

Dr. Titus L. Brown, of Binghamton, had come from home to attend the meeting, and hoped to help it along. He wanted to emphasize the difference between the religionists whom the State was to-day unjustly favoring, and the unbelievers among whom he was glad to count himself. The one class depended on faith, the other upon knowledge. He was happy to be on the side of science rather than of theology, and the State if it understood itself should be on the same side. He was proceeding to illustrate his ideas of religion as opposed to knowledge, when

The Chair interrupted with a request that the gentleman would confine himself to the subject of discussion. He explained that the Tompkins County League embraced Orthodox and heretic, alike striving simply to secure "equal rights" in respect to religion; and not only was the discussion of their individual religious views foreign to the purpose of the League, but it was mutually understood that such discussion should be out of order.

Dr. Brown, with the utmost good nature, said he couldn't help expressing his own ideas in his own way, and he didn't think an association deserved the name "liberal" which would not allow everybody to do the same. So, in apparent unconsciousness that he was trespassing upon "equal rights," he went on with his illustrations, furnishing himself the happiest example of the need of a League to make plain what equal rights require.

Prof. Shackford found much the same difficulty in knowing what to say upon the question that he would have if a Chinese were to ask him to describe the manners and customs of Americans. Their peculiarities would impress the foreigner, but were like the common air to the native. He had himself breathed the air of liberalism so long that it had come to seem a necessary part of life. To be called upon to prove its necessity was the matter of surprise. If some one would only say why Church and State should not be kept totally separate, there would be something to talk about. He disliked the phrase "secularization of the State," however, for it seemed liable to convey a false impression of the movement, leading some, like the last speaker, to think we meant to set the State in opposition to religion. It was such misapprehension on the part of professed friends of liberalism that placed the greatest obstacles in its path and forced us to bear the wholly undeserved odium in the community, of being a set of atheists seeking to destroy religion.

Prof. Oliver, at the risk of seeming inhospitable to the guest, could not but add that he had seemed wholly to misunderstand the purpose and spirit of the League. Not an individual had entered it with the view of influencing another's religious opinions.

Dr. Brown was happy to be informed, and was going to join the League and abide by its rules. He then gave his views upon vegetarianism.

Prof. Johnson was called upon, and in a very able speech, of which our diminishing space prevents our giving the briefest abstract, maintained that the government in its constitution and laws was already secular, and we had only to enforce the rights we already enjoyed.

Mr. Morrison followed in comment upon some recent pulpit utterances concerning liberalism.

It was voted that the next debate be upon so much of the Rochester Platform as concerns education.

The committee on public work were instructed to circulate any documents (whether in accordance or not with the principles of the League) which in their judgment would best direct attention to the reforms proposed by it; and to attach to these documents the following notice:—

"The Liberal League of Tompkins County, N. Y., in circulating this document, expresses no opinion as to any ideas therein contained. It only desires to bring the general subject to the reader's attention. The purpose of the League is to secure equal rights with respect to religion, and the complete secularization of the government [and to consider other political and social questions.] It neither favors, opposes, nor discusses any religious views. For further information address the President, J. Winslow, 11 East State Street, Ithaca."

The portion in brackets is contingent upon the adoption at the next meeting, of an amendment to the constitution of the League enlarging its scope.

Mr. Morris and Prof. Dudley tendered resignation of their offices for personal reasons, and Prof. Willard Fiske was elected Vice-President, and Mr. A. L. K. Volkman, Councillor. Both Morris and Dudley were transferred to the work committee.—Ithaca (N. Y.) Daily Journal, Dec. 13.

THE MILWAUKEE LIBERAL LEAGUE.

[A friend encloses the following encouraging extracts from the Milwaukee papers, which we are very glad to publish, with congratulations to the League and best wishes for its continued success.—ED.]

Liberal League.

BEGINNING OF THE REGULAR MEETINGS OF THE REVIVED ORGANIZATION.

Ratifying the Platform of the National League and the Philadelphia Resolutions—The Point in Regard to Acknowledging God in the Constitution—The Resolutions Adopted—A Thorough Organization to be Effected, and Lectures to be Delivered.

There was a meeting at Boynton's Hall, last evening, of about one hundred gentlemen who are interested in the work of the Liberal League. R. C. Spencer, the President of the Association in this city, occupied the chair, and Robert Lindblom kept the records.

After stating that it is now proposed to hold meetings regularly, Mr. Spencer proceeded to read the address of the National Liberal League, presented at the Philadelphia convention last year, and since published for general distribution. The principal object of the League is to bring about an amendment of the Constitution which shall ensure a greater religious freedom, or the privileges of religious thought and action as intended in the Constitution.

The Liberal League which are springing up throughout the country are in accordance with the following Platform, adopted by the Liberal Congress which assembled at Rochester in October last:—

"1. Total separation of Church and State, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all measures necessary to the same general end.

"2. National protection for national citizens, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

"3. Universal education the basis of universal suffrage in this secular republic: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education."

To the petition of various combined religious denominations, the National Liberal League has presented a counter-petition which is indorsed by all of the branch Leagues, as follows:—

"TO THE HONORABLE THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS ASSEMBLED:—

"We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States, respectfully and earnestly ask your honorable bodies to preserve inviolate the great guarantees of religious liberty now contained in the Constitution of the United States, and to dismiss all petitions asking you to adopt measures for amending said Constitution by incorporating in it a recognition of 'God as the source of all authority and power in civil government,' and of 'the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler among the Nations, and his revealed will as of supreme authority.' We protest against such proposed amendments as an attempt to revolutionize the government of the United States, and to overthrow the great principles of complete religious liberty and the complete separation of Church and State on which it was established by its original founders."

In the course of his remarks Mr. Spencer stated that he had been gratified to hear Rev. J. H. Griffith, of the First Baptist Church, express himself as opposed to the amendment of the Constitution as petitioned for by a number of the church denominations. He further stated it to be his belief that if a greater number of ministers and church people understood the principles of the Liberal League there would be less antagonism toward the organization. He further amused the meeting with an account of the manner in which the Baptists of Bell County, Texas, had purged the community of the impurity of infidelity. They had taken the only atheist in the place to a piece of woods and flogged him, afterwards ordering him out of the county upon pain of death. He submitted that this is the style of argument too often adopted, or desired if not adopted, by Orthodoxy in general. He gave the information that there are a large number of Liberalists in Wisconsin, and many organizations of different names which sympathize with their principles.

Rev. Dr. Strickland made a strong speech in favor of activity among the members. The Treasurer, Wm. P. Merrill, gave an account of his stewardship.

Mr. Spencer announced that Rev. G. E. Gordon had written a very able paper upon the subject of "Church Taxation," which the League should hear. Mr. Gordon could be induced to deliver it. Mr. Spencer also stated that he believed that Prof. Whitford, the State Superintendent, might be secured to deliver a lecture upon the general subject of Church, State, and Schools, as related to each other.

The sum of $15.50 was raised for hall rent and the cost of a charter. After the adoption of the following resolutions, the League adjourned to meet in the parlors of the Academy of Music on Saturday evening of next week, at which meeting a Constitution is to be adopted:—

"Resolved, That we heartily indorse the principles and sentiments expressed in the patriotic address to the people of the United States, and embodied in the chief resolutions adopted at Philadelphia on the Fourth of July, 1876.

"Resolved, That we hereby ratify the National Liberal League Platform for the Presidential election of 1880, adopted at Rochester, New York, October 26, 1877, and pledge to it our earnest support.

"Resolved, That we hereby declare ourselves auxiliary to the National Liberal League, and that the officers of this League be, and are hereby instructed to obtain a charter for the same, under the name of Milwaukee Liberal League.

"Resolved, That 'equality of rights is the first of rights,' and that the non-recognition of women to representation in the government which usurps authority over her is a direct contradiction of the spirit of our system of government, and is a national crime.

"Resolved, That we utter our earnest protest against this robbery of rights, and that in addition to the planks of the Rochester platform, we declare for equal political, social, and religious rights of all American citizens, irrespective of sex."—Milwaukee Sentinel, Dec. 6.

The Liberal League.

An adjourned meeting of the members of the Liberal League was held at the parlors of the Academy of Music last evening.

At the opening of the meeting the president, R. C. Spencer, announced that the committee appointed at the last meeting to prepare a constitution and by-laws, had notified him of its inability to be present, and furthermore that it had not completed the work assigned it. The president also stated that he had received the charter from the National Liberal League. The Secretary, pro tem., was instructed to read the articles embodied in the same. The charter is issued to Robert C. Spencer, president, and William A. Boyd, secretary, on behalf of the members of the Liberal League of Milwaukee, who are authorized to constitute themselves with a local auxiliary Liberal League, under the name of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

After the reading of the charter, it was moved that the members proceed to adopt a constitution and by-laws, as the committee had been given sufficient time to make a report, but had failed; and as the meeting had been called for this purpose, it became necessary to complete its object. Whereupon the following constitution was adopted:—

"ARTICLE I.—The name of this association shall be 'The Liberal League of Milwaukee,' and we hereby declare ourselves to be a 'local auxiliary Liberal League' in full sympathy, fellowship, and affiliation with the National Liberal League.

"ARTICLE II.—The objects of this association shall be, to cooperate with the National Liberal League in furtherance of the public objects, both general and specific, enumerated in its constitution.

"ARTICLE III.—Any person who shall sign this constitution, and pay fifty cents annually in the treasury, shall be a member of this League.

"ARTICLE IV.—The annual meeting for the election of officers of this League, and of the delegates to the annual Congress of the National Liberal League to which this League is entitled by its charter, shall be held on the first Saturday in May; and the directors shall give one month's notice of the same. There shall also be regular monthly meetings of this League for consultation and business; and the directors shall give one week's notice of the same.

"ARTICLE V.—The officers of this League shall be a president, secretary, treasurer, and four councillors. All these shall constitute the board of directors, which shall have general management of the affairs of the League, subject only to instruction by the League itself. They shall appoint from among the other members of the League committees on public work, on public discussion, and on finance, and each councillor shall be chairman of one of these four committees.

"The committee on public work shall mature measures for cooperating efficiently in the common cause with the National Liberal League, especially in circulating its documents, petitions, appeals, etc., and carrying out locally the various objects of the Liberal League movement.

"The committee on public discussion shall mature means for sustaining public debates, lectures, etc.; and they shall be charged with the general conduct of the same.

"The committee on finance shall mature measures for raising funds necessary for these various objects. All appropriations from the treasury shall be by vote of the board of directors; and all orders on the treasury shall be signed by the president and secretary.

"ARTICLE VI.—The duties of the president, secretary, and treasurer shall be those usually pertaining to these offices. It shall be the special duty of the secretary to furnish the secretary of the National Liberal League with a complete list of all the members, with their post-office address in full, and a list of the officers and various committees; and also to furnish him promptly with information of all important action of this League.

"ARTICLE VII.—Amendments to this constitution may be made at any annual or monthly meeting of the League by a three-fourths vote of all the qualified members present. But no amendment shall be made, unless the proposed amendment shall have been announced as part of the required notice of the meeting which is to act upon it."

The League next proceeded to the election of four councillors, as follows: Dr. E. B. Wolcott, Madame Anake, Rev. Dr. Strickland, Dr. E. M. Rosencranz.

The subject of taxation of church property was next taken up and thoroughly discussed, after which the meeting adjourned to meet at a place hereafter to be named.—Milwaukee Sunday News, Dec. 16.

DANIEL C. WALDO, THE SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST.

[The following correspondence from the Jewish Record, introducing a letter from Hon. H. L. Richmond on the Seventh-Day question, will be of interest to our readers. It consists of a letter from State Senator Jones, of Philadelphia, to the Record, enclosing for publication Mr. Richmond's letter to him.—ED.]

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 8, 1877.

Mr. Editor,—Enclosed you will find a letter addressed to me by Hon. Hiram L. Richmond, of Meadville, Pa. Mr. Richmond was the attorney who so successfully carried on the case of Mr. Waldo, who was fined $4 last June for working on Sunday. In previous copies of your paper you have published the proceedings before the Justice. Mr. Richmond says that when the case was argued before the Judge, the errors committed before the Justice were so palpable that the Court did not consider it necessary to give an opinion, but at once reversed the proceedings of the Justice.

Mr. Richmond's letter is so forcible that I wish it to be read by your people who have sympathized with their Christian brother in his persecution.

God grant that the day may soon come when all who call themselves Christians shall learn the great truths so forcibly enunciated by Mr. Richmond.

Yours truly, HORATIO GATES JONES.

MEADVILLE, Pa., Oct. 25, 1877.

HON. HORATIO GATES JONES, PHILADELPHIA:
My dear Sir,—The decision of our Court, in Waldo vs. The Commonwealth, did not involve the consideration of the great Constitutional question, the rights of the citizen. The proceedings of the lower Court were reversed on purely technical grounds. I am, however, in entire sympathy with you in the opinion that the enforcement of the provisions of the Act of 1794, commonly called "the Sunday law," against those who conscientiously believe in the sanctity of the seventh day, and observe it as their Sabbath, is an egregious, a fundamental wrong. I don't propose to enter upon a regular argument of the question. My time will not permit, nor does the occasion seem to require it. I would only submit a few thoughts for your consideration.

I have examined the decisions of our State Courts with considerable care, and yet they have failed to convince me that they are right in so construing the Act of 1794 as to embrace within its penal consequences the seventh-day people.

Specht vs. The Commonwealth, 8 Barr, 312, may, I suppose, be considered the leading case. The opinion of the Court, pronounced by Justice Bell, is elaborate, and gives evidence of much thought and care in its preparation; and yet, I will venture the assertion that he who carefully examines it will find it fallacious throughout.

What matters it that we do not, as reasons the Judge, compel any man to subscribe to any specific faith, or adopt any specific form of worship, if we throw legal obstacles in the way of his worshipping his Maker according to his own honest conviction of religious duty? Don't compel him as to modes and times and forms of worship, and yet, forsooth, we command him, with all the authority of legislative enactment, and under severe pains and penalties, to keep a day as his Sabbath, holy to the Lord, which he believes has nothing holy about it,—is like the remainder of the six days, entirely secular and worldly in its character. This can be esteemed nothing else than the veriest oppression of that class of people, be they Jew or Gentile, known as Sabbatarians, and of whom there are many in this State, and deservedly estimable men.

The decisions of our Courts seem to rest upon the assumption that the statute of 1794 is but a "civil regulation" made for the government of man as a member of society, that there is no religion in it. Like infidel France, who, having abjured all religion, and abolished the Christian Sabbath—and, having set up reason, symbolized by a nude prostitute, as the divinity of her worship, appointed and set apart every tenth day as a national rest,—so, primarily, it is argued, the object of our legislature was to designate and set apart a day certain, as a day of cessation from worldly employment, for the ease of mankind; and that they fixed upon the first day of the week, not because of any supposed religious character it had, but simply for the convenience of those who observed it as the Christian Sabbath. I think that a moment's examination of the language of the statute, and of the course of legislation on the subject, will convince every candid mind that this is an entire misconception of the question; and that it was because of the religious character of the day, that through all the ages of Christianity, and among all Christian peoples, such legislation and recognition had been secured, as to save it from profanation.

The act of 1794 designates it "the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday." Why thus designate it, if they did not intend to recognize its sacred and religious character, and for that reason, enforce its observance as such? And so, in all previous legislation in this and the mother country as well, it will be found that its observance is demanded and enforced for the reason that it is enjoined by a higher than human authority, and never as a civil institution. Even France so recognized the day until, in her mad frenzy, she legislated God and religion out of the Republic, and rioted and raged in seas of blood.

The very first act of the very first legislative body of Pennsylvania, sitting in Chester, in 1682, was an act recognizing the Christian Sabbath, and enjoining its strict observance. And then the popular interpretation of the statute, from the day of its promulgation down to the present hour, is in entire harmony with these views. Such has been the popular sentiment in all countries where like legislation has been had. And has this no force or meaning? In The Commonwealth vs. Nesbit, 10 Casey, 393, Judge Lowrie says, in speaking on an analogous subject: "The uniform, practical interpretation of a law for near two centuries, is worth more than hours of refined criticism and analysis of its phraseology." From all this, and much more that might have been said, I cannot think otherwise than that our courts have greatly erred in the construction they have given the statute.

If, then, "the Lord's day" is not simply a civil institution, established by legislative enactment for civil purposes, only, but is a day of sacred rest, ordained and commanded to be observed by the Creator of all things, what follows? Clearly and beyond question, that the enforcement of the provisions of the Act of 1794 against those who do not believe in the sacred character of the first day, or Sunday, but who do believe that the seventh day, or Saturday, is the true and only Sabbath of the Lord, is to "control or interfere with the rights of conscience," and is therefore in direct conflict with Article First of the Amendments to the Federal Constitution, and Section Third of the First Article of our State Constitution.

The seventh-day man reads from the Decalogue, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt not do any work," etc. To him this passage means just what it says. While he labors diligently all the six days, the seventh he believes, with all the strength of a religious conviction, should be consecrated to sacred rest and religious worship.

And any and all legislation interfering in the slightest degree with his religious convictions, whether so intended or not, is, to my mind, forbidden by the organic law of the land. The question, "Which day is the proper Sabbath?" has nothing to do with the argument. We, who are the first-day men, should concede to seventh-day men the same rights we claim for ourselves; viz., freedom of religious worship, and non-interference with our religious scruples and convictions. Yours truly, HIRAM L. RICHMOND.

[In connection with the above, the following brief article by Rev. H. L. Wayland, D.D., in the New York Independent of Aug. 16, will be of interest.—ED.]

Religious Liberty Violated.

About five years ago I wrote an article for the Independent on "The Sabbath Laws," in which I expressed the opinion that we have no right to compel any one to regard Sunday or any other day of religious observance. No one must interfere with his neighbors in the exercises of their religious liberty; but we may not prevent a man from laboring on Sunday, unless his labor be of such a kind as to destroy the Sabbath of others.

Very many who would admit all this in regard to those who religiously observe the seventh day of the week would stop there. To me it appears plain that it applies universally,—to the friar, who regards every day as a Sabbath, and to the atheist, who sets at naught all days. We have no right to demand that a man should observe our Sabbath or any other Sabbath. We have simply the right to say that the great body of the community shall not be prevented from observing their Sabbath. Hence the right to prohibit bands of music, public processions, railroad trains, steam whistles, military displays, bolt factories, and all sources of noise and confusion in the vicinity of a place of worship on the Sabbath. Beyond this we have no right, and it is a violation of religious liberty to require my neighbor to forego his labor on my day of worship.

I am sure of the sympathy of the Independent in speaking of a recent flagrant violation of these principles. In the town of Cassawago, Crawford Co., Penn., on the 16th of June, Mr. Daniel Waldo and his hired man, Albert Wood, were tried before Justice Blystom, Venango borough, on a charge of violating the Sabbath laws, by running a planing-mill and by tilling a field of potatoes with a cultivator. It was shown that there was no place of worship within several miles; that Mr. Waldo and Mr. Wood are Seventh-Day Baptists, regularly observing the seventh day by abstinence from labor; but, for all that, they were fined $4 each.

I most earnestly hope that this instance of actual oppression may lead to a re-examination of all our Sabbath legislation, and that we may put our Sabbath laws on the true basis,—the real Roger Williams ground.—New York Independent.

THE MENTAL PACE.

THE DIFFERENT SPEED OF IDEAS IN DIFFERENT PERSONS.

It is a familiar idea that there are quick-witted people and slow-witted people; but it is rather a startling addition to the notion that the pace of mind may be measured by inches and a clock; and that if we could establish a mental Epson or Goodwood, we should find a certain number, and no more, of men and women who could pretend to "enter" for the cup. Mr. Francis Galton, F.R.S., in his address as president of the Anthropological Department of the British Association, this year, treated of this matter with his usual originality, as a branch of the study "of those groups of men who are sufficiently similar in their mental characters to admit of classification." What a singular fact in illustration is the following, to which he calls attention:—

There exists—well recognized by astronomers—a phenomenon called "personal equation." In making the common observation of the exact moment when a star travels across the fine vertical wire intersecting the field of view of a telescope, some observers always anticipate the event, and others allow it to pass before they succeed in noting it. This, Mr. Galton says, is "by no means the effect of inexperience or maladroitness; but it is a persistent characteristic of each individual, however practised in the art of making observations he may be." The difference between the time of a man's noticing the event and that of its actual occurrence is called "personal equation"; and it is carefully ascertained for every assistant in every laboratory, and is published along with his observations. It is not too much to say that the magnitude of a man's personal equation thus indicates a very fundamental peculiarity of his constitution.

In a similar way, a measurement may be made of the length of time taken to receive an idea and act upon it, by exhibiting a signal, and calling on the observer to press a stop as quickly as he can on seeing it. A little time is always lost in this process, and a still more appreciable interval, if there be any alternative, such as a black or white signal to be observed. A series of such experiments, made on a considerable number of persons, of both sexes and of different ages, statures, classes, and nationalities, would, we think, afford interesting and not wholly useless results. In the first place, account should be taken of the obvious advantage possessed by short people, in the lesser distance which their sensations and volitions have to travel along their nerves to and from their brains,—the velocity of such travelling not exceeding the rate of an express-train.

Mr. Galton says that this fact accounts for the superior quickness of small animals in evading blows. Surely, he might add that it offers an explanation of the proverbial dulness and imperturbability of giants, and of the special animation and sharpness generally observable in little men and little women. Between five feet and seven feet and a half there may well be the proportion of two to three in the rate of transmission of perceptions from the foot to the brain; and if this needs to be doubled by a return message down the motor nerves from the brain to the foot (to deliver a kick), the result would be that just double the time is needed by the big man as by the little.

The same reason of course holds good (if it be good at all) with respect to the superior vivacity of ponies over horses, terriers over Newfoundland dogs, and generally of all small breeds of animals not too much dwarfed for vigor or full development. Children naturally lose the benefit of their small stature, from want of full command and correlation of their faculties. It is the opinion of Professor Flower—expressed in his splendid Hunterian Lectures on the Osteology of the Extinct Mammalia,—that the large animals of the earlier epochs were all slow of motion, and stupid, comparatively, to modern beasts. A mastodon and one of the Prince of Wales' Nepaulese pony elephants may well have had a very different "mental pace."

But we have lost this clew of comparative size, whatever it may be worth, when we seek an explanation of the difference, still better marked than those above noted, which exists between men of various nations and of the various classes in those nations. Sandy from Scotland, John Bull from England, Taffy from Wales, and Pat from Ireland, travel mentally at paces comparable to a walk, a trot, a canter, and a gallop. The first, even if he be a very learned and able Scot indeed, when he sits down at a London dinner-party, finds himself stranded two or three times by the tide of conversation between soup and the dessert; while the last, even if he be a rather ignorant Irishman, will keep pace, tant bien que mal, and scent a joke in the air, even if it consist in allusion to something of which he never heard in his life.—Exchange.

CHURCH LAW AND COMMON LAW.

A litigation of six years' standing at Williamsport, Pa., embracing in some of its aspects the question of the relation of Roman Catholic bishops to Roman Catholic priests, and, in still broader aspects, the relation of Church to State in this country, reached yesterday a preliminary decision, in which are enunciated some principles that will be apt to excite lively controversy. Bishop O'Hara removed Father Stack for a supposed offence. We can readily perceive how, in a case like this, the question of the interpretation of the Church law might be taken to a civil court; and, if the court stopped short with such an interpretation, comment might end. But the court, in the person of Judge Gamble acting as Chancellor in a Court of Common Pleas of Pennsylvania, says explicitly that the vesting of the power of removal in a bishop is contrary to public policy and an impairment of a right of citizenship.

We have no hesitation in asserting our adherence to the notion that in a country like ours the separation of Church and State should be sedulously preserved for the welfare of both,—for the welfare of churches because it makes them independent, emulative, and hard-working; for the welfare of the State because it frees it from entangling and vexatious complications and from the introduction of religious questions into the field of politics, where they should be the last to enter. Technically and practically, ecclesiasticism is the foe of republics. The decision of Judge Gamble, however, aimed as it at first seems to be against ecclesiastical interference with the State, impresses us as tending in the opposite direction. If the Roman Catholic Church, or any other church, lays down the canon that a bishop may be the supervisor of a priest, may remove him for inefficiency or any other cause, and shall be the judge of the cause, and if a priest accepts his office under these conditions, we cannot see what is to be gained by the interference of the courts. The priest holds the office under church government, not under civil government. A civil court could of course pass on a question of damages between bishop and priest,—may pass, indeed, upon any question which really involves the customary rights of a citizen. But for a court to say that no church shall vest in a superior dignitary the power of removing an inferior is a stretch of law to a jurisdiction of purely church matters which neither justice nor expediency justify, and which instead of keeping the Church and State apart, tends to bring them into a kind of discordant union.—N. Y. Post, Nov. 14.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 22.

L. P. Babb, 50 cents; D. S. Lowe, $3.35; C. B. Hoffman, $12.10; J. F. Mendum, $1; Mrs. A. M. Wright, $3.20; Hugh White, $1.65; J. O. Mitchell, 50 cents; Mrs. N. H. Webster, $3.25; A. Eia, 80 cents; G. H. Foster, $2.10; John Hobbs, $4; C. M. Cuyler, 60 cents; L. Dibble, 10 cents; Harvey Brown, $2; J. K. Pearson, $6.40; Robert Davis, $14.30; E. W. Gunn, $9; Thomas Marshall, $3.32; W. F. Abbot, 25 cents; J. H. Williams, $2; Jefferson Cary, $3; Cash, $1; M. H. Cabot, $1; James Damon, $3.20; W. L. Foster, $18.20; John Campbell, $3.20; John Humphrey, $1.25; E. W. Seigman, $3.25; F. A. Angell, $13; Mrs. Clara M. Rotch, $50; M. H. Farry, $1.75; J. J. Good, 80 cents; Mrs. F. Watson, $3.20; W. F. Wilson, 75 cents; Clark & Co., $23.35; Geo. A. Green, $3.20; Dr. A. H. Brockway, $3.20; Oscar Roos, $3.20; M. H. Doolittle, $15; W. H. Saxton, $6.40; D. E. Mayo, $15; D. A. Robertson, $11; S. L. Bailey, $5; W. E. Cunningham, 50 cents; C. S. Wilkins, 25 cents; J. A. Chandler, $1.60; Thomas Ranney, $4.40; E. Weinberger, $3.20; Walter C. Wright, $3.25; Clark & Co., $3.24; W. H. Little, $2; Mrs. J. E. D. Laundon, $4.20.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit. N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, DECEMBER 27, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTATIUM BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SCURE, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

A CARD.

The Committee on the better establishment of THE INDEX, appointed at a meeting of its subscribers and friends last May, wish to enlist all the assistance they can to lay its claims before every liberal man and woman in our country. They have prepared a circular setting forth the method, motives, and objects of their action, and wish the names of all who are willing to assist them in placing it where it will do good. Please address the Chairman of the Committee, "Elizur Wright, P. O. Box 109, Boston, Mass."

ANNOUNCEMENT: CLUB TERMS.

Until January 1, 1879, THE INDEX will be sent for a year to clubs of five or more NEW SUBSCRIBERS on receipt of $2.20 each, in advance, instead of $3.20, the regular cost of subscription. This is an excellent chance for all our friends to join in a vigorous effort to increase the circulation of the most earnestly radical journal in the United States, and thereby to advance the common cause. It is only just to show due public appreciation of the efforts of its friends, and we shall therefore (unless explicitly requested to the contrary) publish the names of all who send us clubs under the arrangement, with the number of new subscribers obtained by each. Shall there not be a little generous emulation to help forward the struggling cause of religious freedom?

F. E. ABBOT, Editor.

PREMIUMS FOR NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

The following premiums for NEW SUBSCRIBERS to THE INDEX are offered with the hope that its sincere co-laborers will vigorously aid in increasing its circulation among their personal friends. To receive these premiums, $3.20 must be remitted in advance with each name sent in. Please read the list carefully, and see if you cannot afford to earn one or more of the works here offered by a little labor in a good cause.

For One New Subscriber.

Either a complete set of Index Tracts; a bound copy of the Report of the "Centennial Congress of Liberals" at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876; any three Reports of the "Annual Meetings of the Free Religious Association" since 1871; Huxley's Origin of Species; John W. Chadwick's Book of Poems; or any obtainable book not costing over $1.

For Two New Subscribers.

Either a set of photographs of "leading Index writers"; a copy of Ingersoll's Lectures; a copy of Freedom and Fellowship in Religion—a collection of Essays and Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, W. J. Potter, John Weiss, T. W. Higginson, F. E. Abbot, and others; Darwin's Origin of Species; Draper's Conflict between Religion and Science; Huxley's Lay Sermons; a bound copy of THE INDEX for 1871 or 1872; Renan's Life of Jesus; or any obtainable book not costing over $2.

For Three New Subscribers.

Either Longfellow's or Bryant's complete Poetical Works (illustrated); Darwin's Descent of Man; Tyndall's Fragments of Science; Lewes' Physical Basis of Mind; Frothingham's Transcendentalism in New England; Shakespeare's Complete Works; Frothingham's Life of Theodore Parker; or any obtainable book not costing over $3.

For Five New Subscribers.

Either Pierce's Memoirs and Letters of Charles Sumner; Emerson's Prose Works; Buckle's History of Civilization; Spencer's Psychology; Humboldt's Cosmos; Fiske's Comic Philosophy; Johnson's Oriental Religions. Vol. I., on "India"; Vol. II., on "China"; or any other obtainable book not costing over $5.

For Ten New Subscribers.

Either Webster's or Worcester's Dictionary (unabridged); Longfellow's Complete Works (300 illustrations, full gilt); either Dickens' or Waverley Novels, complete in six volumes, and illustrated; Strauss' New Life of Jesus; or any other book or books not costing over $12.

NOTICE.

An adjourned meeting of the friends of the Liberal League movement will be held at the Woman's Club Rooms, No. 4 Park Street, next Friday evening, December 28, at 7½ o'clock, to listen to and act upon the report of the Committee appointed "to consider and mature a plan of efficient work."

R. P. HALLOWELL,
J. S. VERITY,
G. H. FOSTER, } Committee.

CENTRALIZATION.

An extremely intelligent young man, a recent graduate of Amherst College and for years a constant reader of THE INDEX, writes as follows:—

"THE INDEX continues to be my welcome visitor, all the more for the fact that I cannot accept the Liberal League platform. 'All the more,' I say; for I shall be glad of the opportunity to follow your arguments on that point, and, if finally convinced, shall not hesitate to ally myself with a party which, though it may be numerically in a minority, is really in a majority which will be eventually recognized, if the God of truth is on its side. The difficulty at present with me is mainly that there seems to be a great deal of aversion to centralization bred in my bones; and, though a great many notions thus introduced have been eliminated, that one appears to stick."

The point thus raised is one which we particularly desire to have discussed. So far from wishing to rid our correspondent of his "aversion to centralization," we confess that we share it; and if we believed that the Rochester platform favored political centralization in any sense which implies danger to the principle of local self-government, we should be the last to urge a word in its behalf. But when the true meaning of that platform is understood, we are confident that this apprehension will be wholly dissipated.

What is local self-government? Briefly, that, without any interference from without, every man should manage his own personal affairs in his own way and according to his own pleasure, so long as he forbears to encroach on his neighbors,—that every town should manage its own town affairs in the same manner and under the same restriction, every county its own county affairs, every State its own State affairs. But the independent exercise of this autonomy by personal and corporate individuals has one fundamental condition; namely, the maintenance of all these individualities intact, each in its own sphere of action with its rights unimpaired and its freedom uncurtailed in that sphere, yet each also preserving its just relation to all the rest in an all-comprehensive social organization. Every citizen would thus stand, as it were, in the centre of several concentric and enlarging circles of relationship to his kind; he would have duties and rights in each relation, not only as an individual, but also as a member of town, county, State, and national organizations. His "local self-government" will be at its highest possible point of realization, when, in each of these relations, his duties are discharged and his rights maintained.

On the other hand, what is centralization? It is such a disorganization of this well-balanced, harmonious, and natural system as shall result in the absorption of all substantial power by a central authority, to the destruction of the autonomy of the various individualities above mentioned—such as was produced, for instance, when the municipia of the Roman Empire lost their corporate independence and melted into the vast imperial despotism which prepared the way for the collapse of society under the blows of Northern barbarism. Such a centralization must inevitably be produced by decay of that stubborn sticking for rights out of which local self-government has always grown. That is, if individual rights, in the citizen, the town, the county, the State, shall not be vindicated as beyond all price, and defended with the utmost jealousy and at whatever cost, the spirit of liberty must have already died out, and the dreary process of centralization is already far advanced.

It will thus be evident that the preservation of individual rights is the only possible preventive of centralization, and that free society has no interest to be compared for an instant in importance with that of preserving these individual rights. No nation is free in which this is not the paramount concern. Woe to America, when her sons and daughters begin to sneer at "rights"! Just so long as the citizens are protected individually in their rights, the towns and counties and States cannot be stripped of theirs; but, if the former lose all love for their own liberties as equal units of society, the latter will become the empty shells of creatures long perished. The nation as such, therefore, if it would be itself free and non-centralized, must find its own supreme interest in the protection of its individual citizens in the fullest possible enjoyment of their equal rights and liberties.

Not because we love centralization, therefore, but precisely because we hate it, do we urge the Rochester platform and the Liberal League. Will not our thoughtful correspondent, and others who may sympathize with his supposed objection, look at the matter in this hitherto unsuspected light, and fill out for themselves an argument which we have here only sketched in the briefest possible manner?

CLANDESTINE PUBLICATIONS.

There are many wrongs among mankind with which law cannot meddle without making them worse. I do not say that the production of a certain kind of books and pictures, which a decent person puts into the fire at sight, is one of these wrongs; but I do say it is only a symptom of a social disease which has baffled law hitherto, and which while the disease lasts will continue to baffle it. There is, in my opinion, no remedy but in a better gospel,—a gospel of home-education, which shall fortify the child against this species of filth before the age of going to school, so that one of these manufacturing scoundrels would no more dare to send one of his circulars to a young scholar than to the mother. This is not saying that there should be no law to punish such outrages upon decency. Till such nuisances cease they must be punished, though perhaps shooting would be better than boarding at the public expense.

But all that law can do, and it is precious little, can be done by State and municipal laws, if it can be done at all. In this opinion I am exceedingly sorry to differ from my excellent friend the editor, with whose indignation against the authors and distributors of this clandestine literature and vile art I most fully sympathize. I think Congress has no occasion, and therefore no right, to legislate on the subject, except for the District of Columbia and the Territories. Moreover, I think its act touching the circulation of obscene publications through the mails is an outrageous violation of the Constitution, incapable of any modification which could make it either constitutional or safe. I wish to sign a petition for its total and immediate repeal, even at the risk of being classed with the vilest publicans and sinners, if anybody sees fit so to class me. Let men be punished for obscenity or treason, if they are guilty of either, but not for sending either through the mails. If it has come to that, that these two crimes, or any crimes, cannot be suppressed without invading the sacred privacy of the people's correspondence, we had better abolish the post-office.

If we are to admit as true the statements published in the Journal and quoted in the last INDEX—though they bear on their face signs of great exaggeration,—it is very plain that the class of books and prints used to corrupt schools can be suppressed without meddling with the mails. Any manufactory turning them out by the "ton" cannot be hidden from a vigilant police anywhere. Thousands of citizens of all sects and parties are interested in having the police do its duty, and have the votes to enforce their will. The problem is simply to find the origin of the filth, burn it in the mass, and put the producers where they will produce no more, making as little noise about it as possible. Then will there be none of it going through the mails. The indiscretion of making so much noise and publishing such frightful statements is too palpable. It is a gratuitous advertisement that the scoundrelly wares can be had somewhere, and sets the viciously-inclined, the misbegotten, and parentally-neglected to looking for them. If the Society for the Suppression of Vice were acting with good faith and the requisite degree of common-sense, they would go quietly to the proper authorities and insist on their doing their duty.

The distinction between the open and the clandestine book and print-trade is sufficiently marked. The former is kept clean, not by law but by public opinion. A reputable bookseller no more thinks of selling one of those vile books which are the only subjects of legal prohibition than he does of walking in the street with nothing but a hat on. And he would not do that even if the law did not forbid it.

The simple truth is, that the Society for the Suppression of Vice does not care a pin for the suppression of the clandestine and really vile book-trade; but, taking advantage of the great elasticity of the adjective "obscene," they first make a raid upon the clandestine trade as a cover to their attack upon the science of human physiology, in the interest of their peculiar religion. Pretending and loudly bragging to have done the work of the police authorities better than they ever did or could do it themselves, they now come to their real work, which is to suppress science, and cultivate ignorance and superstition among the people. The honest and self-sacrificing men and women who are laboring openly, earnestly, and intelligently to prevent social corruption and keep men and women out of hell-upon-earth by instructing them in the laws of life and health, are pounced upon as if they were pimps and harlots! Do our Orthodox friends think such strategy is going to succeed? Do they think ignorance is the best protection of innocence, and that those are safest from precipices who either know nothing about them or are instructed that they are delightful places to jump from? If they wish to save their cause from the greatest disgrace it has ever yet suffered, they will take care to turn the energies of Comstock and his crew out of their present channel. E. W.

THE CHURCH OF RATIONALISM; OR, THE NEW FAITH AND SPIRIT.

It is clear that the tendency of modern society is to leave the Church behind it. The evidence of this continually accumulates and becomes more apparent. It is visible inside as well as outside of it. It is seen inside in numerous indications of increasing weakness and signs of dissolution; even the outward imposing effect and show which it presents are largely to be accounted as the displays and expedients of a desperate consciousness of lessening power. The old-time devotion and faith are becoming extinct. A continual tide of disbelief besets the creeds, and ever and anon breaks through their barriers. Their characteristic doctrines become more and more softened, modified, and effaced. While these transitions are occurring inside the Church, sapping its very foundations, and destroying what has constituted the essentials of its existence, the loss of which must be the loss of its identity, the aspect without is no less remarkable and significant.

The number of those who have dropped all visible relation to the Church is steadily augmented in almost all communities. It is something unprecedented. It is not now, as it has been in other times, withdrawal simply from one division of the Church to enter another, but far more generally withdrawal from it altogether. There are some who are disposed to regard these things as evidence of its revivification rather than extinction. They think, because it is becoming more and more liberalized, is permitting its theology to recede into the background, and transferring its emphasis to more practical interests, that this affords unmistakable assurance of its perpetuity. But this is a conclusion that has no logical support. It is a vain expectation, unwarranted by the facts of the case. It is like the hectic flush and momentary brightening eye of one who is struck with death. The liberalizing tendency of the Church does not keep pace with the ever-growing number of its seceders and outsiders. It is not rapid enough nor radical enough to satisfy the growth of a sceptical intelligence. It serves to delay, not to change, the final result. There are influences at work in the life and thought of to-day more powerful to take people out of the Church than any which it can put forth to keep them in.

Furthermore, there is every reason to believe that, when it shall have parted with those special beliefs and intellectual conceptions, the acceptance of which have been the bonds of its fellowship, and devotes itself chiefly to moral and practical ends, instead of strengthening itself and acquiring additional security, the opposite will ensue; since it will be perceived that these may be pursued, even more favorably, outside of the Church than within, and are not necessarily dependent upon it. Indeed it is already very manifest that the bad people are not all outside of it and the good inside, but that quite as often the opposite is the case.

But while the tendency is for the Church and the world thus to run more and more together and their distinctions to become obliterated (those of the former to be lost in the latter), the question arises: Does not the Church stand for something that is permanent as well as transient, something deeper and more indestructible than its creeds, intellectual dictatorship, and assumptions? We believe that there are certain elements of humanity that have inhered in it, in some degree, in all ages. We believe that mankind has ever yearned and aspired toward greater light, knowledge, and perfection. Divested of all irrationalism and superstition, the Church stands for these objects; nor are there any nobler to which humanity can be devoted, or that it will less willingly surrender. They are imperishable, and will survive all changes of institutions and religions. What is needed to-day is a clearer perception of what these higher ends of life consist, of the most effectual methods of their attainment,—methods not of traditional inheritance, but which shall be the outgrowth of the science, enlightenment, and best thought of the time. In a word we believe the great need of the present is the establishment of a church outside of the Church,—the Church of Rationalism, of the new faith and spirit.

There are many encouraging indications at present of a movement setting in this direction among liberals. The distrust and opposition in respect to organization, which has been so prevalent among them, appears to be subsiding. Combination and co-operation are more earnestly advocated and meet with greater favor. The Rev. Mr. Chaney lately maintained, in the Unitarian Review, that it is impossible for such organizations on the basis of freedom to sustain a permanent existence, much more to keep alive any moral energy and enthusiasm. According to his view, organization, in order to be enduring and thus efficient, must have certain definite ideas or principles which all accept as a bond of union, and which take even the precedence of freedom. As an answer to this, one need but point to the Free Religious Association, which, in a quiet but very important and influential way, has been making a creditable record for itself for the last ten years, and still lives, and expects to, for some time to come. The Liberal League movement and Freethinkers' Associations which are springing up, with the free halls and free Sunday-lecture courses in various parts of the country, are also evidence of the possibilities and awakening of liberalism to practical effort and effectiveness.

But, though these are all excellent in themselves and valuable to the cause of liberalism, none of them is sufficiently comprehensive and inclusive in its functions to meet the full demand of the time. They may be the accessories or products of the new Church which we propose. They aim chiefly at general instead of special effects; to influence general currents of thought and distant, rather than the nearest, relations; to modify governments, change laws, mould society more or less; but the new Church, while it will embrace these, will concentrate its energies upon smaller spheres of activities, upon the life of communities, and the promotion of individual culture. It should constitute a bond of union and close fellowship for these ends, wherever there are a sufficient number of liberals to render such an organization practicable. It should recognize the fact that no reforms or enactments, in the interest of liberalism any more than anything else, are likely to stay or remain permanent any further than they are backed by clear and intelligent conviction; and that in order to establish a reliable and genuine sentiment in behalf of freedom,—in order to effect in society an actual appreciation of rationalism or devotion to it,—the work must begin at the beginning, with the systematic and elementary education of the people. In other words, the Church of the present must be supplanted with that which shall sustain a similar relation to the life of society and the individual. Instead of occasional gatherings, as is the case with many existing liberal organizations, it should have regular and frequent ones, and appropriate Sunday to this purpose, conforming in this respect to the plan of the Christian Church, and in every other in which it can to its advantage, at least not disdain to receive hints from it as to methods and administration, so far as they are available. It should recognize the claims of recreation and amusement, and provide for the moral and intellectual development of the young, through the medium of a Sunday-school infused with its own ideas and spirit. It should recognize, indeed, the demands of every age and class, in every possible way, and thus be the Church of humanity,—the promoter of all noble ends of reform, philanthropy, and culture, not hesitating to call into exercise all the originality and inventiveness it can command, with perfect indifference to the conventional and customary so long as its motives are exalted and worthy. Already the Church we have endeavored to indicate begins to be foreshadowed. It has been exemplified with a sufficient correspondence to such an organization, and measure of maturity in a few instances, certainly in one at least, in the country, to enable one to speak with much confidence of its practicability. Let us hope that these are but the precursors of what shall culminate at last in the Church of the future,—the Church of the Holy Trinity of humanity, reason, and truth. D. H. C.

[Will our valued contributor be so good as to examine carefully the "Form of Constitution for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues," recommended by the National League, and report in these columns the precise additions he would suggest to the plan there outlined, in order to constitute the Local League a true "Church of Rationalism"? Such an attempt on his part will, we suspect, show him that he has hitherto imperfectly comprehended the breadth and fulness of the Liberal League movement.—ED.]

Communications.

STRUCK BY THE "GREAT STRIKE."

MILWAUKEE, Dec. 18, 1877.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

"The great strike," as by common consent it is now known, has had the same effect on writers for the public journals, as the article in the International Review, by Mr. W. M. Grossvenor, had on "a red-hot striker." It has "stirred them up mightily."

All the journals, daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly, have teemed with articles prompted by it. No matter what the head-lines may have been, it is very plain that all the writers have been struck by "the great strike." And what does the whole of it amount to? Generally, the articles bear the impress of the practised writer, whose sentences slip glibly from the pen; but they seem to be dealing with a subject they very imperfectly understand, and consequently they talk all around it, not into it. What produced the strike, is to most of them a mystery; and when an attempt is made to find means to prevent strikes, the steadiest seems to stagger.

Mr. David A. Wells, in the North American Review, has got nearer the causes that produced the strike than almost any of the writers, although the strike did not prompt his articles. But when he undertakes to answer his question—"How shall the nation regain prosperity?"—it seems like trying to stave-off the day of judgment. To extend the system that has produced the present disease cannot be the way to cure it. The balance of the world will not sleep while we hunt up new customers for our wares; and that is the whole of the remedy proposed by Mr. Wells. It may all be summed up in three words: "find new markets."

It is pitiful to see skilled writers, editors of notes, professors of political economy, presidents of railroads, public lecturers, all sorts of what are called "educated men," become so utterly confounded when they write or speak upon this question. It is all too plain they have never before thought much about it. The machine has run pretty well so far, with us, by just oiling now and then; and now to have it stick is something they cannot understand. But it cannot be remedied by appointing a perpetual President, or by establishing a standing army. It's before that, and a long way deeper down. Even the whipping-post is not a sure cure. And the Hon. Eliza Wright may write "annihilating answers to the crude opinions of the mutual relations of human beings as must be held by sincere communists," until he tires of writing, and none of this, or the whole of it, will furnish proper shelter, good food, and sufficient clothing for all that are willing to work. Until that is done, strikes will continue, and ought to continue. When the American workman becomes craven enough to succumb to tyranny without striking, he ought to be struck off the face of the earth. And he will be.

With reference to what has appeared in THE INDEX on this question, there seems to me more of value in the few sentences by Mr. Morse than in the editorials of Mr. Wright and Mr. Kelsey, even when supplemented, with all that bears on this question, in the essay of Mr. Wright read at Rochester. It is not pleasant to be obliged to say this, because from such men as Mr. Wright we expect some light on this subject. He might leave the treatment of it from the "beer-and-tobacco" stand-point to such, for instance, as "R. G. Eccles," who revels in that branch of the subject. His brilliant article in the September number of the Popular Science Monthly has, no doubt, astonished the scientific readers of that journal; and then, the plain and simple style is so convincing to the workman, that it makes the article invaluable. Take an example from its commencement: "The personal equation, if not eliminated, distorts men's views of Nature's workings. . . . The bone and sinew of man is the stored energy of sunbeams, and this is the potential energy of physical life. . . . Any attempt at viewing the matter by ignoring this law of the conservation of energy . . . can only result in false opinions and lead to dangerous measures." Then he makes a note, thus: "When this was penned, the writer did not suspect it would be so quickly verified." It is a little uncertain what has been verified; but if workmen will only suck "sunbeams" and be content, strikes are at an end.

Mr. Kelsey quotes Mr. Wright so approvingly that I re-read the essay attentively. He says, "It is not easy to improve upon." Perhaps not! but let us try to get the sense out of it, for that is what we are after. Mr. Wright says: "In civilization, as the race advances in the creation of material wealth by the use of natural forces and division of labor, property tends inevitably to distribute itself more and more unequally." The point in this I take to be, "As the race advances in the creation of material wealth, property tends inevitably to distribute itself more and more unequally."

If it is inevitable it cannot be avoided, can it? So, if the race continues to increase in material wealth, the inevitable consequence must be, the rich will become richer, and the poor poorer. Pleasant prospect for the poor! Would it not be better, therefore, for the poor to do all they can to prevent the increase of material wealth? If Mr. Wright does not mean this, what does he mean? Plainness of speech is what is needed on this question.

All those gentlemen are very apt to get off their fling at the workmen for their "utopian crudities"; yet each of them seems to have a little utopia of his own; and this is Mr. Wright's, quoted with approval by Mr. Kelsey: "What can be done, and what only waits the more general diffusion of knowledge to be done, is, to secure the protection of individual property in its natural and necessary rights, and to instruct its owners in those social and patriotic duties which give to property a large part of its possible value."

I have tried hard to get the sense out of that sentence, and this is all I can get from it: "Protect the individuals who own the property (that is, those to whom wealth, as it is created, naturally tends), and instruct them in their social and patriotic duties." Just fancy the Elzsur Wrights instructing the Stewarts and Vanderbilts!

Mr. Wright says, "The acquisition of property is an attribute of human nature, one of its grand passions, to be governed, but not eradicated." Which would Mr. Wright govern, the acquisition of property, or the attribute of human nature? It cannot be the acquisition of property, for why try to govern a thing that tends inevitably to distribute itself; and if the race advances, the tendency is to distribute itself more and more unequally, and this is inevitable. The quotation continues: "If Nature had made mankind equal, like the working-bees, communism would doubtless be the right thing." How fortunate that somebody discovered that we superior animals have a higher degree of differentiation than working-bees. It's a peg on which to hang the idea that underlies the worn-out divine-right dogma, by which those into whose hands property had an inevitable tendency to distribute itself, used to defend its possession. Somehow, the tendency was always towards the powerful.

But I must stop. Only let me ask Mr. Kelsey to again take up "Mr. Wright's concise statement," and elucidate it, make it as plain as his definition of communism. Also please explain this sentence of his own in his editorial: "History only repeats itself, in a different way, and the analogical method and inductive philosophy alike forbid us to believe that future ages can do more than perfect the present system which the experience of past generations has proven to be the best for humanity at large." What system?

Mr. Kelsey is the first writer for THE INDEX that has defined what he means by communism; hereafter when he uses the word we shall know what he means. If Mr. Wright would do that, it would be well, instead of writing, "Communism as illustrated in the recent destructive strikes. . . . The communists, or rather leaders, of despotic unions." Those who call themselves communists say, that is not communism; nor are leaders of despotic unions necessarily communists; in short, communists generally hold the two to be incompatible.

Writers for THE INDEX should not copy the style of party newspapers. They call anything communism that is opposed to their political party. If the Liberal League nominates a candidate for the next presidential election, I'll bet a hat that Republican and Democratic newspapers will call us communists. Who bets?

As Mr. Morse says, "the labor question is up"; and if it is discussed by writers for THE INDEX, we, the readers, will be profited more by their keeping close to the question. The article in the Radical Review, by E. H. Heywood, is a notable example in this respect, as in many other respects. Every one should read it.

A. BATE.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XX.

I have said that Wakeman illustrates the literal-minded order of thought,—"the simple primrose" type; and I take him to represent the prevalent school of scientists and sciento-philosophers. Those who perceive and trace out analogies are of the figurative mental type. But he (Wakeman) is not incorrigible. In his Extension and Enlargement of the Positive Classification of the Sciences, he manifests the probably unconscious influence of his universological studies. He quite the bald descriptive affirmations of Comte, and takes to diagrams, scales, gamuts, and tabulations, with analogies cautiously and tentatively exhibited, as mere illustrations—which is wise, with any one who is not planted on a radical and exhaustive discovery of the law of scientific analogy. In this new tabulation (see this series, No. XIX.), he advances a step farther, and a most significant and important step, in the right direction. In this he makes the existence of the three (or four) kingdoms of Nature—the mineral, vegetable, animal, and human—to be the basis of classification; as of departmental classification, empirically approached; and for educational purposes; it certainly is. And this he can no longer adduce as mere illustration. The relation between physics in the major sense (abiology) and the mineral kingdom, for example, is something far too intimate and binding to be illustration merely; and if not illustration what is it? True, our author cannot literally bring the ocean and the atmosphere in among minerals, but they are most directly allied with the mineral kingdom; as its adjuncts; and so the whole group is representatively characterized by the mineral kingdom, or by the mere mineral, as a thing, or a term. In other words, the mineral; a mineral, any mineral; is a type and analogue of that whole realm of affairs. In like manner, sociology is typified and represented by man;

although the science covers customs and laws, and many other things which are not, literally, man.

This new basis of classification is, then, strictly and truly, analogy, a valid scientific connection of ideas; and not mere poetry or fanciful metaphor. At all events, just such connections of ideas—one thing actually repeating and representing another, throughout duplex, or manifold, spheres of relationship,—are all of what I mean by analogy. And Mr. Wakeman in adopting this basis has become a true universologist; a destination towards which he has been for some time steadily drifting, as a necessary consequence of the development of his own ideas on classification. That road has no other outcome. UniversoLOGY (meaning now my own elaboration of it) was the first, and for a time, the only extant effort to exhibit classification itself, as the subject matter of a distinct science,—a science of its own. Hence, who-soever attempts that achievement must traverse the same field, either in my way, or in a way of his own.

The key to the whole problem is Scientific Analogy; and whosoever abides by it is a universologist. When Mr. Wakeman shall have taken a few more steps in that direction, he will perhaps not consign universology, as he has done, to a limbo in the outskirts of his system.

Universology pronounces the fact, however, that the classifiers constitute the preëminent class among scientists. In any seeming criticism I am making upon Wakeman, I should still assign to him a rank in the scientific world, upon the ground of his as yet hardly recognized scientific achievements, far above any which he would probably think of claiming for himself. But to attain the highest rank, classifiers must be true classifiers; their system all-embracing; and itself founded on inextinguishable scientific bases, such as scientific analogy alone furnishes,—not mere empiricisms within departmentalism.

On the other hand, the figurative-minded thinkers, whom an easy perception of superficial resemblances, without radical analysis, beguiles into the statement of vague "correspondences," hermetic philosophers, Swedenborgians and Spiritists, still more grievously need the sobering and discipline of a thorough course in analytical and scientific analogy. Analogy, scientifically pursued, is the vital centre of the entire corpus of human knowledges, as will be illustrated in one of the following tables.

There is a third small and rare class of minds, as already noticed, which may be known as integrative thinkers, who combine literal-mindedness and figurative-mindedness in a just harmony with each other. The study of scientific analogy tends to bring minds naturally inclining in excess to either of the extremes upon this true footing of adjustment, reconciliation, and balanced vibration,—as centurologists or integralists. By minds so organized and so trained, it is seen to be not only not objectionable, but legitimate, and eminently desirable "to materialize the living world" on the one hand, and to "biologize the inanimate world" on the other hand, by the discovery of the identity of law in all spheres. The "positivists" predicate "the invariability of law." The universologists and integralists predicate, in addition to this, THE UNITY OF LAW. This unity of law is only discoverable by the process of radical and fundamental analysis, a propædætic wholly foreign to the genius of Comte's form of "positivism." The terrible and fatal criticism on it is that it is, negatively, in the nature of arrested development, in respect to that healthy and natural drift towards analysis, or individualization which is going on in the world; and in the nature of premature synthesis, on its affirmative side. A synthesis prior to an absolute analysis of society or of anything else, is necessarily botch-work. I am forced to the emphatic pronouncement of this criticism, because it is this pseudo-social-reconstructionism which stands most immediately in the way, as a hindrance, of the understanding, appreciation, and acceptance of the larger, more thorough, and more artistic work of social demolition and reconstruction involving universology, integralism, and pantarchism. It is like any other shoddy article which preëmptively occupies the market,—all the worse the better it seems to be. There is a resemblance between Comte's reconstruction theories and those of the Pantarchy, like that of a school-boy's snow man to a marble statue. Nevertheless, there is the fundamental unity in the two, that they are both figurative representations of a man; and the compensation for hindrances, that the grosser and more childlike attempt is legitimately a prior development; and, that while it hinders it does also tend to prepare the way for, the adult appreciation of a more finished specimen of statuary. Taken as ébauche it is therefore admirable.

Meantime, reverting to classification, nothing better could be asked for, than Wakeman's table in the Library Table, as a point of departure, from which to make apprehended the deeper and more comprehensive basis of classification which universology furnishes. Observe, in the first place, that this table (including the four kingdoms, mineral, vegetal, animal, and hominal) is an abridgment from his larger exhibit, and includes only the concrete portion of it (concretology.) Along with Spencer he has also an abstractology, including logic and mathematics. This basis of classification which first discriminates the concrete and the abstract is Spencerian; and while Wakeman admits it, he makes little of it, and keeps to the Comtean distribution as more practically valuable. He quotes me (from the Modern Thinker), inaccurately, as also deprecating Spencer's fundamental discrimination. On the contrary, from the point of view of philosophic thoroughness, I regard it as far deeper (and therefore, in the profound sense, more practical) than anything of Comte; while as a convenient popular abridgment or epitome, Comte's scale of the sciences has the advantage.

Omitting, ourselves, for the moment, the abstract realm, and confining ourselves to the concrete, and setting aside the human, in it, as a distinct kingdom, we have before us the ordinary view,—the three kingdoms. But what, we are driven to ask, does the existence of these three kingdoms mean? What underlying ideas do they typify. It is such men as Schelling, Oken, Richard Owen, and St. George Mivart, who teach us to look for a meaning in the book of Nature. And what here are the ideas typified? This fact of the three kingdoms is the obvious and popular centre-piece of scientific knowledge; and if we can solve it, as to its occult significance, we shall have made a great advance into the arcana of the universe.

Let us state first, and demonstrate afterwards. In short, the concrete is the embodiment of the cosmos, as the abstract is its framework or outlay. Embodiment or body is either living or dead. The mineral world is then the dead-body-world (excluding, as Eisberg says, the died); and the biologic world is the live-body-world (including the died). So far is clear; but what is death and what is life? None of the definitions of life heretofore given prove satisfactory. Spencer's and Lewes' definitions of life are descriptions of the manifestations of life, and not true definitions. Spencer seems to be quite aware of this—and to be baffled in his effort to define life from the point of view of an external dead materialism; for the effort is that merely. (See Principles of Biology, pp. 59-70.) Lewes' definition (quoted, by him, p. 81) would apply just as well to the processes of building and repairing a house as to the vital processes in a human individual. "Life," he says, "is a series of definite and successive changes, both of structure and composition, which take place within an individual without destroying its identity."

What, then, is death, the dead state, the state of being dead, and what is life, in their indubitably direct contrast with each other? Simply and merely death is inertness, and for life we may coin the contrasted word exertness. We may have proximate degrees towards inertness; torpor, etc.; short of death; but absolute inertness is the complete realization of the very idea of death. On the other hand, this absolute inertness is not incompatible with mere motion; but the cause of the motion must come from without. This is motic inertia as contrasted with the static inertia of complete rest. Both ideas are compatible with death, brute matter, and mere external mechanism, and so are directly allied with the monism of the mechanical-causal type of conception (See Hæckel). Exertness is, on the contrary, self-expression in motion; and this we denominate ACTION. Action is a word never applied to any other than living performances, except by figure of speech. We arrive, then, at the conclusion that life is the ACTIVITY or self-motivistic principle and phenomenality, and that death is the PASSIVITY, or allunde-motivistic principle and phenomenality of the universe; and that they are not to be defined by any mere descriptions of their various modes of manifestation. They are the subjectivity and objectivity of universal nature; inherent and eternal principles in the nature of things, in constant mutual tug or struggle with each other. Life is not, then, as materialism would insist, a mere accidental emergence, from the fortuitous operation of the laws of the inanimate realm of being; but is, itself, a primal and creative factor in the production of the world.

THE ST. JOSEPH (MO.) LIBERAL LEAGUE THANKSGIVING.

DEAR FRIEND ABBOT:—

Thinking you might wish to know how we succeeded in our effort to have something different from the usual routine on these annual occasions, I have concluded to give you a brief report of our proceedings.

The "proclamation" was published in all our daily English and German papers; they also gave us favorable editorial notices.

A good brass band of music was engaged, and Mrs. M. H. Parry, the eloquent freethought lecturer, agreed to deliver an address; while P. V. Wise, the President of our Liberal League, was to preach the regular sermon.

Though the day was very cold and stormy, about two hundred liberals assembled at Turn-Halle, at ten o'clock, A.M., and the exercises were opened by reading Gerald Massey's hymn, "The People's Advent," which was well received.

Then followed the reading of the Platform and Resolutions adopted by the Congress of the National Liberal League, at Rochester, N.Y. A resolution heartily indorsing the platform, and pledging unqualified support to the nominees for President and Vice-President in 1880, and to promote the principles as enunciated a success, was unanimously adopted.

The Orthodox friends claim that a special providence detained the train, and thus prevented Mrs. Parry from participating in the "blasphemous proceedings"; but it did not interfere with the President of the League, who delivered a stirring, radical sermon, occupying an hour and a half of time. It was not ranting about what the gods and the Church had done for the benefit of man, in opening his eyes, and enlarging his mind, and extending his knowledge and means of happiness, and securing his liberty, but in showing that the Church in all countries which claimed to speak for and transact business in the name of the gods had ever been leagued with tyrants and despotism, had been a universal beggar in seeking for wealth and power, and had always worked against the best interests, advancement, liberties, progress, and happiness of man.

He called attention to the difference between the ceremonies as conducted by those who claimed to have the ears of the gods, and to speak as familiarly to and for them, as a maiden of her kitten, or a boy of his marbles, while ours is for humanity. They contend that man should devote his entire life to the service and protection of the gods (the Church really), while he claimed that the gods should not only be able to care for and protect themselves, but man also; that the God of Nature required no formal adoration, costly temples untaxed, no incense, no prayers, no human statutes to protect her or him, but simply for man to be industrious and charitable and loving to his fellowman. He then referred to the good character and intelligence of the members of the late Rochester Congress, and the great benefit that would result to man, if the principles laid down in their platform could be engrafted in our fundamental laws, and impartially enforced in all our courts by public opinion. He then referred to the great instructors of humanity, Lao Tze, Confucius, Socrates, Thales, Pythagoras, Galileo, Bruno, Voltaire, Paine, Mazzini, and a host of brave men and women who had been real benefactors of mankind, and to whom we should ever feel thankful. He said that, though there had been sixteen reputed crucified saviors of the world, they had been of no practical benefit to the human family. That not one of them, or all of them combined, were now or ever had been able to suspend the laws of Nature, to control or stop a cyclone, an earthquake, a fire in a forest or city, an epidemic disease or the plague, a famine, the lightning's flash, wreck at sea or of a railway train, a devastating war, a bitter religious persecution, or to free a people or single person from slavery, or remove a tyrannical government, and establish a pure Republic for all the people in its stead, where all the human customs and laws should operate as impartially on each member as the natural laws of the universe. That, in fact, the effect of their missions and teachings had been to the great injury instead of benefit to man.

He then stated that nothing ever had been done, or was now being done, to improve, civilize, enlighten, and render man happy by the gods or goddesses; but all had been done by the inventive genius, courage to dare, and indomitable will of men and women, who had risked their all to aid and save humanity. The preacher then spoke strongly in favor of placing women politically on an equality with men, and, where they can perform the same services equally as well, to pay them the same wages as men.

He advised the workmen to be temperate, to give their children of both sexes a good practical education, a trade, so that they will be able to support themselves wherever they may be; and instead of paying their money to build useless churches and support a swarm of locusts, that they invest it in newspapers and useful books, and a small tract of land, with a comfortable cottage, good fences, fruit trees; and then with what is left to beautify it so as to make a pleasant home and heaven here on earth.

He called their attention to the fact that over $500,000,000 of property was tied up uselessly in this country alone in the churches, which defrauded them out of more than $15,000,000 per annum by being exempt from taxation; and then of the immense horde of priests, over sixty thousand, which the workmen carried on their shoulders and supported without ever receiving anything whatever in return.

The worst bank failures, insurance frauds, and perjuries, the worst cases of forgery, crim. con., and murder, were committed by the most pious Christian priests and devotees. And what is it all for? They do not or cannot suspend the bitings of cold and hunger; they do not feed the hungry or clothe the naked; they do not give us light and practical knowledge; they do not break the bonds of slavery and oppression, but increase them more than tenfold. You should therefore look upon them as nuisances, as obtaining money under false pretences. They are worse than the Colorado grasshoppers which only visit you occasionally and eat quietly for a season; but the lazy priest abideth with you and eateth up your substance, and annoys you day and night forever. How long will you quietly submit to be his silent slave? Be men and women, and shout no longer. We will be free!

Yours, P. V. WISE.

MATERIALISTS IN IOWA COURTS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The Supreme Court of Iowa, in the case of the State vs. Elliott, recently reported in the Western Jurist, holds that—"Where dying declarations are offered in evidence, it is no objection to the admissibility thereof that the declarant was a materialist; but such fact may be shown in evidence for the purpose of affecting the weight or credibility of the declaration."

The Iowa code has abolished the very odious and unjust rule of the common law that excluded the testimony of materialists; but, in permitting the fact of materialism to be shown as affecting the weight or credibility of the witness, it permits, in courts of justice, an invidious discrimination between persons of differing theological opinions that is as indefensible as the law which it abrogates, and equally obnoxious to reason, justice, and the genius of our Constitution.

It is amazing that a rule of law so at variance with common-sense and equity, so irreconcilably conflicting with the principles of our free and non-sectarian government, can endure for a day in an age remarkable for its liberality and enlightenment!

It is inequitable, because it does not permit baptism, Presbyterianism, Methodism, and all other "isms, as well as materialism," to be shown "as affecting the weight of the testimony." It is contrary to reason, because it is sufficiently demonstrated that religious beliefs are no guarantees of the veracity of a witness. If religious opinions were any test of veracity, then the penalties of perjury would be useless wherever non-believers are excluded from giving testimony, as at common law.

Again, it is always admissible to impeach a witness by attacking his reputation for truth in the community where he resides. If a witness cannot sustain a reputation for truth and veracity among his neighbors, that fact is permitted to be shown for the purpose of affecting the weight of his testimony. How absurd, then, where a man bears an untarnished reputation for truthfulness among those who best know him, to permit him to be discredited by proof of his materialism! As if the testimony of men, every way reliable and truthful in the ordinary and every-day transactions of life, when they take the witness stand, is less credible than that of a Baptist or Methodist of doubtful reputation, but to whom the law kindly and mercifully grants special immunities as witnesses in shielding from inquest their tenets, however extravagant, absurd, or immoral they may be!

If speculative religious opinions furnish some criterion by which a man's credibility may be determined for the purposes of the courts, then every form of belief should be equally open to scrutiny, that the intrinsic excellences or absurdities thereof may furnish ingenious counsel ample facilities for the protection of clients, and for the edification of jurors.

Surely, if the tenets of Christianity are more rational or better calculated to promote veracity than those of materialism, they ought not to claim for them exemption from the inquest to which a residuum of theological bigotry still subjects the latter.

What renders this feature of the Iowa code doubly ridiculous, is the well-known fact that, notwithstanding probably nine out of ten witnesses who testify in court are believers in future punishment of some sort, there are few crimes of more frequent occurrence than perjury.

That law-maker must be monumental in stupidity who in this day does not know that the color of a man's orthodoxy is no test of his veracity. Why, then, should the law presume that a materialist is less credible than a Baptist?

Practically, however, in a majority of cases, even where the law permits it, an attempt to discredit a witness by showing him to be a materialist would subject the person in whose behalf the attack was made to the deserved contempt of court and jury, and thus defeat its own object. Nevertheless, the existence of such a law upon the statute books of any State is a standing disgrace to the people who permit it to remain there, to be enforced by the courts.

SENECA, Kan., Nov. 18, 1877.

[Such laws are kept on the statute book in order to make the State lend a covert assistance to the Church. It is a part of that iniquitous system which makes Christianity help to demoralize the public conscience, at the very time that it pretends to be the sole bulwark of morality! Shall we not hope that the liberals of America, by supporting the National Liberal League till its righteous principles triumph, will put an end to this noisome insincerity and hypocrisy?—ED.]

H. CLAY NEVILLE vs. MATERIALISTS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The above named correspondent of THE INDEX cannot abide materialism or materialists. In THE INDEX of December 13, he makes serious complaints against the representatives of freethought after the following fashion: "Many persons who claim to be representative liberals are the greatest burdens that true liberalism has to carry." Before it can be determined whether this assertion is true or not, it is first necessary to define what constitutes "true liberalism." It might possibly turn out, upon a correct definition of true liberalism, that our friend, "H. C. N." would have to move on and take advanced grounds. Such a step forward might possibly induce him to give up the last vestige of his religion for science. But suppose it admitted that there are among liberals "some narrow-minded, coarse-grained freethinkers"; are there no narrow-minded, coarse-grained Christians? The underlying question is: What is the legitimate tendency of Christianity and what is the tendency of freethought? If the latter produces strength of character, it must incidentally, if not directly, produce coarse character. Strength and coarseness usually go together. If it shall be claimed that Christianity effects refinement, it necessarily, if not directly, tends to make its votaries weaklings. If it be true that there are in the liberal ranks "those chronic haters of every form of religious thought," it is also true that there are in society millions of Christians who cherish a chronic hatred of truth; and I might, with more fitness, use the words of "H. C. N.," and add, "their scepticism (in human progress) has taught them to hate rather than love." Let "H. C. N." take a decided stand upon any of the reforms of the day, and go forth to work for its success, and he will see why the liberal must have grit and battle in him. When Christianity persecutes and prosecutes the liberal to the last degree within its power, he must either submit and take his place among other sheep, or become a fighter. "They have a false idea that they must fight everybody and everything." Nearly everybody wants to fight the liberal; and what can he do but fight or run? "Good, sensible people who see only destruction and moral chaos in the crude ideas of these iconoclastic reformers learn to look with suspicion on everything associated with liberalism." What are these "crude ideas" promulgated by these iconoclastic persons claiming "to be representative liberals"? Perhaps "H. C. N.'s" own language may answer our query: "Better have Christianity in the Constitution and public schools than have this type of destructionists rule society." Is it possible that the writer knew nothing of the scientists who are building and reconstructing human thought and society? These constructionists are building a new edifice upon the ruins of traditional religion, dedicated to reason and human welfare. Does "H. C. N." favor the God-in-the-Constitution movement? He confesses that his firing has been scattering. "I have not time to be as explicit on this subject as I should like to be." This is exceedingly unfortunate for him, seeing that explicitness is the thing that does the business.

W. S. BELL.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass.

INTUITIONALISM IN AMHERST.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I was highly interested in two subjects which received considerable attention in your columns some months ago,—the issue between transcendental and empirical philosophy, and the religious attitude of Amherst College. The topics seemed to me to meet in a plane which may not have been recognized as common by those less familiar with the institution in question, and perhaps a tardy allusion to this point will not be without interest. President Seelye, while conducting an exercise in the class to which I belonged, was once criticised for his custom of referring his pupils to those authors only who support what he regards as the truth, and justified his course with some such reasoning as this:—

The truth is apprehended directly, immediately. There is not needed any comparison of rival theories, for it manifests itself "in its own light," and, when once fairly seen, is recognized as true beyond all question. To exhibit error, then, side by side with the truth, does not afford the mind any assistance, but greatly embarrasses it by beclouding and distracting the intellectual vision. It is, therefore, the sacred duty of the instructor to refer his pupils to such works only as contain (not what seems to him, as the fallible experimentalist would say, but) what is seen by him to be the truth.

I am unable to see why this is not logical intuitionism, and am convinced that what may seem at a distance like inexcusable intolerance in Amherst utterances is really, in many cases, only the legitimate outcome of the philosophical basis recognized there.

Will you allow me a closing word in behalf of my Alma Mater? Whatever the rational critic may think of her theories, I am happy to bear unqualified testimony to her practical liberality. Personal observation enables me to say that any student, however pronounced and undisguised his "sceptical" tendencies, may expect impartial justice at the hands of her faculty, provided he prove himself a gentleman and exhibit a sincere desire to profit by his opportunities.

HENRY DOTY MAXSON.

DE RUTTER, N. Y., December, 1877.

A PROTEST.

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., Dec. 20, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Your first editorial in reference to obscene literature and its circulation I read with great delight, a delight which portions of your second editorial on the same subject do not tend to intensify. While your utterances prompt me to thank you for stating your own position in so manly a fashion, they also induce me to state that there is at least one man—whether "in his senses," or out of them, others must judge—who "ventures to tell the public explicitly that he is in favor of abolishing all legal restrictions upon the use" of the mails for the circulation of really obscene literature. To develop the argument by which he maintains this position might involve him in a discussion for which he has no time, and he therefore contents himself with the simple assertion, adding only that the editor of THE INDEX would be no more justified, on this account, in representing him as "going before the world as a champion of obscene literature," than he would be in representing the editor of THE INDEX as going before the world as a champion of drunkenness on account of his opposition to the enactment of a prohibitory liquor law. On the contrary, his hatred of obscene literature is surpassed only by his hatred of that spirit which endeavors to make other people moral by encroaching on their rights.

Sincerely yours, BENJ. R. TUCKER.

COINAGE FIETY.

I notice in THE INDEX of Dec. 13, page 590, bottom of second column—"The new silver quarters have the device, 'In God we trust,' but not the halves"—clipped from an exchange. I have seen it before in another paper, and called the editor's attention to it. It is a small matter, but liberals especially should be careful about giving currency to anything but TRUTH. It is putting a club in the hands of the enemy to break our own heads with. If it should be your fortune to see a half-dollar coined within the last few years, you will see the error, which please correct in THE INDEX, and oblige, Respectfully, L. SPAULDING.

NORFOLK, Va.

IT IS AN INTERESTING fact that the world is indebted to the insect tribe for that valuable product—chloroform. The little ant contains a substance called formic acid, concerning which a discussion took place a century ago between certain chemists. It was found to be composed of a compound radical formyle, and three atoms of oxygen. Dumas subsequently substituted chlorine for the oxygen, and thus obtained trichloride of formyle, which is chloroform. After this, the fact was ascertained that either possessed the capability of taking away all sensations of the human body; and following this, came the disclosure that trichloride of formyle was more thoroughly adapted for this purpose than even ether,—all this arising from the study of the habits of insects.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 5 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEUBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.50 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loom, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. E. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boy, &c. 3 vols.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	3.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	5.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Brevariary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	5.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
COEWAY (MONSIEUR D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	3.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.80
DUBRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.40
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.25
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	8.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FREURBAUGH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS.) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christianity.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Back Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's By-Home.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Force of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. I.

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.80
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by J. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (PETERUS C.) Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	1.50
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. E.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. E.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	5.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES.) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 1 vol. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN.) Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	4.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkose from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americanism—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLIV. A Christmas Story.....	.90
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tractory Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Sciences for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	12.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Principles. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Psychology. 3 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 3 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
IV., Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Broom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip Fendlin.....
The Virginians.....
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Denis Daural, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorous, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THORNTON'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Loon Island.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	3.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A HOLIDAY OFFERING.

JUST PUBLISHED:

Poems of the Life Beyond and Within.

Voices from Many Lands and Centuries,
saying—

"Man, Thou shalt never Die!"

By GILES B. STEBBINS.

Price, $1.50. For sale by THE INDEX, 231
Washington Street, Boston.

LECTURES AND SERMONS.

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

THIRD SERIES.

1. The Simplicity of True Religion.
  2. The Rising Faith.
- The following numbers of the first and second series can also be supplied: Thomas Paine, Best Use of Sunday, Higher Reverence, Self-Respect, God on Our Side, Economy and Waste, Piety of Modern Science, Immortal Life, Moral Aspects of Belief in Immortality, Idealizing the Real, The Coming Man, A Rational Church.

Sent to any address, postage paid, at 5 cents per copy, by

JAMES MILLER,
719 Broadway, New York.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.*WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

RADICAL FREETHOUGHT

LECTURES for 1878.

By B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Positive and Constructive Lectures:

1. The Demands of Liberalism.
2. The Positive Side of Free Thought.
3. The Genesis and Nature of Religion, Considered as an "Element of Human Nature."
4. A Scientific and Philosophic View of Religious Revivals.
5. Christianity and Civilization.
6. The Triumphs of Liberalism.
7. What Liberalism offers in the Place of the Christian Theology.
8. A True Man Better than a True Christian.
9. Judaism and Christianity Outgrowths of Pre-existent Heathenism.
10. Origin and History of the Bible. (From one to six lectures.)
11. Buddha and Buddhism.
12. Ancient Egypt: Her Laws, Morality, and Religion.
13. The Theory of Evolution.
14. Darwinism: Its Principles Stated and Defended.
15. Natural Selection versus Design in Nature.
16. The Philosophy of Herbert Spencer.
17. Modern Scientific Materialism.
18. Instinct and Intuition: Organized Experiences of the Race.
19. Woman: Her Past and Present, Her Rights and Wrongs.
20. Paine. The Pioneer of Freethought in America.
21. The French Revolution: Its Causes and Consequences.

Critical Lectures:

22. The Fallacies of Rev. Joseph Cook regarding the Personality and Being of God.
23. Cook's Criticisms of Scientific Materialism examined.
24. Why I am an "Unbeliever."
25. Christianity and Intellectual Progress.
26. The Four Gospels Unhistorical and Unreliable.
27. The Evidence for the Divinity of the Bible examined.
28. Popular Assumptions Regarding the Bible and Christianity.
29. Popular Objection to Infidelity Answered.
30. The Crimes and Cruelties of Catholic and Protestant Christianity.
31. Bible Prophecies Falsified by the Facts of History.
32. The Proof of a Personal Intelligent Deity examined.
33. The Pros and Cons of a Future State.

For terms, etc., address

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
Thorndike, Mass.

VINDICATION OF THOMAS

PAINE! Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer. Just issued. Clear, Concise, Vigorous—Logical—Eloquent—and Unanswerable! Just what every Liberal wants. Only 25 cents. Address E. O. WALKER, Box 59, Florence, Iowa.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

RADICAL LECTURES

By James W. Stillman.

1. THE UNKNOWN GOD.
2. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.
3. HERBERT SPENCER.
4. REFORM IN EDUCATION.

For terms, address

JAMES W. STILLMAN,
No. 128 Broadway, New York City.

CHRISTIANITY AND INFIDELITY!

A DISCUSSION BETWEEN

Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian, New York, and

D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the Truth Seeker.

SUBJECTS DISCUSSED:

- Part I. The Relative Services of Christianity and Infidelity to American Independence.
- Part II. The Relative Services of Christianity to Learning and Science.
- Part III. Is there a stronger probability that the Bible is divine than that infidelity is true?

A thick 12mo volume of over 500 pages, well bound, sent post-paid by mail for One Dollar. Address D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth Street, New York.

FROTHINGHAM'S WORKS.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY. An Essay. Third Edition—Revised. Price $1.50.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

"A profoundly sincere book, the work of one who has read largely, studied thoroughly, reflected patiently. It is a model of scholarly culture and of finished and vigorous style."—Boston Globe.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIGION. For Sunday-schools and Homes. Price $1.00.

THE SAFEST CREED, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Not "food for babes," but full of suggestion for earnest and thoughtful men.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS. With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.00.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

BELIEFS OF THE UNBELIEVERS. A Lecture. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

TRANSCENDENTALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. A History. With sketches and studies of Emerson, Alcott, Parker, Margaret Fuller, the Brook-Farm Community, etc. 8vo, Cloth extra, with steel portrait of the author, $2.50.

THE LIFE OF THEODORE PARKER. 8vo. With Portrait, $3.00.

The New York Tribune closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity, illustrating the prime importance of the Messianic Idea in the New Testament, as the key to the development of Christianity from Judaism. Octavo, Cloth, $1.75.

Mailed, post-paid, on receipt of price, by THE INDEX 231 Washington St., Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. John E. Williams, Pres. Met. Nat. Bank, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.; Mr. Moses H. Grinnell, N.Y.

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

A RE-ISSUE OF A FAMOUS BOOK.*A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION.

By THEODORE PARKER.

With a Biographical Sketch by HANNAH E. STEVENSON, and an Introduction by O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

12mo, Cloth extra, $1.50; in Paper Covers, $1.00.

The present volume contains a great number of Parker's best thoughts, expressed in his richest, freshest style; and it is believed that the old friends of the author, and many others who, since his time, have become interested in the progress of liberal opinions in religion, will welcome this new and attractive edition.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,*T. W. HIGGINSON,*W. J. POTTER,*W. H. SPENCER,*F. W. NEWMAN,*CHAS. VOYSEY,*A. W. STEVENS,*R. H. RANNEY,*F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address,

THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 and '77 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For Twenty-Five DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!*CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT*EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
  2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
  3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
  4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
  5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.
- This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and be in the hands of EVERY person for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES, ..... 15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES, ..... 40
FIFTY " ..... 75
ONE HUNDRED " ..... 1.50
TWO HUNDRED " ..... 2.50
THREE HUNDRED " ..... 3.50
FIVE HUNDRED " ..... 5.00
ONE THOUSAND " ..... 12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.