

1643

The Index.

—A—

WEEKLY PAPER,

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

---

VOLUME VIII.

---

BOSTON, MASS:

INDEX ASSOCIATION, 231 WASHINGTON STREET.

1877.

BL
2700
I38

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ESSAYS AND OTHER LEADING ARTICLES.

The Character of Socrates, Francis E. Abbot .....	2
Jesus and Socrates in the History of Religion, Francis E. Abbot .....	26
On Making the Education of Children Rational, Free, and Religious, Miss Arctus Hall .....	33
Influence of Christianity in Practice, Charles K. Whipple .....	80
The Demands of Liberalism, B. F. Underwood .....	62
Religious Art, William Allen Wall .....	74
The March of Science towards God, George Jacob Holyoake ..	86
Grounds of Religious Belief, Charles K. Whipple .....	98
"Difference from me is Measure of Absurdity," William C. Gannett .....	110
Concerning Immortality, J. L. Stoddard .....	122
The Scientific Method in Religion, Francis Ellingwood Abbot ..	134
What Liberalism offers in the Place of Christianity, B. F. Underwood .....	146
Alcectis in England, Moncure D. Conway .....	158
The Two Law-Givers, Rabbi S. H. Sonnenschein .....	179
Faith and Freedom, Francis G. Peabody .....	194
Thoughts Suggested by an Easter Sermon, Charles K. Whipple ..	206
Transforming a Religion.....	218
Joseph Cook Measured by his own Rule, Rev. M. J. Savage .....	230
Transcendentalism and Intellectual Liberty, Charles D. B. Mills .....	242
The "Modern Symposium," By an English Lady .....	254
Morals and Freethought, J. L. Stoddard .....	255
The Many Encouragements, and the Few Encouragements, Rev. A. B. Bradford .....	266
The Trial of Galileo, A. Meriers .....	278
Science in America, Dr. John W. Draper .....	290
The Prosecution of Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant, Miss Florence Fenwick Miller .....	302
The Claim of Theodore Parker, O. B. Frothingham .....	314
Are Protestant Churches Infallible? Charles K. Whipple .....	326
Unbelief, Moncure D. Conway .....	338
The Object and the Method of Education in Amherst College, Charles K. Whipple .....	350
Spinoza: 1677 and 1877, Ernest Riman .....	362
The New Epoch in Belief, D. A. Wasson .....	374
The State: Its Nature, Its Objects, Its Destiny, P. J. Proud- hon .....	386
The Radical Sunday-School, Rev. David H. Clark .....	396
The Paralysis of Labor, George H. Holmes .....	410
Who are Infidels? Rev. M. J. Savage .....	422
The Duty of Liberals, J. L. Stoddard .....	434
Brigham Young and Mormonism.....	446
Woman: Her Past and Present, Her Rights and Wrongs, B. F. Underwood .....	458
The Orthodox View of Theatrical Entertainments, Charles K. Whipple .....	470
God is King, Rev. Huntington Lyman .....	482
Christianity and Freethought, Rev. Geo. S. Merriam .....	494
The Scepticism of Believers, Leaist Stephen .....	506, 518
Report of the First Annual Congress of the National Liberal League.....	530
Republican Taxation, Elizur Wright .....	542
German Liberalism in America, Mrs. Clara Neymann .....	544
The Unitarian "Ministers' Institute," David H. Clark .....	554
Darwinism and Christianity, Rev. W. H. Spencer .....	567
Free Religion, Rev. L. K. Washburn .....	578
On Science, Prof John W. Tyndall .....	590, 602
Pure vs. Adulterated Christianity, Elder P. W. Evans .....	610

EDITORIALS.

The Power of Ideas.....	6
An Evangelical Predicament, O. B. F. .....	7
Whom shall We Trust? E. C. S. .....	7
The Petition of the National Liberal League.....	18
Religion and Weather, W. J. P. .....	19
Intelligent Suffrage.....	30
Duties to Ourselves, D. H. C. .....	31
The "Religious Freedom Amendment" Petition, 42, 54, 66, 78, 90, 102, 114, 128, 138, 150, 162	163
Mr. Morse on the Paine Bust.....	42
England to America.....	42
Prayer.....	42
Free Religion in Paris, O. B. F. .....	43
Moral Education in Public Schools.....	54
President Walker's Sermons, W. J. P. .....	85
The Art Museum to be Opened on Sunday Afternoons, E. D. C. .....	55
The Great Orthodox Reaction.....	56
The Vagueness of Free Religion, O. B. F. .....	57
Parker Pillsbury in Worcester.....	67
Woman Suffrage and State Secularization.....	78
Morality in Schools, E. D. C. .....	79
The Pope's New Encyclical.....	90
Parker's "Discourse on Religion," W. J. P. .....	91
Paine Hall.....	91
Moody and Sankey.....	102
The Real Fee, O. B. F. .....	103
"Distinguished Things that Differ".....	114
Free Halls, D. H. C. .....	115
Queries about "Intelligent Suffrage".....	126
The Great Evil of It, E. D. C. .....	126
The Real Danger, O. B. F. .....	127
Professor Hunt on the Chemical History of the Earth.....	138
"Opposing" Woman Suffrage, E. D. C. .....	139
The Moody and Sankey Revival, Parker Pillsbury .....	139
Shall there be an Aristocracy of Abecedarians?.....	150
Religion in the Pine Woods, W. J. P. .....	151
Women and Christianity.....	162
Unitarian Christ-ians, O. B. F. .....	163
"Mr. Abbot's New Departure,".....	174
The F. B. A. Constitution, W. J. P. .....	175
"Free Religion vs. Transcendentalism".....	186
Christian Architecture, O. B. F. .....	187

Dr. Bartol's Letter.....	187
Resolutions on the Death of Rev. John T. Sargent.....	198
Annual Meeting of the Free Religious Association, W. J. P. , 196, 210, 222, 234, 246,.....	258
Freedom and Faith.....	198
How to Meet the Conflagration, E. D. C. .....	199
"Natural Rights".....	210
Financial Report of the "Centennial Congress of Liberals".....	210
A Criticism, O. B. F. .....	211
Live Issues, E. D. C. .....	211
Dr. Bartol's Accusation against the Free Religious Association.....	212
Mr. Longfellow's Transcendentalism.....	222
The "Authority of Science".....	224
"The Presidential Policy," D. H. C. .....	215
"Transcendentalism and Intellectual Liberty".....	246
The Point, O. B. F. .....	247
A Letter from Dr. Bartol, C. A. Bartol .....	212
Arms and Arguments.....	258
The "Christian Amendment" Platform.....	259
The School Amendment.....	259
Two Views of the Results of the Revival.....	279
A Remarkable Orthodox Confession.....	271
Two Letters on the Scientific Method.....	282
Ecclesiastical Kidnapping, J. L. Stoddard .....	283
Children's Fraternities.....	294
"Ecceas L'Infame".....	294
Professor Adler.....	295
The Bradlaugh-Besant Prosecution.....	306
"Reverence," Elisur Wright .....	307
Unitarian or Radical—Which?.....	307
Antichrist at Harvard.....	318
Religion by Authority, E. W. .....	318
Christianity in the Colleges.....	320
A Card, Official and Personal William J. Potter .....	331
Benan on Prayer, J. L. Stoddard .....	331
The Scientific Method on Social Regeneration, D. H. C. .....	331
Revivalism vs. Veracity.....	342
Obituary, C. D. B. M. .....	343
God and Nature, E. W. .....	343
"Feeling a Truth-Discoverer".....	354
The Mystic Piety of the Orient, C. D. B. M. .....	355
Non-Sectarian Schools, W. J. P. .....	355
F. R. A. Annual Report, W. J. Potter .....	365, 378, 390, 402, 411
The Right of Riot.....	366
True and False Liberalism, W. D. LeS. .....	367
Horne in the Scriptures, E. W. .....	367
The Practical Side, S. H. M. .....	379
Individualism vs. Communism, E. W. .....	379
Saving Life, S. H. M. .....	390
The Way to Look at It, S. H. M. .....	390
"Feeling," S. H. M. .....	391
A Belated Correction, W. J. P. .....	391
Notes from Abroad, E. D. C. .....	391
Edward D. Linton, S. H. M. .....	403
A Glance at the Free Religious Report, S. H. M. .....	403
The Liberal Outlook, S. H. M. .....	414
Coöperative Reforms, S. H. M. .....	414
Capital and Labor, E. W. .....	415
A Few Comments, S. H. M. .....	415
Mount Desert Island.....	426
Secular Schools, W. J. P. .....	427
Mr. Babcock's Complaint.....	427
"What is the Creed of Liberalism?".....	428
Colonel Ingersoll's Challenge.....	430
The Labor Question and the Laundry.....	439
Religious Snobbery Rebuked.....	439
"Education and Family Rights".....	450
"A Religion which by its very Nature is Intolerant," B. F. U. .....	451
Mr. Morse on "Interest".....	451
Wanted—A New Conscience Party, Francis E. Abbot .....	452
A Word about Taxation, E. W. .....	453
Mr. Frothingham's Position.....	463
"National Protection for National Citizens".....	474
Authority of Character, W. J. P. .....	475
The Interest Question, Wm. D. LeSueur .....	475
Free Thought Notes, B. F. U. .....	475
An Eminent Lawyer's Opinion.....	486
A Universalist State Convention Voting for "God in the Constitution".....	488
Do Infants Grow in the Spirit World? B. F. Underwood .....	498
Our Children, Wm. D. LeS. .....	497
From Day to Day.....	498
Orthodoxy and Theatres, J. L. S. .....	498
Rev. Joseph Cook's Position Criticized, B. F. U. .....	499
"School and State".....	511
Cook and Causation, B. F. U. .....	511
An Excellent Way to Organize.....	511
Free Religious Convention, W. J. P. .....	522
"Truths for the Times".....	522
Two Views of the Bible, W. J. P. .....	523
The Rochester Congress.....	524
Miss Martineau's Autobiography, J. W. Chadwick .....	528
"The Intellect and Sentiment".....	546
Why is Unchastity Venial in one Sex and Infamous in the Other? B. F. U. .....	548
The Texas Infamy.....	568
Human Nature, W. H. S. .....	568
A Card.....	568, 570
Announcement: Club Terms, F. E. Abbot .....	570
The Moral Climate.....	570
About Japan, D. H. C. .....	570
Extracts and Notes, B. F. U. .....	577
Announcement: Club Terms.....	582, 594
"Obscene Literature".....	593
Common-Sense vs. Communism, A. W. E. .....	593
A Canadian Liberal League.....	593
A Test Case of Equal Rights.....	593

Extracts and Notes, B. F. U. .....	559,	206
Freedom the Friend of Power.....	508
Theological Survival, W. J. P. .....	907	607
Premium for New Subscribers.....	806,	618
Notice, Committee .....	618
Centralization.....	618
Clandestine Publications, E. W. .....	618
The Church of Rationalism, D. H. C. .....	618

COMMUNICATIONS

English Sketches, Mrs. Annie Besant.....	1
Philadelphia Letters, Mrs. C. B. Kilgore.....	32
The Science of Universology, Stephen Pearl Andrews,
4, 39, 75, 128, 159, 207, 224, 243, 284, 308, 344, 390, 440, 500, 536, 572, 620	620
The Man who was Nothing, G. E. T.....	8
Remonetization, E. D. Stark.....	9
A Christian Comma, Samuel R. Honey.....	9
Wanted—Only the Facts, A. J. Warner.....	9
No Acquiescence in Fraud, A.....	9
Wanted—More Knowledge, Jean Panis.....	9
Religion and Politics, Morris Einstein.....	20
Reasons against Woman Suffrage, Frank J. Mead.....	20
Spiritualism: Criticism, Illustration, and Vindication, G. B.
Stebbins.....	29
The Bland Silver Bill, A. J. Warner.....	21
A Retrospect, Hugo Andriessen.....	22
The Chelsea Liberal League, J. H. W. Toohey.....	23
"Cells for Superstition," Kate N. Doggett.....	33
Louisiana Notes, Emerson Bentley.....	33
"The Bland Silver Bill," R. C.....	43
"Reasons against Woman Suffrage" Considered, Sara A. Under-
wood.....	45
Why a Subscriber Stopped his Paper, David Porter.....	45
A New Book Suggested, T.....	46
Questions in Return, G. H. Parkhurst.....	45
An Expostulation, Nameless.....	45
"Notes of a Sermon," Julius Ferrette.....	51
Sabbath-Day Musings, Sara A. Underwood.....	56
An Open Letter to Mr. Stebbins, Hugo Andriessen.....	56
"Universology," John Storer Cobb.....	56
Class Prejudices, Orra Langhorne.....	57
"Religion and Politics" Again, Carl H. Horsch.....	57
Woman Suffrage Again, Mrs. E. L. Saxon.....	57
"Here" and "There," M. D.....	57
The "Radical Democracy" of Boston, Jean Panis.....	57
Liberty's Notes, Mrs. Martha E. Berry.....	57
Notes of Progress, Margaretta J. Staton.....	57
Chicago Letter, Celia P. Woolley.....	68
Chelsea Liberal League, J. H. W. Toohey.....	68
"How," not "Why," E. D. Stark.....	68
Teaching God to be Good, H. L. B. B.....	68
"Reverend Joseph Cook," Nimrod.....	68
The Democratic Party, Henry Doty Maxson.....	68
The Revival Tactics, C. K. W.....	68
Paine Celebration at Leesville, Pa., G.....	78
Bishops and Priests vs. the Schools, F. C. B.....	78
"Jesus," D. W. T.....	81
On Behalf of Woman Suffrage, Kate N. Doggett.....	81
Prayer, E. D. Stark.....	81
Fed by Faith, W. H. T.....	81
Cook's Cookery, C. K. W.....	81
Old Glastonbury, Scriptor.....	92
Coöperative Groceries, E. Merriam.....	92
Immortality, T. J. Atwood.....	92
"Truth-Seeking," Mrs. L. B. C.....	92
A Voice from Texas, J. P. T.....	92
The "Religion of Evolution," A. H.....	93
Woman Suffrage and Free Religion, Seth Hunt.....	103
More about Woman Suffrage, Frank J. Mead.....	103
The Bland Silver Bill Again, A. J. Warner.....	104
Labor and Capital, D. J. K.....	104
War of "Capital" and "Labor," Jean Panis.....	108
Religious Liberty in Georgia, A. A. B.....	108
The New "Discovery," J. G. Whyte.....	108
Mr. Weiss on the Revival, W. H. H.....	108
A Note from Mrs. Dall, Caroline H. Dall.....	108
Intuition, Ex-Reformer.....	116
Should Crime be Punished? Wm. L. Balch.....	116
The Soul, Morris Einstein.....	116
The Paine Bust, Emerson Bentley.....	117
God in the Constitution, Mary Elizabeth Adams.....	117
The Centennial Congress, Wm. A. Garrison.....	117
Accuracy in Epithets, Believer.....	117
A Woman Champion of Free Thought, John Wilcox.....	117
What's the Difference? L.....	127
What is True? Elkur Wright.....	127
A Political Explanation, A.....	129
Circulate the Petition, H. L. Green.....	129
That Terrible Question, Hugo Andriessen.....	129
The Eternity of Matter, John Chappell Smith.....	129
Reply to "An Open Letter," G. B. Stebbins.....	129
Woman Suffrage, Seth Hunt.....	158
The Convention of Donors of the Paine Memorial Fund,
W. S. Ball.....	140
Chicago Letter, Celia P. Woolley.....	140
A Code of Ethics, G. B. Stebbins.....	140
Varying Views of Universology, E. B. Hazen.....	141
" " " " S. P. Putnam.....	141
" " " " W. H.....	141
The Nail Hit on the Head, G.....	141
The Coöperative State Colony, W. G. H. Smart.....	141
Deterioration in Heaven, Colony, Charles K. Whipple.....	148
The Incentives to Morality in Liberalism, Sara A. Under-
wood.....	151
Straws, Amelia W. Bates.....	153
The "Shaker" Doctrine of the Sabbath, P. W. Evans.....	153
The Woman Question, G.....	153
State Secularization and Woman Suffrage, Mrs. Maggie
Stewart Wiley.....	153

THE INDEX.

Professor Hyatt on the Rise and Decay of the Races.....	163	An Instance of Orthodox Candor, W. E. L.....	477	An Open Letter from President White, Andrew D. White.....	293
Labor and Capital, H. D. J. A.....	164	Liberal Sunday-Schools, Elizabeth Oakes Smith.....	477	A Clerical Scoundrel.....	293
The Westboro Reform School, M. S. W.....	164	Free thought and Liberal League County Committees, H. L. Green.....	477	Celebrities at Home (Thomas Carlyle at Cheyne Row).....	295
Church Exemption in the Massachusetts Legislature, N. C. Nash.....	164	Short Cuts to the Will of God, J. N. C.....	477	A Persecuted Bishop.....	297
A Woman on Woman Suffrage, W.....	165	King David's Doctrine, A. S. B.....	477	Mrs. F. Fenwick Miller and the Hackney Local Press.....	303
The Strongest Argument for the Immediate Enfranchisement of Women, J. E. L.....	165	"Use" and "Basis" of Difference, S. H. Morse.....	477	The Priests' Influence in Politics.....	303
An Old Quotation, Hugs Anderson.....	165	The Rochester Platform, Theron C. Leland.....	488	Thompson on the Rapacity.....	304
Mr. Mill's Lectures, H. L. Green.....	165	Common-Sense vs. Communism, Albert Warren Kelley.....	488	Church Mortgages in New York.....	305
Evans Anniversary.....	165	Professor Alexander Loos, D. F. K.....	489	A French Doctress on Doctrines.....	316
Notes on the "Lectureship," S. H. M.....	175	Legal Recreations, A. Worldly Lawyer.....	489	One of our Ancestors, "Pongo".....	316
Is it Expedient? R. Hasall.....	178	A Correction, M. L. Weiss.....	489	Joseph Cook and Jonathan Edwards, Ex-Celebrity.....	317
Questions, Carl H. Horach.....	176	Cattaraugus County, N. Y., H. L. Green.....	489	Paine Memorial Building.....	317
Chinese Suffrage, D. C.....	176	The Verdict, E. L. Crane.....	489	The Sunday Society.....	321
The "Friend's" Philosophy, David Newport.....	177	Attendants on West Roxbury, Joan Davis.....	489	Agitation in the Scottish Church.....	321
"Concerning Immortality," Theron C. Leland.....	177	National Citizenship, H. C. Lockwood.....	501	Russian Persecution.....	322
"The Soul," R. S. P.....	177	The Probable Future of the Liberal League, Morris Einstein.....	511	Professor Adler at Florence.....	322
Mrs. Parry, J. L. B.....	177	Further Appointments in New York, H. L. Green.....	501	An Appeal to the Thinking Classes in America, Elizabeth Thompson.....	329
Free Religion vs. Transcendentalism, Charles D. B. Mills.....	182	Rev. M. J. Savage on "Who are Infidels?" J. S. C.....	501	Dissent in Russia.....	329
Another Letter from Mr. Gannett, W. C. Gannett.....	182	Interest, J. Vila Blake.....	501	The Priest in Absolution.....	330
Some Answers to Mr. Wasson, G. E. Tufts.....	188	Mrs. Martineau's Autobiography, Amelia W. Hite.....	511	The Last Man.....	340
"A Political Explanation," B.....	189	The Moral Outlook, G. W. W.....	511	Charles Dickens on the Sunday Question.....	341
Mr. Gannett on Mr. Moody, W. F. Allen.....	189	The Lesson of the National Conscience, Emerson Bentley.....	511	Sunday Sabbath.....	351
The Centennial Congress Report, D. P. Wilcox.....	189	No Slide Issues, E. C. Walker.....	511	Celebrities at Home (Professor Tynall in Albemarle Street).....	351
Blood Atonement, Ex-Reformer.....	189	A Letter from Parker Pillsbury, Parker Pillsbury.....	511	An Irish Philosopher.....	353
"Women and Christianity," Celia P. Woolley.....	199	The Chelsea Liberal League, J. H. W. Toohy.....	511	Church Interference with Schools.....	353
First Hand Testimony about Chinese Missions, Julian de Cordova.....	199	The Honesty of Atheists vs. the Honesty of the Clergy, A. A. B.....	511	Ultramontaniam and War.....	353
The Inward Spiritual Light, D. Edwards.....	200	A Timely and Noble Extract, E. C. Walker.....	511	Boston and the Strike.....	364
Miscellaneous, D. Dudley.....	200	An Unheeded Phase of the Woman Question, Elizabeth Oakes Smith.....	525	Liberty vs. Licentiousness.....	369
An Israelite's Protest against Christian Proselytism, Henry Gervin.....	201	The Lesson of the National Conscience, Emerson Bentley.....	525	Paine at New Rochelle.....	377
Obituary, Com.....	201	The "Blight of Riot," B. H. Morse.....	525	A Labor Bellhorn.....	377
How to Choose a Minister, G. E. T.....	212	Miss Anthony's Address, Comraatix.....	525	Address, Stephen Pearl Andrews.....	399, 392, 404
Reflections, C. C.....	212	A New Prayer, Ingersoll Lockwood.....	525	Theodore Parker and his Critic, D. A. Wasson.....	399
Visible Darkness, Preston Day.....	213	Organization, H. L. Green.....	535	Our "Radical Review," Rev. B. F. Tufts.....	399
Longfellow, B. W. B.....	213	Radical Theology, G. E. Tufts.....	535	"Vicissitudes of Genius," M. M. Ballow.....	399
Charlemagne, S. H. Preston.....	225	An Appeal to Liberals on the great Need of the Hour, H. Clay Neville.....	537	Jottings.....	399
Mohammedanism among the Africans.....	225	The Inland Question, J. W. Swift.....	537	The Idaho Troubles.....	401
The "Scientific Method" not the Sole Authority in Religion, S. P. Putnam.....	236	A New Liberal League, H. L. Green.....	537	The Change in Italy.....	401
Did Life Originate in the Tropics? Gustave de Neven.....	236	The Intellectual and Sentiment, S. P. Putnam.....	547	On the Probable Fatality of the Laboring Classes, S. H. Morse.....	412
Freaks of a Crazy Fanatic, A Reader of THE INDEX.....	237	"Reverend Father" Ewer, Ingersoll Lockwood.....	548	The Lady Socialists of Russia.....	412
Consecration of a New Catholic Bishop.....	237	Barrenness of Materialism, H. Clay Neville.....	548	The Mistakes of Jesus, Professor William Denton.....	412
The Funeral of Mrs. Stiles, Celia P. Woolley.....	248	A Plea for Communism, George D. Henck.....	548	Celebrities at Home (Gambetta).....	424
Rev. Mr. Washburn on the Revere Church Case, L. K. Washburn.....	248	Conway's "Earthward Pilgrimage," Daniel Cony.....	548	Darwinism in England.....	424
The Motto "In God We Trust," Anxious Inquirer.....	249	"Cause" and "Occasion," H. J. C.....	548	Brigham Young.....	425
A Hint, X.....	249	Reminiscences of Benj. Hallowell, David Newport.....	549	The Moon of Mars, Simon Vercomb.....	425
How to Help, P. A. Angell.....	249	Conspicuous Discrepancy, E. D. Stark.....	549	Don Boulciers, A. G. Riddell.....	425
A Word from Minnesota—Grasshoppers and Col. Ingersoll, Frank J. Mead.....	260	Is Silver Honest Payment? E. D. Stark.....	549	Mr. Spurgeon.....	425
Civil Rights and Powers of Women and other People, G. E. Tufts.....	260	The Statistics of Opinion, Bishop Ferrette.....	561	The Office of the Priest.....	425
When Proof Fails, Look at Probability, Charles K. Whipple.....	271	From a New Subscriber, W. H. Jones.....	561	An Address, T. L. Brown.....	427
Truth-Seeking, A. N. A.....	272	A Little Bit of a Thing, Frederic Bocher Perkins.....	568	The Population of the Earth and the Progress of Hygiene.....	427
A Portion of the Original Manuscript of Paine's Age of Reason Discovered in Louisiana, Emerson Bentley.....	272	What is the Shaker System? F. W. Evans.....	568	Another Case of Heresy.....	427
Grasshopper Resolutions, Ami.....	273	The Liberal League Movement, H. L. Green.....	571	Gail Hamilton on "The Distorted way of Making Converts to Christianity".....	449
A Freethinker's View of Appleton's Cyclopaedia, I. B.....	294	The Coming Religion, Ingersoll Lockwood.....	571	Romanism in Boston.....	449
Joseph Cook's Western "Double," D. K. B.....	294	A Note-Book, G. I. H. Heywood.....	573	Zeal or Impudence.....	449
Superstitions, C. C.....	295	The Impulse of Reason, H. H. Heywood.....	573	Paganism in France, E. H. Rieu.....	449
The Friends of Progress, H. L. Green.....	296	The Lord's Prayer, Rufus Weeks.....	573	The Bradburn-Bennett Case, Moncre D. Conway.....	471
"Social Democracy," W. G. H. Smart.....	296	"Radical Review" for November, A. W. S.....	584	Wendell Phillips on "Labor and Capital".....	472
How the Church would Cure Intemperance, Ingersoll Lockwood.....	296	Mingled Praise and Blame, J. H. Phillips.....	584	Are "Laborers" the Majority?.....	473
Mr. Day on Spiritualism, T. J. Atwood.....	296	The Silver Dollar, Emily J. Leonard.....	585	The Green Fields of the Moon.....	473
The Parasites of Jesus, B. W. Ball.....	297	Mr. N-ville on Materialism, Celia P. Woolley.....	585	Ronan's Gospels.....	484
Human Instincts, R. P. Thompson.....	308	The Rochester Platform, F. W. Evans.....	585	Christianity and the Nation.....	484
Religious Revivals, B. P. Underwood.....	309	An Illustration of Orthodoxy, C. W. F.....	585	William Lloyd Garrison, D. S. Grandis.....	497
The Interest Doctrine Briefly Stated, Bishop Ferrette.....	309	A Word for Materialism, E. C. Riddell.....	585	Rapid Advance of Education in England.....	497
Organization, H. L. Green.....	309	Another Word for Materialism, David Kirkwood.....	585	The Bases of Christianity.....	497
Is Christianity the great Moral Force of the World? J. A. J. W.....	320	The Silver Question, E. D. Stark.....	585	Modern Atheism.....	521
Clerical Difficulties, and the Remedy, C. K. W.....	320	William Lloyd Garrison, D. S. Grandis.....	585	A Great Theory in Danger.....	521
John Hopburn, A. Bate.....	320	"Improving the Occasion," S. W.....	585	Proposed Additions to the Rochester Platform, Elder P. W. Brown.....	545
"Social Democracy," W. G. H. Smart.....	321	Pervaded Liberalism, H. C. Neville.....	585	Civil Service.....	545
Is it a "Fortunate Guess"? J. N. C.....	321	The Catholic Church on Urry, Charles Ellershaw.....	585	Memorial to Congress.....	545
N. P. Rogers, Benj. F. Fisher.....	321	Slander in Churches, Henry L. Denton.....	585	The Liberal League at Ithaca.....	545
The Wolcott Grove Meeting, H. L. Green.....	321	"Communion at the God House".....	585	A Manly Heretic, Joseph Milliken.....	545
Right-Thinking and Right-Doing, Celia P. Woolley.....	322	Randolph Ratification Meeting, H. L. Green.....	585	Who Will be the Next Pope?.....	545
A Woman's Plea for Sincerity, O. F.....	322	A Triumph of Justice, W. W. Stow.....	585	Voltaire.....	545
Children's Meetings, F. A. Hinkley.....	322	Fourier, F. S. C.....	585	Had no Fun in Him.....	573
The Sunday-School a University for the Million, T.....	322	The Randolph Meeting, F. W. Evans.....	585	Is Religion Dying Out? O. B. Frothingham.....	585
The Interest Doctrine, Julius Ferrette.....	322	Struck by the "Great Strike," A. Bate.....	585	Russian Socialism.....	585
"One Star Differeth from another Star".....	322	The St. Joseph (Mo.) Liberal League Thanksgiving, P. V. Wise.....	585	The Roman Programme in Canada.....	585
Mrs. Parry, J. R. Baker.....	322	Materialism in Iowa, R. C. B.....	585	Christianity in India.....	585
A Puzzled Priest, Theo. Brown.....	322	Materialism in Massachusetts, S. P. Putnam.....	585	Rec arian Education.....	585
What is Religion? Morris Einstein.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	Voting a Papal Election.....	585
Biblical Objections, Pearl Andrews.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	Modern Orthodoxy and Belief in Hell.....	585
Correction, Correcion, Correcion.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	The Autocrit Case.....	585
Feeling a Truth-Discoverer, S. P. Putnam.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	Modern Catholicism and Belief in Purgatory.....	585
The Unity, G. E. T.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	The Longest Living Lyman.....	585
The Jesuits vs. Secretary Thompson, Americus.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	Cook on the Paine Memorial.....	585
The Vexed Question, J. P. Ticom.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	The Liberal League at Ithaca.....	585
Behind the Age, D. P. Thorpe.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	The Milwaukee Liberal League.....	585
What is Liberalism? H. Clay Neville.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	Daniel C. Waldo, the Seventh-Day Baptist.....	585
Wigglesworth's "Day of Doom".....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	The Mental Pace.....	585
The Interest Doctrine, Julius Ferrette.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585	Church Law and Common Law.....	585
A Word for Bishop Ferrette, E. W. Altherigh.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
A Vote of Thanks to God, J. R. Baker.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Jesuit Schools, Americus.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Lesson of the Commencements, B. F. S.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
An Open Letter to Herbert Spencer, W. M. Boucher.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Freethinkers' Grove Meeting at Wolcott, H. L. Green.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Riots and Revolution, J. M. L. Babcock.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Politeness of Christianity, Freethinker.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Clerical and Lay Belief, Bishop Ferrette.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
A Sunday Dialogue, J. L. Stoddard.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Anarchy, Henry Doly Mason.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Ideal Sunday-School, Mary J. Safford Blake.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Liberalism and the Masses, Peter Long.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Communism and the Strikes, W. U. H. Smart.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Magic Stone, D. A. W.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Mathusians, P. J. Proudhon.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Teachings of the Strike, Bishop Ferrette.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Credis, B. W. B.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Wolcott Meeting, H. L. Green.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
More about Wolcott Meeting, H. L. Green.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
What is Religion, and What is not Religion? Carl H. Horach.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Railroads and the People, C. P.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
"What Think ye of Christ?" Charles K. Whipple.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Interest Doctrine, Julius Ferrette.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Scripture on Usury, Charles Blincklow.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
What is the Creed of Liberalism? H. Clay Neville.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Priestly Extravagance, Economist.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
How to do "Something for Religion," B.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
National Patriotism, Iowa.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Truths for the Working-Man, A. W. Kelsey.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
"Nothing to do with it," E. L. Crane.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Great Strike, W. E. Lutes.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Mr. Beecher on Bread and Water.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Science and the Apostles Creed, Spectator.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Interest Doctrine, Julius Ferrette.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
The Religion Wanted, E. R. Brown.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Mr. Andrews' "Address," E. L. Crane.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Universality, E. B. Hansen.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
"Living Words," S. H. Preston.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Reply to Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson's "Humane Appeal," Ch. de Modet.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585
Reply to Mr. Crane, Stephen Pearl Andrews.....	322	Materialism in New York, R. C. B.....	585

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Indian Policy.....	5
New England Weather, Mark Twain.....	18
The Chicago Sunday Lecture Society.....	18
The National Woman Suffrage Association.....	17
The Florence Society.....	17
The English Church and the Masses.....	17
The "Communion at the God House".....	17
About Thomas Paine—Moncre D. Conway.....	40
The Hawaiian Mission.....	41
Catholic Reaction in Belgium.....	41
The School Victory in London, M. D. Conway.....	52
Morals in the Public Schools, Thomas B. Stockwell.....	52
George Elliot, Jowett.....	64
What an Editor is Made for, Rev. L. Phillips Dobbs.....	65
A Moral and Society Cook made Insane.....	78
The Paine Bus, Dams, F. Kilgore.....	78
The Education Question.....	77
One Voice for Reason, Minot J. Savage.....	87
A New Encyclical.....	88
The Paine Bust.....	88
The Prayer-Cure Case in Chicago.....	88
"Nothing but Leaves".....	89
Tom Paine.....	89
Dr. Schenck, Moncre D. Conway.....	89
François Bulo.....	100
The Statue of Liberty.....	101
The Growth of Scepticism.....	101
The Jesuits in France.....	113
An Invitation.....	113
Harriet Martineau.....	124
The Population of the Earth.....	137
Mohammed and Christianity.....	143
Benedict de Rynosa, Felix Adler.....	160
Mr. Abbot's New Departure, T. W. H.....	171
Huxley and Darwin, M. D. Conway.....	172
Bradlaugh's Career, M. D. Conway.....	172
The Reverend Arthur Tooth.....	172
Whitefield and Moody as Revivalists.....	172
Unbelief as a Sin.....	173
A Certain.....	183
Dr. John Henry Newman.....	184
A Specimen of Joseph Cook.....	185
Politics in the School.....	185
The Scientific Method in Religion.....	185
Clerical Crusades.....	185
George Odger, One who knew him.....	185
The Popular Undertaker, Bret Harris.....	186
Mr. Emerson at the God House.....	186
National Woman Suffrage Convention, Little Doves, Blake.....	197
Insurrection in the Church.....	208
The Church of England and the State.....	208
Prosecution of Mr. Bradlaugh.....	209
Priesthood and Humanity, Myles McSwiney.....	209
Sixteenth Amendment.....	220
The Liberal League and the Grasshoppers.....	221
Views of a Broad Churchman.....	221
Mr. Bradlaugh's Prosecution, G. W. S.....	221
The Old South Bell.....	221
On the Annihilation of the Mind, John Troubridge.....	222
Progress of the Christian Amendment Movement, David McAllister.....	223
A Blighted Book.....	243
Professor Willard Fiske on Civil Service Reform, Willard Fiske.....	244
How Suffrage Works in Germany, Joseph P. Thompson.....	244
The New Law for Annual Returns of Property Exempted from Taxation.....	245
The Grasshopper Fast, D. K. B.....	245
Extracts from "Germ Thoughts".....	249
Physical Force in Politics.....	256
The Jews and the Turks, A. B.....	257
The Grasshopper Prayer in Minnesota, John W. North.....	257
Professorships for Women.....	261
The London Fair, M. D. Conway.....	261
Protect the Children.....	261
Chanucy Wright's Philosophical Discussions.....	268
Dean Stanley on "the Rock Ahead".....	268
Dean Stanley's Address, Moncre D. Conway.....	273
Celebrities at Home (The Pope at the Vatican).....	281
Joseph Cook on German Nationalism, H. M. C.....	281
Proude's "Short Studies on Great Subjects," M. D. C.....	285
Indian Civilization.....	285
Dissent Cause of Political Reform.....	285
The "Blue-Laws," True and False.....	285

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JANUARY 4, 1877.

WHOLE No. 367.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

ACCORDING TO the Statistical Abstract of the government, British India has a population of 190,000,000, of whom 139,000,000 are Hindus, 41,000,000 Mohammedans, 3,000,000 Buddhists, 1,000,000 Sikhs, and 900,000 Christians.

THE METHODISTS have appointed a committee to arrange for an "Ecumenical Conference of Methodism," or general council of all the Methodist bodies in the world,—another significant step towards universal Protestant consolidation.

THE JEWS in this country do not hanker for the "Restoration," or favor setting up a Hebrew nationality at Jerusalem. "Our Hebrew countrymen," says the Jewish Messenger, "would for nothing in the world ever renounce the beautiful title of American citizens."

THE CHAPLAINCY question threatens to come up in the Massachusetts Legislature, with reference to the quarrel between the Catholic priest and the Protestant chaplain at the State Prison. Each is jealous of the other, and wants entire religious control of the place for himself; while the State ought to wash its hands clean of all patronage of either, and devote the money they cost to good schools for the convicts.

MR. MOODY sends word to the "Hub of the Universe" that "what God has done in other places will not compare with what God is going to do for Boston." What awe-inspiring intimacy this gospeller displays with the "secret counsels of the Most High"! Cardinal Wolsey's famous "I and the King" really sounds tame. The country is waiting with a stupid stare to see just what Moody and God can accomplish by their new partnership.

MRS. BESANT makes this week a very wise reminder that the failure of existing republican institutions would not be the failure of republicanism itself; and with great acuteness she points out that the upholders of monarchy, instead of abandoning it when monarchical institutions anywhere give way, simply set to work to repair the damaged machinery. Every true American will thank her warmly for this encouraging and sympathetic word in this time of grave national peril under a disputed Presidency, and for the expression of her generous faith in this great Republic of our own devoted love.

THE SPEECH of the Hon. John Bright at Birmingham on the Eastern question was one of the noblest ever made. He appealed to the conscience, not the interests, of Englishmen, and urged them to respect the same rights in Russia which they would claim and enforce for themselves. He pleaded for justice as between nation and nation, and declared that Russia had a just claim to the freedom of the Bosphorus. When a statesman of any country rises to the height of moral considerations in the treatment of questions of national and international policy, and ranks them above considerations of mere self-aggrandizement, he is entitled to the applause of the whole world; for all mankind have an equal stake in the substitution of justice for force in the settlement of disputes among the nations. We hail Mr. Bright's magnificent statesmanship as a guide to universal peace.

PROFESSOR F. W. NEWMAN, who recently enrolled himself as a member of the Unitarian Association, and who was therefore assumed to have given up Theism in favor of Liberal Christianity, denies that he has changed his views or become a Christian at all. On the contrary, he claims that the Unitarian Association, by voting to print and circulate the writings of Theodore Parker, has advanced to his own views, which are "as little Christian as ever." Theodore Parker, however, so far as we know, always considered himself a Christian minister; and the vote to print his books is by no means to be regarded as an abandonment of Christianity. Professor Newman seems to have made a mistake in this matter which he will find it very hard to rectify. Says Mr. Conway: "This incident has been followed by a lively controversy between the Theists and the Unitarians, the conservatives of the denomination protesting that the Association is still Christian, and that they publish only such works of Parker's as maintain 'some sort of Christianity,' while young Unitarianism proclaims that Newman is right and all the Theists should follow his example." Mr. Conway adds that nothing has prevented the formation of a Free Religious Association in London but the increasing tendencies of the Unitarians to make their Association into one.

REV. DAVID H. CLARK, of Florence, Massachusetts, will not, we are confident, accuse us of a breach of trust, if we extract from a private letter this very interesting description of a charming Christmas festival: "We had a very pleasant observance of Christmas by our Sunday-school at the Hall yesterday. Our method or plan for the last two years has been quite a change from the customary mode of such celebrations, and that which had hitherto been in vogue by our Society. Instead of the usual Christmas tree, we now have a dinner in our Sunday-school room, in which all the members of the school, the parents of the children, and the choir of the Society participate. At 11 o'clock, those who had charge of the preparation of the tables, which were supplied by contributions from members of the Society, assembled in the lower Hall for this purpose. Meanwhile the children and others were being entertained in the Hall above with music, marching, and various pastimes. At 1 o'clock all were invited to the dinner below, where four or five long tables, abundantly and tastefully furnished, presented a most agreeable appearance to the already sharpened appetites. After dinner followed a more intellectual programme, consisting of speeches, sentiments, music, the reading of Christmas pieces, etc. The whole concluded with the distribution of presents, in which every member of the school, if not all present, were remembered with gifts, much exceeding the usual value of such on like occasions. In the evening we had a dramatic and musical entertainment in the large Hall, to which all the members of the school were admitted free, and all the children in the village up to fourteen years of age. All others paid an admission of twenty-five cents. We always have large audiences on these occasions."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULLIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. PROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI E. FELSENFELD,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of the "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE HEAYER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WYLER,.....Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 E. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. B. WALLMAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELLEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 E. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quilman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH E. OTIS,.....17 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HANLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N. B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The Character of Socrates.

I.

TENTH FREE LECTURE IN THE CITY HALL, DOVER, N. H.,
 MAY 10, 1869.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

"Vice it is possible to find in abundance and with ease; for the way to it is smooth, and it lies very near. But before the temple of Virtue the immortal gods have placed labor. Long and steep is the road to it, and rugged at first; but, though arduous at the start, it grows easy when thou hast scaled the height."—HESIOD.

Ten years after the famous Confederacy of Delos had been formed, by which the corner-stone was laid of the brief but brilliant empire of Athens, a child was born in the little township or deme of Alopecce, (Αλωπεκκη), almost under the shadow of the Athenian Acropolis, who was destined to become the eternal glory and the eternal shame of the imperial city. The father was Sophroniscus, a statuary or sculptor (λειτουργος), and the mother Phænarete, a midwife [she had a son also by Chæredemus, named Patrocles; Euthyd. 61.],—both being persons of humble condition; and they named the infant SOCRATES. The seventy years which lay before him were to cover the rise and fall of the Athenian hegemony, or supremacy in Greece,—the magnificent rule of Pericles, the long miseries and misfortunes of the Peloponnesian War, and the humiliating capture of Athens by the Spartan Lysander. This was the golden age of Athenian art and letters. Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, the tragic poets,—Cratinus, Eupolis, and Aristophanes, the comic poets,—Thucydides and Xenophon, the historians,—Protagoras, Gorgias, Polus, Hippias, Prodicus, the Sophists,—Polyclætus, Myron, and Phidias, the sculptors,—Polygnotus, Apollodorus, Zeuxis, and Parrhasius, the painters,—Mnesicles, Ictinus, and Callicrates, the architects,—all these, and many others who helped to make Athens the most illustrious of the Grecian cities, flourished wholly or partly within the lifetime of Socrates. But while these were all great in special departments of human excellence—great as poets, or historians, or artists,—Socrates will forever tower above them all, because he was transcendently great as a man. The Temple of Theseus, the Propylæa, the Parthenon, were indeed proud monuments of Athenian genius; but the grandest monument to the memory of that wonderful people is the Character of Socrates. That is a temple not built with hands, imperishable in the heart of humanity itself.

Although poor, the parents of Socrates gave him what was then regarded as a fair education. In later times he spoke of Prodicus [see Crito 12, where Socrates says his father had him taught music and gymnastic exercises. Men. 37. Cratyl. 2. cf. Xen. Mem. iv. 7, 3], Connus [Plat. Euthyd. 4 and 56; Menex. 3], Aspasia [Menex. 3], and Diotima [Plat. Symp. p. 27], as having been his instructors; he is reported also to have received instruction from the philosophers Archelaus [Cic. Tusc. Disp. 5, 4, 10] and Anaxagoras [Diog. Laert. II., §§19, 45], the latter of whom was banished from Athens, when Socrates was sixteen years of age, on a charge of impiety. In the workshop of his father Sophroniscus, Socrates was laboring as a sculptor, when Crito, a wealthy Athenian who afterwards became his constant companion and devoted friend, discovered his genius, and brought him to Athens. It is to Crito, according to Diogenes Laertius [II., 19], that Socrates was indebted for his education. That he had attained, however, some proficiency in the art of statuary, is probable from the testimony of the historian Pausanias, who saw, nearly five hundred years later, a figure of Mercury and a group of clothed Graces still preserved in the Acropolis as the work of Socrates [Paus. i., 22, 8, ix., 35, 2; Diog. Laert. II., 19]. Once established in Athens, he never left it, except when sent on military service or when, on one occasion, he went as a spectator to the Isthmian games [Plato, Crito, 14]. Thus, unlike many other ancient philosophers, he seems to have had no desire to travel, but found his happiness at home. In fact, like Dr. Johnson and Charles Lamb, he seldom passed outside the city walls even for a walk. "Sir," said Dr. Johnson, "when you have seen one green field, you have seen all green fields; sir, I like to look upon men. Let us walk down Cheapside." So Socrates, being once induced to take a walk in the country with his friend Phædrus, and being bantered on his unfamiliarity with the neighborhood, replied: "Pardon me, my excellent friend, for I am a lover of learning; now the fields and trees will not teach me anything, but men in the city do." [Plato, Phædrus, 10.] It was human life and human interests that charmed him most; and, though by no means insensible to the beauty of natural scenery, as is shown by this same dialogue with Phædrus, he preferred the society of men to the mute companionship of Nature.

In person, Socrates was homely and awkward. His nose was flat, his lips thick, his eyes prominent, his movements ungainly, his figure anything but graceful or elegant; and even Alcibiades, who truly loved him, compared him in appearance to a Satyr or Silenus. But there was something about him that made men forget this rude exterior. "The outside of Socrates," says Plato, "was that of a Satyr and buffoon; but his soul was all virtue, and from within him came such divine and pathetic things as pierced the heart and drew tears from them that heard him." Alcibiades declared that he was forced oftentimes to stop his ears and flee away, lest he should "grow old in listening to his talk." [Plat. Symp. 39.]

His habits were as singular as his person. He used to walk barefoot about the city, conversing with the people he met; sometimes he would stand still for hours, absorbed in thought. "He was constantly in public, for he went in the morning to the places for walking and the gymnasium; at the time when the market was full, he was to be seen there; and the rest of the day he was where he was likely to meet the greatest number of people; he was usually engaged in discourse, and all who pleased were at liberty to hear him." [Xen. Mem. i., 1, 10.] Books he cared little for, since these he could not interrogate nor compel to explain themselves. The work of his life, to which he sacrificed his occupation as a statuary and every other means of gaining riches, was the self-imposed task of public instruction,—conversation with the people, young or old, rich or poor, on moral and philosophical subjects. He talked,—but gave no regular lectures, opened no school, organized no body of disciples. His object was very simple,—to make men wiser, and thereby better. But no other philosopher or teacher of Athens, or any other Grecian city, ever taught in this indiscriminate manner, or became a public talker for instruction. [Grote, viii., 555.] In his own peculiar way, he "went about doing good." But his way was very peculiar. Unlike most teachers, he did not profess to teach, but only to inquire. As for himself, he declared he knew nothing; and what he aimed at was to make others conscious of their own ignorance, in order that, having become more modest, they might be willing and anxious to learn. Now the truth which, above all others, most people least like to learn is the fact of their own ignorance; and Socrates raised up against himself a host of enemies [Diog. Laert. II., 38] by the cool and calm way in which he tore off the mask of vanity and self-conceit from those who thought themselves wise. He soon became known to every one. Whenever a man put on the assumption of wisdom, especially if admiring listeners crowded about him, Socrates would step up to him and ask to be instructed. Pleased with this deference, the man would assent to the request. Socrates would then put some simple question, which the man would answer confidently without much reflection. Another question would follow, based on the reply just received; and so on. At last, leading the man on from one point to another, Socrates would show that the most absurd consequences were involved in his statements, and thus prove not only to the man himself, but also to the laughing crowd about him, that his assumption of knowledge was wholly false. If the man got angry and went off in a passion, that was the end of it; but if, more wisely, he was content to swallow his mortification, and willing to profit by the lesson he had received, then he would continue with Socrates until he had laid the basis of real and useful knowledge. This was the case, for example, with Euthydemus. "When Socrates," says Xenophon [Mem. IV., II., 40], "saw that he was thus disposed, he no longer puzzled him with questions, but explained to him, in the simplest and clearest manner, what he thought that he ought to know, and what it would be best for him to study."

Passing his life in this manner, laboring for the welfare of his fellow-men and receiving usually only ill-will in return, he had need to be economical; and he was so. [Plut. De Gen. Soc. §11; Diog. II., 27.] He received from his father by inheritance a fortune of eighty minæ, or about $1400, which he lent to a friend and lost wholly. Of this loss he never complained. [Libanius, Apol. Socr.] Although his property, according to Xenophon, amounted at his death to only five minæ, or about $90.00* [or three minæ, including a house: see Bohn's Plato, vi., 418], he always refused to receive large presents from his friends, many of whom were of great wealth, but would gladly have bestowed them. [Ælian, Var. Hist. ix., 20; xi., 12; Diog. Laert. II., §§24, 25, 30, 74.] Archelaus, king of Macedonia, desired to have him at his Court: Socrates refused, saying that he would not incur an obligation greater than he could repay. [Seneca, De Benefic. vii., 24; "Noluit ire ad voluntariam servitutem, quæ, cuius libertatem civitas libera ferre non potuit."] Once he remarked, in company of his friends, "If I had money, I should buy me a cloak"; whereupon a strife ensued, who should have the privilege and honor of making this small present. [Seneca De Benef. vii., 24.] At this time, the Sophists, or professional instructors at Athens, were accustomed to receive large compensation for their services [Meno. 29; Hipp. Maj. 4, 5, So Xen. Symp. 1, 5: 4, 62]; but Socrates invariably refused to accept an obolus for his. For instance, Aristippus of Cyrene offered him a large sum of money in return for instruction [Diog. Laert. II., viii., §2]; Socrates refused it, but welcomed him among his followers. Yet Aristippus, when he became himself a well-known philosopher, forgot the example he had beheld, and charged high prices, like the rest; a fact to which Xenophon refers, when he says: "Socrates was a friend to the common people and to every man; for though he received many, both Athenians and foreigners, who wished to hear him, he never required pay for his communications, but gave, from what he had, ungrudgingly to all; while some sold afterwards to others for a high price what they had freely received from him." [Mem. I., 2, 60. The same is told of Æschines in Diog. Laert. II., 61.] With a noble pride, not to be otherwise than respected, Socrates himself declares, in his defence before the judges,—"For money I converse not, but hold myself ready to be questioned alike by rich and poor, and to give replies to every one that seeks to hear." [Plato, Apol. xxi.] These words breathe the spirit of Paul, who said that he worked night and day, that he might be chargeable to no one. [I. Thess. II., 9.]†

*According to Plato, Gorgias, §145, two drachmæ (= $0.35) was the fare from Athens to Egypt, about 660 miles. With the same purchasing power, $2.00, the fare from Dover to Boston, which is about 68 miles, would more than carry one to Europe.

†"Socrates in pompa, cum magna via auri argentique ferretur, Quam multa non desidero! inquit." [Cic. Tusc. Quæst. Lib. 5. See Diog. Laert. II., 7, 9.]

With feelings such as these, it is plain that Socrates could indulge no luxurious tastes. Though very poor, and as well-known for his old cloak as Horace Greeley for his white coat, he was scrupulously neat in his person and his house, and was displeased at the affectation of Antisthenes the Cynic, who took pleasure in being always dirty and ragged. When Antisthenes appeared one day in ostentatious poverty, with a thread-bare garment, Socrates drily remarked, "I see your vanity, Antisthenes, peering through the holes in your cloak." [Ælian. iv., 11, and ix., 35. Diog. Laert. ii., 38.] No one could exceed Socrates in frugality and temperance; and his temperance was of a kind that deserves the name, being habitual self-control and not ascetic abstinence. The testimony of Xenophon, one of his most warmly attached friends and followers, is strong and clear upon this point. "He disciplined his body and soul by such a course of life, that any one who should adopt a similar one would, unless some supernatural influence prevented, live in cheerfulness and health, and never lack the small expense it would require. So frugal was he, that I doubt if any one could work so little as not to earn enough to meet the wants of Socrates. Of food he took so much only as he could relish, and came to his meals so prepared that his appetite for food was a sauce to it. Every kind of drink was sweet to him, because he never drank unless he were dry. If on invitation he went to a feast, he took care not to overload his stomach,—a thing most difficult to most men. Those who could not do this, he counselled never to take what would stimulate them to eat when not hungry and to drink when not thirsty; for these, he said, were the things that disordered the stomach, the head, and the soul." [Mem. i., 3, 6.] "He proved himself even a better friend to temperance by his life than by his words. For he was not only superior to sensual pleasures, but also to the greed of money-making, thinking that he who would take money from any and every one does but set up a master over himself, and submit to a slavery than which there is no slavery more disgraceful." [Ibid. i., 6, 5; cf. iv., 5, 1: i., 2, 6.] Hence, when Antipho the Sophist found fault with his frugal mode of life, Socrates calmly replied,—“You, O Antipho, seem to think that happiness consists in luxury and extravagance; but I think that to have no wants is to be like God, and to have the fewest wants is to be as much as possible like God; that to be like God is to be perfect, and to be as much as possible like God is the nearest approach to perfection.” [Ibid. i., 6, 10. ὅτι θεῶν means the god-like, the divine nature.] How grand a spirit is here revealed! Since God is infinitely blessed because the sources of all blessedness are in himself, it was the faith of this wonderful man that the human soul attains the highest beatitude possible to it by becoming in the highest possible degree like Him. To want is to be imperfect,—to be in bondage to the external; and he is the most godlike man whose wants are least. When we remember that Socrates, whose ideal was thus as lofty as that of Jesus when he said: “Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father who is in heaven is perfect,”—was, of all the great souls known to history, the one who at the same time gave to humanity the most in the way of service and demanded from humanity the least in the way of homage to himself, then we perceive that our ability to give is greatest when our wants are fewest. He who is most free from wants is most at leisure from himself to supply the wants of others; he is at once the most self-centred and the most unselfish,—therefore, the most like God. If I err not, this is the divine meaning hidden in this marvellous reply of Socrates. [See Ælian. Var. Hist. 9, 29. Diog. Laert. ii., 27.]

But it is the character of Socrates, as shown in his life and death, rather than his sayings and thoughts, however grand, that I wish now to illustrate; and since character never reveals itself more completely or more sincerely than at home, let us look, so far as we may, into his domestic life. The unmarried man can neither know himself, nor be known by others, for married life applies peculiar and most searching tests of character. Not much is recorded of the married life of Socrates; yet what is recorded is of the highest importance to our inquiry. The wife of Socrates was named Xantippe (Ἄντιππη), and bore him three sons, Lamprocles, Sophroniscus, and Menexenus.* According to all accounts, she was a woman of most ungovernable temper; and her name has become another word for vixen or scold. But the gentleness and patience of Socrates are no less proverbial than the passionate temper and furious outbreaks of Xantippe. He bore the hurricanes and tornadoes of her wrath with amazing equanimity. She was at times so transported with rage as to tear off his cloak in the open street. One day, having vented in words of reproach as much of her anger as she could, and finding this means of relief quite inadequate to the needs of the occasion, she seized a sloop-jar and poured its contents all over him. But Socrates only laughed, and, wiping his head, good-naturedly remarked that “so much thunder must needs be followed by a shower!” At another time, having received from her a smart box on the ear, he coolly said, “Tis a great misfortune not to know when to put on a helmet!” [Sen. De Ira, i., 11.] When asked how it happened that he married so fierce a virago, he is reported to have given this jocose reason for his choice: “Those who wish to become skilled in horsemanship select the most spirited horses; after becoming able to bridle these, they believe they can bridle all others. Now, as it is my wish to live and converse with men, I married this woman, being firmly convinced that in case I should be able to endure her, I should be able to endure all others.” [Xen. Convivium, i., 5.]

Notwithstanding the freaks of Xantippe's temper, there seems to have remained some true affection on both sides. Cato the Censor, according to Plutarch [Cato the Censor], “used to say . . . that he admired nothing more in Socrates than his living in an easy and quiet manner with an ill-tempered wife and stupid children. When he had a son born, no business, however urgent, except it related to the public, could hinder him from being present while his wife washed and swaddled the infant. For she suckled it herself; nay, she often gave the breast to the sons of her servants, to inspire them with a brotherly regard for her own.” [See also Ælian. xii., 15.] This glimpse into the home of Socrates gives us a beautiful insight into his character, and inspires involuntary respect for the genuine human quality of the man. It is further stated by Plato [Phædo, 9], that, on the day when Socrates was to drink the poison, several friends assembled early in the morning before his cell, and, after waiting a while, were admitted. “When we entered,” says Phædo, “we found Socrates just freed from his bonds, and Xantippe (you know her) holding his little boy and sitting by his side. As soon as Xantippe saw us, she wept aloud, and said such things as women are wont to say on such occasions, as, ‘Socrates, your friends will now converse with you for the last time and you with them.’ But Socrates, looking towards Crito, said, ‘Crito, let some one now take her home.’ Upon which some of Crito's attendants led her away, wailing and beating her breast.” A striking illustration of the generous and forgiving spirit with which Socrates regarded his scolding wife, the forbearance he showed towards her faults, and the appreciation he had of her virtues, is found in Xenophon's defence of him after his death [Mem. ii., 2]. Lamprocles, his eldest son, had been angry with his mother, and shown her some marks of disrespect. Socrates endeavors to awaken contrition in the young man's mind, by appealing to his sense of gratitude, and depicting the unselfish care and continual sacrifices of mothers for their children. To all this Lamprocles demurs, saying, “Even if she has done all you say, and many times more than this, no one could stand her ill-temper.” “But,” said Socrates, “which do you think the harder to bear, the ill-temper of a wild beast or that of a mother?” Lamprocles is frank, to say no more,—“that of a mother,” he replies, “at least, of a mother like mine.” “Has she, then,” asks Socrates, “ever bitten or kicked you, as wild beasts have often done to many?” “No,” answers Lamprocles; “but, by Jupiter, she says such things as no one could put up with, to save his entire fortune.” “But,” argues Socrates, “do you forget all the trouble and pain you have caused her from your infancy by your peevish words and actions, in the day and in the night, and all the anxiety she has felt for you in sickness?” “But I never have done or said anything,” pleaded Lamprocles, “at which she could feel ashamed.” “What of that?” replied his father; “is it harder for you to bear what she says, than for actors to hear themselves abused on the stage?” “But actors,” says Lamprocles, “know that stage threats and reproaches mean nothing.” “Yet you,” Socrates rejoins, “are angry with your mother, although you know that, whatever she says, she not only means no harm, but wishes you more good than any other human being! Or do you really suppose that your mother wishes you evil?” “No, indeed,” exclaims Lamprocles, “I cannot suppose that.” “Do you say, then,” replies Socrates, “that this mother who is so devoted to you, who takes care of you in sickness to the best of her ability, that you may get well again and may lack nothing needful to your recovery, and who, moreover, implores the gods for many blessings on your head and pays her vows for you,—do you say that she is a harsh mother? For my part, I think that, if you cannot endure such a mother, you cannot endure anything that is good! Do you think that you ought to pay no respect to your mother, who loves you more than any one else? If you are wise, my son, you will entreat the gods to pardon you, if you have been guilty of disrespect to your mother.”

Is there not more practical religion in this conversation of Socrates with his son than in a hundred average sermons? What a proof it gives of almost unexampled greatness of soul, thus to defend a scolding wife, who made his home a place of daily torment for him, against the natural effects of her own stinging tongue! Jesus was never subjected to the daily martyrdom of an unhappy marriage, though, if he had been, I doubt not he would have endured it with a similar noble spirit. But even he could not have shown a nobler or diviner.

Whenever Athens called upon her sons to bear arms in her service or defence, Socrates never turned a deaf ear to her appeal. On more than one occasion he proved himself a cool and intrepid soldier. His physical courage and power of enduring the hardships of the camp were remarkable even in those days, when every citizen was expected to be brave and hardy. He fought at Potidea and Amphipolis in the earlier years of the Peloponnesian War. Alcibiades, a young Athenian of high birth, great wealth, and brilliant talents, who was a pupil and ardent friend of Socrates, was his fellow-soldier during the campaign in Thrace, and bore testimony to his fortitude and valor. [Plato, Sympos.] Although the Thracian winters were very severe, Socrates used to walk barefoot on the ice and to wear only his customary cloak, while the other soldiers put fleeces under their feet and wrapped themselves in hairy skins. In a scarcity of provisions, there was none who could endure hunger like him. He was observed standing in one spot during the whole of a summer's day, and the night that followed, engaged in profound meditation; nor did he depart until sunrise, when he offered a prayer and went to his tent. The intrepidity he manifested at the battle of Potidea, B. C. 429, a very hard-fought field [Plato, Charm. §2], has been especially recorded. “When the battle took place after which the generals decreed to me the prize of courage,” says Alcibiades [Plat. Symp. §43, Plat. Vit. Alcib., vol. II., p. 39], “Socrates alone of all men was the savior of my life, standing by me when I had fallen and was wounded, and preserving both myself and my arms from the hands of the enemy. On that occasion I entreated the generals to decree the prize, as it was most due, to him. And this, O Socrates, you cannot deny, that when the generals, wishing to conciliate a person of my rank, desired to give me the prize, you were even more anxious than they that this glory should be attributed, not to yourself, but to me.”

Several years afterwards Socrates took part in the disastrous invasion of Boeotia, and displayed the coolest and most determined valor on the fatal field of Delium, B. C. 424. Here he saved the life of another of his disciples and friends, Xenophon, who, falling from his horse in the heat of the conflict, was rescued from the foe by Socrates (“ἀντὶ τῆς σωτηρίας . . . ἡδυνάμην βροταῖον,” Diog. Laert. ii., 22, Smith's Hist. Greece, 383.) Alcibiades was present also at this engagement, and bears witness again to the heroic conduct of his friend. “To see Socrates,” he says, “when our army was scattered in flight at Delium, was a spectacle worthy to behold. Here I happened to be on horseback among the cavalry, he on foot, heavily armed. After the total rout of our troops, he and Laches retreated together; I came up by chance, and, seeing them, bade them be of good cheer, for I would not leave them. Here, then, I had a better view of Socrates than at Potidea; for, being myself on horseback, I had less concern for my own safety. In the first place, how greatly did he surpass Laches in presence of mind and bravery! . . . He bore himself with a lofty air, and glanced his eye around, quietly surveying both friends and foes; so that it was evident to every one, even from afar, that whoever should venture to attack this man, must gird himself for a desperate struggle. Hence both he and Laches retired in safety; for scarcely any one who thus conducts himself in war is touched; but the pursuit is of those who turn and run away.” [Plat. Symp. 43.] To this testimony of Alcibiades may be added that of Laches himself, the companion of Socrates in his retreat, who says: “Moreover, Lysimachus, do not omit the acts of the man; for I have elsewhere beheld him, not only giving a support to his father, but to his country likewise. For, in the flight from Delium, he retired along with me; and I tell you, that if the rest had been willing to be such as he was, our city would have stood erect, nor would so great a disaster have befallen it.” [Plato, Lach. 4.]

Not alone in the uproar of battle did Socrates prove himself a man; for his moral was even greater than his physical courage. There is no severer test of a man's bravery than to be obliged to face a furious mob. A mob has no more conscience or compassion than a pack of hungry wolves; and he who, supported solely by his own inward conviction of right, can hold them in check and foil them in their bloody purpose, has mastered every fear. The wild passions of the populace beat as idly against Socrates, as the breakers in a storm beat against a rock. One event in his life shows his moral courage in so magnificent a light, that it would be impossible to pass it over in silence. It was a matter of religion among the Greeks to bury the bodies of the dead with pious care, since the ghosts of the unburied were believed to wander a hundred years on the banks of the Styx; and the Athenian commanders were required after a battle to discharge this duty most scrupulously. Towards the close of the Peloponnesian War, B. C. 406, the Athenians won a victory over the Lacedæmonians in the great sea-fight of Arginusæ. A dozen Athenian galleys were floating about in a disabled condition after the battle; but, in consequence of a violent storm that ensued, no attempt was made to rescue the survivors or pick up the bodies of the dead for burial. The six generals were summoned home to answer for this conduct. The friends and relations of the deceased appeared in public in black clothes and with shaven heads, and their lamentations in a season of festivity and universal rejoicing inflamed the passions of the fickle multitude against those whose valor had saved the State. At the next meeting of the great Assembly of the people, Callixenus moved to pass immediately a verdict of guilty on the six generals, though they had been only partially heard in self-defence; and, what was not only flagrantly unjust, but also directly counter to Athenian law, he moved to include them all in one sweeping sentence of death. Socrates was at that time a member of the Senate, the only public office he ever held; and, in accordance with the custom of Athens, he happened that day to be Epistates, or presiding officer of the Assembly. It became, therefore, his duty to put to the vote every motion that was made. But he refused point-blank to put to the vote the illegal and unjust motion of Callixenus, and thereby to become an accomplice in the murder. The other officers uttered threats of having him indicted himself for opposing the will of the people; the Assembly urged with passion, and demanded in tones of thunder that the vote should be put. But, calm and inflexible as a cliff of granite, Socrates steadfastly persisted in his refusal, declaring that he had taken an oath to obey the laws, that the motion was contrary to the laws, and that he chose to observe his oath rather than to please the people in what was wrong or to seek safety from their threat; adding that the gods know all things, both what is said and done and meditated in silence, and are present everywhere. “He would not,” says Xenophon, “permit the people to give a vote contrary to the law, but encountered such a storm of rage in defence of the laws as I think no other man could have withstood." [Mem. iv., 4, 2.] For that day Socrates conquered; but on the next day another Epistates came into office, and the vote was put and carried; the generals were executed, and another act of infamy was added to the long list of Athenian crimes against their benefactors. [Smith's Hist. Greece, p. 342; Lewis' Hist. Phil., p. 131; Plat. Apol. Socr. 62; Xen. Mem. i., 1, 18; Plat. (?) Axioch. 12; Diog. Laert. ii., 22.]

*The story that Socrates married a second wife also, Myrto, grand-daughter of Aristides, though sanctioned by Plutarch [Aristides] is refuted by Pausanias, and is otherwise incredible. [Atheniensis, xiii., p. 556. Plat. Arist. i., Diog. Laert. ii., 28.]

After the downfall of Athens, the abolition of the democracy, and the establishment of the cruel oligarchy known as that of the Thirty Tyrants, Socrates was compelled to assert his manhood in a different manner. Critias, a leader of the Thirty, and formerly a disciple of Socrates himself, conceived a violent hatred against him, knowing him to be a man who would never sanction acts of oppression. Among the laws of the new oligarchy, therefore, Critias caused one to be inserted declaring that "none should teach the art of disputation." The Thirty Tyrants abandoned themselves to every species of extortion, pillage, and bloodshed; in the course of a few months they are said to have put to death fifteen hundred persons, a large proportion of them merely for the sake of confiscating their property. With his wonted freedom, Socrates continued to discourse on all subjects, including that of good government. On one occasion he observed: "It seems surprising to me, if a man, becoming herdsman of a number of cattle, and rendering the cattle fatter and leaner (χελίπους), does not confess that he is a bad herdsman; but it seems even more surprising, if a man, becoming ruler of a city, and rendering the inhabitants fatter and leaner, neither feels shame, nor thinks himself a bad ruler of the city." Soon afterwards, Critias and Charicles summoned Socrates before them, showed him the law, and forbade him any longer to discourse to young men. "I am prepared," said Socrates, "to obey the laws; but, that I may not transgress through ignorance, define for me the age at which I must consider men to be young." "Do not discourse," replied Charicles, "to any under thirty years of age." "But," said Socrates, with provoking coolness, "if a young man asks me 'Where does Charicles live?' or 'Where is Critias?' may I not answer him, if I know?" "Yes, such questions as that," replied Charicles. At this point, Critias interposed: "You must stop talking about those everlasting shoemakers and carpenters and smiths; they must be pretty well worn out from being so often in your mouth." "You mean," Socrates answered, "that I must cease using them as illustrations on justice, piety, and similar subjects." "Yes, by Jupiter," retorted Charicles; "and you must abstain from illustrations taken from herdsman; if you do not, take care lest you yourself make cattle fatter." From this threat of Charicles [Xen. Mem. i., ii., 31-37], it is plain that the Thirty Tyrants feared the effects on the young men of Athens produced by the free and fearless speech of Socrates, and therefore they resolved to silence him at once.

There is no evidence to show that Socrates directly disobeyed this law against freedom of speech. Yet it may well be doubted whether he obeyed it. When, only a very few years later, he stood before his judges in the open court, on trial for his life, he said to them with uncompromising frankness: "If you should acquit me on condition that I cease my instruction of youth, I should say to you, 'O Athenians, I honor and love you, but I will obey God rather than you; and as long as I breathe and am able, I will never cease to philosophize, and to exhort, and to say to every man I meet, Oh friend, do you feel no shame, striving for money and reputation and office, but caring nothing for wisdom and truth and your own soul, how to make this as noble as possible?—For be ye well assured, O Athenians, the God commands me thus to live.'" [Plat. Apol. xvii.] If this was the temper of the man, when he knew that to utter such words was to pronounce his own death-sentence, it may well be doubted whether he obeyed the mandate of the Thirty. I surmise that he still continued to discourse as usual, and that some lingering and invincible reverence in the mind of Critias for his old instructor,—for this man whom he knew to be incorruptible, whether by hope or fear,—deterred him from staining with blood the gray hairs of Athens' greatest son.

However this may be, another trial of his integrity followed shortly afterwards. In order to implicate as many as possible in their own crimes, the Thirty Tyrants used to compel others to become involuntary coadjutors in committing them. With this purpose in view, they ordered five distinguished Athenians, Socrates among them, to go to Salamis and fetch home from there Leon, a man of character and wealth who had fled thither for safety. "But," exclaimed Socrates, in his Defence, "the government, although so severe, did not terrify me into an act of injustice; but when we left the government-house, the four indeed went to Salamis and seized Leon, but I went quietly home. And perhaps I should have perished for this, had not the government been speedily overthrown." [Plat. Apol. Socr. xx. Cf. Xenophon, Mem. iv., 4, 3; Hell. ii., 3, 39; Plat. Epist. vii. Diog. Laert. ii., 24.]

Thus for physical and moral courage alike,—for that nobility of spirit which makes a man despise danger and death and, above all, dishonor or wrong of any kind,—Socrates was preëminent. But many who can stand erect before a storm of passion succumb before the light breeze of ridicule. Perhaps there is nothing harder to bear than a laugh. Wit is rarely just; and he who can endure to be publicly laughed at without losing his equanimity is either exceedingly stupid or exceedingly wise. This trial of character also had to be undergone by Socrates, whose awkwardness of figure and carriage, and whose eccentric mode of life, especially exposed him to the jests of the keen-witted Athenians. Often, also, the mortification and rage of persons whose weaknesses or follies he so mercilessly exposed brought upon him occasional assaults of a violent nature. Sometimes he was even struck, or subjected to other personal insults [Diog. Laert. ii., 21]; but he bore all such indignities with good-humor [Diog. L. ii., 27, 21], sometimes with a withering sarcasm. On one occasion, a young man went so far as to kick him in public, at which the bystanders were so incensed that they wished to prosecute him; but Socrates effectually punished the young fellow, by dryly remarking to his friends, "If a jackass had kicked me, would you have had me kick him back?" ["τοῦτον ἤξωσσε ἄν"; Plut. De Educ. Puer. §14. "ἔκρινεν ἂν αὐτὸν ἐλάττωσαν;" Diog. Laert. ii., 21]. Plutarch adds that the young man was so cut by this retort, and by the nickname of "the Kicker" which stuck to him ever after, that he at last went off and hung himself; but this addition has so strong a flavor of the imagination that it may be regarded as apocryphal. The reply of Jesus—"Why smitest thou me?" shows equal resentment, less wit, but more dignity.

The work to which Socrates felt himself appointed by the gods,—which he believed to be truly a divine mission,—was of a nature, as we have seen, to create a host of enemies. No one saw this more clearly than he. With a certain mixture of playful humor and deep conviction, he used to say that the God had sent him to the city, as a gadfly to a large and noble horse that had grown sluggish and needed to be aroused. [Plat. Apol. xviii.] The unpopularity of Socrates was, it must be confessed, no less natural than that of the gadfly to which he likened himself. Could anything be more exasperating than to be button-holed at the street-corner by a man whose object was to prick the iridescent bubble of your self-conceit? To be sure, his motive was to make you nobler, by showing how absurdly you were living, and how ignoble the ends at which you were aiming. But then how impudent it was in the fellow, to busy himself with reforming your character? Why could he not be like other people, and mind his own business? With all my admiration for him, I fear I must admit him to have been to the average man an awful bore. When this gadfly by profession came buzzing about the streets of Athens, who can wonder that there was a stampede among the horses it was his mission to sting? How the quacks must have scattered at his approach! How the great popular teachers of the day, the so-called "sophists" with their fine airs and elegant attire, must have hated this homely, ungainly, barefooted, and meanly-clad man, who exposed to public ridicule their overstrained pretensions! It is very easy to see why Socrates was unpopular.

But this unpopularity was intensified into malice and envy, when the great god of Greece, Apollo, speaking through the lips of the inspired Pythian priestess at Delphi, declared to Chærephon that of all living men Socrates was the wisest. ["Ἄνθρωπος ἀνθρώπων Σωκράτης σοφώτατος." Diog. Laert. ii., 37.] There can be no doubt that the people of Athens, who were always jealous of superiority of any kind, and belonged to that class of democrats who cannot endure to see any one richer or happier or wiser or more admired than themselves, conceived a strong dislike to Socrates on account of this oracle. A rich man's property they could confiscate with ease; but how could they confiscate Socrates' wisdom? Or what could they have done with it, if they had got it,—having no use for it themselves? Those pretentious impostors and wind-bags whose characters Socrates had exposed to the people took advantage of the popular jealousy, and prevailed on Aristophanes, the witliest and most brilliant, perhaps, of the comic poets of that or any other age, to satirize him in a comedy, and bring him on the stage before the public in a false, absurd, and totally unjust light. As a specimen of the comic drama, the Clouds of Aristophanes is of unsurpassed ability and genius; but as a picture of the character of Socrates, it is an utterly unscrupulous libel. It introduces the philosopher in a basket, hoisted up among the clouds, and selling his instructions to an old scapegrace called Streperades, for the purpose of enabling him to cheat his creditors by legal subtleties. The old man himself proves too stupid to be taught, and therefore sends his son Pheidippides to learn in his stead. The first use to which the young man turns his new accomplishments is to beat his own father, and then to prove by invincible logic that this course of treatment is eminently just and right. In every scene where Socrates appears, he is made to utter a thousand impetuous against the gods, and to talk like a man of the greatest vanity who boasts of his ability to confound truth with falsehood, and make the worse appear the better cause. The populace were carried away by the sardonic wit of the comedy, thundered their applause, and ordered the name of Aristophanes to be set above that of all his competitors for their favor. The comedy happened to be first represented at the time of the Dionysiac festival, when Athens was filled with a vast concourse of strangers. A great crowd, therefore, poured into the theatre to behold the new play. It was seldom that Socrates went to see the pieces of the comic poets, because his sense of justice was offended by the unscrupulous misrepresentations of which they were guilty. But with his characteristic coolness he is said to have gone to the theatre on this occasion; and when the strangers, not knowing him, began to make some disturbance inquiring who this Socrates was that was thus lampooned, he calmly rose and remained standing during the rest of the piece, in order to gratify their curiosity. [Ælian. Var. Hist. ii., 13.] Some one of those near, amazed at seeing his indifference to ridicule, asked him whether he were not angry at the impudence of the poet, to which Socrates replied, that he was made fun of in the theatre as if he were present at a great drinking-party: "ἐς γὰρ ἐν συμποσίῳ μεγίστην τὴν βλάβην σκάνδαλον." [Plut. De Educ. Puer. §14]; that one should know how to take a joke. He once remarked, also, doubtless with reference to this play of Aristophanes, that we ought to offer ourselves to the comic poets of our own accord; for if they spoke the truth, we should correct the faults they satirized; but if otherwise, what they said was nothing to us. [Diog. Laert. ii., 36.] Such superiority to ridicule as Socrates evinced by this conduct seems to imply almost as great a moral character, as complete a moral equipolence, as is manifested by his heroic conduct before the mob and before the Thirty Tyrants.

I will close what I have to say concerning Socrates this evening with a few anecdotes and detached sayings that have come down to us.

Once, while looking at the great multitude and variety of the articles exposed for sale in the shops, he was heard to say to himself,—“How many things I have no need of!” And one of his favorite quotations was as follows: “Silver plate and fine purple are useful on the stage, but not in real life.” [Diog. Laert. ii., 25.] Yet on occasion, as when, for instance, he attended a banquet at the house of Plato, he did not disdain to clothe himself handsomely, out of respect to his host. [Ibid. 27.]

“Leisure,” he once said, “is the finest of all possessions.” [Ibid. 31.]

Some one once said to him that Antisthenes (the cynic), a man of sterling character, had had a Thracian mother; to which Socrates replied, with a characteristic sarcasm on his own countrymen, “Did you suppose that so noble a man could have been born to two Athenians?” [Ibid. 31.]

In his old age he learned to play on the lyre. [Diog. Laert. ii., 32; Plato, Euthyd. 4; Quint. i., 10, 13.] When asked if he were not ashamed to learn such an accomplishment, he replied, “There is no disgrace in learning what one does not know.” [Diog. L. 32.]

Being once asked what was the especial virtue of a young man, he replied, “Freedom from excess.” [“τὸ μὴ ἐν ἄγαν.” Diog. Laert. ii., 32.]

Somebody once inquired whether it were better to marry, or not. “Which ever you do,” said Socrates, “you will repent it.” [Ibid.]

He once remarked that the young ought continually to survey themselves in the looking-glass, in order, if they were handsome, to be worthy of it, but if otherwise, to conceal their ugliness by their good education. [Ibid. 33.]

Having once asked some rich men to supper, Xantippe was in great trouble at the meagreness of her larder, until Socrates remarked,—“Never mind about that; if they are temperate, they can get along well enough, but if greedy, we need not care for them.” [Ibid. 34.]

“Other men,” he said, “live to eat; I eat to live.” [Ibid.]

His disciple Æschines, seeing how his rich companions, like Alcibiades, gave presents to their teachers, once said to him, “I am poor, and have nothing else to give, but I give you myself.” “Do you not see,” replied Socrates kindly, “that you have given the best gift of all?”

Some one once remarked to him, “Does not so-and-so curse you?” “No,” was the sublime reply of Socrates, “for his curses do not reach me.”

And with that great saying echoing in our souls, we will take our leave of him to-night.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

Evolution is to be added, as previously shown, to the Concrete and the Abstract, as a third term, or third member of a trio of fundamental discriminations. It is semi-concrete and semi-abstract (still without being the Abstract-Concrete of Spencer, which is merely a branch of the Concrete). It is Concrete as to the materials involved, within or among which the evolution takes place; and it is Abstract in respect to the laws guiding, or involved in, the process. If we were to say that the Concrete is One, and the Abstract Two, then Evolution is Three, as a new Concretizing of the One and the Two.

Let us now denominate the Concrete, this (as it were) new domain of "Nature" (now including, also, "Mind" or Human Nature) the Naturism, as embracing all natural objects, bunched, concreted, or grown-together; let us call the Abstract the Scientism, as peculiarly the domain of Scientifics properly so-called; and let us then call the Evolutionary the Artism—of universal being—the region of what is accomplished, or of what is wrought or is being wrought into "the thing of beauty" which is the Cosmos. In this sense Nature has her own domain of Artism, or of ideal perfection achieved, or undergoing the process of achievement, and this is Evolution.

We may now leave the domain of language, and pass over to that of the human body, taken as a type of living bodies generally; and so of Biology, the science of living things. The human body has also, necessarily, as everything else has, a Without, a Within, and a Between. The withoutness of the body is the fleshy envelopment of the bony structure, essentially what in the animal carcass is called the meat (the muscle, fat, skin, and other tegumentary substances). The within of the body is the viscera (viscerism), or in the blunt language of common life, "the inwards," as the without might then be called the outwards. In fine, the betweenness of the body is the bony framework itself, or what is known as the skeleton.

But here, as in the cases of the Universe, at large, and of language, previously considered, the Without and the Within fall together into a single larger class of being, what, in this case of the body, we denominate inate "the Soft-Solids." The bony framework, by itself, then substantially contains the true "Solids"; and a third department now comes in, to complete the new trigrade arrangement; namely, "the fluids" of the body. This last class signifies nutrition, or life, circulation, growth, change, in a word Evolution, or dynamis expressed in new conditions.

We find ourselves here in the presence of the most externally simple, primitive, and obtrusive of physiological discriminations. Every student of medicine recalls the fact that the first idea taught him in this department of science was the distribution of the materials of the body into Solids, Soft-Solids, and Fluids. (Even this little change in the order of their mention, by which the Solids are now the first to be named, has a significance, which I will indicate subsequently.) It will be new, however, when we are required to observe, as we now are, that the skeleton of the man is the abstract man (as to his body); in other words, that the skeleton coincides with, or repeats, within the human body, "the Abstract" of Spencer in his classification of the domains of universal being, furnishing the Sciences; that the Soft-Solids of the body coincide, in like manner, with, or repeat, "the Concrete," and that the fluids of the body are, in like manner, analogous with "Evolution."

This as between the human body and the world of being taken as a whole. But, again, as between both these and language; it now appears that the Grammatico-logical domain of language (the form) coincides with, or repeats, the skeleton, within the human body, and the Abstract in being, at large; that the lexical domain of language (the matter) coincides with the Soft Solids in the body, and the Concrete in the world at large; and, finally, that Etymology, or phonetic growth and decay, the internal history of language, coincides with the fluidic circulation within the body, and with Evolution in the world at large. If we were to say the evolution of the world at large, the evolution of language, and the evolution of the human body, we should have no great difficulty in being comprehended. Hearers or readers would understand, without a word of explanation, and would spontaneously recognize that there is something in common, in these various spheres of being, which authorized us in applying the term evolution to all and to each of them. The point of newness here is in determining what this common element is, and in arriving at the observation that it is identical or coincident with some sort of fluidic condition such as is most favorable to change; the culmination of which state, I may add, is in that unstable equilibrium of prox-elementary substances which is peculiarly adapted to the advent of life—and, also, to that of the death of the prior conditions.

It is a greater strain upon existing habits of thought to recognize that a skeleton is literally an abstract man; and so, a type, sample, or analogue of Abstractness, universally. Indeed, the idea that there are types, symbols, or real analogues of things, in Nature, has been heretofore a poetic, or, at best, a mystical or cabalistic, rather than a philosophico-scientific conception, or discovery. We are now to accustom ourselves to look for these types and symbols on every hand, until the universe which we are inspecting will undergo a magical change to our view, as if the light were being turned upon the interior of a great cathedral, so that we rapidly sense the wonderful correspondence of architectural details and the unity of design, in phenomena which had previously lain in shadow, and appeared as a confused mass of unrelated parts. It is Universology which will be the new and revealing light to the understanding, and Universal Analogy—the answering of infinite resemblances, in becoming contrasts, in subordination to the rule and plummet—will be the architectural plan which is the burden of the new revelation. It is this inherent permeation of a universal symbolism, as new scientific discovery, resting on, and derived, in an orderly manner, from a few simple principles, which constitutes Sciento-philosophy, in a higher or transcendental sense; and to the further exposition of which the patient attention of the reader is solicited. It is by this means that we shall lay the foundation for a new and wonderful system of classification, uniform in character, while yet adapted to all the sciences.

We have already found a pou sto, or a starting point of scientific certainty, in the perception that everything must have a Without, a Within, and a Between; that the Without and the Within fall together as a Concrete, while the primitive Between remains, or is developed, as Abstractness (the Skeleton); and that a new and third term then declares itself as a Fluidity, a condition of change, and the sphere, therefore, of Evolution.

We have also got on a scientific track when we recall human attention to the fact that all our broad philosophic discriminations have their origin in the simplest class of our ideas, and that they can be brought back to their origins in connection with primitive, and especially with primitive mathematical forms of thought. Affirmative and Negative mean merely yes-y and no-y; syntactic and analytic mean one-y and two-y; static and dynamic (or better motile) mean stay-y and go-y, etc., etc., until we shall have exhausted the list of these governing terms of thought, reducing the formidable technicalities of all philosophy to such a bald simplicity that we incur the opposite danger of falling into some contempt for making much ado about such trivialities. When the world find that they have been talking prose, all along, they may fall, for the moment, to value the excellences of good prose. The question arises: What of it! If this is all you mean by your high-sounding phraseology? A third stage of reflection will bring us, however, to perceive that the most important things are always the most simple, at least from one point of view; and that such words as prime, radical, elementary, and principle relate to simplicity, beginning-point or origin; and are, therefore, of this childlike or incipient character. Indeed, in philosophy, as in art, it will be found that the most important if not the most difficult step is to regain a certain lost natural simplicity in the mode of looking at things.

What, then, we are now led to inquire, are the primitive and simple ideas which underlie and gave origin to the two formidable sciento-philosophical technicalities—the Concrete and the Abstract—which Spencer, as we have seen, makes to lie at the basis of the classification of all the departments of human knowledge. It may be a little startling to get for reply, that the real discrimination of thought here is simply that which we ordinarily express by the seemingly unimportant little Anglo-Saxon words, thick and thin.

Thick and thin are terms designative of Form. With them, therefore, we make the transition to a new department of being—not the world at large, not language, not the human body, not anything that we have previously considered, but—that of figure, shape, or form the admeasurement of which furnishes the science of Geometry, the central science of the Mathematics; which was shown, as previously dealt with, to be itself the middle of the between, of the universal scope of being. It is, at all events, to this domain of form to which we are to look for the most definite instances and illustration of Analogy.

To the thickness and thinness of Form (geometrical solidity and superficiality, the Concrete and Abstractness of form) both static, there must now be added a third variety which is Motion. Motion, though it may not have been precisely so conceived of or defined, is no other than changing Form, Form itself being taken in that largest of senses in which Position is one of its subdivisive departments; so that fluidic or fluent form is motion, which again is the developmental or evolutionary aspect of form; for the most general type of motion is Circulation, Revolution, Evolution, or, in a word, Volition (roll or turn); and so motion is the third term in this trigrade scale of these fundamental departments of Form.

To restate, with a slight change or order: Thin or geometrically superficial or "plane" form is the Analogue of the Abstract. Thick, geometrically "solid," or stereometric form is the Analogue of the Concrete; and fluent form, motion—dissolving and reconvolving scenery—is the Analogue of (dissolution and) Evolution.

It is now quite important to observe that these same discriminations transfer themselves by a spontaneous recognition of the inherent analogy from the domain of Form to the domain of Substance—from the Geometrical to the Chemical realm,—and that scientific discovery here consists merely in the intellectual recognition of what our minds have instinctually or naturismally already accomplished. The same word, thick, which, geometrically speaking, is "solid"; that is to say, having three dimensions measurable in feet and inches, means, substantively (or chemically speaking) Colloid, paste, or non-crystalline, but of a "solid" consistency (mark the difference now in the meaning of Solid.) So, thin, which before meant having two dimensions only, measurable also in feet and inches, now means diaphanous or crystalline (or would more correctly mean that, though with the usual inaccuracy of processes naturismally accomplished this meaning is here usually carried over and confounded with the third term, next to be stated). Finally, fluent, which was before applied to dissolving and reappearing forms merely, is now applied to a second variety of substantive consistency called fluid—the Colloid and crystalline being confounded under the one name of solid (consistency); while yet they are the analogues of Soft Solids, and Solids, respectively, in the Physiological domain.

This commingling of transcendental philosophy, logic, grammar, anatomy, physiology, morphology, or geometry, hylology, or chemistry, etc., may seem at first to tend more to confusion than to elucidation; but it is no small matter to obtain principles which are common to them all; and it is by this road that we shall bring philosophy down into the particular realms of all the sciences, and raise all the special sciences into the sublime sphere of universal philosophy.

THE INDIAN POLICY.

The President during his entire administration has manifested intense interest in the Indian policy of the government, and it is, therefore, a matter for surprise that in his review of his civil career his reference to this subject is so brief. His reticence, however, is explained when we come to read the report of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary's presentment of the Indian question is so full and so intelligent that the President had no need to do more than refer to the report as embodying his own views. In committing himself to the conclusions of the Secretary he adopts a far more progressive policy than he has favored in his previous messages. It is more business-like and sagacious and less sentimental than the original Indian policy of his administration. It is brought forward under propitious circumstances, in spite of the disastrous summer campaign on the Yellowstone and the exploits of Sitting Bull. As we used to say in war-time, the backbone of the Sioux rebellion has been broken, and there is every indication that Gen. Crook's winter campaign will result in the surrender of Custer's murderers. But this is not all. The scandals which once clouded the Indian service have been dispelled. The statesmanship which assumes the title of Christian lies no longer under the reproach of lacking honesty and common decency. The Administration is at last in a position to define its Indian policy without being forced to apologize for gross mismanagement and corruption.

What Mr. Chandler regards as the true Indian policy is very clearly outlined in his report. Its crowning aim is to teach the Indian to support himself. But the logic of self-support points unerringly to the rights of citizenship. If we can train an Indian to feed and clothe himself we can educate him to be a useful citizen. The Secretary recognizes this, for he declares, without reservation, that the tribal system must be abolished. This has always been the fatal defect in our Indian policy. We have treated the Indians as independent nations; we have made treaties with them, and whenever it was convenient we have broken the bonds and shot them down if they ventured to accuse us of treachery. The Canadians have done better than this. They have kept faith with the red man. He has not been regarded as a member of an independent tribe, but as one of Her Majesty's Indian subjects. The success which they have achieved in dealing with the Indians and converting them into peaceable citizens throws light upon our own failures and blunders. When the Secretary advocates the extension of the privileges of citizenship to the Indian Territory he goes to the root of the matter. He well says: "The sooner the idea of considering and treating the various tribes in the Indian Territory as possessing a sort of independent power and nationality is done away with, the earlier we will reach some practical solution of the embarrassments which now surround the question of their government." This is the point which good Bishop Whipple in the North-west has raised again and again. The missionaries who labor among the tribes preach to those who believe already the cardinal doctrines of the immortality of the soul and the existence of the Great Spirit, and it is not strange that they are wonderfully successful in their work. Many of the Indians at White Earth and in the Indian Territory have made great progress in civilization, and are now ripe for citizenship and self-government. There is no reason why they should not have the privileges of citizenship. There is no reason why the jurisdiction of the United States courts should not be extended over them. There is no reason why they should not have some form of territorial and representative government based upon republican ideas.

Mr. Chandler seems to think it necessary to protect the Indian Territory from the encroachments of white settlement. He would give a certain amount of land to every Indian, and prohibit its transfer to any white man. Indeed, he would restrict the transfer of land from one Indian to another, and would people the whole Territory with tribes. We are not sure that he is right in these respects. If black and white can own land and vote together under State laws, red and white can do the same in the far West. The Indian should be trained up to the obligations and privileges of American government—not red men's government. We do not lay the same stress upon the exclusive occupancy of the Territory by Indians that the Secretary does, and we incline to the belief that it will be wiser to concentrate the Indians upon a few large reservations than to overcrowd the Indian Territory. We commend his suggestions, however, to the thoughtful consideration of all who are interested in one of the most complex problems of American government and civilization.—Tribune.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

CHRISTMAS.

'Tis Reason's era; out of date are grown
The Babe and Virgin, manger and the star,
Which led the wise men from the East afar,
The quiring angels and the shepherds lone,
The peace they heralded is still unknown;
E'en peasants dull, suckled in faith, begin
To see truth's light through hallowed, mythic haze,
Impervious no more to Reason's rays,
Which to all souls will soon an entrance win.
The Christmas carol and the Christmas hymn
Are voices of the past, the twilight dim
Of rude, unreasoning, marvel-loving days.
We know the clock-work of the heavens; then why
Do we still date from the nativity? B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 30.

J. H. Clifford, $1.00; John Shackleton, $3.25; James Davison, $1.20; R. Clark, $3; William G. Babcock, $3.20; John Hiatt, $3.20; Warren Griswold, $3.20; W. A. Thurston, $3.20; A. E. Giles, $3.20; D. B. Hale, $3.20; Samuel Colt, $3.25; F. H. Clark, $3.20; Rev. S. B. Stewart, $3.20; E. L. Crane, $3.20; B. Gerrish, $1; L. Everett, $3.20; G. C. King, 16 cents; J. W. Bralcy, $3.20; John Orth, $3.20; S. E. Mulliken, $3.20; Mrs. H. N. W. Brook, $1.25; John Denmore, $3.25; G. W. Topping, $6.75; W. H. Spencer, $20; C. H. Horsch, $3.25; M. Einstein, $3.20; Cash $1.39; Elias H. Warbase, $3.20; Miss Mary Shannon, $3.80; George Hea, $6.40; S. R. Honey, $6.40; O. L. Ashenfelder, 20 cents; E. T. Cowperthwait, $3.20; Charles Apin, $3.25; John W. Sullings, $3.20; W. E. Lukens, $1; J. P. Quincy, $3.20; S. T. Storey, $1.00; Alexander Fix, $3.20; E. Blackman, $4.70.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JANUARY 4, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FENTY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OKLAHUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

MR. UNDERWOOD has been lecturing at Denver, and the Rocky Mountain News gives a very fair report of one of his boldest lectures.

THE ASHTABULA railroad disaster, following so close on the burning of the Brooklyn theatre, is too horrible to think of. One turns away from the theologians with bitterness, and asks himself: "When will the people spare enough time from money-making and soul-saving to protect human life from the selfish and murderous carelessness of corporations?" If every railroad company were held inexorably to a fine of (say) ten thousand dollars for every life lost on its road, no matter what the cause, the companies would soon devise ways and means of preventing such agonizing accidents. But these very companies prevent such righteous legislation by their power over the lobby and the press; and the people still passively submit to periodical butcheries of this awful and unpardonable sort.

IN THIS first issue of the eighth volume of THE INDEX, we begin the publication of a series of three lectures: the first two on "The Character of Socrates," and the third on "Jesus and Socrates in the History of Religion." Written before or about the time when THE INDEX was first established, they have been hitherto withheld from publication in the hope that, some happy day, they might be used as the nucleus of a small volume on the subject, for which copious materials had been accumulated. But the years are fleeting by, and exigent duties which never relax their pressure have made the hope grow fainter every day. Without even having had an opportunity to revise the lectures or to verify the references they contain, we have therefore concluded to tender them as a modest New Year's offering to such of our friendly readers as may value them. Imperfect as they are, they may enable us to spend together a pleasant hour or two in the presence of one whom the world, heedless and selfish as it is, has yet been unable to forget or cease to honor.

IN A LETTER which is altogether too good not to be quoted, Mrs. Stanton writes as follows: "I was much amused to learn that some of your subscribers gave up THE INDEX because its pages did not fully reflect their opinions. These people must have read your paper to little purpose that they could not tolerate a difference of thought. A person cannot be very well fortified in a position that he is afraid to discuss with his adversaries. The best way to be sure we are right is to read the opinions of the opposition. Floundering as we are in the depths of speculation in politics, religion, and social ethics, we should sedulously encourage rather than repress individual freedom of thought. I wonder that these men who cannot read a paper unless it reflects their mental likeness consent to walk the streets of a city, where they never meet a face precisely like their own. Remembering that it is through this endless variety of thought that truth is evolved, we see the wisdom of toleration." These wise words are just as applicable when the difference turns on moral convictions as on intellectual beliefs. If any man held that murder or theft is right, and in defence of that thesis wrote a paper of proper tone and requisite ability, we should not hesitate to give it place in THE INDEX; for the result would be, by inevitable reaction, to strengthen respect for sound morality. Virtue and truth need never fear the light; for light cannot make beautiful that which is devoid of beauty, or ugly that which is fair.

THE POWER OF IDEAS.

Few men know what it is to live by ideas. It is easy to live by conventional rules, by traditional precepts, by fashion, by habit, by imitation, by thoughtless impulse or by cunning self-interest. But it is not easy to live by ideas, deliberately adopted as general laws of conduct, carefully applied to life's ever-changing situations, and enforced upon self by reason and conscience in opposition to all lower promptings. Very few men know what it is thus to shape a whole life by universal principles, ordained deliberately in their naked abstractness by the moral intelligence as the authoritative laws of action, and, because deliberately adopted as supreme authority at a time anterior to the conflicting desires and impulses of special exigencies, invested with a certain august majesty which instantaneously commands reverence and obedience in the face of all temptations. Yet nothing else than this fixed loyalty to ideas deserves the name of virtue. It is not virtue to do thus or so because another wills it, or because men applaud it, or because it pays or is pleasant: virtue consists in doing what is right simply and solely because nothing else squares with the immutable principles of moral harmony, justice, truthfulness, benevolence, purity. And all these are merely ideas, representative of supreme realities.

It is in this manner that the virtuous man becomes a law to himself. His personal intelligence comes to comprehend the fundamental moral relations that must, regarded or disregarded, subsist among all personal intelligences as such; his conscience recognizes, reverences, and freely reenacts the natural laws of conduct which are constituted by these uncreated and necessary moral relations; his will accepts the guidance of his reason and conscience in all the affairs of life; his affections find their satisfaction, their serene and peaceful and delightful exercise, in the sweet personal ties and sympathies which never fail to accompany and beautify a life thus ordered by ideas. In all cases of dubious duty, when a subtle net-work of moral relationships embarrasses or perplexes his decisions by its complicated ramifications, he has recourse, not to any sort of "Divine Revelation," but to the great principle of Moral Equations, or equal individual rights, by which he works out the value of the unknown quantity, x—that is, his practical duty in the specific case in hand. He may make mistakes in the operation, and fall sometimes to solve the moral equations with absolute accuracy; but his method is right, and becomes daily more useful as he grows more skilled in its practice. Every upright man uses this method of determining his duty in doubtful cases, though it may be in total unconsciousness of the processes he actually performs; just as men altogether ignorant of logic frequently carry out long trains of reasoning in perfect accordance with logical laws, and arrive at correct conclusions without a suspicion of the method they have actually pursued. In no other way than by constant reference to principles or ideas of universal validity, and by shaping conduct accordingly, can any man become virtuous; for virtue consists in the expression and exemplification of such ideas in concrete acts. He who performs an action simply because it is commanded plays the rôle of a mere hand or foot; he is not a virtuous man, but only an obedient slave executing the purpose of a superior will. But he who intelligently and freely governs his conduct among his fellows by reducing to practice the universally valid laws of righteousness establishes a new individual character as one of the motor forces of the world, and shows afresh that virtue is voluntary allegiance to ideas.

The word "ideas," however, seems to those who have been reared under the training of the churches to be a cold and lifeless one; it denotes to them a mere "abstraction," powerless to move the will or stir the emotions; it represents nothing that is familiar to the religious experience they have been taught to consider as essential. Instead of ideas, Christianity presents Persons, three in one, and especially the one Person which to popular imagination takes the place of all three—Jesus Christ. Here, we are told, is inspiration, stimulus, life; here is that which can fire the heart of man with unquenchable enthusiasm for holiness; here is that which can save the world from sin, and transform the sinner himself into a saint. And the question is triumphantly put: "What power can you show in your 'ideas' to match the power of this personal Savior in the work of regenerating the world by righteousness?"

It is enough to point out that, without being aware of it, those who put this question assume the presence of those very ideas which they despise.

To "convert the world to righteousness" is the object of the Christianity they profess; but "righteousness" itself is an idea, and means the conformity of heart and life to the abstract "right." Unconsciously Christians themselves make large use of the very abstractions—truth, purity, justice, etc.—which they yet distrust and depreciate, as used by non-Christians. The real difference in this matter between Christianity and Free Religion lies here: both inculcate righteousness, but the former teaches that a love for and devotion to the personal Christ is the only way to it, while the latter teaches that the shortest and best way to righteousness is learning to love and seek it for its own sake. The one demands righteousness just as much as the other, notwithstanding the fact that it is an abstract idea; but, while Christianity teaches that the genuine love of righteousness is a secondary matter, in fact only possible as a sort of reflected love of Jesus, the other teaches that it is the main thing, and that no love of it is genuine in the full degree, if it is made secondary or subsidiary to anything else. Hence the one preaches the love of Jesus as the root of all true righteousness; but the other teaches that the love of righteousness for its own pure sake, as an idea shining by its own eternal refulgence, is rooted in nothing but the inherent beauty and ineffable attractiveness of its object. It is true that whoever comes to love a righteous person is helped thereby to love the righteousness which glows visibly in his character; but it is also true that no one can love a righteous person who has not learned to love righteousness itself beforehand. The love of the idea precedes the love of the person, and he who once learns to love the idea supremely for its own sake finds himself, by the free-masonry of virtue, admitted thereby into the high fellowship of all virtuous souls. When, therefore, we are asked: "What power can you show in your 'ideas' to match the power of the personal Savior in the work of regenerating the world by righteousness?" we answer that the power of the great moral idea lies in its own intrinsic sublimity, its own unutterable loveliness, its own eternal and majestic fascinations for all who can discern it,—in short, in what even the English Bible itself, with a momentary glimpse of the soul of Free Religion, designates as the "beauty of holiness." And for proof of this power we need only point to those great spirits of the past who, like Socrates, without even having heard of the "Savior," have yet been mastered and transfigured by the self-shining IDEA OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Nor is any rebuttal of this testimony made by adducing the fact that the great majority of mankind are insensible to the power of abstract moral ideas, and live lives stained with the shame of gross departures from virtue. This practically limited influence is no more characteristic of the power of ideas than it is of the power of the "personal Savior." Saints are as rare in the Church as in the "world." A thousand are "converted"—made to glow for a time with a sincere and passionate love of the "Savior"—for one who is thereby led into a true and permanent righteousness; and this one is in every case unconsciously made righteous by the power of the ideas which his "Savior" merely represents in an illustrative character. Not until these ideas become the regulative laws of conduct by virtue of their own unborrowed sanctity and natural supremacy, can any one, Christian or otherwise, become a truly righteous man. There is no such thing as a sudden conversion to righteousness. This is a matter of growth, of slow development, of long and painful education in self-control. The bulk of mankind are still moral infants; they can be developed into genuine righteousness neither by the power of ideas nor yet by the power of the "Savior"; they are essentially immature in their moral natures, and the religious craze of revivalism is no substitute for natural maturity. There is but one way to "regenerate the world by righteousness," and that is the difficult way of education. The "Savior" is powerless to make mankind holy, as is proved by the long failure of two thousand years; and, if this is no reproach to him, neither is it a reproach to abstract ideas. But the false, foolish, and disastrous expectation of ultimately succeeding in the attempt to make mankind righteous through the mere power of a personality stands fatally and lamentably in the way of a purer social state. It disavows from that humbler but wiser means of universal education; it draws off attention and effort from the one indispensable requisite (of early and continuous moral culture; it keeps men morally ignorant and weak and childish by teaching them to hoist themselves into holiness by the waistband of "conversion," instead of climbing up to it by long, self-denying obedience to abstract moral laws. The power of ideas is omnipotence itself, if the conditions of its exercise are only complied with; they can be taught, explained, illustrated, and set forth in their natural majesty, even to the minds of the young; and there is no substitute for this early discipline and training. If the world is ever to be made righteous, it can only be by recognizing the power of principles, by ceasing the idle folly of substituting for it the illusive power of the "Savior," and by taking up in good earnest the task of educating children in the practice of self-government by abstract moral ideas. There is "no royal road to learning"; and there is no royal road to righteousness. The long moral night of Christianity is slowly passing away; the dawn of Free Religion, with its substitution of the power of ideas for the powerlessness of the "Savior," and of steady, persistent, universal education for the mischievous spasms of revivalism, is already begun; and, despite all discouragements, the disciples of ideas may rest assured that their toils cannot be in vain in the end. For Truth is on their side, and the interminable future, paved with successive victories, is only her long pathway to a triumph that can never be reversed.

AN EVANGELICAL PREDICAMENT.

It is related that on one occasion Sadducees, who denied the resurrection, came to Jesus, who, being a Pharisee, admitted it, and propounded the following riddle: A man died, leaving a widow, but no children. His brother, in compliance with the Mosaic Law, marries the widow and dies without issue; a third brother repeats the experiment of ceremonial obedience, with the same result; a fourth flings himself into the gulf, but fails to perpetuate his brother's line; a fifth devotes himself, a sixth, a seventh; for there were seven of these Orthodox bachelors. Now arises the question: Whose wife will the woman be in the resurrection? Jesus parries the thrust by denying the relevancy of the inquiry. In the Messiah's kingdom the institution of marriage is not recognized. Temporal arrangements do not hold in the spiritual sphere. Death cuts the knot that life cannot untie.

This incident came freshly to mind the other day on reading of the predicament in which an Indian prince unconsciously placed the missionaries who had been laboring with him even too successfully for his peace or their own. The Thakore of Brownugger became a Christian. No Christian, he was told, could have more than one wife at a time. The Thakore, following the venerable usage of his country, had four; three, therefore, must be put away. Which three? Their ages were respectively, twelve, fifteen, sixteen, and twenty-two. Fifteen he loved, and did not feel disposed to part with. Sixteen was rich, and could not be spared. Twelve had a claim on him on account of her tender years; twenty-two had a claim quite as good on the score of her defenceless age. He must wrong somebody or hurt himself by compliance with the Christian requirement. By non-compliance he wronged nobody, and probably contributed to maintain the time-honored institutions of his country, of which polygamy was one, and not, it is probable, one of the most degrading. The command to divest himself of three-fourths of his married estate was not laid upon him because he was dissolute. His transgression was against a dogma. The report does not say how the debate in the young man's mind ended, nor does it tell what answer the missionary made to his scruple. What answer could he make? If he took example by Jesus in the kindred dilemma, he must have decided that the question was irrelevant; that by becoming a convert to Christ he had passed into another intellectual sphere, where feelings and motives alone were important,—where the external relations that he was born into, and maintained as part of his official rank, were significant only as they compromised the interior purity of his mind; that, in so far as they failed to implicate his new humanity, they might be innocently retained; that, in so far as they afforded opportunity for applying his new humanity, it might be even incumbent on him not to break them abruptly, but to use them honorably for Christ's service and sake. Some such ground the missionary ought to take, if he were a wise man. But he could not take it without abandoning completely his dogmatic, sectarian, technically Christian position. He must rise to a purely intellectual, national, spiritual sphere, and to do that he must cease to believe in the literal obligation of every New Testament precept, in the strict inspiration of the Scriptures, in the technical authority of the Church, in the sovereign efficacy of the "Christian" institutions. That is to say, he must adopt the principle that forms, rites, modes of custom, and belief are to be regarded and respected in places where they are native and providential; that only the cardinal and absolute can be insisted on as of universal validity; consequently that attempts at remodelling institutions and substituting new dogmas for old ones are reprehensible. But this is the ground of Free Religion. Free Religion, by discarding all that belongs to the special form of religion—the dogma, the rite, the tradition, the reliance on ordinances and opinions, and insisting only on general sentiments and universal principles,—avoids the embarrassments to which "evangelical" religion is exposed. It can appeal to considerations of reason, and can use what is best in all institutions. "Christianity" must have the whole or nothing. Free Religion builds on the foundations that are laid, and is hopeful of erecting some kind of spiritual structure on soil formed by the deposit of rotten leaves or of mud which ancient rivers bring down in their flow through primeval territories. Its faith is rather in evolution than in revolution. O. B. F.

WHOM SHALL WE TRUST?

"Miss Susan B. Anthony has lectured on two successive evenings in the Paine Hall course, on 'The Sixteenth Amendment' and 'Women want Bread, not the Ballot.' Not being able personally to attend, as we should have been glad to do, we can only judge of her lectures by imperfect reports in the press; but these show that Miss Anthony is as able and as earnest as ever. Her statement that she would have voted for General Butler for Congress, however, raises some queries respecting the 'purification of politics' by woman's influence. We fear that such votes would not purify them much."—THE INDEX.

There has never been a man in Congress who has treated the demand for woman suffrage with more honest consideration than the Hon. Benjamin F. Butler. His minority report on our memorial, presented to Congress in 1871, is one of the most able arguments on woman's right to vote under the Fourteenth Amendment ever made on the subject. When Miss Anthony was fined a hundred dollars for voting, by Judge Hurd, she appealed from his sentence to Congress, and again Mr. Butler championed woman's cause.

As Chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House, he made another equally able argument in favor of her fine being remitted, and, as he stood alone in the position, he brought in a minority report. If we test Mr. Butler's morality and statesmanship by his loyalty in such cases to the great fundamental principles of justice and democracy, women-citizens have no cause of complaint; and, if ever enfranchised, would prove themselves absurdly stupid if they did not cast their ballots for such champions.

It may be a great breach of political honor and party faith to outgeneral a Republican clique in Massachusetts, and to vote with a majority in Congress to double his own salary; but to Miss Anthony's mind these are minor vices, compared with robbing one-half the citizens of the republic of all their inalienable rights, as the mass of our rulers are now doing. We can more safely pardon rulers for individual lapses from principle than for an incapacity to see their general application.

Suppose Mr. Butler had been as true to the National Liberal League, and had presented the Religious Freedom Amendment to Congress, passed it to a vote, and, if lost, made a masterly minority report in its favor, would not the editor of THE INDEX have given him his vote for Congress, and made honorable mention of him in his journal? Might not Mr. Butler's clear perception of that great truth, and his courage in advocating so unpopular a measure, have somewhat modified the editor's condemnation of any lack of political honor in minor matters of which he might justly or unjustly be accused?

Moreover, do we not secure a "purification of politics through woman's influence," when representatives who are accused of being false in all other interests are invariably true to her? Honesty in one direction is the bud of promise that may in time come to a full fruition of all the cardinal virtues. E. C. S.

[Mrs. Stanton has our sincere thanks for so frankly replying to editorial views from which she differs; and we cannot do better than to imitate her frankness.]

It would be very unjust for us to bring charges against General Butler which we do not personally know to be true; and it would be equally unjust to withhold approval of the good things he has unquestionably done. He has the reputation, however, of favoring and of employing those political methods which will destroy the republic, unless it can reform them out of existence; and the voter must act on such knowledge of candidates as he can obtain. If General Butler were to render to the Liberal League and the Religious Freedom Amendment all the services Mrs. Stanton suggests, nevertheless we could not cast a ballot for him with our present (just or unjust) impressions of his character. We hope yet to see that Amendment carried, but non tunc auxilio. For his services to it we should feel and express great gratitude; but if they were accompanied by equal disservices to political honesty and public morals in other matters, we are not yet such a devotee of the Liberal League movement as to seek its triumph by voting for him. Even for that triumph, we can afford to wait until it can be won without abating a jot of that stern, proud integrity which disdains to carry the noblest ends by a trick, or to soil the victory of the right by a compromise with the wrong. Perhaps we feel the sting of humiliation under the political wrongs of freethinkers quite as keenly as Miss Anthony does under those of women; yet we choose to bear them rather than to sanction political corruption by so much as a vote. Mrs. Stanton may possibly think us very Quixotic in all this, as indeed we may be; but we are learning, somewhat sadly, that one cannot always live in strict accordance with a high ideal of duty without incurring the malicious slanders of enemies, the stupid misjudgments of friends, and the risk of furnishing to the public the spectacle of a wholly incurable Quixotism.—ED.]

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, Dec. 15, 1876.

We think and speak of little else here in England but the "Eastern Question." You will have heard of the "Conference" at St. James' Hall. It has given great occasion to the enemy to blaspheme by the lack of courage and openness shown by those who had the management of it. It would be most unjust to blame in any way the eminent literary men whose names were connected with it, for, beyond lending it the sanction of their names, they had nothing to do with the arrangements. It was all managed by two or three individuals whose names are known in the country more by their fondness for pushing themselves into notoriety than by the work they do; on these alone must fall the blame of making the liberal party ridiculous by a "national conference" which was neither national nor a conference. The Standard, the government organ, has printed various letters from Radicals, and one from a delegate, complaining that the meeting was only a packed demonstration against the government, and that, so far from its being a conference, no discussion was permitted, and only those selected by an unknown and irresponsible authority were allowed to address the meeting. A demonstration against the government is a perfectly legitimate thing, and at the present time such a demonstration is sorely needed; but it makes the whole affair ridiculous if such a demonstration be carefully packed and labelled a "conference." Numbered tickets were issued, and every difficulty was put in the way of obtaining them. Delegates were called from all parts of the country, and then found their mouths closed; in fact, the machinery of election and delegates was a mere farce, got up to impress the public by a pretence of representation. No resolutions were submitted to the meeting on the important subject of our foreign policy. A certain number of propositions were laid down, chosen speakers supported them, and the delegates were not even allowed to give a silent vote upon them; the only resolution proposed was one to form an association to carry on a system of agitation; but of what steps have been taken towards this and the public is profoundly ignorant. Since the "conference" silence has reigned, and whether there is an association, what it is going to do, of whom it consists, I know nothing. Never was a "national" movement carried on with such wonderful secrecy.

Mr. Gladstone's speech at St. James' Hall redeemed the whole matter from insipidity. It was simply splendid. Mr. Gladstone spoke very quietly, but with a determination and a restrained force which enchained his audience. Step by step he traced the Prime Minister through all his windings, with the patience and unerring instinct with which the greyhound follows the doubling of the hare. One by one he unveiled all the inaccuracies, the sophisms, the evasions, of the Earl of Beaconsfield. He dragged his manifold self-contradictions into the daylight, and showed the dangers of his devious policy. As an impeachment by a pure and high-minded statesman of a political charlatan, Mr. Gladstone's speech left nothing to be desired; it was moderate, logical, weighty, and solemn in its gravity of indignation. The ex-Premier's eloquence is of a singularly pure type, and his rhetoric is severely simple; his voice clear, full, and soft, audible and sustained throughout; his face not handsome, but thoughtful and grave, and lighting up at moments almost into beauty with a singularly attractive smile, the head well-modelled, and with a large reserve of physical power. Mr. Gladstone is still vigorous, and has many a year of life before him yet. His temperate habits and purity of life have rewarded him with a healthy age, and the man who could speak, as he did, for an hour and a half, to so large an audience, has clearly no right to retire into private life while his country needs him so sorely as England now needs one of the noblest of her sons.

The pamphlet on the Eastern Question and Mr. Gladstone's fall, which I mentioned to you some little time back, is having a very large sale, and is attracting much attention. I have heard it ascribed to various authors, and even to writers so opposite as Mr. Bradlaugh and the irrepressible Gin's Baby. In a discussion I overheard in a railway-carriage the other day, one of the speakers thought it was written by Mr. Freeman, the historian, who has taken so prominent a part in the movement against Turkey. One satisfactory point may be noted in connection with it,—the thorough endorsement of its views in regard to Russia, and of its appeal to Mr. Gladstone, in the various reviews of it that have appeared in the press. Over and over again the opinion is repeated that only at the head of the people can Gladstone return to power, and that the people would gladly hail his leadership, and loyally support him in the struggle.

We are watching with great interest for the news of your Presidential election, and are admiring the quietude and patience with which the nation bears the strain of the prolonged incertitude. Many thoughtful English people hope to see Tilden elected, although their sympathies are with Hayes, simply because the Republican party being in power, they fear the suspicions of the fairness of the election will be strong if Hayes succeeds to the Presidency. It is said that "Republican institutions are on their trial." Important as their triumph and peaceful issue from the difficulty may be, I cannot admit that a failure would entail a condemnation of Republicanism. Many have been the failures of monarchical institutions, and yet advocates of monarchy do not therefore condemn it as a principle; at the utmost they strive to improve the part of the machinery which has broken down. It should be just the same now with Republican institutions. Republicanism is not bound up with one special system of voting, or with the habits of one country. The lesson we Republicans learn from "the present distress" is only that certain institutions need improvement, and that they want to be made more Republican than they are. Yet, with the prejudice against Republicanism, with the rejoicing of all anti-democrats (using the word in its wide sense) over every trouble in a free country, we naturally watch with intensest interest for the issue of your present difficulty. But our watch is full of hope, and full of faith; full of hope in that we believe in the triumph of free institutions, full of faith in that we trust the peaceful strength of the mighty American Republic.

Communications.

THE MAN WHO WAS NOTHING.

John White had no religion. He really believed something of everything; he denied no facts; still he had preferences as to which facts he should practise. His creed was so general, so formless, compared with any of the sectarianisms that divided the village, that he appeared to his neighbors to have none,—and so he had not, in the sense that they had. "What's John White?" "Well, I guess he don't lean noway pertickler; he's not a religious person; see him goin' fishin' Sundays; guess he's nothin'." Very clever, good-hearted feller; pity he don't jine." This was about the average village verdict. He was not reputed a prodigy in any line; he was not the person you often hear mysteriously mentioned in little inland towns as secretly studying Hebrew, or the invention of a new heresy, or an improved dog-churn, or perpetual motion. He was no student; he only read lovingly the smiling sky, the green earth, the hearts of wife, children, and friends. He was in the same predicament in regard to his occupation as to his religion; he had no trade, but was pretty good at almost all trades.

Elmwood was a good illustration of what Thoreau says of the natural coexistence of no shade-trees, high Calvinism, and hard drinking. It was called Elmwood (lucus a non lucendo) because its length and breadth held just one tree, a scrubby, unregenerate white-elm, so tough and gnarly that no one had ever thought it worth while to attempt converting it into rails or fire-wood. The tenacious clay subsoil of the hill-country roundabout seemed matched by a certain heavy stubbornness of opinion in the minds of the inhabitants; the hard-pan was popularly said to "come up to the third rail of the fence," and the hard-pan in the average brain could generally be struck without much digging. The skies there, during a good part of the year, waterlogged with dark vapors from the lakes, wore an obstinate gloom that justified for many an indulgence in the congenial horrors of a profoundly demoniacal theology, and for others desperate recourse to the cheap Lethe of new "old rye."

The particular morning in June of which I wish to speak was John's first Sunday in his new house,—the first house he had ever owned. He had built it almost entirely with his own hands during the past year. It was a common enough affair, built of second-class lumber, but it was home, and John was lying on the grass in the front yard admiring it and the world in general. Wind and rain in the night had swept and washed clean sky, air, and woody hills; only a few ragged ravellings of the tempest scurried along the southern horizon as if in haste to overtake the rack that had gone before. The newness of Eden filled the world; John could hear his wife crooning to her baby; he heard the pleasant droning of the morning church-bell and the dreamy hum of the insect myriads all around; all was warmth, life, joy, and peace, and John never for a moment reflected that he had no religion.

A certain personal synthesis of mottled jowl, brass-headed cane, hedgy eye-brow, and magisterial paunch, known to Elmwood folk as Judge Durham, now perambulated dogmatically past, never once looking to the right or the left. He was almost the only man in the place who never spoke or nodded to John. He did not on this occasion; yet his frowning reserve was more eloquent than words. It said: "Here this John White, an improper, heathenish sort of person, has got to owning a house and lot, which is monstrous. Did he not refuse once before me to kiss the Book? Who knows what pernicious opinions he may not entertain? He is undoubtedly a secret rebel against all that is good; he is of no family; he is little better than a foreigner. Somehow he has got hold of this house and lot; but I trust it is mortgaged. For one, I will never recognize such trash." Thus having made his internal confession, he passed,—John having noticed or thought little about him.

Next came along the Rev. Mr. Perkins, the Congregational clergyman, a sleek, smiling, mercantile-looking gentleman. His salutation was: "Good morning, Mr. White; I see you have taken up quarters in your new house. A very pleasant place. I am glad to see that you are being prospered, and trust your heart may be gratefully inclined toward the Giver of all good."

"Well, yes, I can't say that I ever feel ill-disposed toward anybody that I know has done me any good. I don't know who the Giver of all good is. Generally it isn't given, but has to be worked for. That house has cost me considerable labor. Gratitude won't build a house, nor insure it, and keep it in repair after it is built. If I was really able to do much in the way of gratitude, I shouldn't know any better way than to help some other man who needed a house to get one. Words don't amount to much; and we have no reason to think that the Lord estimates them any higher than we do, seeing he gets plenty of 'em, and little else from most of us. However, you and I have hummed over these things often before; it really is too fine a day to waste in argument. Don't you think so?"

The Rev. Mr. Perkins saw the force of this, bade John good-day, and paced slowly and sadly on toward his meeting-house. He was a good man as the world goes; safe, fatally safe, never to sink or soar. His idea was that religion and morality were a higher sort of policy and etiquette. He wondered that John could be so wanting in formal respect for the Almighty. He thought how much nicer it would be if he would only be a decorous member of his church; would stop saying rough-sounding, original things, and let matters go in the smooth and pleasant channel which to Rev. Mr. Perkins seemed God-appointed. It would be better for John in a business point of view, better every way. He felt sometimes an uneasy suspicion that John really had a religion; but then he comforted himself with thinking of Dr. — and Dr. —, learned and talented men, LL.D.'s and Presidents of colleges,—pshaw! what was John White's opinion against theirs?

Next, Jerome Kidder, sharp-featured, dark, a little hectic patch over each cheek-bone, deep cavern-eyes burning with a slow fire, straight and shining black hair; general aspect meek, earnest, introspective; commonly considered "cracked" on religion. Slackening his course, in response to John's friendly challenge, he was speedily launched on a fervid tide of so-called religious exhortation,—a queer mixture of benevolent, threatening cant which John had often heard before. He wondered then and now how the half-crazed enthusiast could project his whole being into that imaginary future of ecstasies and horrors; but this he certainly did. Heaven and hell were very real to him, and the present only a fleeting dream. He was utterly in earnest, and commanded the respect that earnestness always does. The point of John White's financial condition did not present itself to him with any force; it was the interests of his immortal soul that he was thinking about. He could not stop long; he would not for anything miss a groan or shout of the earlier or later prayer in its season. No argument with him, either; he said his say, and went on.

As John lay thinking, it seemed to him that the lovely gracious present was as holy and an infinitely pleasanter dwelling-place than Jerome's chimerical world. The masses of cool beechen foliage yonder on the hill-side, indented by many an alcove of deep green shadow; the feeling, half sensation, half memory, of his pleasant relations with friends and neighbors; the subtle smells from soil and herb; the majesty and purity of the stainless ether; the festoon-like flight of the yellow-birds, lazy and happy as himself; the old summery sentiment of home and happiness fed from a thousand impossible-to-be-hinted sources,—all was very present to him now, expunging Jerome's hell from fancy and memory, and casting even his heaven far into the shade. John lay luxuriously letting his thoughts wander where they would on the wings of the hour; he pitied Jerome, but not nearly so much as he did Judge Durham; and Rev. Mr. Perkins' shallows—profitable and satisfactory as they appeared to the view of common sense—seemed more contemptible than ever compared with Jerome's intensities. Suddenly he became aware of some one looking over the fence upon him, and raised himself on his elbow to see who it was. He saw a shabby, slouching shape; a meagre, colorless face, with thickish lips, and passionate, melancholy eyes; a dirty, woe-begone, sensitive man, evidently hard-used by the world and himself; in short, a failure, a tramp, one who had no rights save to jail or hospital or cheapest drudgery,

—if he could get it. He stared at John with incredulous impassiveness, and said not a word. John accosted him in rustic slang: "Well, cap'en, which way you travelling? Live far from here?" For answer the stranger climbed over the fence (such men will always climb a fence sooner than go through a gate), sat down on the grass, tailor-wise, opposite John, and said in a hollow voice: "Do you know me?" "No," said John, "I don't." "Well, I am one, probably the worst one, of the prodigal sons of Elmwood returned to claim my fatted calf, which appears to have been kindly prepared—and eaten—in advance for me. You remember that harmless, dreamy boy that sat the third seat front of you in the old red school-house? You were older than I, so we were never particular cronies. I say I am the worst one; I am the most unfortunate, the softest. All the real hard cases like Deacon Flint's boys have no doubt 'steadied down,' joined the Church, and got property. That's the way it generally goes. I never was a hard case; I was a real good boy; I never wanted to hurt any one, and for that very reason the world found it safe to hurt me. I am bad, or unfortunate enough now; but I am done. I never shall do good or harm any more."

"O no, you can't say that yet safely; why, you can't be over thirty-five; you are a young man yet. I remember you now perfectly. Edwin Storm is your name. You left here, I think, the summer I was working out in Pennsylvania. Where have you been this many a year?"

"Everywhere, and nowhere, to any good. People have always said to me everywhere: 'Why, you have got a good education; why don't you clerk in a store, or preach, or practice law, or medicine?' Darned if I'd break my back maul'n' rails, if I had the book-larin' you have.' Everybody seems to think the only proof of superiority to your fellows is in your power to injure them; and that the sole aim of knowledge is to enable the possessor to subdue the common run to his selfish uses. To make money in this world, or, in other words, to get a luxurious living without earning it, one must peddle lies or poison; preach, or practice law, or politics, or sell whiskey or medicine. I never wanted to cheat anybody, and had no faculty for doing it; besides, I was so unfortunate as to be radical and heterodox in everything. I could not fall in with the common ways in anything. I was out everywhere. I was an unwelcome stranger everywhere. I have earned a poor living by the most wearing, poorest-paid, manual labor; one cannot even 'clerk it in some store' unless he is a fawning liar. I inherited a taste for stimulants that helped to drag me down; oh, say more correctly, in common with most nervous, poetical persons, I have been blessed and cursed by a joy-hunger that has cruelly mocked me with beautiful visions, only to tear them away and leave in their stead the eternal horrors of reality. Despairing long since of the ordinary well-founded happiness that the meanest and weakest of mankind seem to attain—except me,—I have madly drunk to the dogs. Now all is past. I sincerely wish I was dead; yet the weak habit of life remains. I saw these hills yesterday for the first time since I left them, fifteen years ago. I had a talk with Judge Durham. You know the details of his dealings with our family. Twenty-five years ago, when I was ten years old, we were living on the Knowlton place, which comprises what is now the best part of the village. Father had bought it of Judge Durham, paying him all the money he had—seven hundred dollars,—and giving a mortgage to secure the payment of the balance. This he could have made in the ordinary course of events, but he was seized by a slow disorder, which killed him after three years of torment. As soon as he could do it legally, Judge Durham foreclosed the mortgage, and in a time of the greatest financial depression. No one had money to pay down for a farm, and he bid it in at his own price. That seven hundred dollars was gone, and all our personal property, stock, tools, etc.,—all this legally, mind you. I reminded Judge Durham of these things yesterday, and asked him for what, do you think? Old clothes, broken victuals, money? No, I asked him to give me work to keep me from starving. As well ask shelter of the winter skies! Now do you know what I am going to do? I am going to run mad. I am going to tell the whole story to everybody in town. Then I am going to curse him, invoke the vengeance of heaven upon him, haunt him, and at last kill myself at his door, and smear his threshold with my blood."

"I don't think you will do anything of the sort. That wouldn't hurt Judge Durham at all. He is a hard-hearted old man, really more unfortunate to-day than you are. He can't be hurt or helped in any way any more than a boulder stuck in a hill-side. As for work, I have got lots of it. I am everlastingly whittling at chairs, brooms, axe-helves, and so forth. I am a Jack at all trades, and good at none. Come and work with me and you can have a choice of trades. I smell dinner; let's go in and have something to eat."

This was too much for poor Storm, who hadn't heard a kind word for years, and had grown so hardened that he never wanted to hear one. Hysterical with long tramps, poor whiskey, and almost no food, he gave way all at once, fell upon his face, clutched hard into the grass with his bony fingers, and his whole awkward frame was convulsed by voiceless sobs that seemed as though they would take his life out with them. John said no more, but went into the house and soon came out with a tray loaded with savory viands. This he set down on the grass by the now motionless, prone heap of man, went back into the house and quietly ate his dinner. Three-quarters of an hour afterwards he came out; Storm was sitting up, looking rational, subdued, and slightly sheepish. The tray was swept clean,—nothing like extreme grief to give a man an appetite! But he would not go into the house; no, he said he was not fit to go into any decent man's house. He had resolved to travel on up into the hills to some old acquaintance, poor and not very respectable, like himself; after a few days perhaps he would come down and go to work with John, and see if it were possible for him to take a new start in life. So he passed and John was left alone thinking. He did not think much in words,—nor perhaps in very definite ideas. He felt a profound pity for the man who had just left him. It seemed to him that here was a case of a man who had no religion,—if religion is the term to use; who had somehow lost his religion, more's the pity, and yet seemed to have lost it by having nursed ambition so unattainable an ideal that he had fallen in his unequal combat against the dragging worldly average, into depths that the world knows not of.

John was somewhat puzzled, but came back, as he always did from casual encounters with troublesome problems, to his natural, simple, unreasoned faith in every-day happiness and good-will. He had a sort of religion after all; and I think that, take mankind as they run, it is about as safe to risk dealing with people who have no particular form of religion as with any others. What has been your experience in this respect? Reliable statistics as to actual relations between creed and conduct are much to be desired.

G. E. T.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

TWO OF THE NOTABLE BOOKS OF 1876.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I have just finished reading Transcendentalism in New England, by O. B. Frothingham; and, finding it a brave, broad, and inspiring book, I desire to call the attention of the readers of THE INDEX to it, that others may share in the pleasure I got from its perusal. So many new books from well-known authors drop from the press nowadays that it is nearly impossible to select according to one's taste without knowing somewhat about them before buying, since the titles of so many books are either misleading or non-committal as to the contents. If we know the author, we know only the manner, not at all the matter of which he treats.

If any one wishes to learn the history of transcendentalism, and the stories of those great-thoughted men of all nations to whom it owed its rise and progress, sketched in a few bold, strong strokes from a masterly pen,—if one wants to hear the true story of Brook Farm,—if he would like to see Emerson, Alcott, Theodore Parker, Margaret Fuller, and Ripley, each made a study in their appropriate characterizations as the poet, the seer, the preacher, the critic, and the man of letters,—if he longs for the latest and loftiest ideas on most of the religio-philosophical questions of the day,—if he likes brave, buoyant, hopeful, truthful words upon every subject treated of in the book, he will find all this, and more, in Transcendentalism in New England.

I have read with pleasure and profit many of Mr. Frothingham's previous literary efforts, but never have I seen him appear to greater advantage as thinker and writer than in this his new rôle of historian of a grand phase of religious feeling; a phase he has studied carefully, and one with which it is evident he has been in full accord and sympathy.

So much has been said and written about George Elliot's Daniel Deronda, and so many guesses have been made as to the hidden purpose of that powerful novel, that I think it will not be deemed presumptuous if I add my little mite to the ocean of conjecture that surrounds Daniel Deronda as an island. I fancy half-a-dozen morals may be hid in the story; I only desire to point out one which is very plain to me, but which it seems has been overlooked.

In Daniel Deronda, as in the Spanish Gypsy, it seems to me that she is desirous of showing that the law of inheritance, which Darwin lays such stress on, is as powerful and well-defined in methods of thought and emotional traits as in physical structure and intellectual development; that no education, however careful and complete, can wholly eradicate inherited tendencies of any kind, at least in one generation; that there is always danger of reversion to the primal type in morals as in physical forms. The Spanish gypsy girl, brought up from infancy in the most cultured and courtly society, surrounded by wealth and refinement, beloved by and loving one not of her own race, taught to abhor that race, of which she was unknown to herself one of the highest dignitaries, yet no sooner does she learn that she is of the despised race than all the inherited love for and sympathy with that race springs up into fresh life and undying strength in her nature, and she sacrifices to those inherent prejudices love, wealth, home, and luxury, and takes upon her the burden of the life that she finds most in accordance with her inmost sympathies.

So Daniel Deronda, brought up in the highest circles of the most refined English society; purposely kept in ignorance of his origin; educated carefully in the tenets of Christianity as understood by the Anglican Church; taught by class education to look down upon the despised Jew; brought into contact with the flower of English beauty and breeding, yet finds himself in full sympathy with that wild dreamer, Mordecai, and is attracted towards him from the first in spite of the apparent folly of such associations; falls in love with the pretty and rather insipid Jewess, Mirah, in preference to all the lovely Englishwomen by whom he is surrounded, in preference even to the surpassingly lovely though faulty Gwendolen; and when he at last discovers his heartless and frivolous mother, and she imparts to him the secret of his Jewish origin, the inherited tendencies within him make him glad and triumphant over a discovery otherwise calculated to fill him with regret and mortification. He accepts with eagerness his rightful place and faith, and marries Mirah in her poverty and in the face of her disreputable relations; nay, is more than ever her brother's dear friend and faithful admirer. On the one side lies all the superficial good of life for him,—all the wealth, honor, comfort, and culture; but all these have not power to make him swerve from the gratification of inherited sympathy with his race.

That the portrayal of the strength of these inherited sympathies on the human mind is one of the lessons George Elliot wishes to inculcate in Daniel Deronda is, I think, sufficiently indicated by the words she makes her hero address in grateful gladness to Mirah's brother:—

"It is you who have given shape to what, I believe, was an inherited yearning—the effect of brooding, passionate thoughts in many ancestors,—thoughts that seem to have been intensely present in my grandfather. Suppose the stolen offspring of some mountain tribe, brought up on the city of the plain, or one with an inherited genius for painting, and born blind,—the ancestral life would lie within them as a dim longing for unknown objects and sensations, and the spell and habit of their inherited frames would be like a cunningly-wrought musical instrument never played on, but quivering throughout in uneasy mysterious meanings of its intricate structure that under the right touch gives music."

Respectfully yours, SARA A. UNDERWOOD,
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

DEMONEZITIZATION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The remarks of your correspondent, "R. C.," upon the Silver Bill, seem to me to imply a misapprehension of both the economic and the moral law applicable to the question. Our coin will go abroad as bullion, or, rather, will refuse to circulate as currency while it is worth more in the market than "legal tender." There is no way to make a more valuable dollar circulate only to take away by law the less valuable one. While the law declares a paper promise to be "legal tender" for debts, the thing it promises will never circulate by its side. The duty of government is to take away the fictitious dollar; i. e., repeal the legal tender act; not, however, making the repeal retroactive. Then coin will per force come into circulation to discharge new promises.

Demonezitation was a stupendous legislative immorality in its retroactive character, and an equally stupendous economic blunder in every other aspect. The optional dollar of 1862 is the thing which justly pays the promise of the greenback made by government in 1862. Let government stick to the standard of weight and fineness of the bi-metallic statutory dollar of 1862. All inquiry into value is irrelevant as a question of equity.

But it is not error to call the changed ratio in the value of the two metals a change in the value of silvers. By the standard of the silver dollar, has not gold behaved badly as a measure of value?

E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, O.

A CHRISTIAN COMMA.

NEWPORT, R. I., Dec. 19, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Str.—The Revised Statutes of Rhode Island of 1857 provided (Sec. 16, Chap. 216) that "if any person shall do or exercise any labor or business or work of his ordinary calling . . . on the first day of the week . . . he shall be fined," etc., etc. The Supreme Court of the State decided in the case of Allen vs. Gardiner, et al., of Rhode Island, p. 23, that under this section the only prohibited labor, business, or work was that of a person's ordinary calling.

This state of the law did not satisfy the anti-Sabbath-breakers; and so, in the General Statutes adopted by the legislature in 1872, a comma was ingeniously introduced after the word "business," making the statute to read: "Every person who shall do or exercise any labor or business, or work of his ordinary calling . . . shall be fined," etc.

Whether the insertion of the comma at the place named really has the effect of altering the construction given by the Supreme Court to the law, may be a question; but that such was the intention can scarcely be doubted.

It is by these insidious attacks that the liberties of the people are gradually encroached upon.

Yours, SAMUEL R. HONEY.

WANTED—ONLY THE FACTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

If trouble grows out of the political situation it will be simply because the American people are not honest enough to abide by the truth and the foundation principles of their government.

If, instead of trying to discover how Gov. Hayes or Gov. Tilden can be put into office, whether fairly elected or not, the aim were simply to discover which one has been elected by the people; or, if neither, then determine that, the whole contest could be settled in ten days to the satisfaction of ninety-nine hundredths of the people.

Instead of talk of war and preparation for conflict, the people should demand of Congress that, as patriots instead of partisans, they shall get at the facts and decide according to truth and right.

There has been an election, and there is now nothing to be done but determine facts.

If public meetings are held, it should be to declare that the country shall not be plunged again into war, but that truth and right shall prevail, and the man inaugurated President who has, in fact, been elected. Are there not men enough in the country that regard fairness and right more than partisan success, to give the country the relief that honesty alone will give?

A. J. WARNER.

MARIETTA, O., December, 1876.

NO ACQUIESCENCE IN FRAUD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Str.—There is no part of THE INDEX that I read with greater satisfaction than "Current Events." I must, however, take exception to the instruction in the last number, that almost any settlement of the Presidential question would be welcomed by the majority of the people. The controversy has reached a stage beyond this. If it is true, on the one hand, that it was by fraud or intimidation that Connecticut, New York, or Louisiana gave a majority for Tilden, we ought to know it; or if, on the other hand, it was by fraud that his majority was thrown out in Louisiana, we ought to know it. Acquiescence in fraud is a most demoralizing thing, as it proved when the country suffered Polk to be elected by fraud in 1844.

But while the present situation should not admit of any chance or ex-parte solution, it is eminently a case for compromise. Manifestly, if either Hayes and Wheeler or Tilden and Hendricks are declared elected there will be suspicion and heart-burning, which will be long in passing away. But if it were possible to declare a failure to elect, and either remand the question back to the people, or give the choice to Congress (in which case we should have Tilden and Wheeler), we might arrive at a peaceable and satisfactory settlement.

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 25, 1876.

WANTED—MORE KNOWLEDGE.

TO THE LIBERALS OF MASSACHUSETTS:—

A petition to the legislature of this State, concerning an extension of the powers of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor is in circulation. It is petitioned "so to extend the duties and powers of the statistical Labor-Bureau, that it, for the purpose of a full and reliable report, shall investigate not only the condition of the working population, but also that of the manufacturing establishments erected by capitalists by whom this population are employed."

When through such an investigation it is learned what profits, after deduction of all the costs, and a moderate interest on the employed capital, the capitalists, as such, draw from their establishments, it will then be easy to estimate, in how far they are able, and how far justice can demand from them, to bring the wages of the laborer into a just proportion to his work performed.

The practical importance of such a step cannot be over-estimated, and liberals are expected to aid this scheme. All those who favor it will promote it by putting their signature to the petition. To this end they are cordially invited to call at the office of the Pioneer, 33 LaGrange Street, or to address the undersigned, who will cheerfully furnish copies to those willing to gather signatures.

IVAN PANIN,
1 Crescent Place, Boston.

A COMPANY gathered at the residence of August Hills, in Bocrum Street, Williamaburgh, on Sunday, to attend the christening of an infant. Assessor Kiehl was chosen godfather, and the assistant of Pastor Weisel, of the Lutheran Church, began the ceremonies. To the usual question to the sponsor: "Will you renounce the devil?" the godfather, Mr. Kiehl, said that he didn't have anything to do with the devil; that he didn't believe in the devil, and so he needn't abjure him. The pastor answered, that if Mr. Kiehl did not answer the question, the child could not be baptized into the communion of Christ's people. Mr. Kiehl said that he would answer any other question, but he wanted to be left alone as far as the devil was concerned. The young pastor turned on his heel, saying that he would not baptize the child, and left the house. The festivities proceeded without the christening.

MR. TALMAGE thinks that Satan is a fool. The particular Satan, however, that excited the minister of the Brooklyn tabernacle is the editor of a Cincinnati paper, who recently tried to persuade people not to go to hear Mr. Talmage speak on the Bible and common school question. In spite of the editor's (or Satan's) warnings, people thronged Exposition Hall, and, according to the editor of the Christian at Work, were deeply impressed by his lecture. Moral: "Let all Christian men go straight on to discharge their duty. No permanent harm can befall them. The heathen may rage, but God rules, and the devil is a fool"—and Mr. Talmage will still be heard.—Liberal Christian.

A CLERGYMAN, in Wyoming Territory, received $5 for preaching a funeral sermon, which he did very acceptably. It was the first money he had received for a long time for professional services, and he concluded to put it where it would increase and multiply. So after spending a few minutes in prayer, for Divine guidance, he arose refreshed, and, girding up his loins, he went forth among the by-ways and boldly entered the haunts of the wicked. When he returned to his humble home he found $5 had increased many hundred-fold. He had cast himself upon the turbid waters, so to speak, of a game of draw poker, and had scooped the boys out of $1,150 and some cents.—Exchange.

THE MOST remarkable speech ever made by a presiding officer has just been delivered in Florida. The man who made it is a member of the Legislature, and he was called to the chair unexpectedly at a convention of his constituents. Here it is in full: "You know I can't make a speech. We came here for something else. I hope you will not make asses of yourselves and break up the party." It is safe to say that more good advice was never crowded into so short a space.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 51 insertions, 6c per line.	For 52 to 104 insertions, 5c per line.
10c	8c	6c	5c
10c	8c	6c	5c
10c	8c	6c	5c

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tens-
sy, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with 'sacrosanct interest.'"

Send $3. for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Maloom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooks Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE
INDEX ASSOCIATION,

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tens-
sy, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

231 Washington St., Boston

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 8000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

253 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."

Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."

Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—a New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.

Jan. 28—Wm. R. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Ruling Classes; or, How the World is to be Redeemed."

Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.

Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."

"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.:

Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."

Feb. 25—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing."

March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."

March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."

Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 461 Washington Street.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.

2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.

3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.

4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.

5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER,

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES, ..... 15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES, ..... 40
FIFTY " ..... 75
ONE HUNDRED " ..... 1.50
TWO HUNDRED " ..... 2.40
THREE HUNDRED " ..... 3.00
FIVE HUNDRED " ..... 5.00
ONE THOUSAND " ..... 12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Killingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL, RADICAL, AND

FREE RELIGIOUS LECTURES.

By S. W. SAMPLE.

The following is a list of the subjects with which I shall enter the lecture-field this season:—

1. FREE RELIGION AND CHRISTIANITY.

2. THE AMERICAN IDEA AND THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

3. THE BIBLE IN THE CONSTITUTION.

4. THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE.

5. DARWINISM.

6. THE WOMAN QUESTION AND ITS ANSWER.

7. THE RELIGION OF WORLDLINESS.

8. THOMAS PAINE: SERVANT OF FREEDOM AND MASTER OF THE SITUATION.

9. BUDDHA AND BUDDHISM.

10. CONFUCIUS AND CONFUCIANISM.

11. THE BIBLE OF HUMAN ORIGIN.

12. A CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF THE FOUR GOSPELS.

Those desiring to make engagements with me will please address me at the earliest convenient date.

S. W. SAMPLE, JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II, III, IV, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1873, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '05, '06, '07, '08, '09, '10, '11, '12, '13, '14, '15, '16, '17, '18, '19, '20, '21, '22, '23, '24, '25, '26, '27, '28, '29, '30, '31, '32, '33, '34, '35, '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, '41, '42, '43, '44, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '50, '51, '52, '53, '54, '55, '56, '57, '58, '59, '60, '61, '62, '63, '64, '65, '66, '67, '68, '69, '70, '71, '72, '73, '74, '75, '76, '77, '78, '79, '80, '81, '82, '83, '84, '85, '86, '87, '88, '89, '90, '91, '92, '93, '94, '95, '96, '97, '98, '99, '00, '01, '02, '03, '04, '

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JANUARY 18, 1877.

WHOLE No. 369.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSSES.

THE RADICAL CLUB of Philadelphia is announced to have been dissolved.

MRS. VAN COTT has been to Washington to convert President Grant, but reports him as refusing to talk about his "need of grace or his soul's welfare."

THERE IS an old story that a member of Congress in a debate shouted: "Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates, sed major veritas." The reporter next morning made his speech read: "I may cuss Plato, I may cuss Socrates, said Major Veritas."

A CHARTER has been sent by the National Liberal League to Mr. Anton Braasch and nine others for the formation of a new local League in Milwaukee, Wisconsin; and Mr. Braasch writes that the application for another "will soon be sent from this county." It is evident that Wisconsin has some genuine radicals to boast of.

SWINBURNE the poet has published an abusive attack on Thomas Carlyle, in which he declares that he would have been a follower of Pilate, if he had lived in the time of "the communist and stump-ordinator of Nazareth." But Mr. Smalley, the London correspondent of the New York Tribune, says that these latter appellations "must be understood as meant for eulogy upon the founder of that Christianity of which he insists that Mr. Carlyle is the foe."

ANDREW JACKSON DAVIS, who was fifty years old on the eleventh of August last, received a birthday present of nine or ten thousand dollars from about two hundred and fifty of his admirers and friends, in this country and abroad. Among the contributors are reported the names of George Ripley, O. B. Frothingham, the Countess of Calhoun, Baron Aksakof, and William Green (whose contribution was three thousand dollars). Mr. Davis is one of the most gentle and unpretending of men, and multitudes will feel great pleasure in this tribute to his writings and his personal merit.

THE SOCRATIC method of teaching by interrogation has maintained an unrivalled supremacy in the art of education, and this is what the Educational Journal has just said of it: "By skilful questioning the pupil is led to discover truth, and trained to think. Subjects are developed from the stand-point of the learner. The teacher stimulates and directs, but never crams. Pupils are encouraged to present their own thoughts. If correct, the teacher deepens and widens these views by suggestive illustrations. If incorrect, the absurdity is shown by leading the pupils to discover the legitimate consequences. Thus the burden of thought and research is thrown upon the learner, who, at every step, feels the joy of discovery and victory, and the conscious pleasure of assisting the teacher."

REV. JOSEPH COOK alluded, on the next day, to Mr. Frothingham's lecture on "Jesus," the opening one in the Horticultural Hall course of this winter, as treating the subject in "a certain small, light, and inwardly coarse way, of which the world has had enough, and is tired," etc. Misrepresentation and effrontery answered the purpose of eliciting the "loud applause" in which His Lectureship delights; what need was there of grappling the subject on its merits? Orthodoxy still continues to worship an impossible Lord, and the "elephantine tread" is quite heavy enough to crush a man of straw.

REV. CHARLES F. DEEMS, D.D., at the funeral of Commodore Vanderbilt, said "that his last moments were happy because Christ had tasted death for him and was his redeemer, and that he could, 'like a child, lay his head upon the bosom of Jesus and go to sleep'; also that the Commodore had 'a singularly child-like faith in the Lord Jesus Christ as Savior, and that, having yielded him such faith and trust during all his life, he is numbered now with the saints in glory everlasting.'" The full beauty of these encomiums is only brought out by the fact that the Commodore bequeathed to the Doctor a legacy of twenty thousand dollars. The general principle might be thus stated: Every man who bequeaths twenty thousand dollars to his pastor is sure to be numbered with the saints in glory everlasting.

A LOUISIANA correspondent informs us that the Catholic Archbishop in that State has "vigorously assailed the common schools," and that "circulars have been sent out directing petitions to be signed and forwarded to the Legislature for the school fund and draining it into religious channels." Under such perpetual irritation as the Catholics are creating on this school question, does not every one see that the Protestant Evangelicals will be goaded into action of some sort? The result will be a Bible amendment of the Constitution, unless a strong public opinion can be roused for a purely secular one. This is no "dagger of the mind"; it is a most real and grave peril. Will not you do your part in circulating the petition of the National Liberal League for the Religious Freedom Amendment? It will help to stimulate thought now, and be a greatly needed protest by and by.

REV. ISAAC M. SEE, of Newark, N. J., has been found guilty by his Presbytery of "violating the Scriptures," inasmuch as he has allowed two women to preach temperance from his pulpit. In the report adopted, the Presbytery disclaim "the idea of condemning him as guilty of conscious and wilful disobedience of a Divine ordinance," but holds that "the passages of Scripture referred to in the charge do prohibit the fulfilling by women of the offices of public preachers in the regular assemblies of the church." Such action, proscriptive as it is, and absurdly unjust to women, we nevertheless believe to be the necessary result of a fair and unprejudiced interpretation of the Bible. The woman movement rests on moral considerations unrecognized by the Bible,—in fact unknown when the Bible was written; and the friends of this movement gain nothing with the majority of Christians, but lose much with thorough liberals, when by strained interpretations they extort from the Bible ideas it did not and does not teach. Put the woman movement on its just and dignified basis in the nature of things—the independent individuality of woman, and the fundamental rights which belong to her as an independent individual. On this ground the woman movement is invincible, and must prevail; on merely Scriptural ground it ought to be, and will be, defeated.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. REWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SORENEWMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. E. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Flint, Mich.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of the "Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of the "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ MILLINGER,.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 H. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. S. WALLISAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Essexville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, France.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quincy, Ill.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH E. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 2, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

Jesus and Socrates in the History of Religion.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN THE SECOND COURSE OF SUNDAY AFTERNOON LECTURES IN HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, FEB. 27, 1870.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

It is no new thing to compare Jesus and Socrates. So far, however, as my knowledge extends, it is a new thing to compare them from the point of view to which we are conducted by the spirit of this age. The same landscape wears widely different aspects, as seen from different hills; the same characters create widely unlike impressions, when studied from the summits of unlike experiences. Much depends on the point of vision,—more on the beholding eye. Never, in my opinion, have the conditions existed hitherto for an approximately just comparison of these two great men. The optical apparatus necessary for measuring the relative magnitudes of the stars of history is still imperfect; the laws of spiritual astronomy are still poorly understood; the astronomers themselves are unfitted for the task of scientific observation by blinding theories inherited from the astrology of the Church. The dust of prejudice must be carefully wiped from the lenses of the telescope; the cobwebs of theology must be swept clean from the brain of the observer. Notwithstanding the oldness of my subject, I have found myself not infrequently pursuing an untrodden path. Comparisons have been made between Socrates and Jesus, especially by Dr. Priestley and Jean Jacques Rousseau, which are familiar to all well-read persons; but they seem to me characterized by inappreciation and injustice. Believing the supernatural claims of Jesus, Dr. Priestley sacrifices Socrates at the shrine of theology; while Rousseau, emancipated from supernaturalism, yet a slave to sentimentality, immolates him on the altar of rhetoric. The one coolly cuts his throat with the butcher-knife of a dogma; the other gracefully pierces his heart with the rapier of an antithesis. Each comparison is apprenticed to a foregone conclusion; it is set methodically to work, and accomplishes its stint. The chief difference is that Priestley ekes out a deficient argument by a blunt assertion, while Rousseau concludes a dramatic contrast with a pyrotechnical exclamation. "Both the discourses," says the dogmatic Englishman, "and the general manner of life of Socrates and Jesus have an obvious resemblance, as they both went about doing good, according to their several abilities, situations, and opportunities; but we see an infinite superiority with respect to Jesus, though he had no such advantages of education and instruction as Socrates had." [Socrates and Jesus Compared. Philadelphia: 1803. p. 38.] "Yes!" exclaims the theatrical Frenchman, "If the life and death of Socrates are those of a sage, the life and death of Jesus are those of a God!" [Emile, in Œuvres, iv., 101: "Out, et la vie et la mort de Socrate sont d'un sage, la vie et la mort de Jésus sont d'un Dieu!" Cf. Corresp., in Œuvres, xx., 246.]

The truth is, that every Christian, being by the very fact of his Christianity pledged beforehand to render a certain verdict, is disqualified to sit as a juror in the case. He has expressed his opinion, and cannot be impartial. The first requisite for a just decision on the respective merits and demerits of Socrates and Jesus is freedom from discipleship to either. Partiality is quite as fatal to equity as prejudice; and every disciple is partial to his avowed master. The bystander alone can be unbiased. There is a fable of Æsop which has point in this connection. The forester and the lion were disputing which was superior in strength, a lion or a man. Having the worst of the argument, the forester led his grim opponent to a piece of statuary, representing a hunter standing over a prostrate lion. "There!" he cried triumphantly, "you see the man is victorious." "True," replied the king of the beasts; "but the case would be reversed, if a lion had been the sculptor." The great difficulty hitherto in the way of a just comparison between Socrates and Jesus, is the fact that Christians have been the sculptors.

A just comparison, however, between the two loftiest characters in point of moral grandeur which humanity has yet produced, would be of great value in the settlement of living issues. Believing, as I do, that the Christian world is entering upon a tremendous religious revolution, the forces of which have been slowly and silently preparing for five centuries, I see in such a comparison great practical uses. It will set before the popular mind, more clearly than any abstract statement can do, the nature of the vast conflict of ideas and institutions which, if I mistake not, is already begun. Hitherto Christianity has had for competitors only various special and historical religions, limited in fellowship and inferior to itself in spiritual purity and power. To-day it must meet the universal religion of humanity, boundless in fellowship, independent of local history, equal to itself in spiritual purity and power, superior to itself in freedom, expansiveness, and truth. Hitherto Christianity has been the Mississippi matched with sister rivers. To-day it is the Mississippi matched with the parent ocean. For Free Religion is simply religion itself, freed from the limitations which cling to all its special historic forms; and as the rivers of the earth both originate in, and return to, the one ocean that embraces the globe, so all historical religions, Christianity included, have both their origin and goal in the struggle of the human race after ideal perfection. Religion in its infancy is under the authority of individual teachers or Messiahs; in its maturity it becomes free faith in universal humanity. From childhood to manhood,—from subjection to liberty,—from persons to ideas,—from Christianity to Free Religion,—that is the order of Nature and the course of history; and because the hour has come when not merely isolated souls, but the people also, have become more or less conscious of reaching the period of full spiritual enfranchisement, I believe that a comparison between Socrates and Jesus, sketched from the point of view I have been led to occupy, will be of some practical utility in making plain the great living issue of the times. To perform this task with thoroughness would be impossible in a single lecture; I shall not be able to use even a tithe of the materials I have collected. Far from aiming at exhaustiveness, therefore, I propose merely to emphasize a few leading points in this comparison, and to contribute a few thoughts on the subject in the hope they may prove suggestive to other minds.

Jesus is confessedly the historic ideal man of the Christian religion; the reproduction of his character and spirit is the prime duty of his followers. He stands to all Christians as the "great Exemplar," the supreme and perfect type of spiritual excellence, the absolute and changeless standard by which all human goodness must be measured. To be sure, Jesus is reported to have said—"Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father who is in Heaven is perfect"; but the comment of Christianity on this precept is, that Jesus himself is the supreme revelation of the Father, and that the character of Jesus, therefore, is the sole exponent of the Father's perfection. We are thus brought back to the former rule, and perceive that Christianity holds up the character and spirit of its founder as the absolute, fixed ideal of humanity in all ages.

Now Free Religion can have no historic ideal man, since it entirely discards the notion of any fixed ideal for all mankind. Humanity is myriad-sided; and the only ideal which the race can have must be the combination of the highest possibilities of human attainment in all directions,—a combination impossible to be realized in any historic person. Furthermore, the ideal of the private soul varies in the case of each individual, and is dependent on its individual capacities; it cannot be cast in the mould of another's nature, nor forced without desecration into another's likeness. Nothing, therefore, could be farther from my purpose than to hold up Socrates as the absolute or fixed ideal of Free Religion. Having thrown off the yoke of one spiritual Master, I do not put my neck into the yoke of another. Although the erect attitude of him who trusts his own individual capacities, as his only Lord and Master, is incomprehensible to Christians, this is nevertheless the attitude which alone befits the spiritual freeman. Free Religion knows no hero-worship,—adores no human idol. But while all this is true, it is in my judgment also true that, of all men who are well-known to history, Socrates stands on the most commanding moral heights. Notwithstanding blemishes and limitations which I am by no means disposed to wink out of sight, the character of Socrates presents to my mind, without any exception, the finest historical illustration of some of those virtues which Free Religion must regard as most fundamental. It is, therefore, not merely a comparison of two individual men that will engage our thought, but rather, after all, a comparison of two religious ideals, so far as exemplified in them. Christianity holds up Jesus as a model for imitation perfect in all respects,—denying in his character the faintest fleck or flaw; Free Religion holds up Socrates, not at all as a model for imitation, whether perfect or imperfect, but as perhaps the grandest known instance of certain virtues which belong to humanity in its highest development. Each of these two characters is superior to the other in certain points; neither is perfect in all points, and I am far enough from seeking to idealize or to idolize either. But a comparison of them will throw strong light on the nature of the conflict between Christianity and Free Religion, waged half-consciously for centuries, and now for the first time breaking forth openly and in complete consciousness. It will show that this conflict is vastly more than a clashing of merely intellectual convictions, and reaches down deep into the moral and spiritual nature of man,—that it is not a war of philosophies alone, but touches the very heart of ethics and religion,—in short, that it is carrying the great struggle for liberty up from the plane of political and social life to the higher plane of moral aspiration and religious sentiment and spiritual character. This great conflict between Christianity and Free Religion means more than the amendment of Genesis by Geology, or the abolition of Sabbatarian statutes, or the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools,—more than the accomplishment of some petty improvement in church organizations,—more than the triumph of Temperance or Free Labor or Woman Suffrage or any other special reform. All these it covers and includes; but, more than these, it means the grand resolve of humanity to break every chain that hinders it of free development, whether political or social or ecclesiastical or intellectual or spiritual. It means the total reconstruction of human society on the basis of faith in man,—the reconstruction of human character on the basis of self-reliance and faith in universal Nature,—the grand consecration of human life to freedom and truth on the ruins of dynasties, churches, and creeds. This is what the conflict means; and a comparison which thus profoundly touches the greatest interests of the world needs no apology for public presentation here.

The sources of our knowledge, both with regard to Jesus and to Socrates, are, by a singular coincidence, merely second-hand. Neither of them left anything in writing. ["Cujus, t. e. Socratis, ingenium variorum sermones immortalitati scriptis suis Plato tradidit, quum ipse litterarum Socratis nullam reliquisset." Cicero, De Orat. III., xvi., 60.] They wrote only on the tablet of the human soul,—on the minds and hearts of those who heard their living words. The four gospels of the New Testament are the only books that give any knowledge of the life of Jesus; but these, quite as much as the so-called apocryphal gospels, are permeated with a mythical element which seriously damages their historical character. If we turn for information concerning him to the non-Christian writers of the first two centuries, we are completely disappointed. Even the allusions to Christianity and the Christians themselves are exceedingly scanty until towards the close of the second century. Dio Chrysostom, Plutarch, Crenomus, Maximus Tyrius, Pausanias, are silent; Aulus Gellius and Apuleius are silent; Juvenal, who not infrequently refers to the Jews, only once refers to the Christians, and then indirectly. The only allusions to the Christians which have come down to us from heathen sources during this period are found in Tacitus [Ann. xv., 44], who briefly mentions the execution of Jesus by Pilate and styles Christianity a "deadly superstition" [exstinguibile superstitio]; in Suetonius; in Pliny the younger; in a quotation from Hadrian in Vopiscus and another in Eusebius; in Arrian; in Galen; in Marcus Aurelius; in Crenomus, in Fronto, and in Lucian. [See Tzschirner, Græci et Romani Scriptores cur rerum Christianarum raro meminerunt.] But these allusions to the early Christians, rare and obscure at the best, throw no light on the biography of Jesus himself. How much in the New Testament is historical, it is impossible to tell; but, inasmuch as my purpose concerns only the gospel portrait of Jesus, which Christianity claims as historical and holds up as its ideal character, I waive all historic doubts, and in this lecture shall treat the gospels as authentic in all respects.

Concerning Socrates, however, we have trustworthy accounts, if any ancient writings can be so regarded. Xenophon and Plato were eye-and-ear witnesses of his life and teachings; and Mr. Grote considers them as in the main worthy of credence. No miracles or fabulous tales create suspicion of their narratives; and the same high authority regards their accounts as complementary, not contradictory [Hist. Greece, 8, 404]. We have thus weighty reasons for regarding the actual character of Socrates as far better known than that of Jesus; but I will treat them to-day as if they were known with equal certainty. For my object is in a few main points to compare the gospel character of Jesus, which is held up by Christianity as its acknowledged ideal for all climes and times, with what is represented as the character of Socrates, which may fitly stand as in some very important respects the best individual exponent of Free Religion. Not in all respects,—for I hold that no one man can, in the nature of things, be a perfect ideal for all men. I would be blind to none of his defects,—would magnify none of his excellences. If Christianity loses the gospel ideal, whether as in fact unhistorical or as morally imperfect, it loses its avowed corner-stone; but even if Socrates should be proved a myth or convicted of great moral depravity, Free Religion would still have its corner-stone intact; for this is no individual man, but universal human nature itself. I use Socrates as an illustration only; and no failure of a supposed illustration can be the failure of a universal truth.

Let me first point out some striking coincidences in the careers of these two men.

Both Jesus and Socrates were "graduates of the work-shop,"—the one a carpenter, the other a statuary. Both received the elements of what was regarded in their respective neighborhoods as a decent education, without receiving the special training enjoyed by some of their contemporaries. They belonged, therefore, to that sturdy middle class in society which has given to mankind almost all their greatest benefactors. Free from the grinding bondage of utter poverty, and equally free from the dangerous seductions of wealth, they grew up under conditions most favorable to the development of natural individuality. Hence they both respected labor and reprobated idleness. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," says Jesus, enlarging the idea of work to include spiritual as well as material industry; and again,—"No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." In like manner, Socrates asks, in the Memorabilia of Xenophon [II. vii., 8]: "In which condition will he be more temperate, living in idleness or attending to useful employments? In which condition will they be more honest, if they work, or if they scheme how to live in idleness?" But notwithstanding his own early training, Socrates, in common with most of the ancients, esteemed agriculture as higher and more honorable than mechanical occupations; saying, as recorded by Xenophon in the Œconomicus [iv., 2]: "These arts which are called handicrafts are objectionable, and justly held in little repute in communities; for they weaken the bodies of those who work at them or attend to them, by compelling them to sit and live in-doors,—some of them, too, to pass whole days by the fire; and when the body becomes effeminate, the mind loses its strength."

Furthermore, both Socrates and Jesus conceived a higher idea of their own special work than that of practising the mechanical arts to which they were bred, and by which they might have secured a comfortable and permanent livelihood, in order to embrace the vocation of public teaching. Poverty was the reward of each. "The foxes," said Jesus, "have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the son of man hath not where to lay his head." "From my occupation," said Socrates [Plat. Apol. ix.], "I have no leisure to heed the affairs of the state, nor yet my own affairs; but I am in the uttermost poverty through my service of the god." But accepting with equal cheerfulness the privations before them, they both sacrificed the ordinary ambitions and common luxuries of mankind, in order to devote themselves to universal ends. Socrates steadily refused to accept any pecuniary compensation for his labors of instruction, and there is no record that Jesus accepted any; but they both accepted the voluntary contributions of friends, without which neither could have continued his vocation. Poor as they were, they counted poverty no disgrace. According to modern ideas, there was something a little quixotic in the obstinate refusal of Socrates to accept the proffered wages for services actually rendered; but there is something sublime in the spirit which prompted the refusal,—something that extorts our reverence, even if it moves a smile. The so-called "practical men" of to-day, who always keep an eye on the "main chance," would sneer at him as a visionary enthusiast for thus despising what in the estimation of the average mind is the chief good of life,—money. But it is precisely these impractical and unworldly people, caring nothing for their private interests in comparison with what they see to be universal interests, who are remembered in after-ages as the great unselfish friends of their race. Humanity loves those who love it,—and has no memory for those who love themselves alone. "Pshaw! Men of one idea,"—that is the secretly pronounced verdict of the business-world on characters like Jesus and Socrates,—at least, if we may judge by the verdict it has passed on Garrison, Phillips, Sumner. But the large, warm heart of the people honors these servants of an idea,—deems it nobler to have only one idea and serve it in unselfishness, than to have no idea at all and serve self alone. Strike out of history the men of ideas, though they be only men of one idea,—and you would quench the brightest and most beautiful stars that light up the firmament of the past. Jesus taught for nothing,—Socrates taught for nothing,—but posterity has paid them both with undying admiration and love.

Furthermore, in making the highest welfare of man the great business of their lives, neither Socrates nor Jesus made any distinction among those whom they sought to benefit. The enemies of Jesus brought it as a charge against him that he sat down to eat with the outcasts of society,—that he was a "friend of publicans and sinners." He taught all alike. So also Socrates declares at his trial: "Nor do I discourse when I receive money, and not when I receive none; but I allow both rich and poor alike to question me, and, if any one wishes, to answer me and bear what I have to say." [Plat. Apol. xxi.] In this respect Dr. Priestley, anxious to prove the superiority of Jesus, is guilty of a gross misrepresentation of Socrates, when he says that his pupils "appear to have been confined" to persons of the better class. [p. 44, sect. viii.] Socrates made no more distinctions than Jesus, but imparted freely to all alike. Each in his own peculiar way, they equally "went about doing good"; and nothing could be more ignorant or prejudiced than the common assertion, which has been repeated even at the Boston Radical Club, that Socrates did not, like Jesus, "go about doing good." Xenophon gives proof after proof of the contrary. Socrates deters Glauco from foolish rashness [Xen. Mem. iii., vi.], encourages Alcibiades and strives most tenderly to reform his vices [Plat. First Alcib. 55, 56; Plat. Vit. Alcib.: Ælian. Var. Hist. ii., 1], reconciles the two brothers Chærophon and Chærearches after their feud [Xen. Mem. ii., iii.], shows Aristarchus how to help his poor relatives [Ibid. ii., vii.], helps Hermogenes in his poverty [Ibid. ii., 10], reforms the immoral Lysis [Diog. Laert. ii., 29], shames his own son Lamprocles out of unfilial conduct to his mother [Xen. Mem. ii., ii.; Diog. Laert. ii., 29]; rescues Phædo from captivity [Diog. Laert. ii., 31, and 106], and in countless ways made men better in their character and condition [Xen. Mem. i., ii., 61: iv., 1, 1: iv., 7: Plat. Apol. Soc. xxi.]. Socrates, no less than Jesus, was preëminently a moral reformer, and aimed at the highest spiritual welfare of his fellow-men without distinction of persons. "The common people heard him gladly," says the second gospel of Jesus. "Others were not, like him, friends of the common people," says Xenophon of Socrates [Mem. i., ii., 60: Plat. Apol. Soc. xxi.]. Young and old, rich and poor, heard them both and shared equally their benefactions.

Both also, stood aloof from politics, and for the same reason; namely, that to take part in the politics of their day, with the principles they cherished, would have been sure and speedy death. The only occasion on which Socrates held office came very near proving fatal to him because he steadfastly refused to do an unjust action at demand of the mob. I mention this voluntary avoidance of politics merely as a coincidence, without, of course, claiming any credit for either of them on account of it. Strange to say, however, both Socrates and Jesus owed their death quite as much to the offence they gave to the political, as to the religious, ideas of their countrymen.

Again, Jesus and Socrates each cherished a deep and settled prejudice against an influential class of the communities in which they lived. Socrates was prejudiced against the sophists, who were merely the paid teachers or professors of his time. He made a merit of teaching gratuitously, and blamed the sophists for accepting large compensations. His feeling on this subject strikingly resembles that of the Quakers against what they call a "hiring ministry." But many of the sophists were excellent men, who instructed the young Athenians in useful branches of practical education; and Socrates himself was popularly classed among the sophists also, as appears in the comedy of Aristophanes entitled the "Clouds." He somewhat unjustly condemned the whole profession of paid instructors,—a profession which to-day is as honorable as any other. In the same manner Jesus was prejudiced against the Pharisees, who were merely the conservative Jews of his time, with the common faults and virtues of conservatism, and who probably were quite as good and moral people as any other class among the Jews. They were preëminently the national party of the Hebrew nation, with a record for patriotic devotion to their country and its ideas as honorable as that of our own Republican party to-day; and they had received their name of Pharisees, which means the separated, because, in the fierce persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes two hundred years before, they had separated themselves from the recreant or "copperhead" Jews who succumbed to the oppressor and abjured the laws and duties of the national religion. Their chief distinction from the rest of their countrymen consisted in a belief that, besides the written law preserved in the Pentateuch or so-called "Five Books of Moses," the great founder of Hebrew nationality had also transmitted an oral law to complete and explain it. This oral law was the body of traditions, against which Jesus inveighed so vehemently, and which doubtless had indeed become a burden too heavy to be borne. But the Pharisees, as individuals, were probably no worse men than the rest of the Jews; they were by no means all "hypocrites" or "whited sepulchres"; and Jesus yielded to a passionate and indiscriminating prejudice in his wholesale denunciations of them. His natural and justifiable impatience of their conservatism led him into the common fault of radicals,—bitterness and injustice to men, as individuals or as members of a class; his contempt for their principles passed over into indiscriminating abuse of themselves. Hence he applied to them the most opprobrious epithets,—"fools, blind guides, hypocrites, whited sepulchres, serpents, generation of vipers," and so forth. It is never just to judge men by the wholesale,—to condemn them by classes. The vices of the Pharisees were more in their system than in themselves. They were not, as a class, insincere or unconscientious men; they were simply formalists and bigots, more attached to ceremonies than to ideas. Of how many excellent men of our own day must the same be said! It is the dictate of calm wisdom and real justice to condemn the bigotry and the formality, without accusing too severely the men who know no better than to be bigots and formalists. Thus Socrates and Jesus alike had their weak side, and showed something of that bitter party-spirit which it is never beautiful to behold.

One other striking point of resemblance remains to be touched upon,—I mean, the profound, all-controlling faith which both of these great men cherished in the fact of their own divine mission and the dauntless courage and fidelity with which they devoted themselves to the fulfilment of it at all hazards. The persuasion of this special divine mission was wrought into the very soul of each. That this is true of Jesus, there is no occasion to show; but it is equally true of Socrates. If Jesus believed himself called by his Father to the great and unparalleled task of establishing on earth the "kingdom of heaven," no less was Socrates convinced that he was sent by the gods to the Athenians to labor for their good. This conviction, which seems to have been ever-present to his mind, made him, in the language of Mr. Grote, "not simply a philosopher, but a religious missionary, doing the work of philosophy." His mission was to convict his fellow-men of ignorance of themselves, to the end that, by knowing themselves better, they might become both happier and more virtuous. It was not the mere love of disputation that sent him, day after day and year after year, into the gymnasia, the agora, and the streets, cross-examining and exposing every pretender to science, and pitilessly pricking the bubble of his conceit. No—it was far more the deep interior conviction that this process, like a needed surgical operation, must be undergone by every one, before true self-knowledge and real virtue should be possible. This was his great life-work,—to be the merciless revealer to every man of his utter ignorance of those things which touched most nearly his character and happiness; and it was a life-work enjoined upon him by the gods in every possible way,—by dreams, by oracles, by the mysterious monitor or "voice [φωνή]" which is popularly, but erroneously, called the "demon of Socrates." I cannot go into any lengthened discussion of this peculiar consciousness, which has given rise to so much controversy among scholars; it is enough to say that, in his defence before the judges, Socrates declares that the cause of his unique mode of life has been "a certain divine and spiritual something [δῖον τι καὶ δαιμόνιον]," which "began with me from boyhood, bearing a sort of voice which, when it comes to me, always diverts me from doing what I propose to do, but never urges me on." From the manner in which he speaks of this voice or influence, never personifying it or treating it as a distinct being, I am inclined to believe that he means the profound inner impulse to choose the right and shun the wrong which we are wont to call conscience,—that "still, small voice" which eternally forbids the desecration of the temple of the heart,—that secret inward monition which, in a deeply religious nature, seems at once personal and impersonal, and in some way, beyond the power of intellectual analysis, appears to connect the individual soul with the Infinite and Universal One. That Socrates meant what would be understood as a guardian spirit or little private god of his own, I see no reason whatever to believe; on the contrary, he seems to describe, in a manner doubly impressive because of its reverential reserve, the deepest experience of every human soul. Who ever yet attempted to express in words his own profoundest life, that did not at last retreat into more expressive silence? But be the explanation what it may, the consciousness of a divine mission was every whit as powerful and pervading in Socrates as in Jesus. For the faith, cherished equally by both, that a certain task or life-work was set before them as the will of a higher Power, created in both alike the same absolute purpose and indomitable resolve to perform this task at any and every cost. I cannot see that the fidelity of Jesus to this ideal work was in any degree higher or more complete than that of Socrates. On the contrary, had it been possible for them to have met and understood each other, I cannot see how they could have met or spoken except on the level of perfect spiritual equality, though it would have been easier for Socrates to understand Jesus than for Jesus to understand Socrates. With all the differences between them (and these were vast), I recognize in each the same incorruptible allegiance to the best and highest in his own soul. Beyond this who can go? It is this which equalizes all who have it, and establishes that absolute democracy of pure religion which abolishes forever all spiritual distinction of higher or lower. The pathway of each must end, it was plain, in death; but none the less did each pursue it. From the hands of their own countrymen, whom they had done their utmost to benefit and bless, they met their doom; but, with the same magnanimous and beautiful spirit, they died with words of kindness on their lips. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!" exclaimed Jesus on the cross. "I bear no resentment towards my accusers or my condemners," said Socrates to his judges. [Plat. Apol. Soc. c. xxxiii.] Jesus prayed God to forgive his murderers; Socrates forgave his murderers himself.

It would be possible to multiply indefinitely the points of parallelism between the greatest of the Jews and the greatest of the Greeks; but I forbear. The unity which makes all mankind a brotherhood exists most conspicuously in the noblest of the race. But none the less do differences exist. A few of these also I must note.

A striking feature of the public discourses of Jesus is their parabolic style. He spoke to the multitude in parables, and reserved explanation of these for the inner circle of his disciples. Like Pythagoras and others of the great instructors of antiquity, he maintained in his instructions that baleful distinction of esoteric and esoteric which has its origin, everywhere and always, in distrust of the common people. When his disciples asked him why he taught the people in parables, he replied,—"Because it is given unto you to know the mysteria [τὰ μυστήρια—mark the word] of the kingdom of heaven; but to them it is not given." [Matt. xiii., 11.] But Socrates kept no secrets in religion,—had no mysteria too sacred for the uninitiated,—formed no little royal court of apostles to receive announcements too high for the common ear. He spoke, to all that chose to hear, the best and highest of his thought; and on his trial he lays emphasis on this noble peculiarity of his teaching: "If any one says that he has ever learned or heard from me in private anything which all others have not learned or heard [in public], be well assured that he does not speak the truth." [Plat. Apol. Soc. xxi.] It is needless for me to say how much higher and nobler appears to me the grand faith in the power of Truth which Socrates thus evinced, than the deep distrust of it evinced by Jesus.

Again. In claiming to be the Messiah or King of Humanity, Jesus depended for the success of his mission on the public recognition of his claim by mankind. He could be in no true sense the King of those who should refuse to acknowledge their allegiance. Hence he was not in the best sense independent, but depended on a triumph outside of his own soul. I cannot but connect the fact of his outward failure with his despair upon the cross. "My God! My God! why hast thou forsaken me?" Words more full of pathos never fell from human lips, for they are the confession of irretrievable failure wrung from the depths of his very soul. He depended on others than himself,—and therefore failed. But it was otherwise with Socrates, who depended on himself alone and therefore could not fail. He sought no confession from others of any personal claim of his; it was his duty to instruct the world, but it was not his duty that the world should be instructed. That was the world's business,—it was his business to obey the god, and if he obeyed him, he achieved the only success at which he aimed. In his own hands he thus held the alternatives of failure or success; he was independent of all outside of his own soul, and therefore he succeeded. His last words, compared with those of Jesus, are a grand psalm of triumphant joy. "Crito," he said to his faithful friend, as he lay dying on his couch, "Crito, we owe a cock to Æsculapius; pay it, therefore, and do not neglect it." [Plat. Phæd. 155.] Strange that any one should be blind to the meaning of these words! Æsculapius was the god of health; and to pass out of this lower life into the larger powers and higher opportunities of the life to which he looked with calmest hope, was indeed like a recovery from disease. "DEATH IS CONVALESCENCE,"—that is the burden of these sublime words, the grand death-song of the dying swan.

But we shall miss the chief lesson of our comparison, unless we set in contrast the great predominant aims of the two, and the methods which their aims required. These aims were wide as the Northern from the Southern pole. Jesus aimed to establish the Kingdom of Heaven upon earth, in which he himself, by the grace of God, was to wear the diadem of absolute power. This was the will of God, and to that he bowed with perfect submission. The conception that power over all things was his by Divine appointment and Divine right, which is conspicuous on every page of the gospels, was wholly free from all that could with propriety be called selfish, in any bad sense of the word; but it was nevertheless intensely egoistic. It pervaded his whole consciousness, lent a certain majestic dignity to his mien and tone, and clothed him with a spiritual royalty of demeanor that has scarcely been equalled before or since. It gave the peculiar coloring to his parables, so many of which represent the "Son of Man" as a nobleman or king. It gave the peculiar character to his whole method of instruction, which is in the highest degree didactic, regal, and authoritative. Nowhere is this more strikingly evident than in the Sermon on the Mount, which is so often appealed to to prove his freedom from Messianic self-assertion. The simple statement at the end that he "spoke as one having authority" shows how completely the kingly consciousness had uttered itself to the people. "Verily, verily I say unto you,"—how frequent is that phrase upon his lips! Nor is its frequency explained by the theory that he was simply announcing his private intuitions on their own intrinsic authority. The true seer simply announces what he sees, and forgets himself,—is false to his high office, if he emphasizes his own personality in the matter. He states the objective truth as he beholds it, and never obscures it by calling attention to his own eyes or lips. The seer-theory is no explanation of the ever-recurring—"Verily, verily I say unto you." That phrase is the Messianic equivalent of the legal prefix—"Be it enacted." It carries with it the whole authority of God, in whose name Jesus speaks. Declaring himself to be "greater than Jonah and greater than Solomon" [Matt. xii., 41], Jesus, as a teacher, lays down the divine law,—he never argues. He states the truth, which must be accepted on his word. His entire method of instruction, therefore, is that of dogma,—the proclamation of eternal verities by one who is divinely authorized to proclaim them. He only once appeals to the active reason of man; he speaks to his receptive faculties,—deals out his gracious and benign truths, as he bestows the miraculous loaves and fishes on the starving multitude. It is all grand and beautiful and tender,—but he is surely blind who fails to recognize in all this that air and tone of dogma which has always been a peculiarity of the Christian Church, and has made "salvation by belief" its most marked characteristic. The Church came honestly by it. It was an inheritance from its founder. We intend no reproach whatever to Jesus, when we say that the—"Verily, verily I"—is the key-note of his whole religion. But truth itself, if accepted on the pure—"I say so"—of a teacher, becomes falsehood in the end. It paralyzes, suffocates, kills. The vast sandy Sahara of the Middle Ages, when Christianity had the whole Western world at its feet, is the natural accompaniment of the sirocco-wind of dogma. Because spiritual royalty was the essential idea of Jesus' mission, dogma pure and simple was necessarily the method of his instruction; and he who sees no connection between his aim and his method must be blind to relations of cause and effect.

But with Socrates the case was the reverse of this. The divine mission which he believed to have been assigned him was not that of a Christ or King,—far from it. In his own metaphor, it was that of a gnat, stinging the noble but lazy horse of Athens into activity. [Plat. Apol. Soc. xviii.] Or, in a still homelier metaphor, which contains an allusion to his mother's occupation, he was sent to be the accoucheur of thoughts in the human mind,—to be the midwife of the pregnant intellect in the birth of its own offspring. [Plat. Theæt. 17-22.] Stripped of all metaphors, the great aim of Socrates was, not to impart truths to his hearers outright, but by skilful questions and mortifying refutations so to develop the thinking faculties, as to enable his hearers to discover truths for themselves. In this view, therefore, his mission was, in the highest and noblest sense of the word, that of education,—the cultivation of germinal powers into conscious and vigorous maturity. Free development of the human mind,—that was the ideal end followed by Socrates with such untiring and unselfish zeal. More truly than any other human being, Socrates has earned the title of the GREAT EDUCATOR of the human race. He was the father of modern civilization as truly as of ancient philosophy, for his method was, and is, the only one that can develop the human mind. Dogmatism kills the mind,—education brings it into life. These, however, are the two contrasted methods of Jesus and Socrates, viewed as moral instructors,—the two contrasted methods, also, of Christianity and Free Religion.

Now comparing the conception which Socrates had of his great object,—namely, the free development of the mind,—with the actual method he pursued in carrying it out, we see at once the same correspondence and logical connection which we discerned between the object and the method of Jesus. If free mental development be the object, the proclamation of truths to be passively received would be defeat of this object. The mind must be thrown upon itself,—compelled to rely on its own resources. Familiar conversation, action and reaction of mind on mind, frequent question and reply, is manifestly the best method possible. Now this was precisely the method of Socrates. He never preached,—he conversed. He never dogmatized,—he argued and cross-examined. His mien was modest, his dress plain, his tone familiar. There was no imposing majesty about his manner or speech, no impressive authority which awed the people, no kingly egotism which proclaimed—"Verily, verily I say unto you." He never issued a manifesto like the Sermon on the Mount. But his conversations, fertilizing the intellects of his listeners, and compelling them to act on the great ideas of justice and injustice, honorable and base, right and wrong, and so forth, produced, I cannot doubt, as Xenophon declares it did produce, a great moral improvement in his companions. [Mem. i., 2, 61: iv., 1, 1: iv., 7.] Let me emphasize the natural connection I have pointed out between the aims and the methods of the two greatest teachers of the world,—Jesus the spiritual King teaching by dogma, Socrates the practical Educator teaching by conversational cross-examination. Of course I do not deny that Jesus taught also by conversation; but nevertheless, I do mean that the ever-repeated—"Verily, verily I say unto you"—is the language of the dogmatist; and that his Messianic claim necessarily made Jesus a dogmatist to a very great extent. Hence we find him with an organized band of apostles, initiated into the "mysteries of the kingdom of heaven," and superior in rank to the other disciples; while Socrates organized no such band, and refused even to have disciples. "Ye call me Lord and Master; and ye say well, for so I am," says Jesus, in the fourth gospel; and again in the first gospel,—"Neither be ye called Masters, for one is your Master, even Christ." How different was the tone of Socrates! So democratic was his spirit, so jealous for the spiritual freedom of his companions, that he declared in his defence: "I never was the teacher of any one; but if any one wishes to hear me talking and attending to my own business, whether young or old I have never grudged any body." [Plat. Apol. Soc. xxi.] Jesus proclaimed himself the King and Lord of his followers; Socrates refused to take the title even of their Leader, Master, or Teacher, and chose rather to regard himself as their familiar friend. Here we have the two extremes of Monarchy and Democracy in religion, illustrated in two great typical characters; and in this illustration is set before us the profoundest difference between the spirit of Christianity and that of Free Religion.

An incident, however, taken from the life of each as handed down to us, will reveal this deep dissimilarity between Jesus and Socrates, more clearly than any mere analysis.

The second gospel (xiv., 3-9) relates how a poor woman whose heart had been filled with enthusiastic love for Jesus, came into the house of Simon the leper in Bethany, where Jesus sat at table with his host, broke a box of costly spikenard, and poured the ointment on his head. She meant by this act to express her own devotion to one whose words had stirred the depths of her very soul, and probably also her own confession of him as the promised Christ,—the Anointed One of God. The other guests were indignant, and murmured among themselves, saying, "Why this waste of ointment, which might have been sold for three hundred pence, and given to the poor?" Jealousy of the young claimant of the Messiahship, doubtless, added intensity to these murmurs, which, however, were probably sincere. How did Jesus receive this homage to himself? "Let her alone," he said to the complainers; "she has done a good action. You always have the poor with you, and may help them whenever you please; but you will not always have me with you. The woman has anointed me beforehand for my burial; and whosoever the gospel of the Kingdom is preached, this deed of hers shall be told as a memorial of her."

A parallel story is told of Socrates by Ælian [Var. Hist., 1, 16], which has as fair a claim upon our credence as the foregoing. "When the ship had arrived from Delos," says Ælian—I quote his words,—"and it was now time for Socrates to die, Apollodorus, the friend of Socrates, came into the prison, bringing a costly and fine-woven tunic of wool and a mantle to match; and he begged Socrates not to drink the poison till he had put on the tunic, and wrapped the mantle about his person. For he said to him that he would not be unadorned with magnificent burial clothes, if he should die in these; and that his body would not then be laid out altogether without due honor. This Apollodorus said to Socrates. But he would not consent to it, but said to Crito, Simmas, Phædo, and their friends,—"Do you think that our friend Apollodorus here judges wisely, if he expects to see Socrates laid out after the execution of the Athenians' sentence? For if he thinks that the corpse soon to lie at his feet is I, it is plain that he has never known me."

Now these two anecdotes, whether historical or not, illustrate in a very striking manner the difference between the two characters. With the egotism inseparable from the Messianic consciousness, Jesus accepts, without a particle of hesitation, the costly offering of the woman, as a fitting tribute to himself,—accepts it without a blush or modest disclaimer of any sort,—accepts it as his rightful due, and promises the woman the reward of everlasting fame. The action itself he pronounces good,—deserving of eternal praise. The suggestion of the spectators that it was a waste is at the cost of widows and orphans crying for bread, finds no favor with him. The poor are always at hand,—their wants are quite prosaic and common,—they can wait. The expenditure is to the glory of the Messiah; he is to die, and his burial must be provided for with kingly magnificence. Let the poor wait till he is dead and buried with befitting honors,—their miseries are not so very pressing after all, and relief had better be postponed for the sake of honoring his own high office. It is more important that the body of the Christ be richly anointed for his burial, than that human tears be dried and broken hearts bound up. Now all this sounds harsh, I know, when thus put into plain English; and I may seem to you insensitive to the despair turned into hope, the tender love, the passionate devotion, the upsurging aspirations and self-consecrations and prayers that burst from the depths of that repentant woman's heart as she poured the ointment on his head. But I am not. All this I reverence. But the more beautiful the woman's impulse, the more beautiful would it have been in Jesus to have tenderly restrained it, to have gently guided her enthusiasm into worthier channels, and to have refused a homage which one human being should never pay to another. Taking the story as it stands (and we agreed not to challenge the record), there is a tacit usurpation, an intensity of egotistic assumption in Jesus' acceptance of this homage, that must offend every liberated and liberty-loving mind. Only belief in his right to Messianic honors could have thus extinguished the natural modesty of his character. The woman's tribute was the excess, the wild extravagance, of a gratitude which greater wisdom would have checked and greater modesty would have disclaimed,—which it was weakness to accept, and intoxication to glorify. I turn with a sense of relief to the manlier Socrates, gently repelling an equally loving but equally foolish tribute, and preserving the dignity of his own self-respect without wounding the heart of his friend. The Doric grandeur of his character was incompatible with the acceptance of gaudy trappings for his body. What mattered it to him whether his corpse should be arrayed in the magnificence of kingship or laid out in the simple decency of honorable poverty? The old cloak he had lived in was good enough to die in. That fine sense of the becoming which grows out of reverence for humanity shielded the grand old man from the foolishness of his friend. If Jesus had shown an equal sense of the becoming, and kindly rejected an over-costly gift to himself that it might alleviate the wretchedness of the poor, should we not all have thrilled at sight of his nobility? The highest self-respect is that which refuses all personal homage out of reverence for the universal humanity in man,—which cannot without an indignant blush behold another kneeling at its feet. In this supreme virtue of a self-respect which is respect for humanity,—in the sublime grace of reverence for universal spiritual freedom,—I count Socrates superior to Jesus, and Free Religion superior to Christianity. These two anecdotes illustrate the baleful reaction of the Messianic idea on the spiritual character of Jesus,—the nobler and more robust and more heroic spirit of Socrates.

To each of them, however, I would accord superiority in his own sphere. There is a tenderness and benignity and delicacy of spiritual perception in Jesus,—a wealth of sentiment and imagination,—a fervor of devotional life and a profound consciousness of God,—of which I find only hints in Socrates. Both were preeminently moral reformers,—but they represent respectively the morality of the brain and the morality of the heart. To Socrates, virtue is knowledge; to Jesus, virtue is love. Hence from Socrates dates a great philosophic movement,—from Jesus a great religious movement. Each occupies a partial stand-point, and the future must combine them both. The true morality is that which springs neither from brain nor heart alone, but is the outgrowth of the entire man. The true culture of humanity must be integral, inclusive both of Socrates and Jesus, the intellectual and the spiritual. For these two men are each one-sided; Socrates has too little of the woman in him, while Jesus has too much. Of the two, Socrates stands for the larger liberty,—Jesus for the larger love; and these must yet be joined forever in one, without sacrifice of either to the other. Free Religion alone has the possibility of uniting in itself these diverse elements so long held to be contradictory in the Christian Church. It will yet prove that humanity, vaster than any man, is capable of a unity more powerful and more beautiful than the divinest vision of the divinest dreamer; and its root is no historic name or fame, but that universal soul which lives in you and in me and in all, but rises from unknown depths in the abyss of Eternal Being. Not to Jesus or to Socrates, of whom I must leave unsaid so much I would gladly say,—not to any single spirit of our race would I point for supreme guidance or perfect light; but rather to that great Soul of Humanity which throbs in all ages with the life of God, which fills our own arteries with the universal tide, and which makes of one brotherhood all the children of men.

THE NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY.

A CIRCULAR.

RULES.

Name.

This Society is called "The National Secular Society."

Membership.

Any member may, in the discretion of the Executive, be admitted a member of this Society who shall sign a form of Declaration as follows:—

"I declare that I am desirous of joining the National Secular Society, in order to promote the improvement and happiness of myself and fellows; and I pledge myself to do my best, if admitted as a member, to co-operate with my fellow-members to attain the objects of this Association."

Name:

Address:

Occupation:

Active or Passive:

This Declaration, signed by the candidate, shall be transmitted to the President, or to Mr. G. Standring, Secretary, with one shilling for a quarter's subscription; and, if the Executive accept the candidate, a certificate of membership will be issued, the total subscription being four shillings per year. Persons too poor to pay this subscription, in addition to their other burdens, may be enrolled free on satisfying the Executive that they do real work for human advancement. Affiliated societies whose members join the National Secular Society only pay one-third of the above subscriptions.

If the person desirous to join be already an enrolled member of some local Secular Society, he can, on that local Society becoming affiliated as a branch of the National Secular Society, join and pay his subscription through a local Secretary. In this case the branch will retain in their own hands two-thirds of the above-mentioned subscriptions, to meet local expenses, one-third only—that is, at the rate of frequency per quarter—being remitted to the parent Society. In all cases the local organization is of the highest importance. Without efficient district organization the National Society can effect little good. The members are either active or passive.

The active list consists of those who do not object to the publication of their names as members of the National Secular Society. An active member's duty is to send, as often as possible, reliable reports to the President of the doings of the local clergy, of special events, sermons, lectures, or publications affecting secular progress. He should also aid in the circulation of secular literature, and generally in the free-thought propaganda of his neighborhood. Where a local Society exists he ought to belong to it, whether or not it be a branch of this Society.

The passive list consists of those whose position does not permit the publication of their names, except at risk of serious injury. The knowledge of these names is confined to the Executive, and the members are only referred to by initials. It is earnestly requested that persons in a good position in society will only enroll themselves as active members.

Members' subscriptions are payable quarterly, on December 25, March 25, June 24, and September 29. Any member more than six months in arrear may—provided due notice of his default shall have been sent to him, and disregarded by him—be erased from the roll of members, if the Executive shall so direct.

The Executive shall have power to expel any member, but the member so expelled shall have a right of appeal to the next general meeting of members of the Society.

Executive.

The Executive shall consist of a president, vice-presidents, secretary, treasurer, and members of the council, who shall hold office for a term of one year—i. e., from one annual conference until the conference next succeeding,—all the members of such Executive to be eligible for reelection.

The president, vice-presidents, treasurer, secretary, and auditors shall be elected by a majority of votes at the general annual meeting of members.

The members of the council shall be severally elected within twenty-one days after each such annual general meeting, by the several branches and affiliated Societies, one member for each branch or Society. All members of the council so elected, and resident more than twenty miles from the place of meeting of the Executive, shall be termed Corresponding Members, but shall, nevertheless, have full right to attend, speak, and vote at all Executive meetings.

Once at least in each year—and, if possible, to be held on the day of, and immediately after, the general annual meeting of the members of this Society—the Executive shall convene a conference of all freethinkers in the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Principles and Object.

The National Secular Society has been formed to maintain the principle and rights of freethought, and to direct their application to the secular improvement of this life.

By the principle of freethought is meant the exercise of the understanding upon relevant facts, independently of penal or priestly intimidation.

By the rights of freethought are meant the liberty of free criticism for the security of truth, and the liberty of free publicity for the extension of truth.

Secularism relates to the present existence of man, and to actions the issues of which can be tested by experience.

A secularist is one who deduces his moral duties from considerations which pertain to this life.

The object of the National Secular Society is to disseminate the above principles by every means in its power.

Offices: 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, London, E. C.

OFFICERS OF 1876-77.

President: C. Bradlaugh, Esq., 29 Turner Street, Commercial Road, London.

Vice-Presidents: Annie Besant, Ostlands, Mortimer Road, St. John's Wood; G. J. Holyoake, Newcastle Chambers, Essex Street, Strand; Charles Watts, 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street; Arthur Trevelyan, J. P., Tyneholm, Tranent, N. B.; Thomas Slater, 1 South Cross Street, Bury; R. A. Cooper, Aspland House, Thorpe Hamlet, Norwich; N. J. Ridgway, 123 Grosvenor Street, Manchester; P. A. Le Lubez, 10 Grove Terrace, Grove Road, Bow.

Treasurer: P. A. Le Lubez.

Auditors: R. Forder, 37 Taylor Street, Woolwich; W. J. Ramsay.

Honorary Secretary: G. Standring, 68 Grange Street, Hoxton, N.

Council: Mr. Ramsay, 10 Shacklewell Street, Bethnal Green; Mr. Haines, 213 Mile End Road, E.; Mr. Bull, Middle Lane, Hornsey; Mr. Matthews, 28 York Street, Walworth Road; Mr. Cook, 43 John Street, West Smithfield; Mr. Forder, 37 Taylor Street, Woolwich; Mr. Bullard, 14 Pitt Street, Barnsley; Mr. Smith, Maud's Buildings, Church Street, Bingley; Mr. White, The Grove, Brooke Road, Montpelier, Bristol; Mr. Waring, 16 Albion Street, Burnley; Mr. Forster, 85 Bondgate, Darlington; Mr. Ryan, 24 Lincoln Place, Dublin; Mr. Smith, New Street, Farsley; Mr. Roy, 487 New City Road, Glasgow; Mr. Hewson, Oxford Street, Heckmondwike; Mr. Cowan, 99 Brunswick Road, Liverpool; Mr. Child, Sandford Street, Leeds; Mr. Smith, 5 Burton Street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester; Mr. Melr, 78 Fleetham Street, Middlesbrough-on-Tees; Mr. Fairbairn, 86 Howard Row, Netherton Colliery, Morpeth; Mr. Sewell, 35 Kent Street, Shieldfield, Newcastle; Mr. Judge, 8 Kirkby Street, Arkwright Street, Nottingham; Mr. Priestley, 28 Franchise Street, Rochdale; Mr. Dorton, Mount Batten, Plymouth; Mr. Paul, Stone Street, Waterfoot, Rossendale; Mr. Worster, 21 Talbot Street, Sheffield; Mr. Clark, 17 High Street, Shirley, Southampton; Mr. Scott, 11 Albert Street, Dukinfield, Stalybridge; Mr. Stratton, 15 Kirkgate, Perth; Mr. Swainey, 38 Brunswick Street, Stockton-on-Tees; Mr. Newell, Higher Hough Stones, Standfield, Todmorden; Mr. Roberts, 43 Bangor Street, Little Bolton, Bolton; Mr. Leaper, 49 Salthouse Lane, Hull; Mr. Johnson, 11 Pychley Street, Northampton; Mr. Stones, Calverley Green, Altofts, Normanton; Mr. Clay, Bridge Street, Gainsboro; Mr. Oldman, 17 Sydney Street, Over Darwen; Mr. Dawson, Spennymoor; Mr. Hemingway, Spring Garden Street, Batley; Mr. Cawley, 5 Milk Street, Exeter; Mr. Ord, Foresters' Hall, North Shields; Mr. Cartwright, Vine Street, Quarrybank, Brierley Hill; Mr. Olifton, Lime Works, Houghton Spring; Mr. Brooksbank, 40 Drewton Street, Bradford; Mr. Waudby, 30 Hampshire Street, Buckland, Portsmouth.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE SWAN AND EAGLE.

FROM THE GERMAN OF A. G. SCHLEGEL.

The Swan.

My days serenely on the waters glide,
Which leave in ripples light my plummy breast,
While imaged in the scarcely-ruffled tide,
As in a glass, I see my form expressed.

The Eagle.

The lightning-splintered crag is my sojourn—
Abroad upon the tempest's breath I fly,
And where the fires of battle fiercely burn
With pinion bold I wing the murky sky.

The Swan.

Me with delight the azure heavens fill,
While flowers with sweet breath draw me to the shore,
Their balm inhaling, float I poised and still
Upon the stream, with sunset purpled o'er.

The Eagle.

When from their roots the forests gnarled are rent,
And wild tornadoes crushing tear a path;
When from the rifted clouds red bolts are sent,
I jubilant dare the elements' fierce wrath.

The Swan.

At bright Apollo's invitation sweet,
In waves of harmony I bathe and swim,
Or with furled pinions listen at his feet,
While charms his lyre the shades of Tempé dim.

The Eagle.

My perch the throne itself of Jove I make,
His bolts I with my talons clutch and bring;
And when my flaming eyes their slumber take
I veil his sceptre with my flagging wing.

The Swan.

The stars and blue vault, imaged far below,
In hours of musing often I survey,
And feel a longing in my bosom glow,
Which calls me to my fatherland away.

The Eagle.

With glance undazzled, on the noontide sun
E'en from my infant years I dared to gaze;
High o'er the dust of earth, its vapors dun
I soar allied to the Celestial race.

The Swan.

Calmly to death I unreluctant bow,
And, when the hour arrives which sets me free,
A dirge-note than I warble, wild and low,
So that my latest breath is melody;

The Eagle.

Chainless and free my spirit darts away,
Leaving behind, below, the extinguished pyre;
It swiftly mounts, till in eternal day
It ends of its lost youth again the fire.

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 13.

Frank L. Pope, £3.20; S. Webster, £3.20; G. K. Withington, £3.00; Rev. Fiske Barrett, £3.20; Miss L. B. Atwill, £3.20; Justin Rideout, £4.00; W. S. Babcock, Jr., £5.00; G. H. Foster, £1.10; J. C. Learned, £3.20; Y. M. P. O. Union, £9.40; W. R. Morgan, £3.20; H. H. Everts, 75 cents; A. M. Lee, £3.25; Mrs. J. E. Judd, £3.20; Jona. Sawyer, £10.00; W. F. Freeman, £3.20; W. C. McDonald, 80 cents; C. Buffum, £2.00; T. Hughes, £3.20; C. H. White, £3.00; W. J. Phillips, 70 cents; T. C. Hayward, £3.20; R. A. Buxton, £2.40; W. Fisk, 50 cents; Hon. A. Canabot, £1.75; W. Berrian, £1.00; Mrs. J. P. Angier, £3.20; John Wiley & Son, £3.04; F. H. Isham, £4.25; James Thompson, £3.20; W. R. Foster, £3.20; Prof. J. E. Oliver, £16.00; J. O. King, £3.20; H. P. Nicholson, £3.20; Geo. W. Julian, £3.20; Seth Hunt, £3.20; E. R. Wicks, £3.20; J. W. Scott, £1.00; E. Bissell, £3.00; Fred Miller, £6.50; W. H. Collins, £3.00; Emerson Bentley, £1.50; H. D. Maxon, £3.00; Philena Carlin, £3.20; Rev. F. Frothingham, £3.20; E. C. Niles, 45 cents; William G. Snow, £3.20; Cash, 41 cents; R. Ormiston, £10.00; C. A. Gurley, £12.60; C. N. Overbaugh, £3.20; M. Einstein, 85 cents; Mrs. E. L. Saxton, £3.00; L. S. Judd, £3.10; Charles Nash, £4.40; A. C. Davis, £2.00; John Curtis, £4.40; Thos. Ranney, £4.40; J. P. Ingols, £3.20; W. Wickersham, £1.25; Maurice O'Connell, £3.20; J. L. Stoddard, 75 cents; Louise M. Thurston, £5.20; E. Hollowell, £13.10; L. G. Hoffman, 75 cents; Mrs. Ella St. John, 50 cents; Rev. J. M. Barnes, £7.15; J. K. Rose, £6.40; J. T. Sutton, £3.00; Jacob Hoffer, 10 cents; Joseph Marsh, £4.00; A. S. Latty, £3.25; Jas. Williams, £3.00; S. G. Morgan, £6.40; M. H. McKay, £4.15; Mrs. C. H. Chase, £3.50; G. A. Lane, £3.20; J. A. Chandler, £3.20; T. H. Matthews, £3.20; Prof. Ezra Abbot, £3.20; Wm. A. Jenkins, £3.20; Mrs. J. E. Laundon, £3.20; W. E. Harriman, £3.20; J. C. Godfrey, £3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the event.

The Index.

BOSTON, JANUARY 18, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 85 Monroe Street: J. T. FRET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

"KEEP RIGHT ON," says a subscriber, renewing his subscription; "make O. W. Holmes' advice to the students the motor of this century: 'Think what you like, and speak what you think.'"

ATTENTION will doubtless be given to Mr. B. R. Tucker's "Prospectus" on our last page, which fully explains itself. Mr. Tucker commands great respect by a character of singular sincerity and fidelity to conviction, and deserves great success in his venture.

SAYS A cheery correspondent: "I enclose you eighty cents for three months subscription for THE INDEX. Would be better pleased if I could send you fifty times that amount. But I do the best I can. 'Angels can do no more!'" True—and very few of them do as much.

THE PAINE BUST, which was paid for last summer by the liberals of this country, and presented to the City of Philadelphia simply as a mark of grateful recognition of Thomas Paine's important services on behalf of our national Independence, has been deliberately rejected by vote of the Select Council. We have seen no report of the proceedings, and cannot therefore state the ostensible reasons for this act of damning ingratitude to one of the purest patriots of the Revolution. But who can doubt the real reasons for it? Insolent Orthodoxy sets up a public statue in Philadelphia to Witherspoon, the one clergyman who signed the Declaration of Independence, but refuses to let grateful liberals place in Independence Hall even a bust of Thomas Paine, who did fifty times as much as he did to found this great Republic. If there were only a Liberal League in every town, as there ought to be, we should expect to see a storm of indignant protests sweep over the land; as it is, we expect to see nothing of the sort. If the liberals of America can quietly submit to be taxed for the support of Orthodoxy, as they are by church exemption and the prostitution of the public schools to sectarian purposes, it is quite unlikely that they will do anything very vigorous under the new indignity thus contemptuously put upon them. It takes combination and coöperation to vindicate equal rights.

ONE of the few men in this wicked world for whom it is impossible not to cherish profound and unalloyed respect writes thus from Ithaca, New York: "A Free Religious movement here may grow out of a Sunday P. M. 'Religious Association for Free Discussion,' which has had two meetings and just got fairly organized. We first discuss Immortality. Other subjects proposed are Sunday Laws, Civil Service Reform, the Basis of Morals, etc. Prayers, debates, and written essays are equally in order. The day's subject is assigned beforehand, and one is appointed to introduce it by a short essay or speech; and then all may speak, but no one for more than ten minutes at a time, nor any one a second time till all who wish have had a chance to speak once. Thus far Presbyterians, Pantheists, Deists, men and women, townspeople and students, work together with harmony and enthusiasm, agreeing to hold nothing too sacred to be respectfully and candidly discussed. Indeed, I think the thing was initiated by a liberal Presbyterian lady. How long this 'unity of the Spirit' can continue, with such diversity of opinion, we shall see. If it does continue, I shall think that the 'good time coming,' for which prophets and martyrs have looked, is near at hand. In the half-belief that indeed the good time, the reign of a free, rational, earnest religion is at hand, I wish you, who have done so much to hasten it, a happy new year and good-night."

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix, Boston: Published by the National Liberal League. 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. Abbot on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. Kilgore on "Democracy"; by James Parton on "Cathedrals and Beer"; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. Underwood on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. Paige on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. Y. Kilgore on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. Mills on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

INTELLIGENT SUFFRAGE.

In his last Annual Message, President Grant made but a single recommendation for specific action, as follows:—

"The compulsory support of the free schools, and the disfranchisement of all who cannot read and write the English language after a fixed probation, would meet my hearty approval. I would not make this reply, however, to those already voters, but I would to all becoming so after the expiration of the probation fixed upon."

Of this recommendation the New York Tribune has said: "This suggestion in the Message has, so far as we have seen it commented on, been very favorably received. We do not indeed recall a word of opposition to it from any quarter." Without doubt there is a predisposition to acquiesce in it by a very large class of the population, especially by that class which believes itself to represent the mental and moral strength of the nation. But we differ from these persons with regard to the propriety of an educational test of suffrage, and believe that their approval of it is a mere hasty inference from the admitted necessity of education rather than the result of a wise weighing of all that is really involved. It may be well, therefore, to state a view of the case which, however little it may find public expression, probably determines so many minds against the educational restriction of suffrage as to render it a mere theoretical hobby, little likely to become the practical mischief or practical nullity which experience would soon show it to be.

1. There is and can be no difference of opinion among intelligent people as to the imperative necessity of intelligent suffrage. Without this as the basis of free institutions, such institutions must be short-lived. The greatest dangers to republican government do not flow from the people's wickedness, but from the people's ignorance; for it would be manifestly impossible to combine a whole people in a wilful conspiracy against their own liberties or prosperity. But a whole people, or a majority of them, may be easily ignorant of the necessary conditions of their own liberties or prosperity; and this ignorance can easily be taken advantage of by the unprincipled few who have only selfish and destructive purposes to carry. So far, then, as the necessity of intelligent suffrage to the stable prosperity of the republic is concerned, we unqualifiedly agree with President Grant and those who approve his recommendation.

2. But there are two possible ways of aiming to secure intelligent suffrage. One is to restrict suffrage to those who are intelligent, leaving a more or less large ignorant and disfranchised class. The other is to make suffrage and intelligence equally universal, disfranchising only minors, criminals, idiots, lunatics, and insisting on the education of all children, who are all destined to become voters under this system.

3. To the first of these two methods, although recommended by thousands of bright people who ought to do better thinking, there are insuperable objections.

In the first place, there is no possibility of establishing a real test of intelligent suffrage. The reading and writing test is no test at all. It is a dead letter wherever it is tried, because it is absurd to attempt to convert the registration offices or the polls into primary schools. Nothing is easier than to evade the merely formal examinations at such places, and multitudes who can neither read nor write will inevitably vote notwithstanding.

In the next place, the impracticability of the reading and writing test extends beyond this impossibility of excluding illiterates from the polls. The worst trouble is that literates themselves are by no means all intelligent; and even if it were possible to draw the suffrage line with absolute accuracy between the literates and the illiterates, no real advance would be thereby made towards securing intelligent suffrage. Too many fools are able to read and write; not a few persons who can do neither are far more intelligent than many who can do both. The reading and writing test of intelligent suffrage, even when tried, proves a miserable failure to exclude the unintelligent from the polls; such a limit is too low, and yet it is impossible to fix any other limit which would secure the weeding out of unintelligent voters.

Lastly, even if the reading and writing test could be enforced, and even if it did actually secure the suffrage of all the intelligent, and no others,—even then, we say, the reading and writing test of suffrage would be a seed of terrible peril to civilization and to republican institutions. There would be then a well-defined "ignorant class," as well as a "criminal class" and a "pauper class"; and these are indeed the "dangerous classes." That the existence of an "ignorant class" should be guaranteed by the laws, which would in fact create it by arbitrary and indefensible and useless discriminations, would be a fact which only unintelligence of the lowest kind, however literate, could regard with satisfaction. It is surely time for American citizens to comprehend that the community is a unit, that its highest interests are identical for all classes, that no class can be excluded from the national life with impunity to the rest, that the basis of republican institutions must be the broad basis of the whole people,—in short, that no community is civilized, or can become civilized, which permits within itself the existence of a permanently uncivilized class. In fact, civilization must be measured, not by the exceptional elevation of a few, but by the elevation of all without exception to intelligence, virtue, happiness; and that country should rank the highest which comes the nearest to this attainment. To acquiesce in the existence of an ignorant and disfranchised class by formal statute, under plea of securing intelligent suffrage (which nevertheless could not be secured by it), would be a blunder which the American people will never as a whole commit, unless it has already entered upon a downward road.

4. On the contrary, the whole logic, genius, and spirit of true republicanism lead in the other direction. The Commonwealth is bound by the very ideas which gave it birth to declare emphatically: "There shall be no ignorant or disfranchised class within my limits. The utmost energies of all shall be concentrated upon the problem how to secure the maximum of intelligence, virtue, happiness, for each and every member of the body politic, no matter how humble or despised. Schools shall be everywhere maintained by me, the State, on the broad basis of equal secular justice to all; no citizen shall be exempted from his school tax; no child shall be exempted from the obligation of becoming educated at least to a certain point; no parent shall be exempted from the duty of giving this education, or else of permitting the State to give it at the public expense; no priest, no church, no institution, no sect, no party, shall utter a word of control over the schools; nothing but wisdom, experience, knowledge, patriotism, humanity shall administer the schools I have established for the purpose of educating all my citizens to discharge the high duties of citizenship in the spirit of justice, liberty, and mutual good-will. Every citizen shall vote, and every citizen shall become qualified to vote by early and thorough training in the duties of his destiny. Suffrage shall be universal; and it shall be made safe by universal education."

5. This is the only wise way to secure intelligent suffrage,—not to introduce now an educational test under the hallucination of thereby securing it, but rather to accept the irreversible fact of universal suffrage, making the needed extensions, and then see to it that education is impartial to all. We are by no means blind to the perils of universal suffrage as now partially and haltingly established, for the people hesitate still to make it safe by "compulsory education." But this they must yet advance to; they must yet establish a great national system of education for all, exempting none; and this system must be grounded on equal rights in religion. It is childish and reactionary to dream of securing reform, peace, safety, civilization by enacting a new limitation of suffrage; the republic is irrevocably committed to the principle of universal suffrage; and "returning were as tedious as go o'er." Universal education by a national system of free secular schools is the manifest demand of our entire political system, and why should we waste our energies in wrestling with Destiny? Look forward, not backward, for safety from the evils we see all about us lies only in the courage of a new advance. Intelligent suffrage we must have; let us secure it by pouring out knowledge for all.

DUTIES TO OURSELVES.

It has been the great distinction of religious teaching to lay much stress upon our duties to others,—upon self-abnegation and forgetfulness. There is, in the lower stages of human development and culture, constant need of this inculcation. The tendency of mankind, under these conditions, is to be swayed almost exclusively by personal considerations. The thought of self is so absorbing that the sentiment of humanity and justice exerts but feeble influence upon conduct. It becomes, therefore, the first requisite to the existence of society that men should recognize that something is due to others as well as themselves. But the human mind is prone to extremes. It renounces one to flee to another. It is thus that the corrective for the evils of personal aggrandizement and exclusive self-seeking became at length the depreciation and subordination of the individual,—self-subjection and sacrifice the prime virtues, the one and only end of life. All individual purposes and aims were to be converted to the glory of God and the service of others; even the individuality itself was to be extinguished, so far as possible without surrendering all place in this world. It was thus alone that celestial approval in this life was won, or peace hereafter insured! It is true that, with all the emphasis which this principle as a rule of life received, and the baneful consequences which ensued, as manifested in monkish and manichean asceticism, and the like, it has never obtained such complete acceptance in the human mind but that the natural intelligence and individual instincts would more or less assert themselves and override it. There has always been a sufficient balance of sanity among mankind to prevent it, with all its aberrations, from irrecoverably forsaking the path of common sense and progress.

The principle of self-sacrifice, in its best and most rational exercise, is a very noble and attractive one. It is impossible not to admire it. But it needs to be supplemented by its opposite, in order to attain the true equilibrium of character. Without this, life is liable to assume a warped and one-sided development, even in instances which elicit spontaneous reverences. It is in danger of falling into contempt of the world and life in general, and neglect of the claims of one's own personality. There has never been at any time too much enlightened and well-poised self-sacrifice; but there has always been too little perception or maintenance of its counterpart, the rights of the individual, the reflex duties which every one owes to himself. And this is as true at present as it has been in the past. Notwithstanding the selfishness which so largely prevails (and no one can help wishing there were less), the old conception of self-surrender and sacrifice as the preëminent virtue, the one which may be permitted to swallow all the rest, exercises an undue influence upon the human mind, and operates as a detriment to the broadest and most perfect culture.

There are thousands to-day who believe and act upon the supposition that charity—in the more ordinary use of the word—covers a multitude of sins; that if they only give evidence of this virtue it matters little what they are besides; that a donation to this or that object which it is popular to commend, to a fashionable church, a missionary, Bible, or benevolent society, or a liberal endowment of a sectarian college, atones for a life of gross and hardened sordidness; or that zeal in behalf of some public cause or reform supersedes personal and private shortcomings. It is thus that Mrs. Jellyby and my Lady Southdown are types of character more or less manifested in actual life not unfrequently.

There is great need in our day of emphasis upon genuine personal ennoblement of those traits without which no one can be what he ought to be, though he conform never so closely to a traditional or inherited conception of excellence. There is great need of correcter views of personal culture, of clearer perceptions of the rights of the individual, the duties which we owe to ourselves as well as to others. We need a more exalted estimate of the sacredness of the individual, notwithstanding all that has been vaguely taught in respect to this.

It is true that these two phases or aims of life, self-sacrifice and self-ennoblement, are involved in, are in fact but different manifestations or terms for, the operation of the same ruling motive or principle when intelligently combined. The one in reality an exemplification of the other. But as they have been presented there is need of discrimination in respect to them, in order that each may be truly apprehended and receive due consideration.

The tendency of religion and ethics to discourage self-assertion, to suppress individuality, to make one feel that he possesses but little dignity or value in his own nature, and that his own life should be merged in the life of those about him, has been an influential cause of much of the servitude into which mankind has fallen, and to which the individual still surrenders. It has contributed more than any other, and all others, to make men the slaves of civil and ecclesiastical systems,—to render them the willing subjects of custom, fashion, and blind leaders of the blind.

The absence of a proper sense of what is due to ourselves is frequently strikingly exhibited in the regard which persons suppose they should render to the opinions and ways of their kindred or those who sustain near relations to them. I vote with such a party, says one, because my father does; or I go to such a church to please my wife or mother. I am a liberal, but I never introduce any liberal books or papers into my family for fear of displeasing them. Sometimes these representations are sincere, sometimes they are but the excuses of needless timidity or selfish policy. It behooves every one to remember in these relations, as in all others, that there are rights and duties which belong to our nature, to our individual convictions and culture, which are superior to the claims of any human being upon us, be they as dear to us, even, as wife, father, or mother; and that, while we are bound to render them our profoundest respect, and sedulously endeavor to avoid whatever may unnecessarily be a cause of pain to them, more than this should not be exacted and cannot be granted without the loss of a brave and sincere manhood and character. It is here that, if we take up the words of Jesus, and (with a broader meaning than they were probably intended to convey) substitute for the "love of me," the love of truth or fidelity to convictions, as more binding than even relations of the most sacred affection or kindredship, they contain a principle which applies to all the exigencies and tests of intellectual progress. The same truth is embodied in this quotation from Emerson: "Nothing is at last sacred but the integrity of your own mind"; and in this from a younger thinker: "Religion is the effort of man to perfect himself." The full rounding out and perfection of individual life is the supreme end of human existence.

D. H. C.

COLLEGE POETRY.*

Perhaps the Harvard Advocate contributors may not take it as a compliment, when we say that the charm to us of this book of verses from its columns is their flavor of boyhood. But as those young gentlemen grow into the blue-green (not to say the sere and yellow) leaf, they will then surely feel a like pleasure in that fresh verdure of early spring, when the leaves seem full of sunshine in their delicate cells, and the face of Nature wears a bright smile of exuberant life, and has not a trace of economy in its prodigal expression. It is the time when all the powers of life seem to vie in expenditure of their own being, and to revel in the bliss of giving, hoping for nothing again. Such is the feeling which young life breathes upon us all, as we see our own youth in retrospect, and wonder if we ever seemed to our predecessors like these gay young fellows, spend-thrift in wit and imagination as well as in fun and frolic and their father's greenbacks. They have not yet learned to save up their ideas as current coin of the realm, and to dread a bankruptcy of brains as the daily drain of mental powers continues.

Far be it from us to say that the four years of college are the happiest part of a man's life. He knows little of the deeper happiness which wife and home bring with them, who can say so. But metaphysicians may say what they please about our having more happiness than misery. Few thoughtful men reach middle age without an experience that in darker hours makes them sometimes wonder if the game be worth the candle, and in their wiser moods makes glad that it has an end. Certainly it is a shallow soul which does not see that, as death is a blessing to the race, so it becomes welcome to those who must die, not only for the hope which looks beyond, but for the surfeit of living which is thereby relieved. But this gravity is hardly in place now, though it has a certain subtle connection with our topic.

Twenty-one years ago, the wise and venerable old man who himself was Harvard College for nearly a generation, preached a baccalaureate sermon on the young man's dream of life. Looking down from the old chapel pulpit on the upturned faces of the boys who, on that last day, could not fail to hear and to remember, he said, with an almost mournful emphasis, and that "wan, despairing look" which none who ever saw it could forget: "I would speak with all reverence of that dream, for I believe there is often more religion in the young man's dream of life than in the old man's philosophy of life."

In the varied pages of this little book, Dr. Walker's words find illustration; though in the changed form of thought and aspiration which shows the atmosphere in which men's souls breathe to-day to be so different, that a century back none would see any religion in these lines. With the joyous activity of mind and fancy which distinguishes bright youth, is mixed the awe and unshaped melancholy which weighs on the boy, as he sees manhood and the world all untried before him. We should be unjust to the book, if we did not recognize the poetic merit, and much more the honest fervor, which marks some of these poems; and we are glad and proud of our old Alma Mater that she cherishes the spirit which gives them birth.

But, after all, while youth can afford to be sad over imaginary woes and to make sonnets to its lady's eyebrow, maturer life prefers comedy to tragedy. We well remember the contempt which filled our soul when we heard a gray-headed old gentleman say so, as he sat behind us in the parquette, during the period when our first stove-pipe was still glossy. But we ask his pardon now, and confess that enjoyment of the exquisite humor, of the charming, delicate fancy, and really brilliant wit of some of these pieces, leads us to review the book to-day.

Chief among these delightful fellows is F. W. Loring. It gave us who never saw him a pang to remember that the hand was still forever which wrote so gracefully and easily, and with a taste as fine as the wit was keen and the humor delicious. In his death by Indian violence in the far West, we lost one whose youth gave promise of rare literary sweetness and excellence. His free power of language and verse reminds one of the exhilaration of sleigh-bells under the stars and over the crisp snow. We do not know in the language more clever bits than his contributions after the style of Holmes, Whitman, and Browning. The genial and bashful doctor must really be in doubt whether he did not himself write for the Advocate.

But Loring is not the only one who has given us good things. What fun Messrs. Morison and Tiffany must have had in jointly producing "To My Queen"! What could be more clever in its way, more finished and sparkling, than this little piece by Mr. A. L. Flake of 1869. We cut it from a newspaper-corner years ago, and were glad to find it in its own place. Hardly a word in it could be changed without loss. It is a model of such composition.

MY LADY.

Morocco soft that doth inclose
The white whereon my lady goes;
High heels that lift her lips to mine;
And eyelets with a silver shine,—
Fall not, malignant evening dews,
Lest you should wet my lady's shoes!

O purple grape-leaf on her head,
In silken benediction spread
With wreaths and ribbons, knotted, curled,
The colors of a magic world,—
Oh weep not, summer rains, upon it,
Lest you should soil my lady's bonnet!

O nameless art that makes her slim,
Laces in which her shoulders swim,
The daring graces that combine
The "Grecian-bend's" delicious line,—
Leaves, spare her as you nestle down,
Lest you derange my lady's gown!

Complexest wonders of the time,
Inspirer of my fervid rhyme,
What odds and ends make up the show,
The gracious lady that I know!
Confusion bright of sex and dress,—
To woo is sweet,—but to possess?

Our space is filled, or we would quote more. Of course college men whose hearts warm towards their old rooms and friends, as they recall the four years more of boyhood which they owe to Harvard, will enjoy this book most, because it wakes so many memories of men and places. But the flavor is too genuine not to please all who relish the fruits of cultivated mind in its early periods of development.

CLASS OF '55.

* VERSES FROM THE HARVARD ADVOCATE. Cambridge: Charles W. Sever. 1876. 16 mo. pp. 354.

Communications.

PHILADELPHIA LETTER.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—For the last eight weeks prior to the close of the Exposition, my house was so constantly filled with Centennial visitors that it was utterly impossible for me to find either time or place to arrange my Exposition notes properly for publication. But as my letters were intended for information rather than gossip, they might be just as acceptable to THE INDEX reader now as before the formal closing of the Centennial Exposition, were it not that this is a time and age when great and important events, all-absorbing to the public mind, succeed each other with startling rapidity. The great question which occupies the mind of the thinker to-day, is not so much what the American Republic has achieved during the last century, as whether she possesses sufficient intelligence and virtue to work out the great problems of freedom yet unsolved, and to make practical application of the results to humanity. If the people are to be judged by their executive head or by their representatives, whether in Congress, State Legislatures, or City Councils, the outlook is dubious.

Your readers doubtless wish to know what has become of the bust of Thomas Paine. Immediately after sufficient funds had been raised to pay for it, it was formally presented to the city by Mr. Kilgore, the appointee of the resident committee having the matter in charge, with the request that it be placed in Independence Hall with appropriate ceremonies. The Mayor sent the communication, accompanied by an appropriate note, to the Councils at their next meeting, when, on motion of a bigoted member, the whole matter was laid upon the table, where it remained for two weeks. Mr. Kilgore then sent a second communication, giving some of the more distinguished names of the donors to that body, requesting them to take such action as would dispose of the matter and relieve the committee from the unpleasant position in which we were placed.

Upon motion of Mr. Shoemaker, a noted citizen of Philadelphia, the attorney of the Centennial Commission, who was the best friend of Thomas Paine in the Councils, and who died last night, the former communication was taken from the table and the whole matter referred to the Committee on Restoration of Independence Hall. At a subsequent meeting of that committee a resolution was passed directing that "the bust of Thomas Paine be received with thanks and be placed in the National Museum."

The National Museum is a room, owned by the city, adjacent to Independence Hall, and equal to it in size, which has been fitted up during the last two years for the reception and preservation of the Revolutionary mementoes and relics for which no space could be found in Independence Hall. It is in this room that the old Independence bell is placed, with its original crack,—a monument of its false notes in pretending to ring out liberty to all the people while the mothers of the land were still left subject to their sons. And here, among many other portraits, hangs the portrait of Thomas Paine, which, by the way, was smuggled in. It was suggested to the committee that the bust could be placed there in the same way; but we felt that justice to liberal thought, as also to the memory of Thomas Paine and the donors of his bust, demanded that the presentation be openly and nobly made, and the city be compelled either frankly to accept it and place it in its proper place, or as openly to reject it. Of course the action of the Restoration Committee is subject to the ratifying action of both the Common and Select Councils. This action the former body has taken; but the Select Council has met from time to time and postponed and laid over the matter, until it is now evident, whatever may be its final action, that they do not design that this great patriot shall be thus honored during this Centennial year. What ought to be the fate of a nation which can thus unworthily treat the memory of any one of its patriots on account of different but not extremely radical religious views? True, this is but the action of a small body of officials; but the great nation has done no better.

Every nation at the Centennial exhibited in some form a representation of its God or gods and its religion. The Christian religion being the religion of all the nations of North and South America here represented, and of all the European nations save Turkey, the Christs and crosses were most numerous. The English, French, and German Christs were finer specimens of humanity than those of the Spanish; but, as representations of Deity, or even the divine in the human, all were insipid and disgusting. In the French department was a worn-out, cheerless, wooden stable, in which were the wise men of the East, doing homage to the new-born Christ. It was amusing, yet painful, in this great Exposition of the wonderful resources of the earth and the god-like power of man for their development and utilization, to see the crowds of religious devotees gazing long and admiringly, with solemn and tearful faces, at this exhibit, as if it were the veritable birthplace of their Savior. I could scarcely resist the temptation to destroy its sanctity to some of the bystanders, by telling them of the construction of the stables as also of the houses of Palestine, hewn out of the solid rock.

In the Spanish department of the Art Gallery was an oil-painting representing the Trinity. A cross, crabbled old man, dressed in the usual style of frock-coat and turn-down collar, possessed of less than ordinary intelligence, his head in a triangle of light, represented God the Father! In front of him, in a kneeling posture, was one of those horrid Spanish Christs, but nevertheless the better God of the two, upon whose head was descending the Holy Ghost in the form of a dove. Such representations of the Christian's God made me wonder more than ever that I, and not only I, but you and many of the strong-thinking men and women of to-day, ever did believe in the Christian religion. We should be exceedingly charitable toward the bigot, yet lose no opportunity so to enlighten the public mind that the children of the next generation shall not be educated into such paganism.

Every European nation save England and Turkey surprised us with its exhibits, some not equalling, others surpassing our expectations. Of Turkey we expected nothing but glitter and sham trinkets from the Holy Land, and were not disappointed; and our knowledge of England's resources and productions prepared us for her excellent exhibit. But we did not anticipate so fine a display from her colonies from all parts of the world (of which we shall presently speak) as was here made.

France and Italy did not satisfy us with their art exhibit. Probably they did not send their best work. It is often said that American sculptors cannot endow marble with the soulful expression given it by European artists; but Mr. Graeff, of New York, in his life-size marble figure of a child taking its "first step," proved this a mistake. The real living soul of the child speaks through this marble, and to my mind this piece of statuary was not equalled by any piece from any foreign country. The value of Bohemian glass and garnets are well known, of which Austria and Hungary made a fine exhibit. Four beautiful pieces of glass, in the decorations of which could be seen in any light all the colors of the rainbow, claimed to be a reproduction of one of the lost arts. We anticipated much from the educational exhibit of Germany, but Russia, Canada, and many of our own States did as well, and Belgium much better. We were prepared for the exquisite beauty of Belgium laces, but did not anticipate so perfect a display of the technical system of training by which the uses of natural products and their process of utilization are taught to children. I was only pained by the representation of Christ on the cross hanging beneath the clock in their school-room. When will the nations learn that schools should be for the teaching of science, not religion? The progressive educational system of Russia, though not equal to that of Belgium, the magnificence of her furs, and her exceeding mineral wealth with its artistic uses, surpassed our expectations. To say nothing of her silver, gold, and more precious stones, her malachite tables, vases, clocks, boxes, and jewelry were the admiration of all. Russia surely must be a much greater power among the nations of Europe than she has hitherto appeared.

The characteristic exhibit of Switzerland was, of course, her watches and carved wooden clocks, ornaments and light furniture; of the Netherlands, her system of dykes and docks, scientifically illustrated. The latter country exhibited quite an unexpected collection of parlor screens, one of which, beautifully inlaid with mother-of-pearl, illustrating the story of William Tell, far surpassed even those of China, indeed anything of the kind upon the grounds. The furs and groups of figures illustrative of real life from Norway and Sweden attracted much attention. Even Denmark (in which we found a characteristic exhibit from Greenland), Spain, and Portugal disappointed us with the good quality and variety of their manufactured goods, which by no means equalled those of other European nations. In the Spanish Building, located upon the hill above Machinery Hall, was Spain's very meagre literary exhibit, and her elaborate armory, occupying nearly the entire building. In this department, slightly represented, were Cuba and the Philippine Islands, their exhibits consisting mostly of minerals. One of the most delicate pieces of embroidery in the Woman's Pavilion was, however, a handkerchief made from the fibre of the pineapple-tree and embroidered by a lady of the Philippine Islands.

Canada, Jamaica, Trinidad, the Bahamas, the Bermudas, Ceylon, Mauritius, and the Archipelago of Seychelles, New Zealand, Australia, and India are the colonies of Great Britain represented at the Exposition whose exhibits I have not previously described. The natural and manufactured products of the first five of the above mentioned colonies are so familiar to us that I will mention only the lace bark peculiar to Jamaica, which is used for articles of both use and ornament. This bark is a natural curiosity, consisting of numerous concentric fibres so interwoven by Nature as to present the appearance of lace. It is said that a cravat frills and pair of ruffles made of this material were presented by the Governor of Jamaica to Charles II.

The exhibits of Mauritius and Seychelles consisted principally of native implements and images of male and female deities, akin to those of the native African, while the exhibits of Ceylon, consisting of shells, woods, tropical fruits and spices both in their natural and prepared state, identified her with more intelligent and cultivated Asia. The contrast was the more striking, as their exhibits were arranged in close proximity upon the same table. The fossil skeleton of the "moa," one of the nineteen wingless birds inhabiting the island of New Zealand prior to its habitation by man, which stands twelve feet high, with a fac-simile of its egg dug up on the islands a few years ago, measuring twenty-four inches in circumference, and large quantities of "kanri gum" (the fossil resin of a coniferous tree peculiar to the islands of the Pacific, taken from the soil in masses of from one to three hundred pounds weight), were the characteristic features of the exhibit of New Zealand.

(TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Very truly, CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE.
PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29, 1876.

P. S.—The Select Council has met to-day and by vote rejected the bust of Thomas Paine. What now shall be done with it? C. B. K.

A RETROSPECT.

The "Centennial Year," with its great expectations, outbursts of patriotic enthusiasm, and displays of national pride, has come and gone. It may be profitable now, after the smoke has disappeared, the noise ceased, the fireworks vanished, and the voices of the many orators been silenced, to review this eventful year, in order to ascertain our position, or, as a shrewd and careful merchant, to take an inventory of our stock on hand, to compare our action with our passion, our assets with our liabilities. Braced by mid-winter's keen atmosphere, and not influenced any longer by the exciting scenes, after calm deliberation, we may ask ourselves the questions: What is the result of our meditations? What lessons have experience and observation taught us? Have we made progress? Have we advanced?

In a certain sense, we can answer the last question affirmatively. We have undoubtedly shown to the world what immense progress we have made, especially in the useful arts and sciences and manufactures; we have demonstrated to the European scoffers and sceptics our remarkable material growth, and all that sort of thing, and we can cheerfully admit that even the crowning event of this eventful year, the Centennial Exhibition, in spite of many drawbacks, shortcomings, and blunders, was on the whole a grand success.

But we should not stop with these pleasing mementoes. The most interesting feature connected with this memorable Centennial Year, the most important aspect, to the lover of free institutions, was the opportunity offered to study these "free institutions," to convince the European republicans as well as monarchists that this great representative Republic is not a sad failure; that this "government of the people, by the people, and for the people" is no longer an experiment, but on the contrary a solemn fact accomplished. Whether in this respect our expectations have all been realized remains, we presume, at least doubtful with many honest and thoughtful people. It won't do to repeat that ad nauseam preached excuse any longer: "America is a young country; it has a new country's faults and defects, and it may possibly lack some of the finish, polish, elegance, and culture of older and more experienced nations." What we wish to know is whether America really has that very courage of ideas which is so necessary, whether our citizens are not afraid of innovations and reforms.

An able writer in THE INDEX, some time ago, came to the conclusion that "whatever else America lacked, it had got far on the road towards accomplishing three results; namely, political, religious, and social freedom." We wish we were able to subscribe to this dictum, but from our point of view, examining stubborn facts, we feel constrained to form a different opinion.

By the Constitution of the United States, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," and "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." Now, to the casual observer, this appears to be sufficient to express the idea that this country grants full religious liberty and unconditional liberty of conscience to every inhabitant. Full religious liberty, we say, not merely toleration; the latter is guaranteed by most of the constitutional monarchies of Europe, while they at the same time favor a State religion. This fundamental law does not recognize the Christian Sunday, nor the Jewish Sabbath, nor the Turkish Friday as a public religious day; the framers of our Constitution were particularly anxious not to recognize any religion, church, or sect whatsoever, and yet we all know that in nearly every State of our Union there exist statutory, prohibitory Sunday-laws. De facto the Christian religion is recognized as the religion of the State, not only by these Sunday laws, but by various other laws and enactments. We are all taxed to pay for the religious services of so-called chaplains, ministers of the gospel, who have to show by their prayers at the sessions of Congress and State Legislatures, that in this respect the Constitution of the United States is disregarded, that a religion is established, and that all our boasted religious liberty is a mere sham. According to the Constitution, and it is in strict accordance to its own provision "the supreme law of the land," perfect religious liberty is guaranteed, according to facts, this most important pledge is openly violated. It is not necessary to recall other flagrant contradictions and inconsistencies, such as the retaining of the Bible in our public schools, the exemption from taxation of ecclesiastical property, etc., etc. Readers of THE INDEX need not to be reminded of similar beautiful examples; but all these are only the legitimate fruits of the union of Church and State.

Yes! In this "land of the free and home of the brave" every man and woman (?) has a constitutional right to take care of his or her salvation himself or herself, without the assistance of clergyman or priest; and this great blessing the very same man and woman may enjoy also in England or Germany. It was, as everybody knows, Frederic the Great who proclaimed that in his country everybody was permitted to be saved according to the dictates of his own conscience; so we really fail to see what progress we have made since. To-day, at the one hundredth birthday of American freedom, in this land of religious liberty, a National Liberal League must be organized to save this country from the united attacks of religious bigots and fanatics, who, not satisfied with their past victories, are now coming to the front demanding a recognition of the Christian religion in the Constitution of the United States! And the harvest will soon be ready; no matter what the history of France and Spain may teach to the thoughtful, Tom, Dick, and Harry—the majority must rule!—continue to whistle "Yankee Doodle Dandy"! We leave to others the great crime of discussing the benefits of such a proposed recognition of the Christian religion, of such a union between Church and State. "There are some things," says Mr. Partridge, "not to be argued about, but to be destroyed."

Eternal vigilance, we all admit, is the price of liberty. A great mission is appointed to this Republic, and great obligations, important duties rest upon every individual of which it is composed. But unless the people realize the dangers, the rocks ahead, this experiment will also result into failure. As long as the Christian or any other religion is taught in our public school, as long as religious tests are required, as long as tax-paying citizens are compelled to pay for chaplains, churches, etc., there will be a constant source of irritation. We demand right and justice; we cannot admit that from the Papists alone come the greatest perils. A sentence from a recent sermon of the Rev. John Cowen Smith shows the stand-point of the average Christian statesman: "If we are obliged to accept a state of things which we believe to be wrong, we must do so, but never admit it to be right,—the consequences are too terrible. A nation can never cast loose from God. Macaulay may ridicule the idea of a union of Church and State; but, are there no divine institutions, such as the home and the Church? Is not the State a similar institution?" As we said before, there are some things not to be argued about. If any man, capable of studying the science, the philosophy of history, can only draw such conclusions, he becomes a very dangerous element in a country founded on free institutions. De Tocqueville said: "The republican form of government seems to me the natural state of the Americans, which nothing but continued action of hostile causes, always acting in the same direction, could change into a monarchy."

Among the "hostile causes" we may briefly point to a few other significant agencies which continually work to destroy this republican form of government. This nation has shown true heroism in war and self-control in peace. Every good citizen hopes for the peaceful triumph of order, law, and justice, and during the present great trial public opinion remains confident and calm. We do not belong to the army of alarmists and political pessimists, but we believe it to be our duty to expose the evil tendencies and corrupt practices wherever we discover them. The courts of this country are not permitted to elicit testimony from the priests of the Roman Catholic Church. They cannot force them to betray the secrets that they have learned in the confessional; yet the post-office and the records of our telegraph-companies are ransacked for secrets which, in a civil point of view, are certainly of equal sanctity. The excuse of the party adopting such expedients, that the other party had done likewise, is too puerile and contemptible to be noticed, especially when we remember that this excuse comes from a party glorifying in the epithet of "the reform party"! What have we done in the way of civil service reform? Our duty is plain enough: we must put the right man in the right place; we must abolish all favoritism, and we must hold our public officers responsible. When we look at the present political situation, we may well feel discouraged. For the first time in the history of our Republic it appears to be a settled fact that, whoever may be the President for the next four years, he will have to thank the ballot-stuffers and corrupt party manipulators and not the people for such a distinction. It is not important to know whether this election was a close one or not, but it is highly important to know the fact that both parties have conducted the election by fraud and corruption! These are indeed times resembling those of 1776 in more than one respect, times that try men's souls! The crisis will come; let us hope that this Republic will survive the present state of affairs. We say with noble John Brown: "Give me men of good principles, men who respect themselves, and with a dozen of them I will oppose any hundred such men as these Buford ruffians!"

HUGO ANDRIESEN.

BEAVER, Pa.

THE CHELSEA LIBERAL LEAGUE.

MR. ABBOT:—

In a quiet way, the good word got abroad in Chelsea, that there would be a meeting of progressive and radical gentlemen at the residence of D. G. Crandon, Bellingham Street, Thursday evening, the 11th inst., to consider the propriety of organizing a Liberal League. A goodly company came early in the evening, and formed a thought-exchange association,—a brief conference, each speaker being in sympathy with the objects of the League. It was a fine illustration of strongly marked characteristics in search of a new "Catholic Union." The discussion was brief, but all present seemed to understand that the League had an intellectual as well as a reformatory necessity for its existence, as some of the oldest and boldest workers for secular rights were not in sympathy or association with any of the liberal religionists—as such.

At 8 o'clock D. G. Crandon directed the attention of the company to the propriety of organizing an auxiliary Liberal League in Chelsea, in the full belief, that the effort and the organization were alike needed to lessen sectarian influence and aid in preventing the religio-political party from making the Constitution of the country a theological instrument. His approval of the efforts of Mr. Abbot in behalf of the National Liberal League was earnest and emphatic, and drew from the other gentlemen a sympathetic response. At the close of his remarks, by general consent, Mr. Crandon was made the Chairman of the meeting. A committee was then appointed to nominate a list of officers for the regular organization.

During the absence of the committee, Prof. Toohy occupied the attention of the company, at the suggestion of the chairman. He said he was glad the time had come for organized effort, and that attention was to be given to secular rights as well as spiritual wrongs. Not that he regretted the much that had been said and written on the abstract issue of religious freedom, since there was so much to learn and unlearn on the subject. He felt free to make the acknowledgment, having had to work his way from the Roman Catholic side of the controversy before taking a position outside of all religious organizations. He was equally free, however, to recognize the preferences of others for such associations, though his best judgment support the opinion, that the demands of the hour favored secular rights instead of ecclesiastical interests. He was opposed to the further union of Church and State, and thought the future welfare of mankind would come through a scientific rather than a theological education; and was hopeful for that time when the religious convictions like the other affectional relations of the individual, would be private as well as personal, and not as now, public and professional. He found pleasure in seeing that the young men were taking hold of this subject, and bade good-speed to the liberal movement; the more, as he could see no good reason to prevent every liberally disposed religionist from coöperating in the good work proposed by its constitution,—a work that would end only when freedom from ecclesiastical rule was accomplished, and the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness was as practical and real as it was now theoretic and commonplace.

The Committee's report was accepted, resulting in the election of the following officers:—

PRESIDENT, D. G. Crandon.

VICE-PRESIDENTS, W. H. Hamlen and P. C. J. Chaney.

SECRETARY, J. H. W. Toohy.

TREASURER, Russell Maeston.

DIRECTORS, E. F. Strickland, J. A. J. Wilcox, and Alfred V. Lincoln.

The constitution for the formation of local auxiliary Liberal Leagues was then re-read, and after some discussion approved and adopted. The only amendment made was to the effect that one or more Vice-Presidents be appointed to hold office, instead of one, present reading. The constitution was then signed by every person present, and the Chelsea Liberal League became an institution in fact if not in law. To that end, the Secretary was instructed to apply to the National Liberal League for a CHARTER, that the organization might have a legal, as well as a sympathetic right to existence. All seemed confident of success, and the Chairman read one of many letters received expressing sympathy with the movement. The writer was said to be a person of eminence, and intended to become more prominently associated with the organization at an early day.

Messrs. Dodge and Toohy were appointed delegates to wait upon and inform the ladies and gentlemen assembling in Liberty Hall, Sunday evenings, that a Liberal League had been formed in Chelsea, and would hold its next meeting the 29th instant, at the residence of D. G. Crandon, where all would be welcome to join the League, and take part in celebrating the birthday of Thomas Paine.

The Secretary was instructed to prepare reports of the meeting for THE INDEX and Investigator, and send them for publication. The meeting then adjourned.

Coöperatively yours,

J. H. W. TOOHEY, Secretary.

167½ BROADWAY, Chelsea, Mass.

"CELLS FOR SUPERSTITION."

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 5, 1877.

DEAR INDEX:—

A sentence in Mr. Frothingham's article in your last number—"the clearest heads will have a secret cell for superstition"—recalls an experience of not many years ago which illustrates it.

One of the guests at a dinner-party, I sat chatting with the hostess, awaiting the tardier ones, when a gentleman came in, and, after greeting the lady, apologized for the absence of his wife, whom a headache kept at home. As he left her to speak to others, my hostess turned to me and, with anxious face, said, "What shall I do?" "Do?" I replied; "why? Because L— has come alone? Have you no lady to balance him with?" "Oh! it is not that, but we are thirteen!"

"Well, what of it? 'There's luck in odd numbers,' says Rory O'Moore." "But my husband charged me not to allow it to happen. He would not sit at table with twelve others."

I am afraid my mouth stood open as well as my eyes, while she spoke.

I said, "You do not tell me seriously that Mr. — attaches any importance to that absurd superstition." "Indeed he does; so much that nothing would induce him to have thirteen at table. What shall I do?"

I wished myself away, but would not increase distress by proposing to be taken suddenly ill. After whispered consultation, the matter was settled. "A— is to stay away from table."

Men, for once what women always are—in excess,—was not as alarming as a Judas feast.

The sacrificed one was the daughter of the house, a girl of eighteen. The guest of the occasion being a live Prince, member of one of the three oldest royal families of Europe, I think it quite likely she meditated upon the consequences of maintaining in the head "cells for superstition."

The dinner, as one would imagine, was an uncomfortable one. Inquiries of course were made; excuses were lame; and all knew "something had happened."

Do you ask if this occurred in a pueblo of New Mexico?

No, in one of the most elegant houses of one of the largest cities in the Union, a house filled with books and pictures collected by its owner in half the countries of Europe; that owner, a New Englander, graduate of one of its oldest colleges, bred to the law, trustee of a university, and of a dozen literary, scientific, æsthetic, and charitable institutions, a bank president, and at various times a legislator for his fellow-citizens.

When such crude superstition as this is possible at the top of the ladder, among the educated and in some respects most intelligent men—observe, I have not told you of a woman,—the natural leaders of others, it is not difficult to understand that in the same city Moody and Sankey should, from the bottom of the ladder, have a following of eight or nine thousand.

A friend writes from Chicago: "The Moody excitement is still in full blast. M. and I went to hear him. We were unfortunate, for we agreed that on that day his speaking was often distasteful, sometimes disgusting, and generally dull. I really think, making allowance for all the good it may do, that Chicago is laboring under a sort of insanity. It is undergoing at the hands of Moody a sort of religious bulldozing. When one thinks of a city of half a million inhabitants with but one library, it an infant and not receiving its appropriation, he cannot help thinking what might have been accomplished, if all the money, energy, and enthusiasm that have been put into this revival had been turned into some channel whose waters would not dry up when the excitement is passed. The present terrible depression of business accounts, in a large degree, for the effects of the revival; and while I cannot blame persons for seeking some consolation, I wish it were in a more rational way, and am quite sure, if affairs were bright and prosperous, some of the enthusiasts would relax their religious tension. One gets terribly wearied with the daily iteration of 'souls saved in an instant,' 'drunkards reclaimed,' 'splendid sight of eight thousand persons gathered together in worship,' and 'the meetings,' 'the meetings!'"

Moody has wrought our miracle. He has made the pilgrimages to our Lady of Lourdes respectable.

Mais que voulez-vous? "You cannot expect to get out of a stupid people the effects of intelligence, and to evolve from inferior citizens superior conduct."

Yours, KATE N. DOGGETT.

LOUISIANA NOTES.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The New Orleans Bulletin of June 25, 1876, published a list of the real estate of that city exempted from taxation, on the plea of being church property or owned by charitable associations. The list, which subsequent inquiry proves to have been incomplete, represented near $28,000,000 of a total valuation for the city of $119,000,000, about one-fourth of the whole! Of course, all denominations are included in the list, but the greater portion is owned by incorporations of the Roman Catholic Church. The Jesuits Church owns Gallier Court, a very valuable property, rented for business uses. The property of the Ursuline Nuns included fourteen stores on Magazine Street, forty squares in the Third District, besides other valuable property. The Church reaps a golden harvest, and extends her lines in fruitful places. When the Liberal movement takes good root here, there will be a strong host to contend with.

The Roman Catholic Church is the leading one of the State, in wealth and numbers.

The holiday of Mardi Gras (Shrove Tuesday) is legalized by the State.

In common with the Church at large, the Archbishop has vigorously assailed the common schools. Circulars have been sent out directing petitions to be signed and forwarded to the Legislature for division of the school fund, and draining it into religious channels. Anathema is preached from the pulpits against parents who send their children to ungodly schools.

The most violent utterances on the Presidential imbroglio have come from the official organ of the diocese, the Morning Star. It exceeded the partisan press in denunciation of the President, the Senate, and submission to legal forms. Father Ryan, while its editor, delivered an "eloquent analogy" upon the White League, and its record of September 14, 1874, in New Orleans.

The readers of the press, upon the new Louisiana unhappiness, will please notice that the body claiming to be the legal Legislature, holds its sessions in St. Patrick's Hall. Let them remember that this hall is located on a principal street (Camp), and is owned by Hibernians, an auxiliary society of the Church, and is exempt from taxation. The hall is rented, likewise store-rooms on the first floor, to public uses. Traffic on the first floor, revolution on the second, what a satire on the proper relations between the Church and State! But I have given enough to think about at one time. The facts apply here heavily against the Catholics; but the principle involved knows no sect, and Protestants are not blameless.

Very respectfully,

EMERSON BENTLEY.

MOBAG CITY, La., Jan. 5, 1877.

MR. TALMAGE takes no stock in "unsectarian schools." He has gone out West to stir up the people about the enormity of such an offence as taking the Bible out of the common schools. "Insult the Lord by expelling his only book from the schools, and he will be no longer on our side. Is the Bible such an unsafe book that we must chain it? Will it bite? Will it hook? Will it sting? What our common schools most need is a larger dose of it." So, fired by this lofty ambition, Mr. Talmage rushes about to give "a larger dose" of God's "only book" as the sole cure for the wickedness of the times.—Liberal Christian.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No outs will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " 8c " "
 " 26 to 51 " 6c " "
 " 52 " 5c " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEEBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with 'screaming interest.'"

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 6.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

253 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

MONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."
Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."
Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—a New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.

Jan. 28—Wm. B. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Ruling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed."
Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.

Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."
"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.:

Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."
Feb. 25—Oliver McCauley. "Dr. Channing."
March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."

March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."
Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 451 Washington Street.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:

TEN COPIES.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	40
FIFTY.....	75
ONE HUNDRED.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED.....	2.50
THREE HUNDRED.....	3.50
FIVE HUNDRED.....	5.00
ONE THOUSAND.....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

THE INDEX,

231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL, RADICAL, AND FREE RELIGIOUS LECTURES.

By S. W. SAMPLE.

The following is a list of the subjects with which I shall enter the lecture-field this season:

1. FREE RELIGION AND CHRISTIANITY.
2. THE AMERICAN IDEA AND THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.
3. THE BIBLE IN THE CONSTITUTION.
4. THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE.
5. DARWINISM.
6. THE WOMAN QUESTION AND ITS ANSWER.
7. THE RELIGION OF WORLDLINESS.
8. THOMAS PAINE: SERVANT OF FREEDOM AND MASTER OF THE SITUATION.
9. BUDDHISM AND BUDDHISM.
10. CONFUCIUS AND CONFUCIANISM.
11. THE BIBLE OF HUMAN ORIGIN.
12. A CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF THE FOUR GOSPELS.

Those desiring to make engagements with me will please address me at the earliest convenient date.

S. W. SAMPLE,

JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for TRAOTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II, III, IV, 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $9.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. E. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.50.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. E. A. platform. $1.50.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL for both sexes. Address EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

A COURSE OF 10 LECTURES

By DISTINGUISHED WOMEN,

IN THE

PAINE MEMORIAL BUILDING,

WILL BE COMMENCED ON

SUNDAY EVENING, DEC. 3, 1876.

These Lectures will be of a very Liberal and Radical character, on various topics, interesting and instructive. The opening Lecture will be by Miss SUSAN B. ANTHONY, of New York.

Subject—"The 16th Amendment; or, woman want bread, not the ballot."

Tickets to the course of ten Lectures, $2. Single tickets 25 cents. To be had at the office of the Investigator, Banner of Light, and THE INDEX.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877, or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant, the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, aesthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

THE LABOR QUESTION—

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:

John Weiss, John Fluke, Edmund C. Frothingham, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orvis, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher,

BENJ. E. TUCKER,

Lock Box 669, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1877.

WHOLE No. 370.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE STORY is told of Archbishop Wood (Roman Catholic), of Philadelphia, that, when informed of the approaching cremation of Baron de Palm, he answered: "And his soul will be burning in the other world, probably, for I learn that he was a member of a society of unbelievers." What delicious logic in the Archbishop's "for"!

SIR WILLIAM THOMSON, one of the most eminent of the scientific men of Great Britain, says that there prevails in America "the truest scientific spirit and devotion, the originality, the inventiveness, the patient persevering thoroughness of work, the appreciativeness, and the generous open-mindedness and sympathy, from which the great things of science come."

MR. E. C. STEDMAN, the poet, has published a most interesting letter on "The Treasure Tombs at Mykense," with reference to Dr. Schliemann's remarkable discoveries, which is the best possible answer to the Saturday Review's amusingly ill-natured sneers at American scholarship. Mr. Stedman's versions of Homer and Æschylus are done with exquisite taste; and his luminous account of the great part played in Greek literature by the crimes and woes of the House of Atreus must give instruction to many and pleasure to all.

THE QUESTION of church taxation cannot be kept out of sight, but comes up continually in new forms: "A peculiar case is pending before the Quebec courts, involving the point whether a religious corporation, whose property is exempted by law from the burdens of taxation, should be allowed to compete in the manufacture of goods with those who pay taxes. A wholesale drug firm in Montreal has demanded an injunction to restrain the Sisters of Providence from making and selling a certain syrup, on the ground that, being exempt from taxation on account of their religious character, while holding property to an enormous amount, they enter into unfair competition with people who are forced to carry a great weight of taxation on account of such exemptions. In Quebec fully half of the assessable property is exempt, and many millions' worth in Montreal. The decision in the case will be an interesting precedent."

SINCE OUR LAST issue, the newly formed Chelsea Liberal League has applied for and received its charter from the National Liberal League, thus entering in a cordial, helpful, and generous way into the national movement for which the latter was formed last summer. The Chelsea League holds a public meeting on January 29, the birthday of Thomas Paine, and we trust it will make its protest against the rejection of the Paine Bust by the Philadelphia Select Council. That matter ought not to be allowed to rest. Philadelphia should be made to understand how small and contemptible her action appears to the better class of citizens throughout the country. Public opinion may yet secure a proper recognition of great public services, irrespective of religious beliefs. It will be a burning disgrace to the country, if a simple tribute of gratitude for Paine's patriotic devotion to the republic and to universal liberty should remain permanently rejected by the nation he so faithfully and unselfishly served.

THERE IS no little audacity in the Jesuitized Catholicism of to-day. Harper's Weekly says: "With a courage which amounts to hardihood, the court of Rome has, it is said, resolved to celebrate the anniversary of the humiliation of the German emperor, Henry IV., at Canossa. The event is of so old a date, and has for so many years been suffered to pass unnoticed, that this recalling of attention to it will be construed by all Europe as an act of defiance to Germany. The Osservatore Romano, the papal organ, expresses its approval of the project in the following terms: 'At the moment when a new and still graver period in the great struggle between the Church and the anti-Christian State, between Catholic liberty and pagan Caesarism, is commencing, nothing, it seems to us, could be more opportune or more salutary to the spirits of the combatants for the cause of God, of the Church, and of true human liberty than the remembrance of the great moral triumph at Canossa.' The Castle of Canossa is about seven miles from Parma. Here, in the year 1077, Hildebrand (Gregory VII.), protected by Mathilda of Tuscany, brought Henry IV. in humiliation to his door, and compelled the ill-starred monarch, habited as a penitent, to stand for three days, waiting till it should be the papal pleasure to absolve him. Prince Bismarck expressed a few years ago the German feeling in relation to this passage of their history, by saying, 'We are not going again to Canossa.'"

PRINCE NAPOLEON'S speech in the French Assembly in support of the motion to suppress the Budget of Public Worship seems to have been trenchant and radical in the extreme. The Prince inveighed against the "aggressiveness of the clerical party." In reviewing the recent history of France, he said: "In 1828 the Jesuits were repelled. Where and what are they now? They are all over France, and are all-powerful; they brave the civil law, and say, 'We have our own religious laws; the rest are nothing to us.'... When you sow Jesuitism, you reap revolt." Harper's Weekly says: "The effect produced by this savage assault upon the clericals and the Bonapartists in the Assembly was almost indescribable. For a time the members were in a tumult of confusion. Although the motion for the suppression of the Budget of Public Worship was lost, by a vote of 443 to 62, yet the Assembly obviously sympathized with the radical party. The unfortunate order of the Minister of the Interior, M. Marcère, forbidding the usual military escort at the funerals of the members of the Legion of Honor, excepting in the cases of soldiers dying in actual service, precipitated the crisis. For some time this escort had been refused to deceased members of the Legion who were buried without religious ceremonies. These examples of the influence of the clerical party over the government have very properly aroused the indignation of the liberals, and they have overthrown the ministry. The cabinet just formed leaves out MM. Dufaure and Marcère, whose subservience to the Church aroused the storm of passion which has been so fatal both to them and their colleagues."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY ROOT,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT,.....New York.
 MR. D. B. FRUTKIN,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. R. F. HOLLOWELL,.....Salem, Mass.
 MR. JAMES EASTON,.....Salem, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUMANN,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. ABRAHAM FAINE,.....Providence, R. I.
 MR. M. J. NAYLOR,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. D. W. FLETCHER,.....Chicago, Ill.
 MR. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. L. L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT D. ALKOWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. HORACE KRAVETZ,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. ALAN M. WILSON,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. D. B. FRUTKIN,.....New York.
 MR. MORRIS ELLINGER,.....New York.
 MR. J. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thornhill, Mass.
 MR. ROBERT COLLEY,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHESON,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. A. WALLIS,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMAN LIBBE,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SATWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER,.....Quilman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....17 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HAZEL P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1873.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston Index to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

On Making the Education of Children Rational, Free, and Religious.

BY MISS ARETHUSA HALL.

The chief hope of reform and progress lies in what can be done for children. It is rare that much impression can be made upon those whose opinions and whose round of ideas are already crystallized by maturity.

There seems very little encouragement in laboring for the poor who are already established in poverty. Hard-hearted as it seems, it may be better to let them suffer, and thus learn a salutary lesson, than to relieve them. Reference is had, of course, to those who are in poverty through their own improvidence, laziness, or extravagance; for, if well-disposed to take care of themselves, there certainly is no need, as a general thing, that any one under our free government should suffer for the necessities of life. And it is undoubtedly true that the passive reception of relief, by those who could provide for their own wants somewhere in this vast country, if not in the particular spot where they have planted themselves, is an injury rather than a blessing. So of all efforts to reclaim those already established in vice. It seems to be labor almost in vain, so far as general reform is concerned. It is merely clipping the tips of the branches, while the roots are left in all their strength and luxuriance the more ready to put forth fresh growth from the pruning. All efforts that have been made to remedy the "social evil," as it is termed, are eminently an example in point. What the courage of those engaged in the establishment of "Magdalen Retreats," and the like, is based upon, it is difficult to see. All the results would seem but as a drop to the bucket. It is a benevolence so short-sighted as to afford very little stimulus to one intent on making the mass of society really any better. If the evil is to be eradicated, it is a grave mistake to confine efforts to the one party alone, as has always been done, and to ignore entirely the existence of the other. It seems a wonderful obtuseness on the part of thoughtful men and women, in earnest for this reform, that we never hear reference to any but the "fallen women," the "abandoned females," not recognizing that the chief root of the evil lies elsewhere, and to attempt its extermination with any hope of success efforts must be made in the direction of civilizing man's animalism.

It is the same in regard to the treatment of all evils. What is needed is to go to work radically. If vice were forestalled by indoctrinating the young into the inexorable connection between crime and its penalty, prevention, which is so much better than cure, even if that were feasible, would in a great measure be secured. If the laws of health were well understood and heeded, there would be little need of hospitals. If the certain miseries of intemperance were engraven upon the mind of the child, few inmates would be furnished for inebriate asylums. And our prisons might well-nigh become tenanted, if the young, instead of receiving so much drilling in catechetical dogmas, were more enlightened as to the inflexible laws, both moral and physical, which in the end connect, as with a chain of adamant, suffering with transgression.

But, without further prelude, to come to the subject in hand: "The Making of the Education of Children Rational, Free, and Religious." It might seem that the whole could be included in one word—make it rational and it will be free and religious. For, to every individual human soul, is not freedom to think its own thoughts, to follow out its own convictions, one of the most obvious dictates of reason? And, to the mind observant of Nature, in all her microscopic operations no less than in the mighty forces which sustain and control the whole universe of worlds, moving on under the guidance of harmonious laws, with no trespass of one of its departments upon another, but each conducing to the beauty and welfare of the whole,—what more rational than the religious impulse and the fixed determination to seek knowledge of the Inspiring Cause of all, and to work in with the ruling purposes of the great Spiritual Architect in forming this wonderful system of which we are a part?

First of all, then, let the reason of the child be developed. Instead of thrusting ideas into his mind, call it forth to act for itself. Lead him to inquire, to seek, even if his questionings look toward what is called infidelity. For what reverence can he have for truth, if he may not even question where it is? At the same time, he should be made aware that there are things beyond the knowledge of any one. Teach him to be scrupulously accurate in all things, in his perceptions as well as in his use of words. Dr. Johnson is reported to have said: "If the child says he looked out of this window when he looked out of that, whip him." It is not supposed that this direction was intended to be taken literally, rough and severe as the old doctor was at times, but only as an indication of the value of exactness.

As favorable to the development of the child's reason, his earliest teachings should be from visible objects, and this in no vague, half-way manner. He should be led by the action of his own mind carefully to discriminate among them, to analyze their properties, and to describe them in words exactly suited to the purpose. The sacredness of truth in words should be early and deeply impressed upon him. Their origin and root should be unfolded to his understanding as far and as fast as his mind is able to comprehend such explanations. There should not be used to him, and he should not be suffered to use, a word that is not fully understood. In his reading he should be led to feel that he cannot pass over a word without comprehending its force. He should be given no definitions whose meaning he does not fully grasp, nor be presented with formulas or abstract propositions from which he can get no definite ideas. In all his early years, let Nature, in her varied departments, be prominent among the subjects presented to the thought and study of the child. Deeply impress upon him, as a fact, the existence of an inexorable law, firmer by far than that of any pretentious Median or Persian one, which chains cause to effect, and whose inflexibility is maintained as surely in all the minutiae of the moral world as in its physical action which holds planets to their centres, and binds together suns and systems. And thus impress upon his mind that the only rational course for him to pursue throughout the ages that he may exist, is to study sedulously the laws of his physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual being, to reverence them, and with fixed purpose to chime in with them, as the only means of carrying forward what is noblest in human capacity, and most promotive of all that is attainable in human perfection.

And so, secondly, at the same time that all the light possible from reason and experience is thrown upon the child, respect his own personality. Leave him free to think and act for himself. If the conclusions he arrives at seem false to wider experience, show him the flaws in his logic, scrutinize his premises, and lead him to repeat his process. If he acts contrary to right reason, that is, wrong, make him see and feel the consequences. Teach him early to exercise self-control. Show him his power freely to do so, and his duty to become complete master of himself. Do not put him in bondage to ideas concerning which he is incapable of exercising any just thought of his own. What is believed to be truth and goodness make clear to his comprehension, and, leaving free the action of his mind, trust to the fidelity of his natural, unbiased instincts.

At the same time that children should be taught to reason, judge, and form opinions for themselves, they should be guarded against pronouncing opinions where they have not the adequate qualifications for judging, or arrogantly setting up their ideas against those of persons who have had better opportunities for forming correct judgments. They can be made to appreciate it as a reasonable fact that those who have lived years to their months have had the means of arriving at more correct conclusions than theirs, and that long and patient investigation of a subject is rightly entitled to respect for its results which is justly denied to pretensions where only crude and transient thought has been bestowed. And thus modesty, which is certainly a most reasonable virtue, is acquired. It will be seen that deference to experience, to superiors in age and knowledge is reasonable, while at the same time it is most comely and graceful. They can be made to see that it is rational to take some things upon trust. They can understand that the world would have remained in perpetual barbarism if the experience and acquirements of one age and generation had not been transmitted to those that succeeded; that, coming into the world as bare of knowledge as of clothing, each one has had to begin anew for himself, and that, without the resources arising from those who have lived before to draw upon, the race of man would forever remain in the infancy of its powers, and very little elevation would it ever attain to beyond the brute creation.

It may be that much of the evil existing among the young comes from over-governing. That is, they are so little made to feel their own responsibility, and so much piled with the idea of passive obedience, that, the natural instinct of personal freedom asserting itself, they come to think they are good fellows so far as by prevarication, overreaching, falsehood, and deceit, they can break away from the restraints imposed upon them.

Herbert Spencer, in discussing the rights of parents and children, questions whether parents, strictly speaking, have any right to coerce their children. He does this on the ground of the natural right of every human soul to personal freedom,—a right which forbids one individual from encroaching upon the personality of another individual. Mr. Emerson says: "If I am wilful, the child sets his will up against mine, one for one, and leaves me, if I please, the degradation of beating him by my superior strength. But if I renounce my will, and act for the soul, setting that up as umpire between us, out of his young eyes looks the same soul; he reveres and loves with me." The late N. P. Rogers once stated that, after pursuing for a time the traditional way of governing his children, he came to the conclusion that it was not right, but that, on the contrary, they should be left free to choose and act for themselves. He therefore called them together, explained to them his ideas on the subject, and told them that for the future they must bear the responsibility of their own doings. He said the children trembled under a sense of the obligation thus laid upon them, and, so weightily were they oppressed by it, they would gladly have thrown the burden back upon him. So in most cases it might be, if at the same time freedom were given to the child he were taught to exercise it according to the principles of reason and conscience. He would come to understand the responsibility involved, and would feel it to be the most solemn duty that could be laid upon him to govern himself rightly.

Respect for the freedom of the child would seem to forbid the infliction of corporal, or any other kind of punishment, except in cases where his act so impinged upon the freedom or rights of others, as to forfeit his own claim to liberty. It is much to be doubted whether corporal punishment is ever of any moral benefit; whether it is not the rather deleterious, taken all in all, and demoralizing upon the nature of the child. If extreme measures must be used, it would seem better to resort to the deprivation of liberty, on the ground, made intelligible to the child, that it was endangering the rights or the well-being of others to let him go at large. And this truth should ever be made a prominent one in his mind,—that the exercise of his own freedom must always be stayed at the limits which bound the rights of others; that here there must be no trespass; and that, if he ventures to transgress these, he forfeits his own right to liberty.

And so, by allowing to children their own freedom, they will learn to respect the rights of others. Domineered over, they in their turn naturally seek to find objects over whom they may exercise the same power. It comes to be to them a matter of course, the order of Nature, that the stronger should make the weaker subservient to their purposes. And, if human beings fail on which to exercise this disposition, brute animals and inanimate things are made the subjects of it. Who has not seen the little girl scold and chastise her dolly for assumed disobedience to her will? Or the boy cruelly abuse his pet dog from the love of exercising power over the weaker? But in rare cases would such things be, if these children had not, in the first place, had this same kind of power, as it seems to them, exercised upon themselves. Partly in revenge, it may be, and partly as considering it a thing of course, they enact the counterpart.

And now as to the religious element in education. There exists in the perception of every human being, it is believed, a distinction between what he considers right and wrong. Persons may differ in their application of these terms, while the distinction is perceived. Accompanying this discrimination as to the quality of actions, there is felt to be an obligation to conform to the right, and to refrain from the wrong. The most hardened criminal will, as a general thing, acknowledge this. The young child soon comes to recognize its force, and when earnestly appealed to, and pinned down to the point, he feels constrained to yield to what he sees is on the side of right. The highest reason sanctions this. Wrong is seen to be violation of law, suffering, chaos, and, in the end, destruction. And what is religion but the carrying out of the principle of right—the perfect standard of truth and justice,—in all its minutest ramifications, of our relations to God, to our fellow-men, to ourselves, and even to the brute and inanimate world around us? This will differ in its manifestations according to the temperament of the individual, accordingly as the emotional and the intellectual elements stand related to each other. Where emotion, sentiment have the ascendancy, there will be a tendency to pious reverie and ecstasy. The natural human affections will go out and rest upon the spiritual ideals of the soul. But these experiences are neither here nor there in making up the just estimate of the truly religious element, whose essence consists in the fixed purpose of living up to our convictions of right, at all hazards whatsoever.

On this basis the child can, from his earliest years, be intelligently indoctrinated into the fundamental principle of religion,—a ground so broad as to embrace all the varieties of so-called "religions," and all the sectarian differences existing amid each variety. And upon this rational basis he should be left free to adopt such a philosophy of religion as best he may, or to indulge in such intellectual speculations as he is led to by the peculiar character of his mind. There will thus be no clashing between the inculcation of the religious element in the education of the child and the development of his rational powers in perfect freedom. Impress him with a sense of the immutability and the sacredness of truth. Show him that it consists in the reality of things, is firm as the universe itself, and that to discover it, and to live up to his best convictions of it, should be the great aim of his life. Let him understand that he has the same means of getting at truth as those who have gone before him; and that, as he comes to the maturity of his powers, he is under no obligation to take anything as truth, merely because somebody who has lived before him, perhaps ages ago, or some one else at the present time has asserted it. In regulating his own moral character, the child can be made to understand by his own consciousness a certain duality of his nature,—that there exist within him elements which, on the one hand, draw him upward, and give him aspirations to attain to all that is purest, noblest, and highest in his conceptions; while, on the other, there are impulses which, if he abandons himself to them, will drag him down even below the level of brutes, since they live up to their highest endowments, and he prostitutes himself to his lowest. Let him therefore be stimulated to obey, from free choice, the behests of his spiritual nature, and steadfastly to put under his feet all inclinations to the exercise of his selfish propensities, or to the undue indulgence of his sensual appetites.

The great evil in the education of the young is, that religion is made to consist in belief rather than in character. Hence, creeds, catechisms, dogmas which, in the first place, the child cannot understand, and next, if he does get any glimmerings of their sense, they are of little or no stimulus to him in right-doing. They serve only to cripple and fetter all his natural and better aspirations. And yet this to him is religion, with all its superincumbent weight of outward forms and observances which seem to rob him in large measure of the joy of life. Of the true idea of religion, he gets by such teachings no notion whatever. Neither by the example of parents or teachers does he see those lineaments of real religion depicted, which, if presented truthfully, could not but win his reverence and love by their reasonableness and beauty. The teaching by example is to children far more powerful than any other, and all that can be done by precept is as nothing compared with the influence they receive by what they witness in daily life in their own homes, among their nearest kindred and friends. And here, parents and friends, with strange insensibility to the existence of the sins in themselves, and to their depraving influence upon the children, practice selfishness, deceit, falsehood, pride, injustice, and other vices, in utter unconsciousness of their tremendous responsibility, and of the baleful consequences which must inevitably result to their children.

We come then to this: that parents and teachers must first be that which, in the course of educating children, they would wish them to become. If they are rational, free, and religious, so in most cases will their children learn to be. Here and there such examples are to be seen; but few, indeed, compared with the generality of households and of schools. May the time speedily come when there shall be a general awakening to the claims of reform in this respect, as one underlying all others that can be attempted in carrying forward the elevation and perfection of the human race.

1871.

(FOR THE INDEX.)

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

To restate, in simpler terms, somewhat of what has been previously stated: The Without, the Within, and the Between of Universal Things are represented by Matter, Mind, and Law, respectively, yielding the three corresponding sciences "Physiology" (Eisberg) or materiality—the science of all material things, Psychology (better called, in this large sense, Mentology), and Logic, in more than the Kantio-Hegelian sense, including all that, in conjunction with Mathematics and Philology—as prefigured in the double meaning of the Greek Logos, which means the Word, first as the logical reason or meaning of words (whence logic), and then in the common linguistic or grammatical sense.

Secondly, the Without, the Within, and the Between of the human body (as a type of Universal Things) are represented by the Flesh (the fleshy mass or brawn enveloping the skeleton), for the without, the "Inwards," viscera or viscerism, for the Within, and the bony Skeleton, for the between. A more precise statement will be required here as we proceed.

Nothing can be more natural, indeed indispensable, than that we should speak of the material world as something without, or outside of us, and of the mental world as that which is within. Auguste Comte, with no theory of correspondences or analogy to maintain or recur to, uses habitually "the Without" as synonymous with the Objective World, and "the Within" as synonymous with the Subjective World. Other writers and speakers unconsciously do the same, and thereby imply a much larger scope of correspondences, extending, as in fact, it does, to the total distribution of all things, and to the unity of the sciences.

It results, then, in the first place, that the Flesh (of the human or other animal body) is the Analogue or repeater of Matter, or of the Objective or Outer World at large; or, inversely, that the Objective World is the analogue or repeater of the Flesh of the animal body; that the Viscera of the animal body are an analogue of Mind as the Inner or Subjective World at large; or, inversely, that Mind is the analogue of the Viscera; and that the Bony Skeleton or framework of the animal body is the analogue of Logic, as one of the three grand divisions of universal things; or, inversely, that Logic, in the world of universal things, is the analogue or repeater, in that total sphere, of the skeleton within the human body.

Secondly, it results, that the Flesh of the human body, and Objective Matter in the world at large, are analogues or repeaters, in their separate spheres, of the Outrance or Utterance of language, as abstracted from meaning; or, inversely, that the Outrance of language is their analogue; that the Viscera of the body, and Mind among universal things, are analogues, in their separate spheres, of the Vital Meaning of words and speech; or, inversely, that Vital Meaning in language is their analogue; and that the Bony System of the Body (with its articulations or joints) and Logic, in the general world of being (with its "categories") are analogues of Logic in the more limited sense and Grammar, in language; or, inversely, that the Grammatical-logical Domain of language, is the repeater of the Bony Skeleton, in the body, and of Logic in the extended meaning of the term.

Thirdly, it results that the Soft Solids of the body, including the flesh and the viscera, the General Concrete World, including matter and mind, and the Lingueo-Concretism, including the Outrance or Utterance of language and its meaning are mutual analogues, or repeaters of each other, in their several spheres; that the Solids of the body, including mainly the bony skeleton under another presentation, Logic in the world at large (special abstract) and the Logic and Grammar Domain of language are likewise analogues or mutual repeaters; and finally that the Fluids of the body, including mainly its circulations, Evolution in the Cosmical universe, and the Fluency of Speech, extending to etymology, rhetoric, music, and song, are, again, also analogical with each other.

Fourthly, it is to be observed, that we have carried these same analogies, more or less fully through several other domains; namely, Form and Substance, or Geometry and Chemistry.

We are now prepared to enter upon a more formidable task, and to apply the laws of analogy thus partially discovered and illustrated, to the domain of Mind, itself, to the study of which we revert, however, armed with a new weapon, in the possession of so much of analogy as we have already established. Mind, itself, must have, it now appears, a Without (of its own, or within itself) a Within and a Between. This, indeed, is, in one sense, a fact recognized and established by Hegel, whose first division of Mind is into the Objective Mind, the without-ness mind, the Subjective Mind, the within-ness mind, and the Absolute Mind, or the between-ness mind. But what Hegel virtually does in this classification is to discriminate between the mind of Collective humanity, or Society at large, which is the objective mind, from his point of view, the mind of the individual man—his subjective mind—and mind independent of this discrimination—his (Hegel's) Absolute Mind. Taking the more restricted view of Mind, and confining ourselves to that of the individual man, we may then study its withoutness, or study it, in other words, from the point of view of matter, with Bain and the whole modern school of phyllo-psychologists; or we may study its withinness, or study it from the point of view of mind as such the introspective or metaphysical method; or, in fine, a third way of comparing the two former views, the betweenness of their points of view is open to us, and is adopted by Phenology.

It is not, however, in either of these senses, but in a still more restricted sense, in that of mind as such, and that as confined to the individual, that I mean, just here, to consider the subject of mind; passing afterwards back to the broader discriminations. Within the individual mind studied as mind, or from the strictly subjective and psychological point of view, we have still to discriminate this typical division of mind into a Without, a Within, and a Between.

The Without of the Psychologic Mind is the Spontaneity of the mind; unconscious mentation; or, if we discard this new technicality, we are driven to the paradox of saying unconscious consciousness. Carpenter affirms unconscious cerebration. Hegel calls this lowest and outermost form of mind the Soul, which as he shows, first exists in a quasi-identification with the body, and so, we may add, with Matter or the universal without. It includes, with other activities, the vital instincts which preside over the formation and functional activities of the body. Swedenborg affirms that, at Conception, the soul enters the womb, and builds or constructs its own body. From the point of view of the body and the outer world the soul is that which is inmost, but from the point of view of the mind (the withinness of universal being) which is our present point of view, the soul is the outermost of Mind, from which the mind as it becomes conscious and then self-conscious withdraws itself, or recalls, more and more interiorly. This act of withdrawal is a reflection, a bending-back, upon its own self-centring entity, of that which had gone forth into a sort of blind, thoughtless identification with the maternal environment.

The Within of the mind in this sense is, therefore, Consciousness, also rightly called Reflection or the reflective Consciousness. This is the phenomenism of the mentism; the domain or realm of the distinctly recognized phenomena of mentation. It is the domain or realm covered by Hegel's first great but introductory work, entitled The Phenomenology of the Mind. He furnishes in it a history of the phenomenal Consciousness in its progress from mere perception up to philosophical knowledge.

The Betweenness of the Mind, in this sense, that which intervenes between the Spontaneity and the consciousness, while yet it clasps and embraces them both, is the Mind proper, the subject-matter and domain of the common and well-recognized science which unfortunately we must continue to call "Psychology," giving it inappropriately, in view of these distinctions, a name derived from the Greek word for the soul.

(Mentation for the processes of activity and mentism for the realm are then applicable to the general aspecting combinedly, of the without, the within, and the between of the mind.)

These three great departments of the individual psychological mind will be more distinctly apprehended if we go a step farther and divide each of them into its own without, within, and between; thus I. The Spontaneity or Soul subdivides into 1. The Unprompted or Unsolicited Spontaneity, moved by the mere casual influences of outer Nature—"the natural soul" of Hegel; 2. The Prompted or Solicited Spontaneity, moved by some inner or mental prick of motivation—"the feeling soul" of Hegel; and 3. The Betweenness—and—mutual clasp of the former two—"the real soul" of Hegel; II. The Consciousness subdivides into 1. The Simple Consciousness, objective—THE OBJECT; 2. The Self-consciousness, subjective—THE SUBJECT; and 3. The Rational Consciousness—SUBJECT-OBJECT; III. Finally, the Mind proper (psychology) subdivides into, 1. The Susceptibility, 2. The Intellect (Sense, Understanding, and Reason), and 3. The Will (—Hickok).

The Objective or outer Consciousness again subdivides into 1. Sensation, its outerness or without; 2. Observation, its notice-taking, or within, like a sentinel posted for an outlook; and 3. Comprehension, the take-together (according to the etymology) of the former two, their betweenness, relation, and mutual clasp or embrace.

Sensation is the impression from the direct impingement of the external objective world upon mind having its capacity for consciousness, which capacity this impingement is instrumental in arousing into action. Sensation is, therefore, the Outermost, or the Special Without of the entire mind proper (the proper domain of "Psychology"), and it is often put therefore in the place of the Object, of which it is strictly only the outerness. Consciousness, on the contrary, of which both object and sensation are strictly only outer and still outer unfoldings, standing as a Within in original antithesis with Spontaneity or the Soul, as a Without, acquires a general representative meaning of withinness, and so comes to be habitually contrasted, as a Within, to Sensation (strictly only a ninth part of its own self) as its Without. Hence it happens that Sensation, Consciousness, and, as their betweenness and mutual clasp or embrace, Intelligence (covering vaguely the intellectual domain) come to stand, in a sort of general epitome, for the Without, the Within, and the Between of the Mind. Such interblendings and overlappings come from the constant expansions and contractions of these imaginary spheres of thought, and also from the felt necessity of epitomizing numerous discriminations, and representing them all in a sort of miniature expression.

For an exhaustive treatment, however, these convenient epitomes of thought do not suffice. They are themselves, confusions (pourings together) and they tend to produce confusion. We need here ample caution at every step; and one of the clues that will help to safely guide us is Etymology, revealing the law of metaphor. For example, the betweenness of mind, in this new sense, is Intelligence (the tie-together-inter-elligence), the lowest form, or commencement of which is Perception (the taking-in-through-per-caption or ception), as the end of a string must be taken in through the loop formed for it, as the first step towards tying, netting, or knotting it. Perception is, therefore, the middle of the betweenness, in this connection; and this accounts for the fact that nine-tenths of the forces of all metaphysical philosophy have been expended upon the consideration of Perception, or upon the question of: How do we begin to come to know things? how, in other words do we thread the needle for all the subsequent intrications, nettings, knittings, or connections of the mental process and faculty?

One of the worst confusions, from the habit of epitomizing, in treating of the mind; from lack of radical and clean-cut discrimination; and from the lack of proper technicality should here be pointed out, and emphasized; and I am glad to find it done to our hand. For a cautious, well-considered, and all-important discrimination between (individual) mind at large and consciousness, as only part of the mind, the reader is referred to an admirable philosophical tract, by William B. Greene, entitled The Facts of Consciousness and the Philosophy of Mr. Herbert Spencer, published in the work of Mr. Greene, entitled The Blazing Star, The Jewish Kabbala, etc., p. 112 et seq.

In respect to the precise definition of Consciousness, there is a perplexing diversity of conceptions. Hickok, instead of conceiving it as the total innerness of the mind, or indeed as any special faculty or action of the mind, regards it as a light within the mind, within the radiance of which all the mental phenomena become obvious to the thinking subject. See Empirical Psychology, p. 89. He does not inform us from what source this light emanates. The conception of consciousness "is not," he tells us, "of a faculty, but of a light; not of an action, but of an illumination; not of a maker of phenomena, but of a revealer of them as already made by the appropriate intellectual operation." (p. 90.) But that which is so revealed is precisely that which Greene denominates Consciousness; and there is, therefore, this approximation to accord between these two philosophers. "The Content in Sensation," he adds, "appears under this illumination as the objective, and the agency accomplishing this work, appears in the same light as subjective, and thus both the object and the subject, the not-self and the self, are together given in the same revelation of consciousness."

ABOUT THOMAS PAINE.

LETTER FROM MONCURE D. CONWAY.

LONDON, Nov. 28.

It has sometimes been a matter of wonder to Americans why it was that Thomas Paine should have been singled out from his many heretical contemporaries for the especial horror and detestation of Christendom. Some who were, indeed, much more heretical than he have been treated with comparative leniency. Thomas Paine was a devout believer in God and immortality, and died with the expression of that faith on his lips. But an examination of the history of religious liberty in this country reveals the explanation of the particular odium which fell upon Paine. It was upon his works that the battle of free-thinking, begun in Milton's time, was eventually fought out and decided. Flushed with the victory which had been achieved for freethought in America by the founding of a republic without any established Church, Paine came back to the Old World and began his assaults on the conventional creeds with his Age of Reason, his heresies being not unnaturally associated with his revolutionary political views which had been formidably enunciated in the American and French Revolutions. The recoil of this country from the scenes manifested by the popular madness in France enabled the Tories and reactionists to influence the entire middle class to unite in severe repressions of the circulation of Paine's works in England. I have myself known old English radicals who remember well the time when it was the chief occupation of the English police to ferret out not only all places where his works were sold or distributed, but also to detect and arrest all who were found even reading those books. Of course these stupid oppressors made the people hunger after the books, and they found the forbidden apples all the sweeter because they were stolen. Thomas Paine seemed to the lower classes the greatest man and author that ever lived, simply because all their Herods were pursuing him. I have been informed on sure authority that it was the custom in those days for groups of men who had in common a volume of Paine to go beyond the precincts of their town or city, chiefly on Sundays, and then one would read aloud to others, while one or two more sat several hundred yards off to give signal if the detectives were approaching. When the light became too dim for further reading the volume, which no man dare have in his house, was laid in a box and carefully buried until the next opportunity for a reading.

As my enjoyment of the Centennial has consisted mainly in fumbling over the musty files and records where are traced the vestiges of American freedom, I hope my readers will pardon my antiquarianism, if I pursue the matter a little further by reciting some of the trials and punishments which preceded the right of free discussion in England. I could easily fill an entire copy of your paper with them, but will limit myself to only six months,—the last half of the year 1793. On July 18 of that year, Mr. Cook, a baker of Cambridge, was sentenced to three months' imprisonment for having three years and a half previously—viz., on the 29th of January, 1790—said that "he wished all the churches were pulled down to mend the roads with; and as to the King's Chapel, he should like to see it turned into a stable." On July 13 (1793), Mr. Grimwood, an eminent manufacturer, was indicted for having a copy of Paine's Rights of Man in his possession; but being well enough off to employ a shrewd lawyer, who discovered a flaw in the indictment, he escaped. Two days after, at Chelmsford, Christopher Payn, bookseller, was charged before quarter sessions with selling one of Thomas Paine's pamphlets, and also got clear by a similar clerical error in the indictment. Similar escapes on technical grounds having occurred at Knutsford and elsewhere, the persecutors became more careful in drawing up the indictments; but at Derby they were encountered by another and more serious difficulty; namely, a jury which had become tainted with Paine principles, and who there infuriated the magistrates by acquitting two men for selling the Rights of Man. At Nottingham, August 1, Mr. Holt, printer of the Newark Herald, was convicted and punished for selling Paine's Letter to the Addressers. In the same month, at Taunton, Messrs. Robinson, eminent publishers, were tried before a special jury and sentenced to fines of £100 to one and £50 each to three others for selling the second part of the Rights of Man. A Mr. Pile, bookseller, testified that he ordered three copies of the book from the accused, two of which he delivered to his employers, but being "threatened by some gentlemen of the country with hanging, transportation, or being sent to the devil," he gave the remaining copy to the Solicitors of the Treasury. A boy in Sutton was sentenced the same August for "avowing himself a Paineite,"—£20 and twelve months' imprisonment. George Eden, for a similar offence, was fined one shilling and six months' imprisonment. Messrs. Peart and Belcher, booksellers at Warwick, were sentenced each to three months for selling the Rights of Man. On the 30th of August, Thomas Mair, of Huntershill, was sentenced to fourteen years' transportation for advising and exhorting persons to purchase and peruse the works of "the wretched outcast, Paine" [the Lord Advocate's expression]. When this ferocious sentence was given the people in the gallery of the court began to hiss; the Lord Advocate, in great wrath, ordered the tipstaff to take the persons who hissed into custody, on which that worthy replied, "My Lord, they are all hissing."

At Perth (September 13), Mr. Palmer, an educated gentleman, was for the like offence sentenced to transportation for seven years. After sentence Mr. Palmer addressed the Court in the following words: "My life has for many years been employed in the dissemination of what I thought religious and moral truths of the greatest importance to my fellow-creatures. I consider my politics as the cause of common justice, the cause of benevolence, and the cause of human happiness. I thought that Parliamentary reform would enhance the happiness of millions and establish the security of the empire. For these reasons I joined the society of low weavers and mechanics, as you, my lords, call them, and assented to the publication (of Paine's works) to reanimate the exertions of our fellow-citizens. It is my utmost ambition to endeavor to add to the sum of human happiness; and I shall suffer not only with courage, but with cheerfulness, in the hope that my sufferings will not be lost, but be as efficacious to the general good as my most active exertions." A paragraph (in October) shows that Mr. Phillips, a bookseller, of Leicester (now represented in Parliament by a theist), was undergoing then his seventh month of imprisonment for selling Paine's works. November 27, Daniel Holt, for publishing a pamphlet (Address) by Paine, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment and £50 fine, and two sureties for his good behavior for five years. In December three indictments were preferred against Mr. Spencer for selling the Rights of Man. He was punished, to what extent I do not know; but it is notable that it is very near where he used to sell heretical books at a heavy cost to himself that Mr. Truelove now sells books tenfold more heretical than Paine's with impunity; while with equal impunity in the same building the Free Sunday League meets to devise the overthrow of Sabbath Laws, and George Jacob Holyoake edits his interesting weekly, Secular Review.

The above summary of only a portion of the persecutions of six months against the sellers of Paine's works will show how exceedingly mad the clergy (of whom the country magistracies were and are chiefly composed) were against all who discussed the institutions which the American and French revolutions had threatened. At that time no aristocratic dinner was ever held without the toast, "Damnation to Tom Paine." An old radical writes: "My Father was annoyed and subject to espionage from the Tory party. Many of my friends were driven away from their native soil, and took shelter in America. I myself, being of advanced political principles, have suffered in position through the finger of scorn pointed at me by the Tory faction. Nearly all the views I entertained fifty years ago are now the laws of the country. In 1811 the then borough-reeve of Bolton, who was my father, was instructed by the then Home Secretary of State to call in all the publications of Thomas Paine. Accordingly 'Old Sam,' the bellman, was sent around Bolton; and ringing his bell, announced that 'Any one having the publications of Thomas Paine—namely, The Age of Reason, Rights of Man, and Common Sense,—is to bring them to the borough-reeve of Bolton, and if he does not, he will be prosecuted according to law.' Sam, after having patrolled the town all day, waited upon the borough-reeve, and said: 'Well, mister, aw've been o' round Bowton, and I cannot find nother th' age of reason, the rights of man, nor common sense in it.'"

This kind of persecution went on with undiminished ferocity,—always about Tom Paine's works. The clergy fully believed that the freedom to write and circulate such things would be fatal to them—and, no doubt, many of the freethinkers agreed with them,—because, unlike the metaphysical and philosophical heretics, these works stirred up the common people. It went on until, fifty-six years ago, Richard Carlile, for selling the Age of Reason, was fined £1,500, and sentenced to three years' imprisonment, his sister also being imprisoned two years and fined £500,—her imprisonment having been prolonged because she could not pay the fine. Then the public mind recoiled. Miss Carlile wrote a petition to the House of Commons from her prison in Dorchester, stating that her two years having expired she was detained for a fine she had no means of paying. The public spoke then, as it generally speaks now, through the Times, which said: "The consequence of these absurd persecutions has been the propagating of infidel opinions to an extent they could not otherwise have reached, and at length to the interference of persons in a way calculated to call public attention more closely to matters which those who promoted the persecutions wished should be suppressed. These facts speak for themselves." But the mischief was done. All the Prince Regent's and Bishop's horses and all their men could not mend the matter.

While Carlile was passing his closing month in jail, his sister's petition to Parliament had so moved the community that a number of gentlemen who possessed the means purchased a good situation for a bookstore, and when he was released set him up in business there, when he sold the works of Paine to his heart's content, next door to St. Bride's Church. And so it has gone on until to-day the only man in prison for his religious opinions is John Robert Downes, whose offence was to have believed the Bible when it told him to treat his sick child by prayer and anointing, whereof she died.

Thomas Paine was thus the battle-field of an English revolution; on the right to sell and circulate his works was fought and won through an entire generation the struggle for freedom of thought, speech, and printing. And as he was hated by the clergy more than all other heretics for this, his memory has further survived in the clerical pillory, because from that struggle has been bequeathed all those clubs in and by which hatred of the Church is carefully nursed. One of these clubs is called "The Codgers," and another in Chelsea is called "The Eleusis," and there are many others throughout the kingdom. The two I have mentioned indicate the secrecy amid which they once had to work. "The Codgers" is an abbreviation of "The Cogitators,"—i. e., men who could not talk out loud, but keep up considerable thinking, and "Eleusis" also suggests secrecy.

The latter club is just now especially alive, and, I may add, kicking. It consists chiefly of working-men, who have obtained some education, and who by debating in their club have trained a number of vigorous orators, and they are making themselves felt in the School Board Canvass which is to terminate in an election next Thursday. It is to be hoped, if not expected, that you will all be eating your Thanksgiving turkeys on that day in a political calm; but it will not be the case with London, which is altogether given up to a severe struggle with the clergy for the possession of the schools. In Chelsea the Radicals have nominated a Quaker named Firth, of whose committee Admiral Maxee, R. N., a well-known freethinker, is chairman. An eminent Canon of the district, Cromwell by name, last Sunday evening denounced Firth, the Quaker candidate, as an infidel and an atheist! The result was that a meeting of the clerical candidates last night, when I was present, was fairly besieged by the champions of Firth and by the Eleusis Club. Canon Cromwell was challenged to sustain his slander, and being unable to do so was hooted, and the Vicar of Kensington, trying to make a speech, had his every sentence punctuated with a caricatured "Amen" uttered from an Eleusinian in the audience. When the main resolution was proposed in support of the clerical nominees, up leaped another Eleusinian, an eloquent mechanic named Merrill, who proposed as an amendment, "that this meeting, observing the efforts of the clerical party to overthrow the national schools, pledges its support to Mr. Firth." With a voice of thunder he declared that the Church had always, and without variation, resisted every effort to advance or enlighten the people, and were still at their old work. This brought out a storm of applause. It was in the Kensington Vestry Hall and under the shadow of the parish church; a score of clergymen were present, and the commotion caused by such an utterance in a meeting called by themselves must have convinced them that the soul of Thomas Paine is marching on.

The facts I have stated above concerning Paine have not been collected in any volume, and, old as they are, they have appeared to me of sufficient present importance to be recorded.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE HAWAIIAN MISSION.

To determine the question as to whether the Hawaiian Mission has been successful, all the facts in connection with that work must be taken into consideration. And to state the facts fully, any writer may expect to incur the displeasure, and perhaps the attacks, of that portion of the Christian public accustomed to look upon this work as the very crown of missionary effort in this century. "Yes," cries the Protestant pulpit from the Pacific to the Atlantic coast, and perhaps even in the remotest parts of Christendom, "the Sandwich Islands mission has been a grand success. The missionaries there have done a great and glorious work." And the Christian public takes up and echoes the statement far and wide. "The Sandwich Islands are disenthralled and redeemed," shouts a recent writer who is engaged in and truly devoted to missionary labor. Now, in discussing this subject, I do not propose to detract from the least from the honor of those to whom honor is due. But I deem it my duty to let the world know facts, however unwholesome the truth may be to a part of it. And I shall simply state the facts such as came under my own observation during a recent tour of the islands, and the observation and experience of those who have travelled there before me, or in company with me, and of many who have long resided there. And all those who profess to possess the spirit of that Master, in whose name this enterprise was undertaken and carried on, probably have a desire to know the whole truth that they may form a correct opinion as to whether the money which they have contributed has been judiciously expended. I do not say that those who have told one side of the truth intended to obscure the other, but it is quite natural that they should see only from the standpoint of their own interests. Men are apt to look at every question from a position most in harmony with their own sentiments or policy. The first thing to be noticed in connection with the Hawaiian mission is that the natives had already become

DISGUSTED WITH THEIR IDOLS,

and had abandoned idolatry, when the missionaries first reached them, and they were at that very time in search of a better God than their own. Therefore, while the missionaries cannot claim the honor of having turned the natives from idolatry, they did unquestionably direct their attention to the Christian's God, to whom great multitudes professed at least a formal conversion, because it was one of those popular movements often recognized as the rage of a community or nationality; but, while the natives abandoned their idols at their own instance, and accepted the Christian's God as a substitute, many of them, and especially the earlier generations, still cling tenaciously to many of the superstitious fancies connected with idol-worship, which the missionaries have proved themselves unable to eradicate. As an illustration of this we have only to recur to the heathen orgies which occurred at the death of King Lunali'i two years ago. That the younger portion of the population are less superstitious may seem credible because they are more under the influence of an enlightened civilization with which they come in constant contact. But surely the missionaries cannot claim more than their meed of praise for what must be the abnormal condition of every well-regulated community. What then is the mental and moral condition of the native population? If a stranger should put this question to an Island missionary he would be informed that ninety per cent. of the natives can read and write. Judging from such a statement one would suppose there must be no small degree of mental culture among them. But instead of this we find no native authors, poets, or painters, and comparatively few at all versed in scholarly attainments. The people are almost universally

AS SIMPLE-MINDED AS CHILDREN.

They talk and act like lads and lasses in their teens. Beyond the circumscribed limits of their own native homes, they seem to know but very little of the great world which lies across the oceans, and which are to them incomprehensible geographical mysteries which they hardly attempt to solve. Their reading furnishes them with but little information, because they read but little, and their untutored intellects are too much like slaves, which retain but little of what passes through them. In looking over the library of a daughter of one of the nobles of the realm, that young lady informed the writer that she read with pleasure only two inferior novels, to which she pointed. Of course, in the matter of education there are exceptions, and a few notable cases of a contrary character, but I speak now of the population as a whole. They acquire very little general information; and what they do know is of very little advantage to them. It makes no change in their almost servile condition. What they do know is from the natural rather than the educational development of their intellects, under the influence of a higher knowledge than theirs, which surrounds them, which they in-breathe, and are expanded and enlightened by it. But this is the knowledge of civilization as truly as of Christianity. The missionaries say they reduced the language of the natives to writing, but this did not require a missionary any more than a school requires a minister to teach it. Secular knowledge may be imparted by one who is not a church member as competently as by one who is. That the laws of the Hawaiians were formed after the pattern of the civilized nations does not prove that such would not have been the case but for the missionaries. Still I would not deprive the missionaries of any honor in this respect, but accord it to them rather as enlightened than Christian men, though they may be both. If, however, the education of the natives were strictly a Christian education, we might expect it to have a wonderfully elevating influence upon their moral and religious character. But what is the fact in this particular? The missionaries publish and tell those who go there that the native Christians are not better nor worse than Christians in other lands. This may be true. And yet they are

VERY POOR SPECIMENS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A recent writer says that not a few of the professors of religion among the negroes of the Southern States hate the morality of the New Testament, their religion being solely of an emotional type. This is more or less true of all illiterate people, and it is forcibly true of the Kanakas. They go to church on Sunday because it is a kind of gala-day with them, and affords them an opportunity to see and be seen. In this respect they differ very little from the whites. Men, women, children, and dogs collect in large numbers at the numerous sanctuaries, which so abound that they are sometimes called Hawaiian mile-stones. The people join heartily in the singing and seem to enjoy it; they listen carelessly to the praying and preaching, and then go home to violate every principle of New Testament morality, for their licentiousness is universally known and acknowledged; and when a man-of-war is known to have come into port at Honolulu, the women gather there from all over the islands. Almost any husband or father will sell a bed-right to his wife or daughter for a small consideration, and brothers will barter away the virtue of their sisters. Plenty of white men and Chinamen each keep three or four or half-a-dozen native women. And the natives themselves live almost as promiscuously as the animals about them. In some instances they claim the marriage bond, but nothing is thought of its violation. A Christian and wealthy gentleman on Hawaii told the writer that one of his hands came to him one day, and, with dejected mien, said that he did not want to be stingy, but he would like to have an equal chance with the rest of the plantation men; that he had now been deprived of his matrimonial privileges for six months! The gentleman told him that he would see that his wife was more faithful. Another instance came to light where a mother urged and almost compelled a reluctant daughter to sacrifice her virtue to a white man for the sake of a few dollars. It is a prevalent custom for a kame (a man) and a wahine (a woman) to live together without any formal marriage as long as he takes care of her to her satisfaction; and if another man comes along who can give her a better position she simply goes along with him. This is found much more

CONVENIENT THAN MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

And if the union produces offspring they are given away. And in this promiscuous intercourse, the half-casts are said to be even worse than the full-bloods. Therefore, whatever may be their religious views and impulses, it is quite evident that their morality is opposed to that of the New Testament. Indeed, they think so little of violating the teachings of that record that their lawlessness is commonly spoken of as a part of their religion. And a lady of position down there went so far upon one occasion as to say she did not believe there was a virtuous native woman on the islands. This remark is doubtless too sweeping, and yet, with rare exceptions, true. Under such circumstances we can hardly wonder at the generally diseased condition of the people, or that the population is diminishing so rapidly. Nor can we accord to their religious teachings that honor which proclaims the Sandwich Islands "disenthralled and redeemed." As to truth-telling, the judges say it is almost impossible to get at this, even on the witness-stand. One prominent justice told me he had often accused one of falsehood in the midst of his testimony, and had him acknowledge it. Then he would fine him for contempt, as it was quite impossible to convict one of perjury before a native jury. The cruelty of the plantation hands, even of ministers and missionaries, is something fearful toward their animals, and shows that they are ignorant of, or in no sense appreciate, that wise saying that the merciful man is merciful to his beast. Now, if these traits were only incidental we might pass them over as more or less traits of all Christian peoples; but they are the prevalent and predominant traits of that people,—traits which make up

THE CHARACTER OF THE NATION.

And however valuable their religion, or however serviceable the missionaries have been to them, does not appear in the morals of the people. A son of one of the missionaries—the manager of a large plantation, and a competent judge—told the writer that they were all hypocrites, and that he had no confidence in any good of them from their church attendance, from which they would go home to their immoralities and all their evil ways. It is a pertinent inquiry, therefore, "How high in the scale of Christianity missionary instruction has raised them?" Certainly not above the level of the morality of an enlightened civilization; nor even up to that standard. If, then, the missionaries have done but little or nothing to improve their mental or moral condition, what have they done for their material interests? I say unhesitatingly, almost nothing at all. In the towns, the natives have learned from the civilized whites, who dwell among them, to build wooden houses. But this can hardly be called missionary work. The natives have learned to conceal their persons with clothing in the towns. This the decencies of civilization required. But in the rural districts, especially on Hawaii, the writer saw scores of men and women as nude as when their mothers bore them, with the exception, in some instances, of a breech-cloth so slender it could not be seen at a short distance away. In the rural districts the natives live in thatched huts, floored with hand-made mats, and live on poi and raw fish as in the days of Kamehameha I., a hundred years ago. Their possessions are limited to their small taro patches along the water-courses, and the natives are almost all as poor as they were a thousand years ago, so far as we know. Some years ago Kamehameha III., I think it was, divided his lands on the island of Maui among his native subjects, and to-day they do not own a foot of it. What has become of it? The missionaries, or their sons, or relatives, and a few other whites have gobbled it all up, and the who serve on their plantations for such wages, or none at all, as their owners see proper to give them. They are also heavily taxed to support the government, and are but little better off in this world's affairs than the Southern negroes. On the other hand, all the missionaries are well-to-do in the affairs of this world, and some of them are wealthy. Their children occupy the lands and offices, and may be said to be well provided for. One of the oldest missionaries in Honolulu is said to pay taxes on $90,000 worth of property. And yet, when a brother minister was there in distress, who had contributed many a dollar to the support of the Hawaiian missionaries, this good old brother would not give a single dollar to help the unfortunate one back to his native land, though he brought a letter of introduction to him from one of his own friends in the States. With such examples of Christianity among them we need not wonder at the low standard of morality among the poor, ignorant, degraded native population. Men whose religious teachers are worldly-minded money-graspers, can hardly be expected to create a very spiritual frame of mind among the taught. In this particular the Roman Catholics seem to have the advantage over the Protestants, because they do not conceal their desire to get possession of the property of the natives; but, instead of seeking it for their own personal aggrandizement, they claim it for Holy Mother Church, in which they assert that all the members have an equal interest. In conclusion, I wish to say that this article is not written in a malicious or unkind spirit, but simply to disabuse the mind of the public of a very grave fallacy in supposing that the Sandwich Islands are disenthralled or redeemed. They are nothing of the kind. The whole native population, with a few rare aristocratic exceptions, are poor, degraded, ignorant, and immoral slaves of their white and pious masters. —Dinwiddie, in Sunday Chronicle.

NATIVES HAVE BECOME THEIR SLAVES,

CATHOLIC REACTION IN BELGIUM.

In Belgium the Catholic priesthood have gained, on the whole, the most remarkable of all the triumphs which they have secured in our time. The University education of the country is, to a great extent, under their control. Over the rural districts they have gained a political mastery as remarkable as the feebleness of their political power in the corresponding districts of France. They dictate how the peasants shall educate their children, how they shall vote. They exercise great and visible authority in town councils, and they have often the dominant power in Parliament. Sometimes the Ministries are distinctively clerical. Yet all the while the Catholic party are armed with no other weapons than the freedom of discussion and combination, which liberalism is bound to put in the hands of all. Naturally the liberal party is as vehement as its opponents, and the combat embitters every relation of life. The elections are contested on religious grounds; the Parliamentary debates are scarcely concealed sectarian battles; the granting of University degrees brings the Catholic and the Liberal parties into collision; the pulpit is half political, and the press half religious; even the customary impartiality of trade is disturbed by theological rancor; and family peace is broken up by the heat of the contest for the mastery. In the country districts, to quote our correspondent, "feeling is said to be so strong that there are 'Liberal butchers' and 'Catholic butchers,' 'clerical washer-women' and laundresses employed by those of the other way of thinking." It is quite natural, then, that the Catholic clergy should preach against the rejoicings in honor of the man who tried to make the religious factions forget their theological animosity. —London Times.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 20.

D. M. Martin, $6.50; Jerry Brockway, $4.45; Mrs. A. E. Tucker, $3; Mrs. M. C. House, $3.10; S. M. Green, $3; E. Thomas, 50 cents; T. W. Higginson, $20; Geo. Severance, 15 cents; E. Burnham, 80 cents; Mrs. F. Wason, $3.20; Miss Jessie Wilcox, $3.20; Mrs. Benj. Iveson, $3.20; W. H. Hamlen, $1.50; Cash, $3.01; Dr. G. F. Matthes, $2.91; J. F. C. Burnet, $3.20; M. P. Hayward, $3.20; Etta and Lizzie Marshall, $3.20; F. M. Vaughn, $3.20; Smith Wright, $3.20; Jos. Beck, $2.25; G. H. Foster, 77 cents; Mrs. L. E. Blount, $13; A. D. Perry, 20 cents; Mrs. J. G. Grinnell, 30 cents; Harvey Moore, $5; U. H. Crocker, $3; Mrs. John Hunt, $3.20; S. Corns, $2.25; H. B. Thomas, $3.20; D. G. Francis, $3.20; A. S. Thatcher, 75 cents; J. Barnardell, $3; C. B. Collins, $3.20; H. Heylman, $1; G. S. Sweeney, $2; Dr. E. Moyer, $1.50; J. L. Zimmerman, $3; Wm. Newman, $3; T. L. Mann, $1.50; Geo. W. Park, $3.20; Chas. Richardson, $3.20; Mrs. M. E. Brown, $3.20; C. Cowing, $3.20; W. C. Benedict, $3.20; Dr. M. B. Blake, 40 cents; John Wilson, $3.20; F. E. Kittredge, $1; L. E. Brown, $3.40; D. B. Humphrey, $3.20; Mrs. O. Gerlaugh, $3.20; E. C. Darling, $3.20; D. Sandman, $3.20; D. Muncey, $3.20; J. C. Grierson, $5.20; F. H. Buchanan, $3.20; L. F. Babb, M.D., $3.20; A. S. May, $3.20; Henry T. Wright, $3.20; Herman Lieber, $3.20; A. S. Swaine, $3.20; F. O. Dorr, $3.20; E. C. Stedman, $3.20; G. L. Watson, $3; Dr. Margier, $3; M. P. Barber, $1.70; Caroline E. Serrill, $3.40; A. Bate, $6.40; T. Douglass, $1.25; Theo. Brown, $10; Karl Schemann, $4.80; Jay Patrick, $4.90; C. H. White, 20 cents; S. Dursi, $5; Jas. Maddy, $6; Geo. Allen, 25 cents; W. H. Saxton, 75 cents; A. V. Beknap, $1.55; Mrs. K. Harrington, $3.10; L. F. Robinson, $1; W. H. Walworth, $1.60; Clara W. Rotch, $3.20; J. Churchill, $3; J. Borneman, $2; S. C. Gale, 10 cents; Chas. Almy, $4; N. C. Nash, $103.20; Arethusa Hall, $4.40; F. Andrews, $3; S. A. Mason, $3.20; Mrs. W. F. Southworth, $3.20; S. W. Allen, $3.20; C. A. Simpson, $4.20; George Dimmock, $4.50.

The Index.

BOSTON, JANUARY 25, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

MR. CHARLES ELLIS will deliver a free lecture in Paine Memorial Hall, Appleton Street, Sunday afternoon, Jan. 28, at 3 o'clock. Subject: "Thomas Paine's Religious Belief and Unbelief."

WE ARE requested to announce that the New England Labor Reform League will hold their annual convention in this city, Jan. 28 and 29,—place not mentioned. John Orvis, Bishop Ferrette, E. H. Heywood, and others, are expected to speak.

THE FIRST NUMBER of the Hampshire County Journal, issued January 6, takes as its motto these words of Charles Sumner: "Stand firm in those principles which are the life of the republic." A better motto could not be found; and, if comprehended in all its breadth, it will make the new paper a devoted friend of the Liberal League.

THE BISHOP of MINORCA illustrates the "true inwardness" of Catholic liberality. He excommunicates "heretics of every sort, kind, and description: their pupils or adopted children, their fathers, mothers, preceptors, and all who sit at meat with them; all who aid or look kindly on them; their domestic servants; all who dare to let a house to a heretic or Protestant for school or services; every one who gives money, or makes a loan, or leaves a legacy to such persons; every one who lives on terms of friendship with such heretics, and every one who dares to say or write one word in their defence."

MR. ZERAH MASTERS, formerly the Unitarian minister at Waupaca, Wisconsin, proposes to enter the lecture field with lectures on the following subjects:—

1. The Liberal League Movement.
2. The Demands of Liberalism.
3. The Christian Amendment.
4. The Despotism of the Christian Church.
5. Darwin and Moses, or Naturalism in Life and Doctrine vs. Supernaturalism.

Mr. Masters has forwarded testimonials of the strongest kind from influential citizens of Wisconsin as to his sterling character and ability. He has shown himself every inch a man in his public course, and, commanding our own profound respect, we trust he will everywhere be welcomed and aided by friends of THE INDEX.

WHAT PERTINENCY there is, at this time of foolish and wicked war-talk by angry politicians, in the following letter of John C. Calhoun to Dr. Channing!—

WASHINGTON, 20th February, 1835.

Dear Sir,—I am much obliged to you for a copy of your Sermon on War, which I will read with care the first leisure moment.

Permit me, in return, to present you with my report on Executive patronage. Though the two subjects are apparently entirely disconnected, he who will look below the surface will see a most intimate relation between them. We would have few wars if there did not exist in every community a body, separate from the rest of the community, who have a direct interest in War. That body is the great and influential corps of office-holders and office-seekers, contractors, agents, jobbers, speculators, to whom War brings an abundant harvest. This corps, as you will see by the report, is already very formidable, and will be ready to plunge the country into war either to prevent reform or to increase their gain.

With respect, I am, etc., etc.,

J. C. CALHOUN.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix, Boston: Published by the National Liberal League. 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. ABBOT on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. KILGORE on "Democracy"; by James PARTON on "Cathedrals and Beer"; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. UNDERWOOD on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. PAIGE on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?"; by D. Y. KILGORE on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. MILLS on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. LYTLE used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle indorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MR. MORSE ON THE PAINE BUST.

We earnestly second Mr. Morse's protest, given below, against bringing the Paine Bust away from Philadelphia. Let it stay in that disgraced city to preach an eloquent lesson of equal rights in religion, until the stain of its rejection shall be wiped out by the repentance of the Select Council, and a hearty welcome to the now despised memorial. It would be a terrible blunder to bring it away for any cause—a cowardly and mortifying back-down of Paine's friends.

MY DEAR ABBOT:—

It does not in any way belong to me to say what disposition shall be made of the bust of Paine which the Select Council of Philadelphia rejects for Independence Hall; but I will venture to express an earnest hope that there will be found for it some temporary asylum in Philadelphia. The time will arrive when the people of that city will be glad to reverse their present unfortunate decision. We can all wait and be patient, nor despair of seeing, even

In our day, so large a growth of liberal sentiment. If we may judge by the past, it is hardly possible to over-estimate the change in popular sentiment that will occur within the next quarter of a century. Already in Boston evangelical leaders are uttering their meed of praise of Theodore Parker, declaring that, in spite of his theological speculations, there was that in him which "forms a figure to be venerated." They will yet see their way to some similar recognition of the memory of Paine. At all events, there is a certain missionary service now possible to this memorial bust by virtue of its rejection, and it should not, in my judgment, be withdrawn from its present position, to be housed in Boston, or elsewhere. Let it be understood that the rejected marble will be carefully preserved in Philadelphia until the good time when that city shall make up her mind to ask for it. She will one day do this. She cannot avoid it, because she will desire, when she sees what justice is, to do it.

S. H. MORSE.

Boston, Jan. 21, 1877.

ENGLAND TO AMERICA.

In token of cordial and sympathetic reciprocation, the Directors of the National Liberal League have voted to publish in THE INDEX the following letter from Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, President of the National Secular Society of Great Britain:—

29 TURNER STREET, COMMERCIAL ROAD, }
LONDON, E., Dec. 11, 1876. }

To F. E. ABBOT, Esq.:

My dear Sir,—I am directed by the Executive of the National Secular Society to invite the coöperation of the Liberal League so far as our common purpose is concerned of freeing humanity from the yoke of superstition. It is felt that the two bodies working together may aid each other, and I shall be glad to have your views as to the best way of securing united and useful action.

Yours sincerely,

C. BRADLAUGH.

To the above letter a cordial answer has been returned, in compliance with the instructions of the Directors. This graceful act of courtesy by the National Secular Society (whose circular, giving its Constitution and List of Officers, was published in last week's INDEX) will be duly appreciated by American freethinkers, and tend to cement a pleasant and strengthening bond of international fellowship in the great objects common to all lovers of religious liberty.

PRAYER.

What is prayer?

Worcester defines it in its general sense as "the act of asking with earnestness or zeal; entreaty; supplication; request; petition; suit." In its special sense he defines it as "a petition or supplication to God; orison."

In both these senses the word prayer signifies the solicitation of a boon or favor, the urging of a request for something to be done as a direct consequence of the request itself. In the special sense, it signifies such a request addressed to God, as a Being exorable by nature—susceptible to the influence of human desires expressed in supplicatory words. It implies belief not merely in a personal God (for the word personality has many meanings, some of which are quite incongruous with exorability), but also in such a personal God as is conceived to be in fact only a man of larger mould, capable of forming purposes which are not absolutely wise or good, but can be made more so by being modified at the suggestion of human beings. This conception of God necessarily underlies all belief in the "efficacy of prayer." If prayer is considered as exercising a real influence in modifying or changing the Divine purposes, no believer in the Divine goodness would admit that this change could possibly be for the worse; it must be for the better alone, and it must therefore be possible for man to suggest to God a higher and larger goodness than his will would execute in the absence of such suggestion.

To this it may be replied that the modification or change of the Divine purposes in answer to prayer need not imply either a higher or lower degree of goodness in the purposes so changed, as compared with the purposes prior to the change; that absolute goodness might require a certain course in the absence of those spiritual dispositions in man which are implied by prayer, and yet might require a very different course if those dispositions are present in him; in short, that prayer is a necessary condition of man's highest good, yet not at all essential to the highest possible goodness of God's purposes or action.

But this reply is inadequate to meet the difficulties of the case. It is conceded that man's highest good requires that he should pray, and thereby so change God's purposes as to accomplish this highest good of man. It is clear, then, that the highest good of the universe, which of course is defeated if man misses his own highest good, cannot be accomplished unless man takes the initiative—unless he practically deters God from a course which would accomplish only an inferior good of the universe as a unit. That is, by his prayer, man makes possible to God a higher course on the whole—a better course on the whole—a course which is demanded of God by his own absolute goodness, since he is pledged by this to secure the highest possible good of the universe itself. If the efficacious prayer of man is the necessary condition of his own highest good, and if the highest good of the universe must remain unattained without it, then it follows that by prayer man not only suggests but renders possible to God a goodness he could not attain without man's help. There is no escape from these conclusions. Belief in the efficacy of prayer implies a belief as to God which makes him dependent on man for the opportunity of being himself absolutely good.

It is certainly well to point out that whoever would believe in an absolutely good God can but defeat his own desire by cherishing a doctrine incompatible with that belief—the doctrine of the efficacy of prayer. An absolutely good God cannot be subject to the influences of human petition. He must govern himself by universal ideas or laws, admitting of no change, but establishing in and by themselves the highest possible good of the universe as a whole. All of good that the nature of things permits must be ordained and maintained by an absolutely good God, without the slightest reference to man's limited insight or varying desires. Human prayers can have no influence on the general course of things, unless man possesses some power of making it better than it would otherwise be. What dreary egotism to imagine this! If the vast unitary Power of which the universe offers only such manifestations as are compatible with inevitable conditions of limitation, and which in all these manifestations is thus conditioned upon an unalterable Nature of things, is in any degree analogous to that power which we know as the human mind or soul, then the doctrine of the "efficacy of prayer" is an audacious and beggarly detraction from its awful majesty—the impertinence of conceited ignorance rushing forward to take on its ant's back the administration of a cosmos. Such a spectacle brings only disgust to the instructed intellect and a melancholy recoil to profound religious reverence.

So far we have accepted the dictionary meanings of the word prayer, as implying in all cases some form of petition, entreaty, or request. Perhaps it is unfortunate, on account of the danger of popular misapprehensions, that the word should ever have been taken in a larger significance. But this is the fact notwithstanding, and should be considered in this connection. Prayer has come to mean many things besides mere supplication or petition. The old laborare est orare—"to labor is to pray"—is only one of these multiplied enlargements of meaning unrecognized by the dictionary. Emerson exclaims: "In what prayers do men allow themselves! That which they call a holy office is not so much as brave and manly. Prayer looks abroad and asks for some foreign addition to come through some foreign virtue, and loses itself in endless mazes of natural and supernatural, and mediatorial and miraculous. Prayer that craves a particular commodity—anything less than all good—is vicious. Prayer is the contemplation of the facts of life from the highest point of view. It is the colloquy of a beholding and jubilant soul. It is the spirit of God pronouncing his works good. But prayer as a means to effect a private end is meanness and theft. It supposes dualism, and not unity, in Nature and consciousness. As soon as the man is at one with God, he will not beg. He will then see prayer in all action."

Consider also this noble outburst in a Chinese book of worship, of so lofty and pure a spirit as to put to shame the grovelling follies of Moody-and-Sankey revivalism: "O Thou Great-Compassionate-Heart, never will I seek nor receive private, individual salvation—never enter into final peace alone; but forever and everywhere will I live and strive for the universal redemption of every creature throughout all worlds. Until all are delivered, never will I leave the world of sin, sorrow, and struggle [i. e., to enter Nirvana], but will remain where I am."

Here, in this Buddhist manifestation of a transcendent public spirit (which makes our selfish Christianities, theisms, and atheisms look so starved and wolfish), we find prayer without petition—a simple outpouring of the inner life to the "Great-Compassionate-Heart" of the universe, seeking no return, but uttering the sublimest passion of the human soul in a great surge of self-dedication to the universal. In the glow of such luminous aspirations as these, prayer puts on a new guise; it ceases to be the miser's clutch after a spiritual penny in the Divine hand, and becomes the free gush of the fountain of humanity's love for its kind, throwing up its glittering drops to win a new glory and lustre in the beams of the Sun. It is idle to ask: "Shall we, then, pray such prayers as these?" If they fitly utter the quality of your innermost life, you cannot help it! Prayer of this sort is never a duty: it is either a necessity or an absurdity. Given that out of which such prayers can alone spring, you can no more help praying them than you can help breathing; in one form or in another, in word or in action, the great thirst for righteousness burning at the core of your being will burst forth in some form of speech, giving utterance to all the like-minded (whether finite or infinite) of that which you cannot conceal. But if the ideals you cherish are nothing but the interests of your miserable self, you can no more pray such prayers than an empty well can pour forth water. You may mouth eloquent orations to the Deity in public or in private, and wind them up with all the doxologies extant; but, in the sense that prayer is any outward utterance of the inward striving after the divine, you vex the air with inanities and are dumb. The whole teaching of Free Religion respecting prayer is concentrated into this short maxim: "Never pray—if you can help it!"

FREE RELIGION IN PARIS.

Something less than one year ago we received from a friend a pamphlet entitled La Religion Laïque et l'Eglise Unitaire, a pamphlet of thirty-six pages, setting forth the plan of a religious association on a basis of reason. It contained an introduction; an appeal to religious men unattached to any religious system; a declaration of fundamental ideas; a profession of faith in moral principles addressed to right-minded people (hommes de bonne volonté); remarks on religious worship and observance; a series of questions and answers unfolding the rationale of religious belief; notes of a critical and explanatory kind; an appendix, giving the opinions of a portion of the press on the new enterprise, and presenting its points of essential agreement with similar movements in England and America; and a brief summary of the cardinal points involved in the scheme. The presentation of so many important matters in so short a compass must necessarily be sketchy; more is suggested than explained; but a great deal is suggested. Very few books contain so many vital thoughts in so small a number of pages. The results of much reading and of profound reflection are stated in a luminous manner and with that freedom of touch peculiar to French men of letters, which is so easily mistaken for lightness and superficiality.

On the first page the writer says: "The pamphlet we issue here contains the prospectus of an important religious revival in our country. Although the doctrines of this new Church are scarcely more than outlined, the papers which we shall submit to our readers will enable them to comprehend the bearing and the reach of a work that is nothing less than an attempt at social renovation through the action of the religious idea. Whatever may be the actual fortune (the immediate visible success) of this experiment, one cannot be indifferent to a scheme, which offers a religion without miracle, from which the supernatural is banished as completely as it is from the domain of science,—which affirms religion to be eternal as God, immortal as humanity, progressive as the mind of man, having a church without a priest, a faith without a confession.

"We offer neither a new religion nor a new Church. Religion is always the same eternal thing; but the religion we avow has reached that stage of development where it can meet the demands of enlightened and superior reason; it has become laical, secular.

"As to the Church we call it Unitarian, as declaring at once its philosophical monotheism, and as affirming its place in the development of the religious idea in the line of Christian tradition whereof Unitarianism has thus far been regarded as the most advanced and liberal phase." Adverting then to the fact that similar projects have been started and continued for several years, in England and the United States, the writer concludes: "All such enterprises have in fact a common aim, the solution of what the sagacious Professor John Tyndall calls 'the problem of problems' which especially concerns our generation; namely, 'the reasonable satisfaction of the religious sentiments.'"

In August appeared the first number of a monthly magazine, of about the size of the pamphlet just noticed, and each succeeding month has brought its number. There are now five issues, each richer and more significant than the number that went before. It is called La Religion Laïque Organe de Régénération Sociale. The contents are varied, embracing theology, politics, literature, criticism, correspondences, prose and verse, book reviews, studies in comparative religion and mythology; the whole animated by a hopeful, aspiring, believing temper, and characterized by a singular brightness and elasticity of treatment. There is no reticence, no disguise, no affectation. An air of candor marks every article, giving a persuasive tone to the pages, delightful to readers of the cultivated class, and attractive to less practised students and inquirers. There is no trace of assumption or of pedantry, but a happy combination of ease and strength is apparent on every page. A similar journal here would meet a want that is generally felt among the unestablished rationality.

The editor of the magazine, the author of the first pamphlet, the writer also of important articles from month to month, is M. Charles Fauvety, a man of intelligence, culture, and experience; well-known in the liberal circles of Paris as a champion of free-thought, a friend of free institutions, a benefactor and helper of free men, brave, humane, enthusiastic. He is possessed of pecuniary competency, and thereby able to maintain the enterprise he has started without appeals for assistance to the general public. He would nevertheless be glad, no doubt, to receive subscriptions and contributions, both as augmenting his resources and as demonstrating the success of his work. There is no evidence of power that is a substitute for a large subscription list. Not that he is without supporters at home. A committee of publication and extension is composed of a philologist, a "corrector of the press," a man of letters, an advocate, a publicist, a physician, a historian, a merchant, a banker, and an ancien instituteur. The writers are accomplished men, whose names are unknown in this country, and need not be mentioned. Louis Guyot, banker, 65 Rue Mont Martre, receives subscriptions at the very moderate rate of five francs, a silver dollar, per annum. The friends of freethought in religion will perhaps take a warmer practical interest in their home publications, if they consider and uphold the efforts made by foreigners in the same worthy cause.

O. B. F.

Communications.

"THE BLAND SILVER BILL."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Sir,—Mr. A. J. Warner, in THE INDEX of January 11, finds some fault with my comments on Bland's Silver Bill, as passed by the House of Representatives. He affirms that it is undoubtedly within the domain of law to make a certain weight of silver equal in exchangeable value to a certain weight of gold, "not, of course, by one country alone, but by the concurrence of all countries," etc. He then quotes, from M. Cernuschi, several paragraphs referring to the effect of legislation upon the relative values of gold and silver, reaching finally the conclusion, in the language of M. Cernuschi, that "if there is a bimetallic international legislation, the relative value of the two metals can no longer vary."

Admitting this statement, for the sake of the argument, I should like to ask in what way Mr. Warner manages to wrench out of it the remarkable conclusion that "the Bland Bill, for this very reason, will not work an inflation." The very big hole between this sentence and the premises upon which it assumes to be founded is indeed distinctly pointed out by Mr. Warner himself in the phrase, "not, of course, by one country alone, but by the concurrence of all countries," and is also made evident by the passage from Cernuschi, "if there is a bimetallic international legislation," etc. But neither Mr. Warner nor any one else ever heard of any "bimetallic international legislation," or ever knew of the relative value of gold and silver being determined "by the concurrence of all countries." The little "if" in the sentence from Cernuschi is of immense significance in this connection.

Mr. Warner has failed to inform the readers of THE INDEX—and you will allow me, therefore, to supply the omission—that one object of M. Cernuschi's present visit to this country is to urge our government to take part in his proposed international legislation; and that M. Cernuschi, moreover, to the great chagrin of Western inflationists, is decidedly opposed to Bland's Silver Bill, maintaining very earnestly that one country alone cannot successfully adopt a bimetallic currency,—in all of which I cheerfully agree with him.

Allow me in conclusion to express my thanks to

Mr. Warner for his kindness in recommending a course of reading. I should be happy to reciprocate, but refrain through fear that he might regard the works mentioned by me as altogether too elementary.

R. C.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 13, 1877.

PHILADELPHIA LETTER.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

As I noted the exceedingly interest exhibit of Australia, so expressive of wealth, culture, and refinement, I could not help wondering that this far-off island continent, itself nearly as large as all Europe, with harbors which in magnificence and utility surpass those of any other known portion of the globe, should be subject to the British crown; and still more surprising is it that the people, high and low, rich and poor, should be satisfied with this subjection. They feel themselves, however, as I learned from one of the commissioners, but nominally subject, as they pay no tribute to the British crown, elect their own native Parliament and ministry, with whom the governor appointed by the crown is obliged to advise in all matters pertaining to the government. By being obliged to receive their chief officer from the crown, they are at least saved from the kingly appointing power of a United States President, and the business depressions, brolls, and perhaps war, attendant upon his election by a majority vote.

The characteristic exhibits of Australia were of its mineral, agricultural, and pastoral wealth. For a long time it was supposed that the principal source of Australian wealth was from its mines, that the soil was ill-adapted to agricultural and pastoral pursuits; but now wheat-growing is in point of value its leading industry. Nowhere upon the ground, save from Oregon and Washington Territory, was so fine wheat to be found, both in size of kernel and weight to the bushel, as from the provinces of Australia. Some specimens in Victorian Court weighed sixty-eight pounds to the bushel, and in the year 1874 South Australia alone exported over one hundred and eighty thousand tons of breadstuffs. There the operations of agriculture and husbandry are never suspended on account of winter, as crops of some sort can be grown from January to December. Other grains of an exceedingly fine quality were here exhibited, nor were the products of the vineyard, orchard, and garden wanting in this exhibit. The exhibit of her pastoral wealth was extraordinary, there being now over sixty millions of sheep, mostly merinos, upon the island. Each province save Victoria represented the amount of gold taken from its mines since 1851 by a huge gilded pyramid, formed in sections showing the entire amount and the amount taken out each year. Victoria failed to make this representation, because, say her commissioners, the pyramid would have reached through the roof of the Main Building. She, however, exhibited a model of the largest nugget of gold ever taken from her mines, which weighed 1743 ounces, and was valued at $34,500. No wonder that it was named the "Welcome Nugget." The utilization of the skins of birds in Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand, by manufacturing them into door-mats, muffs, collars, and collarettes, also the egg-shells, especially of the emu, set in solid native silver for mantel and table ornaments, were exceedingly interesting. Upon the bases of these ornaments were full relief figures amid palm-trees and fountains of silver, illustrative of real life.

The railroads and telegraph lines in Australia are owned and worked by the government. This is as it should be. Railroads are but public highways, and telegraphic communication but a quick mail-system for the public good. They should therefore be owned by the people and held in trust for them by the government. This in the United States would greatly lessen the burdens of taxation.

India, the country of the ancient Aryans, was represented by an exhibit from British India and Siam; that from British India having been put up by the directions and under the supervision of the India Museum of London. Its mineral and agricultural products, including its spices, many varieties of rice, and the ancient millet so often mentioned by Greek writers; its plants, medicinal and those used for dyeing purposes; its manufactured goods, with a profusion of India shawls, scarfs, saris, camels' hair shawls, gossamer embroidered with silk and beetles' wings,—this embroidery exclusively the work of men; its carved black-wood furniture rivalled only by China; its carved sandal-wood and ivory inlaid boxes; its jewelry of rich yellow gold; its primitive agricultural implements and no less primitive musical instruments,—all expressive of the customs, character, and habits of the people, were of great interest. But, surpassing all these in interest, were those portions of the exhibit bespeaking the religions, ancient and modern, of this people. These consisted of photographic representations of temples and modes of worship, photolithographic representations of deities, and stone carving from the Tope of Amravati, an ancient temple. Prominent among the stone sculpture, were the feet of Brahma carved from the solid stone, surrounded by a miniature mythological representation of the order of creation proceeding from the bowels of this deity. Of course, in this collection was the sacred elephant, both in stone and ivory.

The exhibit of Siam did not arrive until a short time previous to the close of the Exposition; but as it has been presented to our government and is to be placed in the Smithsonian Institute, United States citizens will yet have the opportunity for its examination.

In no part of the Exposition grounds was there such a constant crowd as in China and Japan of the Main Building. Japan does not like to be mentioned in connection with China, so much farther advanced does this nation believe itself. But to us they are both pagan nations, and may therefore be very properly spoken of together. In everything exhibited by China, so thoroughly has this strange and peculiar people excelled, that no nation need be ashamed to be mentioned in the same connection. Every one knows that the special exhibit of both these countries were silk, lacquer-work, carved work, and porcelain; and that China especially excelled in the two latter, and Japan in lacquer-work. The quantity and quality of these exhibits were such as to elicit constant expressions of surprise and admiration from visitors. The lesson to Christians must have been valuable; an aged, white-headed gentleman, as he stood by the pagoda-shaped case containing the carved ivory work, so magnificently fine as to hold the visitor almost spell-bound, exclaimed, "I have given the last dollar I ever will give to convert these heathen; we need to learn of them." To the liberal thinker and social philosopher, the lesson was entirely different; for, while he could not help admiring the inexpressible beauty and fineness of this work, it spoke to him of an over-populous country, and years of toil and penury for the masses. The carved bedsteads, tables, dressing-cases, etc., told the same story. Miniature pagodas, supposed to represent temples of worship, but which seem much better adapted as watch-towers, were here represented and so located in the pavilion that, from the summit of each one, another was visible. Some of the porcelain articles exhibited were representations of household divinities and objects held as sacred by these people, but did not seem half so absurd and blasphemous as did the Spanish oil-painting before described. I should rather have these divinities, with the Chinese philosophy of government by moral agency, incorporated into the United States Constitution, than this Trinitarian God with his Scriptural commands. I inquired of the Commissioner for the sacred works of the Chinese, and was directed to the educational department of Connecticut in the southern gallery of the Main Building. These works, regarded by them as of inestimable value, they dared not keep in the space allotted them, so great was the crowd and so little faith have they in the moral rectitude of the Christian.

Among the lacquer-work of Japan, some of which is eleven hundred years old, but which you could not distinguish from that of more recent date, were two pieces claiming to be the finest work ever produced in that country. One of these, the "damask patterned" vase, is constructed by soldering together three plates, respectively of white silver, red copper, and dark blue "shakado"—an alloy of copper and gold,—thus forming a compound plate upon both sides of which irregular figures are scratched here and there so as to show the metal underneath; the plate is then stretched by hammering, thus making the various metals visible in spots and meandering lines. This process is repeated until the proper pattern and desired thickness of the plate is obtained. The result is very beautiful. The other extraordinary piece of work is a cabinet, its four sides illustrating the four different kinds of lacquer-work; that is, the gold inlaid, the gold, the black, and a combination of the red, green, brown, and gold lacquer. The edges of this cabinet were trimmed with carved tortoise-shell. Japan exhibited bronze, coral, silver, and gold personal ornaments, a rock-crystal cup set in gold, and many large and small porcelain and metal vases, candelabras, garden and parlor ornaments upon which were representations of their national, mythological legends. A bed dressed in a blue embroidered silk quilt, white silk sheets, pillow, and bolster-cases, attracted much attention. The style of the Japanese bedstead is not unlike that of the American; but those from China so exquisitely carved, were of cane-seat bottom, and required no mattress. Both countries exhibited a large number of screens and pictures of embroidered silk in carved ebony frames, and their agricultural products consisting largely of tea and rice; but that exhibit which expressed the most progress was the governmental educational exhibit of Japan, which greatly surprised me. Here were not only apparatus and charts for teaching the various branches of science, perfect miniature ivory skeletons, but vegetable fibres and other natural products with their uses and the processes of utilization demonstrated. This system of teaching practical industry, engrafted upon our common school system, would vastly increase the general intelligence and usefulness of our citizens. The exhibits of both China and Japan were at least highly creditable to pagan nations.

The exhibit of the Hawaiian or Sandwich Islands attracted much attention, partly because of its own intrinsic interest, and partly as coming from the land of King Kalkaia, whose recent visit to this country is fresh in the minds of all.

Upon the wall of the enclosure hung a wreath of mosses, white shells and pink coral, in the centre of which, in coral and moss, were the words "Aloha America, 1876," which, translated, means "Love to America." The enclosure was of course surmounted by the flag, consisting of eight stripes of red, white, and blue (representing the eight inhabited islands forming the group), upon which was the cross of St. George and the motto, "Righteousness is the life of nations."

The exhibits consisted of many specimens of ferns, mosses, and lichens, carefully put upon cardboard and labelled with their botanical names; most beautiful specimens of that variety of pink coral found only on the reefs of the Micronesian Islands and surpassing in beauty anything of the kind ever before seen here; many specimens of melted lava, showing the various forms which it assumes; cases of birds with their nests and eggs, among which was the bird's-nest made entirely from that form of melted lava resembling horse-hair and known as "pele-hair," together with quaint manufactured articles as robes made of cloth, manufactured from the bark of the cocoanut and other trees by the felting process, these robes trimmed with shells; hats of the bamboo leaf trimmed with the banana leaf; cloaks made entirely waterproof by tying in each knot of a common fish-net a bunch of seaweed, and other domestic articles expressive of the habits of the people.

Queen Emma, the wife of the former king, exhibited royal robes, "kahelas," and many relics of the ancient days of the island, among which was the war-club of an ancient king, a model of his bed and pillows, and a wooden spittoon inlaid with human bones, disproving the statement of recent travellers that the Sandwich Islanders never were cannibals. The "kahelas," or royal plumes, are borne in front and over the heads of royal personages on state occasions as emblems of royalty, and, like the robes, are made of brilliant-colored feathers, the lemon-yellow feather predominating. This feather is obtained from the "mami," or royal bird, under each of whose wings is found a single yellow feather. Of course very many of these birds must be taken to make a royal robe, or even a "kahela." At the death of her husband, Queen Emma, not being willing to be divested of the semblance of royalty, strove for the possession of the crown; but already Christianity had been sufficiently ingrafted upon the institutions of the island to demand that sex should determine rights; she therefore failed.

While examining these novel exhibits, I met the daughter of a former missionary. This lady, now a resident of Washington, but who was born upon one of these islands, seemed to be as proud of her birthplace as are the natives of Massachusetts. From her I gained much information relative to the customs and habits of the people.

The specially interesting portion of Mexico's exhibit were her splendid specimens of onyx and her model representations of the treasures of the ancient Aztecs.

But what of the United States? Although from the exhibits of many countries valuable suggestions were made to the American social scientist, philosopher, and worker, yet United States citizens might well feel proud of their country and its resources. Foreigners, impressed with the youth and weakness of our government, were evidently surprised at the progress and development expressed by our exhibits. Much art was displayed in the selection and arrangement of the exhibits; yet the special characteristic of the United States exhibit was practical utility. In this particular the manufactured goods of the New England and Middle States, from the Arundel tinted eye-glass, so well calculated to preserve and restore the falling eyesight, to the most elaborate philosophical instrument; from the American Inside Window Blind, combining the most perfect ventilation and adjustment of light with beauty and cheapness, to the most elaborate house, office, and church furniture; from the tiny tape to the best cassimeres and beautiful qualities of figured and plain American silks,—all favorably compared with the manufactured products of those nations which we are pleased to call foreign civilized peoples, while the exhibits of the resources of the great West was not equalled by those of any country. Nearly every State made a characteristic exhibit in Agricultural Hall of its agricultural products, some States supplementing this with a special exhibit in its own State Building. Wisconsin did not do herself justice; Iowa, in addition to her many hundred varieties of grains and seeds, exhibited three hundred varieties of apples and specimens of her soil to a depth of eight feet; while Kansas, with a more favorable climate, made a fine exhibit of luxuriant vegetables, fruits, grasses, and grains. Of course we expected from California a fine display of apples, pears, peaches, plums, prunes, figs, quinces, pomegranates, grapes, apricots, and almonds (all of which grow in Kansas), and were not disappointed. Of the varieties of California grape, the Tokay (exhibited in clusters of ten pounds each), the Muscatelle, Muscat, Alexandria, or raisin grape, were the most delicious I ever tasted. With all this power of delicious production, why is it that so many mechanics eke out a miserable, half-starved existence in our Eastern cities? To say that they are mechanics and not farmers does not answer the question, if they have any versatility of brain-power.

The Kansas and Colorado State Building attracted more attention than any other State building, partly from the unequalled luxuriant growth of Kansas productions, and partly from the museum of Colorado animals, all of which were killed and mounted for exhibition by a Colorado woman. And here I cannot forbear to say a word, perhaps a harsh word, of the Woman's Pavilion. This building, so diminutive as compared with the other Exhibition buildings, with its school-girl contents, continually pained me. It gave no idea of woman's work, her heart, or her brain, but was rather the exhibit of the work done by children in blind and orphan asylums. It is futile to attempt to separate the work of men and women, for they are by Nature combined. The exhibits in all departments of the Exposition were the result of their joint labor, and many of both sexes were constantly employed, especially in Machinery Hall, illustrating the processes of this work. Many women, feeling this truth, did not attempt to place their exhibits in the Pavilion; and others, failing to make a favorable impression upon the ladies having the matter in charge, were refused the opportunity. Of this latter class was Mrs. Ella Haller, of New York, who exhibited over two tons of the finest fruit in patent jars of her own invention. It was the finest exhibit of the kind upon the grounds, and her jar, being self-feeding, by which the fruit is continnally kept covered with syrup, deserves the attention of housekeepers and those engaged in the business of fruit-canning.

Nearly opposite the above exhibit, in Agricultural Hall, was the exhibit of Baker's chocolate, etc., which so well illustrates the general character of the Exposition I cannot fail to mention it. Of course every one is familiar with chocolate, cocoa, and cocoa-butter, but few know how the cocoa-bean from which the articles are manufactured grows. This firm exhibited not only the manufactured products and the bean, but the gourd in which the beans are found, both in its dried and natural state, as preserved in alcohol, distributing to visitors a pamphlet-circular giving encyclopedic information as to its cultivation, growth, and process of manufacture.

But it is useless to attempt without much time and space to give any accurate idea of the United States exhibit. In every department, in art no less than manufactures and agriculture, did her exhibits entitle her to at least equal respect with the older and most advanced nations of the earth.

The Centennial Exposition has been a great educator. No one could visit it, however carelessly, without learning something of the resources of the nations here represented, and to the student it has been a rich feast. Its effect must be to increase individual sympathy with, and charity for, all nations and peoples, of whatever religions or type of civilization. But when you appreciate the many and unusual demands upon our time this season, with no abatement of home or business duties, but the added work of the Liberal League, both local and national, you will not wonder that we are weary and worn, and heartily glad that the Centennial Exposition, with all its lessons, pleasures, and opportunities, is past, and with it so much of the Centennial year. It will take a large part of the next century for Philadelphians to become sufficiently rested to desire its repetition.

Very truly,

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 29, 1876.

"REASONS AGAINST WOMAN SUFFRAGE" CONSIDERED.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Taking a philosophical view of the matter, it is to me always amusingly refreshing to note the charming air of disinterested yet kindly unconcern which one class of human beings can exhibit in denying to another class the rights and privileges which they themselves already enjoy. It always reminds me of Artemus Ward's ardent patriotism during the war, which worked him up to such a pitch of reckless enthusiasm as to make him declare himself ready to see all his wife's relations shed their last drop of blood in defence of the dear old flag.

Mr. Mead has, I confess, "put his case" very cleverly and adroitly. On the surface of it it looks reasonable, philosophical, and unbiased by any but philanthropic motives; and if I were a man, already in possession of a vote, or if men were the disfranchised class, I am not sure but that I could appreciate the full force and cogency of his appeal to that disfranchised class to stand aside at this crisis and forget their own grievance, and to wait for that "more convenient season"—the "good time" which is always "coming," but which experience teaches us never does come, until by persistent effort we make it come. But you know it makes a vast amount of difference as to whose ox it is that is gored.

I cannot promise Mr. Mead, indeed I haven't the slightest hope of, anything like a millennium when we women get the ballot in our hands; in fact, I do not share in Mr. Mead's avowed belief that we are "far ahead of the fathers, brothers, and sons of our own race" in the particulars of honesty, virtue, purity, and uprightness. The sexes are by force of natural law too closely identified in aims and pursuits to allow either to excel the other in virtue or sink into lower depths of vice. That which uplifts one must necessarily elevate the other; what degrades the one must lower the other. But, though even the worst that has been prophesied of woman's suffrage were sure to happen, I would none the less work and plead and insist on giving it to her, for it is always a step forward in mental progress whenever any old wrong is righted. The bestowal of it may, by upheaving old landmarks, pulling down old shambles of a cruder civilization, cause for a time a little extra dust and dismay. But these things will be gradually adjusted,—the unsightly evil thing is removed, and the ground cleared for the upbuilding of a nobler structure. If momentary anarchy succeed this upheaval, let it come. We know that the principle underlying our action is right and just, and in time all will be harmonious.

I am sorry that Mr. Mead's personal observation and experience of the practical workings of woman suffrage should have been so unfortunate as to change his views, and thereby lose to our side the able efforts of his pen in behalf of that movement; for if he can plead so ably and subtly on the wrong side of the question, what a power might he not become with the right to inspire him! But he should remember that it is the part of philosophy to look beyond any little first mistakes or misdirection of the workings of a true principle, and trust to the principle itself for the future. It is not often that even the best-planned and best-adjusted machinery in the world moves on smoothly and evenly at the start; there are always minute inequalities which at first clog a little the workings of it,—inequalities, however, soon worn away by the friction of use.

America has little to boast of in the removal from her escutcheon of the foul blot of negro slavery, which so long made her vaunted republicanism a glittering falsehood. It was no result of a wise statesmanship which relieved this fair land from that tyranny of race which was slowly sapping the foundations of its energy and uprightness. The emancipation of the slaves was forced upon us by the stern necessities of war, instead of being, as it should have been, the result of the wise dictates of a far-seeing political sagacity. If the freeing of the slaves and the consequent placing of the ballot in their hands had been accomplished in a time of peace, when the wise men of the State could have given their best to meet the exigencies of the case, and to guide aright the masses of ignorant and brutal manhood so suddenly let loose upon us, the legitimate outgrowth of the "beneficent" system of slavery,—Mr. Mead would not have such a show of apparent justice at this time in his philosophic determination to struggle against another accession of "untrained voters"—the mothers, wives, sisters, and educators of the dominant sex.

While slavery was still an "institution" in this so-called Republic, it cast so deep a stain on the fair flag of our liberty as to cause it often to be greeted, not with the admiring reverence of the freedom-lovers of other lands, but with sneers at its pretensions, and such taunting epigrams as Capt. Marryatt (I think it was he) composed in its honor:—

"The white man's liberties in types
Are blazoned by your stars;
But what's the meaning of your stripes?
They mean—your negro's scars!"

It seems to me that the mistakes of the past ought to teach men wisdom for the future, but it does not always have that effect. Already America is again being shown from foreign sources how unsound are her claims to true political equality and genuine republicanism, so long as she denies to woman an equal voice in making the laws which she is obliged to obey. The flag is not even now the "flag of the free" which it so proudly boasts of being, so long as woman is allowed no word in the counsels of the land. Says Harriet Martineau: "I declare that whatever obedience I yield to the laws of the society in which I live is a matter between, not the community and myself, but my judgment and my will. Any punishment inflicted on me for a breach of those laws I should regard as so much gratuitous injury, for to those laws I have never actually or virtually assented. I know there are women in England who agree with me in this. I know there are women in America who agree with me in this."

Mrs. Mary Somerville, one of the brightest lights of British science, who deeply felt the injustice done her sex by the denial of the franchise, in her Personal Recollections remarks: "The British laws are adverse to women; and we are deeply indebted to Mr. Stuart Mill for daring to show their iniquity and injustice. The law of the United States is in some respects even worse, insulting the sex by granting suffrage to the newly emancipated slaves, and refusing it to the highly educated women of the Republic."

Mrs. Besant, another English woman, has also spoken her rebuking word against this flaw in the American assumption of a true republicanism, a rebuke which has brought forth this reply from Mr. Mead. She will, I am sure, be abundantly able to take up the gauntlet in defence of woman's suffrage which Mr. Mead has thrown down to her; and willing also, in spite of the pretty personal compliment he pays her, and which (man-fashion) he fancies will reconcile her or any woman to partial acquiescence in his argument.

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 12, 1877.

WHY A SUBSCRIBER STOPPED HIS PAPER.

SALEM, COLUMBIANA Co., Ohio, {
Dec. 26, 1876. }

EDITOR INDEX:—

By referring to the tag on my paper, it appears that my subscription runs out on the 31st instant. You will please discontinue my paper for the present, not because I have ceased to respect its high-toned literature or your honesty, but because of your leaning towards your enemies in a political sense has made many of your former friends think that your indirect efforts to sustain the Democracy for a long time past, and especially during the last campaign, has done more harm by bringing about the present state of political affairs than any other man in this whole country. I get a Democratic paper myself, not because I respect it, but to make a reconnaissance of the enemy. I have been a life-long reader of the Investigator; I have also been a reader of both INDEX and Truth Seeker since they were born; and it is with mortification and astonishment that I behold you sitting on the fence, leaning over on the rebel side. What have you to expect from the Democrats? Have you not been exposing that party by warning us of the dangerous elements it contains, Catholicism, slavery, ignorance, etc., etc.? If the two parties were divided, would you not risk your fate with the Republicans? Was it not the spirit of Republicanism that educated you, established your paper, and sustains it at present? Every Democratic subscriber you have has received his liberal ideas from Republican teachers. I do not say that Republicans are all right; but when we think of the struggle they have had for their own existence, and to save the country from its enemies, it is astonishing that the party is so good as it is. If there was any chance of a better party arising, I would join it immediately; but I have no idea of progressing, crab-fashion, back to the Democratic party, which, if let alone, would land us back in the sixteenth century.

Yours respectfully, DAVID PORTER.

P. S.—We know that the danger you fear is great from the Republican party, but the history of the world and experience in our country show us that the Democratic party must not be trusted.

[Mr. Porter will do exactly as he pleases about reading THE INDEX, but he is all wrong as to his facts. We have had no "leaning" whatsoever towards the Democrats; what we had was towards the Republicans; as stated in these columns frankly, we voted for neither party, but cast a protest ballot. Is there no limit anywhere to the tendency of mankind to misunderstand plain language? We are acquiring an enormous respect for clear-headedness. The above letter reminds us of Mr. Emerson's suggestion to bend down and look at the landscape between one's legs.—ED.]

A NEW BOOK SUGGESTED.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

On reading your lecture upon "Jesus and Socrates" in the last INDEX, the earnest desire which I have often felt comes up afresh; namely, that you would give to the public, in book form, collections from your writings which have been from time to time presented in your paper. The readers of THE INDEX, I am sure, would greet with joy two or three volumes, classified as to subjects, from this source. I have known persons to cut out from the paper, and preserve as best they could in scrap-books, articles of yours which they felt they must have at hand. Others, with the same feeling, have procured extra copies of THE INDEX containing to them most valuable thoughts and sentiments which they wished to have within reach at any time.

So, judging from my own limited observation even, I cannot but believe that there would be a hearty echo from the readers of THE INDEX generally to my own wish to have, in a compact, durable form, that I could readily lay my hand upon, collections of certain lectures, discourses, and editorials which have been to me so great a joy, and have aroused enthusiasm for noble action. And, in addition to any merely personal wishes, is the importance to humanity of preserving, in a more permanent form than the ephemeral pages of a newspaper, views and principles which it would be a sin against posterity to allow to perish.

Will you not please to give serious consideration to this proposal, and thus gratify one who has been from the first a subscriber and careful reader of THE INDEX, and who is deeply your debtor for what you have given of advanced, logical thought and of noble principles whose roots strike down to the hard-pan of the nature of things?

T.

Jan. 21, 1877.

[That the wish above expressed should have been felt even by a few, is a source of gratification we will not pretend to conceal. But we have no reason to suppose that many share it; and it would be quite impossible, we presume, to find a good publishing house willing to assume the pecuniary risks of so dubious an investment. Numerous unorthodox books are published; but publishers see clearly what so many unorthodox thinkers and authors like to make light of—the significance of names and the fatal importance of a sharply defined position. The hopes of authorship were part of the price paid for the establishment of THE INDEX.—ED.]

QUESTIONS IN RETURN.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In THE INDEX for December 28, 1876, Mr. Preston Day asks: "Cannot an individual inherit eternal life in another sphere of existence dependent on the conditions in which it is manifested?" "May not mind in that sphere be related to an organism with a nervous system?"

Now I should like to ask in return: "Does any science teach where that sphere may be? By what means is this eternal life or immortal soul going to get into this 'sphere'? How is it going to adapt itself to said conditions? How is the mind, which inherits an organism here on earth till the death of such organism, going to get into the new organism in another sphere? What is going to develop a new organism ready for said mind to take possession of? And when said mind does take possession, what becomes of that which developed said organism? Is it 'shoved out'? And does it develop another organism to be shoved out of by another usurping mind? Will he throw the light of day on these questions, that they may be 'fully and satisfactorily answered'?"

Truly yours,

G. H. PARKHURST, M. D.

AN EXPOSTULATION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

To what blasphemous utterances your heretical teachings lead! One of your followers tells me that the stone in the fable of "Stone Broth" prefigures the Orthodox Christ as plainly as does the stone which David tells us the builders rejected; that, by exciting their curiosity, love, or fear, men are led to do unwittingly all those things which are attributed to Christ's aid. In other words, that the Church uses Christ as the beggar used the stone.

O, that you might hear the voice that Paul heard and cease your work of persecution!

NAMELESS.

A GENTLEMAN, watching the lady cutting paper flowers in the Woman's Building, said to his friend: "I can cut out the devil with scissors;" and, after a pause, said to Miss Scissors, "I suppose you couldn't do that, could you?" "I think not," was the reply, "but I hope I can cut his acquaintance."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
"13 to 25 "	"8 "
"26 to 51 "	"6 "
"52 to 100 "	"5 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLKDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSN., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
sy, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later "till I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1875. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1875. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chander Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 50 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur E. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS KELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
sy, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Conceded Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.50
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Blazing Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Price.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 4 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Signifying, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COHWAY (MONOQUE D.). The Earthward Flight.....	1.75
COHRELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by Grove, Holtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig, and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mawson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols. Illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENÉ). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBBING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....
Barnes.....
The Mill on the Floss.....
Felix Holt.....
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portraits.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (M. P. Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 1 vol.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANÇOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Effective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREYS (W. R.). Kingdoms of Life.....	5.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	3.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HANKERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.50
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Old World. Part Second.....	1.50
Old World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.). Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	1.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life, with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Mits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELLOWS (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELLOWS (JEAN) Prose. On the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopas the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts of the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Opiumism. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Frested Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (ORPHEUS O.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1865.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MOLLEY (PROP. JOHN.) Voltaire.....	2.00
Bousquet, 3 vols.....	4.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Hickies from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANÇOIS W.). A History of the Breton Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defense.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLXIV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.25
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	2.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Bence.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the Means of their Development.....	5.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 3 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEESCHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 8 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Book Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Tains.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Daryl, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THACKERAY'S (MRS. EMILIA) Among the Isles of Shalott.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Walden.....	1.50
A Week in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLDE (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 3 vols.....	5.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYLER (BARBARA) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIFFLES (R. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

233 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of Horticultural Hall Lectures, SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."
Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."
Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—a New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.
Jan. 28—Wm. B. Alger. "The Laboring Classes and the Ruling Classes; or, How the World is to be Redeemed."
Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.
Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."
"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.:—
Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."
Feb. 25—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing."
March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."
March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."
Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 451 Washington Street.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	40
FIFTY.....	75
ONE HUNDRED.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED.....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED.....	3.80
FIVE HUNDRED.....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND.....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P. O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Free Thought. EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $2.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL, RADICAL, AND FREE RELIGIOUS LECTURES.

By S. W. SAMPLE.

The following is a list of the subjects with which I shall enter the lecture-field this season:—

1. FREE RELIGION AND CHRISTIANITY.
2. THE AMERICAN IDEA AND THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.
3. THE BIBLE IN THE CONSTITUTION.
4. THE WARFARE OF SCIENCE.
5. DARWINISM.
6. THE WOMAN QUESTION AND ITS ANSWER.
7. THE RELIGION OF WORLDLINES.
8. THOMAS PAINE: SERVANT OF FREEDOM AND MASTER OF THE SITUATION.
9. BUDDHA AND BUDDHISM.
10. CONFUCIUS AND CONFUCIANISM.
11. THE BIBLE OF HUMAN ORIGIN.
12. A CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF THE FOUR GOSPELS.

Those desiring to make engagements with me will please address me at the earliest convenient date.

S. W. SAMPLE,
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

No. II, III, IV, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL

SCHOOL for both sexes. Address

EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1. free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

A COURSE OF 10 LECTURES

By DISTINGUISHED WOMEN,

IN THE

PAINE MEMORIAL BUILDING,

WILL BE COMMENCED ON

SUNDAY EVENING, DEC. 3, 1876.

These Lectures will be of a very Liberal and Radical character, on various topics, interesting and instructive. The opening Lecture will be by Miss SUSAN B. ANTHONY, of New York.

Subject—"The 16th Amendment; or, women want bread, not the ballot."

Tickets to the course of ten Lectures, $2. Single tickets 25 cents. To be had at the office of the Investigator, Banner of Light, and THE INDEX.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant,—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, æsthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

THE LABOR QUESTION—

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fiske, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyndner Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orvis, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher, BENJ. R. TUCKER, Lock Box 689, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 371.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.
SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

MOODY AND SANKEY began their campaign in Boston last Sunday. For a time they will be the "last sensation."

M. ERNEST RENAN, the author of the Life of Jesus, is to deliver a lecture on Spinoza at the Hague, February 21, the two-hundredth anniversary of the great philosopher's death.

ROWLAND HILL was once requested to preach a sermon to the elect. He promptly replied, "Have the goodness to mark the elect with a piece of chalk, so that I may know them, and I will preach to them." The request was not insisted on.

"THE GREAT DEBATE on spruce gum," writes a Quebec correspondent in the Montreal Evening Star of December 23, "ended in the passing of Mr. Tallon's bill to authorize the Nuns of the Providence to engage in all kinds of industries, and the consequence will be that the manufacturers of Montreal will in future have to compete with a gigantic organization carrying on trade with pauper labor under exemption from taxes. Much was said about the excellent work the Providence Convent has done in the direction of charities, but not a word was uttered on the deplorable effect the institution has exercised by depreciating the labor of the poor classes such as the seamstresses and needle-women with whom it comes directly into conflict." In this way the Catholic Church aggrandizes itself at the expense of the poor it professes to befriend. When will mankind come to perceive that the prosperity of the Church as an institution, whether Catholic or Protestant, is always at the expense of their own secular interests? Probably not till the falsity of the Christian creed is thoroughly understood by the people.

A DISPATCH to the Boston Herald reads as follows: "Philadelphia, Jan. 28.—The Liberal League of Philadelphia celebrated the one hundred and fortieth birthday of Tom Paine to-day, and the occasion excited much interest, in consequence of the indignation of Liberals over the rejection of a testimonial bust of Paine by the city government, and the announcement that Walt Whitman would speak. The attendance was very large. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the rejection of the bust as cowardice, bigotry, and injustice. The poet Whitman then gave a reminiscence of Paine, telling how he became intimate with Paine's most intimate friends at Tammany Hall, New York, thirty-five years ago. After speaking of Paine's conviviality, Whitman said: 'I dare not say how much of what our Union is owing and enjoying to-day—its independence, its ardent belief in and substantial practice of radical human rights and the severance of its government from all ecclesiastical and superstitious dominion,—I dare not say how much of all this is owing to Thomas Paine; but I am inclined to think a good portion of it decidedly is. Of the foul and foolish fictions yet told about the circumstances of his decease, the absolute fact is that, as he lived a good life after its kind, he died calmly, philosophically, as became him. He served the embryo Union with the most precious service, a service that every man, woman, and child in the thirty-eight States is to some extent receiving the benefit of to-day, and I for one here cheerfully and reverently throw one pebble on the cairn of his memory.'"

HUNTINGTON, Long Island, was the scene of disturbances at a Methodist "watch-night prayer-meeting," on New Year's Eve, which were disgraceful in the extreme. The law was appealed to by the church trustees, and twenty-four of the thirty disturbers apologized and paid their fines. The New York Sun of January 10 says: "These twenty-four repentants do not include all the disturbers, as the surreptitious pencil of the good brother who planned their day of reckoning and discomfiture recorded the names of thirty of the actors of the first families of Huntington. There are six, all young men, who are still stiff-necked and rebellious. These young men have not visited Lawyer Platt, nor have they penned words of contrition, and, moreover, they declare that they will not. They further say that the church has no right to compromise with them if they have done wrong, and is itself doing a wrong by offering such a compromise. They further explain that the church exercises are always so ludicrous that their merriment is aroused, and, once aroused, they plead the difficulty of allaying it. This, they say, has been true of the devotions of this congregation since the conversion of a man named Weeden. Mr. Weeden, when inspired by the spirit of an excited meeting, dropped on his hands and knees and crept on all fours to illustrate how the sinners groped in darkness. Equally effective in provoking the laughter of the young visitors was Mr. Weeden's delineation of the distress of the unregenerate, when overwhelmed by the waters of affliction, and without the consolations of religion. This was pictured by Mr. Weeden, by falling flat upon his face on the floor, and kicking and sprawling in imitation of the motions of swimming. Mr. Weeden is no longer conspicuous in the meetings, but his place is supplied by a Mr. Harry Sammis, who is distinguished from him only as mental gymnastics are distinguished from physical ones. It was Mr. Sammis, the young men say, who innocently started the merriment that afterward assumed disgraceful proportions on New Year's Eve. He did it by a description of his fight with the devil. He was graphic, and told how he had grasped the Evil One in his hand, and wrestled with and overcame him; and how he had at length driven his infernal majesty into the leg of a boot, and, closing the top with his hand, had held him prisoner. This started the hilarity that even the actors themselves admit was uproarious. Much mischief was done by a young man with a spool attached to a string. By rolling the spool under the seats and carefully pulling it back he created the impression that a mouse was running about the floor, and great commotion was excited among the women. Coughing and laughing were prolific sources of annoyance, and the young man with a clay pipe, already mentioned, was abetted by companions with canes, who pushed the hats over the eyes of the ladies in front of them and pulled down their back hair. As the faithful were called closer to the altar, three of the sisters innocently added to the mirth by bearing placards inscribed, 'Real Estate for Sale,' 'C. O. D.,' and 'No Trust.'"

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HOW. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HOW. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HOW. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HOW. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HOW. GEORGE W. JULLIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HOW. ELIZABETH WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUBERTHANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. H. J. SAYAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. W. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZ,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAY,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ISAAC W. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 S. F. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. B. WALLINGHAM,.....South Waver, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LINDBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. M. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 J. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT O. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. BAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quincy, Ill.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.

(The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....Warren Avenue, Boston.
 MABEL P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Influence of Christianity in Practice.

BY CHARLES E. WHIPPLE.

The question has repeatedly been raised whether civilization is more indebted to Christianity, or Christianity to civilization. It is to be hoped that some competent person will give us, in a volume devoted to the subject, an abstract or summary of the evidence on both sides of that important question. Testimony, on the popular side of it, is abundant, on the surface of our literature; but as this testimony proceeds chiefly from professional propagandists of Christianity, and consists chiefly of assumption unsupported by evidence, even that side of it needs an accurate restatement; while the other side, on which very much is to be said, scarcely appears, at present, in popular literature. The mass of the population in any country, having been educated more or less by the religion of that country, are likely to credit it with at least as much beneficial influence as it really exercises, probably with more; while such portions of truth as may exist on the other side are likely to be unwelcome to such a population, and so the presentation of them to be discouraged, if not absolutely forbidden. Judging by the attitude of the officials of all our popular sects, as displayed in their annual meetings and their periodical literatures, the free expression of freethought in regard to their doctrines is as much feared and discountenanced here as the preaching of their missionaries is in Rome or Constantinople. These things being so, it may be well to look at some of the particulars in which Christianity, as seen in the practice of the people who claim specially to represent that system, exercises an unfavorable influence, mental, moral, and spiritual, on these its professors, and thus on the community at large.

Here let it be said in explanation.—I do not at all mean to take advantage, in the examination here proposed, of the confessions of short-coming or wrongdoing customarily made by pious people in church-services and prayer-meetings. I shall find nothing on the habitual admission of some that they are "miserable sinners," or of others that they are "vile worms of the dust." What I propose to show is that some of the allowed and systematic practices of these people, some of the methods which they habitually employ in propagating their theology and religion, are injurious, mentally, morally, and spiritually, to themselves and the community, through the disregard of truth displayed in them.

I have intimated above that the eulogies of Christianity made by its professional propagandists consist chiefly of assumption without adequate evidence. I now affirm that most of the items of theological doctrine which they insist on as the foundation of Christianity are of this same sort, assumption, unsupported by evidence; and I affirm further, that many of these items may be and have been disproved, shown to be utterly without foundation, by evidence within the reach of every one who knows how to read.

One of the biographers of Jesus represents that great teacher as saying to his disciples, "The truth shall make you free." No doubt it is truth which liberates, enlarges, enlightens, and benefits mankind, and by their conformity to which institutions and associations are to be judged. Yet reverence for truth in itself, search for it as for a pearl of great price, and estimate of customs and institutions in proportion to their conformity or want of conformity to it, are conspicuously wanting among the people who call themselves "professing Christians." It will seem unjustifiably harsh to say that, among these people, indifference to truth, disregard of truth, and violation of truth are habitual and allowed, in their doctrine and practice in the departments of theology and religion; it will seem thus harsh, not only to the parties accused, the teachers and "professors" of Christianity, but to the public at large, for a reason hereafter to be mentioned. But the fact may be proved, and I proceed to give some specifications.

1. The foundation, the very corner-stone of Christianity, the doctrine that Jesus of Nazareth was "the Messiah" of Hebrew prophecy, is utterly untrue.

He has never been, in any sense, the King of the Jews; he has never been the deliverer of the Hebrew people from Gentile oppression; he has never gathered that people into "their own land," beginning there a government of peace and righteousness to last forever; three particulars which formed the main features of Messianic prophecy. Moreover, there is no evidence that he was descended from David, as the Messiah was to be, unless he was the son of Joseph; a theory utterly rejected by Christians.

2. The propagandists of Christianity make a pretence absurd as well as false when they represent themselves as following "the religion of the Bible," and claim that collection of writings, containing the principles and rules of two diverse and mutually antagonistic systems of religion, as one authoritative code, divinely inspired, infallibly correct in doctrine and fact, perfectly consistent with itself, and binding upon all mankind. The position of these people displays yet more absurdity and more falsity in their pretence of following Jesus, who freely criticised the Hebrew half of their infallible Bible, and prescribed for his disciples rules not only varying from that, but sometimes contrary to it.

3. The sabbatical doctrine of the Protestant propagandists of Christianity is so astonishing a compound of falsity and self-contradiction that no brief statement could fully express it. I will mention a few of the contrarities included in it.

Pretending to follow "the Bible," the doctrine and practice of the people in question disobeys the injunctions of both Old and New Testaments in regard to sabbatism.

Pretending to regard the fourth commandment of the Hebrew decalogue as a law imperatively binding on them, these people work without scruple on the day expressly designated by that commandment for rest, and abstain from labor and business on one of the days appointed by that commandment for work.

Pretending to follow the example of Jesus, they make a merit of being Sabbath-keepers, though he was known to the pious Jews of his time as a Sabbath-breaker.

Pretending to consider Paul's precepts divinely inspired and obligatory, they claim that one day of the week must be separated as sacred, while he argued strongly against sabbatism, rebuked the Galatian Church for its observance of days, and expressly vindicated those Christians in his time who made no such distinction, but "esteemed every day alike."

Pretending to consider the Bible not only authoritative but "sufficient," as a rule of faith and practice, they enjoin as a duty a method of sabbatical observance at variance with the doctrine of both Old and New Testaments.

Their doctrine of Sunday-sabbatism receives no countenance from any portion of their "inspired and infallible rule," and their representations respecting "God's day" and "God's house" are in absolute conflict both with Old Testament and New Testament, which also are in conflict with each other upon those subjects.

4. Claiming to be "followers of Jesus," the people in question habitually violate his rules and deviate from his examples both by omission and commission. They habitually and systematically do things which he has forbidden, and refuse to do things which he has commanded.

Calling Jesus "the Prince of Peace," and claiming him as the introducer of a system under which war was to be abolished, these people still, as they have always done, favor and take active part in whatever wars are waged by the civil rulers of the nations to which they belong, hold commissions in their armies and navies, help to support their military schools, and send their children to learn the art of war there, intending that warfare shall be their life-long occupation and means of support. Moreover, when exceptional Christians, or philanthropists not claiming to be Christian, have made organized efforts against war, the people in question have been the most energetic and persistent of their opponents.

But Jesus enjoined not only peace, as opposed to armed contests between nations, but absolute non-resistance to, and forgiveness of, all intentional injury, precepts conspicuously enforced by his example. Both precepts and example are utterly disregarded by the vast majority of his self-styled "followers." Their clergy try to conceal this apostasy by elaborate representations that Jesus did not mean what he plainly said; and the contempt and persecution directed by these Christians against a small sect of their fellow-Christians two centuries ago was largely due to the fact that the latter followed Jesus, in this particular and others, more faithfully than the former.

Other characteristic precepts of Jesus forbade laying up treasure on earth, forbade taking thought for the morrow, discountenanced prospective supplies of food and clothing, and enjoined that any small present possessions should be freely shared with whoever might ask for them. His self-styled "followers" utterly disregard and habitually violate all these injunctions, and their clergy try to justify their conduct, and at the same time to represent it as not disobedience.

Some of the most obvious cases in which the self-styled "followers of Jesus" systematically violate his precepts while professing to obey them, are found in the department of religious observance. Their punctilious Sabbath-keeping, though he was a Sabbath-breaker (calling himself "Lord of the Sabbath" for the express purpose of showing his right to disregard it), has already been noticed. But Jesus favored the theory of holy places no more than that of holy days. Denying the claim of both Jews and Samaritans for the sanctuaries specially venerated by each, and claiming sincerity and earnestness instead of separated time or place as the requisite for acceptable worship, he seems to have recognized the fact that special consecration of a day or a building inevitably involves the comparative desecration of other days and other buildings. When Stephen and Paul declared, in direct contradiction to the belief they had previously cherished, that "God dwelleth not in temples made with hands," no doubt they followed the teaching of their new master, Jesus; yet Christians nowadays comprehend his doctrine so little that they think it essential to frequent a consecrated place on a consecrated day, and demand that these shall be venerated by the community as "God's house" and "God's day."

In what they call "divine service," still other violations of their Master's doctrine are manifest. Jesus made emphatic protest against public prayers, long prayers, and repetitions in prayer. But in all these things the Christian clergy are as conspicuous offenders as ever the Jewish Pharisees were. They weekly pay elaborate verbal compliments to Jesus in public prayer, not only doing the things he forbade, but purposing to do them in his honor, and representing it as a duty to do them.

Justice to the lay-members of the various Christian churches requires the distinct admission that most of them are quite unaware of the characteristics of their faith above-mentioned. They know that that faith includes "mysteries," and that the scriptural record of it contains apparent discrepancies. As to the former, they are quite satisfied not to understand matters beyond the scope of the human mind, and they are easily persuaded to class direct contradictions under the head of mysteries; as to the latter, they accept with implicit confidence the assurances of their clergy (in "commentaries," sermons, and sectarian periodicals), that these discrepancies are only apparent, a full and fair solution of each being attainable without prejudice to their theory of the infallible inspiration of the Bible. Easily accepting these assurances—for, they think, why should they not believe one so pious and so wise as their own minister? and making one other comfortable assumption; namely, that, whatever may happen to other people, they themselves are sure of "salvation,"—they find their religion a comfortable one, and desire to maintain an undisturbed possession of its satisfactions.

Does it seem harmless as well as comfortable, this acceptance, without question or scrutiny, of the theological system in which hereditary tradition has nursed you? Consider that you are cherishing precisely the same state of mind which makes the Mussulman, the Buddhist, the Brahman refuse to receive or even listen to the doctrine offered him by the Christian missionary. If you are right in adhering without comparison, examination, or inquiry, to the religion first presented to you, is not he right in doing the same? On the other hand, if this attitude is wrong and hurtful in him, is it not wrong and hurtful in you?

Consider, again, what would have been the effect upon arts, trades, sciences, and by necessary consequence upon domestic, social, and civil life among us, if all Christians, say since the time of Calvin and Luther, had assumed in these departments, as they have in the departments of theology and religion, that the existing amount of knowledge and mode of action were satisfactory and sufficient, and hence that all change and all scrutiny which might lead to change were to be avoided and discouraged. Is it wise for fallible beings like us to assume, in regard to any department of human welfare, that we already know accurately and certainly all that can be or needs to be known? Again, is it reasonable to assume that research and scrutiny are likely to do harm rather than good in religion, when they do good rather than harm in all the other business of life?

The great majority of the people who call themselves Christians stand, and choose to stand, in one of the attitudes above described; either abiding in contented ignorance of the grounds and the details of religious duty, or assuming that all needful knowledge of them is already attained. The disadvantage of this attitude is seen plainly enough by the obvious ill result of its adoption in matters of art or science; but, religiously considered, this attitude is sinful also, being the keeping unused in a napkin of the talent given by our Creator for increase by active use. The sin and evil of contented ignorance and inaction are not, however, the worst features of the case we are considering.

The Christian propagandist, lay or clerical, in conference with one who, theoretically, admits his pretensions (as the great majority of our population are trained to do), has his own way entirely, and can assume the superiority of a teacher over a pupil. It is thus that such men as Moody in this country and Varley in England confidently summon the whole people to come to them for spiritual direction; and it is thus that such vast numbers obey the call and submit to the manipulation. Self-advised piety is supposed by many people to imply real superiority in wisdom and goodness; and such people, ignorantly confessing themselves to be "impenitent sinners," submit to be lectured and dominated accordingly. But occasionally the propagandist meets with an intelligent person who, instead of accepting his assumptions with the desired docility, asks for the grounds of them, and then shows the exhorter wherein and how far those grounds are insufficient. In such conference it is sometimes demonstrated to the exhorter that certain of his premises are directly contradicted by the "infallible" Bible to which he appeals as authority; or, again, that the many statements mutually contradictory which appear in various parts of that Bible prove it not infallible. In such exigencies, the lay exhorter may fall back on the counsel given at a General Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations, to "talk kindly, but avoid argument," and the clerical exhorter may brazen it out on the ground that the objector is "carnal," and incompetent to judge of spiritual things; but, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the exhorter of both classes will continue to uphold and proclaim his church's doctrine, even when he has seen it to be contradicted by his assumed infallible rule, and will also maintain that rule to be infallible, even after he has seen it to be self-contradictory.

This is the evil fruit naturally produced by the assumption, in each of our Christian sects, that its church-doctrines and church-customs are absolutely correct, and that neither change of them nor scrutiny in regard to them is needed. The churches constituting each sect have so long assumed that every statement in the Bible is and must be true, that they believe, and hold it a duty to believe, affirmations contrary to each other; and they have so long assumed that their creed and customs are a faithful summary of the duties prescribed in that Bible, that they hold to the former even where it is flatly contradicted by the latter. Indeed, one cause of the voluminous character of the commentaries on the Bible is the necessity felt of adjusting the statements of Hebrew infallibility, and the materially different statements of Christian infallibility, into some show of agreement, first with each other, and then with the creed and customs of the commentator's sect; a work which of course requires a great deal of explanation.

Among the curious inconsistencies of teachers of Christianity is their systematic disparagement of reason in the interest of religion; their representation of man's duty to God as including the acceptance of a religion at variance with reason, although nothing can be plainer than that reason is God's gift to man, bestowed for the very purpose of discrimination between true and false, and of decision between two varying ideas or courses of action. In the name of allegiance to God, they demand a renunciation of God's prescribed rule and method, and an adoption of their own different rule and method. When hard-pressed with argument, they will even take the ground that reason may properly guide us in the temporal, or less important affairs of life, but must be distrusted when the matter of highest importance, our duty to God, is in question; as if God's plan would work well in trivial affairs, while their own better method must be resorted to in matters of consequence.

Jesus taught that "truth" was the appointed agency through which men were to be made free, and that "right" as well as truth could be discerned by men "even of themselves"; that is, by the reason and conscience which God has given them. But circumstances, in the period of time intervening between Jesus and the present generation of his self-styled "followers," have brought about this strange state of things; namely, that these "followers" undervalue, disregard, and violate truth in the very matter in which adherence to it is of chief importance. It may be well here to glance at some steps of the process through which we have reached this state of things.

Jesus, speaking to the Jews with an air of "authority," due, no doubt, to his vivid perception of truth, freely criticised the rules and precepts ascribed by that people to Moses, and referred his hearers to their own reason and conscience for decision in regard to duty. It was no easy thing, however, to change their life-long habit of depending on authority in religious matters, and the result was that those who recognized in him a better teacher than Moses, leaned on him instead of on Moses. His teaching having shown his disciples the imperfection of that Hebrew Scripture which they had supposed infallibly inspired, their allegiance was transferred from that to himself; and after his death, through the operation of the same principle, Peter and Paul, James and John, were accepted as authoritative leaders by the converts they made. When, however, the doctrines taught by Jesus and his disciples had been committed to writing, and ultimately (no one knows when or by whom) collected in a volume, this volume came by degrees to be regarded as an authoritative code in religion and morals. Luther, Calvin, and others succeeded, at the risk of their lives, in resisting the claim of the Roman Church to be received as an infallible interpreter of Scripture; but they made the mistake of still assuming Scripture itself, both the Old and the New, to be infallible, and the sects they founded have never outgrown that error. Instead of doing this, they repeated the blunder of the Roman Church, manufactured formularies which they assumed to concentrate the essence of Scripture doctrine, and demanded an acceptance of these formularies as the indispensable condition of admission to their churches. This practice, continued from the time of the Protestant Reformation to our own time, has gained such credit and such entire acceptance in the churches of every sect, that their members not only make no question of the absolute correctness of their own creed and ecclesiastical customs, but treat inquiry or scrutiny in regard to them as an unauthorized intrusion. People in the Church, lay or clerical, who raise questions of this sort, are looked upon by their "brethren" as suspicious and dangerous persons; and outsiders who do the same thing are regarded as "infidels," even when the scrutiny has arisen in the legitimate course of literary or scientific research, or when it was necessitated by self-defence against ecclesiastical attempts to bar the progress of literature or science.

I have said above that the accusations made in this paper will seem harsh and unfounded, not only to church people but to outsiders. The reason is that the great majority of both these classes have unconsciously imbibed acceptance of the main doctrines here in question, through their mental and moral environment from childhood upwards. They have grown up theoretical Christians by inhalation of a Christian atmosphere, without once recognizing the need of such personal scrutiny for attainment of individual knowledge there, as they see at once to be indispensable in all other branches of knowledge. While science, through perpetual questioning, research, comparison, and experiment, has been steadily making progress in the countries called Christian, and while the intelligence thus diffused among their inhabitants is boasted of by Christians as due to the superiority of their religious system, the strange spectacle is presented of a systematic discouragement of the application of such scrutiny, examination, and comparison to Christianity itself, except for the purpose of vindicating and extolling it. Research into that faith with the avowed intention of maintaining its superiority to all other religions is esteemed creditable and praiseworthy; but the research of unbiased inquiry, the attempt to ascertain whether or not the system is founded in truth, in short, any manner or degree of scrutiny which considers the question an open one, to be decided affirmatively or negatively according to evidence, meets with prompt and firm opposition from the professional teachers of Christianity; it is first discouraged as useless and dangerous, and stigmatized, if persisted in, as an evil act prompted by an evil purpose.

Jesus taught, and exemplified, the pursuit of truth by the use of reason. The theological system now popularly associated with his name disregards truth and denounces reason wherever these conflict with the traditions which it teaches as authoritative. Judge, reader, whether the instances of this sort above given do not prove the proposition with which I began, namely, that Christianity, as seen in the practice of the people who claim specially to represent that system, exercises in some respects an unfavorable influence, mental, moral, and spiritual, on these its professors, and thus on the community at large.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"NOTES OF A SERMON."

HINTS ABOUT MIRACLES.

Perplexed by a sermon, or for the sake of introducing his subject, rhetorically purporting to be so, "M. B. S.," in THE INDEX of Dec. 28, "having not at hand the necessary books to ascertain just what the best critics have proved concerning the facts of the New Testament, especially miracles," "would be glad to have some one who can give a brief account of the matter in THE INDEX." I suppose I have read, in my time, about all that has been said on the subject. But this was years ago; and for years past I have laid books aside, being tired of them. My erudition, once not contemptible perhaps, has faded, and is fading still with constantly increasing rapidity. If there was a book of which I knew every verse and title, it was the Bible, the whole of which I have read at least fifty times in various languages, and its principal parts hundreds of times probably. Yet I discover in myself a growing similarity with Christ and his apostles in not misquoting, for they never misquoted, but in quoting the Bible with a degree of accuracy superior to that of the text. This leads me to the hope that my answer to "M. B. S." may disappoint him and those who may be, he thinks, his fellow-inquirers to their advantage; for what they ask I have found to be a stone, and what they will receive might perhaps be bread.

The miracles of Jesus! Oh, he made miracles. The changing of a heart of stone into a heart of flesh is a miracle which happened in his time, and happens every day, through him. Of other miracles "an adulterous and perverse generation" asketh for them, but none shall be given unto it. But an adulterous and perverse generation who wants miracles and can obtain none, invents them.

Many miracles, no doubt, were put to the credit—we might now say to the charge—of Jesus, which neither he nor his apostles ever claimed that he made. Many such miracles are found in the apocryphal gospels. Shall I say the same of those which are related in the four canonical gospels?

Without answering this question directly, let me observe that those who wrote the books of Scripture, even if they knew or suspected that it was Scripture they wrote, had not, of the sense in which it behooves Scripture to be true, the ideas which have been put in vogue by modern Protestant teachers.

According to those teachers, to prove that the Bible is true is to prove that every fact related in it has the historical accuracy which we should demand in a good report of a railroad accident. Assuming that our regret for the Bible can demand no less than a belief that every one of its statements is true in that sense, those Protestant teachers are greatly scandalized by the liberties which the Fathers of the Church, and all commentators on the Bible, both Jews and Christians, prior to Luther's Reformation, constantly take with the texts without the least apparent remorse, and with hardly the possibility, for such learned men, of such an excuse as gross ignorance or absolute stupidity. Those apparently distorted interpretations, however, were, during many generations, a true spiritual bread whereby men lived. How was that?

While our "Orthodox" Protestant theologians may have to stop to solve that riddle, let us open the ecclesiastical history of Eusebius, bishop of Caesarea, the father of ecclesiastical history and the friend of Constantine. Prominent among the subjects which he treats is Philo's account of the philosophical life of the ascetics of Egypt; which ascetics Eusebius contends, from Philo's description, to have been Christians. In claiming this, Eusebius was right, I have no doubt. Any one who can find the miracles of Jesus, as stated by Matthew, literally and minutely foretold in the book of Psalms, will have no hesitation in recognizing in Philo's Therapeutae a Christian community. Here is the Christian life of purity and contemplation of things invisible. Of blood atonement, it is true, not a word: this might scandalize our Protestants of the straight school. But what may "atone" for this deficiency is our Therapeutae's diligence in "searching the Scriptures."

"After other matters," says Eusebius, "he [Philo] adds: 'The whole time between the morning and evening is a constant exercise. For as they are engaged with the sacred Scriptures, they reason and comment upon them, explaining their national philosophy in an allegorical manner. For they consider the verbal interpretation as signs indicative of a secret sense communicated in obscure intimations. They have also commentaries of ancient men who, as founders of the sect, have left many monuments of their doctrine in allegorical representations, which they use as models, imitating the manner of the original institutions.'"

"It is highly probable," Eusebius adds, "that the ancient commentaries which he [Philo] says they have, are the very gospels and writings of the apostles; and probably some expositions of the ancient prophets, such as are contained in the Epistle to the Hebrews and many others of Saint Paul's epistles."

After quoting another passage to the same effect, Eusebius in conclusion says of the Therapeutae: "That Philo, when he wrote these statements, had in view the first heralds of the Gospel, and the original practices handed down from the apostles must be obvious to all."

The word allegory, as used by Philo, and by theologians generally, has a broader meaning than it has in rhetoric, where it is restricted to a continual metaphor. The theological meaning of allegory is simply the etymological one: allos, other; agoreuo, I speak. An allegory consists in saying a thing while meaning another; and in this sense allegory embraces not only all kinds of figurative speech, but all kinds of insinuations, of which the Bible is full.

When the books of the Bible were written, there were things which it was not safe to say; it would have cost the writer his head. Those things the Bible insinuates, leaving it to the wise of other generations to trace out the faint lines which run continuously under the black ink of the text. An insinuation of foul play runs, for example, under the narrative of the lapidation of Achan by Joshua "by order of the Lord"; of the "accidental death of Nabal" which came so opportunely to enable David to marry his rich and clever wife; of the crucifying of the male posterity of Saul, always "by order of the Lord." A hardly repressed insinuation runs through the book of Jeremiah, that the prophet was, within the walls of the city, an agent of the besieging army; and that if the King of Judah had had the manliness to hang the traitor who preached insubordination to the people, Jerusalem would not have been destroyed. A like insinuation, hardly repressed, runs through the Bible, through Homer and through Herodotus, that priests, with their lying oracles, are the real causes of most of the wars and crimes which desolate mankind.

For his conclusion, on such premises as we have seen, that a sect of Jewish ascetics were Christians, Eusebius never was, that I am aware of, found fault with by any Christian author, unless by Christian authors we mean the Protestants of the three last centuries. But Protestants who find fault with all Christians before them for interpreting the Bible allegorically and, as Protestants will say, arbitrarily, must find fault in this respect with Christ and his apostles, for they never interpreted otherwise what was Bible in their time. The liberties they took with texts may have been due, in some cases, to the effect of a failure of memory; but in most cases, I believe, must be attributed to another cause. It was an intentional neglect of accuracy; and, in the broad sense of the word allegory, an allegorical way of intimating that they did not care much how they quoted; for the truth which they spoke was superior to the Bible itself, and needed not the authority of any text. It was in more than one sense that Jesus "spoke to them in parables, and without parables he spoke not a word unto them." And when he sent his apostles to preach, how were they to preach? As Christ had preached, or otherwise?

Shall we say, then, that all that the Gospels relate of Jesus' miracles must be interpreted allegorically? I make no such broad statement; and yet, some transactions might have happened which, in kindness to persons then yet living, it was impossible to relate otherwise than in a form which, to an outsider who lacks the key to the real meaning of the Scriptures, might appear to involve an assertion true or false that a material miracle had taken place. Let us put a case.

Jerusalem, of course, like Rome seven years ago, or Paray-le-Monial to-day, was full of humbugs; lame men, blind men, one-eyed men, lepers, paralytics, begging, with the pharisees and priests half and half in the fraud and the profits, at every street-corner and at every gate of the temple. Now comes Christ, the hater of all humbugs, and is he to be imposed upon by the priestly fraud? When the pharisees challenge him to make a miracle, he has merely to send the first he meets of their blind beggars to wash his eyes at the pool of Siloah, under the threat lest something worse happen to him, and does he not know that the blind will recover his sight? So will the lame and the paralytic walk, and the leper be cleansed. Were they not lepers? were they not paralytics, or lame, or blind? They were, morally; and Christ, in turning impostors into men obliged to earn their bread by honest labor, had truly healed the paralytic, and the leper, and the lame, and the blind. The priests, in order not to plead guilty of imposture, had to own that their enemy had wrought a miracle. With more sincerity the blind man himself might have said: "I know that I was blind and now I see." The impostor had now become a true believer in the power of Christ. But when the anecdote had to be put in writing in the original documents from which our Gospels were made, it was necessary to cast upon its particulars a veil of allegory; not in order to deceive the faithful, nor even the people, who, with infinite mirth, and yet fear to say what they thought, perfectly understood the situation, but in order not to further provoke the infuriated priests to procure the lapidation of their new converted accomplices.

In some of the miracles, indeed, the veil of allegory is so thin that he who cannot see through it appears to me like a man who is looking everywhere after his spectacles, while he has them on his nose. Take the resurrection, for example. Had not Jesus said that, "as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, so shall the son of man be three days and three nights in the belly of the earth"? Now, whoever reads the book of Jonah can see with half an eye that Jonah never was in the belly of the fish except in an allegorical sense. As the transaction was allegorical in the case of Jonah, so did Jesus, by his reference to this fact, intimate that he was to rise in some allegorical sense. That this was exactly what happened, we have the testimony of Saint Peter, who ought to have known, for he was the chief witness. He says in his epistle that Christ was "put to death in the flesh and restored to life in the spirit."

Nothing certainly can be more clear than this, unless it be the minute explanation of how, in particular, this spiritual resurrection took place. Does not Christ, do not his apostles, inform us that his body is his temple, his church? "Pall down this temple and I will rebuild it in three days. But he spoke of the temple of his body," that is of his Church. Did not Christ, in his body which is his Church, rise on the third day?

This resurrection of Christ is a case, not only of miracle performed, but of prophecy fulfilled. In order to understand how all prophecies were fulfilled in Christ, a little common sense is all that is required. Is it not evident, for example, to the simplest observer, that Christ was born of a virgin as foretold? Surely mankind had never borne such a son before. That he was a priest according to the order of Melchizedek, is as evident. Melchizedek, of whom no genealogy is recorded in the Bible, appears in it as a priest, not by priestly descent, but by his own merit. So was Jesus. And was he not also a priest forever? We know at any rate that we are to-day in the 1877th year of his priesthood, and of his power there is yet an increase.

The preacher, though merely a man of average intelligence and education, was right when he comforted his hearers by telling them that the discoveries of scientific men, "either were not true or," more likely, "did not conflict with the revealed word of God as contained in the Bible." These discoveries will have a wholesome effect in making it more and more impossible to interpret the Bible in any other than the rationalistic sense, which is the genuine one. In order to be able to stand the temperature of science, all that the Bible needs is to be made firmer by being dipped in a strong solution of rationalism.

JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, Jan. 1, 1877.

THE SCHOOL VICTORY IN LONDON.

LONDON, Dec. 5, 1876.

The clerical party in the School Board have been defeated, routed, overwhelmed to an extent only to be paralleled by the unpleasant sea-side experiences of Pharaoh and his hosts. The leaders of denominationalism have all been defeated, and this on a fair and square issue proposed by themselves. The non-conformist, secularist, and radical candidates have nearly all been elected. In five cases eminent clergymen or clerical candidates find themselves slinking off at the foot of the polls, headed by mere ribs,—that is, by women, radical women, too, such as the young blonde and blue-eyed Miss Fenwick Miller; Mr. Mill's step-daughter, Miss Helen Taylor, who, in an eloquent speech, drew a picture, worthy of Punch, of the Church throned on its hundred million pounds preaching economy; Mrs. Lurr, who is said to have developed a faculty for canvassing equal to that of the famous Duchess of Devonshire; and Mrs. Westlake, daughter of Mr. Hare, the advocate of Minority Representation, distinguished in London society by her exquisite pre-Raphaelite costumes, famous now for her clever speeches, and for having headed the poll with the largest majority ever given to a woman,—over twenty thousand. In the few cases where clerical candidates have been elected, they have been last on the list. On the Board they can hardly make even a show of resistance to the determination of London that every child shall have a real education, unadulterated by the catechism. The whole importance of the election can hardly be stated for people at a distance. The situation may be paralleled by the invasion of the Age of Steam on highways previously monopolized by stage-coaches and omnibuses. There are people enough now living who remember well the days when the proposals for railway lines were fought furiously in Parliament. From every borough and county rejoicing in stage-coaches and omnibuses members were sent to denounce the horrible innovation. "How would any honorable member like to have one of these noisy engines passing under his parlor window?" "Is it not obvious that the cattle will all be destroyed?" Such were the Parliamentary arguments against steam; but steam came. The omnibus and stage-coach proprietors were very angry; some towns petitioned against railways built to them, successfully and suicidally. In this case the Church has from old been running educational omnibuses lines all over the country,—so long that even those poor vehicles have become too crazy and foul for people to be willing to send their families in them. Along these lines the government has made educational railways: such are the Board Schools. The clergy, having failed to defeat the new scheme in Parliament, have made a violent effort to prejudice the people against the railways; they declared the carriages costly, infectious, and all who travelled by them were likely to be smashed, and, if not, quite certain to be landed in Brimstone Depot. But after all these anathemas the railways began to be the fashion, and were thriving. Whereupon, throughout the country, the clergy organized themselves into a respectable-looking mob for the purpose of throwing the new educational railways off the track with iron bars laid across said tracks. They got Lord Sandon to bring in and the Tories to pass through Parliament a bill making it legal for them to do so if they could, and they set about doing so. Their first effort was in London, for what is done in London is pretty sure to be done in most of the towns and villages outside. Well, the people have arrested the clerical mob; forbidden them to enter even the stations of the railways except as bona fide travellers after purchasing tickets, much less to approach the rails; and so to-day the clergy find themselves not only defeated in their destructive schemes, but proclaimed and branded by an overwhelming majority as enemies of the people. Defeated rebels become traitors. The loss of prestige by the Church is enormous. Eminent clergymen confess that their influence has received a more staggering blow than ever before in its history. The highest names have brought on themselves an odium from which they can never recover.

The Bishop of London called together his "lambs" at St. James Hall, proclaimed war against the so-called "godless schools" of the nation, and hounded the clergy on to the work of demolition. In the district at the West End of London, from which I write, the clerical potentate has for a long time been a certain Canon Cromwell. I believe I wrote in my last letter that this great gun of the clergy, who is a member of the Retiring Board, fired off from his pulpit an anathema at the chief anti-clerical candidate, Mr. Firth, by saying that he should hate to have his seat on the Board occupied by "an infidel and an atheist." Now, it so happened that Mr. Firth, candidate of the radicals, is a good Quaker. Canon Cromwell had seen on the committee of Mr. Firth the names of one or two unorthodox people, and concluded that it was a safe thing to credit their religious opinions to their candidate. But on the next morning the streets of this district were populous with youthful "sandwiches,"—i.e., with little boys bearing behind and before the placards, "Plump for Firth, the Quaker, and rebuke the political priest and slanderer!" Admiral Maxse then addressed a letter to the Canon, asking him if he had called Firth an infidel and atheist. The wily Canon replied that as he had called no names, no gentleman had any right to appropriate the phrase unless the cap fitted him. But, alas! the poor Canon had only got deeper into the meshes. The Admiral pointed out to him that since two of the candidates were already on the School Board and only seeking reelection, and the other two were of his own clerical nomination, the only men who were trying to get his individual seat were a Mr. O'Donnell (Roman Catholic) and Mr. Firth (Quaker); one of these two, therefore, must be the "infidel and atheist"! The poor Canon was struck dumb; he had added falsehood to calumny; his influence had come to a violent end. This is only one instance out of many of the miserable tricks and falsehoods to which the London clergy have descended; they have crawled and crawled only to eat the dust of defeat and humiliation at last. Firth, the Quaker, came in at the very top of the poll, with the astonishing majority of twenty thousand, of which, as one of his committee-men, I am certain more than half were gained for him by the denunciation of Canon Cromwell.—M. D. Conway, in Cincinnati Commercial.

MORALS IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER AS TO THE MEANS USED IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS TO INCUCLCATE MORALITY AND VIRTUE.

TO THE HONORABLE THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY:—I have the honor to present the following report in response to a resolution adopted by your Honorable Body, at the May session, 1876, to wit:—

"Resolved, That the Commissioner of Public Schools be instructed to report to the General Assembly, at the next January session, whether any and what means are used in the public schools 'to implant and cultivate in the minds of all children therein, the principles of morality and virtue,' as provided in Section 6, of Chapter 54 of the General Statutes."

The Chapter of the General Statutes from which the quotation in the above resolution is made is the one which refers mainly to teachers, the conditions of their service and their duties. The whole section referred to reads as follows: "Every teacher shall aim to implant and cultivate in the minds of all children committed to his care the principles of morality and virtue."

From the tenor of this chapter, and especially of this section, coupled with the fact that the subject of morals is nowhere else alluded to in the laws relating to schools, and that such has always been the fact since the first enactment of the law, I have always supposed it to have been the purpose of the General Assembly to place the subject of moral instruction chiefly in the hands of the individual teachers in preference to those of any official or body of officials.

In accordance, therefore, with these facts, we cannot expect to find that well-defined system, or comprehensive plan of instruction in this department, that we should in reference to those subjects which are specifically placed under the control and direction of the school authorities. It needs, however, but a survey of the various reports of the school committees of the several cities and towns in the State for the last few years, and especially for the past year, to show conclusively that the school authorities throughout the State are deeply alive to the importance of the subject, that they are ready and anxious to take as advanced ground in the matter as the sentiment of their respective constituencies will permit, and that now they are exerting a constant influence in all directions, upon both teacher and pupil, in order to bring them up to a higher moral level.

Of the means used to secure moral and virtuous development, we naturally consider the Bible first. As a result of my inquiries on this subject, I have received information from all but two of the thirty-six cities and towns in the State. I find that in ten towns, the reading of the Bible is required by a rule of the committee; that in five it is simply recommended by them; that in six either the reading of a Bible or a prayer, generally the Lord's Prayer, is required; while in one town "some moral or religious exercise" is made obligatory. In the other twelve towns no rule or recommendation upon this specific subject exists.

Passing now from rule to practice, I find from the testimony of the several town superintendents that not only in those towns where there is a specific rule or recommendation, but also in all of the others, it is almost the universal custom to open the daily session with some form of devotional exercise, of which the reading of the Scriptures forms generally an important part, and often the whole. As a result of my own observation, I have noticed that it is now much more common than formerly for the teacher to read the Scripture selection alone, instead of making the exercise a concert or responsive one. This course I believe to be the best calculated to produce the desired impression upon the minds and hearts of the pupils. It will thus be seen that there are but few schools in our State wherein the pupils are not brought into daily contact with the Scriptures, the fountain of all truth, the source of all virtue, the essence of all morality.

A second instrumentality employed in some of our schools is a text-book, entitled Morals and Manners, which seems to me to cover the ground quite fully and to be adapted to the needs of both teacher and pupil. Its introduction is of so recent a date that I cannot now speak with certainty as to its practical value, but I have strong hopes that it will prove eminently serviceable for this work.

Perhaps the largest sphere in which the teacher may fulfil the duties imposed upon him by this law is that connected with the administration of the discipline of his school. As every school is, in a certain sense, a miniature government, and the same principles underlie its existence and control its life as in the case of the nation, it is, of course, both the duty and the privilege of the teacher to call the attention of his pupils to these fundamental ideas, and to impress them upon them as the mainspring of their actions.

And while it is impossible to tabulate facts, or disclose systems which shall reveal the nature and extent of this branch of moral training, I am quite confident that it is a very important factor, and cannot be justly overlooked in any estimate we may make upon the subject.

A reference to the "Rules and Regulations" adopted by the several school committees will, in nearly all cases, I think, reveal the presence of one or more provisions upon the matter of morals and behavior, and referring to both teacher and pupil. In illustration of this influence I have the pleasure of quoting one rule from each of the recent reports for two towns, situated quite remote from each other, and thus fairly representing the sentiment of the State as a whole.

"1. It shall be the duty of the teachers to use their best endeavors to impress upon the minds of the youth committed to their care and instruction the principles of piety, justice, and a sacred regard for truth, love to their country, humanity, and universal benevolence, sobriety, industry, frugality, chastity, moderation, temperance, and those other virtues which are the ornament of human society and the basis upon which a republican constitution is founded; and they shall endeavor to lead their pupils, as their ages and capacities will allow, into a clear understanding of the tendency of those virtues to preserve and perfect a republican constitution, and secure the blessings of liberty, as well as promote their own happiness; and also to point out to them the evil tendency of the opposite vices.

"2. Good morals being of the first importance, and essential to their progress in useful knowledge, pupils are enjoined to avoid all vulgarity and profanity, falsehood and deceit, and every wicked and disgraceful practice. They will be expected to conduct themselves in an orderly manner, both in and out of school; to be diligent and attentive to their studies; to treat each other kindly and politely in all their intercourse; to respect and obey their teachers; and to be punctual in their attendance."

From what precedes it will be seen, I think, that the main force to be relied upon for the promotion of moral culture is not so much a system of ethics or a well-organized plan of instruction, as the life which the teacher lives before the pupils. The most effective means for implanting the seeds of virtue and inculcating a sound morality are often the almost unconscious words and acts of the sincere and faithful teacher, which are, as it were, the spontaneous overflow of his own pure character. Moral instruction affects the heart rather than the head, and the processes by which we reach them are quite different from those by which the other is affected. A man may be convinced of an intellectual truth against his will, but not of a moral truth. A teacher may possibly succeed in teaching a science of which he has but an imperfect knowledge, and in spite of his blunders and mistakes, but a single known deviation from the path of strict integrity will vitiate all his moral instruction. In recognition of this truth and also of the consequent responsibility resting upon them, I am glad to be able to report that the school authorities of various towns are adopting more and more stringent rules in reference to the moral qualifications of their teachers. I hope the standard will be raised still higher, that there shall be sought for not merely the negative grace of a character without reproach, but the positive virtue of an aggressive morality.

In conclusion, I am happy to call the attention of your Honorable Body to a means for the dissemination of the principles of virtue and morality which, both in its present work and in its possibilities, can hardly be over-estimated. I refer to the State Normal School, from which are now coming and are to come the great body of our teachers.

In the establishment of this school, the Board of Education kept closely in view the fact that a true normal school must be one that should secure the right training of the heart as well as of the head. They, therefore, in the selection of instructors, gave special heed to their fitness for their work, and they are confident in the belief that the influences which pervade the State Normal School are wholly of the best character; that a deep sense of personal accountability to God is a prevalent motive in the hearts of the pupils; that their moral natures are in a state of healthful activity, ready to respond to the faintest test; that in all respects the graduates of the school may be safely trusted as the guides of our children, not only into the paths of earthly wisdom, but also into those of a higher and a holier.

Respectfully submitted,
THOMAS B. STOCKWELL,
Commissioner of Public Schools.
—Providence Journal, Jan. 20, 1877.

ACCORDING to the Union, a Schenectady boy pranced up to his mother yesterday, and said: "Ma, hain't I been good since I began going to Sunday-school?" "Yes, my lamb," answered the maternal, fondly. "And you trust me now, don't you, ma?" "Yes, darling," she replied again. "Then," spoke up the little innocent, "what makes you keep the cookies locked up in the pantry the same as ever?" A strange look entered the mother's eye as she endeavored to solve her little son's deepness with the heel end of her slipper.

RECEIVED.

Books (Cloth).

- DATES AND DATA RELATING TO RELIGIOUS ANTHROPOLOGY AND BIBLICAL ARCHEOLOGY. (Primeval Period.) London: Trübner & Co. 1876.
THE THEORY OF SOUND IN ITS RELATION TO MUSIC. By Professor Pietro Blaserna. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876. [International Scientific Series. No. XXII.]
INVENTIONAL GEOMETRY: A Series of Problems, etc. By William George Spencer, with a Prefatory Note by Herbert Spencer. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
ENDEAVORS AFTER THE CHRISTIAN LIFE. Discourses by James Martineau. Boston: American Unitarian Association. [Price $1.00.]
THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION. By M. J. Savage. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. 1876.
LIGHT ON THE CLOUD: or, Hints of Comfort for Hours of Sorrow. By M. J. Savage. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. 1876.
THE POETICAL AND PROSE WRITINGS OF CHARLES SPRAGUE. New Edition. Boston: A. Williams & Co. 1876.
A BOOK OF POEMS. By John W. Chadwick. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1876.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM AND THE NEW FAITH. By Edmund C. Stedman. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1876.
A MAD WORLD AND ITS INHABITANTS. By Julius Chambers. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1877.
JOHNSTON AND THE GOSLINS. By Charles G. Leland. New York: Macmillan & Co. 1876.

Books (Paper).

- A DISCOURSE OF MATTERS PERTAINING TO RELIGION. By Theodore Parker. With an Introduction by Octavius Brooks Frothingham, and a Biographical Sketch by Hannah E. Stevenson. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.
RARE GOOD LUCK. A Fortune in Seven Strokes. By E. E. Frenchon. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
JOAN, A Tale. By Rhoda Broughton. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD. A Romance. By Robert Buchanan. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
CENSUS OF MASSACHUSETTS: 1875. Vol. 1. Population and Social Statistics. Boston: A. J. Wright, State Printer. 1876.

Pamphlets, Tracts, etc.

- FIFTY-FIRST ANNUAL REPORT of the President of Harvard College. 1875-6.
TWELFTH ANNUAL CATALOGUE of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. 1876-7.
CALENDAR of the Tokio Kaisai-Gakko, or Imperial University of Tokio. For the Year 1876.
REPORT of the Seventh Meeting of the National Conference of Unitarian and Other Christian Churches, at Saratoga, Sept. 12-15, 1876.
NATIONAL SECULAR SOCIETY'S ALMANAC for 1877. Edited by O. Bradlaugh and C. Watts.
YEAR BOOK of the Unitarian Congregational Churches for 1877.
FOURTH REPORT of the Newton Home for Orphan and Destitute Girls, 1875-6.
FIRST ANNUAL REPORT of the Medical Libraries of Boston, 1875-6.
SPECIAL REPORT of the Free Public Library of the City of Worcester. 1876.
DEBILITATIONS OF ESTABLISHING PERSONAL INTERCOURSE AND RELATIONS between Librarians and Readers in Popular Libraries. By Samuel E. Green. Worcester. 1876.
A FAVORITE VIEW of the Grand International Exposition of 1876. By M. L. Simolin. Translated by Samuel H. Needles.
PUBLICATIONS of Thomas Scott, Esq., 11, The Terrace, Park Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.—The New Faith. By J. L. S. [Reprinted from THE INDEX.]—The Orthodox Surrender. By M. A. Trin. Coll. Camb.—The Serpent in Mythology. Sect. II.—The Church of England Catechism.—Dread of a Secularist.—Irenaeus.—Genealogies.—Grace.—The Christian Evidences. By T. L. Strange.—The Curse of My Early Life. By an Emancipated Slave.—The Ideal of Religion. By S. Farrington.—Signs of the Times.
WHY DID GLADSTONE FALL FROM POWER? How may he regain it? An Appeal, etc. London.
THE ANTI-TURKISH CAUSADE. By Geo. J. Harney, Boston. 1876.
THE DOCTRINE OF PERCEPTION. By J. M. Smith. Dayton, Ohio. 1876.
LESSONS OF A CENTURY. For the Fourth of July, 1876. By Karl Heinzen. Boston. 1876.
MARKED THE CRIMINAL. A Lecture at Washington, D. C., 1864. By Karl Heinzen.
SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey, London.—Anniversary Sunday Address. Oct. 1.—The Primates on Theism. Oct. 8.—Orthodox Infidelity and its Cause. Oct. 15.—How to Test the Value of a Given Creed. Oct. 22.—The Names Theist, Unitarian, Christian. Oct. 29.—The General Depression. Nov. 5.—Dean Stanley's Lectures on the Jewish Church. Nov. 12.—The Doctrine of Non-Resistance. Nov. 19.—Newness of Life. Nov. 26.
SERMONS by Rev. John W. Chadwick, Brooklyn.—A Rational Church.—Economy and Waste.
CHURCH AND STATE. A Lecture. By Rev. J. S. Shipman. Boston.
THE SECULAR WORK of Jesus Christ, his Apostles, and the Church of England. By the Rev. Stewart D. Headlam. London.

Periodicals.

- JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. W. T. Harris, Editor. St. Louis.
POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. E. L. Youmans, Editor. New York.
UNITARIAN REVIEW. J. H. Morison and H. H. Barber, Editors. Boston.
ATLANTIC MAGAZINE. W. D. Howells, Editor. Boston.
SCHENCK'S MONTHLY. J. G. Holland, Editor. New York.
ST. NICHOLAS. For Girls and Boys. J. G. Holland, Editor. New York.
LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE. C. F. Deems, Editor. New York.
SAVATARIAN. A. N. Bell, Editor. New York.
HERALD OF HEALTH. M. L. Holbrook, Editor. New York.
AMERICAN COLLEGE BROADCASTER. Adrian, Mich.
COAST REVIEW. J. G. Edwards, Editor. San Francisco.
POTTER'S AMERICAN MONTHLY. Philadelphia.

Poetry.

FROM THE ARABIC.

BY REV. G. H. HOUGHTON.

He who died at Azim sends
This to comfort all his friends:

Faithful friends! It lies, I know,
Pale and white and cold as snow,
And ye say, "Abdullah's dead!"
Weeping at the feet and head.
I can see your falling tears;
I can hear your sighs and prayers;
Yet I smile and whisper this,
"I am not the thing you kiss.
Cease your tears, and let it lie,
It was mine, it is not I."

Sweet friends! what the women lave
For the last sleep of the grave,
Is a hut which I am quitting,
Is a garment no more fitting,
Is a cage, from which, at last,
Like a bird, my soul hath passed.
Love the inmate, not the room;
The wearer, not the garb; the plume
Of the eagle, not the bars
That kept him from those splendid stars.

Loving friends! be wise, and dry
Straightway every weeping eye.
What ye lift upon the bier
Is not worth a single tear.
'Tis an empty sea-shell, one
Out of which the pearl is gone;
The shell is broken, it lies there;
The pearl, the all, the soul, is here.
'Tis an earthen jar, whose lid
Allah sealed, the while it hid
That treasure of his treasury,
A mind that loved him: let it lie.
Let the shards be earth once more,
Since the gold is in his store.

Allah glorious! Allah good!
Now Thy world is understood;
Now the long, long wonder ends;
Yet ye weep, my foolish friends,
While the man whom ye call dead,
In unspoken bliss, instead,
Lives and loves you; lo! 'tis true,
For the light that shines for you.
But in the light ye cannot see
Of undisturbed felicity—
In a perfect Paradise,
And a life that never dies.

Farewell, friends! but not farewell;
Where I am, ye too shall dwell.
I am gone before your face,
A moment's worth, a little space.
When ye come where I have stepped,
Ye will wonder why ye wept.
Ye will know, by true love taught,
That here is all, and there is naught.
Weep awhile, if ye are fain;
Sunshine still must follow rain;
Only not at death, for death,
Now we know, is that first breath
Which our souls draw when we enter
Life, which is of all life centre.

Be ye certain, all seems love,
Viewed from Allah's throne above.
Be ye stout of heart, and come
Bravely onward to your home.
La-hi Allah—Allah is,
O Love divine, O Love alway.

He who died at Azim gave
This to those who made his grave.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 27.

Daniel Crowley, $3.25; Nath'l Little, $10; Dr. A. A. Bell, $5; H. B. McNair, $3.20; D. S. Lowe, $9.65; F. L. Hoerner, $3.20; Hon. Joshua Hill, $6.40; Rev. Geo. Batchelor, $3.20; Mrs. L. Huller, $3.50; G. B. Stebbins, 10 cents; A. A. Knight, $3; H. Wheeler, $3; H. S. Bouderson, $3.20; Frank J. Mead, 25 cents; Harvey W. Smith, $4.15; M. R. Sanborn, $10; T. B. Skinner, 30 cents; A. W. Eschenberg, 10 cents; Isaiah West, $3.50; Wm. Green, $5; Michael Seale, $3.20; Mrs. M. L. Singleton, $4.24; J. L. Outley, $3.20; L. O. Bass, $3.20; Prof. W. F. Allen, $3.20; David Wright, $6.25; O. E. Crosby, $1.50; T. J. Atwood, $3.20; Mrs. Dogget, 50 cents; B. P. Bippus, 10 cents; Freeman Hinkley, 20 cents; Chas. W. Flint, 80 cents; F. H. Gurnea, $3.20; F. C. Randolph, $3.20; A. G. Hill, $12; H. W. Beach, $3.15; Marshall Pierce, $3.20; M. L. Hawley, $3.20; Wm. H. Wood, $3.20; Alex. Cochran, $3.20; L. Spaulding, $3.20; Isaac May, $3; J. Warrington, Jr., $10; Luther Woods, $3; R. F. Thompson, $3.25; Cash, 32 cents; Dr. T. H. Everts, $3.20; Mrs. Allen C. Spooner, $3.20; New England News Co., $2.80; E. H. Hall, $3; Nonotuck Silk Co., $19.50; Dr. H. E. Oliver, $4.60; Oliver A. Bailey, $6.50; Geo. Draper, $3.20; S. R. Urbino, $1.75; Hugo Anderson, $1; J. G. Dodge, $3.40; R. Humphrey, $3.20; S. S. Wemott, $12.20; H. Brohl, $6.40; J. W. Castle, 10 cents; Prof. A. Shuler, $3; J. H. Lorimer, $3.20; Mrs. B. G. Sweet, 50 cents; E. W. Keeler, $3.20; American News Co., $22.50; N. Sullivan, $5; David Giddings, $3.20; Chas. P. Tenney, $3.50; Chas. M. Ouyler, $6.40; A. H. Roffe, $7.60.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the event.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 1, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 38 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. Lytle used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle indorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix, Boston: Published by the National Liberal League. 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. Abbot on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. Kilgore on "Democracy"; by James Parton on "Cathedrals and Beer; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. Underwood on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. Paige on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. Y. Kilgore on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. Mills on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MORAL EDUCATION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

That education should be integral and not partial,—that it should include a wise and assiduous culture of the moral element in our complex human nature,—is a truth of vast moment, appreciated by none more profoundly than by those who are most strenuous in pleading for strictly secular public schools. It suits the convenience of those who argue for Christian education even at the expense of non-Christian tax-payers to assume (and they do assume it too often, at the expense of their own intelligence or sincerity as the case may be) that the advocates of secular public schools deny the importance of moral education, or even intend covertly to dispense with it in the public schools altogether. Against this utterly false assumption, which we see made again and again in Orthodox publications, it is quite useless to protest, so far as they are concerned; they connect morality with Christianity as its only possible source, interpret all assertions by non-Christians of the supreme necessity of the former as a mere covered assault upon the latter, and broadly intimate that, if non-Christians had their way, the public schools would be given up to intellectual culture exclusively, to the total neglect of moral training. It is useless, we say, to seek to enlighten them on this subject. They do not wish to be enlightened; they find it too convenient to array the public's concern for the moral interests of society against a theory of State education which really finds its strongest arguments in these very interests; they sedulously persist in misrepresenting the friends of secular schools as disguised enemies of public morality. Some of these Orthodox publications are doubtless sincere in this misrepresentation, and are guilty of it only through ignorance; others, as we see with an astonishment which deepens into indignation, persist in it in defiance of every conceivable proof of its untruth. But, whatever their motives for this misrepresentation may be, it is useless to expect that Orthodox publications will, except in very rare instances (all the more beautiful because of their rarity), learn to do justice to the veritable enthusiasm for moral ideas which lies at the bottom of the secular theory.

Nevertheless, so far as the great majority of the public are concerned, it is not useless to keep prominently in the foreground of the argument for secular public schools the fact that this argument proceeds steadily on the assumption of the unspeakable importance of moral education. Those who demand the prohibition of religious worship in the public schools will insist, if they know their own case, that this demand rests primarily on moral grounds; that justice, the very first element of morality, can be satisfied with nothing but such a prohibition; that those schools which are the most thoroughly grounded on the principles of justice will necessarily be the best schools for all the virtues; that children can easily comprehend the true reasons for permitting only secular education at the public expense, and will receive a most impressive lesson in morality by beholding the grand spectacle of the State scrupulously respecting the equal rights of all its citizens; that the spectacle of public in-equity,—that is, public iniquity,—is one of the most demoralizing influences that can be brought to bear on young minds. The very fact, therefore, that the State reverences the equal rights of all its citizens, and for this reason refuses to permit any religious exercises in its schools, must render the secular school system in itself a most important factor in securing the moral education of the children.

But well conducted public schools of the secular kind, by the mere fact of their being well conducted, exert an enormous power in the direction of moral education. In the first place, the teachers will constantly set before their pupils a personal example of profound reverence for morality; for no school can be well conducted in which the teachers are not constantly governed by impartiality, justice, truthfulness, kindness, duty in every aspect, in dealing with the young minds under their charge. The whole atmosphere will be saturated with regard for the right, and the children who breathe this atmosphere will drink in the spirit of rectitude at every breath. Not a word of formal instruction in morals may be given; not a moment may be set apart for it in the school curriculum; but, from the time the pupil enters the school-room until the time when he leaves it, his moral education will be proceeding pari passu with his intellectual progress. He will be all the while learning from his teachers living lessons in all the virtues which are involved in healthy, normal human intercourse; right sentiments, purposes, and thoughts will be constantly fostered and developed; contrary sentiments, purposes, and thoughts will be as constantly kept down. In truth, the school-room is a school of life just as truly as the great world outside,—with this difference, that, while the great world outside is not regulated by man with special reference to the moral education of those who live and move in it, the little school world, if indeed well conducted, is regulated all the time with a very special reference to it. The influence of the teacher in maturing the seeds of the virtues in his pupils is beyond all calculation; and it is brought to bear with a thousand-fold greater power in his habitual actions and conduct than it can be in any formal words. In this way every well conducted school is necessarily a school for moral education, even if no special provision is made for this at all. By being obliged to adapt himself to just and equal rules or laws, the child is learning the great lesson of life in advance, and acquiring that power of self-command which is the essence of all virtue.

Just as truly is the child educated morally by being thrown into the society of other children, and obliged to treat them as all equals with himself. The too frequent partialities of home vanish here. The coward, the liar, the thief, the tyrant, the bully, the hypocrite, the cruel or unkind or selfish or lazy or conceited,—all are rated quickly at their true value by the swift childlike judgment, and the democratic equality of the school-room and the school-yard exerts a constant influence in forcing equal duties and rights upon the child's mind. Whoever comprehends the great principle of natural or scientific ethics, that all rights and duties are social in their nature, will perceive at once that the most ordinary intercourse of the children with each other must be continually impressing on their consciousness the great moral lessons which constitute moral education. This is the only way in which any one can get morally educated—the way of practical experience and observation; all else is mere wind—mere "sound and fury, signifying nothing." Experience is the great moral educator of the race, and the child goes up a grade when he passes from the home to the school-room. There is no dodging the tasks in practical ethics there imposed; he may shirk the geography or algebra lesson, but the lesson in self-knowledge and self-control is squeezed into him by the hydraulic ram of social pressure.

To speak, therefore, of secular public schools as being wholly given up to "intellectual culture" is to deny or ignore the most patent facts. Every well managed school is necessarily a school of training in fundamental morality, even if there is no direct moral instruction of any kind. Compared with the influences of the school itself on the child's character, exerted through his teachers, his school-mates, his own position as a member of a regularly organized community of larger relationships than those of his home, all the influences of formal tuition in morals sink into insignificance. Put first that which is most important—the ripening influence of actual, constant, inevitable contact with other human beings, which perforce calls out and exercises the moral faculties in a thousand salutary ways.

In the light of this truth, it is really melancholy, in the report of Commissioner Stockwell, of Rhode Island, on "Morals in the Public Schools," published on a previous page of this issue, to read such extravagantly superstitious statements as these: "Of the means used to secure moral and virtuous development, we naturally consider the Bible first. . . . It will thus be seen that there are but few schools in our State wherein the pupils are not brought into daily contact with the Scriptures, the fountain of all truth, the source of all virtue, the essence of all morality." But even Commissioner Stockwell recognizes to some extent the general value of school discipline and administration as a factor in the moral education of the children, when he adds: "As every school is, in a certain sense, a miniature government, and the same principles underlie its existence and control its life as in the case of the nation, it is, of course, both the duty and privilege of the teacher to call the attention of his pupils to these fundamental ideas, and to impress them upon them as the main spring of their actions. And while it is impossible to tabulate facts or disclose systems which shall reveal the nature and extent of this branch of moral training, I am quite confident that it is a very important factor, and cannot be justly overlooked in any estimate we may make upon the subject." Were it not for the distorting and perturbing influence of his over-estimate of the influence of the Bible in promoting moral education, these latter considerations would not have been degraded by the Commissioner to an inferior rank.

They should have been placed first; and they show how unreasonable it is to charge upon the friends of secular public schools any disregard of the importance of moral education in the general school system.

But we go further than this. Not only would we insist on the vast consequences of the indirect moral influences exerted over the scholars by a wisely and faithfully conducted school administration, but we also recognize and insist upon the necessity of direct moral instruction. Believing as we do that morality is grounded, not at all upon the Bible, but wholly upon the nature of things, and especially upon the nature of human society as such, we hold that a text-book of morality can be and ought to be prepared, for use in the public schools, which shall treat morality like any other branch of natural knowledge, unfold its general principles in the form of clear exposition, and impress them on the pupils by lucid illustration and by immediate application to the exigencies of school life. So taught, ethics can be made of immense practical utility in training the young for the faithful discharge of their future duties as citizens of the Republic. No words can express the value of such direct tuition in moral truth; for it will reduce, or rather exalt, morality to the rank of a natural science, instead of making it a mere appendage to a system of theological falsities. Christianity disparages "mere morality," and ranks it as of only secondary importance, as compared with the supreme necessity of "faith in Christ." Here it is that the use of the Bible in the public schools stands directly in the way of the moral interests of society. So long as people look upon the Bible as "the fountain of all truth, the source of all virtue, the essence of all morality," just so long will they rely upon the perfunctory reading of a few verses daily as a sufficient instruction of the scholars in the elements of morality; and the children will continue to be sent forth into the struggles and temptations of real life without any adequate grounding in MORAL IDEAS. This is fatal folly. Practical morality is the art of living nobly; and, like every other art, it depends upon a corresponding science—the science of ethics. It is only by a thorough knowledge of this science, by a clear and adequate comprehension of the general principles which constitute it, that enlightened solutions can be attained of perplexing social and moral questions. The absolute equality of natural rights, the inviolability of contracts, the binding force of promises, and many other vitally important matters on which the Bible is wholly or partially silent, ought to be made perfectly clear to the child's intellect, or we cannot expect them to be regarded sacredly in the man's conduct. Hence the farce of Bible-reading is no substitute for scientific moral instruction; yet it is accepted as a substitute for it, and tends to postpone indefinitely the day when our public schools shall become in fact the most powerfully radiating centres of public morality. The Bible in the schools not only constitutes a great public violation of morality, but it also retards and hinders the moral progress of the community in a thousand ways besides. The liberals of the Republic have no duty more sacred than that of combining their efforts for the establishment of an absolutely secular school system; and this, not merely for the sake of rectifying a great public wrong and abolishing a great statutory injustice to themselves, but still more for the sake of clearing the way for the institution of such methods as shall really secure the moral education of the people.

PRESIDENT WALKER'S SERMONS.

Among the few books that came with me to this literary desert from which I now write, was the new volume of sermons saved from the manuscripts of Dr. James Walker, late President of Harvard College, and recently published in Boston by Roberts Brothers. Sermons are not usually very attractive reading, either for entertainment or to furnish food for thought; and this volume, probably, would not have added its weight to my trunk, had I not been a hearer of Dr. Walker's sermons, for several years, in the college chapel at Cambridge, and known by personal experience what a powerful preacher he was. Hearing him at a time when I would go farther for a sermon than I would to-day (and yet I take still a kind of brotherly interest even in a poor sermon), it is not too much to say that his discourses not only offered me food for thought, but were in the best sense an entertainment, to which I looked forward from week to week with delight. They were a help, mentally and spiritually, for which I shall never cease to feel grateful. And how many hundreds of the graduates of Harvard, now verging upon middle life and even towards old age, will bear the same testimony, and welcome for the same reason this book!

Opening the book for the first time, I turned the leaves to see if it contained any discourses I remembered to have heard, and was at once gratified at finding that some of the texts and subjects greeted me as old friends, though I had never met them but once before. The titles of those I especially remember hearing are "White Lies," "Public Opinion," "On the Sin of being Led Astray," "The Daily Cross," "Providence," "The Dangers of College Life," and "The Young Man's Dream of Life." And these I have naturally hastened to read first; and as evidence that the sermons were preached and not merely read, and that Dr. Walker had the orator's as well as writer's power, I may say that these discourses seem to me the best parts of the volume. I read them now with the added power which the preacher's voice and manner gave to the sentiments at the time of delivery. Other readers, for a similar reason, will probably think others of the collection best. It is from twenty to twenty-seven years since I heard any of these sermons, and my memory is not a tenacious one. Yet as I read them to-day, some of the sentences seem as familiar as if I had heard them within the last month. The preacher stands before me again, just as he looked when he uttered these sentences in the little narrow pulpit of the old chapel in University Hall, and I hear once more the solemn, awe-inspiring tones of his voice, and see the peculiarly impressive gesture and aspect of countenance that were wont to mark some climax in his argument. Let me give as an instance a passage from the sermon on "The Daily Cross." The subject is treated in that discriminating manner which was one of Dr. Walker's special merits as a preacher. The burden of the discourse throughout is to show what the doctrine of "self-denial," or of "the cross," demands of us in this modern time, and two or three times the question is repeated, "What shall we crucify?" Thus by one discrimination after another he narrows the matter to the final point, when he says, "What adds to the difficulty of self-denial at the present day is that it requires not only self-control, but self-knowledge. Every man is called upon in the text to take up his cross daily; but what to crucify? I answer, His bosom sin." Who that heard this discourse cannot recall the tones and look with which this passage was uttered, and the moment of awful silence which followed it, when the speaker stood as if transfixed, and the hearers' hearts, taken as it were unawares by this sudden turn, were penetrated with the arrow of self-revelation?

But these sermons are not only valuable to those who heard them. They have a value in themselves, such as is possessed by few volumes of sermons that are published in our time. They deserve especially to be read by preachers and those studying to be preachers. They ought to become text-books in theological schools for the simplicity of their style, the severity of their logic, and the cautious, wise discrimination of their method; not, however, to be imitated,—for it would be particularly unsafe for any preacher to attempt to copy Dr. Walker's manner of writing who did not have something of Dr. Walker's cast of mind, and was not capable of his remarkably dignified and impressive delivery. Sermons so replete with nicely-balanced thought and so severely bare of illustration would fall very lifeless from the pulpit unless a corresponding delivery should go with them. Dr. Walker had a style of speaking that was the exact expression of his style of thought, and this made him the great preacher he was. But, though the style of these sermons cannot be safely copied, it can be advantageously studied. It shows that a sermon need not abound in extravagance of statement, nor deal with sensational trickeries, nor be burdened with illustration, to make a great preacher. Weight of thought being given, and an adequate weight of manner to drive the thought home to the hearer's heart, and a preacher's effectiveness is assured; and such a preacher's power will endure long after the tinsel that makes so many modern sermons glitter, and dazzles the eyes of admiring congregations, has turned to its constituent dust,—which at last only blinds the eyes and chokes the mind without feeling.

Of course these sermons of Dr. Walker are not written from the stand-point of free religion. They accept Christianity as a supernaturally authenticated revelation. But they are written from the stand-point of a very liberal interpretation of Christianity, and deal more with broad principles of religion and morality than with theological dogmas. Dr. Walker stood on the spiritualistic, transcendental side of Unitarianism, and these sermons, with all the severity of their logical method, will show why. The title of the volume, Reason, Faith, and Duty, well indicates the line of subjects of which the several discourses treat. It should be added, however, that the selection was not made by Dr. Walker himself, and, as a prefatory note intimates, he is not to be held responsible for the publication. He burned most of his sermons himself, only intrusting a few before his death to the hands of a friend. During his lifetime he was a sparse and reluctant publisher of his productions; too much so for one who thought so wisely. Yet his self-restraint in this respect might profitably be copied by some more fluent preachers to-day.

The engraved likeness that adds value to the book gives Dr. Walker's nobly shaped head and strong profile. It is cut, however, to his severest expression, and softens not into the benignant smile, often with a touch of humor in it, by which some of us like best to remember him.

W. J. P.

THE ART MUSEUM TO BE OPENED ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS.

It is with the greatest pleasure that we learn that the Directors of the Boston Art Museum have unanimously voted to open their beautiful rooms free to the public on Sunday afternoons, from March 1 to November 1, from 1 to 5 o'clock, P.M.

This generous action will open a rich opportunity for enjoyment and instruction to those to whom the weekly holiday gives the only opportunity for recreation and mental enjoyment. We think the Directors have done all that we could possibly ask of them, and that this division of the Sunday time is one which happily unites what is good in the old method of keeping the day with a recognition of the more liberal demands of our time. The morning hours are well spent, either in the church service, if that ministers to us, or, if not, in rest for the body or mind at home; but the whole day becomes wearisome without some refreshing change; and what could be better to brighten the week that is begun than the ministrations of Art and Beauty? The collections of the Art Museum are not yet very large, but they are admirably arranged and full of interest. We are glad that early American art is so well represented in this, the first permanent public Art Museum of our city. The Stuarts, Copleys, and Allstons are not works to be ashamed of, and we think they will awaken a juster respect than is common for our early efforts in art, and give us hope for the future. The plaster casts from the antique are very interesting, and to those unfamiliar with them are enough to furnish many hours of enjoyment and study. The moderate price of these valuable reproductions of great works will make it easy for the Directors to add to their number and so give fresh interest to the collection.

The rooms devoted to ancient objects of curiosity or beauty will probably be found very attractive to those unaccustomed to the study of art, as well as to the connoisseur. The mummy cases, the old tapestry, the carved wood-work, and the rich metal and pottery will all help to interest the public, and the constant habit of admiring well-designed and well-executed work will help to raise the standard of taste.

The choice collection of engravings placed in frames and changed from week to week will always offer some new attraction to the visitor.

We have known many people who have abundant means who conscientiously refrain from attending such places on the free days, as if it were usurping the places which others should fill. We think this is a mistaken idea. It is a good thing for all to mingle together in the enjoyment thus offered, and the true amateur of art, who has had advantages of study and wide observation, will often find a pleasant opportunity to say a word of explanation or appreciation which will be a great help to those less favored by circumstances. Within a week we have heard warm gratitude expressed for such chance words in this very building. Even the poorer classes, on a Sunday when relief from pressing cares and the sense of cleanliness and neat dress gives a feeling of self-respect and enjoyment, love to meet and look upon others from different circles in life. It is an innocent social pleasure which makes part of the pleasant French life which is so attractive.

We hope many things from this influence; we hope that the greatest courtesy and good manners will prevail in this temple of beauty. The cigar must be left outside. We trust none will dare profane these courts by any uncleanness. They should be as holy as a church, and we hope that the quiet and order and mutual kindness will be as conspicuous as in the National Exhibition at Philadelphia. Yet we are not so extravagantly sanguine as to suppose this opening of a museum is to change the moral aspect of the city at once. It is only a step in the right direction, but it is a very important one; it is a recognition of the higher needs and higher possibilities of the people; and we believe that, if the experiment prove successful, many a man and woman twenty years hence will look back to the Sunday afternoons at the Art Museum as among the influences that have moulded their lives for good.

E. D. C.

Communications.

SABBATH-DAY MUSINGS.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Heterodox as I am in belief, I suppose I may yet have my Sabbath-day musings as well as the most Orthodox Christian. And the quiet which, thanks to Christianity, characterizes this day of rest, I find eminently conducive to thoughtful reverie, and especially in church, from which I have just returned, where, not being deeply interested by the sermon, my musings took shape and form.

We who were once Sabbath worshippers, but who have grown away bit by bit from our early awe of that mysterious day—the "Lord's day" par excellence, on which we were forbidden to do our own work, to think our own thoughts, to follow in any wise our own inclinations,—can hardly realize now the hideously warped and distorted ideas of morality which that Sabbath worship gave birth to. Once in a while we are brought face to face with it in others who are yet under its hateful spell, and we are shocked and startled at its developments. Only a few days ago in conversing with a friend of mine, who was brought up (as I was) in the strictest belief in the obligation and necessity of obedience to the fourth commandment, and who has since steadily walked in the well-worn ruts of her childhood's faith with scarcely an idea that there is any other road to travel,—I had an experience of this kind.

"How do you like E.?" I asked in regard to a new acquaintance.

"She seems to me to be a very fine woman; kind-hearted, good, and amiable."

"Yes, she is very kind-hearted, and she thinks she is very good; at least she is a professing Christian; but"—with a look of painful doubt—"she does very strange things for a good woman to do. She reads novels on Sunday; and last Sunday I caught her changing some of the trimming on her hat before going to church, and I have even heard her singing songs on the Sabbath,—things I wouldn't dare to do, and I don't call myself good by any means."

I caught my breath a little as I looked in my friend's honest face, innocent of any intention of misstatement or harsh speaking, and made no reply as my thoughts flew backward: and I saw my former mental characteristics photographed in her. Once, through rigid Sabbath worship, I, too, held these distorted views of morality, and was as much shocked by any such harmless desecration of Sunday as by any real wrong-doing or positive crime. And then I saw plainly the need of breaking up the religious character of the Sabbath, and thoroughly secularizing it to man's needs and necessities. Too long has humanity's most sacred day of rest been sacrificed to a superstition as degrading as any fetich worship. It is time we reclaimed it for our own uses. Christ's clear vision discerned this truth long ago, when he declared that "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath"; and it is truly time that the sons of men proved themselves "lords also of the Sabbath."

Among my childish recollections there looms up in vivid remembrance a thick, heavily-bound volume of tracts on Sabbath-breaking. I read it with avidity because it consisted of "stories" which I was allowed to read on Sunday; though the stories were full of warnings to Sabbath-breakers,—stories of capsize boats, of steamboat explosions, of runaway horses and broken necks, of youthful daring and speedy judgment thereon by a choleric, arbitrary, and revengeful Deity. It was a sensational, horrible, but very pious book, and I doubt whether the annals of any heathen religions contain anything equal to it in brutality or blasphemous representation of Deity. Besides this, in those days the Sunday-school books and papers were profusely garnished with anecdotes and illustrations of the same nature. Thanks to this careful training, I was older than I should like to confess before I ever dreamed that any real downright violation of the Puritanic idea of the Sabbath was not followed by swift, sure, and overwhelming vengeance from "an insulted Deity."

I have outgrown my belief in the sanctity of the Sabbath. I think it full time that we, as a people, had all outgrown our belief in it as being peculiarly God's most holy day; but I fear that will never be until we have grown into such large intellectual proportion that we shall feel every day to be a holy day, a day sanctified unto all good words and work.

But in outgrowing my belief in its peculiar sacredness, I have not and cannot outgrow the old-time habit of outward reverence for it, nor do I think any one so educated can completely cast off the shackles with which it binds them. Although, had I a little child, I would not refuse it its playthings on the Sabbath, would not check its song, or hush its frolicsome laugh, would not hinder it from pursuing any of its usual avocations or play or labor, for I do not believe that any of these things are wrong; yet for myself, despite this disbelief, I could not comfortably do any of these things. Early education, and the inherited habit of ancestral superstition is upon me, and, except it be really necessary to break through this habit, no Puritanic Sabbatarian or Centennial Commissioner is more strict in these superstitious outward observances than I am. I could not with any comfort to myself hum a gay song, or engage in any game, or take up my sewing, or join in a loudly merry company on the Sabbath, and it always gives me a little shock of discomfort to see others do so. So it is not, as so many Christians would be inclined to think, the longing to do these things that is at the foundation of my disbelief in the wrongfulness of them.

But my habit of Sabbath-keeping teaches me one lesson: that the rational observance of Sunday has got to be a gradual evolution not a sudden wrenching away from old-time customs and traditions, and how to do this the most effectually should be the study of those who are desirous of replacing with methods of rational wisdom the habits of irrational reverence. Gradually to crowd out of place superstitious customs by introducing in their stead instructive ways and useful ceremonies, should be our aim; that is, to replace as soon as we destroy. Though the day may possibly be still far off when any visible progress in this direction can be shown, let us not therefore grow discouraged nor weary in well-doing for the ultimate good of humanity any more than our fathers grew weary in their attempts to glorify God. Let the enthusiasm of humanity burn clear and bright in the future, as the fiery zeal for religion has done in the past.

Among the many mistakes which we, as beginners in reform, are liable to, let us try not to be confounded any real good with any past evil with which it may have been associated. Let us not in that future Sabbath, when our only churches will be schools of science and temples of moral and æsthetic culture, banish from them the ennobling and exalting side of cultured music, beautiful paintings, and artistic architecture. Let all the arts which now render the churches attractive on the Sabbath, even to unbelievers in their faiths, still remain to soften, elevate, and educate the tender feelings of a struggling and imperfect humanity.

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. STEBBINS.

BEAVER, Pa., Jan. 13, 1877.

My dear Sir,—The number of THE INDEX for January 11 contains a letter on the subject of Spiritualism from your pen. I have frequently experienced a desire to express my experience on this subject, and hasten now, with Mr. Abbot's permission, to do so in a communication addressed to you.

Let me premise, then, that I am neither an Orthodox believer in those so-called spiritualistic truths, nor so prejudiced as to call the whole thing "humbug." But before I accept anything as a "fact," a "truth," I must be convinced, and I cannot permit even the most plausible statements of others to influence me in this respect. A number of my intimate friends claim that they possess proofs palpable of immortality, and feel very anxious to convert me. Whenever time and opportunity offered themselves, I accepted their kind invitations and concluded to investigate these "proofs palpable." I am sorry, not on my own, but rather on my friends' account to be compelled to state that I never witnessed any demonstrations which would be calculated to interest me, or even to encourage me to continue my investigations. Yet I resolved to be patient. I thought I could better prepare myself for the coming revelations by studying some works of eminent authors, and I began to read the books of the great seers,—Andrew Jackson Davis, Robert Dale Owen, J. M. Peebles, Mrs. Emma Hardinge Britten, Professor Denton, Hudson Tuttle, and other great lights of the new dispensation. In the meantime, I thought that such pamphlets as Rules to be Observed for the Spiritual Circle, by Emma Hardinge Britten, and similar plain guides to spirit intercourse, would materially assist and enlighten me. And while I am forced to admit here that a great deal of this spiritualistic "literature" was mere trash, not worth the paper it was printed on nor the time necessary to read it, I still persevered to please my aforesaid friends who took such a deep interest in my case. And here I should like to record that, the more I saw of the "true inwardness" of this spiritualistic "literature," the more I became acquainted with the ways and means adopted by leading media and recognized organs to keep the faithful from backslidings, the more disgusted and sickened I became. When, finally, to cap the climax, I noticed that here and there media were exposed as frauds and impostors, and I observed how tenaciously the poor victims of such impostures and dapes of such delusions still continued to cling to the "glorious truths," I confess my interest began to flag considerably. Even you, my dear Mr. Stebbins, show by your letter that it would be extraordinary if the conviction of the "well-known medium, Slade," in London, should suffice to brand him as an impostor. I have witnessed similar strange phenomena after the exposure of the Davenport humbug, the Katie King farce, and other sickening revelations. The Banner of Light continues to advertise the portrait of Katie King, alias Annie Morgan, "taken in London by the magnesium light, and representing the full form of the materialized spirit," for only fifty cents.

Now will you be kind enough to enlighten an earnest truth-seeker? Will you be kind enough to assist those who would gladly accept these "proofs palpable" if they only could be proven? Professor Tyndall has investigated these "strange phenomena" and remains a sceptic to this very day! We all admit that the "science of psychology" scarcely can be termed a "science" yet; we are aware that we are surrounded by mysteries, and nobody would more cheerfully acknowledge the "grand facts" of Spiritualism, provided they were demonstrated facts, than the true scientist, the honest truth-seeker. But the sweeping assertion in your letter, "The facts of spirit intercourse confirm," etc., won't do, so long as these "strange phenomena" do not demonstrate the "facts of spirit intercourse" at all; neither can your dictum that "the thought and ideal of a personal immortality is as old as humanity and as wide as the world" influence the calm investigator. You say: "It is a normal want of the soul, a truth within us, with its fit and confirming outward evidence, ancient and modern, of spirit manifestation and communion." By such "inanities" you only beg the question, but never convince an honest sceptic.

But perhaps you are able to show us the way! We trust, however, that you will not refer us again to this writer and that writer, to this elaborate treatise and that erudite paper, written by some professional ghost-seer. We have read them all ad nauseam; from the great Andrew Jackson Davis down to the crazy author of the New Mola, the discoverer of hidden "anæsthetic secrets," P. B. Randolph, whose worse than nonsensical writings are advertised in the Catalogue of Spiritual and Reform Publications issued by Messrs. Colby & Rich, the publishers of the Banner of Light. We have also carefully read Professors William Crookes' and Alfred R. Wallace's papers; these are readable, but fail to solve the great problem.

As this letter is already too long I must postpone the discussion of the meaning of the Buddhistic "Nirvana" for some other occasion. I must state, nevertheless, that Mr. Chas. D. B. Mills' admirable sketch of Buddha and Buddhism has charmed me, and I am of the opinion that he is correct in his interpretation. Chapter V., "The Doctrine," is one of the profoundest essays on this subject I have ever read; the great German philosopher, Schopenhauer, would have embraced the author and thanked him for his labor; but perhaps his disembodied spirit will send Mr. Mills a message from "Summerland" through the agency of some reliable medium!

Sincerely yours, HUGO ANDRESEN.

"UNIVERSOLOGY."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—As a student of the Science of Universology, I take this opportunity of expressing to you the great pleasure I am experiencing in reading the expositions, which, from the pen of its discoverer, are, from time to time, appearing in your columns. Permit me to say that, notwithstanding the gravity of the various subjects, to a discussion of which your paper has always devoted itself, it has never opened its doors to a reception of any matter of vaster import than the science, to the unfolding of which Stephen Pearl Andrews has devoted so many years of his life. It is to be hoped that all your readers will study well his articles, for the principles therein enunciated from the only true basis upon which a properly ordered and constituted human society can be organized. The social sciences question is one which has engaged the minds of some of the greatest thinkers in all ages of the world. Herbert Spencer is one of the latest apostles of the science, and so far as he goes one may follow him without hesitation. But no reader of Spencer can help being impressed with the conviction that he leaves the matter at the very point at which it could begin to be of practical value. However lucid may be regarded his views upon the subject, we can find nothing but reasons for that which is. Unsatisfactory as may be to him the condition of things as he finds them, he does not give the slightest idea of what change or improvement can be effected, or of the method by which any advancement can be made. Indeed he does not even hint at any cure for the ills that be, and whatever may be found in his future works upon the subject, he certainly, by what are already published, justifies us in believing that this branch of the subject has not occupied his thoughts. Auguste Comte goes farther than Spencer, but his notions of what ought to be are entirely deductions from what has been; he would build up the future upon the history of the past. Andrews is the first to tell us of the inherent laws existing in ALL domains of being; that it is not law-makers who are wanted, but men who will bend their minds to the discovery of laws which exist, and have existed from eternity.

The exact scientists pursue their investigations in the true scientific method. They seek for inherent, unchangeable laws, and, having found them, base upon them facts, not because such have been facts in the past, and will therefore probably continue to be so in the future, but because from the very nature of things it is impossible that anything else should be fact. What is here done in a few branches of science, universoology does for integral science; that is, the science of the whole universe, the combination or integration of all the different branches, which now go under the name of various sciences. This invariability and inherency of law in some departments has long been a fact in my mind, and I have on more than one occasion, in lectures upon grammar and upon law, given expression to the idea. It was, therefore, with great pleasure that I found that Andrews had taken the matter in hand many years ago, and had established, as I think he has done, not only the invariability and inherency, but the universality of law. I have entered with considerable zest into a study of his laborious work, and I feel convinced that it is destined to work, before very long, a revolution in our accepted modes of scientific inquiry, and to prove one of the greatest blessings to the human race. Grasping the analogies which exist in all domains of being, he seeks to evolve the inherent laws of all. And he goes further than this; he proceeds to show how these laws may be utilized, and, by their application, made to promote the happiness of the human race. The greatest value, indeed, of universology lies in the fact that it acknowledges the comparative insignificance of mere theory, and appreciates the doctrine that all acquisitions of knowledge should be made conducive to the amelioration of the condition of suffering humanity. I close with the expression of a hope that these letters will not be overlooked, nor superficially perused, by any of your readers, but that the importance of the subject will by them be appreciated, and that you will meet with a just return for the valuable service you have rendered by their insertion.

JOHN STORER COBB.

NEW YORK, Jan. 15, 1877.

CLASS PREJUDICES.

LYNCHBURG, Va., Jan. 5, 1877.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I suppose no one will deny that the present difficulties in the Southern problem are caused by the color line; may I suggest some points in this subject which do not seem to me to receive the attention they deserve? In the first place no one looks at the whole question. The Northern Republicans sympathize wholly with the Southern negroes; the Northern Democrats with Southern whites; the Southern white people as a class consider only their own interests, and do not include the negroes at all when they speak of Southern people; the negroes (small blame to them) think only of their own race, and cannot, as yet, take in the idea of the whole people and the whole country. A Southern delegate to the National Convention, a native white Republican, said to me on his return, "A negro cannot take any broad views; neither Fred. Douglass nor any of the rest of them go beyond the negro race." I think this was shown by Mr. Douglass' saying, when reproached with indifference on the subject of Female Suffrage at the Convention, that he "would have spoken upon it, but he did not think about it." What will bring all these opposing elements to a common stand-point from which they can seek the good of the whole people and the country? I think the trouble is national and not local.

I do firmly believe this whole question could be settled by the religious people of the country, if they were all willing to do it; and I think the great difficulty lies in the entire separation of the races in church matters. At present the position of Christian (?) people in the South is this: negroes will not go into white churches unless they can enter by the same door and have the same seats that white people have. In this I think they are right, as also in refusing to commune after all the white people leave the altar. White people will not admit negroes to their churches unless they will commune after the white people and sit in the gallery, and the new churches have no galleries. If these distinctions were done away in the North, and reciprocal courtesies were shown colored preachers in exchanging pulpits, the South would soon follow the example. I go a great deal among the negroes, and think oratory is one of the talents natural to the race. If church-doors were thrown open to them, I believe the great and popular preachers and public speakers of the country would be found among that race. Every other white man here will say the negro rests under a curse; but I agree with the negroes who do not hesitate to say that our land is accursed for their sakes, and will be until justice and equal rights are accorded them.

ORRA LANGHORNE.

"RELIGION AND POLITICS" AGAIN.

The definitions which we find in dictionaries explain mostly historical forms of religion; but have we not broader definitions by which all human beings are invested with that attribute?

"Religion will attend you as a pleasant and useful companion in every proper place and every temperate occupation of life," said Buckminster.

"Let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion," said Washington.

"Religion is the effort of man to perfect himself," says Abbot.

I cannot accept the idea that Christianity or any other form of religion contains all that is beautiful, all-embracing word means; neither can I agree with Mr. Einstein when he says: "Religion has for me no other definition than superstition, prejudice, or illusion."

Faith and theories are individual affairs, and I respect the sincere faith of my historical-religious brother, and also the rational theory of my materialistic brother; but I must call their definitions of religion an insufficient interpretation of the true meaning of the word; because I can see and enjoy and impart something beyond the limits of Christian dogmas and materialistic theories. I find in religion the concentration of the best thoughts, aspirations, and actions of the human soul. I strive to maintain and propagate all the good which I find in Christianity and in the schools of materialism and atheism; but I must oppose mere assumptions. Can we not all be better "fathers" than the assuming, cruel, partial, insufficient God of the churches? I was once wholly satisfied with the theories of atheism and materialism, even to the hour which I thought to be really my last one in existence. I was a confirmed atheist, until my reason developed to the firm conviction that there must be something more than matter and forces, and something better and more perfect than the human mind. When my reason found its limit, and my aspiration and longing to that better could not be satisfied, a better faith developed; and now I believe in an all-wise, just, Greater and Ruler of all, who has given all he has for each and all, for the existence and subsistence of his creation! Every human being has religion, and in my mind I cannot divest one of it. The good efforts and aspirations which our brother Einstein manifests in his communications, and his appreciation of the true religious and right political principles which we find in THE INDEX, and his good wishes for the editor, convince me that he is one of the best religious men among my good countrymen. His political position shows that he is a reasonable political partisan; but as the best political objects which we have to attend to now are the separation of Church and State, equal taxation and equal rights to all, and as it seems to me impossible to accomplish our work without true religion and right partisan politics, he must kindly allow others to communicate their opinion. If he gives us a better one and corrects our fallacies, we will cheerfully acquiesce.

True religion must provide for all; we ask no favors in the form of a Savior, because the soul and body cannot be lost, unless he who created us loses a part of his own power and justice. Our soul is a part of his, and so is each atom of our body. We have no speculations about another world; let us attend faithfully to this life and sphere, and when we come to another, do the same. Political opinions and actions which come the nearest to the principles unfolded in the Declaration of Independence, and by which we carry out the Constitution of the United States, and enact rational laws, are the best I know of. I am contented with the best conditions and party we now have, and do my mite to make them better; but the most I have to do is to improve myself.

CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N. H., Jan. 16, 1877.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AGAIN.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I must take issue with Mr. Mead in regard to his "Reasons Against Woman Suffrage," in THE INDEX OF JANUARY 11.

I once held similar opinions, but, having felt the mental pulse of many, both men and women, and gained the confidential expressions of opinions from the latter—studying the question in every light,—I am more anxious than ever to see the experiment tried.

He asks how many women can his readers find "without superstition"? Few, I grant, men or women. But I can count in my personal acquaintance, in the two States Louisiana and Tennessee, alone, seventeen women as free from sectarian prejudice or Church superstition as either yourself, Mr. Mead, or any of your editorial contributors. And just here I must say with Mr. G. B. Stebbins, in his article in the same paper, that the intelligent Spiritualist "is always the advocate of religious liberty, of the use of reason," and nowhere can be found more earnest combatants of dogmas. Mr. Mead should take into consideration that every obstacle has been put in the way of woman's advancement in this direction, and it argues well for her passionate love of learning and liberty, that she has sought it so ardently under so many difficulties. The opprobrium cast upon a "freethinking" woman, when I was a child, was only a little short of a "harlot." In the outworking of the great social problem, a thousand lives are no more than a thousand leaves.

Freedom has benefited the negro largely as a race, and the evils attending it are more than compensated to the nation in the one fact that this festering sore is healed.

The right of suffrage extended to woman will naturally open a sort of Pandora's box, but let it be opened. Liberty to her means, as it did to the negro, liberty to think, to hear, to act; she will in this way alone be lifted from under the dominant heel of priest-rule; she will assail the pulpit as she has the rostrum, and, teaching from it as men have taught, will develop freethought in others.

Just here I must say that I recognize, and wish to preserve always, the great difference between men and women. No Republic has tried the power of woman as an admitted and welcome participant in civil affairs; yet all will admit that the family, without its female head, is soon disorganized and its members scattered. What is the nation other than a collection of families? If it is not good for man to be alone socially, neither is it civilly, for man rules by sex power, and forces woman from the element of motherly affection and higher spiritual strength.

It is superfluous to cite the injustice of trying women by laws they never helped to frame, or by classing them civilly with lunatics, idiots, and criminals. Here is a telegram from Washington: "It is freely discussed here that it will be well to send Casey for the long term; he and the ladies of the White House can control Grant." What a comment upon a nation's law-makers and rulers! Why not at once admit woman's power, and train it to noble uses? The long system of tyranny and spoiling, grinding as a slave, or decking as a plaything, has made woman, like all weak animals, a cunning one, and she wins her point by dwarfing her noble nature, pandering to vices that man render her powerless either to heal or direct. Every great national good has been, in almost all cases, the outgrowth of a seeming great evil. But for Moses having murdered the Egyptian, and hidden his body in the sand, we might have missed all those pretty stories about women contained in the Pentateuch. Full power for woman to develop her nature as she would has been the one dream and desire of my life, inspired always by firm conviction that in this way alone, in future ages, will men become as "gods." Since Pilate fronted the Nazarene with the solemn question, "What is truth?" it has rung unanswered down the ages. No longer questioning man, I send my cry into the veiled empires of eternity, and this answer comes back to me: "The highest convictions of thine own earnest soul, oh mortal, this to thee is truth." My truth may be to you and others the boldest error; but each of us must toll, if need be die, in chiselling and dragging his stone to its place, and thus helping to build up the great temple of humanity.

MRS. E. L. SAXON.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 19, 1877.

"HERE" AND "THERE."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—The Rev. Joseph Cook, in a late Monday lecture, used this argument: "If I can prove a here, I can prove a there. If I can prove a before, I can prove an after. If I can prove an upper, I can prove an under. Just so by logical necessity there cannot be a dependent being without an independent. I am a dependent being, and therefore there is an independent or self-existent being." Now, sir, if one who has never studied logic in Germany may comment on so able a man as Mr. Cook, I would suggest objections to that style of proof, for the very plain reason that no such conclusions can be deduced from the premises laid down.

When I use the words, an upper and an under, a here and there, I use terms which are descriptive of some objects or places. But before I use those terms I must know that those two objects or two places exist. It would be senseless to use the term under-floor, if I did not know an upper-floor to exist. These terms merely refer to differences which we know to exist. But it does not by any means follow that we can apply such terms indiscriminately, and thereby prove fundamental truths.

It may be true that there is a here and a there, without its being true that Mr. Cook is a dependent body; he already assumes that there is an independent body when he declares himself a dependent one, and that is begging the question. The very object of the whole argument is to prove the independent or self-existent body.

I will take the liberty of altering Mr. Cook's argument and putting it thus: I must know that there is an upper, and an under before I can know them separately as such. The natural inference from this would be that I must know there is an independent and a dependent body before I know them separately as bearing that relation to each other. But that would not prove an independent or self-existent body.

M. D.

NORWOOD, Jan. 16, 1877.

THE "RADICAL DEMOCRACY" OF BOSTON.

The monthly meeting of the German Radical Democrats of this city took place on Thursday evening, January 25th, at the new Turn-Halle, Middlesex Street. No friend of Labor Reform (real, not patented) will fail to be interested in the proceedings of this meeting. The petitions got up by this society in order to effect an extension of the powers of the Bureau of Statistics of Labor were returned to the Secretary by the several members, covered with numerous signatures which, it is hoped, will have the desirable effect on the Legislature when presented. Some copies of that petition circulating outside of Boston, especially those in Fall River and Lawrence, have not yet been returned, and it is desirable that the parties taking charge of them there should send it in directly to the Legislature, as more will be effected by having it presented from several sides. Great care should be taken in presenting it only through a representative who will support the measure asked for.

At the motion of the sage of Roxbury, Mr. Karl Heinzen, the much complicated land question was thoroughly discussed. Great interest was added to the discussion by the calm, clear-headed remarks of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, who took a prominent part in the debate.

It is really gratifying to see that the German element of this city is so active in regard to the progressive movements. It is those who make the least noise who accomplish the most. IVAN PANTIN.

LIBERTY'S NOTES.

This journal in behalf of the new treatment of the nervous and insane will soon be issued. All interested in this humane work should forward their subscriptions to the editor, Mrs. Martha E. Berry, 3 Beacon Street, Boston. Terms, $2.00 yearly, in advance.

The Bureau of Correspondence for the Nervous and Insane still continues its work at the same office. Homes found for mental invalids, visits made to patients, and advice given with regard to medical treatment. Address, MRS. MARTHA E. BERRY, 3 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass.

WE, AS THE INHABITANTS of a republic, need to know more of history. Not only our own history, but the histories of other nations; their rise and downfall, their births and deaths, so that, from their mistakes, we may guard against our own dissolution. But here comes our difficulty. Histories do not lay stress enough on this point—the causes that brought the changes,—the birth, the revolution, or the death. This matter or point should be continually prominent, continually held up to view, continually in sight. Then history would be worth more to us as a people exercising the right of suffrage. Will not some one undertake this work, with this idea in view, and provide something to educate us in the direction of light, of which we are greatly in need?—School Journal.

THE TROY Press says: "A teacher in one of our prominent female seminaries on the Hudson, on being asked by a young lady of her class what pig-iron is replied, 'Iron given in exchange for swine!'"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
"13 to 25 "	8 "
"26 to 51 "	6 "
"52 to 100 "	5 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wason, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Eschub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wason.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. F. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.
WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse, Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Sons and Daughters.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	3.00
New Poems.....	1.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Idina; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	3.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.35
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.35
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.35
The World's Progress.....	2.35
The Tall Students.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.35
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLILE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 31 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.90
CAKEMETER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Bally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.35
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANES POWER). Studies Now and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	3.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.25
Etiological Poems Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrawski, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	3.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Fanny Works. 2 vols.....	1.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Starb. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	0.50
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.00
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	5.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into Its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.50
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	0.40
The Unknown River.....	0.40
The Intellectual Life.....	0.40
Chapters on Animals.....	0.40
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.50
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.00
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.00
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.00
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	0.40
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	0.40
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	0.40
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	0.40
The Mark Twain.....	0.40
The English Note-Books.....	0.40
The American Note-Books.....	0.40
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	0.40
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	0.40
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malblossom's Black Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.00
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.25
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.25
More Criticisms of Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.30
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	1.25
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Sevens.....	2.00
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelton.....	1.25
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Hopes the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Elements of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.00
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	3.50
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Prof. Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.00
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	3.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introduction by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEMP (ORPHEUS O.). Vermouths, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEAHY (W. H. R.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGG'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 1 vol.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIS (REV. RAPHAEL D.C.). Whistle-Jack, or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.....	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1830 to 1866.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART) Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols.....	2.35
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.35
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	2.40
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.10
Representative Government.....	1.40
Autobiography.....	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Storms.....	1.50
Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIYART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	1.00
Mosaic, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Uhlir from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.10
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.10
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.50
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	2.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defense.....	1.50
The Apotheosis Celebrations—A. D. I. and M. D. C. C. V. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Bedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy. A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.50
The Expense of Heavens.....	2.50
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLER (H.). Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By James Clerk Maxwell.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Prof. Huxley.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 35 vols.....	21.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers, containing essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Psychology. 3 vols.....	1.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Fanny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized Translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 1 vol.....	7.50
The Glass-Boat Tale. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lord the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Haggerty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. ORLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Sketches of a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Address at the Faneuil Hall Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TITTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	5.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 3 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.00
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

A series of popular lectures by

Rev. M. J. SAVAGE.

253 pp. Price (post-paid) $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of Horticultural Hall Lectures, SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus." Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality." Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—a New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.

Jan. 28—Wm. R. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Ruling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed." Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.

Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg." "The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, etc.—Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."

Feb. 25—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing." March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."

March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."

Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 461 Washington Street.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER,

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	.40
FIFTY ".....	.75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.25
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $75 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT C. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NATIONAL REFORMER.

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought. EDITED BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, R. H. RANNEY, F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL, RADICAL, AND

FREE RELIGIOUS LECTURES.

By S. W. SAMPLE.

The following is a list of the subjects with which I shall enter the lecture-field this season:—

1. FREE RELIGION AND CHRISTIANITY.
2. THE AMERICAN IDEAL AND THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.
3. THE BIBLE IN THE CONSTITUTION.
4. THE WARPAPE OF SCIENCE.
5. DARWINISM.
6. THE WOMAN QUESTION AND ITS ANSWER.
7. THE RELIGION OF WORLDLINESS.
8. THOMAS PAINE: SERVANT OF FREEDOM AND MASTER OF THE SITUATION.
9. BUDDHA AND BUDDHISM.
10. CONFUCIUS AND CONFUCIANISM.
11. THE BIBLE OF HUMAN ORIGIN.
12. A CRITICAL EXAMINATION OF THE FOUR GOSPELS.

Those desiring to make engagements with me will please address me at the earliest convenient date.

S. W. SAMPLE, JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II, III, IV, 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.) 50 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL

SCHOOL for both sexes. Address

EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved (32) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

A COURSE OF 10 LECTURES

By DISTINGUISHED WOMEN,

IN THE

PAINE MEMORIAL BUILDING,

WILL BE COMMENCED ON

SUNDAY EVENING, DEC. 3, 1876.

These Lectures will be of a very Liberal and Radical character, on various topics, interesting and instructive. The opening Lecture will be by Miss SUSAN B. ANTHONY, of New York.

Subject—"The 18th Amendment; or, women want bread, not the ballot."

Tickets to the course of ten Lectures, $2. Single tickets 25 cents. To be had at the office of the Investigator, Banner of Light, and THE INDEX.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Review serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant,—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that

THE LABOR QUESTION—

Involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, æsthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fiske, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orris, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher, BENJ. R. TUCKER, Lock Box 569, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient coöperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 8, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 372.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE REVIVAL is in full blast here in Boston. How are we to find out when the city has "bowed her haughty intellectual head"?

A FRIEND asks if ladies may sign the petition for the Religious Freedom Amendment. Certainly. The petition reads: "We, the undersigned, citizens of the United States," etc. Women have been declared citizens, we believe, by the Supreme Court; and assuredly their citizenship will not be called in question by liberals.

THE FIRST two returns of signatures to the National Liberal League Petition were received on February 2. One of them is sent by Mr. Henry Doty Maxson, on behalf of the Radical Club of Amherst College; the number of signers is nineteen, of whom all but one are members of the Senior and Junior classes. The other is sent by Mr. M. P. Barber, Postmaster of Pleasantville, Pa., and contains the signatures of sixty-five citizens of that place.

REV. DR. LÖNNER is a Baptist clergyman of this city who performs at Tremont Temple. We say "performs," because he himself puts that construction on his own services by denouncing those who attend without paying, and declaring that he despises a deadhead as akin to a sneak thief. Such sentiments strike one as queer in the minister of "salvation without money and without price." Did he ever reflect that, in consequence of tax-exemption, the churches are all religious deadheads?

"GOD LOOKS at the thought," said Mr. Moody the other day, "and unbelief is a sin; doubts are sins." No wonder that Moody reaches the souls of all Christians, for he speaks the very soul of Christianity. That is it: unbelief is a sin—doubts are sins! So Christianity kills unbelief by killing doubts, and kills doubts by killing thought, and kills thought by burning up the love of truth for its own sake in a great, fierce blaze of ignited religiosity. But the dense smoke of the conflagration hangs heavily over the heads of those who kindle it; and the star of truth, unobscured by human folly, still shines bright and pure for all who can live by its benignant light.

SAYS THE Boston Herald of January 29: "Walt Whitman may be a greater poet than Homer for all we know, but he will have hard work to persuade the American people that they owe all their liberty and prosperity to the late Thomas Paine, Esq., if that is respectful enough to suit the captious INDEX." Perhaps the Herald can answer its own implied question. It is our habit always to refer respectfully to the founder of the Christian religion, though not included in the number of his disciples. But if we never alluded to him except as either "Jes Christ" or "the late Jesus Christ, Esq.," we suspect that decent papers would be justly offended, and point out a possible mean between contemptuous familiarity and mocking deference. Query: would the Herald stigmatize them as "captious"?

IT IS SAID that a Hartford Episcopalian clergyman on his way up-town, the other day, fell in with a wealthy Jewish merchant, who has been somewhat prominent in the troubles at the new synagogue which have led to the withdrawal of Rev. Dr. Deutch as rabbi. The clergyman inquired of the Jew as to the troubles, whereat the Jew replied: "Yaas. It is high time Dr. Deutch must go." "Why? What has he done?" "Done? He believes in nodings. He does not believe in Gott; nor in ter tuyvel." "Indeed." "Yaas. Now when a man does not believe in Gott, der he ish; but when he does not believe in ter tuyvel, ver ish he?" The Jew seems to be of the same mind as the English rector who has lately been sued for refusing to administer the communion to a church-member who denied any belief in a personal devil.

PROFESSOR FELIX ADLER, of New York city, is evidently one of the rising stars of freethought in this country. His simplicity, sincerity, and courage are winning for him a growing influence. In a recent lecture at Standard Hall, he said: "Our great want is of culture, the harmonious development of all our faculties. This cannot be supplied by the three hundred and fifty or more colleges in the country, because they are built by the Church, and, each sect having its own, the result is ludicrous impotency. Besides, the sectarian spirit within the colleges has science within its grasp, and stifles its liberty, which is its life. The right of free utterance is curtailed. European investigations, when not in accord with Church creeds, are suppressed. Natural science, even, is taught with bias, and our future lawyers, doctors, and statesmen are sent forth with no knowledge, or with a distorted knowledge of the great conflicts waging in the scientific world. That great good has been done by the Church in lessons of pure morality we admit; sincerely and emphatically yes. But, for their dogmatic teachings, they have been evil, and the source of evil."

THE LIBERAL LEAGUES of Philadelphia and Chelsea have held meetings to protest against the rejection of the Paine Bust. A full report of the former has been received too late for publication this week; we publish that of the latter this week. Meanwhile we commend to attention a choice bit of justice and liberality from the Christian Statesman of January 25: "The bust of the individual familiarly and irreverently spoken of in common parlance as 'Tom Paine,' which a few zealous freethinkers recently presented to the City Councils of Philadelphia to be placed in Independence Hall, has been finally rejected by the vote of Select Councils. Every one who has read the articles of Bishop Cox in our issues for the 4th and 11th inst. will rejoice in this action. Paine rendered no services to the country which entitle him to this recognition, while his vulgar and blasphemous assaults on Christianity, his odious private character, and his attack on Washington, render any memorial of him unfit for association with the sacred treasures which are, and are to be, deposited in Independence Hall. The presentation of this bust, moreover, had a special significance, being designed as a tribute, in this Centennial Year, to the supposed influence of Paine, and of the infidelity which he represented, in shaping our political institutions. The Select Council of this city has done honor to itself by its action."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Birmingham, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HOLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Saratoga Springs, Mass.
 MR. T. SCHUYLKEMAN FOTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM AYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI H. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. KAMUHL HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LECK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. K. L. HEINZ,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE NAYLOR,.....Editor of the "Independent," Boston.
 HARRIS A. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MOULTZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorncliffe, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLIER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATTON,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. S. WALLIHAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Essexville, Iowa.
 HERMAN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. ENGBOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PATTERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. BAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quilman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....121 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....221 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

(FOR THE INDEX.)

The Demands of Liberalism.

REPORT OF A LECTURE DELIVERED AT DENVER, COLORADO,
 SUNDAY EVENING, DEC. 24, 1876.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—

This is our Centennial year. We have been for some months observing and contemplating the results of a century of national existence. The republic which was established by the courage and sacrifice of our fathers a hundred years ago has grown to be a republic of forty millions of people. It has extended in territory thousands of miles, from the rock-ribbed Atlantic to the golden shores of the Pacific Ocean. It is, indeed, a marvel of progress and development, such as perhaps the world has never seen in any previous period of its history.

The past hundred years have been preëminent for progress in science and in mechanical and industrial pursuits. Greece and Rome, in their palmy days, when they were at the zenith of their glory and the height of empire, never offered such a spectacle as is presented to the world by this American republic. Those nations certainly had exceptional advantages. They had a republican government under which every freeman was a voter for the measures of his choice, as he is to-day among us; they had at some periods of their history ideas of personal liberty also which the most advanced minds cherish to-day; they had languages remarkable for flexibility and finish, and literatures that are immortal. All mankind through subsequent ages are their debtors, by reason of their great contribution to the intellectual culture of the race. They had periods full of deeds of martial heroism, of personal disinterestedness, and of moral goodness. They had characters that have since been models to Christian lands, and are held up as the embodiment of virtue to-day. But notwithstanding all their achievements, there was not that general diffusion of intelligence which we can claim; they were not acquainted with our hundreds and thousands of appliances for lessening manual labor; there was not that general comfort among the people in their habitations or in their mode of living that we see among us to-day.

This republic may also be spoken of as one which is exalted in many respects above all other modern nations. England, Germany, France, great nations, in many respects our superiors, owing to their greater age and opportunities for culture,—have not shown that wonderful speed of progress, that readiness, that adaptability to circumstances, that ability to achieve great undertakings with small resources, which are characteristic of this people. Lord Palmerston said that we never could subdue the rebellion; but he afterwards confessed that he had relied on his knowledge of history rather than a correct estimate of our resources and capacities. He found in this country agencies and influences at work which he had not counted on, because they were unparalleled in the past experience of mankind.

Still, it is well for us, while we contemplate these achievements, and while we look to a brilliant future, not to be ignorant of the many evils which it is our duty to remove. We are proud of our liberty; we speak of our progress; but we are liable to ignore the fact that, with all our liberty, and with all our progress, there is an inequality, an injustice that only needs to be mentioned to be seen, which must be removed if we would sustain the claim we are accustomed to make. It is sometimes said that every man here has perfect liberty; that there is no such thing as a union of Church and State among us; that every man can worship under his own fig-tree, with no one to molest him or make him afraid; that no person is permitted to injure or impair the rights of another, at least that, if it is done, it is in violation of the laws of the land. It is said further that nobody in this country wishes to interfere with the liberties of the people; or, if there are such, that they are so few in number and insignificant in influence as hardly to be worth taking into account. Let us see what are the facts.

In the first place, it is not true that there is no considerable number of persons opposed to religious liberty. There is a large proportion of the people of the United States that, instead of being in favor of entire religious liberty, is really opposed to it, and to the extent of its power would deprive many of their rights to worship as they see fit. The majority of the people in this country to-day are more strongly imbued with a sense of religion than they are with a sense of justice; and hence, if a conflict comes up between the rights of their fellow-beings and their religious creed, they are more disposed to contend for the latter than they are for the former. There are hundreds and thousands who, though they themselves are devoid of deep religious convictions, yet, if the question should come up, would certainly sacrifice the inalienable rights of man rather than see sacrificed the time-honored customs of their fathers. Go among the Evangelical denominations of the land, among those who are still more or less devoted to the Church, who have accepted the creeds, and whom the creeds have influenced to the extent that their sense of justice is subordinate to their religious belief, and ask them if they are in favor of allowing entire religious liberty, of allowing infidels to advocate their views; and many of them will answer you in a manner that will indicate that they have no full appreciation of the rights of those who differ from them. Many are in favor, theoretically, of granting religious liberty; but let a practical case come up, bring a man who is an atheist into a court of justice, let a person try to carry out his ideas of Sunday in disregard of the Orthodox view, let him attempt to influence public opinion in favor of taxing church property, let him advocate the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, and then you see bigotry, intolerance, and fanaticism appear. Whatever may be their theoretical pretensions, they show their sense of religion, their attachment to their creed, is a hundred times stronger than their sense of justice, or recognition of the rights of unbelievers. There are hundreds and thousands, then, who are not specially religious, but who are led in these matters by custom, by the prestige of authority, by old habits and modes of thinking. If a contest comes, whether it be in a political election, or in some case involving the interest of an individual, they throw all the weight of their influence in favor of the creed and in opposition to personal rights and personal liberty.

Well, then, we see that it is not true that everybody in this country is in favor of religious liberty, however loud the pretension may be. Neither is it true that there is an entire separation of Church and State in this country. It is true there is no such union between the two as prevailed in earlier times, in the palmy days of Puritanism, the praises of which are sung by so many Orthodox theologians even now. We have still the remnants of that union of Church and State which was established in superstition and intolerance, when a man was punished by whipping and with death if he dared to deny the Bible; when his children were taken away from him, as in the good old days of New England Puritanism, provided he did not bring them up in the Christian faith; when he was punished with severity if he did not conform to the Orthodox teachings of the Church.

The National Constitution is secular. That immortal document, penned by a Virginia planter, does not even contain the word God,—a fact which has been a great stumbling-block in the minds of many of our Orthodox friends. It declares that Congress shall make no laws respecting an establishment of religion, and it forbids Congress to make any religious qualifications as a test for office. It is a purely secular document, thanks to the wisdom and sagacity and liberality of those great men who lived in that day; and to whose disinterested devotion to the interests and liberty of mankind we are indebted for the beneficent institutions we enjoy. They framed and adopted the Constitution of the United States; seeing the effects of a union of Church and State in the past, they did what they could to guard against it. Our government is in every respect non-Christian, just as it is non-Infidel.

When George Washington signed the famous treaty with Tippecanoe, it expressly stated that Christianity is no part of the law of the land; and that treaty has become a part of the nation's organic law. At the same time, even in the national government, so strong was public sentiment, so strong the current of feeling, even from the first, there was more or less pandering to prejudice and intolerance; days of thanksgiving and prayer were appointed by the Executive, not because of any authority therefor in the Constitution of the United States, or any power delegated to the Chief-Magistrate of the nation, but because an intolerant religious sentiment demanded that its feelings and convictions should be regarded and formally recognized as true by the State. Hence from the first we had days of thanksgiving and prayer appointed. Thomas Jefferson, the greatest statesman, in my opinion, that America has ever produced, a man of great political sagacity, of wonderful constructiveness of intellect, a man, too, who appreciated in its fulness what religious liberty is, declined to appoint a day of thanksgiving, for which he was roundly abused by the clergy; but, notwithstanding their protests, he told them that, as the chief executive of the nation, his duty was to enforce the laws, not to appoint days of prayer and thanksgiving, and thereby give an official national recognition to any particular religion or any particular doctrine. But the courage, the sagacity, and the consistency of Jefferson have been imitated by very few. The last outrage of this kind upon the liberal sentiment and upon the principles of secular government was the proclamation of President Grant (following his predecessors, and no worse than they), which appointed, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, a day of public, official, and national recognition of the Christian religion, especially of the doctrine of prayer, that there is a being who answers the prayers of men, the duty of meeting together to worship, and other implied doctrines. But our government has no right, and our Chief Magistrate has no authority, to make any distinction of days on such grounds, or to make any recognition whatever of Mohammedanism, Christianity, Spiritualism, Infidelity, Paganism, or any other religion or no-religion.

Now let us go a little farther. We have chaplains in the halls of the United States Congress. They have no more right to be there than they have to be in my own private house without my invitation. These legislators are elected from among the people, among whom are Infidels, Spiritualists, Atheists, Deists, Mohammedans possibly, as well as Christians, of every class. We help elect these representatives; we help pay them. It is an insult to every free-thinker in the land when they put a chaplain in those halls, and convert those halls into religious meeting-houses and those legislatures into prayer-meetings.

But while our national government is secular in its form and basis, even though perverted by reason of the strength of the religious sentiment, what shall we say of our State governments? There we find everywhere a recognition of certain Christian doctrines and observances that, as a State, we have no moral right, in justice to those who differ from these doctrines, to take any notice of. All have a right to enjoy their own beliefs; but no one has a right to foist his own religious views upon the national or State government, and thereby secure for them official sanction.

We have certain Sunday laws, in almost every State in the Union, that are utterly opposed alike to freedom, personal liberty, and the enlightenment of this nineteenth century. We have Sunday laws that recognize the day as a sacred day, and punish certain kinds of work or amusements on that day, even though they do not interfere with the equal rights of others.

We have religious qualifications demanded in courts of justice, so that a freethinker may be insulted by a judge or some attorney, when he enters, by the question, "Do you believe in the Bible?" or "Do you believe in a God?" just as though he had a right in a court-house to ask any man whether he believes in one God, or in a million, or whether he believes in the Bible or not, or what his religious views are. Then we have the judicial oath, by which a man, when he comes to testify, is expected to hold up his right hand and go through religious mummeries which any knave can repeat; whereas, if he is honest enough to say, "I don't believe in it," he may be excluded, and deprived of giving testimony, whatever interests he may have at stake.

We have another political recognition of religion. There are between three and four hundred millions of church property in this country. Immense structures, many of them built with the hard earnings of the struggling poor, of men and women that have not money enough to buy common literature with which to enlighten their minds, or leisure enough even to rest and recover from their hard labors—built in this manner by systematic begging, I had almost said robbery,—are exempt from taxation, whereby an additional tax is put upon you and me, my liberal friends, in order that these churches may be thus exempt, in consideration, forsooth, that they are the houses of God! For that reason you, and I, and others who do not believe in this faith, are taxed additionally, and most unjustly, too.

Then we have in our schools, which are supported by Christian, Orthodox, and heretic, by the infidel, by the pagan, by all classes,—our public schools, which are the glory of the land, where the poor boy may go and get an education that will fit him for the pursuits of life, and prepare him for the duties that shall await him when he attains to manhood,—these schools are invaded by the Bible, which, whatever may be the value of the book, has no more right to a place there than the Koran, the Rig-Veda, the Zendavesta, or the Golden Bible of the Mormons, Paine's Age of Reason, Voltaire's Dictionary, or any other infidel book ever written. Here is another instance where we find a practical union of Church and State.

Then we have religious festivals and fasts appointed by the authority of the Chief Executive of every State in the Union. We have also public appropriations made by the State legislatures for theological schools and colleges, which are mere mills for turning out men whose duty in after-life is to teach theology, which, as Lord Brougham said, "is the art of teaching what nobody knows anything about." These schools and colleges receive endowments, and thereby we are again indirectly taxed for the support of absurdities which we do not believe, and which some of us are laboring to get rid of.

There is a party, by no means insignificant, that has a paper which is an exponent, an organ of its principles, in the city of Philadelphia. It numbers among its officers and advocates distinguished judges, Governors of States, prominent officials of all kinds. Not satisfied with the already existing union between Church and State, it aims to encroach upon the rights and liberties of the liberal mass of people, so far as to insert in our Constitution, by an amendment, a recognition of God as the source of all authority, Jesus Christ as the ruler among nations, and the Bible as the supreme law of the land. Seeing the rapid progress of liberalism through the country, the lessening of the authority of the clergy, the general decline in popular faith, they wish to arrest it, by securing for it official recognition and support, in order to counteract this disintegration that is going on.

I was talking in Philadelphia with one of the leaders of that party, when I told him that we had rights as infidels which it was his duty to recognize. He said in reply substantially that, if a man chose to put himself in defiance to the will of God he had no right to make any claims of religious liberty, for there was no liberty that was not based upon the word of God. In the city of New York, a clergyman stated at a large public meeting that, if there were infidels who did not wish to subscribe to the Constitution after it recognized God as the source of authority, and Jesus Christ as the ruler among nations, and the Bible as the supreme law of the land, those infidels might emigrate to some other country; they had no right to try to defeat progress by their impious blasphemies. Even the Rev. Dr. Miner, a leading Universalist clergyman, comes out and joins this party; and the Unitarian Rev. A. D. Mayo is another of its advocates. All over the country Presbyterian ministers, and quite largely those of other denominations, sustain that proposed Constitutional amendment and are of the "God-in-the-Constitution" party. Already their influence has been seen in Congress. Now, as liberals, we demand our rights, and we are bound to have them, if there is a possibility of obtaining them. I went through the terrible scenes of one war; and while I have no constitutional disposition to engage in the strife of arms, I would far more readily go through another, in order to secure rights and liberties to which we are entitled, if I thought I could not secure them without. There is nothing more sacred to a true man than liberty to do whatever he chooses, when he does not thereby infringe upon the rights of other persons. There is no man, no authority, no tribunal on earth that has any right to dictate to me what I shall do or say, provided I do not impair the rights and liberties of others.

Now we demand entire disconnection between Church and State; we demand the secularization of our government to the extent that there shall not be a remnant of the union of the two. All American citizens have equal rights and liberties; every man has the right to exercise his own religious belief, whatever it is; every man has a right to abstain from supporting religious beliefs in which he does not concur, or to which he cannot subscribe. These principles, I think, are so evident that we need not stop to dwell upon them. It does not matter what the majority, so far as the right is involved, may want; if there is one man in the United States who does not believe in the existence of God, to recognize it in the government is a wrong and an insult to him. We are a republic; we submit to the will of the majority in all questions which it belongs to the people to decide; but the government has no right even to submit to vote the personal, inalienable rights of man. For instance, while the people have a right to make laws deciding how a President shall be chosen, or what the laws shall be in regard to common matters, it has no right to make a law compelling a person to renounce his religious belief; it has no right to compel an individual to attend religious services. If there is only one person in this land who is a pagan, the nation has no right, by reason of its authority and power, to say to him, "You must change your convictions, and become a Christian, or you must suppress your convictions so that they will harmonize with the Christian sentiment of the country." The opinions of one man are just as sacred as the opinions of the many, and the notion that, because the majority believe thus and so, therefore the minority have no rights, but must submit, is a notion that finds no sanction from a free or even a decent government. We say to Christians, that we infidels have the right to pursue happiness and to enjoy ourselves as we see fit, provided we are not trespassing upon the rights of others; and the duty of government is to protect all men in the exercise of their rights rather than to persecute a few, whatever be their habits or their customs.

This idea that government has the right to set up a standard of religious truth and duty, and attempt to legislate its notions of virtue into humanity is very pernicious, and is a revival of Puritanism such as prevailed in Scotland in the seventeenth century, when a man was forbidden to sit in his door on Sunday and enjoy the coolness of the day; when he was forbidden to shave his beard, water his garden, ride horseback, or visit the market on Monday or Saturday because they were so near the Sabbath. That idea to some extent has prevailed in this country, that government has the right to prescribe to men what habits and customs they shall follow, making sumptuary and other laws in violation of the principles of personal liberty. What we ask and demand in the great cause of liberty, as freemen and as liberals, is that there shall be an abrogation of every law and every enactment that is inimical to impartial religious liberty and justice. We demand that the Sunday laws be abolished; that the day shall be one of recreation and rest for those who choose to make it such. We demand that the government of the United States and the government of the several States shall give to no day a recognition of its alleged sacredness; that every man shall be allowed to pursue such a course as he sees fit on that day, as well as on every other. If people wish to meet for worship, nobody has a right to interfere with them or disturb them in their religious service; if a man wishes to play billiards on Sunday, if he wishes to go fishing, if he desires to sit down in his house to play any game with his wife and children or neighbors, if he wants relaxation, and seeks it by wandering in the fields, or by any sports, whatever their character, if they do not interfere with others, it matters not; he has a right to follow them, and government has no right whatever to restrain him.

It is said we want to introduce the European Sabbath into this country. Well, if the European Sabbath involves nothing more than the recognition of the rights of all, then let us adopt it. We have adopted a great many things that have been in vogue in Europe, and we may have to adopt a great many more. If the Germans choose to spend Sundays at their gardens, or theatres, or concert-halls, we claim they have a perfect right to; denying them, we show narrowness, intolerance, and bigotry utterly inconsistent with the genius of our free institutions. Let us have the European Sunday for such as choose to spend it as they do in Europe, and thereby secure for all men in this country a perfect right to enjoy the day in the manner they see fit. Then we shall have something like what we imagine sometimes we now have, a separation of Church and State in regard to the observance of the Sabbath.

And then we must ask and insist upon the abrogation of the oath. What right has every man in an official capacity to ask me what I believe, or, having ascertained my views, what right has he to exclude me, or the people through him to exclude me, from the court? Cannot a man who is an atheist be truthful? A man may be a Christian and be untruthful; and if he is an infidel and is unscrupulous enough to say he believes what he does not believe, his testimony is accepted. But if, in opposition to popular sentiment, he has the courage and honesty and honor to stand up like a man, and avow his belief, he is rewarded by the exclusion of his testimony. Is there any justice in that? What we ask is that men shall be allowed to affirm in all courts upon the pains and penalties of perjury. No government, no State, has the right to require anything like the judicial oath in courts of justice. Among the lower class of Chinamen, I am told, it is customary to twist off the head of a rooster, when they give testimony. If a man declares he is unable to tell the truth unless a rooster is killed, I don't know but we should stretch the authority of the government, and allow that exercise to be performed, although I think that it is rather cruel to the rooster, in order to get the truth from him. But don't establish it as a qualification for all witnesses. We say there is no need of these arbitrary enactments, simply because the majority of the people may believe in the existence of that which the oath implies. We have the right to insist on the abrogation of the judicial oath, in all courts of justice in order to put them upon a purely secular basis.

We have the right to insist that church property be taxed. It is protected by police, guarded at public expense, and it is evidently unjust that these churches in which so much money is invested, and which, in many cases, accumulate property faster than men engaged in business, should go untaxed. What has been the result of the exemption from taxation of ecclesiastical property? Look at France before the Revolution. According to Carlyle, if a peasant earned sixteen dollars, fifteen dollars were taken to support the Church and State, leaving only one dollar out of sixteen. That was largely the result of the union of Church and State. The Church had more than one-half of the empire of France in its possession; it not only owned land, but owned men, owned even soldiers by thousands, who could be seen wearing the symbols and decorations of the Church on their clothes as they walked about the land. One of the good effects of breaking up that was to give each Frenchman that which his heart swelled as he looked upon, a piece of land he could hold as his own. The government had at last to confiscate church property in order to get money. Why? Because during all this time the property of the Church was exempt from taxation, whereas all other property, being heavily taxed, could not possibly compete with it.

In Canada to-day the finest property is owned by the Catholic Church. It goes untaxed, and in Montreal and Quebec, especially, the Catholic bishops and Catholic authorities are speculating in lands, houses, and all kinds of property. Ordinary business men cannot begin to compete in this contest, because they have to bear not only their share of taxation, but that additional amount imposed on them by the non-taxation of church property. How was it in Mexico? Twice in that country they have had to confiscate church property because it absorbed nearly all the wealth of the nation. Then the Church trod down the people under its absolute authority, until, like the worm, they could no longer keep turning upon the foot that crushed them. The first step to carry on a revolution was to take back the money of which they had been robbed by that towering hierarchy whose only object was to enrich itself and enable a lot of pampered priests to live in luxury while the people starved. We have, I say, between three and four hundred millions of dollars invested in churches. Now let the churches bear their part of the taxes, and then there will be no danger. But if they are to be exempt, the time may come, will come, when we, too, shall have to confiscate church property, and to unite in order to resist the encroachments of a theology that is even now plotting to deprive us of our rights and liberties. Let there be an equitable taxation of all property, perhaps our school-houses and our purely charitable buildings excepted, but certainly let there be taxation of all property used for exclusively religious purposes. Look at the Catholic churches in New York, St. Louis, San Francisco,—gorgeous cathedrals, built at immense cost, connected with a vast amount of property equally exempt from taxation. If these churches are destroyed by reason of the neglect of the authorities to protect them from the mob, the city would be liable for the full amount of their value, and it could be collected from the city, notwithstanding they contribute in no part to the public defence.

Now, as freethinkers, we are willing to sustain our own views; we do not go to Christians and ask them to help pay for our halls; if we did, they would regard it as an insult. Whenever they ask us to pay more taxes on our property than is just, in order to help support churches, simply because we are in the minority, and then compel us to do it by law, we have a moral right to revolt; we have a moral right to resist every such effort, because, in the language of our fathers, "taxation without representation is tyranny." Their cause was not more just than would be the cause of the freethinkers of the country, if they should rise en masse and protest. Still I do not advocate this. Revolutions are usually accompanied by great disorders, by anarchy, by bloodshed, and every other means should be exhausted before this final resort; but if in the end the Christian world should not show a sense of justice, and concede our rights, then I say we have the right to secure them by an appeal to force.

We demand in the name of justice that the schools be divested of their religious influences. If Christians want to educate their children in the Bible, let them do it at home, or at schools supported by themselves alone. But do not let them prostitute our public schools to this. Let these be intact from religious influences, and we shall thereby secure not only our rights, but we shall secure the rising generation from that poisonous superstition which all the machinery of ecclesiasticism is doing its best to perpetuate. We also demand that there be no public appropriations for colleges which teach theology. Let them sustain themselves; if they cannot, let them perish. Let not one cent of the public money be devoted to anything of this kind. Let government be secularized; we need a constitutional amendment such as has been proposed by Francis E. Abbot, and petitioned for by the National Liberal League,—such measures as shall prevent in an evil hour the incorporation in the constitution of the dogmas of the "God-in-the-Constitution party." Religious bigots, having a temporary triumph, might fasten on the government such measures as to put back the cause of liberty and religious freedom many years. People are led on at certain times by impulse alone; sometimes a few narrow, zealous minds may carry a whole nation backward; and it takes a great deal of hard work to recover what is lost.

Supposing this attempt to increase the union between Church and State were successful, what would be the result? Suppose the Catholic power continues to increase as it has done. In 1789 it was one-sixty-fifth part of the population. The Catholics have gone on increasing faster every decade than the ratio of increase of the general population. Now they have one-fifth or one-sixth. They claim ten millions of people. Father Hecker says that in 1900 they will be able to elect their own President. Then what? The legislation of Congress under their control,—the army and navy at their command. Then Church and State will mean what? Ah, it will mean a union such as we have seen in Italy and Spain. Can the Protestants see nothing in this to induce them to be just? The Catholics will say: "It was you who formed the union of Church and State, when we were fighting against it. Simply because you were in the majority and had power, you had your Protestant preachers in the halls of legislation, and in the army of the United States as chaplains; you had the Protestant Bible in public schools; you established the Protestant religion whenever you could. Being in the majority, you appointed days of thanksgiving and prayer not recognized by us; you recognized the Protestant religion in your forms and ceremonies wherever you could, utterly regardless of the rights of us Catholics. Now that we have a union of Church and State, we will see that it is a union of the State with Catholicism,—not that bastard religion called Protestant, but the pure, genuine thing, the Roman Catholic religion." The Protestant would have to stand with his fingers in his mouth, and with bitter reason to regret that he had ever advocated a union of Church and State, because the very weapons he had made use of, wrested from him, would be turned against him.

Suppose that Paine's Age of Reason were introduced in the schools. Christians would say: "We help support these schools; we are interested in them; we want our children taught; but we don't want them to learn the principles of Paine's Age of Reason; therefore don't put it there." Suppose infidels were in the majority and should reply: "We believe in Paine's Age of Reason, if you don't; being in the majority, we will compel the reading of it." That is just what the Protestants are doing, although the Catholics may do it in turn to-morrow. Protestants may then need the aid of infidels.

But if liberals will do their duty, such a calamity may be averted. If they will organize, use their numerical strength and their moral power, and exert the influence which, united, it is possible for them to exercise on public sentiment and political parties, the complete secularization of the government will reward their efforts. Let them form leagues, not for the propagation of any particular religious views, but to secure such changes as will secure to all classes the enjoyment of their rights and privileges. Surely here is an object to work for, worthy of the earnest efforts and deserving the support and aid of every liberal mind. It furnishes a basis for organization that is broad and deep—which requires neither a sacrifice of individuality nor the profession of a creed. Liberals of Denver, I appeal to you to join in this noble work. It needs your efforts, and you certainly cannot be satisfied with less than it aims to secure. For apathy and inaction there is no excuse. Justice, and a sense of honor, and regard for your own rights and the rights of all, should urge every liberal to action. Organize a Liberal League in this prosperous young city; bring yourselves in harmony with the National Liberal League of the United States, and cooperate with that body in educating the people and influencing public sentiment in favor of separation of Church and State, thorough and complete, so that the rights and liberties of all shall be equally respected.

GEORGE ELIOT.

LONDON, Dec. 12, 1876.

The most gifted and celebrated woman in Great Britain to-day is personally one of the least known. Even her identity is hidden from the multitude by her pen-name, and she enjoys, more than any author of her time, what may well be termed an illustrious obscurity. The whole career of George Eliot has been singular, almost exceptional, and forms a curious and interesting chapter in the history of literature. While her professional name is familiar to cultured persons in every quarter of the globe, there are thousands of people in this great city who have never heard of her. You will hardly credit the statement; I should not myself, if I had not learned its truth by experience.

NATIONAL DIVERGENCES.

I chanced to be talking with an intelligent tradesman in the Strand, a few weeks since, about prominent Londoners, and mentioned George Eliot. "Who is he?" was the inquiry. "Is he in Parliament?" After I had explained, he was none the wiser; but he thought it very queer that a woman should be called George. When I had explained still further, he ventured the opinion that it must be she who had written Lady Audley's Secret; that being the sole novel by a woman he had any acquaintance with.

Since then I have tried the George Eliot experiment on a number of Englishmen—none of them University men, however,—and, with two or three exceptions, they were entirely ignorant of the author or her works.

The average Englishman is an extremely unintelligent person, according to the American standard; and even the Englishman much above the average frequently surprises a "Yankee" by his plentiful lack of information. As a rule, he knows only what is going on around him, and does not want to know anything more. He does not seem to pick up or to feel any interest in anything that does not immediately concern him. He cannot tell you how large Manchester is, how many colleges there are at Oxford, what sort of a place Chester is, or how far it is to Brighton, simply because he has not been there, and has no interest in those towns. It would be almost impossible, I presume, to find any American, not insuperably stupid, from whom you could not learn the approximate population of Philadelphia, and something definite concerning Harvard, Plymouth, or Saratoga, whether he had ever seen them or not. But then we English are English, and we are we.

HER EARLY HISTORY.

George Eliot's Daniel Deronda, which is now so much discussed over here, as well as in your (and my) country, has more than ever directed public attention to her, and hardly a day passes that I do not see, either in journal or periodical, some criticism upon her latest work. Concerning the individual woman, as I have said, next to nothing is known. Her fame, in any wide sense, dates back some twenty years, and in that time has been steadily and rapidly growing. Until she had published Scenes of Clerical Life, she may be said to have made no mark in literature, and indeed she was not recognized to any extent as a genius before the appearance of Adam Bede. Like most authors of note, however, she had been working hard for years, and had been writing a great deal in a fugitive way that escaped identification. Her early history is somewhat obscure, and as she has no inclination to refer to her personal antecedents, her friends, whatever their curiosity, respect her feelings, and preserve silence. Marian C. Evans—her maiden name—was born in Yorkshire, it is said—though her nativity has been assigned to Warwick,—in the summer of 1820, and she is consequently in her fifty-seventh year. Her father was a country curate, I think, and being quite poor, had, in obedience to the proverb, a number of children. Marian early displayed remarkable ability, having keen observation, excellent memory, fine imagination, and an unusual gift of expression. When she was a child she talked like a woman, greatly resembling Macaulay in precocity, and many anecdotes illustrating this are still told by those who were then her neighbors. None of her brothers or sisters seem to have shared her intellect, and it was common to say that she had monopolized the genius of the family. They were of delicate constitution, and all died, I believe, before reaching middle age.

When Marian was ten or eleven, she attracted the notice, and won the admiration, of a rich clergyman of the Established Church, who was visiting her father, and who desired to give her such an education as she deserved to have. Consent was granted, and the girl, after a few years, came here, or near here, to reside in the home of her clerical friend, who virtually adopted her. Although Orthodox by profession, he was very liberal in his views, as so many members of the English Church are, and determined to have her instructed in the most liberal, and at the same time in an entirely masculine, fashion. He employed the best teachers for her until she was twenty, and she made great progress. Indeed, her mind had developed so that she frequently puzzled her teachers by her questions, and surprised them by her originality and cleverness. They scarcely felt competent to go much further with her, and one or two of them acknowledged as much. The clergyman had been for sometime of this opinion, and decided to have her study alone.

HERBERT SPENCER

made her acquaintance, two or three years later, and became deeply interested in her. He spent much time in her society, and was induced ere long to be her teacher. He instructed her in several languages, in music, science, and philosophy, acquainting her with the principles and relations of things, and finding her always a very apt pupil. His opinion of her was, and is still, enthusiastic. He thinks her the greatest woman who has ever lived, and says there is no contemporaneous mind, whether masculine or feminine, that exceeds hers in originality, power, grasp, and subtlety.

The gospel is that he was in love with her thirty years ago, and that he wanted her to be his wife. Spencer is so thorough a philosopher, and so pronounced a bachelor, in these days, that it is hard to conceive of his ever having been influenced by amorous passion. His must have been a Platonic affection, one would suppose, especially when its presumed object is considered. But the sternest philosophers have tender places in their hearts; their blood kindles while their exterior is cold, and their theories are colder. Diogenes, chief of cynics, is said to have become enamored of a celebrated beauty by report, and to have made a long journey to bask in her favors, all in vain. And then there was Aristippus, founder of the Cyrenaic school, who for a while surrendered completely to the charms of Lais.

Whatever Spencer's feelings for Marian, he was of the greatest benefit to her understanding. All the education she received from him was thorough; he developed her highest possibilities. He has continued her friend to this day, and is a regular visitor at her house.

HER LITERARY CAREER.

When she was twenty-five, she began to contribute anonymously to the periodical press, and her contributions were marked by acumen, vigor, and directness. She wrote not only for the magazines and some of the weeklies, but for the quartlies, particularly the Westminster. Her articles were generally believed to be from the pen of a man, and this mistake is said to have pleased her greatly, as she has always had a dislike to appearing womanly, in a distinct sexual sense, in the quality of her mind.

Her first sustained work was a translation of Strauss' Life of Jesus, which, holding that Deity is not a conscious nor personal Being, but a pervading spirit represented by a system of material and spiritual laws, had excited profound attention in the theological and philosophic world. The translation was excellently done, the style being clearer and more animated than that of the original.

Her next effort was an English version of Feuerbach's Essence of Christianity, which was very favorably received both here and on the Continent. She was near thirty when the first of these appeared. She had not then contemplated anything original, but the opinion of some of her intimates, and of a number of critics, determined her to try what success she might have with her own ideas.

Consequently, in a year or so, she issued Scenes from Clerical Life and Silas Marner, made up from her own observation, and evidently the production of a strong, individual intellect. The books gained many admirers among the thoughtful and discriminating, but were not popular until she had received exalted reputation by further efforts. Shortly after (1858) she published Adam Bede, which won immediate success, and led to the recognition of her genius by different sorts of people. Her pen-name, George Eliot, if I mistake not, was first affixed to that work, and speculation became rife as to its authorship. Hardly any one believed it of feminine origin, and as the secret was well kept, there were several claimants, direct or indirect, of the honors awaiting the new star in the literary firmament.

A certain clergyman, I forbear mentioning his name, because he has been punished enough already by his mortifying exposure, asserted openly that he had written Adam Bede; and as he was poor and in delicate health, he received a number of testimonials of appreciation in the shape of sovereigns and Bank of England notes. He persisted in this shameful swindle for ten or twelve months, until some of the veritable author's friends blasted his prospects by establishing his deception.

The exact description of scenery, the whole local color of the story, and the photographic accuracy of a number of the characters drew attention to the neighborhood in which Marian Evans had lived before coming up to London, as the phrase is here. Most of the characters were easily identified, and through them the author was also. She denied for sometime the truth of the irresistible inferences, but they were so cumulative and overwhelming that she ceased denial without admitting anything.

Within little more than a twelvemonth (1859) came The Mill on the Floss, succeeded (1863) by Romola, Felix Holt (1866), The Spanish Gypsy, a poem (1868), and after a considerable interval Middlemarch, The Legend of Jubal, a poem, and Daniel Deronda.

Nearly every one of her novels, in the order of succession, has shown an increase of power, except, perhaps, the last, which almost all the critics think inferior to Middlemarch. They have gained in influence and popularity beyond all question, as the enlarged sales indicate. Hundreds of persons have become admirers of George Eliot recently. I could mention among my own acquaintances, both in the Old and New World, a dozen cultivated people who had not read a line of her writings until the publication of Middlemarch.

She is reputed to be more desirous of fame as a poet than a novelist, and to have been bitterly disappointed at the cold reception of The Spanish Gypsy and Jubal, which she believes fully equal to any of her works. For two or three years, she felt assured that The Spanish Gypsy was her masterpiece; but she has her doubts now, since she has never found a single person, even among her most partial friends, to agree with her.

Most of us are desirous to excel in some other direction than that in which Nature has particularly strengthened us. We care comparatively little for repeated triumphs in the same field. We burn for conquests over fresh forces, and are prone to measure out success by the exertion we make, and the eagerness with which we expect. So it seems to be with George Eliot.

THE COMPENSATION.

Her writings have been extraordinarily remunerative, albeit the prices paid by her publishers have been, as they usually are, much exaggerated. I have been told what amounts she has got for her original works. I do not vouch for their strict accuracy, and up to date, their sale being continuous and steady, they are as follows: Scenes of Clerical Life, £1000; Silas Marner, £1500; Adam Bede, £3500; Mill on the Floss, £4000; Romola, £3000; Felix Holt, £4500; Spanish Gypsy, £500; Middlemarch, £2000; Jubal, £400; Daniel Deronda, £8000; making £32,400 in all, or about $165,000 in our currency.

I have seen her total earnings reckoned at $400,000 to $500,000; but I feel confident that the figures I have given are far more nearly correct, and I have reason to believe that they do not vary materially from the truth. The sum appears large at first; but when we remember that she has been eighteen years in making it, and making it, too, by the severest toil, by the intensest application, it does not appear very remarkable. Nine thousand dollars a year is not a great deal to earn by the pen, especially when it is the pen of the most gifted woman of her era. Literary folk, who, intellectually, are not worthy to unlodge the latches of her shoes, have made much more; and men of business here, in Boston, New York, and other capitals, would count this a very slender income. Reports of literary rewards are ever hyperbolic. The greatest of them, when the actual figures are reached, shrink into very moderate proportions. Compared to any other department of art, or to any kind of commerce, literature is a poor trade. The most eminent and gifted authors seldom gain a comfortable independence; while the guild in general accomplish little more than genteel starvation.

THE TRUTH ABOUT HER MARRIAGE.

For some years, George Eliot has been the legal wife of George Henry Lewes, the distinguished and versatile author, and for a good while previous to their marriage, she was effectually all that she has been since. The story of their relation has been so diversely told, and so often misunderstood that the correct version, as I have reason to believe it, deserves to be given.

Lewes made the acquaintance of Marian Evans soon after she had written Adam Bede, and was delighted with her. He had the same opinion of her that Herbert Spencer had expressed. It was not long before he fell in love with her mind. They had much in common; they had marked similarity of tastes, views, and feelings, and they felt they could be of great benefit to one another intellectually and spiritually. He wanted her to be his wife. But there was a serious obstacle in the way, which was nothing less than that, in the eyes of the law, he already had a wife. He had entered into matrimony ten or twelve years before, and his spouse had run off with another man. She repented in due season; appealed to her liege, who most generously and chivalrously took her back. Being of unstable mind and fickle heart, however, she eloped a second time and rendered restoration to marital favor impossible. At this juncture the masculine George met the feminine George. Having condoned his wife's offence, he could not get a divorce; he must wait for her death, or continue in celibacy. He did not wish to wait, especially as she, having a robust constitution, was threatened with fearful longevity. The impediment to the union of the two authors was really technical, and under the circumstances they took solemn counsel with their friends, among them some of the most eminent names, as to the expediency of acting according to the higher law. The decision was finally rendered in favor of their doing so, and they were wedded by the rite of mutual sympathy and mutual need. After they had lived so for some years, Mrs. Lewes, the eloper, was considerate enough to die, and furnish to Marian Evans the long-coveted opportunity to bear legally the name which the deceased had so greatly dishonored.

George Eliot, from the moment of forming the connection, was called and considered Mrs. Lewes as sincerely and honestly as if she had been wedded by the Archbishop of York and all his subordinate prelates. But many of the feminine friends of the couple were very glad when the natural prejudices of society could be conciliated.

Lewes has had of late a very noticeable influence, and not a good one either, on the style of his wife. He is very self-sufficient and egotistic, and has imposed upon her the idea that his intellect is fully equal, if not superior, to hers; but she is the sole person, save himself, who holds such an opinion. He is very able and learned, but he is one of many, while she is the only one. There is reason to believe he wrote part of Deronda, and caused her to change her usually simple, terse, idiomatic diction for one more strained, recondite, and elaborate, which explains why her last is not her best work. He conceitedly believes hers to be the finest intellect in England with a single exception, which modesty debars him from mentioning.

THE WOMAN AT HOME.

She and her husband reside in a very pleasant house, full of books, bronzes, busts, pictures, and bric-a-brac, near Regent's Park, and their Sunday evening receptions are attended by a number of the most distinguished people at home and from abroad. One may see there from time to time Tyndall, Huxley, Robert Browning, Dr. Carpenter, Darwin, Tennyson, Swinburne, William Morris, the Rossettis, Gladstone, Tom Hughes, Millais, Holman Hunt, Ruskin, Wilkie Collins, Leslie Stevens, and many others, most of them as radical in theology (the Leweses are what might be called scientific Hegelians, firm believers in evolution) as their host and hostess, who entertain very rationally and pleasantly.

The couple have no children, and lead in the fullest sense an intellectual life. She works very hard—harder than her rather delicate health warrants,—often writing as often as seven or eight hours a day. She has a very earnest, moral purpose in her books, in which, indeed, her whole being and thought are concentrated. Before she begins a novel, she not only outlines and arranges it, she so fixes it in her mind that her MS. is often merely a transcript of her elaborate mental preparation. Very far from handsome, she has an intellectual and striking face, too long and angular for symmetry; soft, abundant hair, streaked with gray, a low, sweet voice, a remarkably quiet, somewhat pensive and decidedly winning manner. Some persons do not like her at first, though all her friends, despite her unquestioned plainness, regard her as a charming woman.—Jonquill, in Boston Herald.

WHAT AN EDITOR IS MADE FOR.

'Tis a delightful employment to contemplate the works of Providence, and to trace his deep design in each of his creations. Sometimes I find even my powers taxed to the utmost to discern any adequate purpose to be served by the creation of some persons and things. But almost invariably it has been my experience that sufficiently persevering and painstaking study has brought with it a reward. Then I have asked, "Why has Providence been pleased to bestow on such and such persons the gift of language, the power of expressing themselves by way of speech or writing, seeing they have nothing (but themselves) to express?" I have been led to see that this prodigality illustrates the boundless wealth of Providence. He gives lavishly because he has no need of economy. And then again, when I have asked, "Why were such and such persons created?" I have been reminded that they help to swell the census and the returns of deaths.

Again, not a few of our ministers serve a useful purpose by demonstrating on just how small an amount existence can be maintained. I have known persons whose life answered the question, "How long can a person survive without a soul or a brain?"

Of late my attention has been directed to the question, "Why are editors made, and what purpose do they serve?" After not a little study, I have arrived at a conclusion. There is in every man, even those far advanced toward sanctification, a certain amount of human nature; especially there is a stated amount of spleen and ill-nature that must needs be expended on some one, or else the possessor will burst.

In the very old times a man could spend his bad blood on his neighbor. When he felt a sort of rising within him, he went out and knocked in the head some passer-by, some churl, or vassal, or serf; and after thus letting off steam, he could be as lovely as possible, and a pink of chivalry, and all that. But gradually this custom fell into disuse, being rendered unpopular by the view of the gallows outlined in the background.

So it came about that a man had to discharge his little spite on his wife and children, kicking, cuffing, scolding, making them miserable generally. In this way a man could leave all his ill-humor at home, and could become a bright ornament of general society.

But more recently even this state of things is discouraged and disfavored by what people call the progress of civilization. And I really don't know what mankind at large would do if it were not for the fortunate and timely invention of printing, and the quite wide-spread introduction of the newspaper. And now we discover the object of Providence in the creation of editors. I do not deny (for I can afford to credit all men with what belongs to them, and am not compelled to steal) that I am not a little indebted to Dean Swift, who gives as one of the reasons for not abolishing Christianity and the Establishment in England, the fact that it provided a class of men (the clergy) whom everybody could feel at liberty to insult with entire impunity, knowing that their professional character precluded them from resorting to the violent measures that a layman would employ.

And so the editor affords a safe receptacle for all the small spite which it has pleased Providence to bestow on our race. A man says: "I don't dare to touch any of my neighbors. For reasons which I will not specify, I do not wish to say anything to my wife. But I can write a letter and blow up the editor. If he has said, or allowed to be said, anything that I don't like, or anything that is capable of an unfavorable construction, I can air my cheap loyalty and philanthropy and Orthodoxy, and can call him all manner of names. Probably he will be too busy to reply; but I can hope and believe that I have made him wince, and the relief to me will be all the same." And what a delightful thing it is to think that any one above the grade of—well, above a very low grade of intellect, can stop his paper!

And thus I have reached, as I believe, an answer to the question, What were editors made for?—Rev. L. Philetus Dobbs, D.D., in National Baptist.

A MOODY-AND-SANKEY CONVERT MADE INSANE.

A striking instance of the effect that religious excitement may have on a person's mind was made manifest in this city yesterday by the conduct of a well-known Chicago gentleman, who enjoys a large acquaintance among the business men of this city. The gentleman in question is Mr. Ed. Martin, who for several years has been visiting this section in the interests of the Nantucket Silk Manufacturing Company, of Chicago. Martin was formerly a popular, jolly, good-natured drummer, who sold more goods in Evansville than any other man from Chicago, and who was universally well liked among the business men with whom he had dealings,—as much from his sociability as for his fine business qualifications.

It seems that, while at home in Chicago, he attended the revival meetings that were being conducted by Moody and Sankey in that wicked Sodom, and the result of his attendance was anything but beneficial. He became so worked up with what he had heard that he started out on his last trip a changed man, with a greater quantity of religious fervor and excitement than a well-regulated drummer should carry with him on his perambulations through the West. His friends here noticed the change as soon as he appeared. He registered at the St. George as a "reformed man," and subsequent events have shown that he had "reformed," though the reformation can hardly be called an improvement. Religion was the one theme that he harped upon constantly. He talked it to the merchants on whom he called during the day, and preached warning sermons to all of them about the dire consequences that would follow if they did not heed the Gospel's word. He remained quiet and peaceable enough until Tuesday night, when he was shown to his room, from which he emerged an hour afterwards without so much as a collar to protect him from the chilling blasts of a wintry night. He walked down to the office and started for the street door. The night clerk stopped him, and asked where he was going. His reply was that he wanted to do penance for his sins, and he insisted on going out.

But the clerk entered a gentle protest and had him taken back to his room. The poor fellow became wild with excitement and has had to be watched constantly ever since. Despite the care with which he was guarded, he managed to get away from the room, and yesterday morning was found near Blackford's Grove. The sad fate of poor Martin is sincerely regretted by his many friends in this city. He is a very gentlemanly business man; but the excitement which he has been laboring under, has created an awful change in his manner, and left him almost entirely bereft of reason. The firm for which he travels were telegraphed for last night, and Martin will be taken to his home in Chicago this morning. It is a sad comment on the work of these two Evangelists, Moody and Sankey, when their work is followed by such results as this, and one is led to ask whether there is not some truth in the remark that they "pave more paths to the insane asylums than they do to heaven."—Evansville (Ind.) Courier, Jan. 26, 1877.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE WATER-LILIES.

We rested our oars for a minute,
And in perfect stillness lay,
Viewing the many varied hills
That ascended far away.

Near the boat rose two white lilies,
So beautiful, pure, and fair,
That a thought full of hope then struck me,
As I gazed on them blooming there,—

As they rose from the murky waters
To a purer air above,
And there lay smiling in gladness,
Emblems of peace and love.

It was only a thought of what might be,
If we, like the lilies here,
Could rise from the darkness about us
To a higher and purer sphere.

To a sphere so far above us
Where doubtings all may cease;
Where we, like the lilies, may scatter
Such purity, beauty, and peace.

H. B. C.

WATERTOWN, MASS.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

VOICES.

1.

I heard a voice not long ago
Inquire, "Doth modern thought
Not chill the old-time hope and trust
Our liberal faiths had wrought?"

"Doth this new generation feel,
In prophecy or plan,
The wide-embracing sympathies
That right the wrongs of man?"

"Millennial tones I cease to hear,
Creating all things new;
The old enthusiasm wanes,
Believing notes are few."

2.

Again I heard a voice proclaim
To "plauding hundreds round,
A faith so broad, a hope so strong,
Their pleasure knew not bound.

This voice was of a churchly tone,
But it rang bold and clear:—
"The truth is strong, so very strong,
It chides all souls that fear,

"To undiscovered larger truths
Truths contradicting point;
Be patient, men, and Reason shall
The humblest mind anoint."

3.

And now I hear one more response,—
I call it not mine own;
I but report the things I see,
The tidings to me blown

From all the corners of the earth;
How all the people still,
In spite of fetters binding them,
Their hearts with freedom fill

Ah! deathless hope, that through the world
One purpose yet shall run,—
One faith proclaim how Reason's realm
The victory hath won.

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 3.

T. E. Smith, $2.50; Samuel Lydiard, $3.30; D. E. Boutelle, $2.50; Cash, $6 cents; Miss A. Hall, $1; Benj. S. Price, $5.40; Isaac W. Ensign, $5.22; Hervey A. Dean, $3.20; Joseph Brookway, $5.50; Robert Moore, $5.20; W. C. Preston, 25 cents; David Fey, $3.20; M. D. Conway, $4.04; A. Vacher, $3.37; Harvey Brown, $3.20; F. Renchert, 25 cents; J. H. Treat, $1.60; L. G. Falch, $6; Arthur Farrar, $3; J. J. Brackett, $10; E. Barriott, $3; Hopson & Sherman, $3; J. H. Southworth, $2; Porter C. Bliss, $3; J. Wilson, $1; G. Lee, $3.25; E. J. Turnbull, $3.20; Rosalie Hopper, $3.50; Ira D. Foot, $3.20; J. Chapple Smith, $3.20; F. A. Angel, 25 cents; I. P. Greenleaf, $3.20; D. B. Morey, $3.20; W. O. Gannett, $3.20; P. S. Thacher, 35 cents; J. H. Woods, $4.25; Miss S. E. Dunn, $3.20; Rev. John T. Sargent, $3.20; Geo. W. Robinson, $6; W. H. Sawyer, 75 cents; O. Vossy, $3.25; E. C. Orth, $3; H. Molineaux, $5; Harry Hoover, $1.75; S. H. Stockbridge, $3.20; A. V. Vlack, 25 cents; Dr. E. Mead, $3.20.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 8, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 36 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS PROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. Lytle used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle endorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix, Boston: Published by the National Liberal League, 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. Abbot on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. Kilgore on "Democracy"; by James Parton on "Cathedrals and Beer; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. Underwood on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. Paige on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. Y. Kilgore on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. Mills on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE GREAT ORTHODOX REACTION.

Mr. Charles E. Fitch, the liberal and thoughtful editor of the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle, recently published in pamphlet form two lectures,—one on "Church and State," and the other on "Education and the State." They are characterized by unusual ability, and, widely as we dissent from some of their minor conclusions, we yet recognize with great respect the elevated spirit of truth-loving and truth-speaking which pervades them.

The key-note of the first lecture is contained in its opening sentence: "We hold that the absolute divorce of Church and State is essential to the purity of the one and the integrity of the other." Mr. Fitch, unlike many less-discerning liberals, believes in the fixed and gravely dangerous purpose of "the Roman Catholic hierarchy" to make its Church ultimately superior to the American State—though he fails to see that the chief "Catholic Peril," as we pointed out a year ago in the London Fortnightly Review, lies in the character of the measures which it will goad the "Protestant sectaries" to undertake, in order to break the force of the Catholic attack. He says with great wisdom: "Be not surprised that the age of Döllinger and Hyacinthe is also the age of Antonelli and of our own American Lord Cardinal. The age of Algernon Sidney and of Sir Harry Vane was also the age of Monk, reseating the Stuarts on the throne they had defiled. The age of William the Silent was the age of Alva as well. Beneath the blue empyrean the sullen clouds may float. Absolutism may make its hardest fight in its death agony. Reactionary tendencies have often most decidedly manifested themselves, when progress has exhibited the greatest vitality." And, after enlarging on the tenacity, intensity, and peril of the Catholic purpose to control politics and education in the interest of the Church, he adds with equal wisdom: "We have little hope that the attack which has been begun will not be persisted in. How, then, shall we most effectively meet and most surely repel it? Simply by the vindication of the secular principle. This comprehends our whole duty. . . . And now I commit to your keeping this principle of secularity, with all that it includes, and beseech you, as American citizens, to apply it practically. You will find that, as a general [rule], it embraces many particulars; but these you may as easily elucidate as, having the formula of a simple algebraic equation, you are enabled through it to solve all specific problems that fall within its terms. Be guided by it, as the mariner sails the stormy seas by the star pendant in the Northern sky. Test all things by it, as the chemist tries his metals in the fiery crucible. Cleave unto it, as unto the ark of national safety."

The brave and earnest words of this far-seeing man give a fitting text for what we have to say this week. It is more than a bare abstract possibility that, after a long series of brilliant gains for liberal principles, a great wave of reaction should now be setting in; it is more than a possibility—the signs are many that it is already a fact. Not to cross the ocean for evidences, look at a few lying unheeded at our own doors.

1. The Catholic Church already feels itself so strong in America as to dare openly to lay its hands on the consciences of voters, and to assert by acts, not words alone, its own supremacy to the civil power. This was seen at the late Presidential election in Brooklyn and other places, where orders were issued to vote for Catholic candidates as such. Still more recently the same thing has been done in Canada. So offensive and insolent was the encroachment of the priests on the liberty of the voters at the Bonaventure election, in the Province of Quebec, that the Judges of the Supreme Court, deciding a case in which the means used to determine the election were involved, felt called upon to lay down the following principles: "(1) Parliament is omnipotent and competent to pass any law defining what the Church may do to the citizen; (2) the liberty of the electoral franchise is absolute; (3) the civil courts are charged with correcting the abuses which may slip into preaching or refusing the sacraments; (4) that by threatening electors with spiritual punishment, such as the refusal of the sacrament, the priest or bishop is guilty of exerting undue influence and of fraudulent proceedings; (5) civil oaths must be kept." But, instead of submitting, Monseigneur Langevin, Bishop of St. Germain de Rimouski, issued on the fifteenth of January a "mandement," or pastoral charge to his clergy and laity, in which he "condemns as false and contrary to the teachings of the Church" each of the foregoing principles laid down by the Supreme Court, and further "declares those to be unworthy of the sacraments who shall maintain these propositions, or any of them, until they shall have been disavowed." In other words, the Bishop, on the strength of the Syllabus, defiantly casts down the gauntlet of the Church before the State, and raises openly in Canada the issue which has for years shaken the German Empire to its foundations. The Montreal Herald of January 27 says: "The step taken by the Bishop is a grave one, and may lead to graver consequences—such, perhaps, as none can foresee. It is, we believe, the first time in the history of the country since the Cession that a Bishop has in this formal and public manner undertaken to punish by spiritual censure a high civil functionary for the conscientious performance of his duties to the sovereign and the people. . . . The truth is that the mandement is a declaration that religious equality shall cease in Lower Canada, and that, in virtue of their office in a Church whose creed is opposed to that of a majority of the Dominion, the Catholic Episcopacy have constituted themselves the absolute masters of the entire population of this Province."

2. Not only is the Romish hierarchy strengthening itself everywhere on this continent for a desperate struggle with the people for supreme power, but the Protestant sects also, alarmed equally by the resolute aggressiveness of Rome and the relentless march of science, are rousing themselves as never before in this country to fortify and increase their power—for it is the lust for power, first, last, and all the time, that stirs the ecclesiastical soul with insatiable ambition. Consolidation is the order of the day; union in "unsectarian" propaganda—unsectarian only as respects each other—is the great new feature of Evangelical activity. Witness the healing of old divisions which interfere with the necessary unity of influence over the people; witness the concentration of energies, the massing of forces on the Napoleonic plan, for the subjugation of "infidelity" and the routing of "Romanism"; witness the combined and almost superhuman efforts to swell the membership of all the Evangelical churches, and recruit the "army of Christ," which constitutes the central purpose and secret inspiration of the new crusade; witness the mighty machinery of men and means set in motion to give success and éclat to the Moody-and-Sankey revivals; witness the institution of the Monday lecture-ship under Rev. Joseph Cook in Boston, the noon-day prayer-meeting under Mrs. Van Cott in Wall Street, New York, and similar movements all over the country; in short, witness everywhere exertions such as were never made in this country before on so vast a scale for the defeat of the influences of science and rationalism, and for the religious "bulldozing" of the entire community. Evangelical Protestantism is bestirring itself with gigantic efforts to get the mastery of the public mind, spending its treasures with prodigal hands and training its disciples to keep step to the music of "Hold the Fort" for a purpose far more practical than getting to Heaven—namely, getting the mastery here in the United States. Nor does it stop with spiritual efforts, but appeals boldly to legislation in a way that only dolts can misunderstand. For instance, in the Rhode Island Legislature, the following proceedings are reported on January 24:—

Mr. Bourn, of Bristol, introduced a resolution requesting the Attorney-General to report to the Senate whether any violations of Section XVII., Chapter 232 of the General Statutes have come to his knowledge, and if so, whether any proper proceedings have been taken to enforce the provisions of said sections. The law referred to is what is known as the Sunday Law, prohibiting labor and business on that day of the week.

Mr. Lapham, of Providence.—What is the object of the resolution?

Mr. Bourn.—I have reference to the publication of Sunday newspapers.

Mr. Lapham thought the inquiry had too great scope, and it would reach not only to Sunday newspapers but the dailies, the railroads, etc.

Mr. Verry, of Woonsocket, thought it was a proper inquiry, and would probably have a good moral effect.

Mr. Drake, of Newport, favored the resolution, giving an instance of mechanics carrying on their work Sundays as well as week-days. He thought the law ought not to remain a dead letter.

The resolution was then adopted.

That is one of the baleful fruits of the ostensible closing of the International Exhibition last summer on Sundays—a measure carried through to increase the influence of the "Christian party in politics," but secretly and hypocritically violated by the Commissioners themselves. On the heels of this political triumph over equal rights in religion came the success of the same party in carrying through the United States Senate, by an almost two-thirds vote, a Bible-in-schools amendment of the Constitution, exultingly seized by the "God-in-the-Constitution" advocates as a proof of their unsuspected national influence. And now comes this significant announcement in the Philadelphia Christian Statesman of January 25:—

The Central Christian Advocate speaks out in favor of a revision of the National Constitution. In our remarks on the subject last week we neglected to mention that a bill providing for such a revision is now before the United States Senate. We are not acquainted with its provisions, and public attention has hardly been called to the fact. The Advocate says:—

"We ought to be grateful that it has carried us so safely over eighty-three years and through all the strain of a civil war with so few amendments. Except for the intelligence and religious character of the people, its weakness would have become manifest years ago. But the nation has really outgrown the Constitution, and finds itself in a condition of great peril because of new combinations and unforeseen emergencies. New and complex questions have arisen since their day, and demand attention. Nor are we wanting in men in every way competent for the task that a revision of the Constitution would devolve upon them. Our political experience has been gained under favorable circumstances, and the present is perhaps as favorable a period as we shall ever have for so responsible a duty. The experiences of the past twenty years have educated the people more rapidly than half a century of ordinary political life. And the present crisis has awakened the public mind so widely that it can have no rest until this, the greatest want of the times, is satisfied."

We shall not join in any active efforts to bring about a revision at the present time, but, if it shall be undertaken, we shall consecrate all of time and strength which the Lord gives us for this part of our work, to secure an instrument which shall justly and fairly represent the Christian character of the nation.

Note that closing paragraph. In view of the astonishing strength developed last August in Congress by the ideas of the Christian Amendment party, no sane liberal can escape the conviction that religious equality and liberty are to-day in more imminent danger of being undermined than at any time since the government was founded. The train is laid; the match only is wanting. If there is to be now a revision of the United States Constitution, Orthodoxy will imprint itself in some form on the new instrument. The only possible preventive of that outrage is to multiply Liberal Leagues like the sands of the sea.

3. And what of the liberals themselves? They have lost ground, and are losing it rapidly under the powerful influences brought against them. Instead of standing all together side by side in defence of the priceless heritage they have received, with an heroic determination to make its preciousness known to all the people, they look on and do almost nothing to defend it against burglarious seizure. The Unitarians, once the great champions of "spiritual freedom," have settled down, like the Universalists, into a respectable Christian sect, and with a few shining exceptions take no part in the struggle for that great cause to-day. The Spiritualists, once a power for liberal principles, seem to be on the point of imitating the Unitarians and taking a new, backward position as a Christian sect; for last summer they organized at Philadelphia a "National Conference of Spiritualists," with the following "declaration of principles":—

"We recognize in Jesus of Nazareth the spiritual leader of men, and accept his two great affirmations of love to God and love to man as constituting the one ground of growth in the individual, and the only and sufficient basis of human society."

Here in Boston radicalism seems more and more tending to an apologetic attitude. It seems to forget in the grand dream of a universal "fellowship of the spirit" the inexorable condition of such a fellowship—that genuine human brotherhood can only be attained on the broad platform of equal rights in religion and individual liberty grounded on an absolutely secular State. Seeing that it contemplates no action, the world pays little heed to Boston radicalism to-day, and the great New York dailies no longer report at length its club-meetings and conventions, as they did eight or ten years ago. Here and there signs of a new, more resolute, more active temper make themselves visible to the attentive gaze, and kindle hopes of a "true revival" of public spirit; but that intensity of purpose which knows how to "burn its brightness through the world" finds its representative to-day in Dwight L. Moody, not in Theodore Parker. Yet why should Boston radicalism thus seem to be smitten with imbecility and paralysis? Is it any less true, any less needed, any less mighty than of old? Verily, it is not dead, but sleepeth! Liberty and justice and truth are surely humanity's crown jewels still; and we cannot but believe that noble old Boston will again prove herself, as of yore, the nursery of omnipotent movements for ideas which shall go forth conquering and to conquer, and not be drowned in the great reflux wave of antediluvianism!

THE VAGUENESS OF FREE RELIGION.

The objection made to the ideas of Free Religion on the ground of their vagueness is natural, in view of the fact that more sharpness has been demanded of religious ideas than of any others. Indefiniteness is tolerated everywhere more easily than here where definiteness is, strictly speaking, irrational. In religion people are satisfied with nothing less than final dogma. In politics, literature, society, loose opinions will do. That under the theory held by Free Religion, opinions should seem loose because they must of necessity be broad, need excite no surprise. This is no peculiarity of our American forms of rationalism; but a characteristic of rationalism everywhere, a trait of rationalism wherever found. The inclusive thought must be the wide thought—must be faint in outline and indistinct in horizon; the more so the wider it is. As it becomes philosophical, inclusive therefore of larger intellectual spaces than are covered by dogma, the boundary line of definition will be very shadowy indeed. Yet this indistinctness will be a mark of its truth and sincerity. This appears in the conception of M. Charles Fauvety, whose new enterprise in Paris was noticed in THE INDEX two weeks ago. His idea corresponds very nearly to ours, and is interesting as showing how inevitably thinking on the same general plane strikes on the same thoughts. Reference to one or two of his main positions will throw light on our attitude towards religious beliefs. His opening "declaration" is quite in the strain of THE INDEX: "Placing in God the ideal of all perfection, and making perfection the aim and end of all existence, each of us should make effort to help with all his means and capacities others to perfect themselves in like manner." His "moral profession" runs thus:—

I affirm God.
I make confession of duty.
I desire justice and fraternity.
I believe in the solidarity of mankind.
I aspire to perfection.

"Religion is philosophy put into life"; made vital. "Religion is one and the same, notwithstanding the diversity of shapes it has assumed; it grows and develops with the human mind." "Religion seems good, useful, needful, indispensable when, resting on the acquisitions of the human mind, put in harmony with reason, freed from superstition, miracle, fanaticism, it offers itself as a product purely human, relative, perfectible, bringing the ideal sphere within reach of all." In answer to a question concerning the place occupied by God in this conception, he says: "Conceived as the universal unity, God stands for the supreme reality which finds perpetual expression in the universe. He represents for us the synthesis of syntheses, life at its highest power, being raised to the highest potency, the plenitude of perfection." Here, under another form of words, is the idea expressed in the formula: religion is Man's effort to perfect himself.

"Laical religion is simply religion without priesthood or priestly order. Its office is to open direct communication with God." In a note appended, as explanatory, to this last declaration the writer contends that this unsacerdotal system is a return to the genuine religious traditions of the race. "Moses, Jesus, Buddha, Confucius, Mahomet, all the pure religious reformers, have proclaimed a religion without priest or sacerdotal order." The attitude of the new faith towards Christianity corresponds to that taken by the first Christian reform towards Judaism; it can say with Jesus, "I have not come to destroy, but to complete," an attitude that is intellectually neutral, but soon becomes aggressive when intelligence becomes mixed with feeling. It will be interesting to watch M. Fauvety's course, and see how long he can abstain from aggression against the priesthood that will curse him, and the Church which is in determined and active opposition to every one of his aspirations. The freedom and noble generosity of his position are beautiful and worthy of all praise. It will be reassuring to know that he successfully maintains it. But if he does not, if he, too, must come down from his height into the arena, and do battle with the dogmatism and superstition that will not be disregarded and cannot be slipped by, it will be a great satisfaction to think that spiritual freedom has so noble a champion, and that the army of progress has so many allies. O. B. F.

PARKER PILLSBURY IN WORCESTER.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Next Sunday will be my fourth in a course of lectures here, which began with the first of the present month. On Sunday following, first in February, I am engaged to the Free Religious Association in Providence; that, with faithful effort and energy, manages to continue its regular Sunday meetings uninterruptedly, and with good audience.

Much of my time here in Worcester has been devoted to consideration of the Sunday Law, and the late attempts to enforce it. Three Sunday morning conferences, well attended, have been given wholly to it. There has lately been a prosecution by the city authorities of a young man, for violating the Sunday, by selling newspapers a few hours on Sunday morning. He, or his friends, I am told, retorted by attempt to arrest the railroad companies for their more wholesale outrage every Sunday, and night before, and night after, of the same "holy day." But the officers refused even to entertain the complaint, though themselves, or a part of them, constant buyers of the Sunday newspapers of the young man. The pursuit of the newsmen with so much zeal amounted to a real persecution, and has awakened much interest, as well as apprehension, on the part of the friends of true religious and civil liberty; as will be seen if you can find space for the enclosed report of our last Sunday morning conference, from the Worcester Transcript, in connection with this hasty note, from

Yours, ever glad to be your coadjutor,

PARKER PILLSBURY.

WORCESTER, January, 1877.

THE OBSERVANCE OF SUNDAY.—Grand Army Hall was well filled yesterday morning. Mr. John Howes occupied the chair, and Miss Alla Foster was Secretary. Messrs. Parker Pillsbury, Stephen S. Foster, Hon. Geo. F. Thompson, H. H. Bigelow, A. B. Brown, and others, discussed the following resolutions, which were finally laid on the table for further debate next Sunday morning:—

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to any legislation making distinction of days into secular and holy, or which estimates human actions not by what they are in themselves, but by the time when done; not by their character but by the clock and the almanac.

Resolved, That we consider the late decision of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, which compels the Jews to prefer the Christian Sunday before the Sabbath, which they and their fathers have solemnly sanctified for four thousand years, as one of the most cruel proscriptions and persecutions of the nineteenth century.

Resolved, That we deprecate the many recent arrests in Massachusetts, and other States, of citizens for violation of Sunday statutes; especially we look upon the late prosecution of a news-vender in Worcester, for quietly pursuing his avocation a few hours on Sunday morning, for an honest livelihood, as downright persecution; while the same marshal and authorities refused even to entertain complaints against railroad and other powerful and popular companies for constant and wholesale offences against the same law.

Resolved, That the laws of this Commonwealth, which forbid useful labor and innocent amusements on the first day of the week, are in direct conflict with the teachings and example of Christ and his apostles, and a gross violation of our State Constitution, and ought to be repealed by all true friends of Christianity and of civil and religious liberty.

In the evening, Mr. Parker Pillsbury gave a discourse, one hour and twenty minutes long, on "The Sabbath; its Origin and History." The audience was large and attentive.

Communications.

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 21, 1877.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—The following quotation from a letter to the editors of the Cornell Era, by Andrew D. White, President of the Cornell University and now absent in Europe, may not be uninteresting to your readers:—

"I have been greatly struck by the marked progress there [in England], in everything pertaining to education, since my former visits. . . . Among the foremost men in this good work is Sir Charles Read, Chairman of the London School Board, a man who gave up Parliamentary honors to devote himself to his present duties. . . . He and his colleagues have just been through a hard battle and won a great victory. Although a thoroughly Christian man, he had a large part of the Church against him,—he and his friends supporting a system of national schools under national control, and the other side declaring for a system mainly regulated by the Church authorities. The battle at one time seemed doubtful. During my stay in London a demonstration of great apparent power was made against the national school system, the Bishop of London presiding, and a large number of clergymen and gentlemen of influence joining in a meeting wherein secular education was denounced as 'godless' and tending to 'atheism.' . . . But the result has astonished everybody. By immense majorities, such men as Sir Charles Read, Mr. Lyulph Stanley, and their associates, have been continued in office, and it may interest some of our friends to know that among the members of the Boards returned in the interest of national schools are at least two women. By the way, let me say that I have been not a little surprised to find, even in conservative quarters in England, how much less fear there is of the 'woman question' than with us. If a woman is really the most fitting candidate for a position on a school board, it never seems to occur to any body to reject her because she is a woman,—and it should be borne in mind that men of very high social and political standing are glad to take such positions. There can be no doubt now that Great Britain is to have a national and secular education from the primary to the most advanced departments of instruction. . . . Since my former visits to the universities, all the test-oaths and declarations which barred out students not conforming to the Established Church have been abolished, and there seems no injurious check upon freedom of thought."

I will add for your own interest that our "Religious Association for Free Discussion" of which you have a notice in a late INDEX, is rapidly increasing in the number of members every week.

The people of this place have been very slow to come forth and stand up for radical ideas, especially in religion; but I think that our meetings show that there have been some freethinkers who, however, have not felt strong enough to speak their thoughts. Our meeting seems to be a vent for the suppressed thoughts of these people.

Yours respectfully,
MARGARETTA J. SINTON.

CHICAGO LETTER.

CHICAGO, Jan. 24, 1877.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Moody and Sankey have left Chicago and gone to Boston, and so it came about that the last-mentioned city and all her evil ways was made the prolific theme of a breakfast-table conversation not long since. Breakfast-table discussions are always edifying, if for no other reason than the admirable opportunity they afford us for viewing the commonplace aspect of things. At this particular breakfast-table there is no autocrat, not even a small boy with an air-gun, whose sudden explosions shall opportunely break in upon too much and too monotonous talk, which in this case "goes on forever," like Tennyson's brook. One young man expressed his deep gratification that the Evangelists were to visit the Hub, for, said he, "Boston is the wickedest city in the country." Young men are pretty good judges of what wickedness is; and the school-ma'am opposite evidently regarded this positive statement as authoritative, for she assented to it with great volubility, and between them I know not what would have become of the respectable fame of your city, had not someone ventured timidly to inquire if there were not a good deal of culture and intelligence there. It was frankly admitted that Boston was not below par in intellectuality, and thereupon it came out that the special form of wickedness which distinguished it was the wickedness of infidelity. But Messrs. Moody and Sankey have a prescription warranted to cure all such dangerous ills. You have but to reject the old remedy of reason, and adopt that of faith, and you'll be no more troubled either with intellectuality or infidelity.

Mr. C. D. B. Mills, of Syracuse, well known to the readers of THE INDEX, has lately been with us. A few evenings since, he lectured before the Philosophical Society on the "Condition and Destiny of Humanity." One is glad to be even a small and insignificant speck of humanity, to hear such generous praise of its achievements, and such glorious prophecies of its future. Mr. Mills is an idealist without being a sentimentalist. Was it Alcott who said the idealist is the only practical man? At any rate the true idealist does not ignore the common things of life, but detects fine spiritual meanings in them all. Content to "keep his feet low and his forehead high," he confines his abode neither to earth nor sky, but stands sure-footed on some everlasting rock to gaze at and ponder the meaning of the stars.

After dwelling some little time on the past, Mr. Mills thought, notwithstanding all that it has accomplished, we may be glad with Emerson that the aboriginal man is dead and gone. Much has been done, but much more remains to be done. "The civilization of man is not yet up to what is prefigured in his own nature," said the speaker; and farther on, "Our civilization is an ameliorated barbarism, as our religion is a softened idolatry." That religious growth has not kept pace with scientific is shown by the fact that science is free but religion is not. Men are no longer hampered to any great extent in the investigation of scientific truths; but a fair degree of moral courage is necessary to him who proclaims his disbelief in the prevailing theological dogmas of the time. In religion it is the "destiny of man to exhaust the possibilities of God." A no less great career is open to society than to man. "The immensities of virtue and beauty lie open to society as to individuals." The time will come when "society itself shall be a church and life a worship." Mr. Mills closed with an eloquent appeal to all to work for humanity, and to do so with the humble devotion of a Fichte, not minding whether the work be recognized as ours or not.

Then came the critics with words of hearty commendation both for the speaker and his discourse, granting only that the latter were true. "And pity 'tis 't is 'n't true," seemed to be the underlying thought with many, who doubted if, either physically or morally, we were climbing the slow up-grade of progress. One speaker thought that the delicate constitutions of our boys and girls was proof that physically we have degenerated; and found in the crowds who nightly flocked to the Tabernacle a better illustration of the mental status of the people than in the slim attendance at the Philosophical Society. Another on and in the lecturer's idealism a kind of spiritual optimism, and thought him not a keen, social analyst. The same speaker feared, if Mr. Mills' theory of continual growth in perfection be true, the time might come when an enlightened intelligence would be so universal that mediocrity would reign supreme, and truth be so cheap as to become a drug in the market. There may be good logical foundation for such an apprehension as this, as there is for the belief that sometime our little planet will go tumbling headlong into the sun. Mathematicians and philosophers may be, if they will, excellent borrowers of trouble, and with their figures of arithmetic, and figures of speech, search out some remote truth, which, if left alone, would be quite harmless; but which, when flaunted before the imagination, acts as a very good scarecrow.

Mr. Mills' assertion that our aspirations are the forerunners of our accomplishments, was criticized on the ground that it was the same doctrine as that which lay at the bottom of all theological and metaphysical errors. "It was," said the critic, "an anti-phenomenal theory, and unscientific; but I take it Mr. Mills did not mean we were to make entities of our fancies and floating desires, as metaphysicians do of their fine abstractions, setting them before us as positive facts, and fancying we have realized when we have only imagined them. An aspiration is not to be clothed upon with so much credulity as to appear an accomplishment. It is to be believed in as a means, and not as an end. Surely there can be no error in the faith which each man feels in his highest longings; and as we have reached and set aside many old ideals, why may we not hope either in time or eternity to attain other and higher ones?"

Mr. Mills read his essay on Emerson to a small but highly-appreciative audience, who met to hear it at a private residence on the West Side. The paper was not altogether the loving eulogy of a disciple for his master, as some of us may be pardoned for half-expecting it would be. A brief but complete historical sketch of Emerson's antecedents, together with a careful analysis of his mind and character, and a choice of extracts from the essays, which showed a critical discernment of their literary merit, gave us not a mere sketch of the great sage, but something nearer a perfect portrait, with outlines well-defined, and the whole glowing with life.

CELIA P. WOOLLEY.

CHELSEA LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The members of the Chelsea Liberal League assembled according to appointment at the residence of D. G. Crandon, 96 Bellingham Street, Monday evening, the 29th ultimo. The Chairman, Mr. Crandon, congratulated the members on the goodly number present, and the holding of their second meeting on the birthday of Thomas Paine. He welcomed the League, and expressed the hope that each member would aid in making the occasion one of personal pleasure and a common source of general good. The Secretary read the report of the organizing efforts, and presented the charter of the Chelsea Liberal League as the first fruits of those beginnings. New members signed the constitution, and on a call for resolutions Professor Toohy read the following:—

WHEREAS, The century plant of the nation—the Centennial—has come and gone, and left its glad and gladdening memories to strengthen the hopes of all who work and wait for the perfection of the Republic, that the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness may become organic in the land, and priestly intolerance and sectarian misrule come to an end; and,

WHEREAS, The Centennial Congress of Liberals organized the National League to secularize the Government and separate the Church from the State, by and through the aid of auxiliary leagues throughout the land; therefore,

Resolved, That the rejection of the Paine bust by the Select Council at Philadelphia is a foolhardy and wicked violation of the spirit of freedom, and a needless insult to the generous promptings of the donors; and that we, the members of the Chelsea Liberal League, deem this, the one hundred and fortieth birthday of Thomas Paine—"the author hero,"—a fitting occasion to bear our most solemn protest against this new attempt to belittle the life-services of Mr. Paine, while disappointing the fraternizing expectations of freedom-loving men and women in the midst of their Centennial rejoicings.

Resolved, That this last effort to strengthen the power of superstition is too important to be passed over without reminding the Liberals throughout the land that "eternal vigilance is the price of freedom," and that the grand army of freethinkers and freedom-lovers should unite their efforts in making sectarians realize their determination to secularize the government or the country, and have the Church separate from the State.

Resolved, That the logic of events and the growing liberalism of the age alike remind us of the great obligation we are under to the life-efforts and heroic services of Thomas Paine; and that we deem it a pleasure no less than a duty to make this acknowledgment in honor of the writer, the patriot, and the man.

The resolutions were warmly approved and unanimously adopted.

Mr. Wilcox called attention to Mr. Conway's article in THE INDEX, showing how the life and writings of Mr. Paine had been kept before the public, particularly of England, and the consequent circumstances that helped to make Mr. Paine obnoxious to local and general sectarianism. It was a new illustration of the old saying that "opposition is the life of trade."

The Rev. Mr. Strickland's youthful experience as a student of Mr. Paine's writings showed that parental vigilance and opposition in such matters only sharpened the appetite, and increased the desire for the forbidden knowledge. He was satisfied, however, that Mr. Paine's influence had been to him a good, as these writings had liberalized his judgment and helped to emancipate him from dogmatic theology.

Professor Toohy seconded the suggestion of Mr. Wilcox about the reading of Mr. Conway's article, as he thought there was need, great need, of more and better information about the life and labors of Mr. Paine. He could remember the time when professional and otherwise intelligent men did not consider it necessary to be acquainted with the biography of Mr. Paine to justify an opinion on the merits of the man. He recalled an incident, in which George Lippard, the novelist, manifested surprise on learning that Mr. Paine's life had been of sufficient importance to mankind, to call for and exhaust four biographies before Mr. Vale, of New York, published his. Mr. Lippard atoned for this ignorance, however, and, after examining the publications of Philadelphia during the American Revolution, made honorable mention of Mr. Paine in a publication on Washington and his Generals. This brought his life and writings into literature. The limbo of commonplace gave way, and the Atlantic Monthly helped on the good work. True, the writer of the three articles that appeared in the columns of that publication a few years ago, was more conventional than respectful, speaking of "the author-hero" as "Tom" Paine. Better manners and more manly sense characterized the second and closing articles; for the writer had learned, among other matters, that Thomas, and not "Tom," was the Christian name of Mr. Paine. Since then, there had been an increasing demand for information about the life and services of Mr. Paine. Three clergymen have made him a study, and the subject-matter of lecture-room remark. Rev. John W. Chadwick has more than once invited audiences in Boston and elsewhere to join him in doing justice to the political services of Thomas Paine. The Rev. Mr. Bell makes Thomas Paine the central figure in the "times that tried men's souls," in one of his regular course lectures; while the Rev. Martin K. Schermerhorn makes him the subject of a new study from a religious point of view. Mr. Chadwick concedes him to have been a patriot; Mr. Bell makes him par excellence the civilizer; leaving for Mr. Schermerhorn the agreeable acknowledgment that Mr. Paine was "an Unitarian." But much remains to be done, before the ignorance and insolence of theologic conceit is made to give way to that more native and honorable judgment that found expression through secular opinion, saying, and singing:—

"God save great Thomas Paine,
His 'Rights of Man' proclaim
From pole to pole."
(Quoted in Mr. Schermerhorn's lecture.)

Mr. Hamlen moved that the resolutions be offered the Boston Herald, INDEX, Investigator, Banner of Light, as well as the Public, Pioneer, and Record of Chelsea, for publication. Complimentary remarks were made on the growing independence of the secular press, and an article from the Boston Herald was read by way of illustration. Mr. Hamlen also read a part of Mr. Chadwick's article on Mr. Paine from THE INDEX, which called forth additional remarks from Messrs. Lincoln, Turk, Dodge, Mayo, Casey, Moore, and Toohy. It was then agreed that the next meeting would be held at the residence of Rev. E. F. Strickland, 13 Chestnut Street, Monday evening, Feb. 12, 1877. The meeting then adjourned.

J. H. W. TOOHY, Secretary.

167 1/2 BROADWAY, CHELSEA, MASS.

"HOW," NOT "WHY."

Those whose habitual mode of viewing things is anthropomorphic insist that evolution shall fully answer why, on peril of being cast aside as bad science. In those departments where our knowledge is full and precise, we perceive the inquiry to be out of place; but just as the problem becomes complex and obscure, it obtrudes itself as the test question. Yet the word is purely logical, and belongs to the domain of the subjective. As applied to natural processes it is incompetent. "Why I think thus or so," "why I affirm this, that, or the other thing," is the only setting appropriate for the word at all. As to everything objective, the answer to how exhausts the knowable. Try it,—confining the inquiry to what is well-known, as thus: Why 3x8=24? Why the square of the hypotenuse equal the square of the sides? Why the angle of reflection equal that of incidence? Why a ball subjected to two forces take the diagonal of a parallelogram whose sides represent the separate forces? Why oxygen combined with hydrogen form water and not quicksilver or good soft-soap? And so on through the catalogue of familiar things?

There is no answer to such questions, but no one thinks of therefore calling in question mathematical or physical science. Once we have resolved our product into its factors, and have quantitatively stated the coöperant conditions of the complex result, the problem is exhausted.

If the pupil still asks, Why? we can only restate the fact, and say three and three are the factors of nine, and the ball takes the diagonal because very likely the poor ball could not take a different direction. Things behave in that way under the given conditions, and science has no office in the premises but to classify and correlate the different behaviors and show to the understanding that, while they appear to be diverse and dissimilar, they have a fundamental unity. To ask evolution why the cosmic procession has been along the line of an orderly progress, is to put it to a strain the multiplication table itself is not equal to.

Could the evolutionist show never so cleverly that mind itself was in that line, and apprehends and refects that order because it is born of it, and has a genetic relation to it,—that the idea of order, harmony, beauty, etc., are so constituted,—he would indeed assimilate and unify the larger cosmic processes with the more familiar law of heredity, but would leave the question of why the germ takes on the parent form, instead of any one of the thousands of possible forms still unresolved.

But the point I wish to make is whether this proclivity to ask why, where how is the proper question, is not an intellectual infirmity and impotence.

The geocentric theory made it impossible for the ancients to think of the earth except as having a strong support. That mental infirmity was then warrant for claiming a corresponding necessity in the nature of things. It had all the authority of a primitive deliverance of consciousness. Take away the elephant, and the firm earth with "all which it inhabits" would fall into—! Demonstrate to one having that confirmed mental habit that the elephant was a fiction, that the earth was self-sustained, or (if he preferred) had always been and was still falling into—, and his philosophic repose would be gone, and very likely his ethic life impaired. After Kepler had demonstrated the laws of the planetary motions, he could not understand why those bodies remained in the orbits whose elements he had formulated, unless an attendant spirit held each one to its place. To modern thinking it suffices to view it as in the nature of matter, once set going under those conditions, to keep that course; but to the general thought a will is still necessary to give the initial impulse.

So it appears that the advance of science is a process of de-anthropomorphization. The notion of a superintending will marks the intellectual progress, and is a hindrance to correct thinking. To say that things have proceeded thus or so because a Divine Being so ordained it, seems to explain by classifying natural processes with human doings; but I am convinced it is a cheap and superficial explanation, intellectually considered, and in a moral and religious view positively vicious.

No one gets a scientific apprehension or solution of the problem, or gets any firm intellectual grip upon the fundamental principles involved, till he thinks away the divine purpose, and conceives of the forces, relations, or principles as self-sufficing. No mathematician conceives the primary relations of quantities as depending upon the Divine will. They lie deeper, and determine that will. It is a hurtful superstition to regard the moral law as originating in will, and deriving its binding force from the fact that God made and enjoined it. A higher morality and a better religion regards God as worthy of love and reverence because his will is in perfect conformity to that law. That religion and morality which bases directly upon the moral law is the only one that can survive the dynastic revolution in theology which is imminent.

E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, O.

TEACHING GOD TO BE GOOD.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your article upon "Prayer" (INDEX, Jan. 25), as practically designed to suggest to God a higher and larger goodness than would be possible to him without it, is so "true to life," that I am tempted to relate an incident which illustrates the position.

Two or three years ago, two bright little boys of nearly the same age, and living in houses but a few yards apart, sickened on the same day with diphtheria. The motherly and medical treatment were in the two cases almost precisely the same; but, while one recovered, and in a month was running about with his playfellows, the other, a very beautiful and winning little fellow, succumbed to the disease.

The mother of the first child went to pay a visit to the other mother, and in conversation thus detailed the untiring assiduity she had made upon the Throne of Grace.

"I prayed for my boy's life as I never prayed before. One whole night I wrestled in prayer to God that he might be spared. And I believe he was spared in answer to it. What are the promises for, if we don't try them?"

This was, of course, very heart-rending for Mrs. C. to hear. She also had prayed fervently for the life of her child; but, as it now seemed, had not importuned him with sufficient energy to insure success. Stung at last to say something, she replied: "But I should think, Mrs. B., you would be afraid to pray so persistently that God would change his plans for your child."

"O," responded the other, "I always ask with the proviso, that, if he sees best, he will do it."

"But he will do what is best whether we ask or not, will he not?"

"O, undoubtedly," was the ready answer; "but I think sometimes our prayers help him to determine what is best."

This was the actual bona fide utterance of an estimable Christian woman—one of those who profess entire sanctification,—not lacking in intelligence, and not egotistic in any other than a religious sense. And why should her innocent remark excite a smile? It is but putting in plain English the indirect teaching of the Bible and the Church.

I have seen clergymen made very uncomfortable by the results of their well-meant attempts to reconcile these apparent contradictions to persons whose perceptions were sharpened by the agony of bereavement. Imagine a minister making a pastoral call upon the two mothers at the close of the above conversation. To the well-satisfied one who rehearses to him her success in prayer, he says: "I rejoice with you, my friend. The great Hearer and Answerer of prayer has not been deaf to your plea. In the time of your trouble you called upon him and his promise has not failed."

"But," cries the bereaved mother, "did I not pray also? Did not you, reverend sir, kneel here in this room and supplicate the Throne of Grace for my child?"

"Certainly," answers the man of consolation; "but God has inscrutable reasons for his dealings with men. He knew why it was best for your darling to be taken while the other was spared."

"Then God saw it was best for the other to live, did he?"

"Certainly, dear madam. I truly believe so."

"But—somehow I am confused,—did he see it was best before the prayer, or only afterward? I cannot understand."

"My dear madam, none of us can understand these things. These are mysteries in the ways of Providence that we must not seek to penetrate. Our duty lies in simple submission to his will. Let us pray!"

H. L. B. B.

PHILADELPHIA.

"REVEREND JOSEPH COOK."

That is what the Advertiser calls him, but, after giving his lectures careful attention, and noticing the decidedly partisan and consequently unfair spirit he manifests, we find so little to reverence that we cannot admit the applicability of the prefix to his name.

It would seem from his frequent assertions that he has read some modern works on biology, and perhaps has had the honor of visiting the rooms of a few German professors of distinction, during their hours for general reception, or otherwise; whereupon he proceeds to annihilate Prof. Huxley, and all such scientists, whom he terms materialists. With technical words, and divisions, and subdivisions all the way from firstly to thirty-ninthly, he goes through microscopy to the bioplast, and, having found beyond the bioplast the gulf between the living and the non-living, he denies that they can bridge over this gulf, and find the cause of the living. Then, thrice demanding with grandiloquent vehemence whether life is life or mechanism; or, as he says, "life or mechanism—which?" (a point they do not dispute in the way he puts it), he proceeds to toss off into nonentity these poor scientists, and calls them "small philosophers," who (as he says from an intentional or otherwise inability to comprehend them) fall to find in life any cause back of an evolution from mechanism. "Small philosophers," by the way, seems to be a favorite expression of his. Having thus, in a breath, as he supposes, blown those small philosophers into obscurity, he comes boldly up to this great gulf beyond the bioplast, separating the living from the non-living, the known from the unknown; and with the usual assurance of the emotional class gets placidly astride of that religious mosaic of the old semi-barbarous Hebrews called the Bible, majestically sails across this (to others) impassable gulf, with all the complacency of a broomstick-rider, and finds on the other side, not the infinite unknown, but a decidedly anthropomorphic Deity whom he knows all about, and before whom he falls down to worship and ask special favors with all the conceived confidence, and more than puerility of the Hindoo before his juggernaut.

He is reported to have said that, not long since, he met a "small philosopher," who said to him that the New Testament could not be true, because the mustard-seed is there called the smallest of seeds, when in fact there were other seeds still smaller. A weak argument it may be, but our Rev. gentleman loses patience at once, and proceeds to epithets, specially designating this "small philosopher" as the "mustard-seed philosopher." Again, having sailed over the impassable gulf, he not only knows the source of the bioplast and can define the unknowable, but he triumphantly utters the dictum that this book, upon which he took his aerial flight, is the only book in the world that contains "perfect moral and religious winnowedness." How refreshing it must be to him! His true inwardness finds perfect winnowedness, and through this winnowedness he knows it all. Surely we ought not to wonder that he scouts the small philosopher and the poor scientist who labors and investigates so studiously and thoroughly, and yet modestly admits that he does not know it all. However, with all due respect to the peculiar differentiation of bioplastic aggregation of which he is constituted, we submit, whether he may not, to humor his fondness for epithets, and to keep up a vegetable comparison by way of distinction from the mustard-seed philosopher, be properly termed the cabbage-head philosopher; and whether the old adage, Parturit montes, nascetur ridiculus mus, may not be applicable to his efforts, notwithstanding his knowledge of "perfect winnowedness."

NIMROD.

BOSTON.

THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I have just read the letter of David Porter giving his reasons for stopping his subscription. I wish I could send you a name to compensate for the loss. The best that I can do is to heartily thank you both for your candor in your own discussions of political questions and your impartiality in allowing both sides a hearing in your columns. The course which you have taken seems to have given offence to a few extreme partisans; be assured that it has been gratefully appreciated by at least one Democrat who has not, by the by, failed to discover your personal predilections towards Republicanism.

Allow me a word in behalf of Democracy. I write not as a Democrat, but as a liberal. Mr. Porter's assertion that "every Democratic subscriber you have has received his liberal ideas from Republican teachers" reminds one very forcibly of the claim that all the goodness which can be found in human character owes its origin to Christian influences. But however we got our liberalism, there are some of us who find it not inconsistent with one of the fundamental principles of Democracy,—the sovereign rights of the individual against the encroachments of centralized power. There are many acts in the history of the party which cannot be objects of pride. In the scramble for supremacy its time-honored principles are often disregarded. Sectional selfishness for a long time arrayed it against an enslaved race,—though we need to be constantly reminded that the preservation of the Union, not the freedom of the negro, was the Republican war-cry. An apprehension of the principle that tolerance towards the new does not necessitate intolerance towards the old has sometimes subjected the Democratic party to the unwarranted designs of Catholicism and flooded it with an ignorant following. Its distrust of all sumptuary legislation as a means of reform has often given its opponents good occasion to seek to identify it with the interests of intemperance and disorder. Its Bourbon element has been, and still is, unfortunately large and controlling. But with all its faults, a party which recognizes as its founder the man who penned the Declaration of Independence, and who worked side by side with Thomas Paine to establish a Republic without an Established Church, and which has recently blessed the country with one of the purest of men and most consistent and fearless of radicals, the late lamented Speaker of the House of Representatives,—such a party as this is not without reasonable claims to the gratitude of freethought.

HENRY DOTY MAXSON.

AMHERST COLLEGE, Jan. 25, 1877.

THE REVIVAL TACTICS.

It is understood that Mr. Moody is not desirous to begin the revival movements proper, the direct efforts for the conversion of "sinners," just yet. He needs time first to sharpen the tools. Of the Orthodox church-members in Boston proper, there are at least ten thousand upon whose active coöperation in his work he has a right to count, and who have already been stimulated to engage in it by their respective pastors. But they must be personally magnetized and instructed by Mr. Moody himself before they can efficiently do this work, and it is they who are now crowding his meetings, and making a reputation for them as already successful. Of course they are successful as far as numbers are concerned. The Tabernacle will hold but six thousand, crowd it as you will. But besides the ten thousand co-laborers above mentioned, who will go there over and over again as a matter of duty, there are twice as many more who want to see and hear Mr. Moody as they would any other celebrity, any other person world-renowned for persuasive eloquence, and twice as many more of both these classes in the towns within fifty miles of Boston, who will come in from time to time as they have opportunity, for the two purposes above mentioned, propagandism and curiosity. Of course the meetings are crowded, and will be for a long time, and, equally of course, with such an army of active workers, a considerable measure of ultimate success will be gained. The wonder would be if it were otherwise. Nevertheless, all the same, these crowds will be credited to "Divine influence," in the representations of the pulpits and the press. "Not unto us" will be sung and chanted and intoned abundantly here by the people who wish their sectarian church-work to be accepted and honored as "the Lord's work."

C. K. W.

AN INTERESTING letter from Brownson, in 1834, ten years before he became a Catholic, tells the tale of his groping after a faith through half-a-dozen sects, until, at writing, he had become satisfied in Unitarianism. At about that time it was that a writer in the Boston Commonwealth heard him say, "I would rather appear before the judgment-seat of my God with all the heresies of all ages on my head, having done all in my power, and used all the faculties and talents which God has given me, to search and find out the truth, than to appear there with the truth, having received that truth merely from another man's say-so?"

"CREATING THE DEVIL" was the subject of a sermon in Unity Chapel, Harlem, by the Rev. William T. Clarke. He said that the prevalent idea of Christianity is that an elaborate trick is played on the devil in the interests of his believers; that one may sell himself to the devil and take pay in the pleasures and prizes of the world, and when sick of the bargain escape from its obligations by repentance, roll the sweet bait of wickedness under the tongue until satiated and then spit out the hook and leave the devil with his rod and line; buy the devil's goods on a long credit without paying a penny for them, and then take the benefit of the theological bankrupt act, and leave him to whistle for his recompense. This piece of theological trickery is a substratum for the frauds of business and the chicanery of politics. Bank directors who have squandered the savings of the poor, Judges who rob the orphans of trust money, municipal thieves, Congressmen and Cabinet ministers whose hands are full of bribes, all are following the doctrine of cheating the devil. Even among the educated people there are hundreds who sympathize with the man who always took off his hat when the devil was mentioned, not out of respect, but because he did not know what might happen. The idea that a man can cheat and lie until all virtue is squeezed out of his soul like the juice from a pressed orange, and then shuffle off all the effects by some process of spiritual legerdemain and come out heroic, happy, and holy is an insult to intelligence.—Sun.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
13 to 25	8	6	4	3	2
26 to 51	6	4	3	2	1
52 to 100	5	3	2	1	0

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEEDINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS. INDEX TRACTS.

1 8 7 7.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's addresses on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents; ten for 60 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Woman. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
My Boy, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.50
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The Work-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. All volumes sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWELL). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	8.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.90
CONWAY (MONOUM D.). The Barward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Offensiveness.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compelling.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Englecliff.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Bahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.50
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
Goethe's Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Edictive Amitties.....	1.50
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Mosaic of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portraits.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Oldknow River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.50
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
I. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
II. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malboms. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	16.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Essays of Travel.....	1.25
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Shal-lows.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Haze, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. A Manual of Aerostatics, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints. Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MAHN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1864.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.00
MEYER (REV. W. D.). The Growth and Decay of the Empire.....	.75
MEYER'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Disquisitions and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Stars.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Romances. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Religion, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Rhymes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Libel of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Revel in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	4.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
BENNETT'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
BOSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
BOHLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	2.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Rose.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, M.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.G.S., F.G.S.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	11.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	3.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyanny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanessa Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Fennel.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Emerson and Level the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 8 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAYER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shalott.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Lectures.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Manhood.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Faneuil Banquet.....	.50
Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Science and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourses to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FOUR COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876,

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete set of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRAITS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER,

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	.40
FIFTY ".....	.75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.80
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Free Thought. EDITED BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE. 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of international Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 15 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

Jan. 7.—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."

Jan. 14.—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."

Jan. 21.—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—A New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.

Jan. 28.—Wm. B. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Buling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed."

Feb. 4.—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.

Feb. 11.—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."

"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—A series of four lectures, viz.—

Feb. 18.—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."

Feb. 25.—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing."

March 4.—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."

March 11.—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."

Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 451 Washington Street.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL for both sexes. Address EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, R. H. RANNEY, F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant,—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, æsthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

THE LABOR QUESTION—

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fiske, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orris, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher, BENJ. B. TUCKER, Lock Box 669, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capital and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolising the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1877.

WHOLE No. 873.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

- SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.
- SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.
- SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.
- SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

A BILL providing for the taxation of church property is before the Indiana Legislature. But it will probably fail, for lack of organized support. When will liberals learn that they cannot secure justice without coöperation among themselves?

THE FOLLOWING lists of signatures in support of the petition of the National Liberal League for the Religious Freedom Amendment have been received since our last issue: James V. White and seventy-two others, Port Byron, N. Y.; Karl Heinzen and fifty-seven others, Roxbury, Mass. Total number of signatures thus far received—215.

"WE STILL continue to have interesting sessions," writes a member of the Amherst College Radical Club; "there has been no interruption in them, except by vacations, since our organization nearly a year and a half ago. Whether it will outlive this college year, or not, is quite doubtful, as '77 contributes the larger part of its membership."

WHAT A glorious triumph has been achieved by Unitarianism! At the services of consecration of the new Trinity Church in this city, February 9, several leading Unitarian divines, including Rev. Edward Everett Hale, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, and Rev. Rufus Ellis, "approached the altar and received the Holy Communion at the hands of the Episcopal Bishops!" Unitarianism has now received a certificate of undoubted authenticity that it is verily "Christian." Let whoever denies the "Christianity" of the Unitarian denomination be henceforth anathema maramatha!

REV. DR. WITHEROW, pastor of the Park Street Congregational Church, in this city, writes to the Presbyterians: "It is to be said, however, and with joy we testify, that two or three gentlemen of the Unitarian denomination have contributed to the [Moody and Sankey] Tabernacle." We felicitate the Unitarians on their prospects. They are compelling recognition on all hands as a true Christian sect. They are giving "joy" to Orthodoxy, and getting patronized to their hearts' content by the ticket-takers of the Kingdom. But what has become of the "spiritual freedom" that fired the great soul of their own Channing?

REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE is reported in the Boston Journal of February 6 as having said in his sermon of the preceding day that "from what he heard and read he could cheerfully approve of what he [Moody] taught for the most part. The doctrines spoken of were what the Unitarians had been accustomed to for fifty years, though they might be new to the generality of the listeners at the Tabernacle." When such a man as Dr. Clarke says that, one sees clearly that Boston has been "bulldozed" with a vengeance; and no one need wonder that, in the same sermon, Dr. Clarke classes "drunkards, thieves, gamblers, and Sabbath-breakers" all together. But the spectacle of a leading Unitarian divine confounding all moral distinctions in this way, and treating independence of Sabbatarian superstitions as if it were a crime like drunkenness or theft, must surely be mortifying to not a few rational men and women among the Unitarians themselves.

THE RELIGIOUS OPINIONS of Thomas Paine have nothing to do with his right to be remembered gratefully by the American people. His theology is to-day out of date; the religious views he has left on record are by no means our own; but the great principles he lived and labored for are infinitely precious to mankind, and put to shame the meanness and malignity of his Orthodox detractors. Slander without limit has been poured upon his head, for the wicked purpose of breaking his influence with the people; but the truth remains that he lived a nobly unselfish life for the good of his fellow-men, and rendered services to America which it is the blackest ingratitude to deny. The refusal to place his bust in Independence Hall is, and is meant to be, an open insult to free thought and freethinkers as such, a public and official denial of equal rights in religion; and the liberals of the country are themselves put on trial by it. Do they intend to submit? Or have they the spirit of freemen?

THIS is a sad story of insanity from so-called "religious" excitement, contained in the New York Sun of January 11: "Early on Saturday morning a milkman discovered a woman almost nude in the Flatbush road. She was loudly bemoaning the death of her two children, and was calling on Heaven not to send them to hell. Having pacified her, he ascertained that she lived at 1175 Myrtle Avenue. Her husband, Mr. Henry Bohlenhausen, was overjoyed on her return home, and strove to drive from her mind the terrible hallucination that had taken possession of it. A few days after the burial of her little ones, she became impressed with the belief that a sermon the Rev. J. Raber delivered, on 'Eternal Punishment,' had reference to her children. The thought crazed her. Stealing from the house, she went to the cemetery, sought out her children's graves, and attempted to exhume their bodies. In her delirium she called for her babes, saying that if she could only get them out of the grave, they would not sink down into hell. Yesterday she was sent to an asylum."

THE LIBERALS of Milwaukee held a great meeting on Paine's birthday, January 29, at which Colonel Hans Böbel presided, and Rev. G. E. Gordon, of the Unitarian Church, and Mr. Fritz Schütz, of the Freie Gemeinde, made addresses. Among the resolutions passed were the following:—

"That the donation to the City of Philadelphia, by the Liberal Leagues, of a bust of Thomas Paine, with a view to having it placed in the hall where the Declaration of Independence had been signed, was an act of patriotic impulse and worthy of the occasion of the Centennial Celebration of said Declaration, and that the refusal, on the part of the Common Council of Philadelphia, to accept the gift, deserves to be stigmatized as an act of the most narrow-minded bigotry."

"We demand that the principle of the separation of State and Church be consistently adhered to. Church corporations must submit to the laws that govern other corporations. All infringements upon the personal rights and the liberty of conscience of the citizens must cease. We therefore support the paragraphs in the platform of the Union of Radicals relating to this subject, and support the 'Religious Freedom Amendment' proposed by the Liberal Leagues as a substitute for the First Amendment to the present Constitution of the United States."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. PROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. S. WALLIHA,.....South Waver, Colorado.
 HERWOOD G. DAY,.....Easterville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quitman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....34 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Religious Art.

BY WILLIAM ALLEN WALL.

Latent in man's earliest being lay the elements of thought, and of what is termed the religious sentiment,—the tendency to worship. The first conscious effort produced the germ of art; the first imagined poem and the first human music were, probably, a psalm to the sun.

As the religious sentiment is developed by the human mind it manifests attributes of both God and Devil. When evolved through reason, it is God-like, creative; when through sensation, it is Satanic, obstructive.

Religious art is a necessity. Man craves symbol to express his abstract conceptions, and out of this exigency it was born. It is older than literature, older than science. It was the primeval vehicle of ideas and thoughts. Religion invented and inaugurated the mythologies, every order of architecture, and produced the epochs of sculpture and painting.

Fundamentally, there have been but two epochs of religious art: the polytheistic and the monotheistic. The polytheistic ideal, rising in the far East, reached its meridian in the classic art of Greece and Rome. The monotheistic ideal, interspersed with the polytheistic, is traceable throughout the Orient, but is more clearly defined in the Hebraic channel. While polytheism was modified by philosophy, monotheism sought a purer expression in the advent of Christianity. But it was not until the ethical and theological teachings of its founder had assumed a mythical form, that they became (intermixed with monastic legends, and the rubric of martyrdom) subjects of artistic illustration. At this period, art was preeminently devout and childlike; but as it increased in years it became more and more mythological, keeping pace with and illustrating aspiring ecclesiasticism, until it reached its culmination simultaneously with Roman Catholic Christianity.

The Reformation inaugurated Protestant Christianity, which not only cast withering frowns on all artistic representation, but waged destructive war upon the symbols of Romanism,—instigated by a morbid hatred of the Mother Church and all which represented her, till cooling in its frenzied zeal, and craving symbol, its art became but a feeble reflection of the already worn-out ideal of Roman Catholicism.

Protestantism furnishes no theological germ for a new development of religious art, none analogous to that which produced the Christian epoch. The real theological basis of Protestantism is that of Roman Catholicism, notwithstanding itself became estranged from Romanism,—therefore it is without an art basis. Religious art thrives only at the home of its nativity, and all attempts at alien naturalization prove abortive.

Virtually, Christian art is dead already; its oracle is silent; it has uttered its utmost truth; it has finished its work. Nevertheless, Protestantism to-day is attempting its resuscitation, and hails as its chief magician one who is in more than one sense the author of Modern Painters, and the very Don Quixote of critics.

Though with only a sling, I cannot resist the expression of a few thoughts in opposition to the theory of this Goliath of sacred art. He asserts that religious art, at once complete and sincere, never yet has existed, but that it will exist; nay, that the era of its birth has come, and that "those bright Turnerian images which the European public declare to be 'dotage,' and the calm pre-Raphaelite studies which in like manner it pronounced 'puerility,' form the first foundation that has been ever laid for true sacred art."

But Mr. Ruskin forgets that the faith of the author of the Iliad in his pantheon of gods might have been as sincere as is his own faith in his triple One. And he will admit that some of the Greek artists produced good work notwithstanding their Pagan faith.

Mr. Ruskin says, further, the ideal is a false one that leads us to take delight in anything past, future, far-off, or somewhere else, rather than in things, now, near, and here, and that the habit is an abuse of the imagination in allowing it to find its whole delight in the impossible and untrue. And in the same breath he recommends the very practice he has been condemning, and says that the noblest use of the imagination is to enable us to bring sensibly to our sight the things which are recorded as belonging to the future state; and that it is given us that we may imagine the cloud of witnesses in heaven and earth, and see, as if they were now present, the souls of the righteous now waiting for us; that we may conceive the great army of the inhabitants of heaven and discover among them those whom we most desire to be with forever; that we may be able to vision forth the ministry of angels beside us, and see the chariots of fire on the mountains that gird us round; but, above all, to call up the scenes and facts in which we are commanded to believe, and be present, as if in the body, at every recorded event of the history of the Redeemer.

This he assures us is the true ideal. And all the paradises imagined by the old religious painters, the last judgments, choirs of glorified saints, angels, and spiritual powers, come under the same category. He thinks we have not dwelt on such subjects enough, nor accepted them enough as possible statements of most precious truth, as real visions of real things more or less imperfectly set down; and that the same is true of all representations of Christ as a living presence among us now, as in Hunt's "Light of the World." By the way, if this picture is intended as a literal illustration of that metaphor, why did Mr. Hunt make it dependent on extraneous and artificial aid? And which did Mr. Hunt intend should represent the true Light, the lantern or the figure which carries it?

Mr. Ruskin says the Bible has never been illustrated, but is waiting to be; that Moses has never been painted, Elijah never, David never, Deborah never, Gideon never, Isaiah never; and that they must sit for their portraits. His theory for effecting the revival of sacred art is that there must be more literal illustration, and thunders his fiat that the Bible must be repainted. As an example of his literal treatment, he graphically enough describes, after severely criticising and ridiculing—with some truth it must be admitted—the treatment of a picture of the same subject by Raphael, the recorded narrative of Christ showing himself to his disciples at the Lake of Galilee. But would any amount of technical excellence in the pictorial treatment of a subject from the history of Baron Munchausen, or from the myriad monkish legends, prove their verity? Or would skillful execution, conscientious imagining, and adherence to the letter of the narrative of Christ's miraculously showing himself to his disciples on the shore of the Galilean lake, prove the truth of the tradition? That is the important question! But that question the Church cares not to investigate, preferring to rest on the rock of its faith,—a conglomerate of conflicting opinions cemented together by a matrix of supernaturalism, and from this emanates its negative Christianity. Faith is good, and goodness begets faith; but it behooves us to inquire on what we build our faith. Mr. Ruskin, alluding to Peter's interview with the spectre of his Master on the sea-shore, says Peter's "chief glory was his net coat girl about him, and naked limbs." But had Peter, on a previous occasion, adhered as tenaciously to truth as he did to its opposite, it would have invested his name with a brighter glory than ever raged from the repeated avowals of his vacillating faith. I have used the term "negative Christianity." Without stopping to particularize its many contradictions, one, for example, may be mentioned. It is recorded that Jesus said to his disciples, figuratively: "Think not that I come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword." This metaphor the Church accepts literally, and by its acceptance denies the precept and example of its Master and God. The Church has literally waded "through slaughter to a throne." The sweep of its merciless sword has deluged the world with blood.

I cannot do better to refute Mr. Ruskin's arguing than to quote his own words. In his reasoning to prove the truth of Turner's coloring, he says: "Truth is only to be measured by close comparison of actual facts; we may talk forever about it in generals, and prove nothing. We cannot tell what effects falsehood may produce on this or that person, but we can very well tell what is false and what is not, and if it produce on our senses the effects of truth, that only demonstrates their imperfection and inaccuracy and need of cultivation. Turner's color is glaring to one person's sensations and beautiful to another's. This proves nothing. Poussin's color is right to one, soot to another. This proves nothing. There is no means of arriving at any conclusion but close comparison of both with the known and demonstrable hues of Nature, and this comparison will invariably turn Claude or Poussin into blackness and Turner into gray."

And Mr. Ruskin is right, and the argument is just as true and demonstrable in a metaphysical as in a physical sense; and if Mr. Ruskin would turn his theological mirror towards Nature, he might be convinced of the falsity and darkness of its present reflections, unless he be of those who will not see. Though Mr. Ruskin emphatically asserts that the day of true religious art has dawned, and that Hunt's "Light of the World" is the very sun of it, he nevertheless evinces some fear that it will not be entirely cloudless, and that it may prove but a dark day after all, when he says,—"If we would cherish the hope that sacred art may, indeed, arise for us, two separate cautions are to be addressed to the two opposed classes of religionists whose influence will chiefly retard that hope's accomplishment. The group calling themselves Evangelical ought no longer to render their religion an offence to men of the world by associating it only with the most vulgar forms of art." "It is marvellous," he says, "to think that human creatures with tongues and souls should refuse to chant the verse: 'Before Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh, stir up thy strength, and come and help us': preferring this:—

"Behold how Benjamin expects,
 With Ephraim and Manasseh joined
 In their deliverance, the effects
 Of thy resistless strength to find."

The opposite class of men," he adds, "whose instincts lead them to mingle the refinements of art with all the offices and practices of religion, are to be warned, on the contrary, how they mistake their enjoyments for their duties, or confound poetry with faith," and that "there is danger of artistic Phariseism."

Notwithstanding the teaching of his Master, that "it is the spirit that quickeneth," despite the warning voice of Paul regarding the deadly influence of the letter, Mr. Ruskin persists, if not with sophistry, with at least a great amount of special pleading, that the life of sacred art is dependent on its literal rendering of Biblical subjects, and that the old school of Christian art is a failure. But, whatever Mr. Ruskin may be as a critic of technical art, he utterly fails in his theory for infusing into art the elements of a higher religious expression. And while at times he appears to manfully face the true light and clamors for advance, he, unconsciously it would seem, retrogrades towards the very abyss of darkness and death he so vociferously warns us against and condemns. But he has disciples, and time will prove the error or establish the truth of his theory,—which, to me, appears as chimerical as was Barry's attempt to restore the spirit of Hellenic art. As well might he have hoped to substitute the language of classic Greece for the vernacular of Old England.

But fashion rules the hour, and prevails at fever-heat on the meridian of London. How long it may continue to do so under a monarchical government, with an Established Church, remains to be seen.

To be regretted, the distemper has crossed the Atlantic and appeared on its Western shores; but its symptoms indicate assuagement, and the prattle of its victims resembles the learned disquisitions of their great prototype across the ocean, only in a morbid desire to preserve Christian sacred art. The first noticeable indication of the malady in this country was a profuse eruption of illuminated "mottos," once called phylacteries, texts from Holy Writ, Orthodox originals, etc. But the symptoms are more definite in a species of art-literature, causing a peculiar deliverance in the writers, who produce a jumble of antediluvian and the most modern thought. They babble of the vitalizing power of the religious element in art; that beauty centres in God, and the nearer the artist approaches God, the more he sees and expresses beauty; that "the Greeks sought after God, but did not find him"; "let us," they say, "be as true to our time as the Greeks were to theirs." They believe in the anthropomorphic God of the Hebrews, and in the triune God of Orthodoxy; they say, We want living work from living thought, and describe ideal landscapes painted under the guidance of the great Teacher,—delectable views, with wealth of foliage and clear waters in the foreground; its remote winding streams and varied lights and shades, its distant mists and mountains, and over all the blue sky, with its clouds, as misty temples and towering sentinels of Jehovah. "This," they say, "is a great work of art; the artist has looked from Nature up to Nature's God." They attempt to reconcile the cosmogony of Genesis and the teachings of geology; have faith in the Christian miracles and in natural philosophy; they kneel to the "Master," and make obeisance, hat-in-hand, to the Spirit of the Age; and the writer's argument, like the squirrel of David Crockett, comes out at the same hole it went in at; namely, revealed religion.

The other horn of the dilemma which Mr. Ruskin fears may worry and retard the accomplishment of his hope of a speedy resuscitation of sacred art, and which he says may induce Phariseism, has also appeared in this country. The relative proportion of its art phase to that of the group above alluded to is about the same; the pair seem well matched and cover the same amount of brain, and both alike show a marked respect for patronage, profit, and propagandism. Mottos were conspicuous with the first named; with the latter, chromes, and the alleged aim, the popularization of art. Without stint, it produces copies of works of sacred art, and does not shun the profane, but tosses both together into the market without limit, and is indifferent whether the originals of the copies are of the Roman Catholic or of Mr. Ruskin's reformed school of sacred art.

The amount of honest superstition visible in these closing years of the nineteenth century is lamentable enough; but the cant and Pharisaic sanctimoniousness, frequently manifested by both vendor and purchaser of these idols, are a disgrace of humanity and the age.

But the most formidable obstruction to the progress of religious art is the Church. In the Church, however, the elements of destruction are inherent, and their operation is slowly effecting its dissolution. With reference to its conscientious, pious adherents, whether clerical or lay—whether their livelihood be earned in the pulpit or the work-shop, I would be dumb, and in silence reverse. Such existed prior to the advent of the Copernican theory of the solar system, and such exist now. With reference to Roman Catholicism, I would be silent. It is deceased. "Let the dead bury its dead." But its ghost still stalks the earth, the hope and the terror of the superstitious. Light, however, will exorcise it, and a new day is breaking. With reference to Protestant Christianity—it is in a decline; its voice is becoming husky, and its vitals are irremediably diseased; it is tenuous of life and may linger long, but it has indulged its appetite for forbidden fruit and must yield to the Eve-initiated penalty. Still its doctors hope against hope, and multiply their prescriptions, but they themselves disagree and their prescriptions conflict; and while each declares his own nostrum to be the true panacea, the patient is losing faith in its physicians. But they are the descendants of those benefactors who "preserved literature and fostered art and science" in the Middle Ages, and the medium through which the rays from the Pharos of that dusky period have been transmitted to us. They inherit, moreover, much of the sagacity of their ancestors, and while they accept, logically, the deductions from their diagnosis, they theologically repudiate them. But when the end arrives, they will be as prepared to meet the exigency and accept the situation, as were the clerical defenders of the divine institution of slavery,—once so numerous and noisy; but now, when they are called, only echo answers.

Truth compels the mention of another class of Evangelists, who otherwise would gladly have been ignored; for conscientious faiths, however adverse, should be mutually respected; and that "charity suffereth long and is kind," I know. Yet justice should not be ignored. But why should I form one apologetic syllable? To obey the dictates of my own conscience and express my thoughts is as inalienably my right as it is the right of those of whom I would speak. And on this subject it may be well for Radicals to ponder. There are enough who assert this claim theoretically, but who practically repudiate or treat it with indifference. But, as it is individually exercised, it is the strength or weakness of Radical cause. It is the movable fulcrum of the lever of our religious liberty.

The class of whom I would speak adhere to the Church like barnacles to a water-logged and drifting bark, as a basis for purveying. Those who compose this class rank themselves as divines; but the vulgarities they practice are far more reprehensible than any Mr. Ruskin complains of, and are very far below the brink of clerical propriety. Without sounding the depths of their descending, some mention may be made of its superficial phenomena, where still floats the bulk of progress,—barring bigotry, though shorn by the natural growth and warfare of civilization of the horrible instruments of its Satanic cruelties, and somewhat of the infernal renown it once possessed. This class, for example, is odious for its Jesuitical manoeuvring within and without the Church; in politics and in secular reformatory efforts, which but as yesterday it denounced as "mere morality"; for the exercise of its inquisitorial propensities; for its contemptible subterfuges for the avoidance of argument with those whom it maliciously stigmatizes as infidels; for its proselyting snares for the child, and its shallow sophistry for the childish adult. But its eccentricities are legion, and I cease their enumerations.

But "the end sanctifies the means," and all this and much more of similar character passes for Christianity. Can this be the modern representative of that class so scathingly rebuked by Jesus, as chronicled in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew? History sometimes repeats itself, and may in this instance. If the preservation of sacred art be not its aim, or is beyond its capabilities, it has other arts and aims for which it is eminently qualified, and to which it gives its indefatigable adherence; and the virus flowing from the machinations of these shepherds disturbs their flocks, which show an unusual restlessness in their folds and an aggressive spirit outside of them. It is to be hoped they may not prove to be "ravening wolves"; but they evince little of the lamb-like disposition, and aligh for the "flesh-pots." Not content with the possession of the Church, they crave the State also; and to-day, while I write, this one-hundredth anniversary of our nation's birth, are uniting their many-colored fires to celebrate the enthronement of their theocratic fetish in the Capitol of the United States. But their rocket may prove a boomerang, and remind them when too late of the ancient adage, "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." But I leave the renowned critic, with his liberal theory for the resuscitation of sacred art—in the full glare of Hunt's "Light of the World," with its farthing candle to guide it,—and his American followers, and the clerical incendiaries, to speak, in this Centennial Year of the life of the American Republic, of a possible successor to Christian art; a successor conceived at the Reformation, but which will, with the inspiration of its first breath, inhale American air.

The figure of a nude savage employed in carving the symbol of his worship, with his war-club and paddle beside him, is not inappropriate as emblematic of the origin of art.

And while the disciples of art are engaged in æsthetic pursuits, may it not be well for them to consider in what way they shall embody their highest and holiest aspirations?

Certainly, all forms of plastic art may be rendered subservient to the religious sentiment; but the first lipings of infant art were theological, and through the same medium its maturing thought has found expression and will continue to do so, until geology unearths the primal cause and sets it tangibly before our eyes. The history of theology, using the term in its original and broadest significance, is the channel the religious sentiment has scored on the world in its search after truth. Like a traveller, that stops between each step, has theology developed, and though its march may have been slow and erratic, it has been progressive. Theology is of one genus, but many species, and may be classified as polytheism, monotheism, theism, and Christianity; the latter an anomaly, a cross between polytheism and monotheism, which, variously modified, remains the religion of Christendom to-day; and, in accordance with Nature's laws of propagation, with its mythological religion must become extinct, and its art debase.

But there is a higher conception of Deity than the Church affords, which has already left the gloom of its overhanging portal to continue the search after truth in the broader and brighter light of the outer world. Theology is awakening to the significance of its cognomen, is listening to reason, and slowly acquiring the right to be classed as a science. It is dropping by the wayside its superstitions, and seeks the supernatural in Nature; yet with all its seeking, is to realize but an endless unfolding of the eternal ideal; for the finite is finite and the infinite is infinite. Art should advance side by side with science and literature, and resume its long-lost but legitimate office of teacher. It has been held, with science and letters, in durance with the theology of the Church, but longer than they; and like them it must break the fetters which bind it, and declare its right to freedom, or barter its birthright for a bauble.

The old field of religious art is worn out and sterile; its fountain of inspiration is choked up. The expansive theology of this age offers its prolific, virgin soil for the tillage of invention and promises an abundant harvest. Mr. Ruskin expresses fears that the realization of his hope of a speedy revival of sacred art may fall because of the non-cooperation of what he calls the group Evangelical. But the artist of the developing theology must count on no cooperation of the Church, but on an unscrupulous opposition. From the priesthood he must expect nothing but censure; he will meet with derision and cavil from the bigoted representatives of its art; he will receive the fire of critics of various metal and caliber, and the smirk of dilettanti, and often find himself in situations where the bounty of his thought had better dispense its corn than its pearls; he must prepare himself for the juggernaut of public opinion, and, not infrequently, he may wish himself protected from his friends. The struggle was long and fierce between Pagan and Christian art, and resulted in but a poor compromise and no victory after all, and long and stubbornly waged will the coming contest be.

The growth of the forthcoming art is not retarded by lack of genius, artistic knowledge, and skill, or the requisite theological perception, but because the artists have not made their theological ideal the ideal of their art. They go abroad from themselves in pursuit of obsolete beauty, seeking inspiration among the ruins of defunct ideals. The conventional religious art of to-day is without true invention. It does not look forward to seek what it may find, but backwards rather, contenting itself with a species of compilation borrowed from ancient classic, Hebrew, or mediæval originals. We have elaborate disquisitions on the truth of form, truth of color, truth of space, truth of tone, and on all the other truths incorporated in technical art, and on ideas of truth, ideas of beauty, ideas of power, ideas of invention, and what not. But the highest idea of truth, the highest idea of beauty, the highest idea of invention, is not in their category. The highest truth is not cognizable by the intellect; the highest beauty is not reflected to the eye; but the highest invention renders the unity of the twain viable to the vision of reason.

But it may be asked, "Where are your examples?" They are for the artist to furnish. It has been asserted that the Bible waits to be reillustrated. That assertion may be true; but the illustration of its histories, its traditions, its biographies, and its texts, must be designed and colored in harmony with the thought and experience and conscience of to-day. But there is no lack of subjects from other sources, and if the artist possesses the requisite conscientious imagination, invention, and theological vision, he will perceive the field to have ample scope and an upward verge. When, like the Christian artist of the Catacombs, the artist of the theology of Nature shall illustrate his faith, a new era of religious art will have birth.

Plant-like has mythology developed. Nursed by superstition, it has flaunted its variegated blossoms, and its bloated pericarp scattered the seeds of supernaturalism. In its course its organism had well-nigh become changed. Fertilized by love and reason, an offshoot was transmuted and flowered in humanity; its theistic blossom shone high above the horizon of its time; but misty exhalations enveloped and obscured it, while the plant thrived on and became a theological banyan-tree, overshadowing the world and obstructing the rays of the fructifying soul. But the tree is in process of dissolution; it is decaying at the root; while its pendant branches droop and wither as the shaded and now unfertilizing soil becomes less and less conducive to vitality. Germinating in the lowest fetishism, it has completed its circuitous growth; its extremes have met, and its fate must be that of all else which is of the earth.

The religious sentiment has wandered far astray and squandered its riches, but it will return to the love and the home of its father. Again will the religious sentiment clothe itself with humanity, and, reunited to virtue and reason, be merged in supreme mind, the true light of the universe; and from the throne of reason the religion of the soul be proclaimed and manifested by the consecration of Nature, the deification of humanity, and the transfiguration of individual man,—his own mediator.

Long ere another score of centuries shall have passed, may the strife between natural and "revealed" religion have ceased, in the complete triumph of the former, and may religious art have recorded it!

[For THE INDEX.]

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

In the conclusion of the last preceding article, I had quoted Hickok's definition of consciousness, as making it a light within the mind, illuminating the total field of the mental activities; and Greene's definition making it to mean the nut and core of those activities; the true withinness of all mentation, in being the actual recognition, by the ego, of itself, as perceiving subject and of the object perceived, in a mutual embrace, interpenetration, and relationship of unity and duality, or difference—the embracing and the embraced making a third complex totality which is the Consciousness, in its complete expression or fullness. I have, I find, expressed here Mr. Greene's thought quite in my own forms of phraseology; and I will take the occasion to add, that the unity, the duality, and the trine signifying the union of the unity and the duality, as here indicated, are a favorable illustrative instance of what I mean by Unism, Duism, and Trinism; but, not now to insist on this more technical view of the matter, we have in the Subject, Object, and Subject-Object the Within, the Without, and the Between of the Consciousness—Itself being, as we have seen, the Within of the mind at large.

I believe I may add Mr. Henry James as another distinguished American thinker who has discussed this subject, and who, with characteristic originality, has insisted on the identification of the Subject and Object with their difference in the fact of Consciousness; but I speak here from memory, and cannot quote the book and page.

I also recall the following excellent statement to the same effect from Morell's History of Speculative Philosophy: "I am conscious of self and of not-self; my knowledge of both in the act of perception is equally direct and immediate. On the other hand, to make consciousness a peculiar faculty, by which we are simply cognizant of our own mental operations, is virtually to deny the immediacy of our knowledge of an external world." (Vol. II., p. 18.)

The view of Hickok may be reconciled with this other view, with something added, perhaps, to each, in the following manner, one which every analogy, and the ultimate analysis of being itself will sustain and confirm. Let us conceive, as above indicated, the perceiving subject and the object perceived in a close relational embrace, in respect to which they are in a sense one, their difference being extinguished, and yet in a sense two, or still different; and that the relation between them is stamatic, co-operative or co-actionary; the mechanization tending to evolve sparks, or to excite, so to speak, the molecular physics of mind, generally. Let us then conceive that this total consciousness or innerness of the mind, operating as a One-in-Severalty of Subject, Object and their mutual relationship or conjunction, generates a mental Heat, Light, and Activism (or mento-chemical activities and forces), which three are coincident with the "Love," "Wisdom," and "Operation" of Swedenborg; love or the feeling principle being the analogue of heat; wisdom the seeing and knowing principle, the analogue of light; and operation or activity, the analogue of actinic agency (the trinitism of the solar ray). These three principles thus complete, as we may say, the Mental Spectrum; and consciousness, this innerness of the mind, thus appears as a true Spectral region of mind, and contrasts with the Outer Spontaneity or Soul (the Greek psyché) as with a palpal region—the whole region of Spectra (or Specters) according with the eye, with light, and with the sense of sight, as the region of mundane Solidities accords with touch or with palpation or the sense of feeling. It appears, therefore, that Sight is the Spectral, Spectral, ghostly or Spiritual Sense, and is also specially allied with Consciousness; and that touch or feeling is the palpal, externo-real, mundane or materialistic sense, and specially allied with Sensation at large, and with the Spontaneity of the Soul, as the outermost of the mind. Hence it is that the single word Feeling, transferred to the inner experiences, comes to mean all the Sensuous, and Sentimental side of mind, allied also with heat, (the heat of the passions, etc.); and that Sight, insight, the mind's eye, comes to mean the light of the mind illuminating the Consciousness.

We may now perceive how it is, analogically, that the mechanizing or co-action of the Subject-Object, as a One-in-Severalty, generates that Spectral Light within the mind, to which Hickok confines the meaning of the word consciousness, while the entire relational embrace—Subject, Object, and their conjunction or copulation—is included in the meaning of the word as defined by Greene, James, Morell, and others. And we may perceive also, how, while the co-action in that embrace generates or strikes the light, it is only in that light that the subject first recognizes itself as distinct from the object—the activity having originated in the unilluminated Spontaneity of the Soul. This self-recognition of the ego, in the Spiritual light within the mind, is the primal act of the Wisdom Principle. "I think therefore I am"—Descartes. The Ego equals Ego—the point of departure for all knowledge—Fichte. Spirits, says Swedenborg, copulate and generate their kind, but their Sons are Thoughts, hence allied with vision, and their Daughters are Affections, hence allied with the sense of feeling. Sight is a masculoid sense; feeling a feminoid one. Wisdom is the distinctive characteristic (in Mere Preponderance) of masculinism; love is the distinctive characteristic (in Mere Preponderance) of feminism. Let us return from this digression.

Spencer defines consciousness, in so far as he defines it, in a very different way. Besides confounding it in a purely general sense with the totality of the mind, as pointed out by Greene (Blazing Star, p. 116), he more specifically identifies it with the network of mentation, or the complex of thought, and other mental-relationships. "Consciousness," he says, "is that inter-relationship between mental states, by which the mind in reviewing them, is enabled to pass from any one of them to any and all of the others." Hickok enumerates still other definitions of the term consciousness, as it has been used by various writers. Some confound it with the personal identity, although this survives through various states of unconsciousness; some make it to be a distinct faculty of the mind for knowing the operations of all the other faculties; and some regard it as a medium in which all other mental acts and states are connected; although, as our author observes, this is still to explain nothing, and really to have said nothing to any purpose. (p. 89.)

Spencer, with some inconsistency, has, however, also presented and approved the better thought of Sir William Hamilton, as condensed by Dean Mansel, in this pregnant quotation, which verges on, while it just comes short of being, the statement of the whole truth, on the subject; "Consciousness," says Mansel, "is impossible except in the form of a relation. There must be a subject or person conscious [of his own selfhood and of an outer world and an Object, or thing of which he is conscious]. There can be no consciousness without the union of these two factors [of the conscious ego and the object]. And in that union each exists only as it is related to the other. The subject is subject only so far as it is conscious of [itself as perceiving subject, and at the same time, of] an object; the object is object only so far as it is apprehended by a subject; and the destruction of either is the destruction of consciousness itself." First Principles, p. 78. I have added, in brackets, what ought not to have been omitted; what makes, as it proves, a vital difference at one of the fountain-heads of philosophy, and the lapse of which, in the philosophy of Spencer, is so opportune and tersely pointed out and emphasized by Greene. The sentence of Mansel, without my insertions in brackets, might be taken to mean all that which Mr. Greene and myself concur in regarding as vitally essential in the definition; but it might also be construed to mean something very different, omitting the true gist of the whole matter. This other, faulty, and utterly inadequate understanding of it, is that which Mr. Spencer adopts, when he says: "The very conception of consciousness, in whatever mode it may be manifested, necessarily implies distinction between one object and another." First Principles, p. 76.

Mr. Greene says, rightly and profoundly: "The subject is known to itself in consciousness, always as subject and never as object. It is, therefore, not true that everything known to the subject is objective." In the act of consciousness, as such, the distinction is never between one object and another, but always between the subject and the object. "When the subject is conscious of an object as object, it is also, and in the same act, conscious of itself as subject." Even Hegel also constantly, in terms, when he talks of the subject as its own object. Such language is permissible poetically or imaginatively, but not as analytically precise. If the mind does ought to justify this conception, it is never in the primal act of consciousness, but as recall in memory of what had transpired; and the role of the subject, as so recalled in the memory, may, without objection, be called an objectivation of the subject; as we reproduce on the stage, actions which were originally spontaneous. It is not, in any case, the original doing.

This misapprehension of the true nature of consciousness is the hinge and the very pivot of the hinge upon which the modern (naturalist) sciento-philosophy has swung away from the prior spiritualistic and quasi-theological development. This slide of Mr. Spencer from the true view of the facts of consciousness is not an accident nor an incident, but is, on the contrary, the essential and characteristic feature of his entire system; making it hemispherical and essentially sectarian, instead of spherical or integral; and the hemisphere of knowledge which it represents is that of Matter, as contrasted with that of Mind, as to the point of view; it matters not whether he be treating of matter, of mind, or of both. It is the point of view and its consequents which characterize any system of thinking. The system of Spencer, and his disciples and associates, as also that of Comte and the "positivists" is, when tested in this manner, rightly classed as materialistic; and no efforts of Mr. John Fiske, or of the followers of Comte can permanently reverse such verdict. But this imputation should not be approbrious. We needed a materialistic philosophy, to be elaborated wholly upon its own grounds, and to serve as a definitive emancipation of the human mind from the grip of mere dogmatism. The new and now prevalent system, poor enough considered as an ultimate philosophy, is rich in scientific generalizations, and invaluable for its influence in cultivating and popularizing the free spirit of inquiry. Even as philosophy, it represents one-half the truth, the objective half faithfully and well; and hence its statement was an absolutely necessary prelude to the ulterior, double-sided, integral, and final form of philosophy.

But the time has now fully come when the demand is urgent for the higher and reconciliative philosophical gospel—a form of philosophy which shall do absolute and impartial justice to the true Subjective and the true Objective (not the pseudo-Subjective and Objective of Comte, which are, however, legitimate and important subdivisions of the true Objective); to the Spectral and the Palpal; to the Ideal and the Real; to the Spiritual and the Material; to the Celestial and the Mundane hemispheres of being. For this philosophy I have chosen the name Integralism, as Comte has denominated his system Positivism. I mean that which is simple or single and all-embracing in its origin; which is two-sided in its first disparting, then many-sided, out to infinity; returning into a higher or complex form of unity, the Unity of the Singleness and the Doubleness (or many-ness), in the jointness-and-severalty of the Total Constituency (Unismal, Duismal, and Trismal stages, or momenta, respectively). This is simply Mr. Greene's perception of the primal act of Consciousness, as a relation, generalized to all possible relationships, and found to be the universal law of being.

It has been the simplest and most natural thing in the world for philosophic materialists to make the mistake of supposing themselves still spiritualists (in some sense). We are now prepared to see precisely how the mistake occurs. In any primal division into a Withoutness, a Withinness, and a Between, each of these departments immediately subdivides into a Withoutness, a Withinness, and a Between of its own, so that nine departments have then occurred, instead of the primitive three; but the schematic distribution being the same within each primitive third as it was within the primitive whole, whosoever has unconsciously floated or slid into one of these thirds, proceeds to apply the primitive and correct method of reasoning, in a way to bring out, seemingly, a complete system of truth; to bring out, really, a system of truth, as to its schematic arrangement of parts, in an image or semblance of the larger truth; but, in fine, to utterly distort and falsify the larger truth itself, by putting a part for the whole. Hence the critical and vital importance of fixing, absolutely, the exact point of the primal disparting into branches or domains, and of the fact that it is primal, and must, therefore, exhaustively include all the phases of the subject-matter to be investigated. To miss this certitude is to miss all certitude, in everything following, except that of the schema, which may be removed, like a ladder, to whatsoever new position, and be found true, in its several parts, to itself, without giving any information as to whether the right house or the wrong house is ascended. Hence the great indebtedness we are under to Mr. Greene, for having fixed so certainly the true nature of Consciousness, and for having philosophically and forever vindicated the title for the Subject in Consciousness, and its consociate sphere of entities, to be regarded as a distinct half of the whole dominion of consciousness.

But Mr. Greene himself is also deficient, inasmuch as he has failed to generalize this character of the special relation of subject and object in the act of consciousness into the type and character of every relation, in every act whatsoever; inasmuch as he has failed to discover any Universal Canon of Criticism on all our thinking; and inasmuch as he has consequently failed to found the new and reconciliative philosophy of Integralism. Something of what is meant by a canon of criticism may be inferred from the use herein made of the distinction between the Without, the Within, and the Between.

THE PAINE BUST.

MEETING OF THE PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE: FINAL REPORT OF THE PAINE BUST COMMITTEE: RESOLUTIONS OF THE LEAGUE: SPEECH OF WALT WHITMAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Yesterday our Philadelphia League commemorated the life and public services of Thomas Paine.

Lincoln Hall was crammed with our most intelligent citizens, and, after a few remarks by the President, Mrs. Carrie Burnham Kilgore, Chairman of the local Committee having charge of the Paine Bust, made the following #### Report.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE PHILADELPHIA LIBERAL LEAGUE:—

About one year ago the Liberal League of San Francisco raised a small amount of money to make some fitting tribute to the patriotic services of Thomas Paine, during the Centennial Year.

At the suggestion of their Secretary, A. J. Boyer, the Philadelphia League appointed a Committee to take charge of the matter, and through the aid of THE INDEX about $1200 were raised to purchase of Sidney H. Morse, of Boston, a white marble bust of Mr. Paine, to be donated to the City of Philadelphia, to be placed in Independence Hall.

Damon Y. Kilgore was selected by this Committee to make the formal presentation to the city, which he did, as soon as the pedestal was completed, in the following letter to the Mayor:—

606 WALNUT ST., PHILA., Oct. 13, 1876.

MR. MAYOR:—

Yesterday, in Fairmount Park, the nations joined to honor the memory of that inspired navigator who, three hundred and eighty-four years ago, first beheld the New World.

To-day, having been delegated by the Committee having the matter in charge, I have the honor, on behalf of the donors, to present to the City of Philadelphia a beautiful white marble bust of Thomas Paine.

In this Centennial Year, so vocal with the praises of our ancestors, this tribute to the Columbus of man's right to self-government is appropriate and just.

In this bust the skillful artist has reproduced from life-portraits the features of the man who, in the "times that tried men's souls," wielded in behalf of the "rights of man" a pen far "mightier than the sword."

We desire that this bust be placed in Independence Hall side by side with the portraits of those heroic men who practically inaugurated in the framework of government those principles which Thomas Paine first clearly enunciated to the world.

This silent marble speaks of that grand intellect of the real Father of the Republic, whose pen made Independence possible, and also of that genial soul which prompted the utterance: "The world is my country, and to do good my religion."

Very respectfully, in behalf of the Committee,

DAMON Y. KILGORE.

His Honor WILLIAM S. STOKLEY,

Mayor of Philadelphia.

Mr. George A. Smith, President of Select Council, submitted the communication from the Mayor, transmitting the communication from Mr. Kilgore, which, on motion of Mr. Charles Thompson Jones, was laid on the table.

After waiting two weeks without any action being taken upon the subject, Mr. Kilgore addressed to Select Council the following communication:—

TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE SELECT COUNCIL FOR THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA:

Gentlemen,—On the 13th day of the present month, on behalf of the donors, I sent to the Mayor a letter of presentation to the City of Philadelphia of a marble bust of Thomas Paine.

It is proper to inform you that this slight tribute to the patriotic services of Mr. Paine for the establishment of this Republic has been made by the voluntary contributions of such men as Hon. George W. Julian, of Indiana; Colonel T. W. Higginson, of Rhode Island; Hon. Ellizur Wright, Francis E. Abbot, John C. Haynes, and Rev. William J. Potter, of Massachusetts; Rev. O. B. Frothingham, of New York; Rev. Robert Collyer, of Illinois; Rev. C. D. Campbell, Rev. J. C. Learned, Hon. A. W. Kelsey, and Hon. John B. Henderson, of Missouri, together with many other distinguished citizens in all parts of our land.

The matter of presentation was entrusted to a Committee resident in Philadelphia, by whom I was delegated to formally present it to the city.

In my former letter, which was laid upon your table, it was not designed to intimate that the donors claimed the right to designate its appropriate place, but I only expressed a preference for Independence Hall.

As I am simply the mouthpiece of the donors, acting for the Committee, will you be so kind as to take such action in the premises as will in your wisdom dispose of the matter?

Very respectfully, in behalf of the Committee,
DAMON Y. KILGORE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 25, 1876.

This letter was read in Council; after which, on motion of J. W. Shoemaker (Counsellor of the Centennial Commission and a friend to the measure, whose sudden death prevented the delivery of a speech he had prepared in favor of accepting the bust), it was referred to the Committee on Restoration of Independence Hall.

Subsequently this Committee, composed of members of both Common and Select Councils, reported an ordinance accepting the bust of Thomas Paine with thanks, and directing it to be placed in the Museum of Revolutionary Relics, opposite Independence Hall in the same building.

This ordinance passed in Common Council, but, after a delay of several weeks, was rejected in Select Council, December 26th, by "an almost unanimous vote."

The reasons for this rejection may be inferred from a speech against Mr. Paine by the aforesaid Charles Thompson Jones.

The bust now awaits the action of the donors.

Respectfully submitted,

CARNE BURNHAM KILGORE,
Chairman of Committee.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 28, 1877.

The Report was accepted and the Committee continued.

Edward S. Wheeler then presented the following resolutions:—

WHEREAS, The Philadelphia Liberal League, unmoved by sectarian or other prejudice, recognize in the history of Thomas Paine, the hero printer of the Revolution, the record of a citizen of unsurpassed patriotism, practical talent, statesmanship, and philosophic genius; one whose pen divided with the sword of Washington the glory of achieving American Independence; and

WHEREAS, Certain American citizens have donated to the City of Philadelphia a white marble bust of Mr. Paine as an appropriate tribute to his patriotic services in laying the foundation of this Republic, which tribute has been rejected by our Select Council; therefore

Resolved, That the name and political example of Thomas Paine should be kept in memory and honored by all friends of civil and religious liberty throughout the world, and especially by all citizens of this Republic.

Resolved, That we regard with extreme regret any and every effort to disparage the reputation or discriminate against the rights of any person, or belittle his historic fame, on account of any profession of religious faith or disbelief of any partisan or sectarian creed.

Resolved, That the course of the Select Council of Philadelphia, in refusing to accept the free gift of the bust of Thomas Paine, is conduct of which we, as residents of Philadelphia, are heartily ashamed; and that we condemn and despise their action all the more, as we believe it was dictated only by a weak and selfish policy, conceived in stupidity and ignorance, and adopted in the baseness of cowardice and injustice.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The President then introduced Walt Whitman, Nature's own poet, who spoke as follows:—

WALT WHITMAN'S SPEECH.

Some thirty-five years ago, in New York City, at Tammany Hall, of which place I was then a frequenter, I happened to become quite well acquainted with Thomas Paine's perhaps most intimate chum, and certainly in later years very frequent companion, a remarkably fine old man, Colonel Fellows, who may yet be remembered by some stray relics of that period and spot. He liked young men, and enjoyed to leisurely talk with them over a social glass of toddy after his day's work (he on these occasions never drank but one glass), and it was at reiterated meetings of this kind in Old Tammany's back parlor of those days that he told me much about Thomas Paine. At one of our interviews he gave me a minute account of Paine's sickness and death. In short, from those talks I was and am satisfied that my old friend, with his marked advantages, had mentally, morally, and emotionally gauged the author of Common Sense, and besides giving me a good portrait of his appearance and manners, had taken the true measure not only of his exterior but interior character.

Paine's practical demeanor, and much of his theoretical belief, was a mixture of the French and English schools of a century ago and the best of both. Like most old-fashioned people, he drank a glass or two every day, but was no tippler, nor intemperate, let alone being a drunkard. He lived simply and economically, but quite well; was always cheery and courteous, perhaps occasionally a little blunt, having very positive opinions upon politics, religion, and so forth. That he labored well and wisely for the States, in the trying period of their partition, and in the seeds of their character, there seems to me no question. I dare not say how much of what our Union is owing and enjoying to-day—its independence, its ardent belief in, and substantial practice of, radical human rights and the severance of its government from all ecclesiastical and superstitious domain.—I dare not say how much of all this is owing to Thomas Paine; but I am inclined to think a good portion of it decidedly is.

But I was not going either into an analysis or eulogium of the man. I wanted to carry you back a generation or two, and give you by indirection a moment's glance,—and also to ventilate a very earnest and, I believe, authentic opinion, nay, conviction, of that time, the fruit of the interviews I have mentioned, and of questioning and cross-questioning, clenched by my best information since, that Thomas Paine had a noble personality, as exhibited in presence, face, voice, dress, manner, and what may be called his atmosphere and magnetism, especially the later years of his life. I am sure of it. Of the foul and foolish fictions yet told about the circumstances of his decease, the absolute fact is that, as he lived a good life after its kind, he died calmly and philosophically, as became him. He served the embryo Union with most precious service—a service that every man, woman, and child in our thirty-eight States is to some extent receiving the benefit of to-day,—and I for one here cheerfully and reverently throw my pebble on the cairn of his memory. As we all know, the season demands—or rather, will it ever be out of season?—that America learn to better dwell on her choicest possession, the legacy of her good and faithful man; that she well preserve their fame, if unquestioned, or, if need be, that she fall not to dissipate what clouds have intruded on that fame, and burnish it newer, truer, and brighter, continually. [Applause.]

Thomas Phillips then gave a very interesting address upon the life and public services of Thomas Paine, a copy of which was asked for publication. Horace M. Richards then read an excellent poem said to have originated with Mr. Paine, after which the large and enthusiastic meeting adjourned.

DAMON Y. KILGORE.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 30, 1877.

THE EDUCATION QUESTION.

A GREAT CATHOLIC ORGANIZATION PROPOSED.

CHICAGO, Nov. 16.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE CATHOLIC REVIEW:

Sir,—“There are but two contestants in the great controversy—the despotic and remorseless Church of Rome, the democratic and humane Republic of America; and that one of the two which shall control the education of the common people will be the lord of the land from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.”

Such is the summary of this great question of education, expressed by Mr. Francis E. Abbot, of Boston, in his lecture intended for a reply to Bishop McQuaid's lecture on the school question. We only desire now to call the attention of Catholics to the latter portion of Mr. Abbot's statement: “That one of the two which shall control the education of the common people will be the lord of the land.” In other words the future belongs to those who educate the children of the present. This surely is a truism, but unfortunately one which we fear does not command one tithe the attention of Catholics that it does of the enemies of the Church, nor one-hundredth of the interest and attention it deserves.

The unavoidable conclusion from the undeniable fact is that Catholics who desire to see their children faithful in their manhood to the Church of their fathers, must place the education of these children under the control of the Church. Let us also consider well the fact that while we are satisfied to control the education of our own children, it is not so with the non-Catholic population that surrounds us. Though many of them deny it, it is patent to the most indifferent observers that there exists among most non-Catholics a deep-seated jealousy of the efforts made by the Church to control the education of the children of her own flock. One instance will suffice. It is but a few weeks ago that a priest in some part of New Jersey, having established a school in connection with the Church of which he was the pastor, called upon the parents of his congregation, from the altar, to patronize the parochial school. The result of his appeal was that one hundred and fifty Catholic children, who had formerly attended the district schools, left them to attend the Catholic school. This incident was thought worthy of telegraphic communication to all parts of the Union, and elicited in many places editorial comment and condemnation from the secular press.

The difficulties that beset the establishment of Catholic parochial schools are numerous and serious, particularly in the rural districts, while even where they exist, and have existed for many years, it is felt that they do not attain the needed standard of efficiency. It is generally acknowledged that the lack of a universally recognized system of Catholic education is a serious defect in the great work Catholics have before them.

If we now take a seven-league stride from parochial schools to university education we find that an able prelate in this country has only recently sought, through the columns of a Catholic periodical, to wake up the American Catholics to a sense of the importance of this province of Catholic education. To quote his own words, “We have, therefore, brought forward the project, and, rather than that there might be some definite proposal in favor of or against which to direct future argument, than from any entire conviction on our own part, have made some suggestions which to us seem at first blush, proper, desirable, and reasonable, but which may strike other minds as lacking in one or all of these questions.” . . . “What is important, however, is that the subject be fully discussed, and every point thoroughly tested at the bar of the Catholic public opinion of the United States.” We have taken the liberty to italicize a few words in the above quotation. Between the two extremes of Catholic education, the parochial (which should also be free) schools, and the university, lies that very important sphere of education which will (in many cases) have to compete that received at the parochial schools, and, in every case, prepare those of the American Catholic youth who propose to seek the highest education of the university, and those others who will, on emerging from boyhood, enter immediately into the lists of this world's tournament, in either commercial, professional, or literary careers.

Considered from these different points of view and in these varied aspects, may we not confidently place the great question of Catholic education in the very front rank of those which must to-day, and for many years to come, command the attention and the energies of American Catholics?

It may not, then, be amiss to humbly suggest to the readers of the Catholic Review the propriety of uniting in some sort of association having for its object the promotion of Catholic education. We find in this country, but notably in European countries, associations, owing their existence to very small beginnings, that have accomplished an immense deal on behalf of all sorts of objects, from the preservation of game to great geographical discoveries. Why not, then, institute in this country an association with the noble object of promoting, by every proper and practical means, the great cause of Catholic education.

Let every reader of the Catholic Review send in his or her name as a member of such an association, pledging himself or herself to be responsible for the sum of, say five dollars per annum to the cause, either individually or as the representative of five members, at one dollar apiece. Let every five dollars represent a vote in the general assembly of the association, to be held annually, biennially, or triennially, as may be hereafter decided upon.

You, Mr. Editor, will, I am sure, lend the columns of the Catholic Review as a medium of communication to the members until such time as they can organize in some form under a regular constitution and proper officers. As soon as possible an official monthly circular should be issued to every person holding a five-dollar membership, either individually or as the head of a circle.

The existence of such an association could not fail to be productive of much benefit. It would tend to awaken and keep alive, in the minds of a large number throughout the country, a steady interest in the cause of Catholic education. Valuable statistics and information would be collected, and diffused through the medium of a monthly organ. Useful tracts on the various features of the great objects of the Association could be prepared and distributed. In some places lectures could be obtained, and, when the members were sufficiently numerous, monthly or quarterly meetings could be held, open to the public, where papers, furnished by the Association, might be read and discussed. That the blessing of God and the approval of our Holy Mother the Church would attend such an undertaking, I am confident, if conducted solely ad maiorem Dei gloriam.

I can only in conclusion pledge myself to one five-dollar membership of such an association, with considerable confidence of adding four more such memberships to the list, and in the earnest hope that very many of your readers will feel disposed to lend their aid to the proposed enterprise or suggest a better one.

Credo.

[Our correspondent's idea that a great Catholic organization might be formed to sustain and develop Catholic schools is unquestionably sound, for even though the great Catholic society is the Catholic Church banded together for all the works of mercy, she nevertheless admits and encourages subordinate organizations within her fold to do special works. But we are not convinced that this proposed educational association—of which we and others have often dreamt—should centre in a Catholic newspaper, nor do we think that it would find its chief strength in the universal suffrage hinted at by our esteemed correspondent. There can be no question of the power for good for such an association properly officered by priests and laymen in whom the hierarchy have confidence. If we needed an illustration, see what O'Connell's Repeal Association and his Repeal Rent did; see what Ozanam and his lay society of St. Vincent de Paul have done. We trust that our correspondent's letter may have the effect of stimulating some American Ozanam to start a similar society for the advancement of Catholic education. The help which we conceive it our duty to give such enterprises—judicious publicity,—we shall very cheerfully give, but it is the mission of others to organize such a great work.—Ed. C. R.]—Catholic Review (Brooklyn), Dec. 2, 1876.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 10.

A. Breen, $5; E. R. Brown, $2.20; Eljah Whinery, $6; H. A. Mills, $3.25; John Cassen, $3.20; H. Apthorp, $3; W. Boynton, $3; C. H. Lunt, $3.20; N. M. Hatch, $3.20; J. Briggs, $6.40; Mrs. A. B. Percival, $3.20; A. Folsom, $3.20; W. H. Hamlen, $3.20; Cash, 90 cents; J. N. Lombard, $3.20; W. Hunt, $3.20; B. F. Underwood, $3.40; F. A. Angell, $3; E. M. Davis, $3; S. Coit, $5; J. Copeland, $1; C. Greaves, $3; J. Richel, 25 cents; L. Woodruff, 10 cents; D. J. Huntman, 10 cents; F. C. Miles, $3; Mrs. C. G. Tallman, $3.25; W. A. Dutton, 75 cents; W. Buchtel, $6.40; G. Zimmerman, $3; Mrs. S. D. Curtis, $3.20; W. Inot, $3; G. O. Young, $1.25; Edwin Brown, $3.20; Mrs. M. M. Sherman, $1.10; R. Frisbie, 40 cents; J. P. Kanney, $2; W. T. Winn, $3.20; Fred. Beck, $3.20; A. S. Coffin, $3.20; J. S. Thompson, $3.20; Mrs. K. N. Doggett, $3; J. C. Richards, 20 cents; A. M. Wright, 80 cents; Geo. Thorn, $3.25; W. I. Bowditch, $3.20; Dr. C. A. Bartol, $3.20; C. H. Dana, $3.20; J. S. Perry, $3.20; Eliza Wright, $3.25; Papers, 15 cents; Mr. Ballou, $1.50; G. H. Snelling, $4.80; Clara Neyman, $3; L. T. Burch, 50 cents; P. C. Howard, $3.20; Mrs. M. N. Adams, $13.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the terms of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit

The Index.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 15, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON Office, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CODY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. Lytle used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle indorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix, Boston: Published by the National Liberal League, 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. Abbot on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. Kilgore on "Democracy"; by James Parton on "Cathedrals and Beer; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. Underwood on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. Paige on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. Y. Kilgore on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. Mills on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND STATE SECULARIZATION.

On what does the claim of woman to a participation in the electoral franchise rest?

In our opinion, it rests on precisely the same grounds on which man's claim to it rests. The argument which establishes either establishes both; and any counter-argument which shall prove strong enough to overthrow either will overthrow both. In fact, the argument, though stated usually in the name of "man" to avoid the perpetual and tiresome recurrence of the phrase "man and woman," must, in order to be logically valid, use this single name "man" in the broad sense of the Latin homo and the Greek άνθρωπος—that is, a human being of either sex, a man or a woman. It is impossible to maintain for all men the right to vote, except by urging considerations which are precisely as applicable to the case of women.

Let us briefly state what the argument is which establishes the right of all individuals of the human species, arrived at maturity and not disqualified by exceptional causes (of which nothing need here be said), to exercise the suffrage.

Suppose, then, a hundred human beings thrown together under circumstances which compel them to live together within narrow territorial limits, but remote from all external human influences. How will they act? If they are mere brutes, they will live like brutes, in anarchy, conflict, and misery, until some one of their number, stronger or more cunning than the rest, establishes the social order of absolute despotism. But if they are highly civilized and rational beings, they will prefer to live under law—that is, under a system by which social order shall be established on the basis of reason and justice; they will proceed to form a government. Who shall form it?

Now this is the simplest imaginable manner in which the suffrage question can be raised. Assuming that the hundred people thus called to form a government for themselves are truly enlightened and just, they will say: "Each of us is an individual human being, possessed of all the rights and interests of an individual; each of us has a social stake as precious to him or her as is his own to any other; each of us must count for one, and none of us can count for more. None of us has any rightful authority to impose his or her will upon the rest; no mere part of our number, whether large or small, has any better authority to do it; the right of each and every individual among us, of the least favored as well as of the most favored, is to be free from any such imposition, and to be protected in the full enjoyment of life, liberty, property, and free activity according to the special bent of his or her own nature, just so long as he or she strictly respects the equal rights of all the rest. In truth, we have no right to form a government except to assure this protection to each by the power of all. The general right of forming a government is simply the combined sum of our individual rights to protect ourselves from any and all invasions of our individuality; and it vests in us all together simply as a collection of individuals. Conceding thus at the outset the preëxisting equal individual rights of all the members of our little community, from whom alone must be derived the rightful authority of the government we are about to form, we have on the one hand no right to deprive a single member of his or her voice in its formation, and on the other hand no right to use it, when formed, in trespassing or infringing upon a single member's individual rights. The individual is inviolable, just so long as he or she forbears to violate the rest; when that occurs, the right of self-protection, both individual and general, instantly becomes paramount, and the offender forfeits by his own act his inviolability as an individual. Our government shall be grounded on the equal individual rights of all in its foundation; it shall protect these rights while it exists; and it shall never have authority to overpass this eternal limit of its power."

Now that is the ideal theory of every just, free, and secular republic; and the commonwealth can be prosperous and happy only so long as it strives to carry out this theory with the utmost conceivable strictness in practice. It assumes, first, the co-existence in one society of many individuals, with inviolable individual rights which have not been created and cannot be destroyed by any government; and it assumes, secondly, the absolute political equality of all these individuals, in the proved inability of every pretender to a "natural" or "Divine right" to govern to establish any just title to political superiority or power. On the inviolability of the individual rests your claim and ours to live out our lives in freedom and safety; on the political equality of all individuals rests your claim and ours to the ballot, as the means of protecting ourselves in the enjoyment of our individual inviolability.

On no other ground than the above, we believe, can any man vindicate his own right to vote; and he cannot vindicate it as a man, but only as an individual. Neither can women vindicate their right to vote as women; they possess no such right as women,—they possess it only as citizens, as individuals. It is the right to be ourselves, to live out our lives in liberty and peace, to do whatever our hearts may prompt or our consciences direct (so long as we injure no one else), to take part as recognized units in the greater life of the nation, to be deprived of none of the rights and privileges which our peers enjoy,—it is this aboriginal prerogative of human individuality, this incalculable value of the individual as a centre of free mental and moral life, which is Nature's own certificate of a right to bear an equal part in any political society by which Nature's own law of justice is venerated. If society is the true "state of nature," then the suffrage is a natural right of all individuals, inasmuch as it is a necessary consequence of their co-existence as natural equals in a social union; and women, being individuals just as much as men, have just as good a right as they have to a voice in public affairs.

Seeing, then, that the philosophy which treats the State as a purely secular institution, an institution of a natural and not a supernatural origin, is the only philosophy to which women can appeal to vindicate their rights,—seeing that they can no more claim the suffrage as women than men can claim it as men, but that both can justly claim it in the name of that human individuality which is equally theirs, and of that equality of individual rights which can alone sustain the towering structure of a mighty secular republic,—it is time that women should look to Free Religion, and not to Christianity, as the great hope of their sex in the effort to achieve a national recognition of the justice of their cause. When has Christianity, acting through its great representative bodies and not through the honest but whimsically erratic dreamers who confound all natural distinctions and defy all reason in the attempt to deduce freedom, science, civilization itself from a Christian origin,—when, we say, has the Christianity of the Church ever preached the great cardinal doctrines of the secular State: namely, the inviolability of the individual and the equality of individual rights? These alone are the premises of woman's right to political representation, as they are of man's; but the Church knows them not, tramples upon them, brands as "heretics" and "infidels" all who intelligently defend and unflinchingly apply them. Between these great principles of republican philosophy and the great tenets of the Christian faith there is an "irrepressible conflict" which has yet got to work itself out in history. It is the petty cunning of the politician, not the deep sagacity of the statesman, which ignores this tremendous issue, and strives bootlessly to postpone it instead of meeting it bravely. The cause of equal individual rights is the cause both of man and woman, and it has no foe so persistent, so relentless, so powerful, as the Christian Church.

When we consider, therefore, that women themselves are the great buttress and bulwark of the Church,—that by an overwhelming majority they sustain and help to strengthen the very system which has kept and keeps them down,—it seems sufficiently easy to understand the apathy with which an increasing number of free, thoughtful minds contemplate the movement for woman suffrage. Men are coming to see more and more clearly every day, in the secular State, the truest friend both of man and woman; but only women of exceptional ability see this. The vast majority of women are hopelessly wedded to Christianity, and readily allow themselves to be influenced by the clergy to a degree which would be dangerous to the secular State, if they were voters. The greatest obstacle to the establishment of woman suffrage is the fact that a great majority of women are opposed to it, actively or passively; but it is not generally understood that it is the influence of Christian ideas over their minds which makes them opposed to it. How can they ever be aroused to a sense of the dignity or the rights of their own individuality, so long as they take their ideas of human nature, and of woman's relative place in the family and society, from a religion which commands all alike to despise and crucify that spirit of self-assertion whence proceeds every demand for rights withheld? There will be, there can be, no general demand by women for their equal rights as citizens and individuals, until they have become imbued with the ideas and the spirit of Free Religion, and are thoroughly weaned from the Christianity which crucifies individualism and chokes at its fountain-head the self-assertion of free, independent, vigorous wills. The cause of Free Religion and State Secularization is not in the least degree a "man's" cause; it is the cause of self-assertive humanity in all its aspects, the cause of free reason and free conscience for woman as well as for man; and the woman-suffrage cause has not an idea to stand upon that is not derived from this other cause which is so much larger than itself. The woman movement can make no real headway in the world, so long as the great mass of women uphold Christianity and oppose Free Religion; even if they obtain the ballot by the exertions of the enlightened few, they will forthwith use it to destroy the very political ideas to which they have owed their enfranchisement, and will ignorantly aid and abet the Christian fanaticism which is straining every nerve to overthrow the secularity of the State. This is a very painful and unwelcome thought to the enthusiastic friends of woman suffrage; nevertheless, it is the truth, and it is giving a tremendous check to the further progress of that movement. Here are a few propositions which ought to be well pondered by all who are interested in the cause of woman:—

1. The movement for State Secularization is not a man's movement, and cannot be set up as opposed to the woman suffrage movement. Women have just as much at stake in its success as men have, for it is simply a movement to establish impregnable the great defences of freethought and free conscience. If women have minds and consciences, or prize the freedom of those minds and consciences, they cannot afford to despise or ignore or fail to aid this movement.

2. Women who are themselves emancipated from the soul-slavery of Christianity must consider whether they will best promote the emancipation and elevation of their sex by aiding the cause of State Secularization, and thereby establishing principles which inevitably lead to woman's enfranchisement; or whether they will best promote those objects by ignoring totally the principles which alone justify the demand for woman suffrage, and laboring exclusively to put the ballot into the hands of women who will use it at once to vote down and destroy these very principles. To work for State Secularization is working for that which must surely, even if slowly, establish woman suffrage on a permanent basis; to work for woman suffrage, while neglecting State Secularization, is working to enable ignorant women to destroy both for themselves and for all the great principles of freethought by precipitating ruin on the secular State.

3. Free-thinking women must decide for themselves which they most prize: their universal rights as moral and intellectual beings, as human individuals regardless of sex, or their special rights as women, as a now disfranchised class. Given the former, the latter must follow; given the latter alone, the former will probably be swept away, and sweep away the latter with them. Under a secularized State, every human individuality will be respected and protected; under a Christianized State, no one will be, but free-thinking men and women alike must be oppressed with grievous disabilities.

In presenting the foregoing propositions for serious consideration, we wish to be understood. We do not, as some have done under the stress of these thoughts, take new ground and oppose woman suffrage; on the contrary, we believe in it and advocate it as heartily as ever. But we prefer to work for it so that, when it comes, it may come to stay and do good, not mischief, to humanity. Just as soon as this Republic can be induced to plant itself on the principle of State Secularization, it will be safe to establish woman suffrage on that principle; but to establish woman suffrage in the present half-secularized condition of the Republic would be to imperil, nay, to destroy, the very principles which all men and all women alike ought to hold most precious. It is through State Secularization, therefore, that we hope yet to see woman suffrage established; without that guarantee of general security for freethought, we can take no part in the establishment of woman suffrage. There are a few large-minded women who have taken precisely the same ground, and many more will probably do so as time goes on; but there needs to be a great deal of vigorous forgetting of much twaddle heretofore too popular on the woman suffrage platform. One thing should be never forgotten: that the whole philosophy of the woman movement is anti-Christian, and that all who advocate it in the name of Christianity are just so far helping to defeat that for which they are nominally at work.

MORALITY IN SCHOOLS.

I was very glad to see the articles in THE INDEX of February 1 on the subject of moral instruction in the public schools. It is a subject of great importance on which the sincere friends of education are much exercised, and on which it seems to me quite time that Free Religion should seek to take affirmative ground, instead of confining itself to mere negation.

The report of Mr. Stockwell, Commissioner of Rhode Island, is very suggestive. I think the objectionable clause in regard to the Bible as the "source of morality" was probably written from force of habit, and that he would not give to his words the full stress that one accustomed to analyze everything in the light of "anti-Christian" principles would give to them. But I think we must admit that, although the Bible is not the source of morality, and is even to my thinking the source of some immorality, it is yet very possible to draw from it the very best of moral teachings. To a great extent this is undoubtedly done by good teachers. It is a good thing for children to learn a lesson of unselfishness from the motto "Do unto others," etc., and of active kindness from the parable of the good Samaritan; and in the majority of cases they do draw such lessons from wise teachers without connecting any superstitious ideas with them.

Still, I grant that the present condition of theological warfare in our country makes it improper to use the Bible as a text-book of religion and morals, exclusively or mainly. I was very much interested in some remarks of Miss Mary A. Beede on this point. She thinks the English children do gain a moral culture and discipline from the set exercises which form so large a part of instruction in the Church schools of England,—which is desirable in our schools, although she recognizes the wrong and impossibility of introducing the same system here.

Now Mr. Stockwell suggests, I think, the two ways which are open to our school system. One is the direct influence of the teacher's character. This is by far the most important of all, and I think it is the main source of moral influence in schools, and that what Miss Beede and others recognize is rather done through the set teaching than by it. The aim of school committees, teachers, etc., should be to create a moral atmosphere in the school to which everything should be referred.

A great deal could be done by making the public opinion of the school the tribunal before which offences should be judged, and so leading all the pupils to think and discriminate rightly on ethical questions. I believe that in most cases of real moral evil the fellow-pupils would be found to be very strict and impartial judges if rightly appealed to.

One great injury to morals in school is the artificial standard of duty often set up by teachers in opposition to a natural one. There is not a generous, manly school-boy who does not recognize it as a mean action to criminate another boy who has broken some rule of the school; and yet this is constantly required by some teachers as a duty. If such cases were referred to the boys themselves to investigate and settle, where the rules of the school are reasonable, public opinion would be against the offender, and the class would see that the rules were enforced. It is so with regard to compulsory attendance on church and at prayer. I heard an argument on this subject lately. A college demands attendance at prayer; but a certain number of absences are permitted without penalty. Is it honorable in a pupil determinately to avail himself of this permitted number of absences, when he could attend the service? Were the same rule made in regard to failures in Greek verbs, I think every honorable student would be ashamed to neglect his studies in dependence upon such a provision; but he feels that the attendance at prayers is only a conventional duty, and it is right to shirk it when he can do so without injury to himself. It is the difference between ransom to a robber and an honest debt. The other suggestion is in regard to the use of a text-book of ethics. For advanced classes the exercise of the mind on difficult problems in ethics is undoubtedly very valuable; but the foundations of good morals ought to be laid long before the mind is mature enough for such study, and the simplest principles of good conduct should become so ingrained that they are second nature to the child. I think it a pity that burlesque and ridicule and, finally, severe historical criticism have entirely destroyed the authority of Washington and the hatchet, for it was something to give every child a model of a boy who "could not tell a lie." So many men can!

A lady was speaking of the perfect courtesy of a late much-lamented physician. She was once accused of a discourteous act, but said, when told of it: "You know I could not do that." And it was true; she could not. We want truth, justice, fidelity to engagements, purity, kindness, to rest upon such foundations that they cannot be moved.

For such instruction to children I think we must rely mainly upon moral truth expressed in pleasing form, whether it be history or fable, prose or poem. Children cannot digest unorganized truth; they must have it prepared for them by assimilating process before it is good for food.

Another potent moral agency will be found when we learn the secret of industrial education, where the traits of honesty, thoroughness, and industry will be so clearly visible.

If we wish to push off the old dry calyx of superstition, let us see to it that the fresh growing bud of morality and religion is not injured in the process.

E. D. C.

Communications.

PAINE CELEBRATION AT LINESVILLE, PA.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The freethinkers of Linesville, Pa., celebrated Paine's birthday with a public meeting and dance. A day or so before the celebration, an Orthodox minister, holding a "revival" in the town, warned the people to keep away from the celebration, and denounced in severe terms the editor of the local paper for allowing a notice of the meeting to appear in his journal. The result was that the Linesville Opera House was packed to overflowing. There were at least five hundred in the building, and many, I learned, went away unable to get in.

The meeting was addressed by O. B. Kellogg, Esq., of Ohio, and H. L. Green, of Salamanca. The speakers occupied the time from seven to half-past nine o'clock, and the crowded audience gave the strictest attention throughout. After the speaking, the young people and all who desired, enjoyed a pleasant dance until three o'clock the next morning.

The platform and hall were very beautifully festooned with evergreens, and there was a large likeness of Thomas Paine surrounded with flowers suspended over the platform.

At the close of the speaking, the following resolutions were read to the audience and unanimously passed by an earnest and determined Aye, from the hundreds present:—

Resolved, That this meeting, composed of the citizens of Linesville and the surrounding country, held this 29th day of January, 1877, for the purpose of celebrating the birthday of that distinguished friend of political and religious liberty, Thomas Paine, takes the occasion to brand with infamy the members of the Philadelphia Select Council for rejecting the bust of Thomas Paine and refusing it a place in Independence Hall in the city of Philadelphia.

Resolved, That this bigoted and unpatriotic act is most humiliating to the freethinkers of America, and a disgraceful and open insult to the many distinguished individuals who contributed to the purchase of the Paine bust, and deserves the condemnation of every true American citizen.

Resolved, That this insult to the name of one of the most indefatigable patriots of the American Revolution, whose country was the world and to do good his religion, offered by this Select Council, in the Centennial Year of our National Independence, should arouse the liberals of this country to at once organize Liberal Leagues and other liberal societies for the purpose of self-protection, and to educate and enlighten the people in relation to their duties as citizens of a free government.

Resolved, That these resolutions be published in the Investigator, INDEX, and Truth Seeker.

I was pleased to learn that the liberals of Linesville intend soon to organize a Liberal League. G.

BISHOPS AND PRIESTS vs. THE SCHOOLS.

BOSTON, April 17, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The following comments occurred to me while reading Bishop McQuaid's and Father Lambert's articles on the school question, more especially on the latter. Bishop McQuaid, in the opening part of his address, says that he is not responsible for the doings of the Church in Spain, Central America, or elsewhere. Of course he is not, but the Church as such is, and as a member of that body he cannot entirely disclaim its doings, as he appears to wish. Now those countries (and others also) teach us at least what has been experienced from, and therefore in some degree what we may be prepared to expect of, the Church, in providing for the future; the Church cannot admit that it is essentially different now from formerly, but must throw the whole change on time, people, etc. We derive no advantage from living in the nineteenth century if we do not profit by the past; otherwise history is of little value. If it shows us that certain things have led to certain undesirable results in the past, we should avoid a like combination in the present. The Bishop naturally does not care to refer to other countries, as the deductions drawn from them are, in a great majority of cases, very damaging to what he wishes to establish.

Father Lambert, speaking of the secularists, refers to "their supercilious contempt for those who differ from them, their obtrusive professions of patriotism, their exalted opinion of their own wisdom, their contempt for the opinions and rights of others when they clash with their own theories, their want of candor to avow openly their ultimate designs," etc. It does not become him as a Catholic, to talk about "supercilious contempt," when according to his belief all non-Catholics are wrong; they are either looked on with pity or as below contempt; they are astray; they are outcasts; it is not possible for them to get to heaven. Do the secularists think thus? No, a thousand times no. I have not remarked anything particularly patriotic in the secularists; certainly they are not more so than the Catholics, who put up as a bar against all imputations their love for the "Republic." One has as good a right to say so as the other. As to "exalted opinion of wisdom," there is, I may safely affirm, no secularist living who boasts of such "exalted wisdom" as the head of the Catholics whose ex cathedra sayings are infallible. The passage about contempt for opinions of others is best illustrated by the invitation of Bishop McQuaid, by these same secularists, to preach in Horticultural Hall, and the publishing of Father Lambert's own article in THE INDEX. Does this show contempt? If so, let the secularists have a little contempt from Father Lambert, by an invitation to preach to his congregation, or Bishop McQuaid's, or the insertion of Mr. Abbot's answer to the Bishop's lecture in the Catholic World. What he means by not avowing "ultimate designs," I do not comprehend, as, according to my reading of THE INDEX, they are set forth in pretty nearly every issue. On the other hand, the Catholics have given no ultimatum; but as their avowed doctrine is that the Church is superior to the State, it is not hard to guess.

The argument that denominational schools are cheaper than State schools is, it seems to me, met in this way. If the State schools are abolished, each denomination will have to maintain a complete set from primary upwards; now it is saying that each denomination can maintain its own set cheaper than they can all maintain a joint one. It is analogous to saying it is cheaper for a man to keep a private school for his children than to send them to a public one, or that it is cheaper for every family to live in a separate house rather than club together and live as a community. In other words, the Catholics would make us believe it is cheaper to run half a hundred separate systems of education rather than one joint one.

The Bishop talks of the "multiplicity of useless branches of learning." What he includes under that head is rather indefinite; moreover, what a Catholic might think useless, others might not, and vice versa. Students graduated from the State universities are lost among the mass of people. I humbly suggest that those passing from denominational institutions are also lost, perhaps more than the others.

"The Catholic schools and convents will plead when their turn comes." Almost since the revival of learning, in the fifteenth century, these schools and convents have been having a turn. In those countries where they are (or were) most numerous—Italy and Spain,—we see the people in the depths of degradation, and the nation, as such, the lowest in the scale. Are we to learn nothing from this? Or are we to shut our eyes and simply say, "Oh! our people are different and times changed." Our people are different, but they are human nevertheless, and we see what has lately happened, and is at present happening in other countries. In other words, where the Catholics have had control of the schools, almost nothing in the way of education has been done, and the majority of the people are densely ignorant; and those nations with which the priesthood have had least to do are most advanced. Other things being equal, their principle has been teach as little (except religion) as possible; pressure of circumstances at present obliges them to teach much more here; but that pressure gone, I doubt not they would do as they have done in other countries. It is to my mind the irresistible inference, and, if history is true, a fair one; no wonder Bishop McQuaid does not want us to look at other countries. If the Catholics take so great an interest in the good education of every child, as the Bishop would have us believe, why is it that, where they reign supreme, education is so far behind what it is in places opposed to his creed? If I attempted to give an answer, it would only be contradicted; the best way is for everybody who has a head to answer it himself.

As to immorality in the public schools, it may be said that, if as much was known or could be found out about Catholic institutions, immorality of like nature might possibly be developed. But they are not open to public inspection; they are not free to all; and anything of that kind is pretty easily kept from becoming public. History, however, again teaches us that prior to and at the time of the Reformation these institutions bore no enviable character; that they were merely hot-beds of vice and crime, compared with which the public schools are as white is to black. It seems to me that Father Lambert cannot cast the first, nor yet the second, and very doubtfully even the third stone.

The Catholic conscience is a peculiar thing; it is not individual but complex. From their infancy Catholics are trained implicitly to obey the Church in religious matters (and this from their point of view necessarily includes education), or they will be lost. This practically takes away the individual right to determine such questions, everything said by the Bishop to the contrary notwithstanding, as everything to be done is laid out for them by the priest, and hell is before those who disobey. In other words, the Catholic conscience is in these particulars swayed by the Church, through the individual priests, and it is no more free than the caged bird.

It is proposed to leave education to the parents, and to deprive the State of all right to educate. But time has abundantly proved that where education is left to the parents it is, in many cases, practically left to itself. If we are at all like other people, in the course of a few generations we should be an ignorant, uneducated set, ruled over by a despot, and with the Catholic priesthood firmly saddled on our backs. All the European countries have tried this system, and either have given or are giving it up, and substituting compulsory education in its place. Are we more likely to succeed than they? Or are we to go over the same old path trodden by Spain and Italy? Both once powerful, what are they now? Even Italy, where it would seem that the Church ought to have been able to test the voluntary plan if power and influence are of any avail, is now after a long trial casting aside as pernicious the system which Father Lambert advocates, and is striving to substitute compulsory education in its place.

"Parental Prerogative"! Parents are told they must do so and so, or else—! The "prerogative" is merely a sham. The parent of course may say to his child, "You must go to bed at eight o'clock;" but he cannot say (with any hope of being obeyed), "You shall not go to mass any more," because in such cases the priest tells him that both will go to perdition, he for forbidding and the child for obeying.

In regard to the whole subject, I would say that it seems to me utterly impossible to hope to convince the Catholic priesthood of the truth pertaining to education, for the simple reason that their doctrines and thorough education are in direct opposition, and their acknowledgment of individual rights would be a denial of the Church's supremacy. "Convince a man against his will, and he holds the same opinion still," is an old saying, but nevertheless has a great deal of truth in it.

If in my resetting of old ideas I have suggested anything new, I hope it may aid in repelling the anti-public school wave, and in so doing render service to all.

Respectfully yours,

F. C. B.

[The foregoing excellent communication should have been published last spring, but was unfortunately mislaid; and it is now published with sincere apologies for this accidental delay.—Ed.]

"JESUS."

Ever since the time of "Thomas called Didymus"—of whom we are told that he was faithless and did not believe—to the present day, there has been continued controversies in regard to the man Jesus. The "most scholarly representative of what calls itself Free Religion" (quotation from the Rev. Joseph Cook) delivered what I considered to be a very able lecture in Horticultural Hall, Sunday, Jan. 7th, on the same subject upon which I am now writing. It may perhaps seem out of place to bring up the subject now, after it has just been handled by an acknowledged scholar; but what I wish to say is in regard to an extreme view taken by some Free Religionists concerning Jesus of Nazareth. I have been persuaded to do so from the fact that I have had conversations on the subject within a day or two with several liberal-minded friends, who did not exactly fancy the tone of some remarks which were made by Mr. Frothingham. Somehow or other they were not satisfied with the idea that "the image of Jesus is irrecoverably lost," and "that the Author of Christianity is historically only an idolized memory enwreathed with mythical fictions." No, they cannot give up Jesus. Although his Divinity is not believed, yet, for some unknown reason, they cling to him, and imagine him to be next to Divine. Not a God, but almost a God; the greatest specimen of man that has ever lived. One of our most promising and liberal-minded men, in a sermon delivered in this city not many months ago, while asking the question, "Who are infidels?" said:

"Come down to him who, with reverent and loving adoration, with a tenderness of heart second only to that which I feel towards God himself—come down to him whom I hold in this estimation, and what was he, Jesus of Nazareth? He was, according to the popular estimation of his time, the archinfidel of the world. . . . Come down to Socrates—he who more nearly approached the brightness, and the power, and the glory of Jesus of Nazareth than any other man that has ever lived." Here you see he is held in estimation second only to that which is held towards God himself. Here you see he is held to have been approached by no man "that has ever lived." Now, what facts have we to warrant such an assertion? Our motto is, "Prove all things: hold fast that which is good." We have "an awkward habit"—yet at the same time "a valuable habit—of reasoning, so that we cannot accept anything that has for it no evidence." Is there sufficient evidence to warrant our saying that Jesus was the brightest, the grandest, the most God-like of any man that has ever lived? Show me the evidence and I will believe it. Where do we find the history of the man? Is it from the (so-called) profane historians of his time? No, it is from the Gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. None of the profane historians of his time even mention his name. (It is unnecessary to say anything concerning what has been proved to be interpolations in the works of Josephus and others.) Whom these Gospels, which contain the only history we have of him, were written by, or when they were written, will probably always remain an unsettled question. . . . They may have been written A. D. 63 or 64, as Dr. Lardner tells us, and yet they may not have been written until after A. D. 200, which appears most probable, as no author except Irenaeus mentions any Gospels by Matthew, Mark, Luke, or John, until after that time; "and there is no sufficient evidence to identify the Gospels we have with the writings to which Irenaeus refers." The Rev. Joseph Cook, in his lecture delivered Jan. 8, said that the Gospels can now be traced back to A. D. 125. Such may be the case; but were the history of a man to be written even in these days, after he had been dead almost one hundred years, I hardly think it would be altogether reliable. Can we take for authority a history written seventeen hundred and fifty years ago, of a man who died almost one hundred years previous to the time the history was written? I think not, especially when I find a Church of England Bishop (Watson) admitting, that "not long after Christ's ascension into heaven, several histories of his life and doctrines, full of pious frauds and fabulous wonders, were composed by persons whose intentions, perhaps, were not bad, but whose writings discovered the greatest superstition and ignorance. Nor was this all; productions appeared which were imposed on the world by fraudulent men, as the writings of the holy apostles." The fact is, there is no reliable history of the man. Even were we to take the accounts which are contained in these Gospels as reliable, it would be impossible to come to any definite idea as to his character, the evidence being so contradictory. Were I writing to some "Orthodox brethren," I might enlarge on this subject, and dwell on the contradictory texts which illustrate his character, and speak of the sayings and doings of Jesus; but as I am not, I consider it unnecessary to do.

But let us go through the New Testament, and select all the beautiful sayings and noble deeds which are attributed to him, and take them as reliable, cannot we find anything to equal them elsewhere? I think we can. Have we forgotten the several other—so-called—"saviors of the world"? We must not forget Confucius, Adonis, Hercules, Æsculapius, Buddha, and others, who were considered by their followers to be "approached by no man that has ever lived." We must not forget the "Grecian philosophers," Thales, Epicurus, Pittacus, Aristotle, Democritus, Pythagoras, or Socrates,—the ancient Romans Seneca or Cæsar. "Passages as good, and in many instances much better, could be quoted from the writings of men who knew nothing of 'the word of God,' who lived centuries before the Christian era." I consider it unnecessary to quote any of them here. Show me anything attributed to Jesus which surpasses the following words of Pythagoras, who lived 500 years B. C. He said: "God is neither the object of sense, nor subject to passion, but invisible, only intelligible, and supremely intelligent. In his body he is like the light, and in his soul he resembles truth. He is the universal spirit that pervades and diffuseth itself over all nature. All beings receive their life from him. There is but one only God, who is not, as some are apt to imagine, seated above the world beyond the orb of the universe, but, being himself all in all, he sees all the beings that fill his immensity, the only principle, the light of heaven, the Father of all. He produces everything; he orders and disposes everything; he is the reason, the life, and the motion of all beings." Compare the above with "our Father which art in heaven." Is not the world slowly but surely advancing towards everything that is good and true? "Are there no men among us to-day who are worthy of having their feet washed, or their head anointed with oil?" If not, may we not reasonably suppose that the time will come when such will be the case? Is this world of ours to see but one such man? I look towards an indescribable future. In my opinion, all that we can now do under the circumstances is to class Jesus as simply an equal with the great reformers, the great lights of the world, the infidels,—those who were persecuted, reviled, scourged, and sneered at, the scum, the outcasts. I do not believe, as some have supposed, that the man was a myth, and that he never existed; but I do claim that his history is mythological and therefore unreliable. It is evident that such a man really lived, and performed some special actions attracting popular attention; but beyond this Jesus of Nazareth is a myth.

D. W. T.

ON BEHALF OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

DEAR INDEX:—

In your issue of 18 January, in the article entitled "Intelligent Suffrage," the writer, dissenting from the (as it seems to me) most sensible suggestion our Chief-Magistrate ever made, says: "It is childish and reactionary to dream of securing reform, peace, safety, civilization, by enacting a new limitation of suffrage. The Republic is irretrievably committed to the principle of universal suffrage."

The article is without signature. Surely the editor of THE INDEX does not believe that anywhere in this country, except in Utah and Wyoming, we have had universal suffrage.

With the "compulsory support of the free schools" desired by President Grant, in a few years there would cease to be "a well-defined ignorant class." Even with our present school system there need be no illiterate class; the doors of the school-room are open; all are free to enter. Were it known no one could vote till after he had spent a certain number of years in school, there would be no illiterate class of men, for without compulsion all boys would go to school.

There may be "no possibility of establishing a real test of intelligence," for it is quite true that "too many fools are able to read and write"; but it were as easy to show a teacher's certificate that Michael or Hans had been in school from the age of seven to fourteen as to exhibit naturalization papers.

The writer quoted very properly insists upon "the education of all children who are all destined to become voters." He nowhere says so, but I hope his all is not like Mr. Lincoln's. You remember his generous "wish that it were in his power to lift all factitious burdens from all shoulders, that all might go forth free in the race of life"; but his all included only half of the human family. Very few men like that rare one, John Stuart Mill, have been able to lift themselves to a height that would enable them to include in their range of vision the whole of humanity.

In THE INDEX of 11 January, Mr. Mead coolly records himself against woman suffrage, which "he believes is right," because "woman as a mass" (so he states it) "is completely given over to superstition, and is led by priests and preachers like sheep to the shambles."

It does not need the eye of a Paul to perceive that, like the Athenians, we are "too superstitious"; but the superstition is by no means confined to women. Look at the Moody and Sankeyism through the country; look at the Tabernacle in your own city, as reported in the daily papers. Of it I have no nearer knowledge. Our chief dignitaries preside at these meetings; our most eminent preachers lend them aid; our brightest religious editors assure us "it is not ideas that are wanted," but "true inwardness," and, in published sermons "revised expressly," can hold up to their sheep no better exemplar than Abraham of "the purity of heart which stood in whiteness in a dark age." They preach and teach, year out, year in, that "faith," independent of character and conduct, is "accounted righteousness." Are women the teachers and preachers?

Why must "spiritual and religious enfranchisement antedate political liberty" for every woman, since they never have for any man?

Mr. Mead says: "Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Paine were the representative men in laying the foundation of political liberty in America." But the inheritors of the political liberty they secured to America in the Centennial Year refused a place in Philadelphia to the bust of Thomas Paine, and set up a statue to the preacher Witherspoon. Were they women who did this?

When the Fourteenth Amendment was proposed, many of us, not minors, nor criminals, nor quite idiots nor lunatics, thought that, as "previous condition of servitude" did not cover those who, Mr. Mead says, "are far more intelligent, far better educated, infinitely more honest, virtuous, pure, and upright than the fathers, brothers, and sons of their own race," sex could very well come into the bill after color. But Wendell Phillips ordered us to hold our peace: "that was the negro's hour!"

I never did "speak in meeting," and, having been born and bred in a church that enjoins unquestioning obedience not only to "spiritual pastors" but to "masters," I might not have dared after a peremptory order from such a high mightiness. But Mrs. Stanton and others most eloquently did proclaim the injustice of allowing another class of ignorant, impulse-guided men to be clothed with all political rights while the free-born women of the land remained disfranchised. No end of abuse did they receive from women, natural, if Mr. Mead is right in saying that "as a mass" they "are completely given over to superstition,"—not natural, if the same Mr. Mead is right in claiming that "they are more intelligent than the men of their own race"; and from men nearly all of the old abolitionists included.

I was converted to abolitionism at the mature age of eleven years, and, I can't say I enjoyed, but, I had for several years the distinction of being pointed out by my playmates as the solitary specimen of the genus in the town in which I lived; but, as I understood it, liberty always meant liberty for you and yours as well as for me and mine.

We, the pariahs of the land, held in those days a convention in New York, at which there was a vast amount of excellent talking. Henry Wilson made us a nice speech, in which he said he had never asked anything for himself which he was not willing to grant his wife and mother! Only that we are so used to it, such generosity would quite take away one's breath. His talk finished, he came down from the platform to where my husband and I were sitting, and proposed to go and lunch with us.

Simpleton as I was (natural, being a woman!), it seemed to me as easy to be just, and I said: "Mr. Wilson, you will advocate in Washington what you have in New York; you will use your great influence to have the Fourteenth Amendment go to the States with provision for striking the fetters from all hands?" "But, Katie, we don't need your vote," was his reply.

The Republican party did need the negro vote; and, to perpetuate its own power, to keep all the fat offices, it loaded the body politic with "a large mass of ignorant men, men unprovided with reasoning faculties and ruled and governed solely by their impulses."

Mr. Mead "would not undo this if he could." More intelligent patriots would, were it possible, undo this stupendous blunder. "Woman suffrage we have not yet. Good. Let us not have it," because "women are superstitious." Mr. Mead, like the majority of people, can witness a wrong to others with perfect Christian resignation. Being among the disfranchised, I am not so philosophical.

But grant that "just now we have our hands full of untrained voters," and it may be, if the Ship of State took on board but one more ignorant voter,

"We should see
Our wealthy Andreas docket in sands,
Vailing her high tops lower than her ribs,
To kiss her burial."

Suffrage was "limited," not so very long ago, for men who had made a bad use of it; it is not quite apparent why it could not be again, if the well-being of the Republic demanded it. But without robbing a person who now enjoys them of any political rights, there is a way out of the dilemma.

There are in every State many who are not illiterate, not a whit more superstitious than the men around them, who by no fiction of law can be said to have a representative at the polls or in the legislatures of the nation,—tax-paying single women and widows.

In my own city were three women not illiterate, not superstitious, heirs of an estate valued for taxation at four and half millions. No voice had either of them in the levying or disbursing of taxes. The Mc's and O's and Sk's of the Council, even the men who cleaned the sewers that ran past their blocks, had more power over their vast possessions than they had.

Something like this is true in every city, every town. Enfranchise such; their votes would add themselves to those of the better class in community, would strengthen the at present feeble bulwark against the dangerous element that threatens our national life.

Then, when Americans shall learn, as Englishmen have learned, that women can vote without the heavens falling, the numbers of voters can be increased as, with increased intelligence, women outgrow their superstitions, till in good time suffrage shall be, not in name but in deed universal, and we shall have no "royalty of sex," but be really and truly Republican. Yours,

KATE N. DOGGETT.

CAMBRIDGE, Feb. 2.

PRAYER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

With the main conclusion of your article on prayer, in a late number, I fully concur, but see no force in some of the reasoning by which you reach it. "The highest good of the universe," to which God's "absolute goodness is pledged," are expressions that belong to a method of reasoning that has no longer any value, except occasionally by way of reductio ad absurdum, to demolish the pretensions of theological reasoning. That method is now plainly seen to be barren of useful results for the guidance of life. The theologian is sure to deduce explicitly from the divine character what he has beforehand implicitly put into it. In human character and conduct, however, we have a fertile field and a comparatively solid basis for our reasoning. Still, in the subordinate proposition of your article, that man's voluntary actions and dispositions can have no influence on the general course of things to make them better than they would otherwise be, I should be slow to concur. But prayer in the popular sense, implying necessarily something of a craven and unmanly spirit, I am satisfied cannot be a means of such influence.

Every one who has studied character in children has felt the superior nobility in a boy taking punishment with fortitude and bravery, as compared to his taking it with entreaties for mercy. The majesty and power of the person addressed reflects no dignity or manliness upon the suppliant. In no aspect, to a healthy ethical sentiment, can a begging act or disposition be anything else, at best, than a weakness to be ashamed of and overcome.

Whatever incidental or collateral benefits may have accrued from it, any one who has passed through the experiences of the "mourner's bench" and has afterwards recovered a healthy self-respect, if he "prays" for anything, will pray that he may be saved from ever again making such a spectacle of himself before gods and men. For the real and inevitable sorrows and sufferings of mind and body in this life, a wise man will cultivate a spirit of fortitude and resignation, but will despise and pity the morbid agonies begot of superstitious fears in feeble and servile minds; well knowing that the whole vile brood of those fears and agonies must depart at the approach of a higher morality and a larger knowledge.

E. D. STARK.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 29, 1877.

FEED BY FAITH?

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I clip the following from a newspaper of recent date:—

A MODERN ELIJAH.—There is a woman in this city who for many years has been fed by the hand of God as much as Elijah of old to whom the ravens came in the wilderness. Her name is Mrs. Pithey, and she lives at No. 68 William Street. Her life has been one of extraordinary suffering, of patient endurance, and of perfect Christian faith. A long time ago she was as bright and pretty a young woman as one could meet; and when she married John Pithey the church-bells rang merrily, and a joyous group of friends pressed around the young couple to extend their hearty congratulations. That was in the times when the grandmothers of the present generation had not lost the bloom from their cheeks nor the light from their eyes, and it was a long time ago. Every one who has reached the prime of life knows how difficult it is to keep track of the hurrying years. It is only the greater events that are firmly dated in the mind. After a married life of ten years, as brief as they were happy, Mrs. Pithey was stricken with that ancient and dreadful disease, the palsy, which from that day to this has never released her from its spectral grasp. Helpless as a child, having to be fed and lifted about her room, she has never yet been heard to utter a complaint, her admonition to all who take her trembling hand being, "Trust in the Lord." In the year 1868, the husband of this poor woman died suddenly with apoplexy, leaving her a little cottage on William Street and only fifty cents in money to provide for herself and her blind mother, nearly ninety years of age and bedridden. Since then she has subsisted on faith. A few kind-hearted people have looked after her from time to time, and lately she has been specially cared for by the Centenary Church. She never manifests any anxiety about the future, for, she says, "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," and He will not let any of his children suffer. Summer and winter come and pass, and day follows in the train of night, and all is the same. The blue sky may look down ever so softly, and the sunlight may dance upon the green fields and the crowded streets. Sometimes the voices of children playing upon the sidewalk penetrate the silence of the sick-room, and sometimes there comes the distant rumble of passing vehicles, and these are her reminders of the outer world,—a world which is to her little more than a memory. She lived in it once, and felt its changing joys and griefs, its hopes brightening with the dawn of youth; heard the gentle tones of loved ones who have long since passed away; saw the garments of earth freshen and fade with the passage of the years; but that was a long time ago. She is sitting in an old arm-chair, weak and powerless of limb. The shadows of age are clustering gradually over her wrinkled face, and to each friend who touches her trembling hand she whispers smilingly, "Trust in the Lord!"—Chicago Tribune.

Now this is a pretty story, and doubtless many of those who have read it find in it nothing to excite anything but sympathy and admiration. Indeed I have no doubt but that the old lady's trust in God is sincere. It was not written, however, to excite sympathy, but to serve as a proof of the efficacy of faith, and a very good example of Christian faith it is. The simplicity of the narration is very interesting. "Since then she has subsisted on faith." In what way? "A few kind-hearted people have looked after her from time to time," etc. This is faith based on reason with a vengeance! As I read the story, this thought came into my head: If this old lady were shut up in her house so that no human being could come to her to hear her statement that she had only the Lord to trust in, would her faith have supported her so well as it has done with the "Centenary Church" to back it? W. H. T.

January 28, 1877.

COOK'S COOKERY.

The Orthodox ministers of Boston, and their advanced guard of skirmishers, the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, have for three or four years been making desperate efforts to get up what they call a revival. This they earnestly desired, not merely for the two purposes ordinarily prompting such action, the saving of souls, and the enlargement of their churches, but to interpose a barrier against two forces which they consider hostile, rationalism on one side and science on the other. Their efforts at revivalism, so far, having failed, they felt obliged to call in an expert, Mr. Moody, who understands their business better than they themselves do, to give his counsel, supervision, and personal aid in the undertaking. But, Mr. Moody being much in demand elsewhere, there was a considerable interval of delay, and it was thought needful to cook up something else to counteract the "deadness" of church-members, the indifference of the rest of the community to Orthodox fulminations, and the further operation of the two hostile forces above-mentioned.

A Cook was shortly found, Joseph by name, who had the needful self-confidence, the needful imperativeness in dogmatic assumption and assertion, the needful fluency of rhetorical statement, and one other qualification, which, being beyond the line of the ministers in question, impressed them as very powerful, and likely also to seem powerful to the public at large. This was an affection of subtle metaphysical distinctions, in which the dialect of science and the forms of logical demonstration were used, first to impugn such ideas conflicting with Orthodoxy as are now gaining a hold on the popular mind, and next to give an appearance of reason and truth to dogmas seen to be unreasonable and untrue when stated in plain language. The person referred to was also specially fitted for the purpose in question by having made some studies both in rationalism and science, to the end of more effective disputation of their conclusions, and by a confident opinion of his own sufficiency for success in such a contest.

The ministers, whether themselves dazzled by Joseph's coruscations, or assuming that these would probably dazzle the community if he could get a hearing, proceeded to raise an audience for him. This they accomplished by going themselves to hear his Monday lectures, calling upon their parishioners to go, sedulously "cracking up" the lectures and the lecturer in the daily periodical press, as well as in their respective theological organs, and hiring for him a larger audience-room when by these means the first was overflowed.

The revival, strange to say, has not yet come along; but, while we wait for it, if any one wishes a vivid illustration of what the Athenian sophists were in the time of Socrates, he can see and hear it by going on Monday noons to the Tremont Temple.

C. K. W.

A SCOTCHMAN, being examined by his minister, was asked, "What kind of a man was Adam?" "Oh, jist like ither folk." The minister insisted on having a more special description of the first man, and pressed for more explanation. "Weel," said the catechumen, "he was jist like Joe Simpson, the horse-couper." "How so?" asked the minister. "Weel, naeboddy got ony thing by him, and many lost."

A GROCER in Washington advertises that he has "whiskey for sale that has been drunk by all the Presidents, from General Jackson down to the present time."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 to 25 " " " " " "
 " 26 to 51 " " " " " "
 " 52 " " " " " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STUBBS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or $1.00 for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Stone, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keahn Obunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 50 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Osmoond Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Belweide.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Letter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. All volumes sold separately. 2 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Application to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parlor uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Bally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.00
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Devotion in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.50
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Boscovich, & Carpenter. With an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Ownership. Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewski, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (E. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Consent of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memorata by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Oreed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters, to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Art.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.50
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrates.....	2.00
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. On the Skel-Ug.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mops the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGEROLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 2. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	2.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Mandale, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERER-TOEPHUS (C.). Verses, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 1 vol.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.50
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	2.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1858.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. E. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MIRVALL'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 6 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.00
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.50
Rousseau. 1 vol.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Psychology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.00
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul's Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Wickedness of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations, A.D. 1 and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.00
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Black Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours.....	1.50
Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 54 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Large Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	4.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
KENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., Geologist.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of John. Second Edition.....	1.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	2.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEESCHER). Pink and White Ties.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 1 vol.....	2.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.25
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	5.00
The Newcomes.....	5.00
Adventures of Philip, Poindamela.....	5.00
The Virginians.....	5.00
Diamond and the Widow.....	5.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unpublished Pieces.....
THAYER'S (MRS. ORLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Lepus.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TILGH (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 1 vol.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Elements of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYLER (BARBARA). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIFFLES (R. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.00
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literatures of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

321 Washington St., Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 104 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF— THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.50. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FOUR COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete set of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:

TEN COPIES.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	40
FIFTY ".....	75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.00
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Pres. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

Nos. II., III., IV., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.) 20 cts.; ten for $1.75; one hundred, $15.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

RELIGIONS OF CHINA, by W. H. Channing. 25 cts.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."

Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."

Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—a New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.

Jan. 28—Wm. B. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Buling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed."

Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.

Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."

"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.:

Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."

Feb. 25—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing."

March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."

March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."

Single admission, 15 cts. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 451 Washington Street.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL for both sexes. Address

EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved" (22) Receipt Book. Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Review serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant,—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, æsthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

THE LABOR QUESTION—

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fiske, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, E. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orvis, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER, Lock Box 500, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1877.

WHOLE No. 374.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influence or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE BOSTON Herald, instead of frankly answering our question of February 8, flies off on a misrepresentation: "THE INDEX can't get over the fact that the average human being thinks more highly of Jesus Christ than of Thomas Paine. It can't understand it." Oh yes—THE INDEX easily understands that, and itself thinks more highly of Jesus than of Paine in some respects. What it cannot understand is that the Herald, which called it "captious" for objecting to the insolent Christian habit of saying "Tom" Paine, should find it necessary to dodge the point and defend one misrepresentation by another still worse.

ADDITIONAL SIGNATURES to the Liberal League petition have been received as follows since last week: from Mr. D. B. Morton, Groton, N. Y., eighty-two names; from Mr. James E. Jones, Clayville, N. Y., twenty-six; from Mr. Francis O. Dorr, Troy, N. Y., (who writes—"Mr. Joseph E. Handerson is chiefly entitled to credit for the work"), two hundred and thirty-five; from Mr. M. Hinkat, Liberty Pole, Wis., one hundred and nineteen; from Mr. Frank J. Mead, Minneapolis, Minn., one hundred and three; from Mr. John Hiatt, Winchester, Ind., four hundred and ninety-six. Total number of signatures thus far received—1276.

THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION have just published a most valuable tract, entitled "How shall we Keep Sunday?" It contains the four chief addresses delivered at the late Sunday Observance Convention in this city, a complete verbatim report of which was published in this journal in November and December. Our readers, therefore, know the great excellence of these papers, and will doubtless help in circulating one of the best tracts ever issued, which, though containing a hundred pages, is sold for only ten cents. The Association never did a more useful thing than to print it. Further information will be found on our last page.

THE BOSTON Sunday Times is almost the only paper here which dares to tell the truth about the surging folly of the revival. Accompanying the extract from Rev. Mr. Savage's sermon which we copy from its columns elsewhere, was this incisive editorial paragraph: "It is no small compliment to the intelligence of Boston that, thus early, the movement is subjected to a keen, uncompromising criticism by one of the ablest of its pastors. And we hope to see the boldness with which Mr. Savage leads the attack upon this gigantic folly followed up by other equally vigorous blows in behalf of common sense. It will be to the lasting credit of our city if this tidal wave of frantic faith and convulsive Christianity, after rolling over the chief cities of England and America unopposed, should encounter here the breakwater of rational and intelligent belief, which the sober-minded people of Boston are so eminently qualified to set up against its advance."

MR. D. B. MORTON, of Groton, N. Y., writes as follows: "It is with a good deal of pleasure that I am enabled to return the petition with eighty signatures attached,—all voters save one. I feel considerably encouraged, not because I anticipate the immediate passage of the amendment, but because of the growth of liberality in our own place, where I have circulated tracts and other liberal reading, and have often thought the soil was barren and stony. I have circulated petitions before, one against reading the Bible in our public school, which the Catholics signed, and obtained fifty-three names; the other was against the 'God in the Constitution' Amendment, and about forty names were all that were obtained. Of the eighty names on this petition, not one is a Catholic; nor were these names obtained because the Church interest is dormant or indifferent, for I doubt whether there is a village in the State where the 'Sentinels on the Walls of Zion' are more active and vigilant."

IN THE Massachusetts House of Representatives, on February 13, the Committee on the Judiciary reported that it is "inexpedient to legislate" on an amendment of Section 6, Chapter 84, of the General Statutes, relating to the observance of the "Lord's Day." Mr. Noyes, of Boston, urged the adoption of a bill providing that any one who conscientiously believes the seventh day of the week to be the Sabbath shall not be liable to the penalties now imposed by the General Statutes for keeping open shop on Sunday. But even this small concession to liberty and justice was refused, and the Committee's report was accepted. So that the great State of Massachusetts cannot yet find it in her heart to treat even pious Jews as equal to Christians in the rights of conscience—much less those who look on all Sabbatarianism as a poor, miserable remnant of ancient superstition. This abortive attempt to secure justice and religious liberty shows how powerless is the great liberal army by reason of its utter lack of organization. All these wrongs will be righted whenever the liberals of Massachusetts wake from their spiritual lethargy.

AT THE Second Unitarian Church in Portland, Maine, of which Rev. Charles W. Buck is the pastor, the petition of the National Liberal League was brought before the congregation on Sunday, February 11, with a result announced as follows in the Portland Press of the next day: "There was yesterday presented at one of our churches a petition to Congress to recommend to the several States for adoption such a Religious Freedom Amendment of the United States Constitution as shall effect the total separation of Church and State in all branches and departments of the government—national, State, and municipal,—and protect all American citizens in the enjoyment of their equal religious rights and liberties. The following are proposed as amendments to Article I.": [the Religious Freedom Amendment was republished in full by the Press, but need not be here repeated.] "This was signed by nearly all the congregation, and will be presented to other societies for signatures." We take especial pleasure in recording this good deed for freedom and justice by a Unitarian society and its minister. It is a pleasing contrast to the crowding of Unitarian divines to take the "Holy Communion" from the hands of Episcopal Bishops.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SKWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. W. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. B. F. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. MAYOR,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. MORAOE BEAVER,.....Editor of the "Immigrant," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Theridale, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT,
 W. H. HAMLEN,
 J. A. J. WILCOX,
 D. T. KILGORE,
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. T. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. S. WALLISAN,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HAWWOOD G. DAY,.....Baltimore, Iowa.
 HERMAN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAWYARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER,.....Quintman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....151 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 MARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The March of Science towards God.

BY GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

Dining the other night with a friend of great knowledge and thought (which do not always go together), he asked: "Have bees a Deity?" Are they required to know God and understand him as the theologians require us to do? Bees are more "wonderfully" formed than we are. They have a far more complicated nervous structure. They have a clearer sense of the organization of society. They have more intelligence as respects the general good of the bee-world, and make more sacrifices to maintain it than men do in their spheres. Besides, they have mathematical capacity far beyond that possessed by men. In industry, order, frugality, foresight, and economy they excel us. Bee-morality may be different from ours, being based on the needs of the bee-world; but there is no doubt they have morality, and why not religious ideas after the bee-nature? There are bad bees as well as good ones, and the bad bees come to a bad end. Do they need saving as well as we? Has some bee-God come down to some Hebrew hive and been crucified for the salvation of bees? Bees seem so unimportant in our eyes that we do not imagine the Son of God has taken all this trouble for them. But why not? The distance between man and bees is not greater, nor so great, as between God and man. From the infinite distance God is from both, the difference between man and bees is as nothing. Then has he not bestowed as much care in the contrivance of bees as of man, showing equal regard? Has not his respected Son said that not a sparrow falls to the ground without the notice of the Heavenly Father? He can show no more for man. And the sparrow, we know, is a creature of inferior organization, and of inferior sense and capacity, to the bee. Why, therefore, should we conclude that no scheme of atonement has been carried out for the salvation of sinful bees?

Let me duly warn the reader this is not a secular letter. It does not pertain to the demonstrable duties of this life, but to the domain of intellectual speculation. This article relates to pure and unapplied freethought. I restrict the word and define the policy of advocacy termed secular, in the sense of seeking to promote the highest discernible good of mankind from considerations which pertain to this life, as the most intelligent preparation that can be made for another. Secularism does not contend against the existence of Deity, but against dishonoring conceptions thereof; not against the inspiration of Scripture, but against the binding force of what is inapplicable to human welfare; not against a future existence, but against that idea of it which excludes the hope of improvement and honestly-earned happiness. With me freethought and secular thought stand in the same relation to each other as pure mathematics stand to geometry. Pure mathematics is abstract; geometry is mathematics applied to the practical uses of life. Secularism is with me the geometry of freethought. This article I write after perusing your suggestive pamphlet, The God of Science.

Different conceptions of Deity, no doubt, prevail among different creatures, as we should probably conclude if we knew more of their ways of thought. There are different conceptions of Deity, we know, prevailing among men. We know much of these variations in different ages and in different countries of the same age. We are aware, too, how ideas of God differ among men in the same country. Dr. Angus Smith informs us that there may be ten or twelve different climates in a large town; and he has prescribed the geographical limits of that number of distinct climates in London alone. The different classes of conception of Deity here are much more numerous than the climates. There is no doubt that the God of the bees is a more intelligent and paternal ruler than the God of the lower order of Christians, if a fair comparison of the two conceptions were made.

The average narrow and noisy crowd of earnest Christian believers are not persons of much observation on the tendency of science. In fact they know very little about it, and what they do know they dislike. They have been told that science is atheistic. They do not know that science is new knowledge of Nature, and that, therefore, if this new knowledge is atheistic, Nature must be atheistic. But if, as the theologian tells us, Nature is the handiwork of God, the veritable garment of God, the material manifestation of his infinite existence, how is this to be reconciled with the common assertion of the same persons that "science is atheistic," which even Christians of mark, as our Bishop of Peterborough, echo?

In the old days when theologians had eyes, when science began to make its first march and to announce its first systematic discoveries, they saw that a new power had arisen and was standing by their side, which they could not move, and which was overshadowing them. Then they said, partly in their ignorance and partly in their fear: "Science will destroy religion." What they might have said (if they had known better) was, that science would change religion, and give it mightier views and a firmer standing-ground than tradition and obsolete revelations afforded it. I use religion in the sense of awe at the infinite universe outside us—reverence inspired by the perception of that silent, unheeding, unresting Power which has ordered all things before us, and which stretches beyond us evermore. When Bruno first announced that there was a plurality of worlds, and, instead of this planet being the sole creation of God, there were millions and millions of similar and greater worlds in infinite space, possibly inhabited by nobler beings than man, all equally under the care and guardianship of one stupendous Providence, theologians were blinded with the flood of new light, and stood for a while dumb with consternation. They could see how the childish inventions and ignorant explanations of Hebrew theology—how its pitiful contrivances and fanciful schemes of atonement, its anthropomorphic ideas of God, wandering amid the trees of Eden in search of Adam, or explaining things to Cain, when his "countenance fell" because the smoke of his sacrifice did not ascend according to his mind, or arranging the crucifixion of a poor, gentle-souled, visionary Jew as late as two thousand years ago, as a scheme of salvation for those of the human race who might happen to hear of it—would fade into infinite pettiness! The God of the old Jews was a mere attorney in large practice, who had undertaken to collect the rents and debts of the little half-drowned universe they knew. We blame them not, but beg leave to follow them not. They had no conception of the magnificent Omnipotence which science has revealed, whose illimitable grandeur is as much beyond our finite powers to appraise as the terms in which we speak of Him are poor and beggarly, compared with those required, to express the attributes of infinite loftiness and perspicacity.

When astronomers first explained to theologians that this world was not a vast flat surface on which mankind walked to and fro, fixed and firm on some solid base which could never move, but that it was a vast, ponderable, black ball, darting in darkness in its awful journey through space, lighted only by precarious and distant solar rays, science was regarded a thing of horror, whose dreadful revelations struck men as though a demon had spoken; and common men, not priests alone, were ready to kill the astronomer, as the poor Brahmin at a later date was ready to destroy the Satanic microscope which revealed to him life in the water and in vegetation which he thought pure and unliving. The Brahmin destroyed the microscope because he thought it created the horrors which it revealed; and in the same manner the uninformed priest imagined that science made the awful mysteries it disclosed. Hence he treated discoveries as criminal inventions. Now men have grown calmer and wiser. They understand that science is the purifier of piety, the enlarger of devotion, and imparts a new sublimity to reverence which no Bible, no tradition, no theology was ever able to give to it. There is nothing so religious as science, as men will one day know.

Long ago I intended to send you some account of my impressions of your lecture on "The God of Science," which struck me, if you will allow me to say so in your columns, as a great argument stated with great force, animated by picturesque expressions, as when you say, "The pathway of philosophy is white with the bleaching bones of dogmatic systems which have destroyed each other,"—and not wanting in that newness of thought whose quality consists in extension of view and boldness of discernment, carrying the religious thinker into a higher region of observation, where new truths are palpable which were entirely hidden from the view of those who have passed their lives in the lowlands of theology. Yet, though I admire much and agree with you mainly, I dissent in some respects.

For myself, I use the term God in the sense of Nature, expressing collectively, the unfathomable infinity of the space, force, and life without us. The theist who subordinates and defames Nature and sets a Ruler over it, as though it could not take care of itself, is mostly now a person like the obsolete words in a dictionary, needful for reference, but not for use. The sole question now between the pantheist and atheist is: Is Nature conscious, personally helpful, and pervious to prayer? The pantheist believes it is so. The atheist does not know this to be so. If God intended that we should identify him, he would provide the knowledge. That our faculties are finite shows that this knowledge is proscribed to us. To grow wiser by the study of Nature and happler by its power, and to increase in reverence by vaster insight of his works, seem alone possible to us. It always seems to me a want of reverence, a sort of spiritual impertinence in priests to declare they are upon the track of God. God is not a riddle which we must guess, nor a conundrum which we are required to explain, nor a secret which we have to find out. Is it not truer piety to respect his science? Is it reverential to chase Deity by inferences, or to stretch him upon the rack of argument to extort confession from him? If God meant that we should know him personally, he would not dodge us in the mazes of his works. If there is a scheme of human life which we can feel sure of, it is that our natures are meant for wise happiness, that the business of life is the improvement of humanity, and that we should wait with quiet trust the new knowledge which may come by death—that last venture upon untried existence,—the one charm which endows the unknown future with poetry. Atheism is merely the denial of the sufficiency of theological knowledge concerning him to justify men in saying that we have penetrated the Infinite Secret. Hitherto, conceptions of God have been regarded as the property of the churches; but now the revelation of science makes those from Moses to Mormon seem poor indeed. If science does not make God, it makes a newer, a wider, and nobler conception of him. We do not know that the old books of alleged Revelation were written by him. But we do know that the works of Nature must be by him, and what such works say we can trust. This trust grows by intelligence; it depends upon no blind or docile faith which dwarfs the mind; the trust of science requires ever-extending knowledge, which expands the understanding. The main purport of all that you write on science as a new source of religion seems to me rightful and sound. You seem, however, to think that, when that philosophy comes which shall explain the totality of all things, then will come an adequate conception of God. Then I should say it will never come, unless the finite can overtake the infinite. But you point out the direction in which religion can be set free, and how, in ranging over the mighty plain of science, it may add articles to its creed, loftier, holier, and brighter than any Judaic theology has made known.

But we must take time. Christians, with all the fine aspiration of many of them, are as dwellers in Judaic caves. And when they emerge and come suddenly upon the new effulgence of light which science sheds, and look into the vast amphitheatre of the universe it discloses to them, they look, but fear to see.

If sentiment, and not reason, should determine forms of faith, that of the fire-worshippers was the most gentle and picturesque that untutored piety has devised. Fire, as the symbol of God, was ever present to the eye of devotion. Neither light nor air, nor both united, availed to sustain existence until heat came to unbar the prison-house and set life free. You seem to me to underrate the passionateness of personal reverence out of which sincere religion, however instructed, grows, when you say: "The difficulty in the use of the term person is chiefly one of language." Person, in the philosophical sense, cheats the human heart. A "central intelligence" of which you speak is something—a "boundless" intelligence is hopeless. Paley takes the Christian with a brutal brevity from the personal God, who designs and eases and listens and helps, into the presence of a "sensual principle." An undefined being, divested of human personality, is a change which makes the unreflective and untrained soul shudder. We should look the great change fully in the face, not disguise it, not treat it lightly, but submit it honestly as one of the great changes the heart has to undergo in its education by reason.

Again, you say "you care nothing for the name of the great eternal fact of being. Call it Nature, or God, or what you will." It is, if not everything, of great moment by what name a man calls his highest conception he can frame of things. The name is the measure of his mind. The name tells what his mind is. The mind is idle which uses great terms idly. To me this indifference on the part of those who show it implies that a man does not know what he thinks, or does not care what he thinks. To say one does not care by what name others call God is to treat distinctions as ideal, or optional, or capricious; whereas these names are express separate convictions, won by struggle, and held off with passion and pain.

You, I well know, are as far as I could wish to be from treating the differences of honest, earnest men as an immaterial difference of language. But men who have not your seriousness—even thinkers of mark—will use language of contempt for controversial terms. Mr. Gladstone has set lately a splendid example of intellectual rectitude of recognition of the names of thought among heretical or adventurous thinkers. For myself, I fear I am but a cosmist, a student of the order, amazed, awed, but knowing nothing of the origin or direction or purpose of Nature. I am but as one standing on the shore of the unfathomable sea. Navigators of science are upon its mighty waters. They will bring us great news. They will discover new lands. But will the proud and mighty owner think it of consequence to submit his title-deeds to any human court?

I thank you for an argument which presents so full a survey of the new forces of advanced thought, occupying the fields of speculation. You open a new path of progress by showing how the doctrine of the persistence of force unites the ultimate entities of materialism in a more comprehensive conception. It is an advantage to freethought literature to possess your clear exposition of the inadequacy of the dim and fitful revelations of intuition, compared with those of science. Induction and deduction, those modern lanterns of discovery which philosophy carries, throw light where intuition sheds no single ray. Within the same compass we have, in England, no statement which has the merit of yours in presenting the march of science towards God.

{ NEWCASTLE CHAMBERS, 22 Essex St.,
{ Temple Bar, London, W. C.

ONE VOICE FOR REASON.

REV. M. J. SAVAGE ON THE REVIVAL.

Rev. M. J. Savage, the able pastor of the Church of the Unity, in his sermon of last Sunday, very forcibly defined the attitude of liberal men towards the revival. We quote the following from his argument:—

I propose, then, broadly to outline three contrasts between the revivalists and ourselves. These will bring out clearly our necessary attitude toward them, and also the line of our own proper work. And—

1. Contrast the difference in the ends which we propose to ourselves. It is something worse than a faulty and inadequate use of language for us to deceive ourselves into the idea that we are working for the same results because we apply the word "salvation" to them both. They seek the world's salvation, and so do we. But the real things we seek are as wide apart as the east is from the west.

The objective point of the revivalists is to save men's souls; by which is meant so arranging the affairs that, after death, these souls will escape the necessity of going and will be permitted to go to another place called heaven. This salvation has nothing directly to do with character. It is, indeed, held in a general way that "saved" persons will have better characters than those who are "impenitent" and "lost"; but these better characters do not constitute the essence of the "salvation." If any so-called "liberal evangelicals" teach a more reasonable doctrine, they have no logical right to, for it does not belong to the system. Martin Luther, in his zeal for "salvation by faith," said that, though a man committed murder and adultery many times a day, yet if he had faith enough he would still be saved. And that this is not ancient and outgrown doctrine is apparent from recent Brooklyn teachings to which the entire body of evangelical churches gives its assent. At any rate, I have heard of no protest. Mr. Moody said recently, that a man might be honest and pure and upright and true, but that all this had nothing to do with the question of his being "saved." To be saved, then, is to so arrange matters that the soul will escape hell; and this arrangement has nothing directly to do with character.

TO A PLACE CALLED HELL,

Now, what "the soul" is, apart from the whole man, living, thinking, feeling, acting, we do not profess to know, and we do not believe anybody else knows. And what "salvation" means, apart from the general soundness, health, and development of the whole man, body, mind, and spirit, we do not profess to know, and do not believe anybody else knows. Salvation, then, with us, is something chiefly present, and means the deliverance of man from evil, internal and external, and his growth and culture in all high, true, pure, sweet, and manly things. If we can only save a man now from wrong and defect and ignorance and superstition and arrested development, and make of him a living, loving, growing man, reaching out after, and gradually attaining, better and still better things, of body and head and heart, we have no fears for the future.

WE BELIEVE THAT HOLINESS MEANS WHOLENESS.

He who comes to the border-land of the future complete and fresh and sweet in a true manly life, having sincerely tried to be true to himself, his neighbor, and his God, him we believe to be the best fitted for whatever the future may have in store for him. The ship that is sound and staunch in timber and build, and that is full-rigged from top-gallant to keelson, is the vessel in which we would trust our precious freight and our lives as she sails out over the harbor-bar to face the unknown and untired scenes of the measureless ocean beyond. And, if her hull be shaky and her rigging rotten, we do not believe she is any the safer, though her hold were piled full of certificates claiming to assure her safe arrival in port.

We believe that happiness and heaven are so much a matter of healthy capacity for knowing and loving all true and beautiful and divine persons and things that nothing can take the place of these. God cannot make a deaf man hear music except by curing his deafness. So God and all the angels could not make a man see and hear and enjoy heaven except in so far as he is healthy and developed in those faculties that fit him to take hold of and appreciate the knowledge and truth and beauty that constitute what we mean by heaven.

Our object, then, is to train and develop

TRUE MANHOOD AND WOMANHOOD.

It is a present object; and it concerns itself about the future only as it believes in the divine order of cause and effect, and holds that a good to-morrow is best assured by a good to-day.

2. The contrasts between our methods is quite as marked as the distinction of our aims.

The revivalists hold that this life is insignificant, and that devotion to it is delusive and dangerous. The logic of their system still sings:—

"This world is all a fleeting show,
For man's delusion given."

This life is to be sacrificed to the next. The voice is constantly uplifted against "worldliness." The "one thing" to be done is to be sure that your own soul is saved—"make your calling and election sure,"—and then to do all you can to make sure the saving of the souls of others. The practical outcome of all this order of things is to make hell very full of victims of the devil's successful cunning and of God's wrath, and to make heaven a place where a selected few perpetually thank God and sing his praises, because he chose to illustrate his grace and mercy by saving them from the horrible fate that has overtaken the most of their friends and neighbors. The old monasticism, when it fled from practical life, and refused to have anything to do with home and marriage and the bringing of children into the midst of so dangerous a world, was the only consistent outcome of this theory. The universe is a horrible engine for the production and the torture of souls.

We hold that this world is the best one we know anything about; that we are to make the most and best of it while in it. So and we believe in invention and improvement and art and learning and the development of all the divinely-ordained possibilities of this world-life of ours. We hold that there is a most intimate relation between the moral and religious condition and external environment. We see that ignorance, and lack of sanitary regulations, and filthy tenements, and the relations of the laborer to his work, and ten thousand other outside things, produce and accompany conditions of morals and religion. So we believe we help on salvation in the most speedy way possible when we help on civilization. Many inventors have done more for the souls of men than many of the world's preachers.

WE BELIEVE IN SCIENCE AND CIVILIZATION,

While, then, the revivalists make the least possible of this life, we make the most possible of it.

They hold and teach that the one only efficient means and methods of salvation is faith in the bloody sacrifice of Christ on Calvary; that he died in our stead; and that if we believe this fact, and accept his substitution, we shall, for his sake, escape the everlasting death that else awaits us. We believe this to be because nothing that any one else can do can ever stand instead of and take the place of what a man is in himself. We believe it to be false in morals and faithless to true righteousness; because justice can never be satisfied by punishing the innocent for the guilty; and because only a vengeful tyrant, who will have his "pound of flesh," and cares not whom he gets it out of, could ever think of accepting such a substitution. We believe it to be false to Christianity; because there is not a shadow of a hint of it in any well-authenticated teaching of Jesus; so that, if he knew what his mission was to the world, he failed utterly to deliver his message, on this theory; and because it is perfectly easy to trace this doctrine to fanciful discussions of the relations of Christianity to Judaism, on the part of those who wished to prove that the one was only the logical outcome and completion of the other. Jesus teaches that a man who forsakes his sins and turns to God is accepted of him; and that a man is to be known by his fruits; and that the judgment is to turn on questions of character and practical life. Nowhere has he said one syllable out of which can be tortured the horrible, unjust, and repulsive doctrine of atonement by the substituted sacrifice which is the main staple of the revivalist's preaching.

FALSE IN PHILOSOPHY,

There is the broadest possible contrast between the theory of the universe and of man's nature and relation to God, out of which the doctrines of salvation and the methods of salvation necessarily grow.

The revivalists hold that every word of the Bible is

THE INSPIRED AND INFALLIBLE WORD OF GOD.

They hold, further, that this Bible teaches that the whole race fell from perfect innocence through the sin of one man; and that he thus became totally depraved and incapable of good. And that it follows from this, and is divinely taught, that all men are thus under condemnation to endless punishment in hell. Out of these premises comes the necessity for the substituted death of Christ, and a salvation limited to those who accept by faith his sacrificial work.

Now, what do we hold in these points? In the first place, we know—not simply believe—that man was on the earth ages before the Bible says he was created; and we regard as wholly fanciful the attempts of anxious commentators to reconcile Genesis and geology. And we find in those early traces no signs of the innocence and happiness that the popular thought associates with Eden. Rather do we find the lowest barbarism, and distinct traces of a development from animality up to his present condition of civilization.

Thus the foundation of the whole system—fall, depravity, atonement—is knocked away at one blow. And the rationalizing Orthodox who accepts these results of positive knowledge and still tries to keep his Orthodoxy, has a building, like a mirage city, all in the air.

But, even though we knew none of these things, the whole theory is so repulsive to the very moral nature that God has given us, that no amount of evidence were sufficient to prove it. Proof enough to establish this would be capable of proving that

THE GOD OF THIS UNIVERSE IS A DEVIL.

For with reverence, and yet with fearlessness, I dare to say that the human mind can conceive no greater crime than the creation of the world on the Orthodox theory. To make a system, the outcome of which is irremediable misfortune to the majority, is something of which only fiendishness is capable. Here we are, enmeshed and involved in this network of evil, all for the fault of a man who lived thousands of years ago, with no provision for the salvation of any but the few millions of Christendom, and with the certainty that only a few of these will be saved; and yet God is sovereign and able to save whomever he will; and on this sovereignty revivalism is based, and men cry and plead and agonize in the endeavor to induce him to save a few more; and he hears a church and takes pity on a dozen or two, when their other engagements permit the court favorites, Moody and Sankey, to be present. Merciful heavens! are men with hearts, and moral natures and brains, expected to believe such stuff as this? Are they expected to work to get others to believe and accept it? It is mild language to say that no blackest Nero or Borgia of all history was ever charged with the guilt of such infamy? If there is such a God in the universe, and if he has thus treated humanity, it is for him to ask pardon of man, and not for man to bow down and supplicate his Almighty injurer.

But from such

A HORRIBLE NIGHTMARE OF THEOLOGY

the light of modern criticism, coming in to awaken us, gives us blessed escape into the daylight of reason and truth. The Bible, from whose contradictory and distorted texts this system has been constructed, is found, by enlightened scholarship to be not the infallible "word of God." It is only the human literature of a nation's religious life. And though you find beneath its covers teachings that can be twisted into such shapes of evil and fear, you may dismiss them as only the child-world's thoughts about the mystery of the universe. The Bible is a wondrous book, because it is a history of a nation's religious life and thought and growth. But crude ideas of God, mistaken thoughts about man, false notions concerning the world, low theories of society and morals, errors in history, in geography, in science, fierce hatreds, vindictive passions, narrow prejudices, unauthorized and inconsistent dreams of the future,—all attest that it is a work of humanity, containing the ordinary human mixtures of gold with iron and clay.

We differ, then, with the revivalists at every point.

OUR SALVATION IS NOT THEIR SALVATION.

Our methods cannot be their methods. Our theories, and what we believe to be our facts, cannot be made to live alongside of their theories. We believe their teaching is not inadequate only, but pernicious, because it stands in the way of a higher and better one. If they can indoctrinate the world in their views, they are giving men possessions of thought and prejudice and falsehood concerning God and man that they must get rid of before they can look with clear and open vision upon the facts of life and destiny. It is not then a matter of indifference to us whether or not they succeed. We stand for what we believe to mean the facts of life, and what will bear the light of civilization. We stand for the highest manhood, and the highest hopes of the future. And we cannot consistently keep still for the sake of peace. "First pure," and true, and "then peaceable." True peace can come in no other way.

While, then, we believe Messrs. Moody and Sankey to be honest and sincere, we believe at the same time that they are wronging and perverting the religious nature and the religious life of those they influence. And though, like Socrates in Athens, like Jesus in Jerusalem, like Savonarola in Florence, like Luther at Worms, we stand up alone, a minority of one in the midst of the fierce enthusiasm and opposition of the great Orthodox majority that, now as then, calls all who do not agree with them anti-Christ and infidel, still stand up we must, and hold aloft our flag, on which is inscribed, "God, liberty, light, and civilization!"—Boston Sunday Times, Feb. 4.

A NEW ENCYCICAL.

We print in another column a brief item of news which we find drifting about in the papers of the week credited to the New York Sunday Democrat, and which, if trustworthy, is of great importance. It is to the effect that the Pope has addressed an encyclical letter to the Cardinal, Archbishops, and Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in this country in condemnation of the public school system. He makes no distinction between schools entirely secular and schools in which the Bible is read and morality taught, but condemns public schools for the common education of all youth without exception or discrimination. The Pope, the same paper says, leaves it to the discretion of each bishop to publish the encyclical, or to withhold it. It is not to be inferred, however, that there is any discretion left to these ecclesiastics as to heeding or ignoring the admonition. The only question submitted to their judgment is the question of the expediency of making known that the Pope has sent forth such a document. From the fact that the encyclical has not yet been made public, we judge that the American bishops think it wiser to keep the matter secret, or as secret as possible. Nevertheless, since the report has got abroad that such an encyclical has been forwarded, and is not, so far as we have seen, anywhere denied, there would probably be less harm than advantage in making its exact text known; unless, indeed, it is so flagrantly and offensively hostile to the intelligence of the American people that its publication will bring the Pope into contempt. Unless it can be explicitly and satisfactorily denied that any such document exists, the worst construction will not unreasonably be put upon its concealment. Enough is already known of the intolerant attitude of Pius IX. toward free and general education, to justify any opinion of the nature of an encyclical on this topic which is not promptly made public.

If it be true that the head of the Roman Catholic Church has taken such a step, it is most unfortunate for his reputation and for the reputation of that Church in this country. It will precipitate a debate and a controversy in which the promulgators and supporters of acts of hostility toward the system of general education will gain nothing and lose much. Of all the institutions of this country which may properly be considered novel in respect of the ways of the Old World, the public school, supported by the equal taxation of all for the equal advantage of all, is perhaps the most highly prized and the least likely to be given up at the suggestion of a foreign potentate, whatever his prerogatives or his pretensions. It is in a true sense a part of the organism of republican institutions, and where it does not flourish they can never exist in their perfection, or have adequate guarantee of security. The general diffusion of intelligence marks the people fit to govern themselves. It is this as much as anything else that makes a Republic in America easy, and in fact necessary. The absence of it in France and in Mexico makes the attempt to maintain a republican government, to state the fact in the mildest form, difficult and uncertain. Differ as much as men may touching the expediency of universal suffrage as the basis of government, there can be but one opinion as to the peril of universal suffrage without universal education. The State whose life depends upon the intelligence of the people who vote is bound by an intelligent concern for its own permanence to provide the means of education for all. We will go further, and say it is bound to require that all shall be educated to a certain extent.

It is unfortunate for the Roman Catholics in this country that the head of their Church supposes it to be essential to their prosperity to fight against the dissemination of knowledge not tinged with their own religious doctrine. The "dim religious light" which constituted the intellectual illumination of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries they seem to fancy is broad and intense enough for the nineteenth. They greatly want confidence in the power of the truth to vindicate itself in the arena of free contention. To the tremendous argument of John Milton's essay on "The Liberty of Unlicensed Printing" they choose to oppose the theory of an infallible censorship, and the subjection of the judgment and consciences of the many to the arbitrary authority of the judgment and consciences of the few. This conserves, so long as and to the extent that it is submitted to the power of the few; but it delays and prevents the world's progress to the extent of its influence.

We do not choose to discuss the questions involved in such an act as the issue of the rumored encyclical any further at this time. If the report is confirmed, either by its publication or by a persistent unwillingness on the part of those who know to deny that such a document has been issued, there will be occasion to return to the subject. The public schools are vital to the success of the American system of government, and to the public welfare. When the Pope gives the word to his followers and adherents in this nation to make war upon them, we shall behold an array and an organization in their support that will rejoice the hearts of all in every land who revere liberty of learning and liberty of conscience. The number of those who desire to foment any hostility against the Roman Catholic Church as a system of doctrine, or a form of worship, is small. The majority respect the convictions of her worshippers, and, were it not for the fact that the members regard themselves as bound by a primary allegiance to a foreign and hostile temporal power, would rejoice to see her prosper. In so far as it promotes piety and the virtues of life and quickening all good forces there is the same reason to approve of its work in the community as to approve of the work done by Moody and Sankey. But, considered as subjects to and governed absolutely by the Church of Rome, there is the same objection to it that there would be to the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country if it were ruled by the Queen of England as head of the Church.—Boston Advertiser, Feb. 9th.

THE PAINE BUST.

Last Sunday was the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine. Walt Whitman, the poet, delivered an address in Philadelphia on the occasion, of which the following is the closing passage:—

"The absolute fact is that, as he lived a good life after its kind, he died calmly and philosophically, as became him. He served the embryo Union with most precious service—a service that every man, woman, and child in our thirty-eight States is, to some extent, receiving the benefit of to-day,—and I for one here cheerfully and reverently throw my pebble on the cairn of his memory. As we all know, the season demands—or, rather, will it ever be out of season?—that America learn to better dwell on her choicest possession, the legacy of her good and faithful men; that she well preserve their fame, if unquestioned, or, if need be, that she fail not to dissipate what clouds have intruded on that fame, and burnish it newer, truer, and brighter continually."

During the past summer, as our readers may be aware, a sufficient fund was raised, by subscription, to purchase a colossal bust of Paine. This bust, when completed, was offered to the city of Philadelphia to be placed in Independence Hall among the memorials of other Revolutionary patriots who toiled and suffered for us in "the times that tried men's souls." The municipal authorities of Philadelphia refused the gift, though we have not heard that they intend entering any protest against the attempt of the Centennial Board of Finance to avoid the payment of $1,500,000 due the public treasury. It is understood that the bust will now be tendered to the United States, for such disposition in or near the national capitol as may be deemed appropriate. It remains to be seen whether Congress will extend any more gracious treatment to the historic marble than was vouchsafed by the rulers of "the City of Brotherly Love."

Of course the sole objection urged against Paine in this matter is his religious views; and more especially his exceedingly frank expression of them. If he had never written or never published his Age of Reason his countenance, done in stone, metal, or paint, would long ago have adorned the walls of Independence Hall. As was remarked in a previous article, his opinions on theological subjects did not differ materially from those of John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, and Thomas Jefferson; but these eminent gentlemen were wise enough to confine their heresy to private conversation and correspondence, while their friend and colleague walked boldly into print, and said his say in the face of the world. If Abraham Lincoln had published the little book which his biographer informs us he wrote when a young man, he would undoubtedly be in the same boat to-day with Paine, instead of being, as he is, a sort of American saint, claimed by a half-dozen sects, though belonging to none.

But the point we wish to raise is this: What justice or sense is there in refusing to pay a debt of gratitude because the creditor happens to be outside the pale of Orthodoxy? The bust which the "uncolored" of Philadelphia declined to put where it belongs was not intended as a testimonial to the author of the Age of Reason, but to the author of Common Sense and the Rights of Man. If the first-named work were tenfold worse than it is—and it is not more heretical than many sermons preached nowadays from fashionable pulpits—it would be more than atoned for by its matchless predecessors. No one can have a clear comprehension of the much-talked-about "spirit of '76" unless he reads the fiery pages of Common Sense. No one can have a clear comprehension of the feelings of the most intelligent lovers of liberty in Europe and America at the outbreak of the French Revolution of 1789 unless he studies the masterly and invincible logic of the Rights of Man. No writer, living or dead, ever handled the English language more effectively than Paine. His heart was full of his subject, and he wrote straight to the popular heart. The people never have had, and never will have, an abler or braver champion than he whose memory has been pelted with pious mud for nearly three-quarters of a century. Without Common Sense American Independence would not have been proclaimed on the 4th of July, 1776; and had the leaders of the French Revolution followed the line marked out in the Rights of Man there would have been no Reign of Terror, no "Sainte Guillotine," no first or second empire, no Commune, no military make-shift like that now in existence, but a pure and permanent republic,—a blessing to France and the world.

Thomas Paine loved liberty for liberty's own sake, and no suspicion has ever been cast upon his honesty or his honor. He spent the best years of his life in the service of his adopted country; he devoted to her cause rare genius and indomitable energy, and he may be truly called one of the fathers and founders of American freedom. It is a curious and not very flattering commentary upon human nature—the bigoted side of it more particularly—that in the Centennial Year of that freedom his bust was denied a niche in the temple which might never have been consecrated by the immortal Declaration but for his impassioned and convincing pen. And if the enemies of Paine could temper their wrath with a little discretion, they would see that by keeping up this vindictive warfare upon his fame they are defeating their own ends. As the people of Rome thought more of Marius when his bust was excluded from the triumphal procession, so we think the victim of Philadelphia intolerance will rise in the estimation of his countrymen by the very means employed to degrade his name.—St. Louis Republican, Feb. 4.

THE PRAYER-CURE CASE IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Feb. 10, 1877.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE BOSTON JOURNAL:—I notice in the Journal of February 8 a paragraph "For the benefit of story collectors," which states, in substance, that a story concerning the prayer-cure of a man in Chicago has been pronounced false.

The facts of the case are substantially these: Mr. F. W. Fields, who was one of the early co-workers with Mr. Moody in the Chicago Young Men's Christian Association, and has since been very active in connection with many of his revival meetings, is the person referred to. He declares that from his earliest recollection he had suffered from what is known as the "hip disease," and a short time previous to the period to which the story refers, he had been suffering great pain in his hip by reason of over-much work in connection with Mr. Moody's Sunday-school and the Chicago Association. His leg had become shorter than the other, so that he was obliged to wear a boot with a thick cork sole, and a heel some two inches and a half higher than the other. He not only limped badly in walking, but was at this time unable to touch his foot to the ground without intense pain, and was obliged to walk with crutches.

One Saturday evening as he was limping home to his lodgings he says the thought occurred to him, "God made me and he can mend me." He felt specially moved to pray that God would cure him, and so make him more efficient in his work. This he did, and then lay down to sleep. During the night he dreamt that some one came to him and performed a surgical operation on his leg, and the next morning when he awoke, to his unbounded surprise and delight, he found that his bent leg was straightened. He then jumped out of bed upon the floor to try whether he could stand upon it, and found that it was strong and sound and gave him no pain whatever. In order to test the case more fully, Mr. Fields declares that he dressed himself and went out and walked round an open square which was inclosed with a low stone curbing, with his well foot upon the top of the curbing and the mended foot on the ground, in this way bringing his entire weight upon the mended leg with a little fall at every step. In all this he suffered no pain, and since that time his leg has never given him any trouble.

From the habit of years, Mr. Fields still has a little swing in his gait, but the tailors who make his trousers say that his legs are of equal length.

Whatever Mr. Sankey or any one else may say to the contrary, the story of this prayer-cure is true. Mr. Fields is now a resident of this city, and may be addressed upon this subject.

Mr. John V. Farwell, who was invited by Mr. Fields to his lodgings on the Sunday after his cure, states that he noticed that Mr. Fields came to the Sunday-school that day without a cane or crutch, and when he went to Mr. Fields' lodgings, that gentleman, instead of climbing the stairs painfully as he had been accustomed to do, leaped up two stairs at a time; and when they had reached his room, with tears of joy he related to Mr. Farwell and another gentleman—I think it was Mr. Moody—the wonderful cure that had been wrought in answer to his prayer.

Mr. Farwell has given a written statement of this prayer-cure to the Rev. Horatio Bonar, of Edinburgh, from which the first published version of this story was taken.

I have felt obliged to make this reference to this subject, because that story was first published in my book. Please insert this and oblige.

Yours truly,

W. H. DANIELS.

[The story to which our correspondent refers was pronounced false by Mr. Sankey only so far as it made Mr. Moody the subject of the remarkable cure, his opinion not being expressed as to the general accuracy of the statement. The story as an incident in Mr. Moody's personal history is not true, as our correspondent himself shows; and having learned this much we published the contradiction, naturally supposing that, false in one particular it was false in all.—ED. JOURNAL.]

"NOTHING BUT LEAVES."

We have now been edified with an exhibition of the Tabernacular form of religion for one week. It is too early yet to say whether this vulgar expedient will succeed in the sense in which the revivalists themselves use the term success. But it is not too early to consider the methods of this ostentatious movement for making converts by machinery, nor is it difficult to anticipate, with reasonable certainty, the probable results of such a hot-house process of forcing the growth of virtue and morality.

We can already balance the "harvest sheaves," of which the melodious, though somewhat untuneful, Sankey is wont to sing, against the vicious and immoral tendencies of the revival as a whole. And we may as well be liberal and allow in advance that Mr. Moody will do all and more than he claims can be done. What is the burden of his sermons so far? Simply this: that the "torch of salvation"—we use his own favorite and incendiary figure—may be carried through the city by three or four thousand zealous workers, and that thereby one convert a piece per month may be added to the cause.

Very well, let us admit that ten thousand, or double it and call it twenty thousand, persons are subjected to that vague and indefinite metamorphosis called "conversion." Then what? Then we shall be told that the movement is a success, and that the world, especially that part of it of which Boston is the centre, has reaped great benefits therefrom. The assumption will be too much, and for the reason that there is another side to the account. We would very respectfully say to the amiable and well-meaning people who are conducting us through the revival: "Come, let us reason together." We know it is a very hard thing to ask them to pause in the wild delirium of their dizzy devotions to do such a chilly and cool-headed thing as to reason. Righteousness on a rampage is apt to be unreasonable. Still we must ask them to reason or to let us do it for them. Better still, let us calculate; Mr. Moody as a Connecticut man should readily appreciate the charm of that magic word calculate.

Now, then, on the credit side of his account let us put down twenty thousand conversions. Conversions to what? Conversions to be of any use must make the police statistics more cheerful reading, or else the city is no better. And it must not be a transient and temporary improvement, if the good is to be worth all the fuss and feathers, the flurry and the fury of this holy hullabaloo. The people of this or any other city may shout themselves hoarse with holiness, and still the world be practically no better, the prisons be no less crowded, and the social problems that vex us no nearer solution.

Will the burden of crime and pauperism be lightened in consequence of these much talked about conversions? It is as certain as anything can be that it will not. For this experiment has been tried in London and in Liverpool, and the testimony on this point from those places is that murders are not diminished, robberies, violent assaults, petty thefts and drunkenness have not been reduced one iota in consequence of Moody's labors there. England drank more liquors last year, according to the official returns, than ever she drank before. England paid more for prisoners and more for paupers than she did the previous year.

But if the revivalists did not lessen the incubus of crime and want on the other side of the Atlantic, they did accomplish something else not quite as desirable. They succeeded in sending a number of sane people to grace the padded cells of lunatic asylums, and if the testimony of some of the leading English newspapers is true they succeeded also in flooding the streets of London and Liverpool with ribald blasphemy, such as was barely exceeded in Paris during the obscene orgies of the French Revolution. Their songs, wretched mutilations as they are of tunes more familiar to and better suited for variety halls, were adopted as drinking-songs for English bar-rooms, and could be heard at all hours of the night borne on the lips of tipsy brawlers rolling home from their vinous carousals. The women of the stews adopted the sacred slang of the hour, and every den of infamy reeked with the cant of the Tabernacle; while the gamins of the street, hardly four spans high, swelled the shocking chorus of profanity with their parodies of Sankey's stupid ditties, until all London was engulfed in this fearful travesty of sacred things.

And this is what we are to witness here, only on a scale smaller in proportion to the size of our city and the number of the impressionable masses available for this melancholy humbug. Yet we are asked to believe that a movement so profitless as to practical results, and so directly provocative of the most awful and revolting blasphemy—blasphemy which, like the incense of hell, pervades the very air,—is the work of the Holy Spirit moving with power upon the masses. A more preposterous, a more shallow, or a more wicked deception was never foisted upon an intelligent community. And we look confidently to see the outrageous trick estimated at its true worth by the thinking people of Boston. In an age of reason, an age that has been permitted to hear the voices of Theodore Parker and Ralph Waldo Emerson, we should hope that these two strolling players who have borrowed the gospel garb in which to masquerade would receive small encouragement, at least in a city that has spent so much of her treasure for education as has Boston. It is impossible, as we view it, to say too much in condemnation of this movement. It is an eccentric, emotional extravaganza, degenerating in some particulars to the level of a farce, a burlesque of Christian worship, a mockery of the Deity, and an insult to the common sense of the nineteenth century.—Boston Sunday Times, Feb. 4th.

TOM PAINE.

Now we have that old bone of contention, Tom Paine, thrown down again for opposing sects to fight over. The Liberal Leagues of San Francisco and Philadelphia raised, it appears, one or two thousand dollars for a bust of the great agitator, and presented it to the latter city, last week, to be placed in the National Museum. The Philadelphians, however, would have none of it, and through councils rejected the gift on account, of course, of Paine's peculiar religious views; whereupon the Liberal League, which appears to be principally composed of women and Spiritualists, was furious; public meetings are held, denunciations are hurled to and fro, and poor Paine, his good and evil deeds, are all dragged out from the grave and fought over, inch by inch. Middle-aged people will remember him as the bugaboo of their childhood, if they happened to belong to Orthodox families, and remember, too, how the horrors of his death-bed were used to terrify ten-year-olds from the remote chances of infidelity. Here they have the old story again, and Walt Whitman coming to the front assuring us that history has all been wrong, and that Paine was the most sober, discreet, and mild-mannered of men; a gentleman of half a dozen old schools and of the best in all; and that his death was a blissful euthanasia of high philosophy.

Really, it seems to us that this particularly muddy water had better be allowed to rest. Nobody doubts the service which Paine rendered to the cause of the Republic. He was rewarded for it by the hearty approbation of both the thinking people and the populace in his own time and of posterity. The Republic itself was not ungrateful. Paine was promptly paid £500 for his pamphlet of Common Sense by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, and received five hundred acres of cultivated land and a remunerative office from this State. Jefferson, to whom the nation owed its birth more than to any other man, was literally preyed upon by his worshipping countrymen until they barely left him a scant subsistence for life. Paine's delatious views do but little harm. Nobody nowadays reads the Age of Reason except from curiosity. As to whether he was a drunkard or a moderate tippler, whether in his last moment he was firm to his life-long creed of doubt or endeavored to accept another, concerns nobody now, it seems to us, but himself and his God. The Philadelphia councils have not thought fit to examine into the religious faith or the lack of it of the other worthies whose pictures and busts fill Independence Hall, and, we suspect, would not have done so in this instance if the character of the association offering the gift had not given to it the aspect of an honor paid to Paine the freethinker rather than to Paine the defender of liberty.

We are quite sure that the author of Common Sense himself, who had a keen appreciation of absurdity, would look upon the present squabble, if he could look at all, as a capital joke, and would hardly recognize the coarse, vehement face of the excelsior which he used to see in the glass, in the fine philosophic image presented of him by some of his present admirers. Neither are we at all sure that he would covet the honor which he has been refused. He might (in marble) have borne himself with dignity in Independence Hall in the company of Jefferson and of even the orderly, well-conducted Father of his Country. But to be stowed in the National Museum with the puerile face of the English King, whom he hated, on one side of him, and the swaddling-clothes of the Adams family on the other, were enough to make even a stone Tom Paine cry out in mutiny.

We wish Philadelphia a safe deliverance from the weight of her ancient renown. What with busts and monuments and old family prejudices against progress, she finds these worthless of 1776 set as heavy on her soul as those of his murdered victims on the sight of the miserable Richard.—N. Y. Tribune, Feb. 1, 1877.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 17.

J. K. Rose, $2.75; W. S. Leach, $3; F. A. Angel, 25 cents; L. T. Burch, 50 cents; B. F. Kennedy, $1.25; Mrs. E. D. Lucas, $1.80; C. F. Baxter, $3.20; C. H. Vinton, $3.20; S. C. Mason, 15 cents; E. W. Dickinson, $10; J. L. Roberts, $3.20; Mrs. M. M. Ballou, $3.25; Mrs. Anna Dorman, $3.20; Mrs. B. Cummings, $3.25; A. Ewing, $3.50; S. R. Koehler, $3.20; New England News Co., $3.88; J. B. McCool, $3.20; Adam Koch, 50 cents; Hon. W. Milligan, $6.40; Geo. A. Bourne, $3.20; W. Hamford, $3.20; T. M. Hart, $3.20; E. L. Winham, $3.20; Henry N. Stone, $16.40; G. Lewis, 25 cents; E. Fenzl, 30 cents; Thomas H. Knowles, $3.20; E. D. Burleigh, $3.20; Mrs. A. Y. Hagar, $3.20; Thos. Tibbets, $2.15; Chas. Ellersman, $3; Jas. Langlands, $3; Emily J. Leonard, $4.60; Killan Bros., $3.20; C. F. Reed, $3.20; Jas. Underhill, $1; Ed. Harris, $1; Hopson & Sherman, 20 cents; George M. Baldwin, $3; Abner Forbes, $7.80; Cash, $2.75; Joseph Hoeken, $1.60; W. A. Root, $3.20; J. P. Titcomb, $3.20; Eliza Burdick, $3; Samuel Bardwell, $5.60; John Cunningham, $4.04; J. W. Hubbard, $1.60; Chas. E. Coffin, $3.20; Geo. H. Foster, $1.80; Frank J. Mead, 50 cents; C. W. Wendt, $3.20; S. C. Gale, $3.25; Mrs. J. H. Bennett, $3.20; F. O. Blake, 5 cents; J. H. Hood, $1; Thos. S. Murray, $6.40; P. M. Macgill, $3.20; Dr. E. B. Foote, $3.20; G. E. Corbin, $3.20; R. Conradi, $3.20; Hon. Nat'l Holmes, $3.20; Geo. B. Young, $3.20; D. S. Grandin, $1.60; Mrs. Lu M. Carter, $3; Fernando Dessaur, $3.20; Kate M. Scott, $1; E. S. Cady, $1.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE HAWK AND THE SPARROW.

To-day, upon the public square,
I saw a hawk in fury tear
A sparrow; hapless little thing,
The tyrant rent it wing from wing
And limb from limb, and on the snow
Its life-drops made a crimson glow.

I drove the feathered fiend away,
And gathered up the mangled prey;
And, pondering o'er the fragments red,
I thought of what is writ and said:
"The Omnipotent Lord of all
Has knowledge of a sparrow's fall."

I thought, if the omnific Lord
Commiserates a dying bird,
If all things act by his design,
And swerve not from his plumb and line,
Why did he arm with murderous beak
That hawk to slay a thing so weak
And harmless as our little friend?

No more the maple twig will bend
Beneath his feet; his life's swift end
One faithful mourner, one at least,
His sexton now and reverent priest,
Deplores; does He who gave him life,
And walled him round with tragic strife,
Feel equal pity? Why, O why
This outrage under all His sky?

Is He too weak the weak to save?
To His own laws is He a slave?
If not, then wherefore were the laws
Permitted with such fatal flaws?
Surely the heavy curse that fell
On Adam, sloping down to hell,
Cannot in justice overtake
Aught less than human, save the snake?

A soft voice answered, soft and still:
"This mystery of earthly ill
'Tis well to probe; 'tis well to seek
All knowledge, and to freely speak,
Since love of truth thy soul impels,
And love of goodness in thee dwells.
Well, too, the sympathetic tear
Bestowed upon the sparrow here;
But scarcely was it well to balk,
Or rudely blame the famished hawk."

"High knowledge is not ready-made,
And darker grows the mental shade,
If you pursue your curious quest;
Why with the hawk and sparrow rest?
How many of thy boastful race
Would spare the hawk in any case—
Would spare or pity, though his need
Your lordly sportsman could not plead.
Moreover, this poor bird whose doom
Has touched thy feeling heart with gloom,
No tender scruple ever made
With creatures of an humbler grade.
So, puzzling o'er these knots of fate,
Life's riddle grows more intricate.

"Who seeks will rarely fail to find
The thing to which he's most inclined.
If thorns instead of roses suit,
If leaves instead of luscious fruit,
If turbid waters more than clear,
If doleful sounds in place of cheer,
Those will regard the cynic's right,
While these elude his senses quite.

"Doubt if thou wilt, but reverently,
And heed not what the owls may say,
Who from their gloomy perch give out
That sin is foster-child of Doubt.
Doubt is the silent needful night,
The womb of intellectual might;
But who can wisely choose to dwell
Forever in that darkness shell?

"The fearless soul emerging thence Feels something of Omnipotence;
Upon the mountain-tops his feet
Will tread in joy, and gladly beat
The golden shores of summer seas;
And he will hear in every breeze
Divinest music; even the storm
That bends the proud oak's stubborn form,
And howls athwart the naked land,
Will bring to him an utterance grand,
Engendering noble thoughts, and power
To serve him in some trying hour.

"Revere fair Nature's balanced laws,
Nor rashly deem them framed with flaws;
The discord which thou seem'st to find
In them is part of thine own mind.
Put that in tune, and, for the sake
Of darkened faces, strive to make
'The world more happy; do this thing,
And thy despondent muse shall wring
Sweet nectar out of weed and cloud."

Silent, though unconvinced, I bowed
My head abashed; with firmer trust,
And higher faith, I shook the dust
Of utter doubt from reason's plume;
And through small openings in the gloom
I half discerned a meaning new
In that which seemed before untrue:
The ever-present Lord of all
Compassionates a sparrow's fall.

GEO. MARTIN.

MONTREAL.

Digitized by Google

The Index.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 22, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
GADY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix. Boston: Published by the National Liberal League. 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. ABBOT on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. KILGORE on "Democracy"; by James PARTON on "Cathedrals and Beer; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. UNDERWOOD on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. PALGE on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. V. KILGORE on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. MILLS on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. LYTLE, President of the Ohio State branch of the "National Reform Association," used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle indorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MR. HOLYOAKE'S essay of this week on "The March of Science towards God" will arrest the attention of every thoughtful reader of THE INDEX. We can only thank him sincerely for such a contribution to these columns.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY of Boston voted last Sunday to call Rev. J. L. DUDLEY, late of Milwaukee, to their pulpit. Mr. Dudley has been preaching to the society with great acceptance for several Sundays.

A SERIES of lectures on Labor, Exchange, Finance, Property, etc., is to be given in this city in Codman Hall, Sunday afternoons and evenings, beginning March 11. S. H. MORSE, E. H. HEYWOOD, ALBERT BRISBANE, and others, are expected to speak.

THE POPE'S NEW ENCYCLICAL.

The New York Sunday Democrat recently published the following:—

The Holy Father is not unmindful of his children in the United States, and has addressed, as we stated last week, an encyclical to the Cardinal, Archbishops, and Bishops, in which he condemns the public-school system.

It has been the fashion for the Catholic advocates of the public schools to distinguish between the system of godless education condemned in Europe and that followed here. In his encyclical the Pope does not admit of any distinction, and quotes from the celebrated Pontifical letter to the Archbishop of Freyburg.

The Pope leaves it to the discretion of each Bishop to judge of the propriety of publishing the encyclical. How far the Cardinal will enforce it we have no means of knowing.

The sanguine optimists who imagine that Catholic hostility to the public school system means no mischief, or will soon blow over, are the worst possible advisers of the American people at present. The facts are, first, that the Roman Catholic Church, with its vast, powerful, and rapidly-growing organization, is resolved to exert its utmost energy to overthrow the principle of State education altogether in this country, and to substitute as far as it can the principle of denominational or Church education, relying on its own ability to kill out its Protestant rivals; and, secondly, that this inveterate and determined hostility threatens the whole State school system with a real danger which it is fatality to underestimate. What is it?

Not so much that the Roman Church will succeed in getting control of the public schools or in securing their immediate abolition; but that it will drive the defenders of these schools into a position which in the long run will wean the people from them. Whatever the relative number of Evangelical Protestants and of thorough liberals in the United States, the political power is all in the hands of the former, for the simple reason that, relatively considered, they are effectively organized; and whatever the Evangelicals, therefore, resolve to do will certainly be done, as matters now stand. If they adopt a fixed and unanimous line of policy with respect to the public schools, they will just as certainly carry it into execution as they shut up (nominally at least) the International Exhibition last summer. Bluster and boasting will avail the liberals nothing; they will be contemptuously shoved aside just so long as they remain unorganized on a large scale, and will be compelled to swallow whatever pill, no matter how bitter, their Orthodox masters may choose to force between their teeth. The conflict thickens; the decisive hour approaches; and the liberals remain politically a zero, because they have not yet learned the lesson of combination and coöperation.

What policy, then, is it likely that the Evangelicals will adopt under the galling and irritating fire of the Catholics? It will probably be exactly that which the Catholics secretly hope they will adopt; namely, to uphold the State school system, but at the same time strive to redeem it from the crafty reproach of being "godless." That is, it will be to defend the Bible in the schools, with at least so much of religious worship as now obtains in them; and human nature will not be quite so human as usual, if it does not prompt the demand for more than now obtains. But this policy cannot be carried out successfully as things now are; the secular idea is spreading rapidly every day, and in several places, as Chicago, Rochester, Albany, Troy, has proved itself in the ascendant. Assailed thus in the front and in the rear, contending desperately against "Romanism" and "Infidelity" at the same time, the Evangelicals, strong as they are in numbers, are discovering that they cannot vanquish at once their two enemies without intrenching themselves in a new Amendment of the United States Constitution. After the warning given to the liberals by the Senate's Bible-amendment of last August, it is lunacy to deny this fact. The present political excitement will sooner or later pass away; other and deeper issues than this probably brief one of a disputed Presidency will occupy the public attention; and he is no statesman who cannot discern how deeply stirred is the American mind on this question of the schools, and how inevitable is the great and grave debate that must ensue on the relations of Church and State. The Evangelical policy is to maintain that "unsectarian Christianity" (that is, Protestant Evangelicalism minus all intersectarian disputes) is the religion of the United States, and must be defended by the United States Government and Constitution. Doubt or disbelieve it who may, that is to be henceforth the position of the great Evangelical party, already indicated by signs which are legible to all that know how to read.

Now this position is not going to be conceded easily by the American people as a whole, since there is a great mass of unorganized liberals who understand and prize the secular principle at present embodied in the national Constitution. It cannot be, no, we will not believe, that this great nation so little comprehends its priceless heritage as to surrender it to bigotry without a struggle. Sooner or later it must be that the liberals will organize on a vast scale, and assert this great secular principle at all hazards—though it may be so late as to make the struggle tenfold as bitter and dangerous as it need be. The friends of State education will thus be arrayed against each, one party striving to make the schools Evangelical-Protestant, and the other to make them secular, by Constitutional provisions. No matter which party triumphs, the hold of the public school system on the popular heart will be perilously weakened. Even if the secular party triumphs, it can only be after a large portion of the people will have become so much embittered against State schools by the progress of the contest as to withdraw from them their patronage; and it will be a long time before the public schools can be fully reinstated in the public affections. But if the Evangelical party triumphs, the public school system will be grounded on essential injustice and defiance of equal rights in religion; it will be an anomaly in a secular State; it must gradually compel the State also to become Christian, to the destruction of religious liberty, or must be conformed at last, as the secular party demand that it should be now, to the secular principle. For the Secular State and the Secular School must in the long run share the same fate; they must both stand or both fall side by side; and the struggle over the schools must ultimately decide whether American civilization shall go on in natural development or perish in a return of mediæval barbarism.

Now the Catholic hierarchy are far too shrewd to expect that they can at present become actual masters of the State schools of this country; but they hope, nevertheless, to foment such discord among the friends of these schools as shall sicken the people of the very principle of State education. They follow the old maxim—"Divide et impera: divide and conquer!" It is so evident that they cannot themselves really decide the destinies of the public schools until they can command a majority of votes, that many liberals are utterly incredulous as to any serious designs on their part against the school system; it seems so impolitic and absurd for only six or seven millions to attempt openly the destruction of a great institution established and maintained by a nation of forty millions, that surface-observers declare such an attempt to be incredible. Those who reason thus, however, betray their own incapacity to understand the wily Roman Catholic Church. If the Papal hierarchy can only succeed in creating an open rupture or schism among the upholders of the State school system,—if it can only entrap the Evangelical party into making a united and decided demand for a State school system which shall be "Christian"—and not "godless,"—then the Pope's objects, audacious as they are, will be in a fair way to accomplishment. Unable to destroy the public schools by his own followers alone, he will then have succeeded in striking a fatal blow at them through the madness and fanaticism of their Evangelical supporters. For the public schools cannot be permanently sustained by general taxation, if any formidable minority of the population are opposed to them on principle; and that will be the certain result, if the Evangelicals proceed to execute their nascent, blundering purpose of tightening their grip on the schools by Christianizing the State. Abandonment of the principle of State education is the terminus of the road upon which they have started; and it is evidently the end which the Catholic priesthood secretly contemplate in this ceaseless agitation of the school question. They are simply leading the Evangelical Protestants into a fatal ambushade. Goading them to insane folly by exciting their Protestant bigotry, they mean to split the State School majority into irreconcilable factions—to divide if they cannot conquer, and to conquer by dividing.

That is the probable reason of this new attack of the Pope on the free public schools of America. To rouse the blind prejudices and fears of the Evangelicals by fresh demonstrations against the school system,—to scare them with the cry of "godless" schools, and drive them into defending the present unjust Protestant ascendancy by measures which will inevitably react against the State education principle,—such cannot fail to be the consequences, intended or not, of the renewed warfare of the Vatican on our schools. If indeed intended, it is masterly strategy; and students of history will expect no less from Rome. There are, we believe, but two possible ways of defeating it. One is for the Evangelicals to prove themselves wise enough to accept the situation, and establish the State education principle on the impregnable rock of absolute secularism—to save the public schools from all just reproach, and rally all their upholders under the broad banner of Equal Rights in Religion, by voluntarily relinquishing every form of religious worship in the schools from a pure love of justice. Would that the Protestant churches could only rise to this moral height! But if they cannot, the only other way of defeating the plots of Rome is for the now dumb multitudes who favor even-handed justice to unite their voices in a mighty combined demand for secular schools. If they should do this,—if they should in this manner reveal and make effective the enormous numerical as well as moral strength of the liberal party, and demonstrate the utter futility of the rapidly-maturing Evangelical programme,—the Evangelicals themselves would perceive that they must choose between secular State schools and no State schools at all. Forced to this alternative, we believe that they would not long hesitate to choose the former, rather than yield up the future of the American people to the domination of Rome.

Upon the liberals as a whole, therefore, devolves the great responsibility of solving this far-reaching school problem. If they should now with emphasis and unanimity assert the absolute necessity of secular public schools, the Evangelicals could not and would not venture to move for a Bible-in-schools amendment to the Constitution, which otherwise is only a question of time, and which, when it comes, will be the beginning of evils for which no words are an adequate measure. In default of this grand collective affirmation of the secular principle as the only possible basis of a permanent system of State education, a bitter and terrible struggle in the future can alone undo the mischief which the craft of the Vatican Jesuits is already leading the Evangelicals to commit. How much better to avert this struggle beforehand! The National Liberal League offers a ready way to do it. If there is a better, let it not be neglected; but time is precious. Organization, prompt and universal, can alone give effective utterance to the voice of American liberalism, and thereby foil the Republic's enemies; and the National Liberal League, with its broad and just and pacific principles, is to-day the nation's truest and readiest peace-maker. Is there not enough wisdom in this great people to know the things that make for its own peace and happiness? What miseries could be averted by timely action now! No doubt that in the end the wiles of the Catholic hierarchy and the bigotry of the Protestant clergy will be alike defeated; for America's destiny is not to be reversed by human arrogance or ambition. But if she has not wit enough to comprehend the great moral necessities of her present, she must learn them in the future once more with blood and tears. Surely she cannot need that lesson twice!

PARKER'S "DISCOURSE OF RELIGION."

At last we have a new edition of a book that has long been called for,—Theodore Parker's Discourse of Matters pertaining to Religion. This, the best known of Mr. Parker's works, though perhaps not the best in substance, has been issued in attractive form by G. P. Putnam's Sons, of New York. Probably, if the publication prove successful, it will be followed by others of the famous Boston herald's writings,—some of which it has been difficult of late to procure. Whether this edition will meet the alleged popular demand for his works remains to be seen. It is not in so cheap style as some friends of the enterprise have wished, and the price may keep it from the hands of many who would like to read and possess it. The Discourse, however, I believe, is bound in paper covers for those so choosing it, thus lessening the price to some extent.

But as I have looked over these pages again, I have been especially impressed with the conviction that it is a book that ought to be spread by some organized effort, and not left to the customary demands of trade. During Mr. Parker's lifetime there was little need of such special effort to circulate his thoughts. He was his own missionary. No American name was better known, and hardly any American writer found a larger audience. From the platform of the Boston Music Hall, and through the press, and in Lyceum Lectures all through the Northern States of the Union, his thoughts went out weekly, and year after year, to thousands upon thousands of willing ears. But when his tongue was silenced by death, this propagandism at once almost wholly ceased. The slave-holders' rebellion broke out a few months afterwards, and for several years absorbed all other interests in this country. There was some trouble, too, over the question of literary executorship; and a waiting on the part of the public for an expected new and complete edition of the great preacher's works,—an expectation doomed thus far to disappointment. So year after year passed, until it was announced that, while there was a large demand for Mr. Parker's works in England (English editions of them had been published) and in other parts of the world, the sale of his books in this country had nearly stopped. And when personal friends, or admirers of his views, lamented this state of things, and urged some scheme of publication, the suggestion began sometimes to be met with the objection, that, in the rapid progress of opinion during the last few years, Mr. Parker's theological position had been left behind by the van of the religious army, and his views had become of little interest to the great body of liberal thinkers,—while, on the other hand, people of Orthodox views would not generally read his books because of their prejudice against his name. And so it has come to pass that, though before Mr. Parker's death multitudes of people were coming to him by person or letter for help in their theological difficulties, now, eighteen years from the time he left his work and country in the vain pursuit of health, some really vigorous enterprise is needed in his native land to push his published writings into circulation.

To account for this strange cessation of public interest in his views, nothing, I believe, is farther from the truth than the opinion above quoted, that Mr. Parker's theological position has become relatively obsolete. There has been such an advance in material science since his day that momentous questions, it is true, which are now of chief interest to the class of thinkers that once rallied around him, were scarcely touched by him; and these thinkers may have passed beyond the point of the mental contest up to which he led so valiantly. To them the questions of religious authority,—of inspiration, miracle, origin and growth of the Bible, Nature and supernaturalism, character and mission of Jesus, the permanent and transient in Christianity,—may have become comparatively dead issues. But how many more people there are—and more than there ever were in Mr. Parker's day,—who have just reached these questions; who see now for the first time that they are open questions and concern their faith in a most vital way! In Mr. Parker's time it was chiefly in the Unitarian denomination that these topics were opened as questions at all, and the majority even there were against him. Now they are becoming questions in the large and numerous evangelical sects; and thousands and hundreds of thousands of people are beginning to inquire upon them to-day in quarters where, a few years ago, to think otherwise than the creed dictated was accounted an ecclesiastical crime. To meet the needs of this class of persons, already large and continually increasing, who are just beginning to exercise their mental liberty in thinking themselves out of Orthodoxy, Mr. Parker's books are precisely adapted. They are based on scholarship, yet are eminently popular in method and style; and they have a moral and religious earnestness satisfying both the religious sentiment and the truth-seeking mind. In glancing through this new edition of the Discourse of Religion, I have been especially struck with the fact of its applicability to the present condition of theological discussion in the religious world at large. So far from having become obsolete, Christendom is just coming up to it. The themes here presented are the very themes that are now under earnest debate in pulpits and religious publications, and that are not yet dead issues even in the most liberal sections of the Christian Church. It were well if an effort were made to put this book as a gift into the hands of every clergyman who would take the trouble to send for it. It should have been presented at the door of Tremont Temple to every one who listened to Rev. Joseph Cook's recent caricature of Mr. Parker's religious views. Channing's works are largely circulated in this gratuitous way by the Unitarian Association. Will not some one who has the means do as much for at least this volume of Parker?

The book is greatly enhanced in value by a biographical sketch of Mr. Parker, written by his intimate friend and helper for many years, Miss Hannah E. Stevenson. No one could have been better qualified for this service—to her no task, but a labor of love. The delineation is tender, yet faithful, and presents the man in his private and home life almost better than anything that has yet appeared concerning him. If enlarged somewhat, keeping the same spirit and method, it would give us the concise popular biography of Mr. Parker which many of his friends have desired to see published. It gives a picture of a noble life, and fitly introduces the noble thoughts that follow in the discourse. W. J. P.

PAINE HALL.

The following documents sufficiently explain themselves:—

Report of the Examining Committee.

The Committee appointed at the Convention held in Paine Hall, Boston, January 27, 1877, to investigate the financial transactions in connection with the Paine Memorial, having met and examined the books, accounts, vouchers, etc., of joint tenants, and heard their statements, submit the following as the result of their investigation:—

Total receipts from all sources, including donations, loans, and incomes from Hall.....	$107,176.67
EXPENDITURES AS FOLLOWS:
Miscellaneous expenses prior to commencing work on Hall.....	475.42
Whole cost of erecting and furnishing the Building.....	97,290.71
Running expenses of Building, including interest, taxes, etc.....	9,083.00
Total.....	$106,769.14
Balance in hands of joint tenants.....	447.53

The indebtedness of the Memorial Building is as follows:—

Amount on first mortgage.....	$50,000.00
Accrued interest to Jan. 27, 1877.....	1,294.52
Second mortgage.....	12,000.00
Accrued interest.....	2,564.52
Miscellaneous debts.....	4,762.20
Total.....	$70,611.24

And the Committee submit further that, while they find some errors, they discover no evidence of intention to misappropriate funds donated to the Building.

A. B. BROWN, Chairman.
CHARLES ELLIS, Secretary.
OWEN JONES.
B. F. UNDERWOOD.
J. S. VERITY.

Call for a Convention of the Donors of the Paine Hall Fund.

At a meeting of liberals and donors held at the Paine Memorial Building in Boston, January 27, 1877, the undersigned were appointed a Committee to call a convention of all the donors of the Paine Hall Fund, and were instructed to send to each donor a written or printed notice of the same. The objects of this convention are, to effect a permanent legal organization of the donors, and to elect a Board of Trustees, who shall be empowered to negotiate with the three joint tenants of the Paine Memorial Building for the transfer of the same by deed to this Board of Trustees, and to raise such a fund as may be necessary to secure the transfer; or to adopt other means to the same general end. At present, there is a debt of about $70,000 on the building; and it is believed that, if the title of the building shall be vested in trustees duly elected by the donors themselves, it will be possible to raise the amount necessary to reduce this debt to a point compatible with the permanent retention and control of the building for the purposes for which it was erected. The three joint tenants—Messrs. Mendum, Seaver, and Savage—gave public assurance, at the meeting of January 27, of entire willingness to transfer the property to any properly elected trustees who shall relieve them of all personal responsibilities and liabilities on its account; and, if the Board of Trustees contemplated in the foregoing plan shall be enabled, by the co-operation of the liberal public, to assume these responsibilities and liabilities with a greatly reduced debt on the building, and therefore without any personal risk to themselves, the money already invested in the Paine Memorial will be saved to the liberal cause.

The undersigned committee now issue this call for a convention of all the donors of the Paine Hall Fund, to be held at PAINE HALL, BOSTON, on SATURDAY, March 3, at 10 o'clock, A.M., for the objects above specified; and urgently advise the attendance of as many of these donors as can possibly be present.

B. F. UNDERWOOD,
W. S. BELL,
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, } Committee.

Boston, February 6, 1877.

Boston, February 6, 1877.

We, the undersigned, the three joint tenants in whom the title of the Paine Memorial Building is vested, hereby agree to transfer this title by deed to any Board of Trustees duly elected by the donors of the Paine Hall Fund, if and whenever such trustees shall release us from any and all personal liabilities on account of the said building.

(Signed) HORACE SEEVER.
JOSIAH P. MENDUM.
THEO. L. SAVAGE.

This agreement is signed by me on condition that it shall be fulfilled within three months from date, so far as I am personally concerned, as I decline to be held longer responsible for the present management of the building.

THEO. L. SAVAGE.
It is hoped that this convention will be numerous attended, and that all disagreements about Paine Hall will be satisfactorily settled in accordance with the best interests of the liberal cause.

Communications.

OLD GLASTONBURY.

"I know not how the right may be;
But I feel joy when e'er I see,
Down mid the green hills of the west,
Old Glastonbury's towered crest."

"A hundred years is but a little time," said Farmer John; "I am nigh ninety, and my grandfather was ninety-six when he used to tell me all that his grandfather had told him, in this very room. Seems to me, it is easier to go back two hundred years than two hundred days."

The old man sat in his chimney-corner in a high-backed wooden-settle, his hands resting on his stick, and his chin resting on them; and he gazed into the fire on the hearth, while I, a youngster, fed it with dry turfs from the opposite corner. As we watched the red gold-heat smouldering away into silvery ashes, we talked of the legends of Glastonbury. He told me how the Holy Thorn that blossoms every Christmas day was planted by Joseph of Arimathea, when he came with the rich Nicodemus and twelve disciples to take refuge on the Island of Glastonbury, with the good old hermit, in the deep glen between the three hills; how this island was at length given to them, with protection, by King Arivigus, and that here they built the first Christian Church on British ground. It was whispered that one of these pilgrims was the Lord himself, whom Pilate had set himself to save alive!

From boyhood, I was intensely interested in the history of the early Christians, and this tradition threw a light on a thought that had long been germinating in my mind. I had escaped the misfortune of being taught religion, and had soon discovered that the doctrines of the Gospels were very different to those of the Epistles, while the whole seemed but "a half-told tale." So I sought eagerly for any tidings of legendary lore, where truth is often preserved more faithfully than in written records. At Glastonbury I made friends of the oldest inhabitants, and of the inmates of the almshouses by the old Abbey gate. I did not despise "old wives tales," but listened to accounts of witchcraft and of charming, of ghosts and demons and saints, and thus collected strange information. But my best friend was young Cyrus J., son of a well-known Quaker. I met him first in the stone-quarry, up "Wellhouse Lane"; he was busy chipping out fossils, and I told him that I had a hobby of chipping out fossil anecdotes from the debris of past ages, and a fancy, too, for tracing history backwards from the present day, examining carefully every incrustation that had smothered the evidences of early life. I repeated the saying of Farmer John, "A hundred years is but a little time."

Cyrus turned and clasped his hand on me in delight, exclaiming: "A thousand years is but a little time in this stone quarry! See, these ammonites have been here more than two thousand years, and many feet have walked over them. Let us go back twenty steps, each a century long, and find out what these green hills have witnessed." So, packing up his tools and his "treasure-trove," we talked and walked up the old hill together, and resting at the top by St. Michael's Tower, we gazed silently on the vast panorama beneath. The setting sun was just gilding the outline of the Bristol Channel, twenty miles away on the horizon, and the mists came creeping over the moors between us and the distant hills, until we were surrounded with a silvery ghost-like sea. The ravens from the tower wheeled round with uncanny shrieks; soft-winged bats and still more soft-winged white owls floated by us, and we could imagine ourselves the first two hermits who lived there to guard the sacred island.

Below, to the right, is Chalice Hill, where the Holy Grail is said to be concealed, with many other treasures; to the left is the village of Edgarly, with the old palace of King Edgar, where two stone wolves still watch the portal; in front lies the town of Glastonbury, stretching like a green cross fallen from the hills. At its head is St. Benedict's Church (named from the saint who perpetuated the worship of the Holy Thorn); at the head of this cross is St. John's Church, and under its right arm is sheltered the enclosure of the famous Abbey ruins.

In the glen, where the three hills meet, there is a mineral spring, rushing with impetuosity, as it has rushed for ages, over rock and ivy and fern. It leaves a red deposit on all it touches, and hence was called the "Blood Spring." Some say it comes from the Holy Grail; others say there is a sacred grave in Chalice Hill, the fountain of life! Numberless miraculous cures are recorded of it, and its virtues are extraordinary.

This stream is hidden by a huge walnut-tree and by the dilapidated hostelry named the Anchor Inn, as it was formerly hidden by the huts of the Anchorites.

Sometimes I wandered with Cyrus in the Abbey ruins, seeking signs of the many subterranean passages from St. Joseph's Chapel; or we listened to the roaring in the empty furnace in the haunted nook in St. Dunstan's laboratory; or we sat on the great King Arthur's great stone coffin and looked around for Merlin's famous oak.

Cyrus was never weary of going back over our "century steps," and for every legend I gave, he had a history or record, evidence or surmise. By hard study he had come to the same conclusions that I had, yet like many other people we dared not utter our convictions. "A hundred years is but a little time," he said; "and still Religion has to wait like Science, patiently, until men will seek her. In the last century we burnt witches for sorcery; take another step back, and the Jews were cruelly persecuted for not believing enough; back again, and thousands of martyrs were burnt for believing too much. Then this beautiful Abbey was destroyed. So we get to the days of Shakespeare, and he only dared to speak the truth under the mask of fiction!" So we went back to the days when Bristol was but a maritime street, when slaves were brought from all parts of England to be shipped and sold back to the days of St. Dunstan, who was the first to preach openly against the sin of slavery. But he had good King Edgar to back him, and might safely "take the devil by the nose"; so we went, step by step, through the gradual rising of the Abbey of Glastonbury, the most ancient in England, whose abbots had precedence of all others in the kingdom. The holy relics and the sacred secrets buried there will, we said, some day prove more valuable than the excavations of Nineveh. No marvel that they were guarded so safely,—first from necessity and for dear life; afterwards for fear that they would expose the false authority that had usurped in the name of religion! No marvel, while unto the present day, half our population submits voluntarily to a slavery of body and mind.

A few years ago I again visited Glastonbury. Half a century had fled since I talked with Cyrus. Then, the journey took two days and a night from London; but how pleasant it was to skim lazily on the old coach, up and down hill, along the green lanes where trees arched overhead,—so lazily, that the coachman could stop his four fat horses and dismount to break through the hedge and pick up a sheep that had rolled on its back and might die before dawn! How the good man beguiled the dreary night with tales of the terrors of travelling in the olden time, when the journey took a week! Now it was but a few hours by rail,—just leisure time to think over the changes of the last fifty years; how cities had been built, and nations had risen and fallen; how inventions and discoveries had stimulated civilization, machinery, steam, electricity, gas, the free press, cheap literature, and the penny postage; yet how religion stood still uncared for, yet of such vital importance! But behold, among the green hills the old Tower is in sight, a landmark to ships afar off, and a changeless protest against the ignorance around it. The train stops, and I walked again beneath the great oaks that look down so pityingly on passing generations.

I felt that another generation had passed since last I had been there. All my friends were gone, "all gone, the old familiar faces"! But the same musical bells were ringing out a merry peal from St. John's Church, and soon a procession wound down the High Street, and Magdalen Street, up to Weary-all Hill, with flags and bands and troops of little children. I followed to the spot where the Holy Thorn had so long blossomed and decayed and been renewed. Now two fair girls, with a bevy of attendants in white, stepped out with silver spades and proceeded to plant a fresh young tree; and the priest blessed, and the choir-boys sang their litanies. A pretty ceremony transpired, then the procession reformed, and wended its way back to the Abbey ruins.

I lingered to see the gardener fence it in and make the turf neat; then I perceived that an aged man stood near. He was thin and gray and bent, and looked in his long cloak like the holy hermit of my dreams. At his feet was the flat stone, marked "A. D. 33," on the spot where the staff of Joseph of Arimathea was originally growing. He begged the gardener to cut away the grass from its edges that I might see it. As I advanced, he suddenly seized both my hands, and laughed aloud, exclaiming: "A hundred years is but a little time." It was Cyrus, so changed and yet the same! Swiftly we took up the thread of our last conversation, and arm in arm strode along the road that leads from the top of "Weary-all," past the Abbey barn, straight to the mineral spring, bubbling in life and beauty as fresh as when it first burst from the rock. We laved hands and face in it, and drank of its pleasant welcome, and not a sound came near its music but the chorus of larks in the sky. Then we mounted a little the steep side of Chalice Hill, and sat on one of the ridges where the wild thyme grows, and gazed for the last time on the old Tower Hill across the glen; we were both too feeble to go up it.

"I wonder," I said, "that people do not come from all parts of the world to witness even the natural beauties of this place; and how is it that the Roman Catholics do not buy it up? Not a stone should be left unturned until all its treasures are discovered. They might institute pilgrimages thither." "Nay," said Cyrus, "it proves too much for them; they would rather bury it in oblivion. Ask why the free-thinkers of America do not come and investigate these things, and strike off the iron bonds from the souls of their white brethren, as they did from the bodies of their slaves!"

He said: "Englishmen are cowardly in affairs of religion, or they think it immaterial, or say they cannot afford to be truthful or unorthodox."

So I told my friend how I had been engrossed in business since we met, and how old memories were occasionally aroused by other men's thoughts; how Tennyson's Idylls had made me long to tread again where King Arthur and his knights had lived, and fought for the right; and how Renan's Life of Jesus, stopping so desparingly at the crucifixion, just where my interest was strongest, seemed like music ceasing suddenly, and constrained me to come again here to catch the echo of the after-song.

Cyrus said the whole air seemed permeated with the truth, and it needed but for men to come to these renowned historical places and to make use of their own reason to be convinced of the right. "But they shall hear it. I will publish my convictions. I have devoted a long life to investigate this subject, and can bring proofs. I have travelled many years and find all Biblical places or nests of religion in a wonderful state of preservation even in their destruction. I have gone stage by stage over the journey arranged by St. Philip for Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus with twelve disciples, from Galilee to France, thence to Wales, and last of all to this only safe retreat. I have reason to believe that Jesus Christ was among them, alive, and in his right mind, for it is a well-known fact that crucifixion did not mean death, as many culprits were several times thus cruelly tortured. I believe that Jesus lived here full thirty years, and that he wrote a free exposition of his faith and doctrines. These MSS. will be found some day in one of the stalactite caverns beneath these hills. No one can disprove what I affirm, and what hundreds of people have known secretly for hundreds of years. I will give proofs. I have spent months in our British Museum among the old chronicles and have ransacked many libraries, and all the histories agree." I remonstrated feebly in the words of St. Paul: "If there be no resurrection, then is there no salvation"; adding, "people will not believe the truth if it takes away their only hope." Cyrus answered, almost in the words of our modern seer: "People must be taught to believe in their own inheritance of divine intelligence." The fictitious theology of one thousand "years will shrivel in the light of common sense." SCRIPTOR.

GLASTONBURY, Eng., Jan. 24, 1877.

CO-OPERATIVE GROCERIES.

It has been advocated that coöperation should begin with the grocery, since the store is at the foundation of all living, the first requisite of all house-keeping being to buy. It is suggested that families of the middle class should unite together and form groceries of their own, thus buying goods at wholesale; or that benevolent individuals of the wealthier class should form such stores for the benefit of the middle class, giving the necessary services of buying and dispensing goods. The advocates say the system has been tried with success.

Now on the surface this seems a beautiful and easy solution of a vexed problem; but on further thought objections arise. It is a quite practicable and just scheme for country districts, but not for cities. In the country, Lady Bountifuls might be found of whom it would be no injustice to ask this labor, and to whom it would be a welcome interlude in the daily monotony of living. Here, too, no other interests need be injured by the system; but, on the contrary, in many a manufacturing district, it would be a much-needed restraint on monopolies. I know of country towns for years devoured by monopolizing manufacturers, who pay their employees from their grocery in goods on which they charge enormous profits, oblige them to live in their houses, deducting from their wages the rent, and so draining the town dry of money, and even establishing a bank by which to obtain the use of such money as comes into the town through other channels. At the end of perhaps twenty years they show themselves too much involved to continue business, and the town falls back into poverty and decay. Every other store has been closed by the monopoly of the one store, and there is no capital to open or support another. Men are out of employment or leave home to find it; buildings and farms go to seed, and the town seems suffocated with a perpetual Sabbath. Now to such a place a coöperative store would have been a godsend.

But in cities the difficulties are many. I have no faith in the voluntary benevolence which some expect to do the work. No one thinks himself so busy as the so-called lady of leisure. She professes herself to be "driven to death." Benevolence, unless one has a genius for it, is a spasmodic affair, and coöperation cannot live on spasms. It must have something reliable to stand upon. Unpaid labor does not feel itself responsible. It feels it has a right to stay at home for a headache, and repose upon the laurels of past labor. It suffers other interests and cares to interfere with its benevolent schemes. It is never without consciousness that the world is already largely indebted to it, and it must therefore be allowed privileges. But if the families unite and set up a grocery, you have practically the system now prevailing, for even now the grocer is not overpaid for his labor. He buys your goods at wholesale and dispenses them at such profits as shall remunerate him for his time, labor, and capability for choosing the goods. Grocers do not, as a rule, get rich. They belong themselves to the over-worked middle class. Their homes are not free from the pressure of over-work. Their profits are not enormous. If you establish a coöperative store at such prices as to compel them to sell lower, you are guilty of injustice to them, and reduce them and their families to hardship, or compel them to retire from your neighborhood. This is manifest injustice, and injustice is an unsafe foundation for any reform. I do not see that the coöperative grocery in cities can become a general thing, or that it would be a benefit if it could. It would be well to try it as a charity for the really abject poor. Here is its true sphere. The priest and the sister of charity are its natural distributors.

The fortunes are not made by our grocers or provision-dealers. These already coöperate with us. Coöperative groceries in effect are almost the only groceries already. The dealers who charge enormous profits are those who sell fancy articles, toys, and manufactured goods, and these are they who get rich at our expense. While the per cent. of profit on what we eat is small, the per cent. on what we wear is enormous, ranging from twenty-five to one hundred per cent. Does anyone suppose that, when a firm marks down its goods habitually at certain seasons, that it has been so short-sighted year after year as not to provide for this very necessity? Do these "immense sacrifices" impoverish the dealers? Were not the prices in the first instance so arranged that, when the reduction should attract the crowd and further advertise the store, the prices then sold at should still be not less than cost? This may not be true in all cases. I am disposed to believe sometimes, when I am told that an article is "less than cost." But it is obvious that our stores could not continue business if all the "marked down" prices were less than the original. Here is where the public is deceived and unfair advantage is taken of them. You will find that all manufactured goods have their prices almost doubled in the market. This is where coöperation can compel justice, and keep in the hands of the people what now goes into the coffers of the merchant, and carries his daughters to expensive balls which devour their lives with frivolity, saps his own constitution with high living, or hurries his family across the continent in search of what they might learn as well at home, were they not blind and deaf and paralyzed by their surfeited animal lives. If coöperation can do good, it is in equalizing things at this point; but I doubt if it will ever accomplish as much as some expect from it.

At a recent meeting of the Second Radical Club, Mrs. Dall suggested that many women now out of employment would find a field for labor in opening cook-shops and mending-shops. She thought a woman could thus do the cooking for ten or twenty families after receipts of their own, and this would greatly relieve overworked households, especially in summer, making one stove do the work of ten. In the same way laundering and mending could be done. This is coöperation only as all trade is so; but it is a practical suggestion. But when I related it to one of those very overworked women of the middle classes, she met me with the query: "Ah, but where is one to get the extra money to purchase this luxury of having the labor done outside the house?" The question is whether the coöperative store will leave this surplus in her hands to lessen her physical labor, and leave her time for recreation or improvement. It is worth trying at all events. She is silent from dumb despair,—this mother in the middle class. She has been told that her children will rise up and call her blessed, and this shall compensate her. Ah, mother-love is much, and the compensation in baby hands is much; but can any one phase of our natures compensate for the cramping of the rest? That the hands of the Chinese lady retain their shape does not prevent her cramped feet from being monstrous deformities. That the tree in any garden is graceful and its blossoming fair only makes the dead limb more unsightly. This mother, however tenderly cared for in old age by grateful children, is still prematurely old, careworn, and joyless; still feels, as her children bring in from the outer air the stirring truths of the age, how stultified and maimed her life has been, how defrauded of the intercourse and incentive which should have kept her heart light and her soul fresh with eternal youth. She has had no helper. No one has comprehended her labors, her cares, her sacrifices, her losses. Her children, even, have thought it a matter of course that she should be always at her post. She has builded better than she knew, perhaps; but others reap while she, like the coral insect, lays herself down on her work and dies in harness. It is to these millions of mothers that coöperation would extend the helping hand, perhaps; and again I say, it is worth trying; but it cannot accomplish all things. Behind it are the deeper problems of labor. It is not the way out of the difficulty. The root lies deeper, and the effort to reach it will involve greater revolution. The principles of coöperation should be brought to bear on rents; in this direction no injustice would be involved, and a great deal could be thus saved to these same middle classes. But this is of itself gaining ground with us, requiring no organization to put it in practice. The root of the matter, however, lies in the heart of the capitalist, the employer of labor, and in the distribution of laborers over the fields of labor.

E. MERRIAM.

IMMORTALITY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In your issue of Dec. 28, some questions over the signature of Preston Day are put to Dyer D. Lum, who has, to a few minds, at least, scientifically answered them. Yet personal immortality remains a hope which most men possess, but without scientific evidence; for, if true, it lies beyond the domain of science to show it. In the words of Mr. Lum: "Every mental fact has a physical counterpart." In view of past history we feel like honoring whoever fearlessly maintains an honest but unpopular belief. Loss of position, the ban of the Church, and ostracism are some of the penalties still paid for honest opinion. I have not the honor of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Lum; but I admire the qualities of mind which he exhibits,—sturdy thought, fearless expression, and invulnerable logic. The question of a future life has engaged the attention of some of the acutest minds in all lands and ages without a scientific solution. As you, Mr. Editor, state it: "Human knowledge is far too limited as yet to permit a final disposition of it."

That we sometimes draw inspiration or comfort from thoughts of others is my apology for appearing on grounds where giants wrestle. And I wish to make no assertion more positive than—"Thus it seems to me."

1. The fact that many have believed in immortality affords but a distant probability of its truth, since many errors have been held with great tenacity.
2. A strong and nearly universal desire in the human race which ought to be filled. But we know that many seemingly important desires are never satisfied. "Not one mosquito in a million ever tastes blood."
3. But few are willing to accept as scientific evidence the mysteries or madness of modern Spiritualism.
4. Evidence of immortality drawn from the analogy of Nature consists mainly in transformations of worms to flies; the decay and germination of seeds; all changes of animal and vegetable forms are said to be analogous to the human change called death. The above, I think, is the pith of Joseph Butler's Analogy on this subject, from which I quote: "Nor can we find anything throughout the whole analogy of Nature to afford us even the slightest presumption that animals ever lose their living powers; much less if it were possible that they lose them by death." The following quotations from his reviewer, Albert Barnes, will be interesting: "A work which saps all the foundations of unbelief." "By a mighty effort of genius he seized on truth, fixed it in permanent forms, chained down scattered reasonings, and left them to be surveyed by men of less mental stature." Is it not also as evident that there is a vital element in each individual plant, distinct from its material substance; manifested and developed in its growth, but indestructible in its decay? Then all matter is filled with immortal life, and gravity may not be a quality of matter, but a living entity. Farmers return to the soil the refuse of their crops, in the belief that the dissolving elements of the old will reënter and invigorate the new vegetation; so, in view of the myriads of human organisms that have come and gone, it seems probable that many have held in their material structure the same necessary elements as those which have gone before. Now who in the future shall possess them in this interminable combination of chemical substances? This view, of course, rests on the supposition that mind can consciously exist only as dependent on, or, in Mr. Day's words, "related to an organism with a nervous system." Heat, light, electricity, and magnetism can have no being apart from matter. If these blind forces have a dual existence, the fact would afford but a distant probability that self-consciousness remains when severed from its material organism. All the atoms that have formed a part of animal or vegetable bodies are still on this planet,—revolving in endless cycles, without haste and without rest, escaping from the old and reëntering new forms. The vital forces which they sustain seem to exist only in organization. The subtle chemistry that gave life to the primeval forests and to extinct animals has loosened its grasp to take other holds, and in each dissolution "a golden bowl was broken" forever. If there are other and stronger grounds of belief in immortality, we shall be more than willing to accept them. Let the gods that demolish, but will not create, stop work. If but a tithe of the time, talent, and treasure, now expended to make men believe in things they cannot comprehend, were used to create moral character, to show its intrinsic worth here and now, we think better morals would obtain. Let free-thinkers emphasize, by deed and word and pen, the excellence of a moral life.

ALBION, WIS.

T. J. ATWOOD.

"TRUTH-SEEKING."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—In your issue of Feb. 1, in "An Open Letter to Mr. Stebbins," Hugo Andriessen asks him: "Now will you be kind enough to enlighten an earnest truth-seeker?" I fear Mr. Stebbins will have an arduous task, if he undertakes it; for notice what sort of man he would have to enlighten. One who starts out with this assertion: "But before I accept anything as a 'fact,' a 'truth,' I must be convinced; and I cannot permit even the most plausible statements of others to influence me in this respect!" (The italics are mine.) From this confession, I judge his stock of knowledge to be very limited, since one man's experience cannot be great, be he never so old. But why does this "earnest truth-seeker" ask Mr. Stebbins to spend his time? Or why did he read all those spiritual works, having his mind so biased that truth, if they contained any, could only "nauseate" him? And his own investigations seem to have been after the manner of Prof. Tyndall's. If my memory does not fail, it was Prof. Tyndall of whom Prof. Wallace wrote: "He attended five sances, got no manifestations, and therefore pronounced Spiritualism a humbug." Scientific, surely! I wonder if Benjamin Franklin was as "patient" in his truth-seeking as Prof. Tyndall and Hugo Andriessen! I have known many persons in life whose identity, should they return from spirit life, and give literature of very good quality, I should doubt very much. But before going far in this article, we find Hugo Andriessen contradicts his own assertion about "accepting facts" and "truth" for it is very apparent that evidence for and evidence against Spiritualism have very different weight with him. Though he "will not permit the most plausible statements to influence" him (and that, too, of the most reliable witnesses, by the hundreds) in favor of Spiritualism and the truth of mediums, yet not only does he consider the testimony of Lankester, Maskelyne, and a few others, perfectly conclusive, but is astonished that Slade's conviction should not "brand" him as an "impostor" with all those who have been directly to him, and obtained messages from spirit friends, he did not know to be in existence. It does not seem to occur to him that the voluntary statement of Maskelyne, to the effect that he would be glad to be able to say something to wipe Spiritualism from the earth, might impair the weight of his testimony with many who are unacquainted with the depth of his veracity; nor that many Spiritualists—though not very scientific—might doubt the capacity of a judge to weigh evidence, who would state in open court "that it could not have been a spirit who moved the chair, as spirits do not use muscular force,"—said judge not being in the least familiar with spirits and the forces which they may or may not use. Though not aware of what "tricks" are referred to in this article, there is one trick of Spiritualists I am cognizant of, and that is the trick of subscribing for THE INDEX, and of inducing others to do the same.

With a sincere wish for religious freedom, not only for myself, but for all,

I am yours truly,

MRS. L. B. C.

JEFFERSON, OHIO.

A VOICE FROM TEXAS.

One whose birth and experience in these cozy New England States have rooted in him the belief that they alone exhibit the genuine rigor of Puritan intolerance, and that such ideas get a wonderful dilution when transferred to the broad life of our Western and Southern domain, is slow to realize the actual tenacity of that iron creed. The following extract from a letter written by a Texas physician reveals the strength of the Puritan clutch through the length and breadth of our land:—

"I have before me a copy of the 'Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States,' adopted July 4, 1876. The object of the organization is of paramount importance to the people of the United States just now, as there is evidently a sinister disposition on the part of some of the religious organizations to ingraft their peculiar dogmas into the organic law. You have my hearty good will in this noble cause, as I fully comprehend the situation. Enclosed find $1 for membership. And I would be happy to coöperate with you in any way possible. I feel particularly 'enthused' just now, as the tendency of the times is operating specially in my case, thus: I finished making sugar at about three o'clock, Sunday morning before Christmas. Being very much exposed during the grinding season, I contracted a rheumatism of the left shoulder, which is now giving me great pain. My Christian friends, among whom is a D.D. and editor of a Christian Advocate, declare my distemper to be a visitation of divine wrath for my appropriation of three hours of holy time! And in a quarter of a century, with a fusion of Church and State, my children would be compelled to admit the above, or pay for forgiveness."

This writer, so alive to the signs of the times, has not derived his alarm from THE INDEX, which is so vigorously accused of the "mad dog cry"; for he asks to see a copy or two of that paper, thinking he would like to subscribe. It is interesting to know that he is the grandson of Rev. M. L. Weems, who was chaplain to George Washington and author of the lives of Washington, Marion, Penn, and Franklin.

J. P. T., Assist. Sec'y N. L. L.

BOSTON, Feb. 16.

[Will not those whom circumstances prevent from helping the National Liberal League in the work of organizing local Leagues assist in circulating the "Patriotic Address" and the "Report of the Centennial Congress"? There is most urgent need of disseminating the ideas there published and of extending the general movement.—Ed.]

THE "RELIGION OF EVOLUTION."

This timely book, written by Rev. M. J. Savage, is fitted to give great aid in relieving the minds of men and women from the fetters of superstition, and in assisting to gain the mastery over traditional and preconceived false opinions. It shows that evolution has been the underlying principle in the whole progress of thought in relation to religion, and that the tendency has been to arrive at higher and more just conceptions of a religious kind.

Carried along by the author's presentations, and by his historic analysis of religious systems, the reader is led to expect that he is to come to no limit; that ever this evolving process is to go on, leaving behind all historic religions, and, in entire freedom from names and notions of the past, ascending ever to ideas broader and nobler, and universal in their essence. What then is the surprise of one, who has followed the author with pleasure in his application of evolution as a law of the universe, to be brought up, with a kind of shock, to a finality in human development, on that subject most vital to his interests! "I am a Christian," he says, "because I am an evolutionist. . . . Christianity is the highest outcome of religious evolution. . . . Since, then, Christianity is the result of evolution, is it to be expected that evolution will still go on, and ultimately outgrow and leave Christianity behind? This is the hasty logic of some." He then enumerates certain Christian doctrines which will be "sloughed off," but says: "If Christianity contain in itself any touch of the universal and eternal, it must live forever."

Now these very doctrines that are to be "sloughed off," do they not form the characteristics of Christianity as distinguished from other religions? And will it be denied that other religions have had in them "touches of the universal and eternal," and thus, on the same ground, have a claim to live forever? Would it not be more just and logical to reverse the statement, and affirm that the universal and eternal found in all religions will live forever, while that which distinguishes each as a system will be "sloughed off," and that evolution, through science, will develop ideas as much in advance of those of Christianity, as a system, as that is beyond fetichism?

A. H.

THE OTHER DAY a German, leaning against a hitching-post on Washington Street, looked up at the sky, and remarked: "I guess a leedle it vill rain some-dime pooty queer." Whereupon an Irishman at his side rejoined: "Yees do, eh? Well, I want yees to understand that yees have no bizness to come over to America and say anything forinist the weather. What the devil do yees purtend to know about American weather, anyhow, ye furrin galoot?" The German had no more to say.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	"	8	"	"	"
" 26 " 51 "	"	6	"	"	"
" 52 "	"	5	"	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2 20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS.

OTHER

FREE

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's addresses on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 50 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal
DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,
AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
AIN (ALEXANDER). The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	5.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Price.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 11 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	5.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Foot-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.50
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	3.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Ordination.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	3.00
The Descent of Man.....	2.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA.) Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	4.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG.) The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS) Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	6.00
Exclusive Editions.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	8.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Big Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	1.50
Barbours' Sketches.....	1.50
Venetian Life.....	1.50
Italian Journeys.....	1.50
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hour.....	1.25
Mopsa the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By B. Stewart, with an Appendix treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints. Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	1.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	3.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Uninterrupted Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1850 to 1885.....	5.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols. each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols. each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.50
Memorial Volume. His Writings.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVAT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 1 vol.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.25
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trilby Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	25.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Sociology. 2 vols.....	3.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Great-Boon Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unpublished Fictions.....	1.25
THAYER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Man.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	3.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Best as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TITLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	5.00
Vol. III. IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Man.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Panthea. A Volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	2.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FOUR COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER,

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	40
FIFTY.....	75
ONE HUNDRED.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED.....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED.....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED.....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND.....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid), and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 30 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.50.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

- Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."
Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immortal Religion and Irreligious Morality."
Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—a New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.
Jan. 28—Wm. R. Alger. "The Laboring Classes and the Ruling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed."
Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.
Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."
"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.—
Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."
Feb. 25—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing."
March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."
March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."
Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 451 Washington Street.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL for both sexes. Address EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, R. H. RANNEY, F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50. Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant,—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that

THE LABOR QUESTION—

Involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, aesthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fluke, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orvis, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher, BENJ. B. TUCKER, Lock Box 559, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1877.

WHOLE No. 375.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE ELECTION of school committees in England now turns largely on the religious question. At Bristol the new committee is classified as follows: six Liberals, five Conservative Churchmen, one Protestant Leaguer, one Roman Catholic, one Wesleyan, and one Temperance representative—a lady.

W. H. DANIELS, of Chicago, published a card in the Boston Journal of February 14, declaring that F. W. Fields, one of Moody's co-workers in the revival in that city, had one leg several inches shorter than the other, and had it duly lengthened overnight in consequence of prayer! Such wild fictions show that Protestants have no right to sneer at Catholic miracles. They are all superstitious together.

ON THE FIFTEENTH of February, it is announced, "Dr. Felix Adler's friends met in Standard Hall, Mr. Joseph Seligman in the chair, and organized 'The Society for Ethical Culture,' under chapter 319 of the laws of 1848. The society will shortly open a school for the promotion of morality. By resolution, the trustees of the new society were instructed to engage Dr. Adler as lecturer for one year from May next."

THE HOPE of the world for a safe and prosperous future is bound up with the cause of universal education. Every movement in that direction should be hailed with great satisfaction: "The matter of compulsory education is being discussed in the Illinois Legislature. A bill looking to that end has passed one branch of the Ohio Legislature, and in the New York Legislature a measure is pending to make the compulsory features of the school law of that State more effective."

DOM PEDRO has been interviewing the Pope. He "expressed the hope that the Pope would, in accord with the Brazilian government, assist in removing all ecclesiastical difficulties in Brazil. The Pope replied that the Church was rather accustomed to smooth than to create obstacles. He hoped to be able to restore religious harmony, which had always been the glory of Brazil." The "religious harmony" which the Pope wants is the extinction of freethought. He would "make a desert and call it peace."

THE NUMBER of actual converts claimed for Moody and Sankey in Chicago was 2,500, besides 6,000 to 8,000 who were "seriously impressed." Among the "seriously impressed" must certainly be reckoned the Chicago Tribune, which exclaimed with rapture: "Never did one man reap such a harvest since the Reformation! Eight thousand sheaves has he gathered into his Master's barns!" That makes one "serious impression" go to each sheaf; and the barns aforesaid seem to have been filled with highly inflated breadstuffs.

THERE is litigation in Philadelphia over the reckless ringing of a chime of bells in St. Mark's Church. Numerous petitions for an injunction restraining the nuisance have been made, and numerous witnesses bear testimony to the great annoyance, and even injury, caused by these bells. Invalids, old persons, and infants are deprived of their sleep; physicians testify to the bad effect on the health of the neighborhood; property-owners complain of the depreciation of real estate. Altogether, it seems that those bells ought to be stopped for the good of mankind. P. S.—The courts have declared them a nuisance.

THIS is the manner in which the Christian Statesman notices the recent demise of the Philadelphia Radical Club: "The Radical Club of Philadelphia, an organization for the promotion of infidel views in religious matters and secularism in politics, has been dissolved. It was one of the chief of the societies which labored to secure the opening of the Centennial Exhibition on the Sabbath day. The cause of the suspension, presumably, was lack of funds. There is an inherent financial weakness in all anti-religious organizations, the fruit of the evident fact that they have no sufficient motive to prompt their members to liberality. Religion is the only instrumentality which, thus far, has been adequate to this task."

THIS SHOWS what sort of legislation may be necessitated even in this country, if the State should fall for awhile into the clutches of the Church: "The bill for repressing abuses by the clergy, now before the Italian Parliament, provides that any clergyman who preaches or writes against the laws or acts of the government, or who distributes papers to provoke disobedience, shall suffer two years' imprisonment and pay a fine of $400. If the Pope issues an encyclical against the government, and a priest repeats or circulates the document, he will also be imprisoned and fined. If a priest refuses the sacraments to any citizen, or disturbs the public conscience or the peace of families, he will be exposed to similar punishment by the King's government."

THE NEW YORK Sun gives the following interesting information about Professor Felix Adler, the "radical Jew" and one of the best representatives of modern liberal thought and culture: "Dr. Felix Adler, not yet thirty, is the son of a somewhat famous Jewish rabbi, and upon his return from Europe, where he had pursued his studies in the German universities, he was unanimously called to the position which his father had held with honor in a New York synagogue for many years, at a salary of $8000 per annum; his father, in the meantime, for long and faithful service, for which he had grown too old, to be retired upon a pension. But his first sermons did not suit the strict interpretation of the Jewish theology, and it was intimated to him that he must either preach doctrine or resign. He chose to resign. His scruples were, however, respected and approved by a Mr. Ellinger, a wealthy banker and a Jew, who created a professorship of Hebrew and Sanscrit in Cornell University, on condition that he should be invited to fill the chair. But there was a difficulty about this, and the doctor is in New York preaching every Sunday, in a hall near Forty-second Street, the most serious, the most thoughtful, the most practical of sermons. Already about three hundred persons have united into a society, which is to support Dr. Adler as its pastor, found a school free from sectarian and theological influence, and a humane society to assist in preparation for and proper distribution of labor—not mere almsgiving."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. S. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. F. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 MR. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....Nec Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER,.....Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. T. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. B. WALLINGALE,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Batherville, Iowa.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. S. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM C. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quincy, Ill.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN F. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

(For THE INDEX.)

Grounds of Religious Belief:

WHAT THEY SHOULD BE: WHAT THEY ARE.

BY CHARLES K. WHIPPLE.

Conspicuous among the powers with which our Creator has endowed us, are two which we call Reason and Conscience; which seem undoubtedly designed to direct our action, mental and moral. These powers are diverse, but not inharmonious. On the contrary, their joint action is desirable in both departments. Our secular business certainly needs the cooperation of conscience with reason; in morals we shall best discern the right path by allowing the cooperation of reason with conscience; and as true religion must oppose superstition as well as impiety, the minister or the missionary finds reason an invaluable ally in refuting the superstitious notions which prevail among the ignorant in all countries. We consider it a valid objection to the Scriptures of heathen nations that some of their statements are inconsistent with reason, and some with conscience; and instructed heathens make a similar criticism upon our Scripture. Might not all advantageously use some such general principle as the following, in searching for the best rule of doctrine and practice?—

Seeking light and truth from all accessible sources, and continuing through life so to seek them, accept as correct only those particulars which reason and conscience agree in approving.

Since reason and conscience are God's gifts expressly for our guidance, are we not, in applying them as above suggested, following his direction?

To the writer it seems clear that such a course would be a following of God's method, and would be, for that reason, more likely than any different method to give us correct guidance. Yet a method entirely different from this is enjoined as indispensable by the great majority of our religious teachers, and is accepted, with or without reflection, by a great majority of our population.

I have mentioned reason as an important aid in the discrimination and the propagation of true religion. I do not, however, forget that religion includes matters above the cognizance of reason, matters in which the latter can act as an ally only, not as a principal. Reason and conscience can speak with authority in regard to the relations of men with each other; but when our relation to God is in question, as the created cannot possibly comprehend the Creator, and must attain a limited apprehension of him by some power other than reason, a want is here felt by the human being which nothing but faith can supply. I mean by faith such perfect assurance, on spiritual grounds, in regard to spiritual realities, as we receive from demonstration in matters visible and tangible. I mean by faith in God a thorough and steadfast persuasion of the reality of his being and providence, and a confidence that enlarged knowledge will make manifest to us wisdom and goodness in his dealings, even where they now appear most obscure or doubtful.

The theory that we ourselves and the universe around us have come into existence without design on the part of a superintending power is felt by most minds to be an intolerable absurdity. We feel, too, a sense of dependence, and an impulse towards reverence and adoration, which are explicable only on the supposition of a benevolent Creator who has implanted these feelings in us. This supposition is strengthened by our recognition of excellent and admirable things in man and Nature, the manifest product of design. On the other hand, seeing also a large intermixture of evil in man and Nature, our impulse is to wonder that such power and wisdom did not exclude and prevent evil. In this conflict of evidence, faith helps us. Perhaps the evil is to be outgrown; perhaps it is to serve a temporary use by showing the ill results of ill-doing, and then to be abolished by the processes of discipline and development, leaving the good to be enlarged and perfected. A firm conviction of the goodness of God absolutely requires some such supposition as this; and reason seems to authorize it by the reflection, that our limited vision can grasp so small a proportion of the Creator's plan and work, that the part unseen may include a demonstration of their perfect beneficence. Our range of observation and experience extends over only tens of years, and the imperfect knowledge gained through historical statements carries us back only a few thousands of years. It is reasonable, it requires only the commonest exercise of common sense, to reflect that our view of this portion of time, even were it perfect, must fail to include very much of what belongs to eternity. Even reason then can supplement and fortify faith, and our surest results are gained through friendly conference of the latter with the former. I judge, then, that, in the department of religion, we may confidently trust those impulses of faith which are approved by reason and conscience. I judge, too, that this rule will guide us to greater correctness of thought and action than any different one. Yet, as I have said above, a method entirely different from this is enjoined as indispensable by the great majority of our religious teachers, and is accepted, with or without reflection, by a great majority of our population.

The peculiarities and the evils of this different method may best be seen by reference to the central idea of the popular religion, Protestant as well as Catholic, throughout this country. This central idea is expressed with great simplicity and directness in two sermons by Mr. Moody, entitled "The Blood."

Announcing this phrase as the subject of his two discourses, Mr. Moody says: "Let us turn up the Bible, and see what the Word of God says about it." Without the assumption contained in the sentence just quoted—an assumption, be it observed, not only destitute of evidence but contrary to evidence,—Mr. Moody is powerless. He is strong only with the weak; that is, with those who are uninstructed enough, or innocently confiding enough, to accept his utterly unwarranted assumption that God wrote the documents which are handed down to us as the writings of Moses and Samuel, of Paul and Peter, of Matthew, Mark, and John. If you inquire on what grounds he assumes this, he can give you no reason. All he can do is to assure you, with a solemn countenance, that he that believeth not shall be damned. If you ask again on what grounds he makes this last assertion, he will probably pass quickly on to some different sort of "inquirer."

Mr. Moody thinks, no doubt, that he believes in God; but his faith seems to rest, not on any naturally existing evidence, such as David recognized in one of his Psalms, and Paul in his speech to the Athenians, but on what certain early Hebrews and early Christians recorded as their belief upon that subject. What they wrote, reasonable or unreasonable, proved, unproved, or disproved, must be believed. The writings now accepted as canonical Scripture are God's word, and must so be recognized. Yet, since this doctrine, and some of the other doctrines on which Mr. Moody lays main stress, are not asserted nor assumed by the Bible itself, we must look further for the central ground of Mr. Moody's faith; and the essence of it seems to be the body of doctrine traditionally held by the churches self-styled "Evangelical." Since they assume the Bible to be God's word, that must be believed, though the Bible itself does not say so; and since they enjoin the observance of Sunday as a Sabbath, Mr. Moody teaches that doctrine, though both Old Testament and New Testament contradict it.

The blood-doctrine, however, the assumption that without shedding of blood there can be no remission of sin, is in the Bible, both in the Hebrew and Christian parts of it, and Mr. Moody may fairly claim all the advantage which this fact can give him. To be sure, he stretches this fact into enormous exaggeration when he maintains that there runs, through the whole Old Testament, a steady and consistent stream of prophetic reference to the blood which was shed by Jesus on Calvary long afterwards; but we will not pause to complain of exaggeration while treating of a system so largely composed of absolute untruth as is the system taught by Mr. Moody. Leaving this point then, we concede that rivers of the blood of bulls and goats moisten the whole course of Old Testament religion (in spite of occasional denunciations of the practice, and representations of its folly and uselessness, by the more intelligent of the Hebrew prophets); that, in many passages of the New Testament, the Mosaic notion of purification by blood is echoed and assumed to be true; and that the shedding of the blood of Jesus by crucifixion is claimed there as the designed continuation and culmination of the Jewish sacrificial system, in such sort that countless numbers of guilty persons may be pardoned, and treated evermore thereafter as if they were not guilty, because of the blood-shedding of that one innocent person. Granting all this, the question next arises, What measure of credence properly belongs to these opinions of the writers of Scripture, and how far can they constitute authority to control and mould the belief of people in the nineteenth century?

Those writers in the Old Testament who record the offering of bloody sacrifices, and assume that sin was really wiped out and the sinner purified by such offering, did so in deference to Moses, who taught that the God of the Hebrews was pleased with, and required, such observance, just as the Greek, the Syrian, and the Canaanitish priests, before him, had taught their respective peoples that their gods were pleased with, and required, such observance. Equally, the writers of the narratives and letters which were ultimately brought together to constitute the New Testament were born and bred Jews, impressed from their infancy with the conviction that Moses was God's mouth-piece, and that whatever he taught was to be received and acted on without question, and they thus reechoed the Mosaic doctrine that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin, not yet daring to adopt the suggestion of their new master, Jesus, that they ought to think and judge, "even of themselves," about such matters. The four Evangelists recorded what was currently believed about blood-sacrifice in their time, and thus it came to pass that that barbarous notion of the early Hebrews became incorporated with the better teaching of Jesus in the minds of the early Christians, from whom it has been handed down to us.

Now, Mr. Moody is not a Jew. He does not observe the Saturday Sabbath of the fourth commandment; he cares nothing about the day of the new moon, and is not solicitous about ceasing from work and afflicting his soul on the tenth day of the seventh month. Probably he uses as nourishment, from time to time, the savory flesh of "the unclean beast"; but at any rate he does not make it a point to observe all the rules laid down by Moses, whether in regard to worship or morality, or to food, purification, and ablution. He cherishes more or fewer Jewish superstitions, but it is not because they are Jewish, but because they have been adopted, and (as he thinks) authenticated as Christian law by the writers of the New Testament. One of the doctrines so adopted is the blood-doctrine, and Mr. Moody receives it as absolutely sound and true, by virtue of his faith in Paul and Peter, Matthew, Mark, and John, without whose testimony that notion would have remained, in his view, merely Jewish, a matter, like circumcision and ceremonial purification, with which no Gentile had anything to do.

The faith of Mr. Moody, then, seems to be in the men who wrote the New Testament, whom he assumes to have been miraculously raised, as far as the writing of those letters and narratives was concerned, above the possibility of human error. But even this, when we look more closely into it, turns out to be only seeming. He holds to infallible inspiration as a matter to be preached, to be taken for granted, to be insisted on in public, as one of the things indispensable for spiritual welfare; but when we come to practice, to the fruit of the Moody branch of the Evangelical vine, which is the true test of character, a different state of things appears. There are many injunctions of the infallible Book which Mr. Moody utterly disregards and habitually violates without scruple, some by omission some by commission. For instance:—

Mr. Moody, in theory, claims Jesus as his Lord and Master, and claims that the record of his precepts in the New Testament is divinely inspired and infallibly correct. But when Matthew represents Jesus as saying, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth; take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink, nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on"; and when he adds, still more comprehensively, "Take therefore no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself," Mr. Moody pays no more regard to these rules of life, given by his Lord and Master, than if Confucius or Zoroaster had given them; and this in spite of the fact that these precepts of Jesus were illustrated and enforced by his own example, which Mr. Moody (in theory) holds to be not less binding than his precept.

So when Matthew represents Jesus as warning his disciples against public prayer, and against systematic repetitions in prayer, Mr. Moody utterly disregards these directions of his "Lord and Master," though they are enforced and illustrated by the counter-positive precept that prayer should be a strictly private conference of the petitioner with his Maker. If there is any trait, whatever, characteristic of Mr. Moody it is that he "loves to pray standing in the synagogues." He is as much "addicted" to public prayer and to incessant repetitions in prayer as any of the people to whom he preaches are addicted to intemperance. And he has somehow persuaded himself that this course is right, just as some devotees of the bottle really suppose that indulgence good for them.

Luke tells us, in the beginning of his Gospel, that he learned the things there recorded from the testimony of his fellow-men, and nowhere intimates that he considered his narrative as either divinely-inspired or infallible. Mr. Moody, however, insists that what Luke writes must be received as dictated by God himself, and absolutely free from error. Yet, when Luke testifies that Jesus said to a promiscuous assembly of the Jews, "Why, even of yourselves, judge ye not what is right?" Mr. Moody declines to follow this counsel, and dissuades his hearers from following it. He sends them, instead, to study what Luke, and Matthew, and the other annalists of that early period recorded, although those records show that the disciples and apostles grossly misunderstood their Master from the beginning of his course to the end of it, and although the counsel of Jesus above quoted is in the direct line of the Divine method, God having given us reason and conscience for the express purpose of self-direction.

Mr. Moody lays special stress upon the doctrine that "the Holy Ghost" is a person, and is also God. He moreover maintains that the apostles, specially instructed by the Holy Ghost after the day of Pentecost, are our authoritative teachers in regard to Christian duty; and he believes the book called "Acts of the Apostles" to be infallibly inspired, like the rest of the Bible, and without error either of fact or doctrine. This is his theory. Let us now look at his practice under one of the Holy Ghost's injunctions:—

It is related in the book of Acts (chap. xv.), that, at the request of Paul and Barnabas, the Apostles held a solemn conference with the elders of the Church at Jerusalem, to settle a point then much debated; namely, how far Jewish law should be held binding on Gentile converts to Christianity. There were zealous advocates, among these Apostles and elders, on both sides of the question; but a compromise was finally agreed on, which was sent to the Gentile brethren by the hands of Paul, Barnabas, and Silas, in these words: "It seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to us to lay upon you no greater burden than these necessary things: that ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication."

Among the Christians of our day, ministers and people, these prohibitions by the Holy Ghost of the use of blood and of things strangled as food are utterly disregarded. Blood, in the shape of the "rare gravy" of roast beef and mutton, is not only unscrupulously used, but is preferred and asked for as a special delicacy; and the persons in question buy and eat pigeons and domestic fowls without the slightest thought of whether they were killed by strangulation or otherwise. Probably Mr. Moody does these same things; but he certainly takes no pains to impress upon his hearers that abstinence from things strangled and from blood are among the necessary things which the Holy Ghost requires of them, as he would do if he really followed the Scriptural record of the apostolic injunctions.

Mr. Moody is accustomed to pray for the recovery of those sick persons whose cases are presented to him, and to take very coolly, as a matter for which he is not responsible, the fact that some of them fail to recover, in spite of his prayer. But, if he really believed the declarations of his infallible Bible upon that subject, he would heal them, or cause them to be healed. He would not suffer them to die. Notice this direction of the inspired Apostle James: "Is any sick among you? Let him call for the elders of the Church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up."

The testimony of James is explicit, and is given in a "General Epistle," without limitation of time. If the whole Bible be really "God's word," the favorable result above promised may still be realized, by using the specified means. But we learn, by still higher authority, that a healing of the sick may be certainly obtained without troubling the "elders," or going to the expense of "oil." The inspired Evangelist Mark tells us, at the close of his Gospel, that Jesus made the following declaration to his Apostles: "These signs shall follow them that believe. In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover."

If Mark is to be credited as infallibly inspired, this wonderful power was delegated by Jesus to all "them that believe," without limitation of time. Why does Mr. Moody never himself use this means for the certain recovery of the sick? Why does he never direct the "believers," who bring requests for prayer for healing, to go back to the invalid's chamber and lay their own hands on him? Why, among his numerous specifications of the efficacy of faith, and his upbraidings of those "professing Christians" who seem destitute of it, does he never cite the passages of "inspired truth" above cited, and demand that faith be exercised in this department also, a department now undervalued, neglected, and ignored by the whole Church.

These may suffice as specimens of injunctions of Jesus and his Apostles recorded in Scripture which Mr. Moody treats with absolute disregard in practice, though theoretically maintaining the obligation of those injunctions, and the infallible inspiration of the records containing them. Yet we must not suppose that Mr. Moody, like many Unitarians, takes the liberty to judge for himself which Gospel precepts he will obey, and which he need not obey. It will be found, on examination of all the cases of this purpose and systematic disregard of a portion of the injunctions of Scripture, that Mr. Moody, instead of exercising a self-willed individualism, is merely following the traditions and customs of his sect; or, more accurately speaking, of that group of sects, self-styled "Evangelical," in whose interests he is working, and among whom his patrons and confederates are found.

Mr. Moody is not a self-seeking or a time-serving man. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that he ever said to himself: "If I preach the camel-and-needle doctrine, rich professors will not shell out the tens of thousands that are needed to build Tabernacles and supply the further large expenses of my work in Chicago and Boston. If I preach the take-no-thought-for-the-morrow doctrine, the ministers will not combine to incite their churches to make elaborate spiritual preparation to cooperate with me two or three months hence in exhortation, prayer, singing, and the skilful manipulation of inquirers." Nothing of this sort can fairly be imputed to Mr. Moody. He joined the Church as a sincere convert, humble and docile, and of course followed its example in his belief and in his life. Finding certain precepts of the Bible utterly disregarded by the Church, ignored by the pulpit, and elaborately explained away in the "commentaries," he doubtless thought, as so many thousands of modest young converts have done, that these methods had been settled, no doubt for good reasons, by Christians older and wiser than himself, and that conformity to them was his duty. So he went with the (Christian) multitude, adopting with them the other traditions of the elders; the assumptions, namely, that the Church creed contained the substance of what was to be believed, and that the Church customs were the true frame-work of a holy life. These were no harder to swallow and digest than the stories of Jonah and the fish, of Joshua and the sun, and of the ram's horns and the walls of Jericho, which he had already incorporated into his theological system. But see the results of such unreasoning docility and conformity. The objects on which Mr. Moody's faith really reposes seem to be first the Bible-writers and then the Church; that is, the sort of Church which calls itself "Evangelical," a conglomeration of Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, and Orthodox Congregationalists, with a few Episcopalians. Of the two, his real belief seems to be more in the Church than in the Bible-writers, since, as has been shown above, he follows the Church in disregarding and ignoring some portions of the Bible.

Not that he is entirely satisfied with the Church, or that he fails sharply to criticize its members; but his criticism directs itself to quantity rather than quality. These Methodists, Baptists, etc., are already of the right sort; what they need is to be more so. They have set a right example to the world by attending to the first great duty of life; namely, getting themselves saved. But they need more faith; that is, more confidence that they can move the arm that moves the world—more confidence that God can be teased, by dint of repetition and importunity, and particularly by bringing platoons and regiments of prayer to bear simultaneously upon Him, into granting the favors which they think He had better grant. They need more zeal; that is, more energy in carrying on the impertinent work of catechizing other people about their belief, and more persistence in manipulating "converts" until they become church-members. Above all they need more "holiness"; more absorption in "other-worldliness"; more conformity to the Church pattern of sainthood; such disparagement and depreciation of this world as is recommended in Watts' Psalms and Hymns, and in their own revivalist hymns. Nevertheless, much as they need increase of these gifts and graces (as Mr. Moody regards them), it is precisely to this sort of society, to the church organizations, and to the set of influences which has made them what they are, that Mr. Moody is laboring to bring his "converts." It is to this end that the "Evangelical" ministers (so-called) cooperate with and eulogize him. Just so far as he and they get a harvest of "converts," just so far will their churches be enlarged, and their doctrine have an appearance of success. Next after the "saving of souls," this is the great object he and they are working for.

To sum up: it seems to me that what I have described as faith, in the former part of this article, is far more reverent towards God, far more accordant with His genuine revelation in ourselves and the world around us, far more in conformity with the best and highest of the teachings ascribed to Jesus, and far better suited, in friendly cooperation with reason and conscience, to guide human purposes and human life in the right direction, than the different beliefs illustrated in Mr. Moody's doctrine and practice. Giving full credit to Mr. Moody for earnestness and sincerity, it still seems to me that the people who follow his counsel are grossly misguided, and are learning things which they must necessarily unlearn before they can attain true welfare, either in this world or the next.

DR. SCHLIEHMANN.

LETTER FROM MONCURE D. CONWAY.

LONDON, Jan. 16, 1877.

The latest discoveries of Schliemann have more literary than archaeological importance. He has just found a stone fountain and a bust of the rhetorician Gorgias. Both of these were carefully described by Pausanias nearly seventeen hundred years ago, and the bust has on it the inscription which the Greek writer copied when it stood as an ornament of the city. I do not, however, mean to write now again about Dr. Schliemann, but merely, so far as his discoveries are concerned, to note that they have been, from first to last, the triumph of Pausanias; that they have tested his exactness, and prove him to have been one of the minutest and most trustworthy writers that ever lived. And yet, who has paid any attention to Pausanias? In this country, hitherto, only poor Taylor, the enthusiastic Platonist, who was one day brought up before a London Police Court, charged by his landlady with sacrificing a bull to Jupiter in her back parlor. Taylor was born somewhat over a hundred years ago, and was a very poor man; but it is to the credit of the stupid Georgian era that there were found a Duke (of Norfolk) and a rich tradesman (Meredith) who appreciated his enthusiasm, and enabled him to publish not only his translation of Plato but other Greek works, which scholars cared nothing for, to the extent of £10,000. Amongst these works were the Hymns of Orpheus, which led our own American Alcott to call his transcendental utterances Orphic Sayings (while his Plato was much valued by Emerson). His Plotinus on the Beautiful did much towards reviving mysticism in England and America, as did also his translation of Jamblichus' Life of Pythagoras and his Apuleius. Taylor translated Pausanias' Description of Greece, and his work remains the only bit of Pausanias which has been introduced into England. There is not even an English edition of his Greek text. At Oxford and Cambridge they know nothing of Pausanias, and though he has been occasionally introduced into examinations at the Queen's College in Dublin, he has never been included in any course of study in this country. Yet this is the man who now turns up as the truest guide to all which scholars have for years been seeking in Greece, and the luck of discovering this has justly fallen to the German who has long been studying him in three excellent editions,—that of Siebelis (Leipzig, 5 vols., 1822-28); that of Bekker (Berlin, 2 vols., 1826); and that of Schubart & Walz (Leipzig, 3 vols., 1838). Weidach also published a German translation in 1826 (Munich). About twenty-eight years ago George Long, late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, informed English scholars that all the wisdom of the ancients was not limited to the writers who wrote what they call "Attic" Greek, and, particularly, he said of Pausanias: "With the exception of Herodotus, there is no writer of antiquity, and perhaps none of modern times, who has comprehended so many valuable facts in a small volume." Long instanced Pausanias' remarks on earthquakes, on the soft stone full of sea shells used in the buildings of Megara, on the silk-worm, on the fact that at Patre the females doubled the number of males—which is explained by the circumstance that the greater part of them got their living by making head-gear, and by weaving fine cloth from the byssus of Elis; also his careful account of the best works of art. But still no attention was paid in this country to Pausanias, until recently. Professor Mahaffy, the rising Greek scholar of Dublin, author of Social Life in Greece, recently went upon a tour through that country, the result being his pleasant Rambles and Studies in Greece, just published. For some reason or other he has ever since been devoting himself to Pausanias, and I have good reason for saying that we shall soon have an important contribution from him on that author, such as will no doubt lead English scholars to carefully lock the door after the horse has been stolen. In Pausanias' Corinthiaca, the very spot is marked out where the treasures have now been found.

But why is it that Pausanias has been thus neglected? It can hardly be doubted that it is because he was among the many learned men who, in the second and third centuries, looked upon the Christian movement either with indifference or with a contempt like that which Tyndall feels for "Spiritualism," or that which animated Professor Mahaffy himself for Moody's revival; for it is of this Professor, it is related, that when Moody asked him on a railway if he was "saved," he replied: "Yes, but it was a devilish close shave." A myth, no doubt, since Mahaffy is a clergyman, and yet probably characteristic. Pausanias was apparently an Orthodox believer in the Greek religion; at least he records the legends of old fountains and divine myths without any trace of scepticism; but he commits the unpardonable sin of not even mentioning the Christians, which is too significant an omission of all the miracles and marvels claimed as having gone on in that age to be easily forgiven. Could all the events related in the New Testament have been matters of notoriety without the knowledge of the eminent traveller? Mr. Anthony Froude, the historian, who began his career with assisting Father Newman to write and edit the lives of the Saints—and betrayed a germ-cell of heresy by terminating one biography with the words, "This is all that is known of the life of this holy man—and a good deal more,"—has recently been bestowing some labor on the non-Christian writers of Greece subsequent to the Christian era, and he told me that he was amazed to find what a body of valuable literature lay in that region of time comparatively unexplored. There is reason to hope that Mr. Froude will bring to light some of these treasures. He says: "The men of genius who had the misfortune, under the later Roman Emperors, to be blind to the truth of Christianity, have been punished by a neglect which they do not wholly deserve. With Tacitus the era closes in which a Roman of ability has been allowed to have shut his eyes to the light without wilful sin. Thenceforward, all men of intellectual reputation who remained unconverted have been held guilty by Christendom of deliberate unbelief. Their writings have been thrown aside as either mischievous or useless. The age itself and the character of their contemporaries has been left to be described by the Fathers of the Church; and unless for special reasons, or by exceptional and curious students, the last representatives of the old classical literature remain generally unread." These remarks are preliminary to the first of what it is hoped will be a series of studies of Lucian, which Mr. Froude has contributed to Fraser's Magazine. Lucian flourished in the second century—about the same time as Pausanias, or a little before him. He has been relegated to the limbo of scholastic neglect only a little less severe than Pausanias, because he does mention the Christians, and rather unpleasantly. At the very time when the believers "were first called Christians at Antioch," in that same town in the neighborhood of his birth, dwelt this cultivated lawyer and artist, and he mentions the Christians as "a simple-minded sect, whose credulity made them the easy dupes of quacks and charlatans." Wherefore Lucian has shared not the revival of classical learning. Yet he wrote about fifty of the cleverest books in existence. He believed the Orthodox Pagan religion as little as he did any of the new sects which were plentifully springing up out of the decays of gods and goddesses, one of which he would have been surprised to learn was to become Christianity. He even exposed a great spirit medium of his time, and nearly lost his life by it. Now, just as Pausanias has left a complete picture of the physical features of the cities and civilization of Greece in his time, Lucian has left a complete picture of its moral and religious condition. "Lucian," says Mr. Froude, "more than any other writer, Pagan or Christian, enables us to see what human beings were, how they lived, what they thought, felt, said, and did in the centuries when Paganism was expiring and Christianity was taking the place of it." "He has the keenness of Voltaire, the moral indignation, disguised behind his jests, of Swift."

In the seventeenth century there does appear to have been some interest raised in Lucian. The French had taken up some of his writings, which became almost popular in Paris during the rise of scepticism, and some English versions were put forth (1711) by Moyle, Sir H. Shore, and Charles Blount, for which Dryden wrote a little memoir. But Lucian's text was never edited in England, and he was never put into the hands of any youth at school or college; and, indeed, so far as I can learn, there is no complete edition of his works in Europe. They can be got only by collecting the various editions of separate works (or series) which have been put forth in Paris and Leipzig. Still, I observe with pleasure, at the moment of this writing, that the entering wedge has been introduced in England. Two sets of "Grammar School Texts" have just now been announced—"Wales" and "White's"—and in the list of each appears "Lucian Select Dialogues." The price of each (one shilling) did not seem very hopeful, nor did the limitation of the selection to the dialogues of so voluminous a writer seem promising. Still it is something to have a start.

Having invested my shilling in White's Lucian, I find the quantity of the Greek author prescribed so infinitesimal that the title "Dr." ascribed to the editor (Rev. Dr. White, of Oxford) is suggestive of homoeopathy. The book is four and one-half inches by three inches in superficial area, and one-fourth inch thick; external color blood-red; pages 99, of which twenty-five only are Lucian, the rest vocabulary. I quote Dr. White's entire preface concerning Lucian:—

"Lucian, a native of Samosata in Syria, was born about A. D. 120. His works are numerous; but his fame rests mainly on his Dialogues, which are pieces of either an ethical or mythological nature, intended to ridicule the heathen philosophy and religion."

The twelve little Dialogues here given to students by the Oxford divine constitute an indirect tribute to the genius of Lucian, in that the editor has exercised ingenuity to pick out the least important writings of his author for no imaginable reason except their suggestiveness concerning the religious problems of the present day. It is certainly remarkable to find a man writing seventeen centuries ago about the religion and philosophy of pagan Greece so reasonably that his scepticism is dreaded by the very religion which succeeded that and waged war against it. In the great pieces, so carefully omitted in this book, it is shown that the existence of Jupiter was maintained by precisely the same arguments which are still relied on to prove the ordinary conceptions of a Deity. It is only those who hold purely spiritual and moral conceptions of a divine life in Nature to-day who could placidly read Lucian's terrible arguments against Paley's Deity of mechanical design, and the gods based on the universal testimony of the race. In one of the dialogues Lucian presents the droll situation of all the gods coming to a hall in Athens to listen to a debate on their own existence. When they get to the hall they quarrel about precedence, and it is settled that they shall enter first whose statues are of gold, they next whose statues are of silver, and so on,—an adjustment which precisely comports with the rank of churches in England at the present time. The English Church stands first, because its statues are of gold. Then, as the debate goes on, every common argument against atheism is used. The champion of the gods, Timocles, among other things, declares that all the world believes in the gods; consequently they must exist. His opponent, Damis, mentions some of those gods—the worshipped bull of one country, dog-headed ape of another, and onion of a third,—and asks whether all these testimonies are credible. When the champion of the gods is worsted he begins with loud abuse, hurling just such epithets against the sceptic as have been hurled at Voltaire and Paine and Mr. Bradlaugh. Whereupon Jupiter bursts out with his "Bravo!" "Give him hard words, Timocles," says Jove; "that's your strong point; when you begin to reason you're as dumb as a fish." Plainly, Lucian's thelem was what would now be called "advanced." In another admirable piece the cynic Menippus, disgusted with the religious disputes of his time, resolves on a visit to the stars to discover which of the philosophers is right. By the aid of a pair of wings he reaches the moon, and thence observes how small look the passions and controversies of men. Being introduced to Jupiter on Olympus, he has the opportunity of observing how the prayers of men are received in heaven. They come up through holes in the floor, under covers, and they only become audible in heaven when the covers are removed. These prayers are various: one prays for rain, another for fair weather; one prays for a throne, another that his onions may grow; and so on. Jupiter is represented as being guided in his responses by the sacrificial offerings at his altars with which the petitions are severally accompanied. Jupiter expresses great dislike of philosophers and his intention some day to exterminate them. In this dialogue every point made by Tyndall and others during the "prayer-gauge" controversy is suggested.

There are many more things of the same sort in Lucian, all of absorbing interest,—things that if written now by Emerson or Dr. Holmes would be declared wonderful. But enough has been said to reveal the strange fact that the theology of to-day has somehow got round to the point at which it dreads the diffusion of attacks levelled against paganism. (For there is nothing in Lucian which alludes to Christianity except the one sentence already quoted.) But besides this there is another amazing fact. Although the Christian world has been too pious to admit Lucian into colleges, it has not been too moral to steal from him. For that matter his contemporary, Apuleius, stole from Lucian the witty story of "The Golden Ass," but since then the plagiarisms have been enormous. Professor Henry Morley, who has written and compiled many useful works on English literature, gave a lecture this week at the London Institution on the History of the Novel. He traces novel-writing to Apuleius, in evident ignorance that M. M. Courier and Letronne have shown sixty years ago that the famous story of the ass originated with Lucian. Then he proceeded to say that Defoe created the English novel. None can wish to detract in the least from the honest old dissenter, who suffered so much and gave the world that story of Robinson Crusoe which is at this moment revealing, by the crowds of delighted children it draws to Covent Garden Theatre, that it is one of the great books of the world. Nevertheless, it is probable that both Defoe and Swift, whose Voyage to Lilliput appeared about the same time as Crusoe, were both to some extent inspired by the translations of Lucian, which were just then appearing, Defoe giving a realistic tone to things which others treated fancifully. Lucian's Veræ Historiæ contains the whole scene of the robbers' cave in Gil Blas, and all the humorous exaggerations familiarized in the stories of Munchausen and Gulliver. Rabelais has equally borrowed from him. Lucian describes how he set sail from the columns of Hercules, was wrecked on an enchanted island, where the rivers run wine, and where he and his friends got drunk even by eating the fish. On setting sail again the ship was caught up by a whirlwind, and after being carried through the air seven days and nights was deposited in the moon by certain enormous birds called hippogriffs. Here they witness a battle between the inhabitants of the sun and moon. They sail to the earth by way of the zodiac. Reaching the sea again they are swallowed by a whale; they find its belly inhabited, but cause the death of the animal by kindling a fire. They next reach the Isle of the Blest, where they converse with Homer, who gives opinions of his own works such as Wolf and others have advanced. Finally they proceed to the infernal regions, where Lucian describes Ctesias and Homer undergoing punishment for the falsehoods they put forward as history. The humor of ending his own amazing True Histories with this scene of punishing the historians is characteristic.

I trust your readers will not fear that I have mistaken the Commercial for a sheet devoted to the record of ancient events. Just now when our politics is about as dismal as our weather—in which the Thames and the sky seem competing which can deluge us most—and the news from Turkey about as unsatisfactory as that from Louisiana, condonation will, I hope, be extended to the two excursions I have made into the regions where so many old treasures—Homeric and literary—are being unearthed. About the pleasantest prospect we have now is the coming of Dr. Schliemann. I learn on good authority that he will arrive in London early in February, and also that he will bring the Trojan articles he has discovered with him. I am told by one of his friends that his Greek treasures belong to the Greek government by the conditions of the firman under which he was allowed to work, but that the Trojan articles are his own. Dr. Schliemann is a man of about fifty. In his boyhood he vowed that if ever he could get a little money—he was quite poor—he would "dig up Troy." By severe work and economy he got enough to represent an income of about $2,500 a year—what he now has,—and straightway he went to fulfil his vow. Now he will come to England, bringing his dug-up Troy, and you may be sure that the reception he will meet here will be such as the Marquis of Salisbury, Sir H. Elliot & Co., when they return, may have reason to envy. The enthusiasm which will greet Schliemann (who, fortunately, speaks English) will not be chilled by the disagreeable fact that, while he has been achieving such magnificent results, men sent East by England have been suffering the most humiliating obstructions.

It has just come out that poor George Smith was defeated in all his latest efforts at exploration because the English Ambassador at Constantinople made no effort to secure him an adequate firman authorizing his investigations; and at this moment the friend of George Smith, who died heart-broken, Mr. Rassam, is in Constantinople vainly endeavoring to obtain through the same ruthless Ambassador the right to prosecute similar investigations. Sir Henry Elliot has long been the Sultan's main-stay, and it seems rather hard that his countrymen should reap all the disadvantages of his favor at the Porte, and none of the advantages. Mr. Wood, who has been making explorations at Ephesus, and recently found a pot of coins there, has returned, his labors having been discontinued for want of funds. But the spirit of excavation has been unsealed like a genie by Schliemann, and his visit to England may be made the occasion of a demonstration which will wake up the sleepy science and art department, who seem to think that the capstone was given to progress by Prince Albert, his Exhibition, and the South Kensington Museum. Such men as Professors Newton, Mahaffy, and Ferguson are not content to see Germans and Americans doing all this great work. There is a great deal of exploration waiting to be done in India, where England has full sway. General Cunningham has recently discovered there and sent home some beautiful topos. One of them represents persons worshipping a serpent, and each worshipper is holding his tongue between two fingers; which is an odd confirmation of a jocular remark once made by Mr. Ferguson, author of Tree and Serpent Worship. When asked why the serpent was worshipped, he replied: "Because he knows how to hold his tongue."—Cincinnati Commercial.

FRANÇOIS BULOZ.

PARIS, JAN. 26, 1877.

French literature has suffered a severe loss in the person of François Buloz. He never or hardly ever wrote a line, but he has been since 1830 the inspiration and soul of the famous Revue des Deux Mondes. He was of very humble origin, born in Savoy, and he had the hardy qualities of a mountaineer. He bought the Revue when it had only one hundred subscribers, and by his efforts and perseverance made it the most important organ of the French mind in the nineteenth century. I have known him intimately for more than twenty years, and can only remember now his remarkable and sterling qualities. When I brought him my first article I did not take the precaution to bring him any introduction, and I did well. He was absolutely impervious to recommendations, and he said to his credit he had some sympathy for unknown young men. I did not enter without emotion the little room in the Rue St. Benoît, which Philarrète Chasles once called the "cavern of Cacus" (Buloz had lost the use of one eye). The terrible editor received me very well, and inquired, "Have you time to take a walk in my garden?" The garden was a small plot of land, without any flowers, with only a few trees and shrubs, which lived as well as they could between three high walls, and could only receive the midday sun. Buloz asked me who I was, whether I intended to give myself wholly to literature, or to cultivate it only as a pastime. Why had I written an article? Did I intend to write more? Literature ought not to be a profession except for a man of genius. Every man should tie himself to a profession, and only write when he had something useful to say. "I know better than anybody the real men of letters,—vain, self-glorious, foolish creatures they are. I must allow them a little space in the Revue, but the chief place I will always give to the men who know things professionally, and who can be the instructors of this nation." I was not a man of letters, and when he found it out he became almost amiable. "You are a man of science," he said; "well, I have always looked for one who could instruct my public, who could write good French. You scientific men are generally out of the reach of humanity. You cannot be approached. I don't wish to popularize science,—I don't believe in popular science. I want real science, and I believe that if the public cannot understand its methods it ought to be made aware of its general results, of its philosophical teachings." That was exactly my programme, and we understood each other perfectly. I had no difficulty with my first article, nor with those which followed. I submitted meekly to the discipline of Buloz, and a better teacher of grammar I never found in my life, as well as a more intelligent exponent of the necessities of a review. "Look at me," he said to me; "as long as I don't understand you the public will not." And he was never satisfied till he completely mastered the meaning of my words. When I look now upon the hours which we spent together over proof-sheets, altering and correcting, I forget the annoyance which I sometimes felt, and I can only admire the conscience of the man, who was never satisfied till the work was as perfect as it could be.

When the American war began he allowed me to change my subject, though he was very fond of confining his writers to a special department; and when I left for America he asked me himself to give him a series of articles on the country I was going to visit. I had taken, and with some warmth, the part of the North; and the French Foreign Office was far from sympathetic to your cause during the war. Buloz received many a visit from high officials of the Foreign Office, and even during the Empire he was almost obliged to remain on good terms with them, as some of them were his contributors and he received from them information which was all the more valuable to the Revue because the press was fettered, and because the "Chronique Politique" of Forcade had become the most important expression of the French policy during the Crimean and Italian wars. I shall never forget that Buloz, though he had no personal light on the subject of American affairs, and had every temptation to please the Foreign Office, always stood by me, and would never give way to the representations of the men who prophesied the disruption of the American Union. He sometimes called me an enthusiast; he warned me against considerations which might have contributed to blind me; but he never refused me the means of expressing my convictions; he allowed me fair play. When I sent him my article on President Lincoln, just after his assassination, he cried, and sent it to the press, and said: "Not a word will be changed in that." He was, in his own way, a sentimental man; and his outbursts of sentiment were all the more touching as coming from a man who was so robust, so hard, so unflinching. The triumph of the American cause, I am almost ashamed to say it, was my definitive triumph with him. Everybody had warned him against my opinions, and, after all, I had happened to be in the right. From that time I may say that he allowed me the free use of the Revue. Of course, he always preserved nominally his dictatorial rights; practically, he allowed me to write on anything I pleased, and he even consulted me often on difficult points of policy.

There was one point, however, on which we never could agree, and I bitterly regret now not having shown more tenacity on this painful subject. I had spent a part of my youth in Germany, and knew the depth and seriousness of the German aspirations for unity. Buloz had espoused with much warmth the cause of Italian unity; he was a friend of Cavour, and did better service than any other Frenchman to the Italian cause. I tried at that time to show him that German unity was as much a European necessity as Italian unity. I gave him an article on the subject after a journey which I had made in Germany. He took it with reluctance, and it appeared under the name of M. de Mars, the editor of the Revue, as I could not at that time sign my name to the article, for reasons which it is useless to state here. This article was, I believe, very moderate, but gave great offence to our Foreign Office, and to the host of ministers whom we still kept at the German courts. Buloz this time thought that I was completely in error; my views were at complete variance with all the reports which came from Germany. I abandoned the German question forever, and even after Sadowa, when I made a journey to Austria and Bohemia, I did not feel tempted to touch it again in the Revue. And I was wrong, for a man ought always to do the contrary of what Fontenelle advised,—when he thinks he has the truth in his hand he ought always to open it. I am convinced now, as I was then, that the Germans might have accomplished their unity without inflicting such wounds on France as can never be cured; that France ought not to have stood in the way of the national movement in Germany; and that if she had shown to Germany half the sympathy which she showed to Italy, even without going to arms for her, she would have preserved her ancient territory, and Europe would not be what it is now, the nations would not be all in arms, and the two most civilized countries of the Continent would be friends instead of enemies.

Buloz was a true patriot; he loved the honor and glory of France. He had never been a friend of the Empire, but he tried to facilitate more than to hinder the action of the Empire when it could serve the real interests of the country. His position during the Empire was one of extreme difficulty; the Revue, which had not been very prosperous in the time of Louis Philippe, when its pages were filled with the works of men and women of genius, of Mignet, of Mérimée, of Guizot, of Madame Sand, of Victor Hugo, and others, had become very prosperous since the 2d of December. The liberals, who could have no papers of their own, were content to find allusions and regrets, which, under the pen of clever writers like Provost-Paradol and Forcade, had all the charms of the best literature combined with the concealed passion for liberty. In the silence of public opinion, the appearance of every number became an event; but the fate of the Revue hung upon the thread of the ministerial and imperial will. How many anxious days and years did Buloz pass! How he was obliged to watch every sentence, every word! It is enough to say of him that he lived during these terrible years. "What did you do during the Terror?" asked somebody of Sieyès. "I lived," Buloz lived also, but he did not live silent; he spoke, and he always stood by the old cause of liberalism and free institutions. Every temptation was offered him by the Empire; this obscure, self-made man never flinched,—he was that rare and admirable thing, a man of conscience. And so he became a power, and potentates and ambassadors, and kings and ministers had to take him into account.

The war of 1870 was his death-blow. He would not, he could not believe the fatal truth. He remained in Paris during the siege, and corrected his proof-sheets amid the sound of the distant guns. I saw him again after the Commune; he was inconsolable. His interest in public affairs was almost gone; he was an Orleanist, and in the most stringent times of the Empire had never refused the columns of the Revue to a prince of Orleans. He was also a great admirer of M. Thiers. He did not understand why M. Thiers and the Orleans did not work in harmony. He did not understand the visit of the Comte de Paris to Frohsdorf. He was instinctively hostile to the Legitimist party; he was a man of 1830, lost among a new generation.

As a scientific, historical, and literary periodical the Revue had preserved all its importance; its political rôle was finished. Forcade was gone; his clear and brilliant mind had been obscured by madness. Buloz was ill; his last days were embittered by those deep afflictions which prepare a man for death,—he had lost his eldest son; I will not even allude to other troubles, which were too great for him. When he saw one of the writers of the old days (for he had almost ceased to see the new contributors) he had a moment of satisfaction; but to his visitors it was a pitiful sight, this strong man completely unnerved, like an oak which has been uprooted and is lying on the ground with its broken branches and withered foliage.

Buloz has been accused, by a whole generation of littérateurs, of great avarice. He certainly has left a large fortune; but I can only say that after I had been a few years in the service of the Revue he doubled my salary without my asking for it, and he would not even receive my thanks. I would not mention this detail if it were not in order to do justice to a man who, with all his defects, deserves to be praised for his good and great qualities (and for qualities which have at all times been very rare), and especially for his extraordinary devotion to a great political and intellectual work. Of him it can be well said: "Exegit monumentum."—N. Y. Nation, Feb. 15.

THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

APPEAL OF THE COMMITTEE OF CITIZENS.

The committee on raising means for the pedestal and the reception and setting up of Bartholdi's statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World" have issued the following appeal to the people of the United States:—

MUNICIPAL HALL, No. 87 MADISON AVE.,
NEW YORK, Feb. 5, 1877.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES:—

It was proposed during the last year by a society, calling itself the "Union Franco-Américaine," of France to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of American Independence by erecting in the harbor of New York a colossal statue entitled "Liberty Enlightening the World." The society was inaugurated in Paris by a banquet, at which eloquent speeches were made by several of the most distinguished citizens of France, recalling the ancient alliance of the French and American peoples and the grand results which have made it so memorable in modern civilization. Mr. Edouard Laboulaye, the eminent writer, whose pen has been so often employed in the service of liberty and progress, was chosen President, and among the members enrolled were found the names of Oscar de Lafayette, the Marquis de Noailles, the Marquis de Rochambeau, Count de Tocqueville, Cornelius de Wilt, Henri Martin, Paul de Rémusat, and others whose ancestors participated in the momentous struggles of our Revolution, or who have since proved themselves the earnest admirers and steadfast friends of our country and her institutions.

In their first appeal to the French people these gentlemen said: "Our design is in remembrance of a glorious anniversary to raise an exceptional monument. We propose to erect in the unequalled harbor of New York, on an island belonging to the States of the Union, facing Long Island, where some of the earliest battles for independence were fought, a gigantic statue, whose frame on the horizon shall be the great cities of New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City. There, on the threshold of the continent so full of a new life, where vessels from all parts of the world are constantly passing, it will rise from the bosom of the waves and represent Liberty Enlightening the World."

It was a noble and beautiful conception, and the appeal on its behalf was so generously answered from all parts of France that the work was at once put into the hands of the eminent French sculptor, M. Bartholdi, whose design, after receiving the approval of many competent artists, is already in process of practical execution. Visitors to the late Centennial Exhibition will readily recall the enormous hand in bronze which is to form a part of the imposing work of art.

It only remains for the American people, in response to this generous movement, to provide for the reception, location, presentation, and inauguration of this statue, which will be more than one hundred feet in height, surmounting a pedestal of nearly equal height, and which will not only form an impressive ornament to the entrance of the commercial metropolis of the Union, but answer a useful purpose as a beacon or a signal station, and prove an enduring record of the early and lasting friendship of the two great republics of the nineteenth century.

The undersigned—a committee appointed at a meeting of citizens held at the Century Club on the 2d of January, 1877—have been charged with the duty of presenting the project to the concurrence and cooperation of their fellow-countrymen, and in pursuance of their task will circulate in all the great cities and towns of the United States a series of subscription papers, in order that all classes of citizens may be enabled to take part in this grand patriotic enterprise. Subscriptions to any amount will be received,—from ten cents to one hundred dollars, and over. Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, Exchanges, Tradesmen's and Mechanics' Associations, Clubs, and other regular organizations are particularly requested to interest themselves in the furtherance of our object.

The committee feel assured that the American people will be only too eager to recognize the friendliness of this munificent offer on the part of the French people, and to reciprocate the kindly and liberal sentiments in which it originated by a prompt acceptance of it and an active prosecution of the labors that may be needed to carry the purpose to a successful completion.

This is signed by William M. Evarts, Chairman; Edwin D. Morgan, John Jay, William Cullen Bryant, Parke Godwin, Samuel D. Babcock, William H. Wickham, John Taylor Johnston, Henry F. Spaulding, Theodore Roosevelt, Frederick R. Conder, James W. Pinchot, Treasurer; William H. Appleton, Clark Bell, Theodore Weston, John T. Denny, Anson Phelps Stokes, Samuel P. Avery, J. Seaver Page, Worthington Whittredge, Richard Butler, Secretary.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

LAMENT OF ARCADIAN PEASANTS FLYING BEFORE ALARIC'S GOTES, A.D. 395.

Thou hast conquered, Nazarene!
Our own gods are half forgot
(Save in some lone isle or grot)
Masters once of earth, I ween.

Strange 'tis to recall their time!
Out of tune the antique rhyme;
Sprites proud of land and sea,
Our Lords, haughty, fair, and free.

Why this should be I know not;
They were good to us enow;
Radiance sat on their brow;
What of better hath change brought?

Still the she-ass doth advance*
Ridden by the sober maiden;
And the child's brow yet is laden
With the grief of crosses and lance.

Ours were gods of feast and joyance,
These of sorrow and annoyance;
We have done full ill, I wis,
Bartering for unrest our bliss.

Over heaven, earth, and main
Like a pall Christ's shroud doth hang;
Death and nothingness their fang
Fix in our hearts sick with pain.

RODOLPH DE L'ESCALE.

NEW YORK, 37 West 33d Street.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 24.

Rev. J. McDowell, $3.87; J. Maddock, $1; Abraham Roth, $3.25; J. T. Brady, $3.20; Robert D. Estey, $3.20; A. N. Alcott, $3; J. B. Boyden, $3.20; Joseph E. Peck, $3.20; D. P. Wilcox, 80 cents; Geo. D. Haworth, $3.20; Mrs. S. B. Pierce, $1.40; S. M. Duree, $1.60; Alfred E. Fisher, $3.84; Mrs. E. Fowle, $3.20; Chas. W. Newton, $6.80; J. W. Castle, 10 cents; C. D. B. Mills, 15 cents; J. B. Thomas, 10 cents; Mrs. O. W. Bird, $3.20; Cash, 84 cents; E. E. Welch, $3.20; John Buntin, $3.20; W. H. Hamlen, $3.20; Rev. G. A. Thayer, $3.20; S. Hunt, $3.20; Mrs. E. S. Miller, 25 cents; Dr. J. C. Michener, $6.40; J. O. Bentley, $3.20; Mary E. York, $2; Thos. Curtis, $4.80; Verein Vorwärts, $3.20; Hugh Wyndman, $3.75; Jefferson Cary, $3.20; E. P. Wright, $3.20; E. W. Hooper, $3.20; Richard Mott, $3.20; Mrs. E. Judd, $3.20; A. H. Waite, $3.20; Mrs. F. W. Christensen, $3.20; Wm. Jones, $3.20; Henry Lantz, $1.10; J. H. Deering, $6.87; E. J. Scott, $6.40; R. P. Thomson, $2; A. Payne, $6.94; D. W. Blyen, $3.20; Jas. McKachale, $3.25; J. E. Wildman, $3; J. H. Clark, $3.25; D. W. Buckminster, $3; John W. Turner, $3; C. S. Hamilton, $5; Elmer Adams, $6.87; W. Frothingham, $6.40; J. D. Frost, $6.50; Aug. Saval, $12.80; B. M. Hall, 10 cents; Jas. Hull, $5; Mrs. C. B. Richmond, $4.40; E. Thurston, Jr., $4.45; A. W. Russell, $6.40; Eben Turk, $3.20; J. P. Titcomb, 20 cents; C. Bechtold, 60 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

*The flight into Egypt.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 1, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRET, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, . . . . . Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix. Boston: Published by the National Liberal League, 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. ABBOT on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. KILGORE on "Democracy"; by James Parton on "Cathedrals and Beer; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. Underwood on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. PAIGE on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. Y. KILGORE on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. MILLS on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. Lytle, President of the Ohio State branch of the "National Reform Association," used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle indorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ALL WHO are interested in the general adoption of the Metric System (and who that hates confusion and clumsiness in calculation is not interested in it?) will be glad to know that there is an "American Metric Bureau" at No. 13 Tremont Place, Boston, which publishes a monthly Metric Bulletin, full of information on this subject. This Bureau has at its office "metric scales, measures, books, charts, and apparatus, illustrating the best methods of teaching and introducing the system, which teachers and others interested are invited to call and examine. Correspondence and cooperation solicited." The Corresponding Secretary is Mr. Melvil Dewey, and those at a distance will find it worth their while to write to him.

MOODY AND SANKEY.

Not long since we attended with some friends one of the evening meetings at the Tabernacle. The building, which is said to seat six thousand, was completely filled. The faces about us were those of evidently respectable people, but none of them evinced the marks of culture or more than an average degree of intelligence. A young woman at our right, who very civilly offered the use of her little hymn-book, had a serious expression verging on solemnity, and seemed in a quiet way deeply touched by some of the proceedings, occasionally wiping her eyes. There was a noticeable absence, in our immediate neighborhood, of those keen, wide-awake countenances which one is sure to see at any miscellaneous gathering of a non-religious character. A certain staid decorousness, such as pervades most church congregations, was the most obvious characteristic of our neighbors; and it was difficult to avoid the conclusion that the audience was mainly composed of the habitual attendants of the churches. Few signs appeared that the classes supposed to stand in most need of "conversion" were largely represented. Be this as it may, there was little or no excitement of any sort. Everything that was said or sung seemed to be a matter of course, and to be received with undemonstrative acquiescence. So far as was evident on the surface, it was the opinion of everybody that the revival was a good thing, and that it was about time for somebody else to get "converted."

The proceedings on the platform went on with the regularity of clock-work. At a little after seven o'clock, the "praise-meeting" began. Mr. Ackers sat at the organ; Dr. Tourjée gave out the hymns to the choir with military promptness, permitting no pauses between them, and apparently resolved to "occupy the time" with psalmody till it could be filled with something better. The singing was good of its kind; but the cool and business-like tone of the manager in giving his directions threw an air of artificiality about the whole performance, and suggested a suspicion that the musicians had as little sentiment as a music-box. The same mechanism of manner and arrangement characterized the conduct of the meeting from beginning to end, destroyed all real solemnity, and rendered it impossible to imagine that genuine religious sensibility could have anything to do with services whose wire framework was so painfully visible. Mr. Moody's part in them formed no exception. He read the Scriptures just as he would have read from a newspaper, with nothing of that undertone of reverence which instantaneously reports itself to all who can hear it; and, on closing a prayer, he snapped open his eyes and immediately gave out a hymn as if the number he announced were only an additional syllable to the "Amen." It may seem a strange criticism to come from THE INDEX, but it is nevertheless true that what we least liked in Mr. Moody and his whole meeting was an utter absence of deep, inward, pervading religiousness. There was vastly more of this in Mr. Sankey's singing than in all the other services combined; in his hymn, "Sowing the Seed by the Daylight Fair," there was indeed a tender pathos, an awed, wistful outlook into the Infinite Mystery that holds our tiny lives in its ocean-like embrace, which made its own appeal to the really religious spirit. But this was fleeting; and the strains had scarcely died away when the bread-and-butter theology of the revival uttered once more its harsh and hoarse croak.

The subject of Mr. Moody's sermon was "God's Remedy for Sin." He read the story of the Brazen Serpent which saved the Israelites from the serpents' bites in the wilderness, and then read passages of the fourth gospel explaining this as a type or symbol of the "Savior" sent to rescue men from eternal death. The burden of the whole discourse was simply—believe and be saved, disbelieve and be damned! There was literally nothing else in the whole sermon but illustrations, imaginary conversations, stories, appeals, and exhortations, all directed to the one object of turning the sinner's eyes to the Brazen Serpent set up by God as the sole Savior from perdition,—nothing, in short, but the old, coarse, repulsive selfishness of Orthodoxy, unredeemed by a single ray of moral nobleness, with no message to man but the eternal whine—"Save your own Soul! Look out for Number One!" That was the essence of all that Moody said. And that is the essence of all that Orthodoxy has to say: "Save your own Soul! Look out for Number One!"

From such a brutally gross religion as this, which makes no appeal whatever to the refined religious sensibilities, the lofty moral aspirations, or the trained intellectual faculties of the nineteenth century, and which is now on a mad crusade to overwhelm the intelligence and civilization of the world with false, foolish, and demoralizing superstitions, every fine nature would recoil in mingled pity and disgust, were it not that feeling itself has become dulled by the constant repetition of the humiliating spectacle. In this elevation of Self-Interest to the rank of the supreme motive of human conduct, none the less abhorrent to every great spirit because commanded by the Christian Church and sanctioned by the authority of imagined revelations of God, there is nothing that tends to improve human society, but everything that tends to retard its advancement. Whatever incidental good may be done to a few individuals is vastly more than offset by the harm done to mankind as a whole. The "revival" is founded in superstition and ignorance, which are the worst foes of civilization; and what could reasonably be expected from the triumph of such influences but a general deterioration of the community? Fortunately the world is too old to be again thrust back into the period of slavish submission to the Church; and the spasms of revivalism are but the death-throes of a great decaying tyranny.

Nevertheless, there are grave lessons to be learned from such a phenomenon as the Tabernacle movement. Coarse and ignorant as Mr. Moody is, we pay sincere tribute to the intense earnestness of the man. Here lies his mighty power—for mighty power he has, or his career would have been impossible. Although the number of "converts" and even of "inquirers" is so disproportioned to the ponderous machinery employed to make them, there can be no question that Mr. Moody is exerting a tremendous influence on behalf of his debased type of religion. Faith in his own gospel burns and blazes in every word he utters; the fact that he believes in it with an intensity scarcely paralleled in this age of growing scepticism has given him control of men and money to an astonishing degree. Uncultivated as he is in speech and manner, devoid of all the graces which charm the fastidious and unable even to use the English language correctly, he yet wields a power over his intellectual superiors which makes them the servants of his will, and as it were compels the churches to sit at his feet. His earnestness is a fire which kindles fire in others; and this, not the Holy Ghost, is the real secret of his success. Seldom has the omnipotence of a fixed purpose and white-hot enthusiasm revealed itself more remarkably than in the manner in which Dwight L. Moody has conscripted men, money, and organizations into the service of his own will. His homely eloquence is nothing but directness and singleness of aim in propagating a faith which with him is no second-hand affair. When the new faith is half as much in earnest, it will be ten times as powerful in the world.

But it would not be true to attribute to Mr. Moody's individual earnestness alone all the great popular effect he has produced. The fact is that a vast majority of Christians hold languidly and mechanically the faith which he holds with a consuming conviction. What he wholly believes, they half-believe. Where they are lukewarm, he is fervid. Hence he only gives them back their own thought and feeling with added intensity; otherwise he would find no response at all. His very ignorance and coarseness of grain protect him from the causes which sap the faith of thousands; and he thus comes to rekindle a smouldering fire. Christianity is not dead—it is only dying; and its vitality is least exhausted in those who, like him, do not know too much. He therefore comes as a dispeller of doubt, a confirmer of half-faith, a stimulator of those who long to be stimulated; and his own earnestness would be ineffective, were it not for the previous preparedness of his audiences. These two causes combined fully account for his great influence over the church and his very feeble influence over the unchurched. The boasted conversions of "infidels" are very evidently blunders or worse; indeed, it may be safely asserted, judging from his own words, that he knows nothing of the mental state of those whom he is pleased to designate by that favorite epithet. When he shows some signs of comprehending why intelligent sceptics are what they are, his converted "infidels" will less closely resemble white blackbirds.

Two leading motives manifestly lie at the bottom of the present revival movement. Without certain very practical objects, it would have been impossible to obtain from practical men the great sums necessary to build costly special buildings in different cities and defray the heavy current expenses, or to secure from so many churches the united support and cooperation which are indispensable to the success of the movement. These objects are evidently, first, to swell the membership of the coöperating churches themselves, and, secondly, to make a great public demonstration of the power of Orthodoxy in the community, as a necessary means of increasing that power. These objects concern the material welfare of the churches as institutions; and he is a very credulous and innocent-minded person who fails to see in them the secret propelling power of the revival. Not a philanthropic anxiety about the salvation of unconverted sinners, but a sagacious and business-like regard for the interests of the Protestant Evangelical churches, explains the lavish outlay of money and exertion in the Moody campaign. As to the former of these two objects, the degree of success attained is very moderate, notwithstanding the evident disposition to overstate the number of "conversions" effected. But the other object—the imposing public demonstration of the strength of Orthodoxy—is far more successful. Thousands and thousands of selfish or weak-minded people are impressed by the revival with the belief that the road to popular favor is to be connected with Orthodox societies in some degree; and, though not "converted," they are thus influenced to support the churches from very questionable social and business motives. This sort of gain is not easily measured, but it is vast. The great "floating vote" in religious matters is affected by the noise and parade of the revival just as it is in political matters by torchlight processions and barbecues and mass meetings; and the shrewd leaders of Orthodoxy, as a mere means of party success, cheerfully pay the bills for the sake of these indirect returns for the money. It is this practical, cool-headed, calculating policy which, knowing how to use the fanaticism of the Moodys and Sankeys to its own advantage, sets them in the front as the ostensible leaders of the revival, lets them have their own way, and nevertheless makes them cat's-paws to draw its own chestnuts out of the fire. Verily, the children of the Church are wiser in their generation than the children of Truth!

THE REAL FOE.

While the sects, one and all, are disputing about doctrines, the unsectarians, foes of dogma, clearly perceive that the source of the evils they, all in their several degrees and kinds complain of, are not due to opinions but to the opinion that opinion can in any case be final; that there is any authority to fix opinion or to consecrate it when fixed; that there is good reason for accepting any answer to any question as conclusive; that there exists any tribunal, instituted or uninstituted, before which the mind can be summoned to give an account of itself; that any class of thinkers have the right to judge, proscribe, abuse any other class of thinkers on the ground either of conclusions arrived at by fair process of reasoning, or of principles held with honest intelligence. The real foe is dogmatism,—a foe equally detestable when leagued with attractive beliefs as with unattractive, though not as mischievous. But for dogmatism the attractive beliefs would do themselves tenfold more justice, and the unattractive beliefs would soon be refuted and repelled. The worn-out absurdities of the revival preacher would have been howled and laughed out of existence long ago had it not been for the prestige given to them by the ecclesiastical authorities. There is nothing in the doctrines themselves to protect them against an instantaneously ruinous assault from all the batteries of intelligence, from science, philosophy, history, psychology, practical ethics, even from the commonest "common sense"; they would go down like card-houses before cannon-balls, if it were not for the lines of defence that dogmatism has drawn round them; one line called scripture, another called tradition, a third called creed, a fourth called church, and all guarded by a fictitious being made awfully beautiful to the imagination, known as the Christ. Before such outworks bristling the hosts of superstition, bearing the mythological "sword of the spirit," and clad in "the whole armor of God," intelligence pauses and retires. Dogmatism insults knowledge, proscribes literature, defames goodness, caricatures wisdom, shields stupidity from criticism, foists second-hand blunders, as in the case of the wondrous Cook, on open-mouthed credulity, and makes the uttermost foolishness reputable, if it only bears the name "Christian." Dogmatism pushes the Bible into the public schools, and tries to crowd Christ into the Constitution. Dogmatism would erect Christianity to the dignity of a national faith; on the one hand pressing the claims of Romanism, on the other asserting the supreme prerogatives of Protestantism; in both cases proscribing Rationalism the enemy of them both. Dogmatism supports the feeble edifice of Unitarianism and Universalism, shoving them up against the ancient wall of the Church, and discouraging their desire to build a separate establishment for themselves, more suitable to the requirements of their faith.

That opinions are of no moment is not affirmed. Opinions are of immense moment. That people should hold right views and not wrong ones may be of vital consequence; the battle between reason and unreason on the field of opinion can hardly be waged too fiercely for our taste, provided it is waged rationally. Dogmatism forbids its being waged at all; substitutes obloquy for argument, and denunciation for proof. This process of despotism, characterized by arrogance on the part of the enthroned oppressor, by exasperation on the part of the victim of the injustice, has been worked industriously for a thousand years with results unspeakably disastrous to the human mind. The practice of it has become a second nature, so that even "liberals" continue it without suspecting its influence, transferring the throne of dominion from the Bible to the soul, as the Christians had transferred it from the Church to the Bible, substituting intuition for inspiration, knowledge of "principles" for assurance of faith, absolute certainty of "First Truths" for implicit confidence in the creed, they denounce each other as "base" with the same unctious as they themselves have been besmeared with. The writer, journalist or preacher, who takes a different view of a social doctrine or a political theory from that taken by themselves is rebuked in the old churchly manner by the unchurched who have not yet learned that reason is the one tribunal before which all opinions must be tried. Transcendentalism has sinned in this way and still sins. The vast service it rendered in its day, and for which the present generation cannot be too grateful, is gravely qualified by the absolute temper it retained on all matters of religious concern. The Soul proved to be no less despotic than the Church. The fault could be forgiven in the age when transcendentalism flourished—before the scientific method was inaugurated,—but now can be no longer winked at.

These comments may seem vague and aimless. To the writer's apprehension they are neither. They were provoked by the recent criticism of one radical journal by another. O. B. F.

Communications.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND FREE RELIGION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In your leader of Feb. 15th, you have put yourself on record as a believer in woman suffrage, and have sustained that position by unanswerable arguments. And, yet, like Ensign Stebbings, who was for the Maine law, but against its enforcement, you are for woman suffrage, but against allowing women to vote.

While I have the highest trust in your fidelity to your conscience, I must say I do not see the consistency of your position on this question. If woman suffrage is a right, as you admit and prove, how can you deny its exercise? I know you give as a reason that women would vote against the secularization of the State. I admit that I fear the same result. But that is their business. If women have the right to vote, I hold it our duty to secure them the opportunity, and then they must take the responsibility. We, as Free Religionists, hold that every one should have freedom of conscience. Now if any woman conscientiously holds what seems to you and me a dangerous doctrine—that sectarian dogmas should be ingrafted into the Constitution,—what right have we to say she shall not vote according to her sincere convictions? We are now suffering under ecclesiastical domination in the State, inflicted and upheld by the votes of men; so that we shall be no worse off, in that respect, if the votes of women be added. Still, it is mere assumption to declare in advance, that women will vote for the union of Church and State. But if they should do so, as men have already done, I am not sure that they would not be as readily converted to the true ground as the deluded ones of our own sex, who, at this late day, in enlightened Massachusetts, are compelling the observance of mongrel Sabbatarian laws which are neither Jewish, nor Christian, nor rational, nor constitutional. SETH HUNT.

[Our good friend has strangely misread the article he criticises. If he will read it over again, he will see that we do not "deny the exercise" of the right for which we argued. We only said we preferred to work for it in our own way,—to work steadily for the "inviolability of the individual" and the "political equality of all individuals," which cover and include woman suffrage, rather than to work for woman suffrage in any way which would destroy the principles that alone demand it. Every word we write for State Secularization is a direct word for woman suffrage; if women are individuals, we cannot plead the cause of equal individual rights without pleading her cause too. It is only in the name of equal individual rights that woman can justly claim the suffrage; and we are truer to her cause in steadfastly standing by the principle to which alone she can appeal, than we should be in forgetting this principle and remembering only an incidental consequence of it. To give her the barren privilege of throwing a bit of paper into a box without knowing why or wherefore, would be an infinitely less boon than to give her a comprehension of the sublime idea which lies in the act, and teach her to prize the act only for the sake of the idea.

There is no "inconsistency" in conceding woman suffrage to be "a right," and yet holding that no right, whether of man or woman, is absolute. Life, liberty, and property are all rights; but they may all be rightfully forfeited and withheld. Whoever would use his liberty to destroy the liberties of others, forfeits his right to it, and may be imprisoned or disfranchised justly; hence criminals and lunatics are so treated. If it is true that women would use the suffrage to Christianize the State and destroy its secularism, they have no right to the suffrage whatever; they would thereby sell themselves and others into slavery,—an unlawful act which no free State permits. The question with intelligent people is, Would women so vote? If they would, it is by no means "their business"; it is the business of everybody who prizes his or her own religious liberty and means to defend it. Were we certain that women would so vote, we should unhesitatingly vote against woman suffrage every time; but since we are not absolutely certain of it, we should run the risk and vote yes every time. Nevertheless, we consider the establishment of woman suffrage before the State is irrevocably secularized to be a most perilous experiment; and every true friend of the woman movement should hold it imperatively necessary to make the now unenlightened majority of women and men alike comprehend the principle of secular government,—without which there is no liberty for any rationalist.—ED.]

MORE ABOUT WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I must protest against being misunderstood. Let me epitomize my "reasons," published in THE INDEX of January 11.

1. The danger to a republican form of government rests in the ignorance of the voter.

2. The American republic to-day is weaker than it was twenty years ago, because of the large class of untrained voters thrown upon our shores from foreign monarchical countries; and its strength has recently been further tried by the enfranchisement of the negro race.

3. One of the most portentous problems now casting its baleful shadow upon the future of the republic is the old question of the union of Church and State. If Christianity is successful in its God-in-the-Constitution proposition, the republic will die, and the hand on the dial of human progress be set back hundreds of years.

4. If woman suffrage could be achieved at once, the hands of priestcraft, both Romish and Protestant, would be strengthened immeasurably, and freethought would be at the mercy of its most deadly foe,—dogmatic theology.

These were the propositions I intended to embody in my former article. Possibly I did not state them with sufficient clearness; but at any rate neither of my lady critics has seen fit to grapple with them and demonstrate that I was wrong in my position.

Now let me state once more that I am in favor of woman suffrage. I recognize its abstract justice, and concede without further argument all that its advocates claim from the stand-point of equal rights. In times past I have advocated it to the best of my ability, and it was not without a pang that I reviewed my earlier opinions, and determined that it was best for the republic, best for the race, and best for woman herself, to postpone for a season the undoubted right of full political equality with her brother and husband.

Justice is a plant of slow growth. Centuries of bloodshed intervened between the birth of the idea of human equality and the authoritative utterance of Thomas Jefferson that "all men are created free and equal." But those centuries had brought their hard-earned lessons to mankind, and the thunder of the "self-evident" truth called to arms a nation of manly men, to embody it in law.

Let the women agitate, for agitation educates; and when they are called (as they assuredly will be) to the full duty of citizenship, they will be self-owned and self-controlled,—not the tools of theology, not the helpers of superstition, but free women, fitted to be the mothers and teachers of a race of heroes and heroines.

It is a little remarkable, however, that the two women who defend the rights of "the sex" against my assault are both "women without superstition." In my heart of hearts I wish they and all like them—brave, free, thoughtful—had the full political rights now monopolized by our sex.

FRANK J. MEAD.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 11, 1877.

THE BLAND SILVER BILL AGAIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The communication of "R. C." in THE INDEX of Jan. 25th, evidences a healthful change since his criticism of the Bland Silver Bill to which I referred in a former note.

In the criticism referred to, in which "R. C." speaks of legislation on silver as "an attempt to fix by legislation the price of a merchantable commodity," and which he characterizes as "simply disgusting in the nineteenth century," the critic evidently had in view the doctrine so generally taught and believed, that the value of gold and silver is, and always must be, wholly independent of legislation. The writer undertook to point out in a brief note, with the aid of a few pointed quotations from Cernuschi, that this theory was erroneous and mischievous.

It has been shown that all legislation calculated to extend the use of gold tends to enhance the value of gold, and the same with silver. On the contrary, all legislation tending to limit the use of either metal tends to lessen the value of that metal. Of course, if different nations fix different ratios of value for the two metals in their coinage, that metal only will circulate as money in each country which is rated higher in that country, as compared with the other metal, than in other countries. A uniform ratio in a sufficient number of countries to secure a preponderance in the general balancing of trade is undoubtedly necessary to maintain general bi-metallic circulation. All that is meant, however, by international legislation is an understanding among different nations that they will adopt a common ratio between gold and silver units in the coinage of money.

It is true that Cernuschi is opposed to the Bland Bill, as he is to our silver fractional currency, or any legislation on the subject, until after a commission has been instituted to agree upon a common ratio for at least the leading nations of Europe and the United States.

While the writer would favor most heartily the appointment of such a commission, he can see no objection to restoring at once, in this country, as a simple act of justice, the status of silver existing when our debt was created and specie payment suspended. This will not prevent a concurrence in the recommendation of a commission hereafter, even though that should be to adopt the ratio of 15½, instead of 16 to 1.

Much of the mischief already done here and elsewhere has grown out of the doctrine that legislation has nothing to do with the value of metallic money; that gold is in some manner an unvarying standard, wholly independent of legislation, a dead-sea level the world over; and that all fluctuations in values are movements to and from this never-varying level. Substitute for this erroneous doctrine the practical truth that the value of gold or silver is determined on the one hand by quantity, and on the other by use or employment, including, of course, both its use in the arts and as money. To the extent, then, that the employment of either metal is lessened by legislation or otherwise, the quantity remaining the same, to that extent it is decreased in value (not by an even ratio, for the increase in value, for other reasons, varies by a ratio greater than that indicated by the decrease of quantity), and an increase in the employment of either metal tends to increase its value.

Up to 1872 gold and silver had circulated in Europe as money in the proportion of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold. England coined only gold, Germany only silver; other countries coined both gold and silver, and in the general balancing both metals, in the ratio given, were equally money. In the United States the ratio was 16 of silver to 1 of gold, and, consequently, silver did not circulate as money in the United States, except as subsidiary coins; but, nevertheless, until the recent disturbing legislation in this and other countries, the mass of the two metals constituted a common valuator, determining values and governing prices throughout the world. But now Germany comes in and demonetizes silver by legislation, and substitutes gold, thus lessening the employment of silver and enlarging that of gold. The United States declares against silver as money; the States comprising the Latin Union stop coining silver. What is the result? Less use for silver, and for silver less value; increased employment for gold, and for gold higher value. What is the effect of such a change in the value of money? While it is going on, utter derangement of all other values; money is rising in value; other things are falling. It is profitable to hold money and everything for which money can be demanded, and unprofitable to invest in anything else, or to carry on production of any kind, beyond immediate consumption. Capital avoids industries, labor is idle, the accumulation of wealth ceases. Monetary legislation, deranging values, is the chief cause of a train of consequences engendering idleness, want, and misery, wherever its influence is felt.

Disraeli, in 1873, explained this cause, and predicted the results that have followed.

But the effect produced on all debts, public and private, is most manifest, as it is most direct.

Since 1850 the public indebtedness of the world, according to R. Dudley Baxter, has increased by more than $19,000,000,000; almost no State is now exempt. The aggregate swells to over $20,000,000,000. These debts were based upon values resulting from the employment of both silver and gold as money; nay, they were, in fact, based upon values resulting not only from the employment of gold and silver as valuators, but besides, and in addition to these metals, large volumes of legal tender paper money. In the United States, Italy, Austria, and Russia, not to name less important States, more than $2,000,000,000 of legal tender paper money has been issued since 1850. This paper money displaced, in a large measure, the metallic money in circulation in these countries, and, to that extent, lessened the employment of gold and silver, and consequently their value. The coins of these countries being displaced by paper money, went to swell the volume of metallic money in other countries, and, as the volume increased in such countries, the tendency was to enhance prices generally.

The value of the legal tender paper money in the countries issuing it is governed by the same laws governing metallic money; namely, the quantity as compared with its employment; or, in other words, the transactions or exchanges it is used to effect.

Now it is proposed not only to reverse all this, and substitute coin money again for legal tender paper, but to actually limit the volume of metallic money to gold alone, and then require debts to be paid according to this standard! What could be more wicked? And yet "R. C.," like many others, seems to think anything else would be inflation, and a cheat! To this class of moralists creditors, like popes, can do no wrong. They may righteously intrigue to alter the value of money; to do that covertly which would be denounced by every honest man if attempted openly, and escape censure. Or creditor nation may, by legislation, lessen the value of silver and increase that of gold, and then come forward and demand payment in the dearer metal.

In view of its far-reaching effect, and the manner in which it has been carried on, how is it possible to resist the belief that the movement begun in Europe a few years ago, and so energetically aided by public creditors everywhere, to establish monometallism, was a deliberate purpose to enhance the value, through legislation, of money, and, consequently, of debts, at the expense, not only of other property, but of labor and life? Nothing but the immeasurable wickedness of such a purpose warrants a doubt on the question.

Finally, permit me to say to "R. C." that he need have no delicacy as to the elementary character of economical treatises he might suggest. No science is well learned unless its elements are mastered, and of no science is this so true as of Economics. They only who "know by intuition" can with safety discard the elements of so intricate a science.

A. J. WARNER.

MARIETTA, O., Feb. 9, 1877.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

Among the many abuses which society still suffers to exist, there is not one which is so widely extended, or which affects the interests of so many individuals, or calls so imperatively for reform, as that which results from the power of capital to absorb the products of labor. Capital, the product and natural ally of labor, has become its antagonist and its master; not in consequence of any attribute of an inherent character, but by a power which society has conferred. Though incapable of producing anything of itself, it is able through this power to secure a portion of the products of labor without rendering an equivalent. The natural function of capital is in the character of a tool or implement to aid in production, and that portion of the product which capital may justly claim is the amount to which its value has been impaired. When it exacts more than this, and in proportion as it does so, it is unjust to labor, because it is in competition with labor. The present system presents so many opportunities to despoil labor in the form of interest and profit, that any effort to secure justice to labor under it seems almost hopeless. That it is wrong to force a human being capable of higher feelings—to compete in the struggle for existence with an inanimate object, whether it be a coin or an engine, is, or should be, clear to the moral sense of every one.

The extent to which labor is subject to this condition under the system which now exists, and the evils which result from it, are not realized either by those who profit by, or those who suffer the wrong. Yet every dollar which is taken as interest, and every dollar which is acquired through profit over and above a just compensation for the cost of the labor in effecting the exchange, is obtained in direct violation of this principle. It is through the violation of this principle that labor is held in the tolls by a power which itself creates, a power which has to such an extent secured the mastery over it as to force it continually to forge the chains by which it is held in bondage. To free labor from the subjection in which it is now held, capital must be deprived of its power to compete with it. And all efforts to improve the condition of the laborer will be successful just in proportion as they result in limiting it. But no effort, I think, will be rewarded with more than partial and temporary success which does not accomplish its destruction. It is through institutions that capital has acquired this power to increase its volume at the expense of labor, and not, as is generally supposed, because those who possess it are endowed in any great degree with superior self-denial, intelligence, or energy; and it is through such institutions as will deprive capital of this same power that relief is to be sought.

To depend alone upon educating the moral sense to a degree which shall secure equitable dealing under a system which presents so many opportunities and so constant a temptation to a contrary course of conduct, will be to depend upon a broken reed. We do not underestimate the importance of cultivating the moral sense, or the value of moral influences in governing society. But we wish to protest against the policy of trusting to moral influences alone, when they are so manifestly inadequate to remedy so extensive and so intolerable an evil. I believe the power to remedy this evil exists in society as it is now organized, and it is our purpose to indicate the direction and to trace (in outline merely) the methods by which it is to be applied. Before the competent physician prescribes a remedy for a disease in the human system, he carefully examines the patient to ascertain the origin, character, and extent of the malady. Before we can reasonably hope to remove the evils which exist in our social system, we must ascertain, if possible, the cause or causes which have been instrumental in producing them.

What, then, are the causes which have mainly contributed to produce the present unequal and inequitable distribution of wealth? We stated at the outset that the power which capital possesses to compete with labor was the fundamental cause; but how capital has come to possess this power, and by what methods, and under what conditions it is able to use it to such advantage to itself at the expense of labor, may now be considered. The division of labor and the introduction of labor-saving processes and machinery have increased the productive power of the most advanced nations in many departments of industry almost beyond computation, and have greatly increased the comforts of the laborer as well as the wealth of the capitalist; but few, I think, realize the extent to which it has increased the power of capital or the dependence of labor. The division of labor has become so completely organized to secure economy in production, that few workmen can produce more than one, and many more only a portion of one article which they may require for consumption; that can only be done successfully by the use of expensive tools or machinery requiring a large amount of capital which he does not possess. Powerless to produce a single article which he can exchange for food, clothing, or shelter, he is forced to sell his labor to those who control these avenues to production. The condition in which he is placed, and his helplessness in fixing the terms of the contract are clearly and eloquently stated in the following quotation from Talks about Labor, by J. W. Larned:—

"Here, then, entangled helplessly in the meshes of the vast net-work of this modern organization of labor and exchange, stands the man who has hands and brains, intelligence, strength, and will to work, according to the demand of Nature, for what he needs, but who stands empty-handed, with no accumulation of things hitherto produced,—with no capital. What can he do? There are no wild creatures any more within his reach that he can hunt for food, or whose skins he can appropriate for clothing. There is not an animal that he can kill which is not the property of somebody, stamped with the right of possession by acquirement or accumulation. There is not a field in which he can dig a rood, or pluck an ear of corn, or gather a handful of fruit, that is not hedged with the same right. There is nothing within his reach to which he can apply his labor to make it productive for others, and so exchangeable,—not a scrap of raw material, whether metal, or wood, or stone, or even clay, that is not ticketed and labelled, 'Hands off!' The mark of appropriation, the sign and seal of capital, are on everything around him. Except with consent of the sovereigns of this universal domain, if he so much as attempts to apply his hands to any productive work, he is a trespasser and a thief. What can he do? Why, nothing, but helplessly cry out to those who hold this environment of capital around him: 'Pray let us work! Let me have something to work with and work upon,—land to cultivate, or wood to cut, or iron to forge, or clay to mould and burn! Give me a chance to produce something that is exchangeable for bread with those who have bread. Make your own terms with me,—the best terms that you can make with me and with my fellows who, like me, have only capacity to work and desire to work, and who are utterly without the means! Take every advantage that you will of the desperate pressure of our necessities; make us bid against one another, until we bid ourselves down to so small a share of the products of our labor, expended upon your materials, with your implements, that it will barely keep our bodies and our souls together. But let us work, and not starve.'"

We think it must be admitted that this picture presents very clearly and truly the condition of the laborer who is engaged in our mechanical and manufacturing industries. With the introduction of labor-saving machinery requiring large capital, and by the absorption of our unoccupied lands by speculators and railroad companies, it will soon become true in agricultural pursuits.

We often hear it said that the interests of labor and capital are identical. This is only true so far as the individual laborer is a capitalist or the individual capitalist a laborer. As soon as the laborer employs another's capital or the capitalist another's labor, their interests become conflicting. When capitalists and laborers become separated into distinct classes, the antagonism is complete and a constant warfare results, with such advantages on the side of the capitalist that the laborer has little more power to secure justice than he would have, were he a piece of unconscious mechanism. The machine must be oiled and repaired to be serviceable; the man must be clothed and fed to be serviceable; but the least amount of either consistent with securing efficient service is all that capital need bestow under the existing system. I do not wish to be understood that capitalists as a class use the power they possess to this extent. That they often continue to do business without profit, sometimes at a loss, to furnish those that would be otherwise without employment the means of subsistence, we all know. I only desire to show that the existing system possesses this power in many branches of industry, and is developing it to a frightful extent in all; that, as this power is the logical result of the system, and its use is recognized as just by society, a forbearance of its use will be regarded as an act of charity and not as resulting from any feeling of obligation. Humanity requires and justice demands the abolition of the conditions which render the exercise of this power dependent upon the will of those who hold it.

Slavery may be rendered more tolerable, and no doubt has been, by kindness and forbearance; but what was intolerable was that any one should be permitted to hold slaves at all. Now, although there is a great difference in degree between chattel-slavery and that condition of servitude unto which capital forces labor, it must be admitted, I think, that any system which forces a man to surrender a portion of the products of his labor without rendering an equivalent, partakes very considerably of the condition of slavery.

D. J. K.

WAR OF "CAPITAL" AND "LABOR."

At the meeting called by Mr. W. G. H. Smart, to discuss a plan for obtaining State aid towards establishing a coöperative industrial colony, some forty people were present. It resulted in adopting a series of "resolutions"—we live in an age of whereases and resolveds—and appointing a committee of arrangements. Rev. Minot J. Savage, Mr. Charles Willey Elliot, and Mr. Frothingham (who, by the way, were not present) are on that committee. If the success of a meeting is judged by the amount of speech-making and resolutions, then I must say that the meeting at Codman Hall was a decided success. The usual classification of society into two antagonistic elements, those of capital and labor, did not seem to suffice, for one of the orators, Bishop Ferrette, found it necessary to divide that troublesome unit into no less than ten classes,—one-tenth, the cheating class; two more tenths constituting the cheated class; and the other seven-tenths composing the would-be, going-to, having-been cheated-cheating classes. Although clearness of speech was not the main vice of the several speakers, the object for which the untiring, well-meaning Mr. Smart called the meeting is a very laudable one, and deserves the hearty support of every true reformer.

The leading gentlemen of that scheme, however, may please bear in mind that they can only count on the support of true liberals by dealing with facts alone,—not by laying down theories, as yet subject to discussion, as established facts. That very many people are out of employment; that too many families are starving; that "business" is depressed; that confidence is everywhere lacking,—all that, gentlemen labor-reformers, is a fact, an undeniable, uncontrovertible fact. If you will attempt to undo these facts by your agitations, then, gentlemen, you may rest assured that the coöperation of philanthropists will not stay away. When you, however, lay down undemonstrated theories as truths, from which you draw apparently logical conclusions, then, gentlemen, your cause is hopeless. When you assert, for instance, that, as capital governs labor, the laborer is a slave, and therefore he must be freed, I will admit that, if the laborer is a slave, he must be freed. But is he a slave? That is the question. The mere assertion, of course, is not sufficient to establish it as a fact; neither has it even the support of statistics. We must, therefore, apply to it the test of a very celebrated critic, who, it is true, is very severe, but also very impartial. This judge is Mr. Reason.

Let us suppose the two parts of society, as you divide them into capitalists and laborers, to have declared war to each other. What follows? Although the capital class have the gold, silver, iron, grains, wheat, bricks, in short everything necessary to maintain human life, with them, yet they cannot eat any gold or silver; not even grain or wheat. When they are naked and they feel cold, they cannot use the wool in their possession and simply glue it on to their sinful skins. No, the grain and wheat must be ground, before it is eatable; the wool must be worked into a garment, before it can protect the rich from the severe cold. In short, he must have laborers. You can easily see that, if "capital" and "labor" are divided and split, they cannot exist; both must perish! Who, then, is going to assert now that labor is more dependent on capital than the latter is on the former?

But I hear you objecting. You say the capitalist, by possessing the capital, can work out his capital into the necessary shape himself. Allow me to assume, gentlemen, that a day has only twenty-four hours, and that even such a monster as a capitalist has only two hands. These simple things are very often forgotten by the laborers' "cannibals." The capitalist cannot do everything at once; he cannot bake bread, saw wood, study labor-reform, and grant money to coöperative colonization societies, all at once. And suppose, even, that a capitalist can get along without the aid of "laborers," it is only by working himself. He sustains himself mainly, then, not by his capital, but by working his capital! Consequently true capital is labor; or, to put it in a more expressive way, capital and labor are one and the same thing. What you call capital, against which you wage such a raging war, is simply a surplus of antecedent labor. We often see rich men getting poor, while consuming their surplus without laboring; while we also see poor men getting rich, without antecedent capital, merely by their labor. Nothing but labor is capital. Any artificial distinction between capital and labor is a crime against logic and humanity. Against humanity, because the confusion arising from this doctrine leads many unthinking "laborers" (of whom there is, I am sorry to say, a multitude) to suppose that the only remedy to abolish certain evils they suffer is to abolish capital; which, in other words, means to make humanity a universal unproducing idler.

IVAN PANIN.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN GEORGIA.

MR. EDITOR:—

As your paper is devoted to religious liberty, and to the liberty of the mind, it may not be amiss to let you know how we stand in Georgia, an old slave State, on the subject of mental liberty, so far as the law goes. I will admit we have a private ignoring of the liberty of the mind, which exists chiefly among religionists.

To illustrate the subject, I send you a decision of our Supreme Court in a case where it was sought to remove an individual from the guardianship of minor children, simply because he was an "infidel." The opinion of the Court was delivered by Judge McCay, as follows:—

"It is a little extraordinary that the spirit of intolerance should need such precise restraints to keep it within bounds. It has for years been the settled law of this State that men shall not be molested for their religious opinions. The Constitution of 1861 and 1865 each added: 'Nor prohibited from holding any public office or trust on account of his religious opinions' (Constitution, 1865, Article 1, Section 5). By a play upon the word 'religious,' some Orthodox people did not admit that this protected one who had opinions which they did not think were 'religious.' This very proceeding calls Mr. Bell an 'infidel,' of the sect of Universalists, with intent, we suppose, to put him out of the protection of the Constitution, as one whose opinions could not be classed as religious. But, without doubt, even the Constitution of 1861 and 1865 mean, by this, opinion upon matters relating to the relation between man and his Maker. But our present Constitution gives broader language. After using the language of the Constitution of 1861 and 1865, Article 1, Section 5, it adds another clause. Section 12, Article 1, is in these words: 'No person shall be molested for his opinions, or be subject to any civil or political incapacity, or acquire any civil or political advantage in consequence of such opinions.' This cuts at the root of the whole matter,—leaves not a single link of the old chain by which, for so many centuries, men have tried to bind in fetters the human mind.

"In Georgia, a man may think as he pleases upon any subject, religious, philosophical, or political, and is not, for that, under any civil or political disability.

"The office of guardian is a public trust, and these clauses declare no man incapacitated for that trust by reason of his opinions.

"If men act badly, lead lives rendering them unfit to have the rearing of children, we will not say that the Courts may not interfere. But over men's opinions, by the laws of Georgia, we have no jurisdiction, and we think this is a wise provision." (Georgia Reports, Supreme Court, vol. 41, p. 183.)

Yours truly,

A. A. B.

THE NEW "DISCOVERY."

OTTAWA, Canada, Feb. 12, 1877.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—I have been reading the articles in THE INDEX on "Universology," by its "discoverer," Stephen Pearl Andrews. Although much interested in every attempt to unify the sciences into a philosophy for human guidance and improvement, I have been totally unable to make anything out of "Universology," except a mass of more or less incoherent words without meaning (except perhaps in the domain of grammar and derivation of words) or application to human affairs. The whole system might be summed up as a fac-simile of St. Patrick's proof of the Trinity from the three-leaved clover, everything in the universe being divided into systems of threes—threes within threes, in endless division and confusion.

I should not have thought it likely that any one else besides the discoverer could possibly imagine any outcome of usefulness from such a system, till I read the article of I. Storer Cobb in THE INDEX of Feb. 1.

I think it is Niebuhr who remarks that, when he found his views adopted by another human being, they acquired an almost infinite importance in his eyes. When, therefore, I found Mr. Cobb expressing in intelligible language so warm an eulogy on what appeared to me an unintelligible system, I felt called upon to re-read the articles in THE INDEX; but I must say the result was no better than before. The whole thing seems to me a series of fanciful analogies, vague and misleading, as analogies generally are, evolved from the inner consciousness of the author without the least congruity with the facts of science.

Mr. Cobb, in his enthusiasm for the new philosophy, makes some statements with regard to the writings of Herbert Spencer which I think are not warranted. He says: "However lucid may be regarded his (Spencer's) views upon the subject, we can find nothing but reasons for what is. Unsatisfactory as may be to him the condition of things as he finds them, he does not give the slightest idea of what change or improvement can be effected, or of the method by which any advancement can be made." Now one can only infer from this that Mr. Cobb's acquaintance with Spencer's works is very incomplete. No author has more diligently and successfully applied his principles to the improvement of human affairs. In Social Statics, he has applied the law of equal liberty for the first time to that department of morality which consists of man's relations to his fellow-man. On education—a subject which has more intimate bearings on human progress than any other,—his work will stand as a model for all time. In his other works he has applied the principles deduced from evolution to such important subjects as criminal discipline, pauperism, representative government, currency and banking, the proper sphere of government, and many others. It would be safe to say that on these subjects he has produced a greater effect on the minds of his contemporaries than any other writer past or present. It is no doubt the best test that can be applied to any system of principles, that their application will lead to the increase of human happiness and diminution of human misery. Mr. Cobb is quite right in saying that "all acquisitions of knowledge should be made conducive to the amelioration of the condition of suffering humanity"; but I am not aware that the "discoverer" of "Universology" has made any attempt to grapple with any of those difficult problems which beset our present social position, such as pauperism, claims of labor and capital, criminal management, legislation and government, and the like.

J. G. WHITE.

[In publishing the articles on "Universology" in THE INDEX, the rights of free criticism are of course taken for granted; nor do we imagine that either Mr. Andrews or Mr. Cobb will be otherwise than pleased at the above proof of the interest taken in their writings. For our own part, we undertake no advocacy of "Universology," leaving that to those who know more about it; but we judge it only right to say that we admire genius wherever we see it,—that, without surrendering a different philosophy of our own which has never been reduced to exact statement, we find no little speculative genius in Mr. Andrews' system,—and that we cannot quite acknowledge the propriety of applying merely practical tests to abstract thought. The one test of a philosophical system is the question—is it true? On this point we suspend our judgment respecting "Universology."—Ed.]

MR. WEISS ON THE REVIVAL.

Mr. John Weiss said substantially, in a discourse on "The Theory of Revivals," delivered in Parker Memorial Hall, Sunday, February 11:—

"A comparison has lately been made between the intellect of Boston and Edinburgh to the disparagement of the former. Edinburgh, it is said, not only welcomed the Evangelists, but sat at their feet. Will 'haughty, intellectual' Boston do the same? Up to this time, it is safe to say that her intellect has not been humbled,—perhaps because it has not yet been addressed. The old prayers revamped have notified the Lord to get ready, and churches deeply in debt have run in debt to build the Tabernacle. But the intelligence of Boston is not troubled about the matter; its culture will not succumb to the slop-columns of religious newspapers, nor the Holy Ghost be moved by these theatre tears."

Mr. Weiss quoted the saying, "An honest God is the noblest work of man," and proceeded to show that the Evangelists' God falls far below this standard. An infinite power that spoils its children in advance, even in the mother's womb, and then lets out salvation in so stingy a way, millions having never heard of it, were points which were forcibly presented. "Patriots," said the speaker, "saved their country, but could not save themselves. Did God in a fit of economy make one perfect soul, and give him as a pattern to other souls, with pains and penalties? The Evangelists' God makes men sinful and then blackmails them."

The light estimation of morality in the creed of the Evangelists was also spoken of; all moral pledges are superfluous, are moral snares, say they; "but," said Mr. Weiss, "a pledge, like an oath, belongs to 'personal religion.'" He closed his discourse by saying that all believe that a revival is needed; but the needed one cannot be drawn from a creed which has harbored so many evils. No Medea, even in Boston, can 'Cook' it over in a caldron and produce a new statement. A true revival would be begun by referring to Nature. God in man is a mustard-seed, and the plant must not be forced. A soul cannot be grown in a tabernacle in five minutes. Give it more time. The placid heart of that Christ so profusely adored at revivals said: "Thou canst not tell whence it cometh, or whither it goeth." That is the way with the Holy Spirit.

W. H. H.

A NOTE FROM MRS. DALL.

141 WARREN AVE., Boston, Feb. 23, 1877.

MR. EDITOR:—

I saw in your issue of yesterday a note from Miss Merriam, in which she said that she had mentioned my proposition of a mending or a baking-shop to one of the overworked women of the middle class, and been asked in return: "Where should we get the money to pay for this out-door work?"

The proposition would not be worth making, if it did not cost less than to do the work at home.

One fire will cook eight dinners as well as one; the fuel, therefore, would cost only one-eighth as much as for one. Something must be added to this, for the expenses of the baker and use of the stove. At all events the cost could be reduced one-half.

Mending-shops ought, if honestly managed, to more than save their cost, by deferring the purchase of new garments,—and so with other things.

Yours very truly,

CAROLINE H. DALL.

A GENIAL professor in one of the Scotch universities has a bright boy of four years, whose only experience in church-going was where the service was in Congregational form. A few Sabbaths since, a relative was to preach in the Episcopal Church, and the professor permitted the child to accompany him thither. All went on decorously until the minister, in his white robes, presented himself, when the little fellow, with a tug at his sleeve, very nearly upset the professor's gravity by wonderingly exclaiming: "Papa, does Uncle Joseph sleep here?"

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 "	8 " "
" 52 "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEPHENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3 25 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Bowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keahub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 80 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.
WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.	1.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.	1.25
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	2.50
The Expansion of Heaven.	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.	1.50
SCHÖLLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	4.50
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.25
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.	.40
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.	.25
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.	.25
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.	1.25
First Principles.	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. A Selection of his best Papers.	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	5.50
Philosophy of Style.	2.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.	2.50
Sociology.	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	2.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.	.25
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorised translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	7.50
The Glass-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 8 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Pendennis.
The Virginians.
Emmond, and Lovell the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	2.00
The Maine Woods.	2.00
Cape Cod.	2.00
Letters.	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	1.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Manhood.	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	4.00
TYNDALL (JOHN.) Faraday as a Discoverer.	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.	2.50
Light and Electricity.	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.	2.00
On Sound.	1.50
Radiant Heat.	1.50
Chains of Water.	1.50
Lectures on Light.	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.	.50
TYTLES (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I, and V, each.	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.	1.50
Scatterings.	1.50
Back-Log Studies.	1.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	4.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.	1.50
Essays and Reviews.	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.	1.50
Success and its Conditions.	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.	1.50
Real Folks.	2.00
The Other Girls.	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.50
Child Life.	3.50

ADDRESS:

T H E I N D E X ,

231 Washington St., Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MADAME FOY'S CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year, And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY
FOY & HARMON,
New Haven, Conn.

FOUR COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876,

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER,

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	40
FIFTY.....	75
ONE HUNDRED.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED.....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED.....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED.....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND.....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought. EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1875 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus." Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."

Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—a New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.

Jan. 28—Wm. R. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Buling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed."

Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.

Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."

"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.—

Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."

Feb. 25—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing." March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."

March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."

Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 461 Washington Street.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL for both sexes. Address EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 35 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Review serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, æsthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

THE LABOR QUESTION—

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fluke, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lysander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orvis, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,

Lock Box 569, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1877.

WHOLE No. 876.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

MR. MOODY thinks that New England Christians "lack tact and enthusiasm in the inquiry room." They must all be made to "bow their intellectual heads."

REV. DR. BARTOL, known and loved by "all good spirits," preached his fortieth anniversary sermon last Sunday at West Church, in this city. A noble and beautiful life has been his, filled with brave fidelity to truth and his fellow-men. May its beauty shine upon us all for many a long year yet!

IT IS NOTICEABLE that a vigorous attempt is made to defend the Moody revival on the ground that it benefits men morally. Without denying that a few people may be helped morally by the overdone religious emotionalism of the revival, we submit that a movement which teaches that morals go for nothing with God, unless backed up by "faith in Christ," can on the whole only do harm to the cause of morality. In fact, the good moral influence attributed to the revival reminds us of the man who, on hearing that "the good men do is oft interred with their bones," dryly remarked that this interment can generally take place without crowding the bones!

THESE ADDITIONAL lists of signatures to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition have been received since our last acknowledgment: from Mr. Frederic Firth, Union Township, Ind., 22 names; from Mr. H. B. McNair, Dansville, N. Y., 1; from Mr. J. E. Sutton, Olathe, Kan., 58; from Mr. Samuel Lydlard, Long Lake, Minn., 64; from Mr. M. H. Conaway, Archer, O., 87; from Mr. S. L. Smith, West Winfield, N. Y., 81; from Mr. B. F. Underwood, after a lecture at Youngstown, O., 89—after a lecture at Canton, O., 82—after a lecture at Salem, O., 71; from the Banner of Light, Boston, 36; from Mr. H. L. Green, Salamanca, N. Y., 142; from Mr. B. A. Ballou, Providence, R. I., 124. Total number of signatures thus far received, 2113.

PRESIDENT HAYES has been inaugurated. The Sabbatarianism of his advisers has made his entrance upon his high office ridiculous, by compelling him to take the oath of office on Saturday night, clandestinely and in a corner. An utter lack of dignity characterized the whole performance. Moreover, the oath was invalid, for President Grant was still in office, and no other man could be sworn in without usurpation. From 7.20 P.M. on Saturday to 12 M. on Sunday, there were two Presidents, or else the oath was worthless. This is the way in which Christian Sabbatarianism meddles with the government only to render it absurd. But such absurdity is very mischievous, for it establishes precedents against the secularity of the State. They are multiplying with ominous rapidity and for a very bad purpose. The form of oath prescribed and required by the Constitution was discarded, and another one was administered to the President-elect by the Chief Justice. Why? Because the Constitutional oath contains no recognition of God, which the illegal substitute did. We shall have something to say on this point hereafter; now we only note a fact which will set thoughtful men to thinking.

TO THOSE who are engaged in collecting signatures to the National Liberal League petition for the Religious Freedom Amendment, we would say that there is no intention to present the petition in Congress until the fit time arrives. The object is to collect without delay the largest possible number of signatures in favor of a thoroughly secular Amendment, in order that the officers of the National Liberal League may be able to present this petition promptly, whenever the Blaine school amendment shall come up again for action in Congress. Nobody who perceives the present drift of events—the inevitable effect of the Pope's new Encyclical against the public schools in stimulating the Evangelical party to revive that measure at their own time, and the great danger of passing an Amendment which shall in some way recognize the Bible or so-called "unsectarian Christianity" in the Constitution—can be blind to the necessity of having a strong protest against thus destroying the secularity of the Constitution all ready to present. Roll up the names, then, by thousands and tens of thousands. Let others sleep if they will, but let all who are in earnest for the protection of religious liberty be vigilant, industrious, and unselfish.

THAT THE Russo-Turkish war, if it indeed breaks out, is to be a religious conflict of the most desperate character, is foreshadowed in such utterances as the following, translated from the Vakıf, a leading Turkish paper of Constantinople: "When Europe will not look at us, then we shall lay aside all European customs which we have lately adopted, and shall enter on our old way. From the boy of thirteen years old to the old man of seventy-five, every one of us will be armed, and we shall defend by the aid of God, and by the daring of the old days, the country we have held for five hundred years. And if the issue shall come to this, as Islamism is not limited only to Turkey, then we will blend all the different Moslem races into one. The Moslems of India, of Central Asia, of the Caucasus, of Africa, and of Algiers will come forward, and we shall again take the measures we adopted once for the conquest of Jerusalem. We shall send proclamations everywhere, and declare a general war against the whole world. This is a very easy matter for His Majesty the Sultan to do. From the preparations we have made against a country like Servia, one can easily judge what we can do in circumstances such as we have contemplated. . . . Then if it will not be possible to subjugate 120,000,000 of Indians with 90,000 soldiers, 1,000,000 will be insufficient. If the English government takes these points into consideration, and if Prince Gortschakoff brings before his eyes this result, both will doubtless desist from pushing into war the entire world. If, which God forbid, things reach this point, and if the Moslems rise in order to defend their sacred religion, and if the treasure accumulated every year at Mecca is used for the protection of the Mohammedan faith, then the scenes of the ancient European wars, where the Moslems were both victorious and destructive, will be repeated, and will destroy the progress and the civilization of an entire country."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Frederington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. PROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. W. M. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT D. A. OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANET P. TITCOMB,.....143 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. S. WALLIS,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Edinboro, Iowa.
 HERMAN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER,.....Quitman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"Difference from me is Measure of Absurdity":

A PLEA FOR BREADTH IN RELIGIOUS CULTURE.

A DISCOURSE BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF PROVIDENCE, R. I., FEB. 18, 1877.

BY WILLIAM C. GANNETT.

To be free in thought is not to be a sect of one, an Indian on the war-path hunting for the scalps of superstitions. It is to have one's own truth so central that in virtue of that truth you are citizen of many faiths,—able therefore to tell the good as well as the ill in them. 1877 sees other denials of Freedom and Fellowship in Religion than those which the common churches make. Said a friend the other day, "How true it is that it is better to be in the wrong with humanity and breadth than in the right without humanity and breadth." The Liberal and Radical side furnishes denials also in bigotry against the bigots; in scornful denunciations of the superstition; in a cruel irreverence for others' reverence; in a shallow gauging of others' faiths by the surface of doctrine instead of by the deeper meanings, the moral intents and contents to those who hold the faiths; in blind mismeasurements of religious forces as expressions of human nature and factors of social progress; and sometimes in a general contempt for anything and everything that chooses to call itself religious faith or feeling. This is not "Freedom in Religion,"—it is the very clanking of the chains of prejudice. It is not truth-seeking or truth-seeing or truth-speaking or truth-spreading, but careless or ignorant exaggeration. It is an imitation of old Orthodoxy, not in its better but its worst features. There is a cant of irreligion, a superstition of irreverence, a bigotry of creedlessness, a sectarianism of the unchurched; of course this is neither religious freedom nor religious fellowship,—much less is it both of them.

MR. MOODY: CON AND PRO.

Why do I say all this to-day? Because Mr. Moody is in Boston, as you do not need me to tell you. To one who lives there his presence is beyond all question. The boy at the street-corner offers you his picture, the horse-car placards tell you as they pass, the papers report his sermons, the preachers echo them to praise or criticize on Sunday; and when you meet your friend the proper question is, Have you been to hear him yet? As probably you both have been, the next question is, Well, what do you think of him? And if you and the friend happen to be of the class that is so often referred to in the Tabernacle as the "Infidels of Boston," and you express a somewhat favorable opinion of him who calls you so—of him and of his work,—my experience is that you may look for little sympathy from that friend.

"Why, Mr. Moody's God is surely the God who creates sinners ready-made for doom?" he says. You have to half-assent; for that is the logic of the matter, although you have heard Mr. Moody gloriously ignore that logic in behalf of a much more rational and lovable Creator. "And is not Mr. Moody's Man the ruined creature of the Fall?" You assent, although you know the ruin leaves you free in Mr. Moody's common-sense eyes to be as good as ever you choose to be. "And Mr. Moody's Bible—is it not the literal Word of God?" No half-assent to that is possible, for you have heard him try to prove it is,—that from cover to cover, Old Testament and New, Noah's ark, Lot's wife, Jonah's whale, and all (he mentions them by name as instances), it is the very Word of God. "And is not Mr. Moody's chief emphasis 'Believe in Jesus and you are saved'?" True again, although his believing in is a practical matter by whose side simple believing is a very little thing. Yes, it cannot be denied that for careful thinking and accurate statement the Tabernacle in Boston is a good place not to go to!

And yet I urge that a Radical's religious culture ought to be broad enough to recognize its moral and religious value. I plead for a culture broad enough to be able to do that. To condemn the movement purely for its doctrinal standard—what is this but to adopt the test of doctrine above morals,—the very test we have so long blamed the Evangelical for using? Or to have no word for that doctrine but a word of supercilious scorn—what is this but to adopt the bigot's principle, "Difference from me is measure of absurdity"? Radical bigot or Orthodox bigot, does it matter which you are? Or to decide off-hand that such a movement can do no good—what is this but to decide a priori a question of fact about A, B, C, and D, whom you and I don't know? The ministers who call the two Evangelists from city to city—they know A and B and C, and have a moral end in view with reference to them, and these ministers are not utter fools. Or once more, to have no word of welcome for the century's gain as attested by this very Tabernacle-spectacle is ungratefully to ignore historic fact. Mr. Moody's sermon last Friday night was on the "Love of God." "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God" was the title of Jonathan Edwards' most famous sermon in the "Great Awakening" of 1741-2, the greatest revival that has ever swept through the New England churches. Doubtless Mr. Moody has his thought too about the "lost," and will utter it; it is, of course, implied throughout his whole appeal; and certainly Jonathan Edwards had his thought about the love of God. But one of the most noteworthy things about the present revival is this: in place of the tremendous imagery brought to bear against the sinner a hundred and thirty, yes, or only fifty years ago, we have to-day the appeal of kindly anecdotes and sympathies to draw him to the Inquiry Rooms. The implications are the same, but the actual tone and emphasis are most different. Then the Revivalist's instrument was a whip; now it is a magnet. Philanthropy has taught Theology to grow humane.

THE PHENOMENON.

I think the way to look at Moody and his work is somewhat in this wise: Here is a great religious phenomenon. We study the phases of religion in history. We watch in the lands of the present the Indian with his totems, the Buddhist at his shrine, the Mohammedan on his praying-carpet in the desert, the Roman Catholic before his ribboned and jewelled Virgin, the Presbyterian with his Sunday face,—it is family history; they are all our ancestors or cousins. But here is something wondrous in religion happening in our day and in our midst,—we need not travel far in time or in space to watch it. Two men have been going through the capitals of the highest English-speaking civilization. Wherever they come, the crowd gathers before their lips, and light hearts grow heavy and then light again with a new kind of joy, and many a selfish life grows earnest for the time, at least, and many a drunkard gives up drinking and struggles as he never struggled yet before he falls again. In Boston twice or thrice a day, four and five and six thousand people fill a vast building to hear them. What go they out to see? A man big-bodied, short-necked, heavy-faced, harsh-voiced, of no culture such as colleges and books supply, poor in grammar, poorer in pronunciation, and poverty is not the word to describe his lack of grace in manner. But here is the fact,—six thousand people, men and women, old and young, life-tired and life-jubilant people, come twice a day to hear him. The educated ministers, their usual teachers, are his servants. He says to this man, "Speak," and he speaketh; to that man, "Pray," and he prayeth. Here is something not to be ignored or pooh-poohed away. Can it be explained?

ITS SECRETS.

Three things at least go part way towards the explanation.

(1.) The man strikes straight for your conscience, and he deals with certain universal facts about the conscience. Not all men carry ideas, not all men carry feelings which can be moved by a word said to them in common; but every man who goes to the Tabernacle carries a conscience, and knows what Moody means when he says straightforwardly: "You're a sinner; you need cure; you feel mighty little power to cure yourself; there is a Power that can cure you; lay hold of it,—here it is! and be well!" Mr. Moody cannot philosophize about this matter, sin; he hardly tries to, is the last man to succeed if he tried. Neither can his audience philosophize about it. But that inability helps, not hinders, the effect. That saves time, and keeps the aim to the target. There is a clear track between his lips and your conscience. He knows what he is talking about, and you know, too, be the doctrine what it may.

Doctrine there is, of course, in which this appeal is clothed. But as was said a moment since, though the doctrine implied may be the whole of Calvinism, it is not expressed. Logically it may be there, practically it is not. The doctrine expressed is very short and simple and perfectly familiar. It is the two or three great features of the Christian scheme, or rather the two or three great moral facts of Religion phrased in the Christian symbols. "Jesus the Savior from Sin" is the central dogma over and over urged. "There is no other name given under heaven whereby man may be saved,"—that is the sun of Mr. Moody's system. And so far as I have noticed, it is Jesus the Savior from sin, much more than from the consequences of sin, that is emphasized. Ruin, not Hell, is the main thought. It is, you see, the moral fact in the Christian symbol. The fact under the symbol is sin, the need of a changed heart, of a new birth, the sure moral judgment, the possibility of forgiveness, the strength that comes to help the truly penitent; this is something that you and I know all about, although our symbols for it are different, and perhaps we say nothing about Jesus and atonement, or new birth or forgiveness. The moral facts in the Christian symbols. And because these symbols are so few, clear-cut, familiar to the hearers, so transparent to their moral contents, and so taken-for-granted instead of being offered as dogmas to be explained and proved and accepted,—because there is so little theology in Mr. Moody, and so much morality, we have, I think, a prime secret of his power.

(2.) Another secret is an open secret. He preaches in pictures and stories. A sermon of his is a cabinet of anecdotes, is a little picture-gallery. He states his point in a few words and then, instead of moralizing over it, he says: "I remember a man in Glasgow," and everybody listens to find out about that Glasgow man. And when he is through with him, the Chicago man is ready,—and when he is dismissed, you have Mr. Moody's point, vividly etched on your mind ready to be carried away in memory. His anecdotes are anecdotes of the conscience, gathered in his long experience, most of them moulded by trial into telling shapes. Not all, however; some of them are very wooden yet, and sometimes they act like boomerangs and lay the teaching flat. But he can take a little Bible-incident and fill in and fill in with details until you have a special correspondent's photograph instead of two or three Bible-verses. And this, till there is too much of it, is fascinating. And many people can stand a good deal of it. It is Sunday-school talk, and we all like to be treated as children in this way. In the best-bred Temple as well as in the rough-and-ready Tabernacle the anecdote is often the liveliest part of the sermon. If I should begin right here, "I remember a man," you would all look up and I should have you as long as I held on to him. Now Mr. Moody never lets him go beyond arm's length, and as a consequence everything he says is personalized, living, dramatic, easy to understand, hard to forget.

To this might be added as a third secret of his success the business-like way of the man. He is a practical, driving American turned missionary. He is Chicago incarnate,—as characteristic a product of our country as his own city is. There is no pause, no rest, no moment of quiet waiting reverence, such as you are wont to. Everything is alert, and clicks into the next thing. He stands and moves like a colonel going into battle. The text kept coming to mind in a comical way: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" And this organizing business-talent, this knack of knowing what to do and how to do it and of doing it with a drive, doubtless accounts in part for the influence that goes out from him in his short visits here and there.

The pictorial talent and the business-tact need no explanation; but in regard to what was said about doctrines being merely symbols, and Mr. Moody's chief doctrines being symbols of moral facts, I would say something more; for this, I think, touches the Radical's mistake in using "Absurdity" or "Superstition" as the word of words to best describe the Tabernacle scene.

DOCTRINES ARE SYMBOLS: THE LAW OF INTELLECTUAL RELATIVITY.

There are two ways of looking at religious truth. One regards it as the opposite of error, as something which you have and I have not, if I differ from you. The other regards error and truth as parts of one process of discernment; both of them relative words describing nothing absolute, but simply meaning points farther back or farther along in the process. The first way may be called the eighteenth century view, for in all the disputes between Deists and Christians in England, between the Infidels and Catholics in France, during the last century, each party argued as if it had all the right and the other all the wrong, and as if there were no connection between them save that of opposition. The second view is specifically a nineteenth century view, and the word which expresses it best is that long word growing so familiar of late, Evolution. The idea, you know, in Evolution is that all things grow,—all things, from star-systems in the heavens to thought-systems in the history of the human mind; and, interpreted by this idea, what men call "truth" and "error" are evidently but beliefs farther and less far advanced in the process of growth. Once recognize this idea as the right one, and differing thoughts and thinkers take an attitude towards each other by no means that of sheer opposition. Then, no one is, or claims to be, wholly right; no one is, or is charged with being, wholly in the wrong; and the partial wrongs and rights, however distant, are allied to each other by a unity of real intent; and to-morrow our truth will probably be the error, and we shall need the patience which this idea demands, that we give to those we deem the men of yesterday who are living all around us.

Certain momentous facts come in to notice as soon as we take this evolution-view.

We begin to see that the substance and the form of a belief have to be distinguished; that the real meaning which the believers mean is one thing, and the doctrine in which they try to embody it is another.

And next we see that the change called Growth affects the form far more rapidly than it does the substance. Growth transforms thought quickly, constantly,—it transubstantiates thought also, but much more slowly. The essential meaning in a conception may abide for centuries and ages; the outside of the conception, the formula for it to the mind, the intellectual symbol for it in the books and in the creeds and on the lips, shifts from generation to generation and from stage to stage of culture.

And one thing more we see,—that the chief feature in this change of thought-forms, the chief feature of thought-growth, may be described as a passing from definite and narrow outlines of conception to more abstract and vague, but broader, outlines. The man of the people, half-child or half-poet as he is, a picturer and imager in all his thinking, must have the dogma concrete, vivid, personalized, in order to have it a real conception to his mind. "God" is a King on his throne, a Creator, a Law-giver, is incarnate in some saint perhaps, or immarbled in some sacred stone. "Immortality" is a vivid Judgment and a Heaven and a Prison-house of torture. "Inspiration" is an angel messenger, or whispered words, or literal visions, or God employing human amanuenses. "Sin" is a drama whose first act is the Garden scene; its second the world-wilderness of fallen men; its third a Redeeming Deity hanging on a cross; its fourth the song of the ransomed for his sake. There we have the man of the people fashioning his symbols. The "thinker," as we call him, is impatient at all this; these hard and narrow outlines make the conception wooden and small and false to him; and for the thought,—the very same essential thought, remember,—to be real to his mind it has to expand into something much vaster and more vague. "God" becomes the Power that makes for Rightness in the Universe. "Immortality" becomes Life devoid of space and time limits. "Inspiration" becomes human nature's insight in its higher powers. "Sin," man's half-blind, half-willing stumbling in his slow climb towards moral grandeur. There we have the "thinker" fashioning his symbols. Do we not see that the difference over which we make such chatter is this difference of symbol mainly, and that the two men simply cannot use each other's symbols? From such the great thought before their two minds vanishes, if he tries to look at it in the other's form,—and he sees only an empty form: whence one cries, Superstition! and the other Infidelity!

In other words, there is a law of intellectual Relativity ruling over and determining the forms of all our thoughts. The form, the symbol, which expresses a thought for me is connected with my whole mental development, and will not do for you in a higher or a lower stage of development. The form or symbol which expresses that same thought for you is connected with your whole mental development and will not do for me. The doctrine that we grieve over or wonder at as superstition in the savage, in the child, in the Evangelist, is just what makes some fact real, and not illusion, to his mind. What they call infidelity and grieve over in us, is that which makes the same fact real to us. So it is not strange that the history of mental progress is the history of "superstitions" and "infidelities."

Now the dogmas of the Church are such "symbols": they are intellectual symbols for moral and religious conceptions. And if, in forming judgments of each other, we were wont to keep in mind this law of Relativity, I am sure it would temper our impatient wonder and check that cry, Absurdity!

MR. MOODY'S SYMBOLS TRANSLATED.

Let us apply all this to Mr. Moody and the Tabernacle. His central emphasis, I said, is the New Birth, the Instantaneous Conversion, the "Come to Jesus." These are his symbols. What does he mean by them? This,—Consecration, now and here, to your Ideal of Right. Bend to the Eternal Law of Right, that which stands to you as "the Power not yourself that makes for Righteousness in the Universe." Oppose that Power and you are doomed to be a crush! Join it, and you are lifted to mastery and peace! Join it, and then that Power "not your own," becomes your own! Were you not weak,—so weak? Are you not strong, so strong? That is "Jesus," that Power. Cannot you recognize it through Mr. Moody's symbols? That self-surrender to it is what he calls "Coming to Jesus." That in-flowing strength and peace is with him the relief and grace of those forgiven in Jesus' cross. What greatly matters the name? Is he not right about the central facts? Is not that self-surrender the supreme necessity of here and now, if you have never made it? And is it not "New Birth" when made? And is it not an interior act that does precede all outward deeds? And in that inward struggle between the higher and the lower self, that wrestle between a Conscience and the Awful Right, that knowledge that now and here it must be settled,—if you go off from that moment of clear conviction without the self-surrender to the Highest, goes not your soul towards suicide? And when, by the surrender you get upon God's side, feel you not as if his entire Almightiness were pledged to give you strength henceforth as his co-worker? These are inner facts that you and I ought to be able to recognize under any symbol. The poor drunkard, the light-living woman, the selfish husband, the thieving merchant, the restless-hearted boy or girl, know what he means. They know very well that his "Come to Jesus," whatever else it means, means consecration to a new and better life; that to believe in him, to accept him, means a turning-about,—"conversion." They are not utter fools; it is not a pantomime or private theatricals,—it is a conscience wrestling with the Living God. And shall we laugh or cavil at the symbol? You do not laugh at the idea of consecration to the Highest Right you know? No; your heart leaps and aches at the thought; your cheeks flush with the yearning to do that heroism; your tongue has no Ha! Ha! for that; but that is what your Evangelical neighbor calls "Coming to Jesus." Are you going to call it cant? His symbol serves him as yours serve you. Honor your own in honoring his!

Do I idealize Mr. Moody and his converts by these words? "They do not consciously mean anything so intensely moral as this," I hear some one protest. "The 'consecration' that you make central in the 'Come to Jesus' may be there indeed, but it is the incidental rather than the central thing. The central thing with them is, not character, but 'salvation,' that imputed righteousness that buys off their punishment for sin, that 'indulgence' element of which the Roman Catholic's 'indulgence' is only a lower form."

I doubt not that it is so with some; and that with still more, with very many, although they fully mean a vow of consecration and only sing that

"Tune to Jesus' work you cling Doing is a deadly thing," that stress tends to make them feel that doing is a comparatively indifferent thing after they cling to Him; in short, that the "symbol," like idols everywhere, often gets the worship away from the inner moral meaning. Without abatement of this kind I frankly own is exaggeration in the way I have put the matter. But I believe that the truer estimate of a movement like the Revival is gotten by making such abatement from this way of looking at it, rather than by approaching it in the opposite spirit with a little pity to abate our scorn. It is very easy to pick out many a bit from Mr. Moody's talk that seems to contradict all this. "The greatest sin of the world is unbelief": "If I read my Bible right, there is no hope out of Christ": and so on. But these are to be interpreted by his prevailing emphasis, not that by these. That he confounds his symbol with his substance utterly, that the two are one to him,—is that any reason why we should make the same mistake? And he would laugh at all this talk about "symbols," nor understand a word of it. But get him to tell you what he means by "belief" and "out of Christ," and in two minutes you will probably find him deep in morality, spite of himself,—or rather because of himself, for that is what his Christology is in his heart of hearts.

There are two classes to whom the Tabernacle will do good. (1) The class it is specially designed to reach, uncultured people whom Mr. Moody's symbols—which they have always carelessly associated with "religion"—will startle into careful listeners, just because in his talk they are so materialized that the things they stand for, God, death, the better living, leap out into visible reality before their eyes. They are people to whom the belief that the whale swallowed Jonah or that Jonah swallowed the whale, were that story in the Bible and the preacher, does small harm compared with the good they get by believing as literally, even for a little while, the moral contents of the Bible. These will be helped morally. (2) A class more cultured and more thoughtful, Evangelical by faith, and therefore long used to these same symbols in vaguer forms. In this class there are some whom this Evangelist's literalness, that same materializing simplicity of his, will startle with a sense of irrationality; yet they know that Mr. Moody is themselves printed off plain! Some of those ministers who sit by his side so loyally must feel tried in their minds, and humbled. That whale that swallowed Jonah,—no, they don't swallow it. These persons will be helped intellectually. Slowly and half-unconsciously, this strait-jacketing acts to prompt an escape towards larger truth.

And there are two classes to whom the Tabernacle does harm: (1) the thoughtless Evangelicals whom the excitement simply confirms in the general doctrines long received without impressing their moral meanings any deeper in their lives. This class is hurt intellectually, as children might be hurt by being led to glorify their primer forever and forever. And (2) those indifferent or those radicals in religion whose heart is hot against others' "absurdities" therein. To this class, and it is no small one, and comprises both cultured and uncultured persons, the Tabernacle scenes and talk simply confirm their suspicion and scorn of all that which churches and church-goers already stand for in their minds. This is the class in the community to whom I believe the Tabernacle does its most real harm, because it makes them narrower in their emphases, harder in their judgments, more unable to rate truly the good intents of other people. These persons are hurt more than intellectually,—they are hurt morally.

CORNERED IN HERESY.

And so you see why I began the sermon with those strong words about the Radical's frequent bigotry. I plead for breadth in religious culture as against the spirit which says, or seems to say: "Difference from me is measure of absurdity." I emphasize it as a duty that we should aim to get the power to translate differing faiths into each other, power to recognize the essential meaning under other people's symbols and to interpret it into our own. This is not saying that there is no other duty in the matter. It is no doctrine of utter indifference and intellectual mushiness that I urge. There is a duty of clear thinking on religion. There is a duty of honest, absolutely honest, speaking on religion,—a greater duty this than, judged by common practice, is commonly believed. There is a duty of directly spreading one's own views of truth and thereby lifting others to what we deem larger, nobler, more helpful symbols,—though a smaller duty this than is commonly believed, because so much the greater part of such help comes indirectly. It is one's zeal for general education, one's "secular" enthusiasms, when coupled with that simple unproselyting honesty just spoken of, that mainly tells. But letting all these other duties wait for some other sermons, I plead now for breadth in our religious culture. As Radicals, as heretics, we must beware lest we get cornered in our heresy.

It is a weakness of tiny sects to take to themselves the credit of reforms in which they have indeed been outspoken leaders, but whose success depends on influences far larger than their little selves. Without me, no Reason in Religion in the future, thinks the Radical. The Unitarian's name for himself is "leaven,"—he is the "leaven" that has softened the temper and rationalized the mind of the surrounding mass. But the Universalist stands by and stoutly claims as his the credit of the more hopeful view that millions take to-day of earth and heaven. But the Spiritualist disputes it with both, claiming the larger part of the result as his. And the Swedenborgian I find is apt to claim anything that looks like a spiritualizing of old dogmas as a result of Swedenborg. Beyond all question the revolting sects do good in their time; each has a little cause in charge, and helps the great cause forward by being so loyal to that little one. But they are themselves so largely the effect of general tendencies in their age that "sign" is an exact name for them than "cause"; their precise intense enthusiasm serving to make visible in single points the influences that are invisibly and slowly altering the great mass of beliefs. And then they are almost sure to run into extremes of emphasis and miss real values. The Universalist ran into the "Death and Glory" doctrine; the Christian into a foolish Bible-idolatry; the Unitarian into a cold and negative kind of rationalism; the Radical is apt to pick up pins of Bible-criticism and applaud only the hits at Orthodoxy.

To that great main of Orthodoxy the three or four sects just named, however prosperous and hopeful, are but as tiny ponds. And they will remain so as long as they keep their secthood. There is no future for them save to be what they have always been. The world is not going to become Unitarian or Universalist or Radical by name or special doctrine; but the good and truth of each and all of them is taken up and passes far and wide into the general life-blood. Would a man live the full religious life of his own day, he may live in the special sect only if he know how to live above it and catch the whole great influence. The special sect is for the age and not the age for it; and the age does well to appropriate its good and pass it by. So in being heretic, we must be broadly sympathetic for our own sake even, in order not to get cornered in our heresy.

TYPES OF RELIGIOUSNESS.

Let me urge this plea in a somewhat different way. One who believes that religiousness is rooted in human nature, not to be concealed, not to be disowned, finds it easy to feel sympathy with all the varying phases of religion by remembering what a composite thing human nature is—human nature as he knows it in himself. He finds that this or that phase which seems to him most strange, incomplete, one-sided, still is represented in himself; that in himself he has that which, forced to unnatural, or say perhaps to more natural development, becomes the very thing he wonders at in his brother.

To show what is meant, take half-a-dozen characters from the New Testament,—Jesus, Paul, Thomas, John, Peter, James. They may stand for so many types of religiousness. Each shows religion as it exists in a special variety of human nature. The varieties always exist, and therefore the separate types always exist.

Jesus is the Intuitionist—the man of deep moral insight, which gives him faith in God and in man and in goodness at beginning and at end; a faith that asks no reason for itself, and could give none satisfactory, yet is the great fact in him. He views things in their moral bearings; he recognizes "the great relations of little things"; he sees the Duty in every act. He can prophesy the future of society by its obedience or disobedience to the laws of right. He seems an embodiment of the moral sense—that one instinct reigns so supreme in him; and in virtue of it he reads the universal, lays hold of the invisible, sees God everywhere. Ask Jesus about science, about history, about the theory of diseases, he would have given some strange answers doubtless. Ask him practical questions about right and wrong, about duty, about nobleness, about manliness and tenderness, and his answers stand the test of many centuries.

There are many such on earth; many such in common humble life.

The why and wherefore these persons little care to ask, they little know. But the thing is, morally, as they see it, and the simple-minded explanation of their knowledge to themselves is "revelation," "inspiration," the "inward voice," the "intuition." So these have the missions and assert authority. All the reformers, the life heroes, the quiet saints but sure, the prophets, have this element of moral intuition strong in them.

Paul is the constructive thinker—no less a type of religiousness. He likewise is a man of mighty conviction, but with him the mind has been at work and can give the reason and theory of the faith. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," he writes a friend. He feels that Jesus has given him a new life—then it is life for all the world; and in order to understand it, his mind plots out a grand scheme of salvation, and a Church that antedates the earth, and outlasts it, and holds the highest angels in its vast fellowship, and he calls this glorious vision the "mystery of godliness." That accounts for his new life, he thinks. These are the men who argue, who write the books, who make the theologies, who shape the sects, who split old churches and build up new ones. Religion with them seems much a matter of the head, though often, of course, they join the other elements with this. This is Augustine—it is Luther—it is Calvin—it is New England. From time to time, some great religionist of this kind rises up and thinks, and his thought seasons twenty generations of common minds with their religious creed.

With Thomas—the one who must feel the wounded side, and see the hands before he would believe in the risen Christ—we have the New Testament type of the Skeptic—the analytic and destructive thinker. With the Skeptic, reason again is paramount, but it does not, like Paul's reason, seek to build up theories and schemes—it would rather dig to the root of the facts underlying the theories and examine them. To-day, he searches all beliefs and sees much to reject; sees room hardly anywhere for finished certainty; perceives that God, immortality, the very soul's existence, are assumptions—practically sure, it may be, to consciousness, but not demonstrably sure; perceives that all so-called "revelations" have to depend upon evidence, and that none exists sufficient to establish any, while, on the other hand, the greatest social phenomena seem to be traceable in natural lines of cause and effect. As to the unknown, he does not like to venture on interpretation, and is very apt to assume it is unknowable. As to man's religiousness, he sees that there are depths in human nature as yet unfathomed, out of which—as a simple fact of observation,—this religiousness rises to the surface. His enthusiasm is for humanity rather than for individuals, and the "causes" often own him for father while men give him little fellowship. Nor does he seek fellowship or deserve it, for his reverence for others' reverences is very slight, and his favorite motives are "Truth," "Education," "Progress"—not "Peace and Good Will." The Materialists, the Positivists, the Freethinkers, many of the best names in science, many of the foremost thinkers in all lands, are examples of this type.

John—or at least the author of the fourth Gospel—represents the Mystics. They likewise reason about their faith, but with them the thought is deeply fused with feeling. However tangible their conclusions, their premises are all abstractions, and they live in their premises. Such words as love and light and life and truth are often on their lips. Their sense is one of mystic communion with mystic things. The vision before their minds is hazy, vague, dimly majestic. These mystics have made a great figure in all religions. The Neo-Platonist Ecstasies—those whom we call Pantheists, the Buddhist and Brahmin transcendentalists—the Quakers, the Moravians, on a certain side the Swedenborgians, St. Francis, Mme. Guyon, perhaps Emerson, such names bring the type up to our mind; and in the far still light of certain eyes, and the spiritually fine lines of certain faces we sometimes see it walking about our streets or lying on a sick bed.

The other John, he who wrote the Apocalypse, or Peter, he who tells of Christ preaching to the spirits in the under-world, and paints the vivid picture of the earth and elements melting with fervent heat when the Christ returns at his second advent, will do well enough to represent the Imaginative type of religiousness. To such as these the faith is neither vague and vast, nor is it reasoned truth. It is strongly outlined in some picturesque and dramatized belief; what this is depends on the age, and on the nation, and is not the product of deeper thought but of more lively fancy than the average. They simply assume the belief, and then their imaginations weave all manner of beautiful graces around it. In its drama is spent their joy and enthusiasm. These are the worshippers in whom feeling predominates, and the picture replaces thought. The Virgin and the Ritual, the Christ dying on the cross, the heaven-dream, the second coming of the new earth, these are the favorite thoughts. These are the men who shout Amen and Hallelujah; these are the men who appeal to the masses, and propagate new faiths with quick success. This is Mr. Moody. Among the Christian sects the Roman Catholics and Methodists and Spiritualists best represent them.

And James introduces us to the practical religionist, the man of good works. Duty is prominent; helpful philanthropies come out of him. Other believers are apt to call him a "mere moralist." His hands and feet are busied not for himself. He seems rather cold, lacks feeling, is apt to be "legal" and ascetic. His talk abounds in maxims, not in fancies. As to his belief, it is all right—he hardly cares to argue it; but then he is very sure that there is no argument outside of it. The "reason in religion" that he boasts is at bottom a tradition,—but he does not know that. Individuals representing this type are to be found in all the Christian sects.

Here, then, are six distinct types of religiousness. Have you not found yourself and your friends in some of them? Within that little circle of Jesus' first followers, Religion would fain teach the Christians how many-sided she is, and shames us out of the one-sidedness that we preserve, thinking to do her reverence. Look into any of the large and well-developed religious systems and you will find all these various types, these six at least. Buddhism and Mohammedanism have them as well as Christianity. Any large, long-lived, well-developed sect, like the Roman Catholics, with their fifteen hundred years of growth, or even Protestantism with its three hundred years, splitting up along the lines of these tendencies, will show them.

But what is specially worth pointing out is that all the sides which these types separate and specialize are to be found together in single individuals. Take some good, strong Orthodox friend, and talk with him about religion, not as a man who has it all with another who is a superstitious fool, but as one who feels that both have the thing, the fact, under the differing thoughts and names—and have you never seen how, unconsciously to himself, his heart will show itself bigger than his head—and how his head even will sometimes consciously and shyly go to wandering far outside of his creeds with a strange glad sense of liberty and sympathy with you? That is your friend's mystic, or intuitive, or sceptical element, pushing itself up by the side of his tradition and his logic and imagination.

And look into yourself. Have you not all six types represented in your own nature? In you are there no simple intuitions of goodness, unbased, so far as you can trace, on reasoning? Even the dying sceptic, dying fearlessly, calmly, longingly as the eager Christian, show they have that trust in goodness at the heart of things. No constructive logic? How then about your sect? Why come here, instead of going there, to church, or why out of churches altogether? Have not the doctrines uttered, the "scheme" presented, somewhat determined you? Have you not scepticism, no moments when God seems unreal, and prayerfulness emptiness, and immortality a dream? They can hardly help coming to every one that is most truly religious and at the same time truly rational. But besides such moments you have your mysticism also. You know—do you not?—the feeling of awe and vague communion with vague presence, the sense of absorption and of being part of all things—and of being upborne by that sense, till the greatest moments you can remember seem to have come thus. And have you no imagination in your faith, no dreams of heaven, no idealizations as you picture heroes dying, as you read of hero-deeds and look on hero-faces? Does music, do the curves of arches and the staleness of columns and the harmony of colors move you not at all to those feelings amid which your religiousness finds itself at home? Then, finally, have you nothing merely traditional in your faith, accepted from parents, without much thought, without much feeling attaching to it, but serving as a source from which many a practical, helpful, dutiful impulse springs?

Human nature is a marvel of compositeness; and when one utters the word religiousness, he says that which, to be fully understood, demands that all the fulness of human nature should be gathered up and reckoned in. Your beliefs may be summed up possibly in a creed or a catechism—your religiousness cannot. We have many varying impulses in us and each blossoms to religiousness; and when you see a man whose whole field blooms with one flower—clover, or cowslip, or dandelion, or thistle,—instead of saying: "How strange a flower!" look into your own field, and see if, in some corner, you have not a little plantation of that kind. If not, you probably lack one element that should be in you to be a perfect human being; his mistake, on the other hand, is that he has but that one. It is for roundness of religious culture that we should strive, feeling sure that thus the spirit of Truth will be most fully in us, and that when thus in us that spirit will be of necessity the spirit of Patience and Fellowship and Love. The brother in this church only exaggerates in his religion a religious tendency which also exists in me. The brother in that one only exaggerates another, which exists in me. Emerson another, Spencer another, and so on. Can I not be large-natured enough and trust my nature enough to entertain them all in my own soul, and say to each with infinite sincerity, Brother? The man or the party who does this most heartily and fully is thereby fitted best to make his own light shine. The only excuse for wanting another man to give up his thoughts and take on ours is our belief that ours will bless him more—excuse indeed to furnish missions and enthusiasm; and most of us are so eagerly unselfish in our proselyting that we call hard names and feel bitter against him if he don't accept our friendly offer! Let us rather fall back on our unity with him, make our own light shine the brighter—and wait!

Best of all methods to recommend an unpopular faith to acceptance is being brave in thought yet broad in sympathies. Not visibly brave and invisibly broad, as some are apt to be,—not visibly broad and invisibly brave, like certain other friends; but brave so that men shall say, "He is a Radical,"—broad so that men shall add, "He is reverent"; and by being so religious in actual life that, as far as one is known, men and women shall be confronted by a living proof that what they may call "infidelity" is at least fidelity to high morality and widely active unselfishness. Live up to the motto, Freedom with Fellowship in Religion, and then, within some humble sphere, we cannot help being its missionary; for as we go our whole bearing will preach it,—it, the Freedom with the Fellowship.

THE GROWTH OF SCEPTICISM.

It's curious. There is, at this minute what pompous writers call a "consentaneity of opinion" as to the prevalence of infidelity in this country. From scores of pulpits, Huxley, Darwin, Herbert Spencer, Mill, Bain, and others, are denounced Sunday after Sunday. Protestant bishops in their charges refer to the spread of unbelief, and tell their hearers that it has grown enormously within the last fifteen years. Roman Catholic bishops in their pastorals warn their flocks of the herd of unbelievers who are on the watch to pick up any weak straggler from the fold. The other day, at Birmingham, Dr. Newman, a name never to be mentioned without respect, the greatest living master of English prose, spoke plaintively and movingly in a sermon of the conflict that is going on between belief and unbelief, and seemed to think that for a time unbelief would make way, and hold its own against all comers. And, in truth, we need not confine ourselves to the ranks of the clergy in order to perceive that there is a strong belief in the force of the undercurrent of scepticism which is flowing so steadily and so persistently in one direction. No cultivated layman can have helped noticing for himself, that on religious questions men do not think exactly as they did; that they have killed or abandoned many old prejudices; that there is a bias on certain questions; that the tone of the pulpit has changed; that bold preachers who try and take into account the doubts which pervade their congregation are more in favor than those timid discourses who will persist in treading the beaten track, and who will still talk as if all their hearers were mainly composed of elderly women or immature virgins, or of young men in the admire-the-curate stage of intellectual development. There is a great change in English thought upon all religious questions, and it is neither more nor less than dangerous madness not to take note of it. When men of the calibre of the Bishop of Gloucester, and of Dr. Newman, plainly tell their hearers that infidelity is on the increase; that it is likely to increase; that new methods must be made use of in warring against it; and that the infidels have "struck 'ile" in more quarters than one, and are pursuing their researches in a spirit which bodes certain antiquated forms of religion no great good,—it is idle to deny that such is the fact.

Reconciliation between these two camps would appear to be, under present conditions, next door to impossible. The infidels go on their way, and have arrayed on their side many of the great names in science and philosophy. Doubt—honest doubt—is no longer looked upon as something a man should be heartily ashamed of. It is no longer deemed to be within the province of the human intellect to devote years of life and hours of prayerful anxiety to attempt to solve what so many deem to be utterly insoluble. The dread mystery of existence, life, and death, and what comes after both, are not commonly regarded as matters on which theological cock-sureness will afford any safe footing or any unmistakable guidance. Men have seen that theologians have been proved to be wrong time after time; have abandoned positions which the weakest and most violent of them set down as bulwarks of the faith; have struggled furiously against all or any innovation; and in the end have succumbed to the spirit of the age they lived in, and to the outspokenness and freedom of opinion of the laity. The shores of many a sea of troubled opinion are strewn with the wrecks of theological argosies, which foundered in storms long since passed away. But nowadays there is more and more prospect that there will be a still greater uprooting of opinions, and a still greater modification of old beliefs than any that have been seen within the memory of living men. Science has invaded more than one field which theology once took to be exclusively her own. The more enlightened among the clergy have found out that it will serve no good purpose to preach stereotyped theology. They have discovered to their amazement that they do not see so much of hell and the devil, and Adam and Eve, in their sermons. They have been sensibly affected by the altered opinions around them. They have ceased to ventilate the extreme notions which modern men deem will not hold water. They have been more or less affected by the immense progress of modern science. Go where they will they find opinions common which their grandfathers would have thought devil-born.

There can be little doubt that the present generation is as profoundly sceptical, though in a different way, as the most sceptical generation of the last century. There was a reaction from the eighteenth century philosophy mainly brought about by the French Revolution. There may be in time a reaction from nineteenth century philosophy. But if there should be such a thing the reaction will be different from the last reaction, and the effects of the reaction will be different too. Democracy is a solvent in the religious world as well as in the political world. The spread of education will also have much to do with the form the reaction may take. The influence of wider knowledge and a culture more strictly scientific than has ever before been known will tell. Religious thought will be modified or affected by the advance of the science of comparative theology. There will be alterations, such as at present are little dreamt of, to come from a more intimate acquaintance with the languages and religions of the East. Prehistoric studies will tend towards a belief in evolutionism. And it may soon come that there will be more outspokenness on the part of those who at present do not care to disavow the creeds they have been brought up in. It may happen, then, that whatever changes come in religion, or religious thought, will be forced upon the clergy from the outside. Reformations in theology have rarely, if ever, honestly proceeded from those who were trained to defend long-established opinions. The scepticism of the laity will react, nay, is reacting, upon the clergy. For a preacher must have some sympathy with his audience if he wish to do good. But if it be as Dr. Newman and others say, how can there be sympathy where the accord is growing less and less day by day? This is a question for thoughtful persons to consider and answer as best they can.—Nottingham (Eng.) Journal.

THE JESUITS IN FRANCE.

On the report of M. Berthelon the French Chamber of Deputies has sent to the Minister of Justice a petition of eighty-seven inhabitants of Clotat, who demand that all Jesuits may be expelled from French territory, and that the State shall take possession of all the property they own contrary to the law of mortmain. After pointing out the perils to which society is liable from the order, the petitioners show that the edicts of 1762, 1764, 1777, and the laws of 1792, 1809, 1817, and 1825, and the Royal ordinance of 1828, concerning their banishment, have not been repealed. They also remind the Chamber that in 1844 M. Dupin sent a petition on the illegal existence of the Jesuits to the Minister of Justice. They declare that the turbulent genius and ambitious views of the disciples of Ignatius Loyola have nothing in common with the religion they pretend to defend, and that they are a standing menace to public tranquillity. They have ever caused trouble in the States where they have settled themselves, and now they are openly hostile to the principles which form the basis of the institutions and laws of the State, etc., etc. The paper of which M. Jules Simon was lately the editor says that it is not in favor of any measure of proscription or confiscation, but adds that it is high time to cause the company of Jesus to observe the law. To effect this the Government of the Republic will only have to revert not only to the traditions and laws of the ancient Monarchy, but to those of the First Empire, the Restoration, and the Government of Louis Philippe. In 1804, on the report of Portalis, the Jesuit colleges were closed and their communities were dispersed. Under the bigoted Charles X., who believed in apparitions, the decree of the Empire was renewed; and in 1845, on the demand of M. Thiers, the Chamber of Deputies directed the Government to see that previous legislation in this matter was properly carried out. It was under the Second Empire that the Jesuits recovered lost ground. After Jacques Clement, who assassinated Henri III., came Jean Chastel, who wounded Henri IV.; then Ravalliac, who finished what his brother Jesuit had commenced. Next came Damiens, who stabbed Louis XV., the Well-beloved. After this last affair the Parliament ordered the Jesuits to lay before the Chamber a printed copy of their constitution, upon which a report, most unfavorable to the society, was drawn up. On the 6th of May, 1757, it was decreed that the books approved of by the Society of Jesus, containing immoral and subversive doctrines, should be torn and burned by the public executioner, as seditious, destructive of all principle of moral Christianity, teaching a murderous doctrine not only against the safety and life of citizens, but even against those of sacred and sovereign persons. The Jesuits were forbidden to teach in the colleges, and the King's subjects were forbidden to follow their lessons. It was also decided that the archbishops and bishops then in Paris should decide upon the four following points: 1st. On the utility of Jesuits in France and the inconvenience resulting from the different functions confided to them. 2d. On their conduct; on their opinions contrary to the safety of the person of sovereigns; on the doctrine of the French clergy contained in the declaration of 1682 [the articles of the Gallican Church drawn up by Bossuet in an assembly of the French clergy, and which vanished under the influence of the recent Vatican decrees]. 3d. On the amount of obedience Jesuits owe to their bishops. 4th. On the influence which the authority of the general of the Jesuits would exercise in France. Out of fifty-one prelates forty-five declared themselves in favor of the Jesuits, "so great was the terror inspired by that body." The Parliament did not allow the matter to drop; it ordered extracts from the "Secreta Monita" to be communicated to the King, to the archbishops and the bishops, and these were branded as destructive of national law, as contrary to the morals which God himself has installed into the heart of man, as calculated to snap all the bonds of society by authorizing theft, lies, perjury, criminal impurity, and all passions and crimes in general by the teaching of occult compensation and mental restriction, etc. The Jesuits were also accused by the Parliament of favor, magic, blasphemy, and idolatry. In 1764, on the order of the King, the Jesuits were generally and definitively banished from France, and ten years later they were driven from the Papal See by Clement XIV. The Jesuits returned to France, under the name of Fathers of the Faith, after 1815, and their intrigues were so scandalous that they brought religion into contempt. In several cities masses could only be said when the priests were protected with bayonets. Under Charles X. eight of their colleges were closed; the Peers protested against their doctrines, under the guidance of M. de Montlosier, who was more Royalist than the King; and the Peers were backed up by a Committee of the Academy, which included such men as Michaud, the author of the Crusades. The press became violent; the Government tried to gag it, and Charles X. lost his throne. It is not to be wondered at that Republicans should see with alarm this turbulent order increasing in numbers and wealth.—Pall Mall Gazette, Feb. 1.

AN INVITATION.

EDITOR CHRONICLE:—

Several weeks ago, as noticed in the Chronicle, a Liberal League was organized at Mishicot to co-operate with the National Liberal League in the work of instituting combined agitation in favor of equal rights and freedom in religion.

It has nothing to do with any religion as such; but labors to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal rights of all, or, in other words, to absolutely and totally separate Church and State.

Cordially inviting all citizens, men and women of all shades of opinion, to work with it, the League attaches and can attach no value to belief, opinions, or faith, apart from actions; and it has no creed.

Probably, most of the individual members composing it believe that happiness in this world can be attained only by yielding willing obedience to unchangeable natural laws, do not consider doubt a sin, hold themselves always open to conviction, free to inquire diligently, earnestly, and patiently into the theories of Christian and non-Christian, Materialist and Atheist, or any other "ist," alike, and to encourage the individual to speak and act in accordance with the truth as he or she understands it, leaving salvation to take care of itself.

This, it seems, conflicts with the Orthodox ideas of a certain Two Rivers clergyman, who would maintain that salvation should be the first object of pursuit. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

We confess we cannot comprehend this text, and beg to be excused for being still constrained to think this scheme of salvation analogous to a plan of reaping a harvest without digging stumps and stones, tilling the soil, and sowing the seed.

As we fain would learn the truth, in the spirit of honest inquiry, and with the assurance that he shall have a respectful and attentive hearing, we cordially and earnestly invite our reverend friend to make this text the subject of a lecture before the Mishicot Liberal League.

We as cordially welcome him to our platform as we would a Mussulman or Hindu with the same text ("Believe or be damned") from the Koran and Shaster respectively.

To verify his text, and establish the sincerity of his belief, we should not object to an exhibition of the signs which shall follow them that believe. St. Mark xvi., 17 and 18.

We, of course, desire to adequately compensate for loss of time and trouble; and, to perfect the arrangement, request correspondence with the undersigned.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC DISCUSSION,
Mishicot Liberal League.

—The Chronicle, Two Rivers, Wis., Jan. 18.

MRS. CRAIG, the author of John Halifax, Gentleman, is erecting a drinking-fountain under a railway arch near her residence in Kent, England, and in addition there will be a constant supply of penny loaves and a money-box, under the supposition that those who partake of the bread will pay for it. The London Echo makes the following comment on the project: "Confidence in one's species is something cheering to contemplate in a cynical, sceptical age. We would be sorry even to attempt to shake the kind-hearted novelist's faith in thirsty bucolic nature. We would even venture to suggest that, still further to show how unworthily the rural policeman despises mankind 'on the tramp,' she should add to the convenience of her bread and water fountain a little cheese, a bottle of wholesome spirits to mix with the water, and possibly a round of cold meat, unless, indeed, she is of opinion that the patrons of her fountain would prefer tripe and onions. If she laid some long clay pipes and a few ounces of good strong tobacco about, we would guarantee that the casual wards of every Union in Kent would be deserted in favor of the new open-air club."

Poetry.

SONNETS.

BY WILLIAM LLOYD GARRISON.

I.

PRELUDE TO THE CONFLICT.

Seize thou, brave heart, the trumpet of Reform,
And through it give one long, electric blast,
To rouse the slumbering, like a thunder-storm,
And make the foes of Progress stand aghast!
The boldest utterances are needed now,
The heaviest blows, the most heroic deeds;
For, still infatuated, millions bow
To Superstition, with its palsying creeds;
And false Tradition holds them in its chains,
And hoar Authority their reason stays,
And blind Credulity its grasp retains,
And the dead Past the living Present sways;
Then, blow the trumpet! raise the standard high!
A new advance for Truth and Liberty!

II.

THE DOGMA OF INFALLIBILITY.

Human Infallibility, avaunt!
The claim is impious wheresoever made;
Whether by Papist or by Protestant,
Rivals in pharisaic robes arrayed,
No one is more, and no one less, than man:
Where all are equal, who shall claim control
Over the conscience, or put under ban
The free, outspoken, independent soul?
There is no heresy in honest doubt,
Or strong dissent, where demonstration fails;
Or non-conformity, however stout;
For thus the righteous cause at last prevails.
Begone! popes, cardinals, councils, bishops, all—
Who seek to hold the human mind in thrall!

III.

SUPERFLUOUS DEVICES.

Who but a man bereft of sense would think
To prop the sky, and thus prevent its fall?
Or stop Niagara at its very brink
By the erection of a mud-built wall?
Or stretch a chain across the holiest sea,
To force it into slumberous repose?
Or regulate the law of gravity,
Lest chaos come all order to foreclose?
And who but one demented will contend
That Truth, unaided by external force,
Successfully her cause cannot defend,
But must to carnal weapons have recourse?
That in religion reason is no guide?
That Liberty to License is allied?

IV.

FREEDOM OF CONSCIENCE.

Oh! brave Apostle, thou hast truly said—
It is a trivial thing indeed to be Judged of man's judgment. Conscience must be free,
Nor blindly nor dogmatically led,
Either by living oracles or dead;
For truth admits of no monopoly,
And where it points each for himself must see,
Nor fears an independent path to tread.
Honor to him who speaks his honest thought,
Who guards his reason as a sacred trust,
Demands the truth for every dogma taught,
And turns dissenter only when he must!
For he shall rise by whom the light is sought,
To the high plane where stand the wise and just.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 2.

Louis Mendlik, $1.35; G. Martin, 60 cents; E. G. Burnet, $6.40; O. Cone, $3.20; E. C. Hart, $3.20; G. W. Warren, $1; Geo. E. Jewett, $3; John Cowan, $3.20; Isaac Sherwood, $6.40; T. H. Proctor, $3.20; G. H. Parkhurst, 35 cents; Mrs. Emma Huff, $1; W. L. Coffinbury, $3.20; B. B. Marshall, 50 cents; F. A. Green, $13.20; Jas. R. Stone, $3.20; J. B. Stall, $1.50; Wm. Porter, $3.20; Geo. Hagermeyer, $3.20; Wm. Jabine, $3.20; P. Sidebotham, $2; T. G. Hovey, $3.20; Mrs. A. G. Farwell, 87 cents; Cash, 93 cents; Mrs. M. A. Hilton, $3; Dr. Wigglesworth, $3.20; W. H. Spencer, $3; W. S. Bell, $3.20; Sanford B. Ring, $1.60; H. Nye, $2; J. P. Mendum, 10 cents; Alvin Hoyt, $3; Sam'l Reese, $3; Julius Freyburg, $6.50; J. W. Wayne, $3.20; W. D. Le Sueur, $4; Bates & Locke, $10; Mrs. Hope Whipple, 21 cents; John R. Thornton, $1.25; Mrs. H. D. Chapin, $3.20; John C. Haynes, $3.20; Subscription News Co., $2.50; J. M. Forbes, $3.20; Elwood Patterson, $3.20; S. B. Clark, $6.45; N. Littlefield, $3.20; Mrs. A. S. White, $3.20; O. A. Farwell, $3.20; Geo. Johnson, $3.20; Edmond Prand, $3.20; Henry Kiest, $3.20; Geo. Lewis, $3.20; C. J. Higginson, $3.20; J. L. Whiting, $4.70; Mrs. C. T. Appleton, $3.20; W. C. Gannett, 80 cents; F. J. Humphrey, $3.20; Mary S. Osborne, $3.20; S. E. Shattuck, 80 cents; H. B. McNair, $3.25; C. R. Purdy, $6.40; Dr. I. F. Bingham, $10.20; J. S. Palmer, $3.20; L. Spaulding, 35 cents; S. R. Hazleton, $1.50; J. D. Thorley, $2; W. H. McKay, $6; N. Waterman, 37 cents; Hugh Edward, 20 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 8, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix. Boston: Published by the National Liberal League, 1876. Pages 190. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. ABBOT on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. KILGORE on "Democracy"; by James Parton on "Cathedrals and Beer; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. UNDERWOOD on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. PAIGE on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. Y. KILGORE on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. MILLS on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. LYTLE, President of the Ohio State branch of the "National Reform Association," used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle indorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

IT IS REPORTED that Mr. Weiss, in a late discourse at the Parker Memorial, remarked that the reason why Boston has not yet, in accordance with the promise, "bowed her intellectual head" before Moody and Sankey, is that her "Intellect" has not yet been appealed to! This is frightfully cruel, but nevertheless true.

"A MAN ought always to do the contrary of what Fontenelle advised," says the Paris correspondent of the Nation; "when he thinks he has the truth in his hand, he ought always to open it." If any one is vexed with us for constantly urging organization upon the liberals of the United States, behold the reason of our persistence.

"DISTINGUISH THINGS THAT DIFFER."

The discourse which Mr. Gannett kindly contributes to this week's issue of THE INDEX will be read by every one who is interested in the independent reflections of a deeply religious mind on the Moody and Sankey movement. The "secrets" of this movement and its influence he finds mainly in three things: in Mr. Moody's direct appeal to conscience and the consciousness of sin, his pictorial and dramatic style, his practical and business-like and driving method. Mr. Moody's "chief doctrines" are viewed by Mr. Gannett as "merely symbols of moral facts"; he considers these moral facts to be substantially the same under all symbols, to be merely clothed by different minds in different garments (coarser or finer as the case may be), and to be at once so universal in themselves and so universally recognized that mere differences of dress ought not to be much regarded. This disregard of "mere symbols" or "doctrines" is urged in the name of "evolution," which is held to make truth and error merely relative terms. No one, pleads Mr. Gannett, has all the right or all the wrong; "to-morrow our truth will probably be the error"; "the chief feature of thought-growth may be described as a passing from definite and narrow outlines of conception to more abstract and vague but broader outlines"; Moody's personalized, concrete conceptions of God and Immortality and Inspiration and Sin merely assume a vaster and vaguer form, but retain their substantial identity, in the mind of the modern thinker, who has only somewhat better "symbols"; in short, "do we not see that the difference over which we make such chatter is this difference of symbol mainly, and that the two men simply cannot use each other's symbols"? "The dogmas of the Church are such 'symbols' as I have been describing,—symbols for moral and religious conceptions."

Applying these principles, Mr. Gannett proceeds to explain that Mr. Moody, by his "symbols" of the New Birth, Instantaneous Conversion, and "Come to Jesus!" merely means what radicals mean by "consecration, now and here, to your Ideal of Right,"—that "self-surrender to it is what he [Moody] calls 'coming to Jesus';" although, with his characteristic sincerity and explicitness, Mr. Gannett says: "I frankly think that there is exaggeration in the way I have put the matter," etc. And in the light of the same principles he declares: "I emphasize it as a duty that we should aim to get the power to translate differing faiths into each other." This is what he means by "breadth in our religious culture," and inculcates as the means of escape from being "cornered in our heresy."

In a genial little note accompanying the manuscript of his discourse, our old friend wrote, as if with a smile: "You can rap it in an editorial as hard as you think needed." So we know he will not in the least object to our expressing some views partly varying from the above, though the disposition to "rap it" is something which cannot live in the presence of so brave and sweet a spirit as his. Besides, his controlling desire to do justice to all phases of thought and belief, his conscientious anxiety to include all types of sincere religiousness in the ample sweep of his sympathies, are traits for which we cherish too deep a veneration to permit any treatment of the subject less serious and earnest than his own. It is not the chivalrous devotion to truth, or the fine aspiration for a human fellowship that shall be unmarred by mental narrowness, that ever "needs" to be "rapped." And these beautiful things we clearly see in the discourse.

The intellectual stand-point from which Mr. Gannett's view of the revival is taken seems to be a certain conception of "evolution." This conception has determined the whole character of his thinking and controlled his results. What it is, he thus states himself: "The idea, you know, in evolution is that all things grow,—all things, from star-systems in the heavens to thought-systems in the history of the human mind; and, interpreted by this idea, what men call 'truth' and 'error' are evidently but beliefs farther and less far advanced in the process of growth." Now we do not suspect for a moment that Mr. Gannett would present this as a complete statement of "the idea in evolution." He knows, quite as well as any one, that there is very much more in it. But this is all that he states of it; it is all that he finds necessary for his immediate purpose; it is all that appears in his discourse as affecting his conclusions. The "process of growth" in a single form appears to be all that was present to his thought at the time; there are no signs that he remembered, as an essential part of "evolution," the succession of forms, the struggle for existence, the survival of the fittest. The growth of religion, for aught that appears to the contrary, is to him a series of developmental changes in a single organism, gradually substituting undifferentiated vagueness for a sharply outlined and highly differentiated configuration; as he himself expresses it, "the chief feature of thought-growth may be described as a passing from definite and narrow outlines of conception to more abstract and vague, but broader, outlines." Now this process is exactly the opposite of evolution,—it is dissolution. Evolution is the change of the homogeneous into the heterogeneous,—of the vague and formless into the sharply outlined form. It is dissolution, not evolution, which Mr. Gannett has described above. The larger, broader, non-personalized, more-comprehensive religion of the nineteenth century is, considered merely with reference to Christianity, a decay and not a further growth. But, considered with reference to the entire history of religion, it is indeed a growth,—not a continuation of the old form under a changed aspect, but the appearance of a new and nobler and vaster form. This is a truth, we believe, of the utmost conceivable importance to a true insight into the religious life of the nineteenth century. Unheralded, unperceived, unrecognized, a new religion of strictly universal characteristics is slowly growing up among men—a new form different from the old form, succeeding to it, irreconcilable with it, destined to supplant it altogether. It is thus a product of "evolution" indeed, but not at all in the sense that Mr. Gannett means—that of a mere expansion and improvement of the old type; it is rather the appearance of a new type. It is a "narrow" view to see nothing in evolution but an interminable series of changes in a single form, and, in studying the series, to mistake the marks of dissolution for those of evolution; it is, on the contrary, a "broad" view of evolution to take into the circle of our vision the endless succession of forms, the struggle for existence among them, the survival of the fittest. We too plead for "breadth of religious culture"; but it must include breadth of thought as well as breadth of sympathy. The world can spare neither; it will insist on both.

Now the conception of evolution which appears in Mr. Gannett's discourse and the conception we have briefly indicated above, if taken as position-points for contemplating the religious landscape, necessitate somewhat unlike prospects. The evolutionist who (for the time being at least) sees nothing in evolution but successive changes in a single type of religion (Christianity?) will inevitably regard Moody's "symbols" and his own "symbols" as expressions of the same substantial thought, differing only in form. The evolutionist who takes the broader view of evolution, and sees how a new and vaster type of religion is imperceptibly to most men succeeding to Christianity, will inevitably perceive differences of substance, as well as of form, between Moody's beliefs and his own. The two evolutionists will not put the same interpretation on the same thing.

For instance, Mr. Gannett finds Moody appealing to "conscience" when he appeals to the "consciousness of sin"; he finds the thirst for righteousness, the consecration of self to the "ideal right," to be the main concern of Moody, when he urges men to "come to Jesus." We partly agree with Mr. Gannett here, and partly not. That Mr. Moody deals with facts of "conscience," when he exerts his utmost strength to create or awaken the "consciousness of sin," is undeniable; but that he "strikes straight for your conscience," we cannot help denying. He strikes straight for your fears of hell, your hopes of heaven, your utter and absolute despair of your own moral strength, your conviction of the total worthlessness of your "conscience" in the attempt to get out of the mire of sin, your loathing for all your own futile attempts at righteousness, your terrified prostration at the feet of one who can do for you what your "conscience" cannot, your faith in the only hand that can pick you out of the slough,—in short, he "strikes straight for your conscience" only in the sense of striking a dagger into it, to kill it if he can, and snatch you from the fatal consequences of trusting to it in the least. Instead of wanting you to give yourself up to the "ideal right," he thinks you will be damned if you do; he wants you to throw yourself blindly, passively, desperately, on the power of your Savior to make you holy without any help from your conscience. The effect of all this is to extinguish all moral self-trust, and thereby to paralyze and pervert the conscience; the appeal is made to your emotional, not to your moral, nature. Mr. Moody strikes straight for your heart, not your conscience; he is just as much afraid of a great, vigorous, self-assertive conscience as he is of a great, vigorous, and self-assertive intellect; for it prohibits this passive surrender of self to Jesus, and tends to create confidence in "mere morality," which all revivalists dread so much. We see no way of identifying Mr. Moody's appeal to the "consciousness of sin" with a true appeal to "conscience"; we see tremendous and ineradicable distinctions between the two; we cannot possibly see only a difference of "symbols" here, but rather a profound difference in the substantial moral facts themselves. If Mr. Moody did indeed "strike straight for your conscience," and labor to set your soul aflame with hunger and thirst for that righteousness which can only be conquered by your own vigorous effort, then would we give him our heartiest sympathy; but this is the very thing he does his utmost to kill out of you. "Not that, not that!" he cries. "Look to the Brazen Serpent alone for salvation from your sins and rescue from your doom! Get away from your miserable, wicked, self-asserting, ruined self—come to Jesus!"

The "consecration of self to the ideal right," which is indeed the substance of the radical's religion, means self-reliance, self-culture, self-devotion to universal rather than personal ends,—in a word, it is "Man's effort to perfect himself" by free, vigorous, forceful activity of natural conscience according to natural reason. But this is the very thing against which Mr. Moody most imploringly warns his hearers; for it means total independence of the personal Savior and total rejection of the "Brazen Serpent." How is it possible, then, that the old religion and the new should differ in form only, and not in substance? The difference goes down deep to the very foundation and centre of each. Mr. Moody knows this perfectly well, and will not be misled by the well-intentioned cry of "peace, peace, when there is no peace"; he knows perfectly well that the gospel he preaches is neither formally nor substantially the same as that which Mr. Gannett preaches; he knows perfectly well that one of the two must give way to the other, and he is laboring with the zeal of an Apostle and the courage of a Crusader to win the victory for his own. It is this battle-energy for his own faith, this consuming fire of earnestness on behalf of his own religion and against the supposed no-religion of the "infidels," that gives him his immense power with the people; and it is this burning earnestness which commands our own deepest admiration of the man. Yet we notice that Mr. Gannett does not even mention it among the "secrets" of Moody's success.

Is there, then, no lesson for radicals in this spectacle of a really great career like Moody's? Verily we believe it. But the lesson we see in it is not that drawn by our friend. "I emphasize it as a duty," says he, "that we should aim to get the power to translate differing faiths into each other." But to do this is a terrible blunder, unless they mean the same thing. If the old gospel of Christianity and the new gospel of Freedom are at heart identical, then indeed it matters little which is preached or which prevails; it is only a matter of metaphors, of phrases, of forms. But if they are radically irreconcilable,—if the ideas, sentiments, purposes, and moral essence of the two are mutually exclusive of each other,—then the world's advance depends on a clear perception of this fundamental dissimilarity, and a wise choice between the two. "Truth" and "error" are not yet outgrown terms. They will not be outgrown while the human intellect survives. All "evolution," in religion as in science, depends on the discovery of new distinctions, not on the industrious effacement of old ones,—on the increasing definiteness, clearness, insight, and scope of human thought, not on a return to the primeval homogeneity and nebulosity of confused and undeveloped beliefs. But this, the real, process of evolution involves the struggle for existence between old errors and new truths, the death of old systems and the birth of better, the dismissal of "superstitions and absurdities" from the human mind and the substitution in their stead of genuine knowledge, higher moral life, grander religious aims. Evolution has its own immutable laws; they do not adapt themselves to human sentiments or wishes; we radicals did not make them and are not responsible for them; they operate all the same, whether we shut our eyes to them or not. "Breadth in religious culture"—does it mean a philosophy less broad than the facts? Or a fellowship so narrow and feeble that it can only exist by confounding things that differ? We plead for a philosophy of religion that shall take in the whole fact of evolution, not merely a part of it,—that shall distinguish things that differ, and not confound the grand, eternal opposition of true and false with the petty fashion-changes of human symbolism. And we plead for a fellowship robust enough to survive the frank avowal of substantial differences of thought and faith, the brave and strenuous defence of his own by each, the shock of systems and the everlasting conflict of religious ideas—broad enough to admire earnestness and devotion for their own sake and to extend a hand of human friendship across the profoundest chasm of religious variance. That is the "breadth of religious culture" for which we plead and toil—breadth that shall be broad enough to include and foster the divine passion for truth and freedom and equal rights, and to establish such a fellowship as shall not be too narrow and sickly to exist in its presence. Such "breadth" as this must first of all learn to "distinguish things that differ"—not "from me," but FROM EACH OTHER.

FREE HALLS.

One of the most significant signs of the time, and indicative of its growing liberal intellectual tendencies, is the multiplication of free halls in country towns. The name, in the sense in which we use it, requires a word of definition. We do not mean halls which are let for any and every purpose of less or greater respectability that will augment the income of their proprietors. There has long been nearly, if not quite, a sufficiency of these,—in some instances too many. We refer to a class that has a higher and more specific claim to the title, sustained for the most part by persons outside of the churches, and necessarily, to a certain extent, in competition with them, since in addition to their secular uses during the week they are open on Sunday to the freest consideration of religion and all that possesses a corresponding interest, serves to quicken independent thought, or promote genuine human culture.

That there has been a rise and rapid increase of those bearing this distinct character, within recent years, can hardly have escaped the notice of ordinarily informed and observing persons. To us they mark the beginning of a new era. They are the precursors of a social and intellectual transition more profound than the majority of those around us suspect or dream. In them, and the organizations which in most instances gather about them, we behold what we believe is destined to become the Church of the future, eventually to supplant the ecclesiasticism which has so long absorbed the sympathies and awayed the minds of mankind. Of course these free halls, of which we are speaking, like everything else in human life, have had their antecedents. They are points in a line of evolution, still going on, in the Church and without it. There has been, in the former, some faint augury of them in the drift of the sects, and the amalgamating tendencies which have been more and more manifest, and especially in what have been known as "Union churches" or places of worship, but which have unhappily often proved in the end those of disunion,—buildings in which different religious sects have combined as one society, with the preaching of each represented from time to time on Sunday, or in which all have rendered their acquiescence or support to that of a particular one, for a period at least. But, as a general rule, sectarian rivalries and jealousies sooner or later have crept in, snapping asunder the bond which held them together at last, and thus the experiment has come to nothing. We have now in mind several such closed and abandoned structures, in different parts of the country, the pitiful monuments of brotherly love turned into brotherly hate, and the discords which overwhelmed them, like the wrecks of once prosperous crafts stranded by the breakers.

Some forty years ago, or thereabouts, there sprung up in New England an impetus for intellectual culture which not only affected the centre of society, but extended to its circumference. It was in its latter relation known as a movement in behalf of the laboring classes, and was much indebted for its initiation to and largely carried forward by Dr. Channing, the eminent Unitarian divine. The term "laboring classes" referred to those engaged in manual labor,—albeit a much narrower application than it ought to receive, since all who work are by right included by it. It was common for persons of scholastic and literary acquirements and benevolent dispositions to engage in educational missions among those just indicated, somewhat as religious ones are prosecuted now among the poor and degraded in certain portions of our great cities. They were addressed upon the importance of intellectual improvement and kindred topics. There are, perhaps, few things better calculated to show the change which has been undergone in the condition of the people than a recurrence to this. What greater insult could be offered to our laboring class to-day than to single them out or imply that they were in especial need of such exertions? The movement to which I have alluded resulted in the establishment of what became distinguished as mechanics' institutes, now pretty nearly submerged in various agencies, with the same and kindred objects, for the general public benefit. Then followed the lyceum or lecture system, and, as an outgrowth and natural consequent of this, free public libraries. All of these have been approaching-steps towards the free halls we have mentioned. They have been gradually and imperceptibly preparing the way for them, if they may not at some time in the future in their turn supersede them.

The free hall is neither Puritan nor Quaker in its tastes and spirit. It recognizes the cheerful as well as the serious side of life, the need of recreation as well as toil,—that human nature is manifold and needs a many-sided culture. It recognizes the need of the beautiful as well as the useful,—that which appeals to the sensibilities and feelings no less than the intellect. The aim is, therefore, to make the building as attractive as possible to the eye, to call into requisition for this purpose the aid of art and all æsthetic associations. It appropriates rather than discards the drama, including the facilities for such representations among its objects and provisions, thus calling forth unconscious or recognized talent in this line of culture and amusement, and enabling the people to supply their own pastimes, largely, rather than to be compelled to depend upon the chance-alternatives presented. Perceiving the universal fondness for dancing which exists, especially among young persons, the free hall sanctions it as a legitimate and healthful diversion, when relieved of objectionable circumstances and pernicious influences.

These reflections have been occasioned by some notices, which have of late appeared, of halls that have been opened corresponding to what we have endeavored to describe. One of these is Cosad Hall, so called from the name of the person through whose munificence it was erected, at Huron, N. Y. Another in Shoemakerville, Pa. Both of these have already been referred to in THE INDEX; and still more recently an elegant and commodious one in the village of Leeds, about two miles from Cosmian Hall, Florence. The latter is a substantial, two-story, brick edifice, the lower part of which is designed for the public school of the place; the upper is a beautifully-frescoed and artistically-finished hall, capable of seating four or five hundred persons, with a stage and appropriate accompaniments for dramatic entertainments. It was recently very happily dedicated by an evening's social gathering, with dancing and a sumptuous collation. As its leading projectors are in full accord with Cosmian Hall, it will doubtless, so far as practicable, represent its plan of operation.

We can but wish for all such enterprises all possible prosperity. May they prove the centres of ennobling and ever-growing influence, and help to make the lives of those who share it in truer accord with the world around them, free from all belittling narrowness, more rational and joyous. D. H. C.

THIS PARAGRAPH has been floating through the press of late: "The Theistic movement in India is spreading rapidly, having now one hundred and eighty churches scattered through that country. It was originated by Rajah Rammohun Roy, but had made little progress until Keshub Chunder Sen joined it in 1858, when it began to establish itself on a permanent basis. In the Hindu Theistic creed there are no dogmas. As the name imports, they worship one God only, and believe in salvation by life and not by creed. They repudiate caste, and preach the brotherhood of all mankind, and in fact are pretty much en rapport with free religionists, and that class of advanced thinkers who stop short of scientific materialism."

THE PHILADELPHIA Christian Statesman of November 30, 1876, in an editorial article entitled "The Religious Amendment Necessary," declared deliberately that the "secular or infidel theory" of government "denies that moral or religious ideas enter into the domain of politics at all." This is, we regret to say, a very frequent but thoroughly unscrupulous misrepresentation. The "secular theory" lays greater emphasis on "moral ideas" than the Christian does, for it holds them to be of primary, not secondary importance. There appears to be a settled and sinister purpose, on the part of the Christian Amendment party, to deceive the people on this all-important point, and, in defiance of truth, to fasten on the friends of secular government the reproach of theoretical and practical immorality.

Communications.

INTUITION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I have read many able and interesting articles in THE INDEX, but, for personal reasons, not one so particularly interesting as the admirable essay on "Intuition" by Wm. Wickersham.

When a lad I began to inquire about intuition and instinct. Receiving no reasonable answer to my queries, I totally rejected the current theories regarding them. Then, with a clean slate, guideless and alone, I investigated in private. For twenty-five years the subject has been kept in view, and it may be that on account of some of the results of my pioneering may not be uninteresting to your readers.

First, I came to a general conclusion much the same as that expressed by Mr. Wickersham. I lay more stress on the element of inherited instinct than he appears to do, partly because I have never met an intuitional person who could not trace the "gift" through the ancestry, and partly on account of the evident impossibility of adding much to it by the experiences of a single lifetime. Is it not a mistake to say: "It is as likely to be wrong as right"? Although the assertion of infallibility from any quarter is an idle boast, and not to be mentioned in connection with this subject, still, when we consider that intuitions are mainly influenced by the recorded or stored-up result of a multitude of experiences running through many generations, is it unreasonable to suppose them to be, not infallible, but generally correct?

I would describe Mr. Wickersham's intuition as individual; that is, not referable to any immediate external human influence. His illustrations could easily be increased from the experience of myself and others known to me, as such phenomena are not uncommon.

But Mr. Wickersham does not touch upon a class of facts to which a persistent study of intuition inevitably leads. If these facts are not intuitive, I know not how to designate them. They might be called social intuitions, because they are produced by the silent action of mind upon mind. They can only be separated from individual intuitions when both parties are conscious of the operation. As the parties are usually unconscious, these "impressions" of one mind upon another are, practically, to be classed with intuitions, owing to the impossibility of distinguishing between them. Such sympathetic intuitions or "impressions" cannot be generally correct, nor a reliable guide. To prove the existence of such a power, there can be mentioned in evidence the now well-attested phenomena known as "mind-reading," clairvoyance, psychometry, mesmerism, etc., etc. The facts of mind-reading and mesmeric control are familiar to the inquiring public; abundance of genuine evidence can be had for the asking; and I only mention an experience of mine to illustrate the extreme sensitiveness and great susceptibility to external "impression" to which human nature is capable of arriving.

If a sealed letter were placed in my hand, I could, without taking any notice of the letter except to hold it, give an accurate description of the personal appearance, disposition, and character of the writer. If the letter was dictated, I could describe the characters of both the dictator and amanuensis, and state the bodily and mental conditions of both at the time the writing was executed. In every case the parties were entire strangers to me, and the distance from me of the writer, whether fifty or one thousand miles, made no difference to the result. On one occasion I was handed a letter by a conservative old physician. Soon I began to feel confused and ill, as if I was narcotized. Returning the letter, I remarked that it had been written amid the fumes of tobacco-smoke, and, if he desired me to describe, he must give me a letter free from the exhalations of tobacco and disease,—a clean letter. With much astonishment he complied, saying that the letter had been written a few days previously by an inveterate smoker who lived one hundred and fifty miles distant. I could fill a volume with remarkable experiences of a similar nature, but at this time I only wish to illustrate. I tested the matter thoroughly and satisfactorily, since which time no further experience of that kind has occurred to me.

The final result of my experimenting led to the conclusion that much of our mental activity, whether classed as intuitive or not, is made up of unconscious impressions received from other and unrecognized minds; also, that presence of the impressor was not essential to that activity; and, in comparatively rare cases, great distance was no hindrance. Mind cannot be wholly isolated from mind. The atmosphere is as good a conductor for it as the wire is for the magnetic telegraph. The battery is the nervous system; the "force" generated, what is it? There is no difference whether we call it "odic" force, or "odilic," or "psychic"; it is a fact. Any crooked word will do to cover our dense ignorance of the nature and modus operandi of this human power. Dr. Brown-Séquard says that the "nervous force" cannot be extended beyond the limits of the nervous system, but is capable of being transformed into a finer force that can be thus extended. This indicates the source of the "force" under consideration. While some persons possess it in a very remarkable degree, it is undoubtedly common to humanity, and may in the future become highly developed in the whole race. Probably the highly intuitional organization is always accompanied by a peculiar growth of the nervous system, and, while the main element is inherited, the "gift" may be enhanced by the severer disciplines of our struggling lives. If, as seems to be the case, civilization is gradually multiplying intuitional organizations and increasing the closely allied "force" under consideration,—the latter may become one of the prime characteristics of the future of humanity.

My journey through Intuition Land was both interesting and pleasant, and I heard no bad news by the way. At the start I left behind me the ancient spectral illusions, superstition and infallibility. Not a sign of anything super to the natural was to be discovered. The roadway was solid beneath every footstroke; the bridges would hold up an army; and, as I leisurely pursued my way, the scenery appeared the same thing whether viewed through the spectrum of clairvoyance, the telescope of direct perception (intuition or short logic), or the microscope of understanding (long logic). The pure air was fatal to false distinctions. When I saw "spirit," I also saw "matter"; when matter was seen, spirit was there; not the slightest chink could be detected into which a wedge could be inserted; not a particle of evidence disclosed itself that the two ever had been or could be separated. Thought itself seemed to be an indivisible union of spirit and matter. The fictitious barrier which the priests, with an air of "repressed omniscience," had raised sky-high between man and his relations dissolved like a mist; and he was seen to be, not an interjection upon the face of this fair planet, but a literal product of total life.

This eventful "journey" furnished much curious material for future reflection. The wonderful "Black Forest" of growth revealing the long and shadowy paths of genius, descent, selection, variation, progression, retrogression, all tending to disclose man's nascent capabilities, the development of which shall raise him to godlike estate in the distant future; the rich and glorious valley of human culture; its origin and continuance; the rugged but strengthening hills of discipline; the beautiful, flowering meadows of sympathy and influence; the broad realm newly opening to science,—all this and much more was presented to my quickened mind before I halted near the eastern shore of the murmuring mystic ocean.

Nature hath no ends; any seeming end is the beginning of a new design. All the paths of science lead to unexplored lands. The study of intuition is no exception. As I gazed westward across the gleaming, tempting waters, unsolved problems arose before me, some of them bearing the following names: revelation, inspiration, prophecy, miracle, immortality, and spirit communion. But we will abide here for the present, as navigation of the mystic ocean is said to be perilous and unprofitable.

In this hasty and imperfect outline of "conclusions," there is nothing new, and it is not offered because of any expectation that the opinions of a private and obscure person can be effective, but rather with the object of sustaining somewhat the interest of your readers, and with the hope that those competent to the task will continue to enlighten us on so important a subject, through THE INDEX.

EX-REFORMER.

SHOULD CRIME BE PUNISHED?

The right of one human being to inflict punishment upon another is the one earliest questioned by humanity. It is evident that the only right that man has to make laws for his fellow-man originated in the exigencies of society, and that the only legitimate object of human law is the protection of the rights of person and property, and the prevention of crimes against them. A moment's reflection will show that no law can be justified that does not, directly or indirectly, have this object in view. The idea of punishment does not properly enter into the matter further than that it is the necessary consequence of the violation of law, whether natural or artificial.

Man readily perceives the chief laws of Nature, and learns to live in accordance with them, knowing that their violation entails certain punishment. He recognizes most moral laws, but is apt to mix his ideas of morality with those of religion and consequently of divinity, and to imagine that infractions are to be punished only by divinity, and with some specific penalty. Of human law he has generally a clearer perception, though too often led away by the fallacy that it is founded on divine authority; and to this cause some of the most outrageous laws and legal customs still extant owe their existence.

He already realizes that he cannot with his naked hand grasp red-hot iron without suffering more than he can bear. When he realizes that he cannot commit an immorality without suffering, he has done much toward becoming moral. When it is made clear to him that he cannot, without infallibly suffering, infringe human laws, he will be in a fair way of becoming eventually really humane.

In governing a very young child, it is not always possible to do so by appeals to reason alone, and the parental authority per se must then be exercised. As with immature individuals, so with immature peoples. The astute Moses knew well the childlike intellect of the race he led from centuries of debasing slavery towards national independence. In the laws he made for them, whether relating to personal cleanliness or public health, whether providing a day's rest in seven for the weary body, or a year's repose for the exhausted soil, no reliance was placed on their common sense, and the binding clause of every commandment was, "I am the Lord thy God!"

Surely, the days for governing intelligent communities like children have forever passed away! The element of fear, the dread of a penalty, is legitimate and necessary in enforcing law, but only when entirely removed from the idea of vengeance, and when the penalty is known to be the inseparable and infallible consequence of wrong-doing, and directly proportionate to the wrong done.

The primary object of law being, as we have seen, the entire prevention of all wrong, and this being in the nature of things impossible, the secondary object should obviously be the reparation of the wrong done as far as practicable. This is justice. The principle fault of codes has been that justice and law have not been synonymous terms.

If the forger, robber, incendiary, or other trespasser against property is convicted and sentenced to imprisonment or fine, the crime has neither been prevented nor the injury repaired. Consequently the chief ends of law have not been secured, and it is a mockery to say that the law-breaker has been "brought to justice." A crime being proved, the first consideration should be the repair of the injury at the expense of the criminal. In the case of a direct crime against the rights of property, this would be easily accomplished by restoring the amount lost out of the possessions of the criminal, or out of the proceeds of his enforced labor, if he possessed nothing. If the crime were against the rights of person, or the injury of such a nature as to have no recognized money equivalent, the proper amount of damages to be paid to the injured party at the expense of the criminal, or the proper method of reparation, should be determined by a jury, as is now done in purely civil suits. In either case the government should immediately pay the amount, and then "take it out" of the criminal by confiscating his property or selling the results of his labor at the employment in which he can exercise the greatest winning capacity compatible with loss of liberty.

It might be urged that the most worthless individual is capable of committing a crime for which he could not atone in the longest life. This is true; but he could atone in part, and would never endanger society by having an opportunity to commit crime again. If a miserable ruffian took a valuable life, he might never be able to wholly pay for it, but at all events he would never be pardoned out to do another murder, and this is all that is assured by hanging, unless it be claimed that hanging operates as a powerful influence to deter others from murder, which is denied by many.

People of criminal tendencies need to be impressed sharply with the conviction that it doesn't pay to do wrong, and that they must pay for the wrong they do. There is no infraction of an individual or public right that could not be atoned for and repaired as far as atonement is possible. Absolute justice cannot be expected till mankind becomes perfect. There are, too, under existing laws, some things prohibited which do not in themselves infringe any private or public right. Such laws would then be seen to be absurd, and would be repealed.

The cost of prosecution and litigation, including all lawyers' fees and court expenses, should be borne by government and charged to convicted wrong-doers and dishonest suitors. In this way law, or rather justice, instead of being notoriously the most expensive article obtainable, would be free as air to the righteous and costly as sin to the wicked.

It may be objected that additional burdens would be imposed upon the public treasury; but this fear would be a salutary thing for the public, for no longer would individuals tolerate the wrong-doing going on under their eyes every day, knowing that eventually every one would have to settle for his share of the consequences. Verily, the pocket is oftener tender than the conscience!

WM. L. BALCH.

BOSTON.

THE SOUL.

"Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my soul."—JOB 9: 21.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

How many thousands, since poor perplexed Job, have anxiously repeated his question: "If a man dies, shall he live again?" Yet throughout all these long centuries there never was, there never will be, one living to answer this question with any degree of certainty. No—no more than the question, "Is there a God?" or the question, "Has man a soul? And, if he has, what is it?" For all men must again ask with Job, "Can God be found out by searching?" and confess with him, "Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my soul." Theologians may assert the existence of God, of a soul, but they cannot prove their assertion true, any more than sceptics can demonstrate or prove their non-existence. All the arguments ever adduced to prove their existence, all the talk about our desires and longings and aspirations, can, when critically analyzed, weigh no more than all the arguments and talk to the contrary. And though we claim for the belief in God, soul, and immortality all the alleged sweetness, bliss, and consolation for the human heart, yet, when candidly scrutinized, these, like the belief, will prove but illusory, not founded, as claimed, in human nature, but inculcated in man by teaching, education, social surroundings and influences, an egotistic self-love, and an unwarranted over-estimation of man, etc. Pleasing as they may be to us, they can, of course, never be a proof per se of the correctness of the belief or the reality of its objects. Castles in the air, too, may be very pleasing to some visionary and dreaming minds; but this does not make them a reality.

What is the soul? Is it, as the large majority of men believe, an entity, dwelling merely temporarily in man? Or is it, as experience shows against this belief, identical with his peculiar organism and merely the manifestation of certain modes of actions of distinct parts of this organism? If an entity, a "something" distinct and separate from his physical organism, then we must ask, How and when does it become an occupant of, and connected with, the body? At the moment of the latter's birth? Or has it had a prenatal existence? If the latter, how and when does it become united with the embryo, and at what state of it?

These, and countless questions of a similar nature, we must ask, but no satisfactory answer can be given; i. e., none sanctioned by science and experience. Only theology, which is never embarrassed by any question, will answer them unhesitatingly and positively. Its answer is all we have, all we know, of a soul. And though it must be admitted that philosophers, and metaphysicians, too, especially the older ones, speak also of the soul as an entity, yet they do it more as a means to explain thereby the so-called "mental manifestations" and "mental faculties" of man, and do not pretend to know everything about the nature of the soul; nor do they speak of it with that audacious positivism as do the theologians. Once more, though the former, too, speak of the soul and consider it as "that part of man which enables him to think" (Webster), yet they are neither as dogmatic as to its "spirituality," nor as to its "immortality" as the theologians. For they know and admit that a "spirit" is just as incomprehensible a thing as a "soul"; whose pretended "spirituality" and "immortality" is but a speculation, an inevitable consequence of claiming it to be an entity. The adherents to that doctrine will not allow it to be material, and thus are by sheer necessity driven to make it "a spirit," and, denying its dependence on, its origin in and with the body, to ascribe to it also "immortality."

That is what we are brought to by accepting the theological theory that the soul is an entity—a "something" different from and independent of the body. Now let us see what science and experience will teach us, and whether they will not rather sustain the theory that the soul is identical with the human organism, and merely the manifestation of certain modes of action of distinct parts of this organism.

The child just born is manifestly but an animal; merely an animal, and a very helpless one at that. Its motions are few, circumscribed, and almost aimless. Its meaningless staring in the vacuum can neither be attracted by, nor fixed on, any thing or person. It does not even recognize its own mother, and is in that respect even inferior to the higher animals. But its body grows and develops at that early period remarkably fast, and after an elapse of a few weeks it gives the first sign of that nascent intellect by which it is destined in future to become superior to all animals: its smiles. But this smile is yet unconscious and merely a sign of its future superiority. Thus is the body (please note the word!) going on growing and developing into childhood, boy or girlhood, youth, maturity, and man or womanhood; and after having thus reached, in years, its full bloom, its organs lose again by age and in slow degrees their vigor and fall to perform their functions. Not seldom there comes a "second childhood." When vital organs thus become incapable to perform their allotted functions, or when the necessary harmony of action between all parts of the whole organism is thus disturbed, death ensues.

Precisely the same is the growth, development, and decrease of the "soul," or, what is the same, the "mentality" of man; by which, however, this highly important and most significant fact is to be noted, that no "spiritual," or "mental," or "soul" action takes place until the physical or bodily organ, on which this action depends, has previously gained sufficient development to sustain such "spiritual" action. This very important and most significant fact may be verified by every thoughtful observer, and will also be testified to by every physician worthy of that profession. Who does not know that "uncommonly smart" children, i. e., those who manifest a "mental development" beyond their years, and hence too fast for their physical development, are much more likely to die in their childhood than children of a dull or at least less precocious "mind"? Is not their immature death unanimously, almost proverbially (and correctly, too), ascribed to their "smartness"; i. e., the uncommon forwardness of their mental development?

These well-known and attested facts I hold to be sufficient "circumstantial evidence" to base on them unhesitatingly the verdict that the soul is not an entity, not a "something" independent of the body, but merely the manifestation of certain modes of action of distinct organs of the body. But these facts, decisive as they ought to be, are by no means all the evidence in the case. It is further admitted by all, that the nerves are the mediums of sensation, and more especially the brain, the organ producing thought and intelligence. Now almost every member of the body might be amputated, and yet, if only the brain (and heart) be whole and uninjured, the man may yet preserve his soul; i. e., life. Every battle-field furnishes proof of this. But if the brain (the "soul's workshop") be injured by any cause, "mental" or physical, by a sudden shock or by a blow on the head, either total or partial insanity, idiocy, or death will follow, according to the nature of its injury. Well, then, if the "soul" is an entity, is independent of, and something different from, the body, how, I ask, can it be thus affected by the brain's injury? Must it then not be clear as sunshine that man has no soul that is an entity; that what is generally but mistakenly supposed to be the soul or its action is neither more nor less than the effect of the natural and proper action of the human body and its organs? Verily, old Job said truly: "Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my soul."

After what has been said above, it will hardly be necessary to argue on the "Immortality of the Soul." For if the soul is no entity, if it is identical with and not "a something" different from the body, merely the effect of its action, the "soul" can, of course, not be "immortal" when the body and its organs and their action will not "endure for ever."

MORRIS EINHORN.

THE PAINE BUST.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Because Philadelphia witnessed the birth of our nation, which owes its existence in no slight degree to the friendly cooperation of Paine and Washington, the subscribers to the bust deemed it to be historically appropriate to place it within her repository of memorials. The admirers of Paine desired that he should be remembered in this way, jointly with the heroes of Orthodoxy; not in an odious comparison, but on an equality with those who are exalted while Paine is denied all appropriate recognition for his great services in the cause of humanity.

The Select Council of that city have declined to receive the proffered Centennial gift, and the spirit of courtesy and fraternity actuating the donors of the bust is repulsed arrogantly, discourteously, unfraternally. They decline to admit to the companionship of memorials of the Revolution, selfishly claimed to the glory of Orthodoxy, an image of Paine, which the excommunicated have in turn decreed to excommunicate, with less grace or righteousness than a Popish bull in protection of the "only true Church" against the influences of the "godless."

As citizens of a republic boastfully founded upon principles of equal tolerance of religious views, it is difficult to conceive of a fair ground of justification upon which to base the action of the Select Council. Exercising a little brief authority, professedly in the name of One blazoned in their lip-service as the Savior of all sinners, they convey to the free religionists, their own countrymen, a message as undiluted with the gospel of love as the expressions of the Pharisees to the twelve Apostles and their Chief. It is a cause for general humiliation that a body of representative men, gathered in a chief city of the country, should be found consenting blindly to the exercise of a stale artifice peculiar to an age of religious persecution, and foreign to religious freedom. Their act is pre-eminently an appeal to the thoughtful to rebuke its mistaken purpose and insidious tyranny.

The Select Council have provoked every friend of Paine to protest, and added to the host of his admirers ten thousand defenders of the State as against the Church. In this respect the donors of the bust derive an unexpected compensation, and the genius and ability of Paine's teachings become the more irrepressible. I heartily concur with Mr. Morse and THE INDEX in advising the retention of the bust in Philadelphia until, through the operation of the powers of reason, the intolerance of the Select Council shall give way to a spirit more becoming the "City of Brotherly Love," and it shall be placed where it appropriately belongs.

Very respectfully,

EMERSON BENTLEY.

MORGAN CITY, La., Feb. 9, 1877.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

When I first heard of the intention of putting God into the Constitution, there awoke in my memory something I had read in an old cook-book in regard to cooking a hare. The directions commenced with: "First catch your hare." Now if the people will obey that direction in regard to this matter, and first catch their God, and prove that they have the right one (for there are Gods many and Lords many, so that each party has one of their own), I see no objections to his being put in the Constitution, if he is willing.

But I think it high time this business was settled. He has appropriated the honors that belong to Nature for at least six thousand years. The Bible has had its day, and all the powers of hell (by which I mean the animal forces that still blind reason) can never restore its former authority. Science and sound common-sense are fast taking the place of old traditions and imaginary duties to God. The great final battle between the Bible and Science will be fought in America this coming four years, and man's God will find its level.

Before the people can decide what parties belong at the head of the nation, they must decide which God they will have in the Constitution. The choice lies between these two,—the one that was evolved through Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, culminating in Jesus, or the one that was evolved through Sarah, Rebekah, and Rachel, culminating in Mary of Nazareth. These two are confounded in the New Testament. Paul saw that, and was equal to the emergency, and straightway put a veto on woman's God, which has remained unto this day. But in this blessed day of scientific investigation, when hidden mysteries are being revealed, woman's God is coming to the front. Through the process of the investigation, the people's eyes will be opened and they will then see that the nation (and all other organizations) needs a mother as well as a father to hold it together in the hands of love and social fellowship. There can be no national peace independent of social peace. A united nation is built up of united families held together by the conjugal love that exists between the parents.

MARY ELIZABETH ADAMS.

WORCESTER, Mass.

THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS.

SMITH CENTRE, Kan., Feb. 12, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, ordered for the Smith County Liberal Association, came to hand in due time. I have just read mine with a degree of satisfaction, and a revived hope in the dawning future, that actuate me to contribute my mite to the mass of evidence which shows so strikingly that, as the world moves, bigotry and slavery give way to liberality and freedom.

Even away out here, on these fertile but sparsely-inhabited prairies of Western Kansas, are at least some who read with eager interest the proceedings of those fearless but considerate persons assembled in Concert Hall, Philadelphia, last July. To keep up our organization in this county will be attended with some difficulty, owing to distance intervening between the members and the fact that we are all poor, and need to labor all the time for our own support. But the liberal element is gaining favor, and Associations or Leagues will be formed in other localities contiguous to this. Though you may not hear much from us, you need not suppose we are all asleep. Your columns are generally occupied by more interesting matter than we can furnish at present, and we do not feel at liberty to intrude.

But allow me to congratulate our Eastern brethren upon the success of the Congress of 1876. From reading the report, every one seems to have acted with a due respect for liberty and unity. And those papers read there—I can't express a choice—ought all to be in the hands of every reading person in the United States. May the good work go bravely on!

We learn that Boston was once the scene of the most horrible crimes in the name of religion; but now that she has become noted for the promulgation of modern truths, may those few brave "souls" within the limits of the old "hub" succeed in producing a degree of agitation that shall send the glad tidings of practical liberty to the uttermost parts of the earth.

Fraternalty yours,

WM. A. GARRETTSON.

ACCURACY IN EPITHETS.

The Moody-and-Sankey people—that is to say, the people who call themselves "evangelical"—make great use of the word "believers," and try to secure a monopoly of it for the benefit of the group of sects to one or another of which they all belong. It seems rather curious that men who claim the title of "believers," in consequence of their acceptance of certain doctrines as true without evidence or examination, should stigmatize others as "unbelievers" because the latter, having examined, find the evidence to be against those doctrines. Nevertheless, such is the custom of a large number of our fellow-citizens, men, too, who, on matters other than religion and theology, may fairly be considered intelligent. Yet, if religious belief is a good thing at all, it seems to me that there are people much better entitled to the epithet "believers" than those who, as above stated, try to monopolize it. They are—

Those who, believing firmly in a good God, therefore cannot admit the existence of what is ecclesiastically called "the devil."

Those who, believing firmly in a Providence, benevolent and beneficent, therefore cannot admit the reality of what is ecclesiastically called "hell."

Those who, believing firmly in a just Providence, which will "render to every man according to his works," therefore cannot admit that the fulfillment of duty by one person will neutralize and abolish the penalty divinely annexed to the violation of duty by another person.

Those who, firmly believing in immortality, the doctrine that the soul, which is the man, never dies, therefore cannot admit the notion of a resurrection from the dead.

Those who, firmly believing in an existing kingdom of God, the doctrine that the Creator of the world really rules it, and that mankind are now just where he expected and intended they should be in this early stage of their existence, therefore cannot admit that the kingdom of God is yet to come. BELIEVER.

A WOMAN CHAMPION OF FREETHOUGHT.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Mrs. Mattie Hulet Parry, of Beloit, Wisconsin, has just completed in the Opera House, to crowded houses whom she held spell-bound by her eloquence and logic, the most telling course of lectures ever delivered in this city.

As an advocate of temperance and moral reform, she has no superior; and as a champion of freedom, freethought, free religion, and the inalienable rights of all mankind, she is a terror to bigots and religious bull-dozers, whom she challenges to a free rostrum, and will speak from no other. All honor to the noble, brave, little woman, before whom the proscriptive clergy cannot and dare not stand!

JOHN WILCOX.

EDDYVILLE, Iowa, Jan. 25, 1877.

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

EDITOR INDEX:—

Protestantism tries to overcome the merited disgrace attached to the churches for their persecution of scientific men of the past by saying that it was the Catholics who imprisoned Galileo, Kopernik, and others, and stirred up the people against them. Now arises this question: What is the difference between a Catholic priest of the Middle Ages hurling "infidel," "atheist," "blasphemer of God," etc., against Galileo and Kopernik, as history shows that the clergy did, and a Protestant minister of this age hurling the same epithets at Tyndall, Huxley, and Spencer? Is it not the same old spirit of superstition and bigotry, only restrained from bodily persecution by the growth of the world? L.

IT IS TOLD of a map agent that on a recent trip he was attacked by highway robbers, who demanded his money. As he was too prudent to carry money in the country, they failed to make a haul out of their victim. "But," said the agent, "I have some splendid maps of the country along with me, which I should like to show you." And in a twinkling he was off his horse, had a map stuck upon a pole, and explained it so effectively that he sold each of the bandits a map, pocketed the money, and resumed his journey.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.	13 to 25 "	26 to 50 "	51 to 100 "	Over 100 "
10c	8c	6c	5c	4c

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MÜLLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loe, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Fenton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 80 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	4.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AURBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
AIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	6.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 1 vol.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Letter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, $1 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COBBELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Youmans, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: A Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 3 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.00
DUNNING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 1 vol.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.00
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
KVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	1.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	8.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayly Taylor. 3 vols. For vol. Executive Annals.....	5.00
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GRÖTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unconscious Mind.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.50
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	3.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 1 vol.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait, 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.25
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Land.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUKLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCOIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy, Doctrine and Practical.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.00
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Sermons, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeamors of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence. The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tretty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHULLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Boscawen.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	41.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Social to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	3.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TADNIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Tale. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip, Penderick.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, David Rival, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
Letters.....	1.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	6.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterburg.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.00
Real Folks.....	1.00
The Other Girls.....	1.00
Pandies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

321 Washington St., Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1870 1871 1872 1873 1874, 1875, and 1876.

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF— THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

FOUR COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL.

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER.

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES.....	40
FIFTY ".....	75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.50
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.50
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	5.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Kellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.

EDITED BY

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.

17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 6 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1873, '75, '76, '77. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FRANCONIA AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

- Jan. 7—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."
Jan. 14—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."
Jan. 21—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual."—A New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.

Jan. 28—Wm. R. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Ruling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed."
Feb. 4—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.

Feb. 11—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."

"The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.—

Feb. 18—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."

Feb. 25—Clay McCauley. "Dr. Channing."

March 4—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."

March 11—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."
Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 451 Washington Street.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL for both sexes. Address EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved (22) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant,—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, æsthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

THE LABOR QUESTION—

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fluke, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orvis, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howland N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Barol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. E. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,

Lock Box 569, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 15, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 377.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.
2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.
3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.
4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.
5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.
6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.
7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."
8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.
9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.
10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.
11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.
12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practicing the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.
13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THERE IS great pathos in this confession, attributed to Alexander H. Stephens: "I want to go. What is there left to tie me to this world? My brother, my comrades, my friends have all gone, and I am ready to go to them. I am weary of this world and its sufferings."

INTERESTING STATISTICS of the schools of New York are given by Governor Robinson: "There are in the State 1,585,601 persons between the ages of five and twenty-one. The number of children attending public schools is 1,067,199, or all of these, except 518,402. Of this remainder, 134,404 are in private schools. The total expense of the public schools is about eleven and a half millions of dollars."

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CATHEDRAL in New York city has just been exempted, by a special resolution of the Board of Aldermen, from a tax of about $700 for the privilege of connection with the city sewer. Mayor Wickham vetoed this resolution, on the ground that all churches pay this tax, only school and city buildings being exempted. But the Aldermen passed it over the Mayor's veto, notwithstanding his arguments. This is not a fact of 1870, but a fact of 1877. There is no use in hoping for any cessation of these depredations, until the liberals combine to cut away the pretext for them.

AT A MEETING of the Baptist ministers of Brooklyn and New York, January 29, the Tribune reports the following extraordinary remarks as part of the proceedings: "Dr. Fish, of Newark, said that since he had heard Huxley he had had less fear of the scientists. He said: 'I think in all soberness that Huxley made a perfect ass of himself, and that this is not too strong language to use.' In his opinion there had been a reaction against evolution in this part of the country since Prof. Huxley's visit. Prof. Fox said he heard Huxley lecture, and that 'it was the absurd exposition of himself I ever heard a man make.' Other remarks were not so strongly expressed but similar in tone."

A BATTLE-HYMN of the Turks has been translated as follows, and evinces the fierce fanaticism which will undoubtedly make the threatened war between Turkey and Russia a terrible one: "Allah calls us! Allah invites! Allah! Up to the seventh heaven rise the vile odor and the insolence of the infidels. Allah calls! Allah invites! The bloody combat opens. To the conquerors, the Prophet will open the gates of Paradise. Allah is great! The corpses of our brethren will remain upon the field of carnage, that they may breathe pestilence, desolation, and death into the camp of our enemies. Weep not for them! The avenging sword of the sons of the prophet will slay by the side of each a hundred, as a compensation for their death. Dead or alive, may their corpses or their weapons sow destruction and mourning in the infidel ranks! Weep not for them! Allah is great! The Christians crushed, our dead will inherit all the joys promised by the Prophet in his love for his people. To the combat! To carnage! Allah calls us! Allah invites us!"

THE WALL STREET prayer-meeting, on a recent occasion, proved that New York has its quota of blind believers in Protestant miracles: "Then an earnest speaker arose and told how much better it was to test religion by prayer rather than by science. He told how fifteen women got in trouble, and knelt and prayed together; and while they prayed a sick man, 'who was supposed to be bedridden, got up, and came to New York and paid some money to some one, who paid it to some one else, who put it in an institution from which the troubled woman were benefited.' Then he told how all his family were ill beyond physicians' aid, and by prayer all had been made sound." But at the same meeting there was some talk of a different kind: "A Mr. F. S. Weed declared that he was a sceptic. He doubted the early teachings of his parents and had yet to see in the Christian religion something tangible and substantial. He had got down and prayed for religion, but couldn't get it, and in his opinion there is something wrong about the way religion is to be reached. . . . Two persons spoke briefly, and then Mr. Weed again arose and said he had been a soldier and a sailor, had served in more than one war, and had gone through everything that a man could go through and live, and experience had taught him that what his parents used to teach about religion wouldn't stand the test of science—or even common-sense. Nobody answered the sceptic the second time, but all joined lustily in drowning remembrance of his disbelief in the stirring song of 'Hold the Fort.'"

DANIEL DERONDA'S influence may be at the bottom of the fact thus recorded by the London Jewish Herald: "The last four or five years have witnessed a return of the Jews to Palestine from all parts, but more especially from Russia, which has been altogether unprecedented. The Hebrew population of Jerusalem is now probably double what it was some ten years ago. Accurate statistics on this subject it is impossible to find, as the Eastern Jews dread a census from superstitious reasons, and also from the fear of having to pay more by the way of poll-tax to the Turks if their true numbers were known. For these reasons, and especially the latter, their official returns on the subject are not to be trusted. In 1872 and 1873 such numbers returned to Saphed alone, one of the four holy cities of the Jews, in the mountains of Galilee, that there were no houses to receive them, and building was for a considerable length of time carried on all night, as well as all day. This, be it remembered, in the East, where 'the night' is emphatically the time 'in which no man can work.' Great accessions still continue daily; and whereas, ten years ago, the Jews were confined to their own quarter in Jerusalem, the poorest and worst, they now inhabit all parts of the city, and are always ready to rent every house that is to be let. Notwithstanding this happy change, owing to want of accommodation still, a building society has been formed, and many of its simple tenements are now rising outside the city to the north-west. Even before this many Jewish houses had already been built in two little colonies outside the Jaffa Gate. Moreover, the Jews in Palestine are certainly acquiring possession of landed property in the villages and country districts."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. B. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. S. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 HARRI B. FELSETHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE BEAVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....141 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. B. WALLIS,.....South Water, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Bathurst, Iowa.
 HERMAN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 E. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. OUTLER,.....Quetman, Ga.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....34 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARRIAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and feasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

Concerning Immortality.

BY J. L. STODDARD.

"Mors semperiternus somnus, an initium alterius vite est?"

The author of that account of creation found in the book of Genesis uses the following words in reference to the sun and moon: "And God said: Let there be lights in the firmament of heaven to give light upon the earth. And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day and the lesser light to rule the night. And God set them in the firmament of heaven to give light upon the earth." This language represents the thought so natural and universal in unscientific ages, that our earth is the most important object in the universe, around which the heavenly bodies revolve, whose sole business it is to furnish the inhabitants of our globe with light.

But after long ages of error, this idea was shown (in spite of intense theological opposition and priestly persecution) by Copernicus, Galileo, Kepler, and Newton to be false. Mankind learned that our sun, far from revolving about our earth, was instead the centre of a mighty system in which the earth was a subordinate planet; and that around this great luminary, more than a million times vaster than our tiny globe, we were sweeping in the position of a humble satellite.

The sun, then, so far from being hung up in the "firmament" as an immense lantern for our earth, was shown to be the parent from which we had sprung, the source of our life, light, and heat; and yet it was discovered that we receive less than the two-thousand-millionth part of all the supply of that light and heat which the sun is constantly pouring forth into space on all sides!

Overwhelmed by this vast change in their conceptions of the universe, men still clung fondly to the notion that at least our solar system was the central one in the great realms of space. But the elder Herschel proved this conception also to be false, our system being the merest drop in the infinite star-universe. Accepting, then, this further idea of subordination, men still deemed the position of our sun a sufficiently important one from which to measure the stellar system.

But it begins to be seen now that this also is incorrect; that our sun is so comparatively small and insignificant (some orbs exceeding it one or two thousand times in magnitude), that it is not a suitable centre whence to estimate the extent of the myriad systems of suns about us; and that indeed the starry universe is for us immeasurable. We may say of it, as Pascal said of space, that its centre is everywhere and its circumference nowhere. Let us, on some clear evening, stand dumb with awe under the glittering expanse of heaven and reflect upon our position in the great universe. The tiny globe beneath our feet, upon whose thin-formed crust we rear our dwellings, is bearing us onward through the dark void at a rate of eighteen miles per second, or nearly eleven hundred miles per minute. At the enormous distance of ninety-two millions of miles is our great parent sun, around which and obedient to whose call we whirl along our silent way. The nearest object in our vision, our own bright moon, whose drawing impulse causes yonder waves to thunder at our feet, is circling round us at a distance of two hundred and thirty-eight thousand miles. But far beyond these feeble limits, at inconceivable remove from our own sun and fellow-planets, gleam the far-off suns, which telescopic scrutiny only reveals as strewn like atoms in the depths of space. While yonder milky-way—that faint, white streak across the sky—we know to be the brilliant pathway of millions of such suns as ours, speeding with inconceivable rapidity on their several courses through the interstellar depths. At such an hour we realize the insignificance of our tiny planet in the boundless universe of which we form so trifling a part. But if this be true of the earth itself, considered in its relations to the worlds beyond us, what shall we say when we turn our attention to the phenomenon of human life upon our globe?

From the inconceivably distant epoch, when our earth was a mere "fluid haze of light," to the era when it began to take form as an incandescent globe, and then during the long ages which elapsed while its intense heat was radiating off into space and its thin crust was slowly forming, up to the time when any germ of life could possibly exist,—during all those vast time-intervals of our globe's existence, there was no life upon it, much less human life. Only after æon succeeding æon, during which our earth was gradually becoming fit to support higher and higher grades of beings, and in comparatively recent times, did man make his first appearance here.

But the great lifeless epochs of the past history of our planet are destined to be repeated in its future history. In a comparatively short time (speaking in geological measurements) life will once more be wanting upon our earth, and it will roll onward in its orbit, cold, lifeless, and deserted.

We see our own future written, as it were upon a scroll, in our neighbor, the planet Mars, and in our own offspring, the moon. Both of these bodies, like our earth, once possessed great stores of force in their inherent heat, which have from the outset of their career been slowly but surely passing away. Now the moon certainly, and Mars probably, circle about the sun with a perfect absence of life upon their surfaces. For as Mars is much smaller than our earth and at a greater distance from the sun (and hence earlier formed), so it has doubtless radiated forth its heat more rapidly than have larger bodies, and has therefore probably passed much more swiftly through its various cycles of existence. We know, indeed, that Mars possesses lands and seas;

we see their outlines; we detect there even a thin atmosphere; we notice that snows collect on its polar regions in winter and diminish in summer. Yet it is believed by many that, owing to its smaller size and greater age, this planet is already far-advanced towards that lifeless stage in which we find the moon to be. There there is now no atmosphere. Its vast ocean-beds alone reveal to us that bodies of water once rolled upon its surface. Its crust is torn by enormous volcanic craters, whose fearful fires have long since been extinguished. Its internal heat is gone. It has reached its limit of contraction and consolidation. And when the earth's inherent heat shall have wholly passed away (as passing away it surely is), and long ages shall have elapsed since she was the abode of life, then will her desert continents and dry ocean-beds resemble the desolate wastes which we see to-day upon the lunar crust. In a miniature, therefore, forty-nine times smaller than our earth, we read our own inevitable fate at a remote age. Compared, then, with the duration of a planet's existence, its life-supporting era is exceedingly short; and during that life-supporting era the period when it is capable of supporting human life is vastly shorter. Helmholtz has well said: "The duration of life on our earth is but the minutest ripple in the infinite ocean of time!" What, then, is the duration of one form of this life, that of the human family? And, a fortiori, what is the duration of an individual life? Such being the results of our inquiry into man's position in the universe, as an inhabitant of this tiny globe, in the midst of whose eras the life of his entire race appears as a minor item, let us turn to man's own constitution and investigate his relative importance here. Without entering into any long disquisition upon the great theory of evolution and the origin of man, let me premise only the following remarks:—

It is the accepted teaching of geology that a gradual but steady progress in forms of life, from lower to higher, has been going on ever since the beginning of life upon our planet. It is, moreover, almost universally accepted by scientists that our present forms of life are all derived from pre-existing forms, and that they in their turn were similarly derived, and so on in constantly narrowing lines until the determination of family, order, and class becomes more and more difficult, and we draw near to the few simple ancestral forms from which these have been variously derived and developed. Embryology, physiology, and comparative anatomy all furnish their respective powerful proofs in support of this testimony of the rocks. Especially important is the evidence which embryology has given in favor of this theory. It has shown us that if, as is the case, complex organisms are developed in a few weeks or months from minute germ cells (scarcely differing from each other under microscopic investigation, whether they be those of a dog, a tortoise, or a man), there is nothing incredible in the idea that a complex organism should have been developed through long ages and through countless intermediary forms from a primeval type of life vastly its inferior. And if a single minute cell, under certain conditions, can become a man in the space of a few years, there can surely be no invincible difficulty in believing that, under suitable conditions, a cell may, in the lapse of millions of years, develop into the progenitor of the human race. But whether or no man be derived from ancestors intermediary between himself and the ape, it will hardly be questioned by any who are familiar with the results arrived at by the students of philology and anthropology, that the first appearance of man upon the earth was a very crude and savage one, and that the primitive man resembled the lowest savages which we now find existing either in the wilds of Africa or on the plains of Patagonia.

Nations have always been fond of tracing their descent from the gods or certain deified heroes who were more than men; but experience and comparison show us how mythical are all such origins, whether connected with the names of Adam, Tubal Cain, and Noah, or Saturn, Hercules, and Deucalion. This being so, we recognize our position,—I will not say as highly-developed animals, but as highly-developed savages. If some of us demur at this conclusion, let them reflect that, whatever reluctance they may feel in accepting this result, they can hardly resist acknowledging the fact that we Anglo-Saxons are descended from the savage Teutons warred against by Cæsar, or from the still wilder, piratical Northmen who were wont to drink from the skulls of their enemies. Viewed, therefore, in the light of man's insignificance in the universe, first, as indicated by the inferiority and minuteness of the globe he inhabits; secondly, by the brief duration of his life upon it; and, lastly, by his descent or rather ascent from an exceedingly low type of ancestors,—does it not seem a tremendous, nay, a well-nigh hopeless question to ask: Is man immortal? Is he to live after his fleeting existence here? This is the awful question which presses upon every thoughtful man of the present day: What is his destiny? We shall be tempted to answer this inquiry differently as we look at the two extremes of the human family,—a Patagonian savage and a Goethe or a Shakespeare. On the one hand, it does seem a perfectly unwarrantable assumption to hold that the former low, degraded being, with no abstract ideas, no religious forms or worship, unable to count more than four, devouring his food raw, entirely destitute of clothing, and inferior in many respects to the higher brutes, is to live forever; that he has an eternal existence assured to him beyond this present life. Yet when we contemplate the other noble representatives of our race, the creators of Faust and of Hamlet, it is not hard to believe that in some way or other their minds will not perish with their bodies, but will live on in some mode and state now unknown to us. But between these two extremes (and many would say still more strongly between the brute ancestor of that savage and Shakespeare), where shall we draw the line? Where shall we say that here immortality begins and there it ends?

The differences between men are so minute, they shade into each other by such imperceptible degrees, that it would seem impossible to assign to this one such a boon as unending existence, and to this other, his fellow and all but equal, annihilation! Then, too, when we think of the circumstances of birth, locality, education, and influences, which so largely make men what they are, it seems monstrous that the gaining of immortality should depend upon the accidents of origin and surroundings.

No, in this we feel that we must adopt the maxim, "Aut totus, aut nullus": either every member of the human family or none at all. But let us ask ourselves frankly if we are debating a question which we have any reason whatever to suppose probable. What right have we to conjecture even for a moment that any of our race are immortal? The common belief upon this subject is, that at the birth of every human being, a soul, distinct from, and superior to, all mere physical origin, is joined to the body; created then for the first time by the Deity, and of such a nature that it will never cease to exist. In other words, that whenever man, through caprice, passion, or opportunity, begets a body, the Deity is obliged to implant within it an immortal soul; thus giving (as Greg well expresses it), to even the most brutish of men, power to make well-nigh unlimited drafts upon the "treasury of spiritual existence"! But why, if such a soul be thus incarnated, do we put the moment of its incarnation at birth?

Not surely because life first commences then, for life exists just as truly in the human embryo. The changes in its ante-natal development occur as quietly and steadily as do the changes in the visibility of the lunar disc. Microscopic investigation now reveals to us that the period assigned by law as the time for the commencement of embryo-life is entirely arbitrary.

Physicians tell us that at no moment in the formation of a human embryo is it possible to assert that life does not exist, for (and let this be well noted) the human spermatozoa are themselves living organisms, and actually exist as such in the body of the male.

It will be replied to this that it is of no consequence if we cannot assign the actual moment of the creation and implanting of the immortal soul. What is wanted is the fact that such a soul is implanted; the precise time when this occurs is of secondary importance. Here, however, we meet with grave difficulties. By the term soul is meant that part of man's constitution which thinks, wills, reasons, and loves. If, then, the soul be created, entirely undervived from the body, how comes it that we inherit from our parents certain mental and moral traits, such as tendencies to anger, pride, gentleness, envy, avarice, and generosity; a liking for intellectual pursuits, or the reverse; and special talents, as for music, painting, and the like? Examples of this fact are numberless. The family of Æschylus numbered eight poets. Thorwaldsen was the son of a sculptor. Raphael's father was a painter. Titian and Vernet came from a family of painters. The father of Beethoven was a tenor singer, and the sire of Mozart a violinist of some reputation. Haydn was the son of an organist; and Weber's father was a distinguished musician. A great number of composers have sprung from the family of Bach. A remarkable instance is on record of seven children of one man, who all enjoyed a competency and good health, yet who all inherited a rage for suicide, and actually yielded to it within thirty or forty years! Some hanged, some drowned, and others shot themselves. It is well known that Hartley Coleridge inherited from his great father his weakness of will. Already when quite young the infirmity of volition had shown itself. He was well aware of his own weakness, and in one of his books he wrote the following lines:—

"Oh! woeful impotence of weak resolve,
Recorded rashly to the writer's shame,
Days pass away, and time's large orb revolve,
And every day beholds me still the same!"

Now all such qualities as these go certainly to make up the soul; but if this be newly created, and distinct from all physical origin, it ought to be free from any such inheritance. Yet the derivation of such traits from our ancestors is a matter of daily observation.

We see, however, that the belief in a future life has long been a favorite one among men, and that it has been variously held by them as a hope, a speculative possibility, or a firm belief, according as they have felt more or less assured of its reality. But the mere fact that a future existence has been generally believed in by the human race does not make such a life a certainty.

Many popular ideas, which had a very early origin among primitive men and prevailed for centuries, have been found to be wholly erroneous. The early notions of mankind respecting the form of the earth were wrong; so were their beliefs concerning the nature of the heavenly bodies; the primitive explanations of all natural phenomena and their reference to unseen spiritual agents; the absurd interpretations which prevailed in regard to physiological facts; the belief that all epidemics were punishments inflicted by an offended Deity; and the notion that madmen and epileptics were possessed of demons,—all these ideas have been at one time in the history of the race universally believed, but have been gradually abandoned just in proportion as the light of science has poured in upon the clouded intellects of mankind.

Let us now examine some of the most prevalent reasons which induce men to believe in a future existence. The most common grounds of this belief may be termed the grounds of sentiment and analogy. The first proceeds from an idea doubtless originally awakened in the primitive races of men, which, descending from them, exerts still a potent influence over the majority of the human family. It will not be difficult to account for the rise of such a notion in the minds of primitive men. It is not surprising, for example, that the North American Indian, in viewing his fellow-warrior stretched in death, looking as he has often looked in sleep or in a swoon, should strive to awaken him, and, failing to do this, should believe that his friend had gone away somewhere to continue his chase in the happy hunting-grounds, which his fancy pictures to him as lying beyond the setting sun. The idea of the continuity of life would seem thus to be naturally suggested by the resemblance between Death and "his twin brother Sleep." This resemblance, though of course merely an external one, has been frequently noted and remarked upon even by poets and philosophers. Diogenes is said to have spoken in his last moments of Death and Sleep as brother and sister. Cicero says: "Nihil videmus morti tam simile quam somnum"; and Ovid asks: "Quid est somnus gelidæ nisi mortis imago?"

This idea would be of course greatly strengthened by the desire of such a life thus suggested, and would acquire more and more influence by being handed down as an assured fact from parents to children. It would be still further supported by the appearance to the uncultivated mind of forms and figures in dreams. What can these be, asks the primitive man, except the vision of my still existent father, or wife, or friend? During sleep the spirit appears to desert the body, and in dreams we seem to visit other localities; as it were other worlds. Hence the savage considers the events in his dreams to be as real as those of his waking hours, and they have an importance to him which more cultivated persons can hardly understand. It is thus, perhaps, that so universal a belief in a future existence has arisen and perpetuated itself among mankind. The Chinese worship their ancestors and carry food and presents to their graves; the savage buries together with his chief his bow and arrows for future use; and even the Greek was wont to put an obol into the hand of a dead relative to pay his fare to Charon over the Stygian River, and a salted cake wherewith to appease the savage Cerberus. Now when an idea has become thus through inheritance a kind of possession of the race, and when men have allowed their affections to twine themselves about it, and have fostered it as a bright and comforting assurance,—it cannot be abandoned without a terrible wrench of the sensibilities. There are many persons, no doubt, who, no matter how convincing the proof of the destruction of the soul at death might be, would steadily refuse to believe it, and would cling to the belief in immortality, which they so dearly love.

They assert their longing for a future life as a proof that such a life will be given them; they adduce their abhorrence of the extinction of their being as an argument against such extinction; they reach out their hands to clasp those of the loved and lost, and fancy that they feel their tender pressure in return.

But alas! the fact that we desire a thing is not a very satisfactory ground for believing it to be true. There are millions of persons who are at this moment longing with all the ardor of their natures for something which seems absolutely necessary for their happiness and comfort, which yet may never be granted to them. With this one it is the responsive love of an alienated heart which is thus longed for; with another it is the reformation of a wayward son whose vices cause anguish to the loving soul; with a third it is some opportunity for culture and instruction, the want of which renders life empty and even painful to the soul which craves it. But how rarely are these strong desires prophetic of their own fulfillment! Surely we must seek our proof of a future existence in something more satisfying than our mere wishes for it! As Mr. Mill well remarks: "We wish for life, and God has granted us some life; that we wish for a boundless extent of life, and that this is not granted, is no exception to the ordinary modes of his government. Many a man would like to be a Cæsar or an Augustus Cæsar, but has his wishes gratified only to the moderate extent of a pound a week or the Secretaryship of his Trades Union. To suppose that the desire for life guarantees to us personally the reality of life through all eternity, is like supposing that the desire of food assures us that we shall always have as much as we can eat through our whole lives, and as much longer as we can conceive our lives to be protracted to."

The argument from analogy is similarly pleasing, and perchance satisfactory, to the unthinking man. He sees the apparently lifeless chrysalis transform itself into the winged butterfly, and the sight suggests to him the breaking of the soul from its tenement of clay. He sees the tree, apparently so dead during the icy winter, put forth new buds and leaves when warmed into life by the kisses of the vernal sun; and he says, Thus does the soul spring into life from the cold hands of death. But this is very frail reasoning; for, after all, the chrysalis and the winter-bound tree are not really dead; in the butterfly and leaves there is no resurrection from death to life, but only a quickening of suspended activity. When the butterfly actually dies, can anything restore it to life? When the tree is blown down and perishes, can all the kisses of the sun and tears of the clouds reanimate the lifeless form? With what satisfaction, then, can we of to-day repose our faith in a future existence upon such analogies as these, or upon the well-nigh universal extent of the belief among the primitive families of the race? A thousand other equally universal notions have been found among unscientific men, which we now know to be untenable.

Let us look, then, at other reasons for this belief, which still commends itself to so many intelligent persons of to-day. A very potent argument for believing that we are destined to exist after death is the assertion (already referred to) that there is in each of us a soul, distinct from and superior to the body, which, unlike the body, is indestructible. This is a most pleasing conception, and it would be very satisfactory if we could only prove it for a certainty. Unfortunately, however, we are compelled to admit very weighty arguments against it.

It would indeed seem at first that thought, so quiet, so far removed from bodily demonstrations, might be conducted in a region of pure spirit, merely imparting its conclusions through the material body. But, unhappily for this supposition, the fact is now generally admitted that thought exhausts the nervous substance as surely as walking does the muscles. The mind seems to be completely at the mercy of the bodily condition. A clear atmosphere exhilarates our spirits; a sultry one prostrates them; certain conditions of the body weaken the memory; certain others strengthen it. The quality of the blood circulating through the brain influences the development of ideas; if it be deficient in oxygen, delirium follows; if there be not a proper supply of arterial blood, loss of consciousness ensues. The use of opium enfeebles the will; the taking of stimulants excites for a time the flow of thought; a good repast makes us self-contented; imperfect digestion renders us wretched; in short, the EVIDENCE is strongly opposed to the idea of a separate, independent, self-supporting, spiritual agent rising above the fluctuations of the corporeal frame. To be sure, the assumption is constantly made that there is such an agent. The facts just cited would be explained away as arising from imperfect conditions under which this agent is placed. But this is an hypothesis, an unproven assertion.

We have absolutely no proof of the existence of mind distinct from body. Apparently it grows with the body, flourishes when the body flourishes, is strengthened like any other part of us by exercise, and decays and perishes like the rest of the body. The little child comes into life helpless in body and helpless in mind, both of which develop together. And similarly when the old man drops into dotage and imbecility, both mind and body together become weak, and the last state of the man is frequently as weak and childish as the first. Pleasing this theory may be, desirable it may be, but evident, conclusive, and satisfying it surely is not.

Another source of faith to many in a future life is that derived from the words of Jesus. Of all the great teachers who have speculated and taught about immortality, few, if any, have spoken with such assurance as he. Jesus, however, does not enter into any proof of it, but apparently takes it for granted and speaks of the future world as one does of this. To those who accept him as divine, omniscient, and utterly infallible in teaching, this affords perfectly satisfactory evidence of such a life. But there are many, and a constantly-increasing number, among us who cannot regard the words of Jesus as infallible, nor accept his statements as beyond the reach of criticism. Gladly acknowledging his superiority and immense value as a moral teacher and example, we find some things in his reported sayings upon which we cannot place entire reliance. It is unhappily the same man who speaks so confidently of a future life; who pronounced with equal certainty that before his generation passed away he would reappear as Judge of the world in the clouds of heaven! And it is the same Jesus who sanctioned by repeated words and deeds the belief in demoniacal possessions and the existence of the personal archfiend, Satan.

Of the horrors which this degrading superstition, still so common in the East, produced in Christendom, culminating in the dreadful persecutions of witchcraft, I need not speak. If it should be objected that these are errors of the biographers of Jesus, which do not in reality apply to him, the reply might be pertinent that, if the written documents which we have of him are thus faulty in these two most prominent and important points, we might also object to the validity of the passages where he is represented as upholding a future existence. For us, then, the confident assertions of Jesus in reference to immortality, hopeful and consoling as they may be, are not satisfying, nor worthy to be made the basis of a genuine belief in such a life.

Yet another reason for believing in a future existence is furnished to many by the hopeless, almost incredible view of life which the absence of such an existence presents to them. We see about us such constant examples of crime, poverty, and suffering! The air is so full of farewells to the dying and wallings for the dead! The heart of each individual is so often filled with sadness by the many causes of sorrow, disappointment, and remorse with which life is full! If there were no other life to recompense us for this, they cry, it would be the veriest torture to live on in this painful world. Such persons are partly right. In spite of the sum of happiness on the globe, it is probable that the grief and pain exceed it in amount, and the aggregate of human misery is awful to contemplate. Yet gloomy as this prospect is, it is not without some gleams of hope. Pain and evil are, it is true, everywhere present; but in the long-continued struggle with them, we see that the race is slowly improving. The savage often leaves his sick and aged to die in neglect; we, on the contrary, rear costly hospitals for our diseased, and homes of refuge for our infirm. The Spartans exposed to death their deformed or sickly children; we cherish our ill-conditioned offspring, and even provide schools for the feeble-minded and for the deaf, dumb, and blind. Compare the roughness of former surgery with the present skill used under the blessing of unconsciousness from anesthetics. Our philanthropy sends food and money across sea and land to the famine-stricken, and our kindness is extended even to the prevention of cruelty to animals. Thus slowly, wearily, but steadily, the race creeps on towards the hoped-for perfection of society; and slowly but surely light gains upon darkness, pleasure upon pain. This law of slow development which we observe throughout Nature is encouraging indeed, but it is so slow that we may well be sad. The law of life seems to be also the law of death. One being lives at the expense of another. Nearly every order of animals has a subordinate one on which it preys. And when we rise to man, we find that he also lives by the slaughter of his inferiors. Our abattoirs are not far away! Moreover, not only now, but from the earliest geologic eras this universal carnage has been going on. Throughout all past time there has been a perpetual devouring of the weak by the strong! It is useless for us to rail at the injustice and the horrible nature of these facts. There they are, and we have only to make the best of them. If we could have had the question put to us before coming into the world, whether we could conceive that such an apparently cruel and dark law would be in operation, we should have doubtless replied: No; impossible! It is well for us to remember this when we speak indignantly of the necessity of immortality and of our right to a future existence. Our right?

Come with me to this stagnant pond as the sun is setting. You will see there myriads of little insects, each perfectly formed, sporting in the summer air. That day has called them into being; that night will witness their decay. They have had their lease of life. Are we so essentially different from them? Men say so. Men point to the chieftains of our race, and even say that for the satisfaction of their gifted minds the beauty of this earth and the glory of the heavens were created! But let these persons reflect that, during those enormous time-epochs which preceded the advent of man upon the globe, the glories of the heavens were displayed with none on earth to appreciate their beauty. Day after day the sun rose and set in regal magnificence; night after night the moonlight silvered mountain and river, and the hosts of heaven glittered in their grandeur, while not a creature upon earth noted their splendor or questioned their meaning! Come to the coral reef, raised atom by atom from its ocean-bed by the accumulated skeletons of the various insects which for ages have lived and left their tiny, bony framework behind them. They lived; they contributed towards the rearing of their social fabric, some more, some less; and finally they perished. Their work survived. And we? Who shall say that, in the boundless universe and the infinity of duration, our lives or our work are of any more importance than are those of the coral insect?

Let us now face the results of our investigation, whatever they may be, and see what we can do with them. From the arguments which we have considered we are brought to this conclusion: we have no evidence of a future life. We may speculate; we may imagine; we may hope,—but we cannot be certain. Century after century the great multitude of our ancestors have surely and inevitably drawn near to and passed behind the great black curtain, whose shadowy embrace awaits us all. From the regions beyond neither voice nor sound nor vision have been given us. It is indeed the "Silent Land"! The one certain thing before us all is death. Let us look calmly at it. Its advance will neither be hastened nor retarded by our scrutiny. We ask with eagerness the question:—

"One thing I fain would know: Through death's dark portal
Where goes the soul on its mysterious flight?"

And the answer comes sadly back to us:—

"Where is the flame in darkness when extinguished?
Where is the wind that blew but yesternight?"

In what position, then, do we stand in relation to a future existence, since it is not to us a certainty? It is a solemn hope. This being so, the practical question for us is, What is to be our rule of life under these circumstances? The Broad Churchman, Frederic W. Robertson, wrote the following noble sentence: "In the darkest hour through which a human soul can pass, whatever else is doubtful, this, at least, is certain: If there be no God and no future state, yet even then it is better to be generous than selfish, better to be chaste than licentious, better to be true than false, better to be brave than to be a coward!" Noble words and true ones! For surely, if the spring of our good actions is the desire of reward for them in a future world, and if that which hinders us from committing crime be the fear of punishment in a future state, then indeed have we low motives after which to model our lives! But to do the right thing because it is right; to do an honorable action because it is honorable and leaves the glowing consciousness of honor in one's own self-respect; to give in charity through love, hoping for nothing again; to stand firmly by the truth, not to win a martyr's crown, but because the whole soul revolts at doing otherwise,—this is noble,—this should be the method of our living! It is often said in the first shock of excited feeling, when the possibility of no future life is first broached to one who believes in it, that no further motive exists for right endeavor after a belief in immortality is rejected, and the saying is quoted: "Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we die." But will such persons carefully reflect upon the motives which really govern their actions? They will find that they are living better than their words would imply. They are not balancing carefully their earthly losses by their heavenly gains; they do not chuckle over some added glory placed to their credit in the future world, when they perform an act of self-denial here. On the contrary, they act with practically no reference to a future world at all. If this man gives to the poor, it is either through sympathy and love, or from a desire to be seen of men. If that mother pinches herself in a painful economy, it is that her child may enjoy some privilege. If this brave sailor rescues his messmate from the wild waves, it is because he is noble and heroic, not because he is meanly calculating upon a future reward which he will thus secure. Depend upon it, we do our good deeds from present motives. The future world which we hug theoretically and remember with a start occasionally, as something ex machina, has practically nothing to do with our every-day conduct. But, it will be objected, how is it with our bad actions? We have to deal with the masses of men and women, it is said, who need the terrors of a future retribution to restrain them from crime. But does such a threatened retribution, even when pictured by the most fiery ecclesiastical imagination, really effect much restraining influence? Alas! too many persons are, in respect to that shadowy judgment to come, like the clerical gentleman who was called to trial on a charge of stealing, and who pleaded that it was all foolishness to attempt to try him here, as all those things would be inquired into at the day of judgment. The abolition of capital punishment, the slack administration of justice, the letting notorious thieves escape,—these are far more potent causes of increase of crime than would ever be a universal disbelief in a future life. Society for its own preservation has thrown up certain barriers, which it calls laws. They are the result of a long and wide-spread experience. These must be rigidly maintained, and any violation of them should be promptly and effectively punished, for the welfare of the law-abiding citizens. Just in proportion as justice is thus speedily and wisely administered will society advance in peace, good order, and prosperity. It needs no other threatenings than those which it is itself capable of making. It needs no other punishment than that which it is itself capable of inflicting. The question whether there may or may not be a future life is one which will always (as now) influence society in a very moderate degree.

To the individual will the question be of the most interest, particularly as he approaches his final hour. Happy is he if, reviewing a life well-spent and talents wisely employed for his own culture and for the welfare of his fellow-men, he can lie down with calmness to await the dread issues of eternity. When a soldier of the pretorian guard went to the bedside of the dying Marcus Aurelius—that profoundly wise and good emperor,—and asked him the password for the night, the great Roman, already enshrouded in the shadows of death, answered with calmness and majesty, "Æquanimitas!" Thus let us with "equanimity" await the supreme hour, feeling that, whatever may be the issue, all will be well; whether "our little lives are rounded in a sleep," or whether "if our boat sink 'tis to another sea."

There is, however, an immortality to which we may all aspire, and unto which we may all in greater or less degree attain. It is that noble immortality of which the finest living writer in our tongue thus sings:—

"O may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
For miserable aims that end in self!
—may I reach
That purest heaven, be to other souls
The cup of strength in some great agony,
Beget the smiles that have no cruelty,
Be the sweet presence of a good diffused,
And in diffusion ever more intense.
So shall I join the choir invisible
Whose music is the gladness of the world."

HARRIET MARTINEAU.

HARRIET MARTINEAU'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY. Edited by Maria Weston Chapman. 2 vols. 8vo. pp. 684, 698. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co.

The readers of the present generation will be somewhat at a loss to comprehend the brilliant prestige which waited on the name of Harriet Martineau at the time of her visit to the United States nearly half a century ago. She was then in the prime of her intellectual powers, and the first flush of her amazing popularity. Her position in English society was no less conspicuous than in the field of letters. She was courted with flattering homage by the most eminent public characters, statesmen, men of letters, artists, and poets, as well as made to share the intimacy and friendship of the choicest domestic circles. Her series of tales illustrative of the principles of political economy had brought her into sudden and wide renown. She had even the reputation of a philosophical thinker, with a mastery of the science of government, no less than a signal preëminence in literature. The social career of Madame de Staël was scarcely a succession of greater triumphs than that of Harriet Martineau. She resembled that lady in her remarkable powers of conversation, while she was endowed with a far higher degree of common sense, preferring the pursuit of wisdom to the exercise of paradox. She shone less in discussion than in narrative, and although in general evincing a sweet and sunny disposition, was not always mistress of her temper when she had the worst of the argument. On her arrival in this country in the year 1834, she was received with an enthusiastic welcome, such as, we believe, has never before or since been accorded to a private individual. The most distinguished families in the land regarded her presence as a rare happiness. She was at once admitted to the freedom of the best houses, treated with the confidence that belongs only to an ancient friend, and made the recipient of domestic and personal secrets to a degree that seemed quite incompatible with due social reserve or the alleged distrust of the American character. Nor did her discretion in dealing with the little histories which thus came into her possession always equal the strange magic by which they were won. With perhaps no unusual love of feminine gossip, the knowledge which she had gained in one circle was sometimes too freely imparted in another. The result to many persons was a wholesome lesson of social caution, and a deeper conviction that private affairs which could not be conveniently intrusted to a commonplace neighbor were scarcely more safe in the hands of a fascinating sojourner. Miss Martineau's intimate friendships extended to the most distinguished men and cultivated women in American society, including, among many others, Mr. Calhoun, Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, Chief-Justice Marshall, Judge Story, Dr. W. E. Channing, Dr. Follen, Rev. W. H. Furness, Miss Catharine Sedgwick, Margaret Fuller, and the editor of these volumes. The charm of her social intercourse was peculiar. It carried the day over certain personal traits which could not be regarded as delightful. Without what could be called positive self-conceit, she had a wonderful sense of her own importance. She modestly disclaimed all pretension to genius, or even extraordinary talent; but it was evident that she was conscious of power, rejoiced in its exercise, and felt that her words and works possessed a consequence, even an authority, which it might be well for you not to call in question. She was always opinionated, intolerant, often deeply prejudiced, dogmatic in affirmation to a degree not sustained by the extent of her knowledge, warmly pronouncing upon facts about which her ignorance was only equalled by her vehemence, and uttering harsh and unjust judgments on the character of her acquaintance as oracular in manner as they were absurd in matter. In spite of this, she was not only a general favorite, but often won the admiration and love of persons whose good opinion was an honor, and whose friendship was a boon of great price. Her sins, as above described, which were many, were frankly forgiven. Her repulsive qualities were thrown into the shade, as the light of her sweet and gracious presence shone benignly on the rapt circle that listened to her words. Her conversation, as it flowed spontaneously from her lips, when not aroused by opposition, or embittered by a sacred wrath at what she deemed a public wrong, was marked by vivacity, sympathy, humor, and a genial glow. It abounded in anecdotes, which she related with comic archness or impressive dignity, according to the subject, and in descriptive sketches, of which she was a consummate mistress both with tongue and pen. Notwithstanding her infirmity of deafness, her voice was modulated in the musical, warbling tones which are rarely heard except from the mouth of an educated English woman, and her fine features were lighted up with a warmth of expression that could come only from a sincere and friendly heart, and which made one cease to regret any lack of characteristic feminine beauty.

The volumes now issued will present the attraction of novelty to many readers whose associations with their subject are of the most vague and shadowy character. They consist of an extended autobiography of Miss Martineau, relating her history to within about twenty years of her death, and a supplementary memoir by Mrs. Maria Chapman, one of the most devoted and faithful of her American friends. Many of the details in each part of the work pertain to topics that now possess but a comparatively slight interest, recalling the fortunes of various literary productions that are now scarcely known beyond the shelves of the library, raking up obsolete and well-nigh forgotten personalities, and dwelling on private squabbles among reformers and philanthropists which only show the ill-temper that sometimes lurks in "celestial minds." Nor will any considerable proportion of readers attach the importance to Miss Martineau's career that is implied in the issue of these bulky volumes. Of her own intellectual position she speaks with admirable candor in a newspaper notice intended to be published after her decease. Writing of herself in the third person, she says: "Her original power was nothing more than was due to earnestness and intellectual clearness within a certain range. With small imaginative and suggestive powers, and therefore nothing approaching to genius, she could see clearly what she did see, and give a clear expression to what she had to say. In short, she could popularize, while she could neither discover nor invent. She could sympathize in other people's views, and was too facile in doing so; and she could obtain and keep a firm grasp of her own, and, moreover, she could make them understood. The function of her life was to do this, and, in as far as it was done diligently and honestly, her life was of use, however far its achievements may have fallen short of expectations less moderate than her own. Her duties and her business were sufficient for the peace and the desires of her mind. She saw the human race, as she believed, advancing under the law of progress; she enjoyed her share of the experience, and had no ambition for a larger endowment, or reluctance or anxiety about leaving the enjoyment of such as she had." This singularly impartial estimate of her own powers, however inconsistent with her apparent pretensions at other times, will accord with the opinion of those who knew her best, and whose admiration for her was perhaps no less sincere than that of her most fulsome flatterers. It is fully confirmed by the judgment of Mr. Atkinson, the philosophic friend of her later years, under whose influence her mind passed through a revolution as remarkable as it was complete. He writes in 1856, at a time when her death was almost daily anticipated from what proved to be an incurable disease: "The philosopher must leave the little nook of his own nature, and study and learn obedience to the divine law discovered on a wider view. It is this peeping out from under the cover of self that has given to our friend Harriet Martineau this wide range of view and this superiority, in a corrected sense, of the end and order of nature. She is not an investigator, a discoverer in science, but she is, strictly speaking, a philosopher, as a lover of truth in a highly practical sense, for the sake of mankind. She is not an original philosophic genius, but her artistic power and ability to learn is extraordinary; and more extraordinary still is the power of seizing on salient points, and reproducing in a clear form what has been imperfectly stated by others." Still no one can doubt that she possessed a rare and beautiful individuality; that her spirit was "finely touched" and to "fine issues"; and that although never the paragon of perfect womanhood as which she was unwisely regarded by her too partial friends, she presented an example of a high and noble nature, singularly free from all selfish aims and purposes, with a loyal devotion to truth and humanity, and a supreme attachment to ethical principles in spite of the absence of dogmatic faith.

But without too curiously discussing a character on which the last seal has been placed, it may be remarked that the external relations of Miss Martineau presented numerous features which make her autobiography a composition of unusual interest in many parts, notwithstanding its encumbrances with a mass of protracted, useless, and tedious details. The most amusing portion of the work is doubtless her sketches of the literary circles, as they are foolishly called, in London society, and of which she was a burning and shining light. According to her description a more ardent crowd of snobs and brags than these learned men and women was never found in what pretends to be good company. They were eaten up with the love of display, seeking notoriety at all hazards, without natural affection, devoid of earnestness of nature, and hence devoid of simplicity of manner, embittered with mutual jealousy and envy, and brimming over with malice, deceit, and all uncharitableness. It may be doubted whether these portraits are the fruit of preternatural social sincerity, or of personal pique. In some instances the influence of wounded vanity is not to be mistaken, while in others only the veil appears to be withdrawn from egregious and odious faults. It is a question how far such rude personal exposures are admissible in the case of people still living, or recently deceased, and tenderly cherished by surviving friends, especially when the judgments pronounced bear the stamp of private antipathy instead of rigid discrimination. The suppression of these sketches would doubtless have diminished the piquancy of the book, would have chagrined the lovers of social scandal; but their production under the circumstances would hardly seem to be required by fidelity to the writer, or within the legitimate province of judicious editorship. At all events, the exceedingly offensive remarks on Mrs. Fanny Kemble and other prominent female contemporaries might properly have been spared, without exciting the resentment at their omission which must necessarily be called forth by their insertion. Some of Miss Martineau's more agreeable portraits may be presented as specimens of her observation and description of character. Of Jeffrey, the famous Edinburgh Reviewer, she says:—

"Whatever there might be of artificial in Jeffrey's manners—of a set 'company state of mind' and mode of conversation,—there was a warm heart underneath, and an ingenuousness which added captivation to his intellectual graces. He could be absorbed enough in his devotion to a clever woman; and he could be highly culpable in drawing out the vanity of a vain one, and then comically making game of it; but his better nature was always within call; and his generosity was unimpeachable in every other respect,—as far as I knew him. His bounties to needy men of letters—bounties which did not stop to make ill-timed inquiries about desert—were so munificent, that the world, which always knew him to be generous, would be amazed at the extent of the munificence; and it was done with so much of not only delicacy but respect—in such a hearty love of literature,—that I quite understand how easy it would be to accept money from him. If I had needed assistance of that kind, there is no one from whom I could more freely have asked it."

Apropos of the Edinburgh Review, Sydney Smith is introduced, who describes the manner in which the critical table was turned into the butcher's bench:—

"It was at Lord Murray's table that Sydney Smith told me of the fun the Edinburgh Reviewer used to make of their work. I taxed him honestly with the mischief they had done by their ferocity and cruel levity at the outset. It was no small mischief to have silenced Mrs. Barbauld; and how much more utterance they may have prevented there is no saying. It is all very well to talk sensibly now of the actual importance of reviews, and the real value of reviewers' judgments; but the fact remains that spirits were broken, hearts were sickened, and authorship was cruelly discouraged by the savage and reckless condemnations passed by the Edinburgh Review in its early days. 'We were savage,' replied Sydney Smith. 'I remember' (and it was plain that he could not help enjoying the remembrance) 'how Brougham and I sat trying one night how we could exasperate our cruelty to the utmost. We had got hold of a poor nervous little vegetarian, who had put out a poor silly little book; and when we had done our review of it, we sat trying'—(and here he joined his finger and thumb as if dropping from a vial) 'to find one more chink, one more crevice, through which we might drop in one more drop of verjuice, to eat into his bones.'"

Miss Martineau is very cruel on Macaulay:—

"To impartial observers, the true quality of Macaulay's mind was as clear then as now. In Parliament he was no more than a most brilliant speaker; and in his speeches there was the same fundamental weakness which pervades his writings,—unsoundness in the presentment of his case. Some one element was sure to be left out, which falsified his statement and vitiated his conclusions, and there never was perhaps a speaker or writer of eminence, so prone to presentments of cases, who so rarely offered one which was complete and true. My own impression is, and always was, that the cause of the defect is constitutional in Macaulay. The evidence seems to indicate that he wants heart. He appears to be wholly unaware of this deficiency; and the superficial fervor which suns over his disclosures probably deceives himself, as he deceives a good many people; and he may really believe that he has a heart. To those who do not hold this key to the interpretation of his career, it must be a very mysterious thing that a man of such imposing and real ability, with every circumstance and influence in his favor, should never have achieved any complete success. As a politician, his failure has been signal, notwithstanding his irresistible power as a speaker and his possession of every possible facility. As a practical legislator, his failure was unsurpassed, when he brought home his Code from India. I was witness to the amazement and grief of some able lawyers, in studying that Code, of which they could scarcely lay their finger on a provision through which you could not drive a coach-and-six. It has long been settled that literature alone remains open to him; and in that he has, with all his brilliancy and captivating accomplishment, destroyed the ground of confidence on which his admirers met him when, in his mature years, he published the first two volumes of his History. His review articles, and especially the one on Bacon, ought to have abolished all confidence in his honesty as well as in his capacity for philosophy. Not only did he show himself to be disqualified for any appreciation of Bacon's philosophy, but his plagiarisms from the very author (Basil Montagu) whom he was pretending to demolish (one instance of plagiarism among many) might have shown any conscientious reader how little he was to be trusted in regard to mere integrity of statement."

Here is a little group of some of the celebrated English literati, worth looking at perhaps:—

"I had heard all my life of the vanity of women as a subject of pity to men; but when I went to London; lo! I saw vanity in high places which was never transcended by that of women in their lowlier rank. There was Brougham, winking under a newspaper criticism, and playing the fool among silly women. There was Jeffrey flirting with clever women, in long succession. There was Bulwer on a sofa, sparkling and languishing among a set of female votaries,—he and they dined out, perfumed, and presenting the nearest picture to a seraglio to be seen on British ground,—only the indifference or hauteur of the lord of the harem being absent. There was poor Campbell the poet, obtruding his sentimentalities, amid a quivering apprehension of making himself ridiculous. He darted out of our house, and never came again, because after warning, he sat down, in a room full of people (all authors, as it happened), on a low chair of my old aunt's which went very easily on castors, and which carried him back to the wall and rebounded, of course making everybody laugh. Off went poor Campbell in a huff; and, well as I had long known him, I never saw him again; and I was not very sorry, for his sentimentality was too soft, and his craving for praise too morbid to let him be an agreeable companion. On occasion of the catastrophe, he came with about forty authors one morning, to sign a petition to Parliament for an International Copyright law. Then there was Babbage,—less utterly dependent on opinion than some people suppose; but still harping so much on the subject as to warrant the severe judgment current in regard to his vanity. There was Edwin Landseer, a friendly and agreeable companion, but holding his cheerfulness at the mercy of great folks' graciousness to him. To see him enter a room, curled and cravated, and glancing round in anxiety about his reception, could not but make a woman wonder where among her own sex she could find a more palpable vanity; but then, all that was forgotten when one was sitting on a divan with him, seeing him play with a dog. Then there was Whewell, grasping at praise for universal learning (omniscience being his foible, as Sydney Smith said), and liking female adoration, rough as was his nature with students, rivals, and speculative opponents."

Of all the English authors, Miss Martineau seems to cherish the greatest sympathy and respect for Carlyle:—

"His excess of sympathy has been, I believe, the master-pain of his life. He does not know what to do with it, and with its bitterness, seeing that human life is full of pain to those who look out for it; and the savageness which has come to be a main characteristic of this singular man is, in my opinion, a mere expression of his intolerable sympathy with the suffering. He cannot express his love and pity in natural acts, like other people; and it shows itself too often in unnatural speech. But to those who understand his eyes, his shy manner, his changing color, his sigh, and the constitutional pudor which renders him silent about everything that he feels the most deeply, his wild speech and abrupt manner are perfectly intelligible."

She relates a droll anecdote illustrating the question of his love of fame:—

"I remember being puzzled for a long while as to whether Carlyle did or did not care for fame. He was forever scoffing at it; and he seemed to me just the man to write because he needed to utter himself without ulterior considerations. One day I was dining there alone. I had brought over from America twenty-five copies of his Sartor Resartus as reprinted there; and, having sold them at the English price, I had some money to put into his hand. I did put it into his hand the first time, but it made him uncomfortable, and he spent it in a pair of signet rings for his wife and me (her motto being Point de faiblesse, and mine Frisch ze!). This would never do; so having imported and sold a second parcel, the difficulty was what to do with the money. My friend and I found that Carlyle was ordered weak brandy and water instead of wine; and we spent our few sovereigns in French brandy of the best quality, which we carried over one evening when going to tea. Carlyle's amusement and delight at first, and all the evening after, whenever he turned his eyes toward the long-necked bottles, showed us that we had made a good choice. He declared that he had got a reward for his labors at last; and his wife asked me to dinner, all by myself, to taste the brandy. We three sat round the fire after dinner, and Carlyle mixed the toddy, while Mrs. Carlyle and I discussed some literary matters, and speculated on fame and the love of it. Then Carlyle held out a glass of his mixture to me with, 'Here—take this. It is worth all the fame in England.'"

Her opinion of the influence of Carlyle on the character of the age is tersely and happily expressed:—

"What Wordsworth did for poetry, in bringing us out of a conventional idea and method to a true and simple one, Carlyle has done for morality. He may be himself the most curious opposition to himself; he may be the greatest mannerist of his age while denouncing conventionalism; the greatest talker while eulogizing silence; the most woful complainer while glorifying fortitude; the most uncertain and stormy in mood while holding forth serenity as the greatest good within the reach of man; but he has, nevertheless, infused into the mind of the English nation a sincerity, earnestness, healthfulness, and courage which can be appreciated only by those who are old enough to tell what was our morbid state when Byron was the representative of our temper, the Clapham Church of our religion, and the rottenborough system of our political morality. If I am warranted in believing that the society I am bidding farewell to is a vast improvement upon that which I was born into, I am confident that the blessed change is attributable to Carlyle more than to any single influence besides."

The entire revolution in Miss Martineau's religious ideas which took place a few years after her return from this country is lucidly described by herself, by the editor of the work, and in letters from other hands. Taking her stand mainly on the principles of the Positive Philosophy, she completely broke with all theological systems, as founded on assumptions beyond the limits of human knowledge. With a firm conviction of the existence of a First Cause—a belief growing out of the essential constitution of the human mind—she disclaimed all pretence to the comprehension of any divine attributes, or the ultimate destiny of man. Indeed she regards the evidence of a future state of being as of little value, and contemplates the idea of final non-existence without misgiving or dismay. With her, as with many noted philosophers who have come before the public since the completion of her autobiography, the sphere of the Infinite is the sphere of the Unknowable. She never, however, completely frees herself from a dogmatic habit of her early years. She is as positive in her denial as most believers are in their faith. With little apparent conception of the modesty of true science, she is strenuous in negation, indulging in assertions on points which she had already admitted were beyond the boundaries of knowledge, and on which even an enlightened skepticism would pronounce judgment with reserve. The work, accordingly, will not be a favorite with the religious public. Nor will it be accepted as a contribution of any considerable account to speculative philosophy. The forte of the author was not discussion, not analysis, not argument, but a profound ethical sense of the capacities, the possibilities, and the obligations of human nature. Her standard of noble living was as high as the articles of her faith were few.—New York Tribune, March 2.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 10.

L. M. Nicholson, $3; H. M. North, $3.30; E. Steiger, 25 cents; A. J. S. Weiss, $3.45; Dr. D. Ayers, $5; B. A. Ballou, $3.20; W. E. Burr, $3.20; E. R. Francis, $3.20; Harry Grundy, $3.20; E. A. J. Lindsey, $3.20; Col. E. J. Ingersoll, $6.40; Mrs. E. Fowle, $3; Mary R. Osborne, 54 cents; Mrs. S. S. Sanborn, $13; Alex. Rosenzweig, $3.20; A. N. Adams, $3.50; W. B. Chace, $20; Wm. Rotch, $20; Rufus Perkins, $3.20; C. K. Matthews, $3.20; Porter Plumb, $3.20; W. Z. Larned, $3.20; J. W. Sulist, $3.20; Mrs. E. Krackowizer, $3.20; J. H. Stevens, $3.20; Noah Green, $3.20; J. T. Warrington, 20 cents; Mrs. Hepsy Striker, 50 cents; J. J. Nichols, $6.40; C. A. Miller, $1; C. Starbird, Adm'r, $5.07; W. O. Mack, $3.40; Cash, $1.46; Henry Whittemore, $3.20; Edw. Crane, $1.20; J. A. J. Wilcox, 25 cents; C. E. Hewes & Co., $6.50; Chas. H. Webb, $3.20; Thos. H. Johnson, $3.80; Thos. Lamay, $1.60; Thos. Nye, $1; Gen. Robert Avery, $6.40; Alex. Risk, $5; Dr. E. H. Price, $1; C. W. Pierce, $3.20; J. C. Fargo, $1.60; Louisa Kieg, $1; David Wright, $3.20; Mary J. Holmes, $1; Dr. John Finlayson, $1; Thos. J. Taft, $3; Jas. B. Stone, $3.50; E. B. Hazzen, 25 cents; C. Beck-told, 50 cents; L. B. Farrar, $3.10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 15, 1877.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
JOTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION: Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and Organization of the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, on the Fourth of July, 1876. With an Introduction and Appendix. Boston: Published by the National Liberal League. 1876. Pages 120. Price, in paper covers, $1.00; in cloth, $1.25.

The above Report contains a complete history of the Liberal League movement, a full report of the eight sessions of the Congress, lists of the contributors to the Congress fund and of the charter members of the National Liberal League, the Constitution and list of officers of the latter, extracts from letters by distinguished supporters of the movement, etc., etc. It also contains essays by F. E. Abbot on "The Liberal League movement; its Principles, Objects, and Scope"; by Mrs. C. B. Kilgore on "Democracy"; by James Parton on "Cathedrals and Beer; or, The Immorality of Religious Capitals"; by B. F. Underwood on "The Practical Separation of Church and State"; by C. F. Paige on the question, "Is Christianity Part of the Common Law?" by D. Y. Kilgore on "Ecclesiasticism in American Politics and Institutions"; and by C. D. B. Mills on "The Sufficiency of Morality as the Basis of Civil Society." Also, the "Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists to the Centennial Congress of Liberals," and the "Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League to the People of the United States." This book is the Centennial monument of American Liberalism, and must acquire new interest and importance every year as the record of the first organized demand by American freemen for the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE.

All those who received the "Certificate of Membership of the Centennial Congress of Liberals," which was sent to the eight hundred persons who signed and returned the "application for membership," will receive this Report on forwarding ten cents to defray expenses. Others can receive it at the above-mentioned price by addressing the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE "RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT" PETITION.

At a public meeting held in Cambridge, Ohio, November 14, 1876, by the advocates of the Christian Amendment, Rev. J. P. Lytle, President of the Ohio State branch of the "National Reform Association," used this argument in favor of recognizing Christianity in the United States Constitution: "Mr. Lytle in his address pointed out the fact that the religious [Christian] amendment of the Constitution, so far from being a measure contemptible for the fewness and weakness of its advocates, has been in principle indorsed and adopted by the Senate of the United States. In the School Amendment, as passed in the Senate last summer by a vote of nearly two to one, the necessity for some such Constitutional provision as we seek was confessed, and an attempt made to supply it which, if successful, would have been a long step toward the end we seek."

What Mr. Lytle said is only too true. The passage of some Constitutional amendment involving the whole question of State Christianization or State Secularization is certain in the not distant future. All friends of such an amendment as shall guarantee and protect Equal Rights in Religion by securing the Total Separation of Church and State are earnestly urged to circulate the petition of the National Liberal League to that effect. Printed petitions, all ready for circulation, will be sent to any one on receipt of a stamp for return postage. Address the National Liberal League, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE SPRINGFIELD Republican publishes these just remarks: "Mr. Cook interested his hearers, Monday night, but he had one thousand less than Moody generally does, and there was a noticeable contrast between him and Moody in one respect which was not to Mr. Cook's advantage. Moody, though he often tells stories about himself, does not take the chief place in his own narration, while Mr. Cook is continually reminding those who hear him what a remarkable person Joseph Cook is, how many distinguished friends he has had, what adventures have befallen him, etc. In short, his teaching is the gospel according to Joseph, while Moody's is the gospel in itself and for itself."

QUERIES ABOUT "INTELLIGENT SUFFRAGE."

The questions contained in the following letter deserve the most candid consideration, and we are sorry that circumstances have prevented us from considering them earlier:—

Dear Sir,—In reading your article on "Intelligent Suffrage" in THE INDEX of January 18, a few questions have occurred to me which, if you think best, I would like to have answered in THE INDEX.

1. How does it appear that to require an educational test for suffrage tends to make the ignorant class any greater than at present?
2. Is it not probable that an educational test would induce many, especially foreigners who would not otherwise do so, to become educated at least to the degree of legal qualification, and in that way increase the number of the educated?
3. How does it appear that "arbitrary, indefensible, and useless discriminations" would be likely to be incorporated into the law?
4. Is it not probable that the ignorant and vicious, if voters, could and would combine together and become more effective in wicked legislation than if they were not voters?
5. Is any other method likely to become so effective in securing the education of foreign immigrants, especially of the young men, as an educational qualification for suffrage?
6. But you say that it is impracticable, that nothing is easier than to evade the merely formal examinations, and that multitudes will inevitably vote who can neither read nor write. It seems to me nothing would be easier than for an intelligent officer to determine whether a man could read nor write or not. Is anything easier than to challenge a voter, and put him to the proof of any proper qualification?

C. M.

Our correspondent has laid us under an obligation by his thoughtful questions, and we will answer them simply, directly, and in their order—leaving it for him and others to decide how far the real difficulties are met.

1. The first of the above questions implies a misunderstanding of what we said. We did not say that the establishment of an educational test of suffrage would "tend to make the ignorant class greater than at present." What we said was that such a test would make a "well-defined ignorant class"—which is a very different thing. The evil lies in making new class distinctions by law, in separating (or attempting to separate) the ignorant from the educated by creating hostile interests between the two classes, and in thus sowing the seeds of bitter jealousies and civil dissensions. It would be the selfish interest of the privileged and enfranchised class, not to extend the suffrage to the uneducated, not to educate them for the purpose of conferring the suffrage on them, but rather to keep political power in its own hands by discouraging popular education. A legalized aristocracy of brains would be just as selfish as any other legalized aristocracy; it would defend and strive to increase its own privileges; it would legislate in its own interest, not for the interests of those who would be powerless to represent themselves. When did any aristocracy ever manifest an anxiety to divest itself of privilege, or to throw away power for the good of the powerless? The interests of the whole people are only safe in the hands of the whole people. The fact that the barrier to suffrage would not be an insuperable one, but could be surmounted by any one who should acquire an education, would not obviate the objections to the proposed plan: the worst tendency of this plan would be to enfeeble and imperil the common school system. If only the educated could vote, they would not be zealous to diminish their own relative power by educating the uneducated; they would rather incline to concentrate this power, and to leave the mass of the people ignorant for the sake of governing them. This has been proved at the South, where political power was long practically lodged in the hands of the highly educated whites, and where (we think by a necessary consequence) the public school system has never flourished as in the North. The very first result of enfranchising the ignorant blacks was to give a great impetus to the common school system. Where the educated alone govern, selfishness dictates not to educate the mass of the people; where the mass governs, selfishness dictates, even to the most highly educated, the policy of "educating their masters." It is surely wise to enlist the terrible power of human selfishness on the side of popular education, not against it; and that is the chief reason why we deprecate even the beginning of a brain-aristocracy system in this country. Much as we believe in brain, we would not give it legal privilege; all our hopes for the future of the United States centre in the extension of education and the consequent elevation of the people as a whole; and we believe these ends to be attainable only through universal suffrage, with all its drawbacks and perils.

2. The educational test would indeed exercise some influence in favor of education by inducing a few ignorant foreigners to qualify themselves for suffrage; but this good influence would, we believe, be far more than neutralized by the bad influence above indicated. The number of adult ignorant foreigners who would be thus stimulated to learn would be very small; the motive would seldom prove strong enough to carry them through the difficult task of learning, when the docility of childhood had been once lost. The hope of the country is in the young—in the common schools. No child should be permitted to grow up in ignorance. If that principle is carried out, there will be no need of an educational test; if not, the educational test will prove of little value. The establishment of exclusive tests is a miserably negative policy; a strong positive policy in the shape of "compulsory education" is what the country sorely needs.

3. If the law disfranchises a man simply because he cannot read and write, it commits a very arbitrary and unjust act. The ignorant man has his equal rights, which will not be in the least regarded if he is stripped of political power. We reverence the rights of the ignorant, the poor, the defenceless, just as much as we reverence those of the most favored. A powerless party is always an oppressed party; and to make the ignorant a party, with interests distinct from those of the majority, but with no power to protect them save by crime, would be a wicked and suicidal course. There is degradation enough in ignorance—do not add to it the degradation of disfranchisement. Do nothing to foster the increase of the "dangerous classes"; seek rather to absorb them in the community by raising them to self-respect, to knowledge, to industry, to happiness. That is statesmanship; everything else is inhumanity and folly.

4. The vicious will combine to carry out "wicked legislation," whether they can read and write, or not; but the merely ignorant will not, unless they are first deceived. The educational test will not extinguish the power of the vicious, or even weaken it materially. Demagogues will use the brute strength of the ignorant class in one way or another, all the more effectively if this ignorant class is made doubly dangerous by political discontent. The only safety is in overwhelming ignorance itself by education.

5. It is chimerical to hope for the general education of ignorant foreigners who land on our shores in adult years; only a few of them have enough social ambition to make the painful but necessary exertion. Young immigrants should be required to learn. Why forget that ignorance seldom knows enough to hate itself? The love of knowledge grows by what it feeds on, but in its earliest beginnings needs external help. This the State should give.

6. The "impracticability" lies in the certainty that such a law as one that imposes an educational test will be practically evaded, whether it need be or not. It is expecting too much to suppose that public officers all over this vast country will be inspired with a disinterested regard for the purity of the ballot-box or the interests of education. Party passions and party interests will certainly prove too strong; and the educational test would soon prove to be a dead letter. But it would be a most mischievous excuse for neglecting the duty of educating every future citizen of the republic. We rely on no futile negative tests; positive measures alone, aiming at the direct increase of public intelligence and the direct diffusion of popular education, can be of the least practical avail in this matter.

THE GREAT EVIL OF IT.

I was very much interested both in Mr. Abbot's impressions of Mr. Moody's preaching, and in Mr. Gannett's kindly and frank sermon on the same subject; but neither of them has dwelt sufficiently on what is to my mind the great evil of this movement, which I think should cause all those who think as I do to leave it emphatically alone, and not let even curiosity induce them to swell the crowd, or to increase the flame by the wind of opposition.

It undoubtedly has interesting phases to a student of the evolution of human nature; and when such a movement sprang up spontaneously as the free expression of a people's thought, I should feel inclined to observe and study it as I should the myths of India, the extravagances of the Dervishes, or the oddities of the Shakers. But this does not seem to me a genuine, spontaneous growth of the religious nature, but a great spectacle worked up by cunningly devised machinery; and as such it does not interest me.

But the positive evil is to me its great power of excitement, and the stress laid upon vivid expressions of feeling as the test of religion.

This seems to me an active power of harm in the community, which especially needs the correctives of quiet, patient thought, clear conviction, and strong purpose, instead of lashing into fierce heats of feeling. I do not deny that excitement and passion have their rôle to play in human affairs, but they should be born of great causes, and not be wrought up by cunning management.

Mr. Gannett says that "for careful thinking and accurate statement" the Tabernacle is not a good place to go to. This is a reason why I should advise all those who value the health of their mental and spiritual life to stay away from the Tabernacle, since these seem to me most important needs of the time. In trying to be liberal and fair towards other faiths, we must not lose our sense of truth and our standard of good. It is the great glory of Puritanism that it always recognized the importance of intellectual distinctions of truth, as well as the state of the heart and conscience; and we are not liberal if we cannot state clearly and strongly what seems to us error in others' creeds and conduct, while preserving respect for their freedom of thought and action, and kindly feeling towards them individually.

The relation of the Moody and Sankey meetings towards religion seems to me very much like that of the great Jubilee towards the art of music, which substituted quantity and excitement for quality and calm enjoyment, and which few real lovers of art held to be beneficial.

But the harm and danger of the religious revival excitement is as much greater than that of the Jubilee, as the influence of religion is deeper and more universal than that of musical art; and we tremble to think of the mental and moral suffering to result from this spiritual intoxication which is the direct effect of the revival. We think the best way to treat it is to leave it emphatically alone, surrounding this fever-heat with such a cool air of icy indifference that the patient will soon be restored to sanity. Indeed, such seems to us to be the effect. We are amazed at the slight interest which the movement excites, and rejoiced to find that Boston still stands unshaken and undisturbed, and that to an outsider the placards on the horse-cars are the principal signs of any unusual gatherings in the city.

It is said, we know not how truly, that the Metropolitan Railroad contributed largely to the building of the Tabernacle, as being likely to increase the travel on the road. If this be the case, a little failure to realize profit from it, as in the case of the Jubilee, will be the best preventive of a similar experiment. A very large number probably are attracted by the music. If we could learn how to satisfy the desire of human nature for the expression of social and religious feeling in song, without the accompaniments of superstitious doctrine, we should do a great deal towards getting the good without the evil of a revival.

E. D. C.

THE REAL DANGER.

That there is a real danger,—a danger that the "Christian Amendment" may be pressed, by persistent managers, insinuated by crafty ones, sprang on the country by unscrupulous ones, pushed to the verge of adoption by desperate ones, may be conceded. At all events, there can be no harm in apprehending it and being on our guard against a thing so preposterous and so dreadful as such an amendment of the Constitution would be. That such a thing is spoken of or thought of, spoken of in closets, thought of in private breasts, justifies vigilance, and even alarm. They who least fear the adoption of such a mischievous inconsistency and hear most incredulously the cry of wolf, must grant that they who live in the thinnest shadow of such an apprehension would be faithless to their duty if they raised no warning voice. For these little clouds, no bigger than a man's hand, have many times been big with ruin. It becomes reasonable men, however sceptical themselves, to treat seriously and respectfully the forebodings that point to disaster so fatal as the adoption of the "Christian" dismemberment would prove to be.

It may be conceded, too, that the peril comes primarily from the power of dogmatism in the popular religion. The ecclesiastical and theological bigots, the politicians of the churches and creeds, are at the bottom of the scheme and alone responsible for it. These are not numerous, but they are able, sly, persevering, and plausible. They seek power, without much regard to the means by which it is acquired or the objects for which it shall be used. They carry along with them a considerable number of unsuspecting, innocent, pure-hearted, gospel-loving men who are devout Christians, profoundly impressed with the feeling that the salvation of mankind depends on the acceptance of the "Evangelical system," and that the open profession of faith in that system is indispensable to communities and States no less than to individuals. These guileless souls cannot believe that the zealots and fanatics of this political movement are less pure in heart than they themselves are, and meekly follow the directions given by the leaders, with unquestioning loyalty to the Master. The masses of the community, easy-going Christians, half-hearted, indolent, sleepy, docile, obediently church-supporting and Sabbath-keeping, scarcely bestow a thought on the matter. They think nothing about the plan, its reasons or its tendencies. Some of them laugh at the idea; some indignantly scout it, being honestly incredulous, thinking too well of their fellow-Christians to impute such unpatriotic designs to them, and too ill of the "infidels" to doubt the malignity of their imputations. Some of their strong thinkers, Dr. Spear, for example, are as clear about the underlying principles of the business as the members of the National League are, and lose no opportunity of inculcating rational ideas on the subject. To them the inconsistency of the "Christian Amendment" is so apparent as to be glaring, and the menace of it knocks at their hearts. These men, in case of need, will have great influence on the Christian community, and will rouse the patriotic conscience to a sense of its responsibility. The consummation of the "Evangelical" plot would probably startle as many Christians as unchristians, and give as severe a shock to pious believers as to "infidels" of the school of Seaver, or secularists of the school of Ingersoll. Logical as the Amendment may be according to the requirements of the Christian scheme, inevitable as it may be according to the demands of Evangelical prophecy, it does not commend itself to the good sense or the good feeling of the multitude, who are not logical, and who are more sensitive to the wishes of those about them than to the demands of Revelation. To them religion is a social, domestic, or spiritual thing, not political at all; and they would question whether its ratification by government would be on the whole an advantage, the experience of past generations being considered, and the actual results of political interference with moral concerns being taken into account.

The danger is that this their serene supineness may be indulged to the extent of making them a prey to the "Christian statesmanship" which plots over their heads. Hence, while rejoicing in the active vigilance of the agitators outside of the Church, we rejoice no less heartily in the signs that the best Christian minds are awake to the possibilities of peril from the maneuverers within their own camp.

O. B. F.

Communications.

MR. CHADWICK'S "BOOK OF POEMS."

This is a small volume of choice little poems, and it is presented by Roberts Brothers in neatly-fitting dress. There is sweetness of rhythm in its verse, and a rare fascination in the gentle flow of thought and feeling, with nothing that stirs the hidden depths of longings for the unattained, and leaves the aching heart to emptiness and fruitless yearning. The author's heart is alive to all sights and sounds in Nature, and, through all her works, he feels the throbbings of the Universal Spirit. The mysterious emotions of the soul he understands, and the play of natural objects and natural scenes upon them as upon a finely-tuned instrument. With truly poetic feeling, he is keenly sensitive to analogies and contrasts, and, penetrating beyond that which to the common eye is wholly embraced in the merely external, he discovers those occult resemblances which transcend the perceptions of sense, and is thus fertile in illustrations of natural objects by mental experiences, as well as in the more common illustrations by the reverse process.

The sea is to the author a constant inspiration, and, when called away from it, he grieves, like a lover, for its loss. In "Sea-Sorcery," that mystic feeling which floats one off into the realm where time and eternity seem to mingle, where one is so lost in dreamy bliss as almost to choose to die rather than come back to the stern realities of life's weighty burdens and unsufficiency, and where, even in a few brief hours, he has so far outlived them, that they come back to his consciousness as unrealities,—all this is indicated in a way that brings it home to personal experience.

The home affections, their joys and sorrows, are depicted with tender and delicate pathos. A deeply reverent and religious spirit pervades the whole, diffusing light and cheer amid the most grievous afflictions. A broad, loving humanity, too, is felt, extending even to our kindred of low degree. In the first poem of the book, "My Barnacles," is this beautifully apparent. These little creatures, left by the retreating sea to the hot sun, "and lover's careless feet," are his, he says:—

"By lover's right;
And, when the tide is low,
Down to the edge with scooping hands
Or cup of shell I go,

"And dip the briny waters up,
And bear them back to give
To these wee things that long for them,
As dying men to live.

"How eagerly their shells dispart
To take the moisture in!
And do I hear a tiny laugh,—
The faintest, merriest din?"

The story of "The Golden-Robin's Nest," interwoven of the "wee darling's" "golden hair," and the old grandsire's, "white as snow," is charmingly told, yet with sad pathos comes the close:—

"But when again the golden-robins came,
Cleaving the orchards with their crests adame,
Grandsire's white locks and baby's golden head
Were lying low, both in one grassy bed."

"Catching Sunshine" is another attractive little poem. "A cunning two-year old" wondered why drooped her flowers, and was told by mamma because indoors the sunshine did not come:—

"Next morning when she went to seek
Her darling at her play,
She found her standing in the sun
In just the queerest way;

"For there she held aloft a cup
Above her pretty head.
'What are you doing, Lolo, dear?'
Mamma, astonished, said.

"And she, her cup still held aloft,—
Bless her, ye Heavenly Powers!—
'I'm catching sunshine, mamma dear,
To give my 'little flowers.'"

But these are specimens it seems almost invidious to take, the poems, each in kind, are so suffused with beauty. It is a little book fitted to read quietly of a late evening hour to an appreciative listener, or alone and in silence, when indisposed for "the grand old masters," but rather for the "humbler fact" who has "Heard in his soul the music

Of wonderful melodies," which impart to the night sweet harmony and peace.

A. H.

WHAT IS TRUE?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

There is nothing more lauded in the "sacred" writings of all nations than truth. Yet all men admit that all religions, except their own, are founded on fictions, or imaginary facts; in short, on falsehoods. And while they admit this damaging charge against all other religions, they utterly refuse to permit us to go behind their own "sacred" writings, with the inquiry whether the things therein alleged are really true. They assume their truth, and denounce all who do not as lost sinners.

If any person has gone behind the Old and New Testaments, and satisfied himself that all the things therein alleged are historically true, and that the theories therein presented of the relations of men to each other and to the Supreme Being are consistent with each other and with the nature of things, he has an unquestionable right to cherish his belief. But he does not thereby acquire any right to impose it upon others any more than if he had merely assumed what he thinks he has proved. To a reasonable being there can be no revelation of truth which does not commend itself to his own individual reason. Human beings are only justified in taking things as true on trust, while the reasoning faculty is weak, too weak to discern between truth and falsehood. When it becomes strong enough to weigh evidence, to discover fraud, to unmask hypocrisy, the acceptance as true of what its own reason decides to be either false or improbable, is simply wicked. If there is any such thing as sin, it is sin.

It does not follow that there is no truth in "sacred" writings because falsehood is found in them. Woe to the world if even the worst liars did not sometimes speak the truth. The most sincere historians may be imposed upon. All "sacred" writings are more or less progressive. Look back into ancient laws, and you will find cruelty and injustice legalized in the best of them. So in the grand old Psalms of David you will find actions and passions attributed to Jehovah which no doctor of divinity would now dare attribute to the Supreme Being for fear of being indicted for blasphemy.

The historical basis of the Christian religion is contained in four or five distinct narratives of the life and death of a marvellous ethical teacher, whose doctrines were by no means new to the world, though his power of statement and fidelity to conscience were unparalleled. He was a reformer of religion from the inside, waging the war of sincerity against shams with such utter reliance on Divine power to stand by him, that he attacked the powerful hierarchy of his day, single handed, in the citadel of its power. The Divine support was withheld. In the bitterness of his disappointment, and with a heart already broken, he was crucified between two thieves. Parallel tragedies there had been before, lessons of the highest import for future ages, but never perhaps one so touching, because never as childlike a faith had found itself at fault. So far there is no occasion to doubt the facts, little as we know of the deponents, and silent as is contemporary history on an event so likely to attract attention.

But stopping here, Christianity, as we see it, could not exist. The narratives proceed to state that the crucifixion was fatal; that the crucified was placed in a tomb, which was sealed and watched; that angels came, paralyzed the guard, and rolled away the stone; that Jesus rose bodily, walked away, and, after appearing to many of his disciples, went up into heaven, promising through the mouths of "two men" in "white apparel" to come again in like manner. On these additional allegations the whole system of Christianity as we see it, the whole Christian ecclesiasticism of eighteen centuries, is based. To support such allegation the evidence must necessarily be much stronger than that required to induce a belief that Jesus lived, taught, attacked the money-changers in the temple, and was crucified. These natural facts, with the matter of the teaching, might easily have escaped the notice of cotemporary history. Not so the astounding miracle of a crucified man rising from the dead and ascending bodily into the sky. That was a thing—and especially if it concerns all mankind, as is alleged—to command instant attention and verification on the spot. There is no evidence, no pretence that it attracted any attention at the time, save among a small circle of disciples. No narrative or propos verbal was made out at the time, or till long years after. We hear nothing from Joseph of Arimathea who owned the tomb, or from Nicodemus, or any other eminent Jew likely to take an interest in and give testimony of such an event if it had occurred.

Now the theology built on this alleged event by Paul and others, though there is no satisfactory evidence in the Scriptures, even as finally manipulated, that it was proclaimed or pretended by Jesus himself, is that the uncreated Creator of the universe allowed and ordered his own "only begotten Son" to be sacrificed on that cross for the sins of the world, that they who should believe on him, and no others, should have eternal life. Yet the fact that he rose from the dead, and was thus proved to be that predestined sacrifice, was allowed to be almost private on the very theatre of its accomplishment! Supposing we could by any possibility reconcile the sacrifice of a perfectly innocent being with the justice of God, how can we reconcile the mode of this display of divine justice with the wisdom of a God who meant to save any soul by a belief in it? If the facts of science rested on no better evidence or more credible testimony than these facts of theology, the priesthood would not have the slightest occasion to quarrel with science. They would laugh it to scorn as easily as they do the resurrections of the "Spiritualists."

They seem one and all to have forgotten how the first Christians lived in daily expectation that their risen Lord and Savior would return again bodily from the sky to set up his kingdom on earth, and that if the Scriptures do not positively and absolutely assert that, they assert nothing whatever. It long ago ceased to be possible that that assertion could be true. And if that proves false, what becomes of the assertion that Jesus rose from the dead? We are thrown back on the only credible facts, and nothing is left of Christianity except the searching and salutary appeals which Jesus, as a man, made to the consciences of men.

Those appeals, though they hardly cover the whole ground of life, do contain the highest and happiest morality yet given to mankind. The world can no more afford to throw them away than it can the sunshine. The soul that drinks them in grows too large to worry itself much about its own individual future. It is contagiously happy, accepting so much of truth and justice as it can grasp as a sufficient salvation on the spot, without requiring God to give it any bonds for the next world. But the God-dishonoring falsehood superimposed upon the apothegms and parables of Jesus, beclouding and shutting out the sublime lessons of order and harmony which the universe is more and more revealing to us through scientific investigation, has terribly neutralized the result.

Christianity being false on one side, and that the side most insisted on by the pulpit, breeds falsehood in every department of life. Till we have a pulpit that will preach "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," how can we expect oaths to bind anybody? How can we expect anything but deception anywhere?

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

BOSTON, March 4, 1877.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

The whole of the last preceding article was a partial digression, inasmuch as it was subdivisive of the Consciousness or spirit; whereas, we are dealing mainly with the primal distribution of the mentismus into the Soul, the Consciousness, and the Mind; but this special matter of the subject and object, in the operations of the conscious spirit was so closely entrenched upon by the course of the discussion, is so centrally involved, analogically, in the whole subject-matter, and is so intrinsically important, that it could not be well avoided, and will be from time to time recur to. The direct drift of our investigation is, nevertheless, to establish the parallelism, or more properly the repetitive coincidence between the without, the within, and the between of different spheres of being; and, from now on, more immediately as concerning the human body and the human mind, taken as two such spheres.

Let us return to the human body. We are prepared, now, to become somewhat more precise in our discriminations. What was before stated as to the body, making its without to be the flesh, its within to be the viscera or vitals, and its between to be the bony skeleton, we must now take to have been an epitome, somewhat inexact in character, resulting from the fact that it represents the condensation of two such trios into one. To be more specific, and more specifically incipient; that is, to confine ourselves precisely to the first of the two trios in question, the Without of the body is what Dr. Lambert, the distinguished physiologist, classes together as the Head-and-Trunk-Walle, and what, for the want of a better single word, we may call the Hull or Husk of the body, by analogy with a ship. The Within of the body is, then, the viscerismus, extending to and especially including the breathing or wind apparatus, or breath; the whole analogous, we may say, with the cargo of the ship, with a special extension of the idea, to include the sails or wind apparatus, and the breeze or breath-like spirit which plays in the sails. The Between of the body is not now to be taken literally, as that which merely intervenes between the within and the without, but as that middle view extended, on both sides of itself so as to embrace the without and the within in one perfectum; in a special sense the whole body, or ship.

It will be remembered that the without of the mind was shown to be the Spontaneity, and also called, after Hegel, the Soul. By the analogy now instituted, the Soul is the Hull (and if lost, or cast-away, then the Husk) of the mentismus; or, to change the figure, it is the chalice or cup which holds a more precious freightage which is the consciousness, or the conscious spirit. To retain the ship analogy, this freightage is the cargo, extending to and including the sails and the wind (or lungs and breath). The wind and breath are the universal analogues of "Spirit." The Within of the mind is the Consciousness with a special and characteristic extension to and partial identification with the Spirit, as will be presently more fully shown. Finally, the whole or resultant Mind, or the Mind proper, is the Betweenity and its embrace of the Spontaneity and the consciousness, which may be now otherwise designated as the soul and the spirit.

We find ourselves, a length, therefore, in the presence of the old and well-established theological, but always heretofore very vague and indefinite distribution of the feeling and thinking man, into Soul, Spirit, and Mind. These present namings are, on the contrary, vigorous and technical; and may not accord with the first impressions, from the side of popular usage. The term soul is very diversely employed, and will continue to be so, no doubt, notwithstanding this technical assignment. It is often used as synonymous with the total mentismus. It is also, familiarly, and perhaps most usually, but hardly as a strict term of philosophy, put for precisely the opposite meaning to that here assigned to it; namely, for the perceiving Consciousness; or for its withinness, the Ego; or Subject, as distinct from any object; as when Mr. Greene says, alluding to Spencer: "A philosophy that ignores the human Soul is usually characterized as a materialistic philosophy, just as a philosophy that ignores God is characterized as an atheistic philosophy." Blazing Star, p. 128.

All this shows how utterly indefinite the use of the term soul hitherto is; but we certainly need some term to denote that outermost of the total mind (the mentismus) which is most invested in or interlaced with external nature, and which, as it were, repeats Nature, within the mind. I rest on the authority of Hegel for this use of the word soul. It is also, I think, quite certain that he had the authority of the primitive Greek conception and usage; for by the Greeks, Psyche was very closely allied with Nature. It was she who was the lover of Cupid; and who was enticed into his magic palace; but who was even untrue to him; but who when deserted by him, roamed through the earth in search of him, that is to say, of sensuous pleasures or love. Cupidity and cupidism, the love of gold and the love of voluptuousness, or animal lust, as the objective counterparts of the soul, certainly imply that the term soul is used to denote the mind's outermost, or its intimate relation, almost its identification with the natural world. It was Proserpine, not Psyche, who was the Greek idealization of the interior spirit of the mind; who came and went like the breath; or who interchanged her residence, regularly and periodically between her subjective or inner, and her objective or external abode. See Bacon's Essays, p. 360.

There is, at least, an equal degree of indefiniteness and uncertainty in the use of the word Spirit; and there is a special explanation needed as to why this term is appropriate to the entire Consciousness, as the innermost of the mind, as contrasted with the outer Spontaneity or Soul. The true and complete analogue, in the body, of this innermost of the mind, is as we have seen, the vitals or viscera plus the Breath, which comes and goes, into and out from the vitals (like Proserpine's visits to and from the Plutonian regions), and which in an eminent sense feeds and sustains them. The trachea (or windpipe) is, as it were, the stem of the Superior Vitals, the Heart and Lungs; or, in a more refined sense, the breath itself is that stem, and may, therefore, be appropriately put forward, representatively for the naming of the whole visceral region or the inner man entire. This is the solution of the seeming incongruity of the use of the term Spirit for the total Reflective Consciousness of the mind. The word spirit is from the Latin spiro, to breathe; as pneuma, the Greek word for spirit, means also, and more primitively, the breath (a less figurative or mythical word than Proserpine, for the same idea). Indeed in every language, the words denoting spirit are mere adoptions, or adaptations of or from the words for breath; and it must not be forgotten, and cannot be too strongly emphasized, that all words denoting mental discriminations are derived from words having the prior meanings of bodily or material discriminations; and that for the purposes of our present current of investigations, there is hardly any other clue so important as this etymological one.

After all, it may be convenient and permissible, and to some minds less objectionable, to use the term Soul in a general sense for the entire mind (the mentismus), and then to specify, The Mundane or Spontaneous Soul, for the mind's outermost, The Intelli- gent Soul for the Spirit or Consciousness, and the Mind-soul or Mental-soul for the mind's perfectum, the resultant mind, from the union and co-action of the former two. Still again we may say the Psychic Soul, the Conscious Soul, and the Psychologic Soul. It is less important what the terms are than that some terms should become fixed and settled for these all-important discriminations. In another article I shall introduce another set of synonyms for these ideas from Swedenborg. Still, for ready reference, and with the explanations now made, I believe the technical and habitual use of the old instructively evolved terms Soul, Spirit, and Mind will prove most satisfactory; although this use of Mind, for a third of the whole domain, will necessitate the frequent use of the new technicality mentismus for the whole domain, when philosophic accuracy is aimed at; although, of course, Mind will continue to be used, popularly, in this general sense.

At all events, I must insist on the vital importance of obtaining, in some way, fixed technicalities for these primal divisions of the mind; and that no proper science of the mind at large (mentology) is even founded until that is effected. It is, indeed, curious, that at this late day, mental science is so little constituted that different writers have no means of rendering themselves mutually intelligible to each other, in talking about mental discriminations and phenomena, even the primary and most general ones. They have no certainty that they are talking about the same things when they use the same words, nor that they are talking about different things when they use different words; and one-half the time of the reader of any book on this class of subjects is consumed in learning, if he can, the author's peculiar use of terms. Such indicia are characteristic of the uncertain preliminary stage in the evolution of any science.

To recur to the various uses of the term Soul, it may be noticed that even in common habit it is often used to denote the merest external personality, as when we number a population as containing so many souls; an expression which would include all the idiots, as well; who have not even a well-constituted shell or hull of the mind; and no proper consciousness, or true spirit, nor mental perfectum.

The human mind is throughout double-aspected, not now referring to that dual character, technically known as the duality of the mind, especially elaborated by Wigan and Lambert, and represented by the two hemispheres of the brain; but to a difference affecting both brains, or what we ordinarily call the brain; quite at large—that is to say, as between the outward-tending presentation and the inward-tending presentation. The former of these, sensuous, observing, worldly-minded, mundane, looks towards the outer world, and relates the mind to its phenomena, qualities, and character. The latter, spiritual, reflective, thoughtful, pietistic, transcendental, somnambulant or trance-like, looks towards the inner world, the spirit and spiritual world, as contrasted with and opposed to the outer or mundane sphere, and relates the mind to the phenomena, qualities, and character of the inner or subjective world, at large, whatever we may find that to mean. Next to the difference of sex there is no other difference among mankind so all-pervading and dominant, as that which divides them into External Minded and Internal Minded people.

In this first very broad distribution of mentalities it may now appear why abstract intellectual people are classed with pietists and Spiritualists. Swedenborg uses the term rational-spiritual to cover the natural relation of these two seemingly remote aspects of mind. With the French un homme d'esprit is not a spiritualist, but an intellectualist. Comte means by the spiritual class of society, his priesthood of the future, the scientist, and philosophers. It is in this broad aspect of the subject that the term Spirit becomes adequate to signify the internal as against the external-mindedness of the individual or the race.

External-mindedness is, therefore, a sort of Outer Consciousness inhering in the Soul; and Internal-mindedness is the Inner Consciousness, or true consciousness, inhering in the spirit. External or worldly-minded men find it impossible to comprehend spiritual-minded men, and spiritual-minded people have nearly the same difficulty as regards the others. The worldly-minded are again, by the analogy, Objective minds, and the spiritual-minded are Subjective minds (for although subject and object are strictly subdivisive of the inner consciousness the distinction is repeated in the outer consciousness).

I have now to add the leading point of importance resulting from this discrimination, so much to be insisted upon, of the subject and object, thus made specially representative of the withoutness and the withinness of mind. Mr. Greene and the other writers quoted in the last preceding article, points out the nature of the subject-object-relation, as it occurs within the individual mind. In the close of that article, I said that Mr. Greene had failed to generalize the spirit of that relationship. What I mean by such generalization is, in part this: As the human mind and the human body, and all the other things we have considered have, each, a Without and a Within, as their primal differentiation, so these should be, to be true to the plan of being so indicated, a corresponding two (and three) foldness in the constitution of the World itself. There should be, therefore, and if the principle holds good, there must be a Spirit World, similar to that talked of by Swedenborg and the Spiritists, which is also a Subjective World, not in the sense that it is merely within you or me, but that it is a Withinness-sphere, holding the same relation to this outer mundane sphere which the subject holds to the object, in the constitution of the individual mind.

It also results that the Subjective state of the individual mind represented especially in trance, is in natural rapport with this interior or subjective world. In this manner, the fundamental doctrine of spiritism, which has hitherto rested almost wholly upon observational and intuitional grounds, gains a foothold in fundamental philosophy.

A POLITICAL EXPLANATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—There is such constant misrepresentation or misunderstanding of the logical position of those who believe that Tilden was fairly elected, that I presume to trespass upon your space, now that the question is a mere matter of history, in order to set ourselves right in regard to it.

No person who voted for Tilden doubts that there was fraud and intimidation in Louisiana before the election; we claim, however, that it was not confined to one party, and we claim that it is not proved or made probable that there was a sufficient predominance of it on the part of the Democrats to justify giving the vote of the State to Hayes, but that, if it is not counted for the candidate for whom it was cast, it should be thrown out altogether, as the precedent of 1872, under precisely similar circumstances, would require. The question ceased to be a political one and became a legal one, on the 7th of November; and we believe that Tilden's election would have been conceded at once if Republicans had been willing to remember that the question was no longer who would be the best President, but which had been fairly chosen.

The following propositions, containing nothing but admitted facts—which at least I have never seen questioned,—sum up our position:—

1. Tilden had a majority of several thousand, in Louisiana, of the votes "actually cast."

2. The Returning Board was composed exclusively of Republicans, although the law of the State required that it should contain members of both parties.

3. It was a Board of notoriously bad character, as testified to by such good Republicans as Gen. Sheridan, and Messrs. Wheeler, Hoar, and Foster.

4. It was detected in fraud during the canvass, as was admitted by Mr. John Sherman at the time, although he said nothing about it in his Report.

5. It did its work in secret, having certain quasi-public sessions in which it heard a certain amount of evidence, but doing the canvassing wholly in secret.

6. In its final report it made no statement as to the process by which it arrived at its result, only giving the result, with the statement in general terms that votes had been thrown out for intimidation.

7. It violated the law of the State, which expressly declares that no votes shall be thrown out unless the affidavit as to intimidation, etc., is made out the day of the election and appended to the original returns.

It is a maxim of law to assume a person to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty. That is technical, criminal law. In daily transactions, on the other hand, it is pretty safe to assume a man to be guilty if he works in the dark and shrinks from investigation. But all the time that these suspicious acts were going on, the entire Republican press—with the honorable exception of the Nation, the Springfield Republican, and I believe the Boston Transcript—were urging confidence in the actions of the Board, never once urging the Board itself to earn confidence by acting legally and openly.

These allegations we supposed would come before the Electoral Commission, and from their ascertainment or disapproval we supposed our new President would have a clear title. We looked to the Commission, either to search out the real truth, or, if it could not do that, at any rate to lay down some clear and cogent reason why it could not do so.

If, then, the Commission had fixed upon any one general principle to govern their action—as, it is competent to go behind the Governor's certificate, or it is not competent,—either of these would have been a consistent position; but either of these would have declared Tilden President. Therefore they abstained from committing themselves to any general rule, but made a special rule for each case.

In Florida they voted to receive evidence as to the eligibility of a certain elector.

In Louisiana they absolutely refused to receive any evidence whatever upon any point.

In Oregon they quietly received evidence and went behind the Governor's certificate, which, in the Louisiana case, they had declared positively they could not do.

I am aware that a nominal distinction was made, that they went behind the Oregon certificate on the ground that it was not based upon the canvass. But how could they know this officially except by receiving evidence, which, as to Louisiana, they had refused to do? And see the bearing of this decision. It was equivalent to saying: If the Canvassing Board of Oregon [the Secretary of State] had altered votes or thrown out Republican counties, there would have been no remedy,—it could not be inquired into: The mistake of the Democratic officials of Oregon was therefore in not manipulating the original returns; that would have placed them beyond the reach of the power of Congress and elected Tilden by precisely the same title which Hayes now has.

I have written this, not to open a controversy, but merely to state our position, and for the reason that the supporters of Tilden are constantly taunted with refusing to submit to defeat. We are ready to accept defeat, only prove to us that we are defeated. Let the Louisiana Board make a fair, open count and give valid reasons in detail for reversing the vote of that State; let the Electoral Commission lay down any one principle of law, as law, which, applied to every disputed State, will give the election to Hayes, if only as a matter of form, and we will acquiesce cheerfully. As it is, we submit, as good citizens, to the Presidency of a man whom three-fourths of the American people believe to occupy his place by fraud.

I will say in conclusion that I am a life-long Republican, my first Presidential vote having been cast for Hale and Julian in 1852. I voted for Tilden, as did Julian, Adams, Trumbull, and many other Republicans, because I believed the Republican organization to be hopelessly corrupt; and nothing has happened since the election to change this opinion.

[As a sort of personal explanation, this communication is printed in the hope that it will not be the beginning of a controversy which would be profitless and uninteresting here.—Ed.]

CIRCULATE THE PETITION.

SALAMANCA, Feb. 26, 1877.

EDITOR INDEX:—

If the "Religious Freedom Amendment" could be circulated in every town and ward in the United States, two million names at least could be obtained. The trouble will be that nineteen-twentieths of the towns and wards never will hear of it. There are some four hundred and fifty voters in this town of Salamanca, and, from the success I am having in obtaining names, I am confident one-fourth of them at least will sign the petition. This doubtless would be the case in every Northern town, if an opportunity were offered.

Cannot the officers of the National League see to it that a petition is circulated in every town and ward as above suggested? One man might superintend the circulation of petitions in each county and city.

There are in this (Cattaraugus) county thirty-two towns, and if you will send me that number of blank petitions, I will see that each town has one circulated.

Then I would suggest to the managers of the National League that a list of the counties and towns in the United States be made, and, as fast as petitions be received, they be credited to the locality where obtained.

Such a list can be readily copied from the Tribune Almanac. In this way a monster petition might be obtained, and a valuable agitation of the subject started.

Yours fraternally, H. L. GREEN.
P. S.—It might be well to ask through THE INDEX, for the names of volunteer canvassers for each county and city.

[We are much pleased by Mr. Green's active interest in this matter. But the officers of the National Liberal League have done and are doing all in their power—they need the help of every strong friend of the movement. They urge the formation of local Leagues for the very purpose of systemizing such work as this of getting signatures; if the great body of liberals are torpid or indifferent, how can a handful of persons do the work alone? The labor of finding canvassers and securing the thorough canvass of each town can only be done locally, and a local League could do it with ease. That is why we urge organization—not for the sake of being organized, but for the sake of doing the work. The truth is that the further advancement of this work depends on the liberals themselves, not on the officers of the N. L. L. But the latter stand ready to do all that is possible, and will be rejoiced to see the signs of a wide-spread spirit of devotion to the cause of State Secularization. The advocates of State Christianization are working like beavers, and gaining fresh triumphs every day; witness the administering of the oath of office to President Hayes on Saturday, thus establishing a new precedent for governmental homage to the "Christian Sabbath." Liberals, you are permitting the foundations of your liberty to be undermined; you can only preserve it by action.—Ed.]

THAT TERRIBLE QUESTION.

Mrs. "L. B. C." in THE INDEX of Feb. 22, attempts a reply to my "Open Letter to Mr. Stebbins." I shall not occupy myself with her uncalled-for personal slurs and innuendoes as not pertaining to the subject at all, but simply desire to correct her statement of my position. I did write—"I cannot permit even the most plausible statements of others to influence me"; but it does not logically follow, it appears to me, that therefore my "stock of knowledge must be very limited." My "stock of knowledge" concerning things spiritistic, I frankly admit, I most humbly confess, is not only "very limited," but really amounts to nothing. Is this my fault? Can Mrs. "L. B. C." or any honest Spiritualist, accuse me of demanding too much when, after years of patient investigation which resulted in nothing, I finally address myself to a person who claims to have obtained "proofs palpable" of spirit existence, and politely request him to have the kindness of enlightening not only myself but hundreds and thousands of earnest truth-seekers? When I addressed my open letter to Mr. Stebbins, it was in the expectation that my statement would be read and answered by one above the average spiritistic writers; that this gentleman would not regale me with stale ghost-stories, however "plausible," or with a narrative of this or that strange occurrence, or with tales of wonderful, supernatural phenomena which medium so-and-so had experienced once. It was this sort of literature which not only disgusted me, but has sickened thousands of honest investigators; and it was in the ardent hope that Mr. Stebbins would perhaps be able to show us sceptics and materialists the true modus operandi, the proofs which convinced him of the "facts" of spirit-intercourse.

I have, as stated before, calmly and patiently investigated for myself, have attended a good many "séances" and "circles" (I was not satisfied with five experiments, as Mrs. "L. B. C." thinks), have read the leading authors on this subject, etc.; and I think Mrs. "L. B. C." has no cause to claim that my "mind was biased." I have also witnessed some performances of Robert Houdin, Signor Blitz, Robert Heller, and other magicians which were very strange; in fact more inexplicable than many of the so-called spiritistic phenomena as related by Mrs. "L. B. C.'s" "most reliable witnesses by the hundreds!"

But Mrs. "L. B. C." hopes that Mr. Stebbins will not "spend his time" with me; that it would be an "arduous task" to enlighten me. That may be the case or not; I, for my part, consider it preposterous for our Spiritualistic friends to evade such discussions, when all great thinkers, every founder of a new system of philosophy, every discoverer of a new theory have to submit to the most searching criticism. As a general rule they cheerfully do so, and are not afraid of controversy: vide Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Darwin, Huxley, Carpenter, and many others.

My spiritistic friends may be displeased; I cannot help it. They may continue to claim that they form the vanguard of progress; that they are the pioneers of freethought; that they are destroying ecclesiastical superstition, theological bigotry, and superannuated religious dogmas;—what does their system, their cultus rest upon, if not upon the very same basis, the identical foundation of a blind religious belief in phenomena which cannot be demonstrated, but must be accepted as facts, whether they are such or not?

HUGO ANDRIESEN.

BEAVER, Pa.

THE ETERNITY OF MATTER.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—Fénelon says in his Lives of the Ancient Philosophers that "Aristotle maintained that the world is eternal; that one generation of men has always produced another, without ever having a beginning. 'If there had been,' said Aristotle, 'a first man, he must have been born without father or mother, which is repugnant to Nature.'" Fénelon says that Aristotle makes the same observation with regard to birds and other species of beings which people the world; and remarks that "it is impossible that there could have been a first egg to give the beginning to birds, or that there could have been a first bird to give the beginning to eggs, for a bird comes from an egg."

Huxley in his New York Lectures says that this was a "favorite fancy with the ancients." I am told that Fénelon misrepresents Aristotle's doctrine, and that not any ancient philosopher of note can be referred to as holding the doctrine. Is this so?

Yours respectfully,

JOHN CHAPPELLSMITH.

NEW HARMONY, Ind., Jan. 26, 1877.

[In the Metaphysics (xx., 3, 1) Aristotle says: "After these inquiries, there remains for us to make our readers aware that neither matter nor form is generated." All the atomistic school of philosophers, from Leucippus and Democritus downwards, held to the eternity of matter. The Epicurean school, especially, made a dogma of the principle that "nothing can come from the non-existing, and nothing which exists can pass into non-existence" (Ueberweg, i., 205), which Lucretius turned into an hexameter verse: "Nullam rem e nilo gigni dicuntur umquam" (l., 150). So of the Stoics Zeller says, in his Stoics, Epicureans, and Sceptics (p. 148), that they identified the conceptions of "God and Original Matter," and that, with them, "property and material, matter and form, are not, as with Aristotle, things radically different though united from all eternity. Far from it, the forming force resides in matter as such; it is in itself something material; it is identical with ether or fiery matter, or atmospheric current." This implies the impossibility of creation, and the Stoic poet Persius has an hexameter verse exactly equivalent to that of Lucretius, as follows: "De nihilo nihil, in nihilum nil posse recerit." The foregoing is enough to sustain Fénelon.—Ed.]

REPLY

TO "AN OPEN LETTER" FROM HUGO ANDRIESEN.

DEAR SIR:—Your "open letter" to me, in THE INDEX of Feb. 1st, is just read. You ask me "to enlighten" you on Spiritualism, and yet you say, "Before I accept anything as a 'fact,' a 'truth,' I must be convinced, and I cannot allow even the most plausible statements of others to influence me in this respect." As all I can do, in THE INDEX, will be to make statements, so far as facts go, I cannot expect, by your own showing, even "to influence," must less to convince you, and therefore must respectfully decline the task.

So far as my arguments or opinions may go, as you promptly characterize my opinions as "inanities," that does not promise well for the amenities of a discussion. The space I can fairly ask in THE INDEX would not suffice for the vain effort you ask of me. These reasons seem ample for declining your request.

Yours respectfully,

G. B. STEBBINS.

DETROIT, Mich., March 1, 1877.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

Has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonfieschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keahub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. 40 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooks Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents: ten for 80 cents; one hundred, $3.00.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 7.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
* BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Briefcase.....	2.25
The World-Friest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUEHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete Index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Letter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A Series of Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.50
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	4.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compriating—Adam Bede.....	1.50
Romola.....	1.50
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.50
Felix Holt.....	1.50
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stieler. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	5.00
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	5.00
Hermann and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	4.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Rite of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Originisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	1.25
Songs of Seven.....	1.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel- lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treatise on the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Annotations, by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS O.). Verseditties, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Amongst Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1852 to 1885.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.25
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.40
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.00
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.50
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German.....	1.50
Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NASBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Progress from the History of my Creed.....	2.50
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truist Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.25
What to Wear?.....	1.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Secondary, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 26 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	3.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINF'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Remond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELLA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Forests.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Manhood.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Scatterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwater's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,
231 Washington St., Boston.
Digitized by Google

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

SINGLE VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, and 1876 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, and 7) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, and 1876, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 6,

Complete for the Centennial Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MADAME FOY'S CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER

Increases in Popularity every year, And for HEALTH, COMFORT, and STYLE is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY
FOY & HARMON,
New Haven, Conn.

FOUR COMPLETE SETS!

THE INDEX for

1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1874, 1875, and 1876.

SEVEN VOLUMES IN ALL,

Neatly half-bound in black morocco, can now be had at this Office. These Sets have been collected with difficulty, and this is probably the

LAST OPPORTUNITY

that will offer itself for securing a complete file of THE INDEX from the beginning.

PRICE, TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best

CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT

In the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question, it should be in the hands of

EVERY VOTER,

And has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Ten Thousand Copies

Are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	.40
FIFTY.....	.75
ONE HUNDRED.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED.....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED.....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED.....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND.....	12.00

N. B. Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." New and cheaper edition. Price, post-paid, $1.25. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

NATIONAL REFORMER,

Journal of Radicalism and Freethought.
EDITED BY
CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. PRICE TWOPENCE.
17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street,
LONDON, ENGLAND.

Sent, post-free, for one year, on receipt of International Post-Office order, for $3.50.

NOTICE TO THE LADIES.

CORTICELLI SILK & TWIST

Should be kept for sale by all enterprising dealers in trimmings. When you cannot procure it at your store, apply directly to the manufacturers.

BOSTON OFFICE,

No. 18 Summer St.,

NONOTUCK SILK COMPANY.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 10 cts. (Ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $5.00.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75. 35 cts. each; for 1876 40 cts.; four for $1.00.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Ninth Course of

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

SUNDAY AFTERNOONS, at 3 o'clock.

- Jan. 7.—O. B. Frothingham. "Jesus."
- Jan. 14.—Minot J. Savage. "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."
- Jan. 21.—Professor Alpheus Hyatt. "Old Age in the Race and in the Individual"—A New View in Evolution; illustrated with diagrams.
- Jan. 28.—Wm. R. Alger—"The Laboring Classes and the Ruling Classes: or, How the World is to be Redeemed."
- Feb. 4.—Prof. Edw. S. Morse. "Concerning Evolution." Illustrated.
- Feb. 11.—John W. Chadwick. "Emanuel Swedenborg."
- "The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century"—a series of four lectures, viz.—
- Feb. 18.—Francis Tiffany. "Jonathan Edwards."
- Feb. 25.—Clay McCasley. "Dr. Channing."
- March 4.—David A. Wasson. "Theodore Parker."
- March 11.—Francis E. Abbot. "The Scientific Method in Religion."

Single admission, 15 cents. Tickets for the course, $1. For sale at the office in Horticultural Hall, and at OLIVER DITSON & CO.'S, 451 Washington Street.

ENGLISH AND CLASSICAL SCHOOL for both sexes. Address EMILY J. LEONARD, Meriden, Conn.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved (#2) Receipt Book." Address, Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, Sept. 20, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 35 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A NEW QUARTERLY.

PROSPECTUS.

The want has been long felt in this country, by a large and growing class of thinking people, of a periodical publication serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. To meet this want, and in the hope that such demand may prove competent to maintain its object when once provided with it, it is proposed to issue, on May 1, 1877—or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant—the first number of a quarterly periodical, to be called

"THE RADICAL REVIEW."

The success or failure of this project will depend upon the more or less encouraging reception which its announcement shall meet with from the public previous to the date mentioned. Believing that

THE LABOR QUESTION—

Involving, as it does, the basis of property, the principles of finance, and the organization of industry, and determining, in its settlement, directly the material, and indirectly the mental and spiritual condition of the people,—demands immediate consideration by the best minds, it is the intention of the management of the proposed Review, in selecting its contents, to give the preference largely to articles aimed at the solution of this disputed problem. While so doing, however, it will not exclude, but welcome rather, the proper presentation of all sides of all subjects pertaining to human welfare, whether social, economic, scientific, literary, æsthetic, or religious; prompted to this course by a firm faith in the omnipotence of Truth. It is hoped that the size of the Review, and the infrequency of its issue, will furnish opportunity for thoroughness of treatment, not afforded hitherto to the majority of competent exponents of radical ideas; but, while most of its articles will be of the weighty character peculiar to the best review literature, poetry and the lighter features of the monthly magazine will not be disregarded. To book reviews, large space will be devoted.

The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons, to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter:—

John Weiss, John Fluke, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, J. N. Larned, Lyssander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, B. F. Underwood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, B. W. Ball, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, Chas. D. B. Mills, John Orvis, Chas. W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Hanson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John H. Clifford, J. K. Ingalls.

Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. A limited number of book and other literary advertisements will be received at low rates.

Any person wishing to encourage this enterprise by subscription may notify the publisher to that effect, whereupon he will receive a printed blank, which, when signed and returned to the publisher, will bind the signer to forward the price of subscription as soon as informed that the success of the venture is assured.

Terms per annum, post-paid, $5.00.

Address the Publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
Lock Box 669, New Bedford, Mass.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

—OF THE—

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

With its beautiful gilt-embossed SEAL—representing Columbia holding the scales of Justice above the eager clutch of the Catholic Bishop and the Protestant Clergyman, together with the Capitol and the Meeting-house at opposite corners, symbolizing the Separation of Church and State.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

With the same Seal attached, will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Life Members of it.

These Certificates, if framed and hung upon the wall, will make a very

ATTRACTIVE ORNAMENT

in any apartment.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

for Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, are now ready for delivery, and will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient coöperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome gilt-embossed Seal of the National Liberal League, on a scarlet ground, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 8.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1877.

WHOLE NO. 378.

THE THIRTEEN PRINCIPLES.

PLATFORM OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EXTRACT FROM THE "PATRIOTIC ADDRESS."

1. The Constitution of the United States is built on the principle that the State can be, and ought to be, totally independent of the Church: in other words, that the natural reason and conscience of mankind are a sufficient guarantee of a happy, well-ordered, and virtuous civil community, and that free popular government must prove a failure, if the Church is suffered to control legislation.

2. The religious rights and liberties of all citizens without exception, under the Constitution, are absolutely equal.

3. These equal religious rights and liberties include the right of every citizen to enjoy, on the one hand, the unrestricted exercise of his own religious opinions, so long as they lead him to no infringement of the equal rights of others; and not to be compelled, on the other hand, by taxation or otherwise, to support any religious opinions which are not his own.

4. These equal religious rights and liberties do not depend in the slightest degree upon conformity to the opinions of the majority, but are possessed to their fullest extent by those who differ from the majority fundamentally and totally.

5. Christians possess under the Constitution no religious rights or liberties which are not equally shared by Jews, Buddhists, Confucians, Spiritualists, materialists, rationalists, freethinkers, sceptics, infidels, atheists, pantheists, and all other classes of citizens who disbelieve in the Christian religion.

6. Public or national morality requires all laws and acts of the government to be in strict accordance with this absolute equality of all citizens with respect to religious rights and liberties.

7. Any infringement by the government of this absolute equality of religious rights and liberties is an act of national immorality, a national crime committed against that natural "justice" which, as the Constitution declares, the government was founded to "establish."

8. Those who labor to make the laws protect more faithfully the equal religious rights and liberties of all the citizens are not the "enemies of morality," but moral reformers in the true sense of the word, and act in the evident interest of public righteousness and peace.

9. Those who labor to gain or to retain for one class of religious believers any legal privilege, advantage, or immunity which is not equally enjoyed by the community at large are really "enemies of morality," unite Church and State in proportion to their success, and, no matter how ignorantly or innocently, are doing their utmost to destroy the Constitution and undermine this free government.

10. Impartial protection of all citizens in their equal religious rights and liberties, by encouraging the free movement of mind, promotes the establishment of the truth respecting religion; while violation of these rights, by checking the free movement of mind, postpones the triumph of truth over error, and of right over wrong.

11. No religion can be true whose continued existence depends on continued State aid. If the Church has the truth, it does not need the unjust favoritism of the State; if it has not the truth, the iniquity of such favoritism is magnified tenfold.

12. No religion can be favorable to morality whose continued existence depends on continued injustice. If the Church teaches good morals, of which justice is a fundamental law, it will gain in public respect by practising the morals it teaches, and voluntarily offering to forego its unjust legal advantages; if it does not teach good morals, then the claim to these unjust advantages on the score of its good moral influence becomes as wicked as it is weak.

13. Whether true or false, whether a fountain of good moral influences or of bad, no particular religion and no particular church has the least claim in justice upon the State for any favor, any privilege, any immunity. The Constitution is no respecter of persons and no respecter of churches; its sole office is to establish civil society on the principles of right reason and impartial justice; and any State aid rendered to the Church, being a compulsion of the whole people to support the Church, wrongs every citizen who protests against such compulsion, violates impartial justice, sets at naught the first principles of morality, and subverts the Constitution by undermining the fundamental idea on which it is built.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

REV. JOSEPH COOK has taken pains to announce that "there is no scholarly scepticism in Boston." Such an outburst of mingled petulance, absurdity, and detraction merely shows that His Lectureship is an honest judge neither of scepticism nor of scholarship. If we should say that there is no scholarly Orthodoxy in Boston, we should say what is untrue; but what Mr. Cook says is exactly as untrue. The worst of it is that Mr. Cook is perfectly aware of the character of his own statement, and makes it only for effect.

A CORRESPONDENT asks us to define "righteousness," and says: "My reason for making this request is that I have no other, and know no other, than what is called 'self-righteousness'; and that is said to be like old horses—the more one has, the worse off he is." Righteousness we take to be simply doing right; and no "Savior" can do right in our stead, or relieve us from the obligation of doing it, or save us from the moral consequences of not doing it. Probably this is what our friend means by "self-righteousness," though this word usually signifies that one is puffed up with a conceit of his own virtue not warranted by his conduct.

LISTS OF SIGNATURES to the National Liberal League petition have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from Mr. Morris Einstein, 92 names; from Mr. H. B. Fletcher, 37; from Mr. Franklin A. Day, Castana, Iowa, 54; from Mr. H. Steinmetz, Pittston, Pa., 18; from Mr. W. A. Johnson, West Exeter, N. Y., 44; from Mr. Asa Haskell, Alleghany, N. Y. (through Mr. H. L. Green), 86; from Mr. Fritz Mittelmann, La Crosse, Wis., 68; from Hon. L. W. Billingsley, Lincoln, Nebraska, 43 (including 12 members of the Legislature). Large lists are promised from other places. Total number of signatures thus far received—2535.

THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY seems to be a wiser man than many of his clerical brethren. In a visitation sermon delivered not long since, he said: "There are some among ourselves who think that they find a refuge from infidelity in the maintenance of superstition, but I believe that they are few even in numbers, and fewer still in their general influence upon the whole community and on the intelligence of the age. . . . A man may have picked up here and there a good deal from reviews, and yet not be able to meet an intelligent mechanic whom he comes athwart in his daily ministrations, and who has got, by what means we know not, some real acquaintance with subjects of which the clergyman is most profoundly ignorant."

IN THE opening paper of this issue, we have condensed so much of the results of a lifetime that we could covet for it an hour's concentrated attention from all who care to understand us in the least. But especially to our brothers and sisters in the Free Religious Association we would say that the questions here treated of so briefly concern us all alike and have been too much ignored. If this lecture has justly expounded the Constitution of the Association, then THE INDEX is vindicated from the crude and confused and sometimes carping criticisms which have been lavishly bestowed upon it. But if it is mistaken in its construction of the Constitution, these columns are not only hospitably open, but cry importunately for a thorough exposure of the mistake. Let us have a "revival" of plain speaking on behalf of the truth.

NOT LONG since, the St. Louis Times thus reported a case of no little importance to the Catholic Church, and of no less importance to all tax-payers: "The Supreme Court yesterday dismissed the suit of St. Joseph vs. the St. Joseph College, and thus settled a question of great importance to the Catholics of the State. The suit was instituted several years ago by the city of St. Joseph to compel the college to pay taxes under the Drake Constitution, and it came up before the Supreme Court in St. Joseph three years ago, before the consolidation, and was held under advisement until yesterday, when the case was dismissed, the court thus virtually deciding that such property is not subject to taxation. It involved the right for cities and counties to tax all Catholic schools, asylums, and institutions, and was the only test case ever made under the Drake Constitution, which did not give the Legislature power to exempt property. As the Drake Constitution was in existence ten years, had the decision been in favor of St. Joseph, it would have amounted to a confiscation of Catholic institutions at the present value of real estate."

THE AGITATION begun on the tax-exemption question by the Boston Liberal League, in the winter of 1873-4, has not yet expended itself. In his last inaugural address, as we are informed by a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, Governor Rice, referring to the bulky Report of the Tax Commissioners, recommended further investigation of the subject; and another Joint Committee on "Just and Equal Taxation" was thereupon appointed. If the unjust taxation of mortgages is finally abolished in consequence of this movement, the public ought to thank the Liberal League for this much-needed relief. The Committee held public hearings on the special subject of church-exemption on March 13 and 15. On the former occasion, those in favor of church taxation were represented by Messrs. F. E. Abbot, Warner Johnson, of Greenfield, Mass., and J. B. Verity, of Cambridgeport, while those opposed to it were represented by Rev. Henry W. Foote, of King's Chapel, and a smooth-tongued Catholic priest with the euphonious name of Bodfish. At the second hearing (at which we were unable to be present) Mr. George W. Park made an argument for church taxation; while President Eliot, of Harvard College, President Warren, of Boston University (Methodist), and three Catholic lawyers (Hon. P. A. Collins and a Mr. Crowley being two of them), appeared to defend the right of the public to tax rationalists, sceptics, etc., for the support of the churches. We are informed that the Mr. Crowley above mentioned, of whom we never before heard, made a personal attack on us by name, and read garbled extracts from our writings to support it, his object being to excite odium against the petitioners in the Committee's mind and to make bad names do duty as good arguments! President Eliot, though on the side of injustice, was at least not ungentlemanly.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Illinois.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. B. F. ELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL C. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. JAMES LICK,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 HON. ROBERT DALE OWEN,.....New Harmony, Ind.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thornfield, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MRS. JANE P. TITCOMB,.....143 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT.
 W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX.
 D. Y. KILGORE.
 H. S. WILLIAMS.

Executive Committee.

D. Y. KILGORE, Chairman,.....Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.
 S. J. MATHEWS,.....Monticello, Arkansas.
 J. L. HATCH,.....San Francisco, California.
 E. B. HAZEN,.....New Haven, Connecticut.
 S. E. WALLMAN,.....South Waver, Colorado.
 HARWOOD G. DAY,.....Estherville, Iowa.
 HERMANN LIEBER,.....Indianapolis, Indiana.
 ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Illinois.
 J. E. WALLACE,.....New Orleans, Louisiana.
 MONROE A. BLANCHARD,.....Portland, Maine.
 A. WARREN KELSEY,.....St. Louis, Missouri.
 FRANK J. MEAD,.....Minneapolis, Minnesota.
 WILLIAM LITTLE,.....Manchester, New Hampshire.
 LORENZO W. BILLINGSLEY,.....Lincoln, Nebraska.
 GEORGE WILLIAM THORNE,.....Warren, North Carolina.
 GEORGE LEWIS,.....Providence, Rhode Island.
 R. PETERSON,.....Paris, Texas.
 SAMUEL WATSON,.....Memphis, Tennessee.
 ROBERT C. SPENCER,.....Milwaukee, Wisconsin.
 WILLIAM H. SAYWARD,.....Dorchester, Mass.
 JOHN L. CUTLER,.....Quincy, Ill.
 GEORGE M. WOOD,.....Washington, D. C.
 (The remaining States and Territories are to be represented on this Committee by future appointment, as provided in the Constitution.)

Finance Committee.

H. S. WILLIAMS, Chairman,.....24 Temple Place, Boston.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

N.B.—For further information, apply to the Secretary, as above.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
 AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, undilatingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Scientific Method in Religion.

Tenth and Closing Lecture in the Ninth Course of Sunday Afternoon Lectures, given at Horticultural Hall, Boston, under the auspices of the Free Religious Association.

SPECIAL SERIES OF FOUR LECTURES ON "THE DEVELOPMENT OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT IN OUR COUNTRY DURING THE PAST CENTURY," namely:—

Feb. 18.—Francis Tiffany. "JONATHAN EDWARDS."
 Feb. 25.—Clay McCauley. "DR. CHANNING."
 Mar. 4.—David A. Wasson. "FREEDORE PARKER."
 Mar. 11.—Francis E. Abbot. "THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD IN RELIGION."

BY FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

Herbert Spencer has this forcible and well-expressed passage in his Social Statics: "Systems that have had their day, and are beginning here and there to let daylight through, are patched with modern notions utterly unlike in quality and color; and men gravely display these systems, wear them, and walk about in them, quite unconscious of their grotesqueness. This transition state of ours, partaking as it does of the past and the future, breeds hybrid theories, exhibiting the oddest union of bygone despotism and coming freedom."

To nothing is this statement of Herbert Spencer more directly applicable than to the history of religious development in the modern world, and (what more immediately concerns us in the present series of lectures) in our own country during the past century. All sorts of old systems are going to decay about us; new systems are rising to take their places; efforts to combine the old and the new, no matter at what expense of consistency or coherency, are the most characteristic phenomena of the age. At the bottom of all this mental fermentation is the ancient and unfinished issue between "bygone (or bygoing) despotism," on the one hand, and "coming freedom," on the other. The unfinished issue, I say,—for it is not ended yet, nor will it be ended for many a long year to come. There is no lack of cheerful optimists to assure us that—"The battle for freedom was long since fought and won: all that now remains is to learn how to use our freedom rightly." These are they who are simply abreast of the predominant spirit of their time; they float with the current, moving neither slower nor faster. No man feels a pressure to which he unresistingly yields. But all those who are at all ahead of the age they live in,—all those who in any degree attempt to lead men's thought to other and better things, or to make room in the world for new-found truths which cause their own pulses to beat strong and quick,—speedily become aware of the iron limitations which bound the general liberty, and learn perforce that the previous question must first be settled: shall the human mind be free? Like the old peasant who went to mill with one of his donkey's panniers filled with stones to balance the other filled with corn, and who, on a mild suggestion that he would more wisely fill them both with corn, hotly retorted that the way of his fathers was good enough for him, mankind are to-day carrying a heavy and useless load of superstitions to keep their "morality" in place, and as sacrilege and irreverence, the suggestion that more morality and less superstition would be a wiser arrangement. Unconscious indeed they are that they carry heavy weights of tradition, as unnecessary as they are exhausting; they will never know what a grievous burden they have borne so long, until they are rid of it forever. Then truly will they perceive what slaves they have been, all to no purpose; then will they perceive with amazement that no one endures a slavery so hopeless as he who enslaves himself. But to-day the human mind is struggling painfully and blindly out of a long-inherited bondage; in the fine and happy phrase of Charles D. B. Mills, our modern civilization is in fact nothing but an "ameliorated barbarism." Only in the imagination of the poet and the prophet shines the broad daylight of true spiritual freedom. The great majority of the race are sunk in subservience to tottering but still enslaving systems; and so profound a truth is the solidarity of man that no thoroughly enlightened and emancipated soul can achieve its destiny freely so long as the community are bound. Outward conformity, at least by silence, or else a terribly narrowed sphere of activity—those are the hard and bitter alternatives; and both are crushing bondage. No—all men must be free before one man can be fully so. There are spirits into which this great truth has been burned as with a branding-iron; and these are they who pour out their lives in the service of human liberty.

It is with these convictions that I must approach the subject assigned me in this series of four lectures on "The Development of Religious Thought in our Country during the Past Century."

THE EARLIER PROTESTS AGAINST AUTHORITY IN RELIGION.

That the dominant principle of the Protestant Reformation, formulated in Luther's doctrine of "justification by faith," as opposed to justification by works of ecclesiastical observance and obedience, was essentially a protest against the authority of the See of Rome; that the rise of Anglicanism and the establishment of the State Church of England were essentially a part of the Protestant Reformation, an incomplete realization of the protest against Rome's authority, since the new national Church inherited not a little of Rome's ecclesiastical power, privileges, and claims; that Puritanism was a new protest against semi-Romanized Anglicanism, a fresh insurrection against prelacy and ecclesiastical authority,—all these are mere historical truisms. So far, the protest was more external than internal—a breaking of ecclesiastical rather than spiritual or intellectual yokes, an assertion of the rights of individuality in faith and practice within the still scrupulously revered limits of the ancient Christian theology. Variations in doctrine followed, of course, in the wake of these outward changes of church-relationship; the dissolution of ecclesiastical unity inevitably resulted in the dissolution of doctrinal unity. Nevertheless, the theology of Luther, of Calvin, of Cranmer, of John Robinson, of Jonathan Edwards, was substantially identical with that of Augustine and the other chief doctors of the Roman Catholic Church. The Fall of Adam, the Total Depravity of the human race, the Wrath of God against the world, the Everlasting Punishment of the wicked and the unbelieving in Hell, the Salvation of the redeemed believers in Heaven, the absolute necessity of faith in Christ's Atonement as the condition of salvation,—these have always been the great fundamental tenets of the Christian Church in all ages, as little questioned by Orthodox Protestants as by Orthodox Catholics. The Reformation, therefore, notwithstanding its minor theological changes, was in essence a protest against outward ecclesiastical authority, a struggle to be free from priestly lords and masters rather than a struggle to be free from a false, burdensome, and enslaving theology.

But revolutions are never guided and controlled by the will of those who originate them; the logic of ideas dominates the course of history in the long run, and is at last recognized as the so-called logic of events. This appears clearly in the history of Protestantism. When the world-wide ecclesiastical rule of Rome had been so completely shattered as to be reduced to the rule of local churches loosely connected by the feeble threads of New England Congregationalism, Puritanism had carried the external protest against the priestly principle nearly to its last limit. There remained little of external control to furnish a cause of protest, except the control of the local church over its individual members. This had become practically the control of a majority vote; and the majority governed by means of a creed. The passion for liberty, educated by many generations of stern and self-sacrificing struggle, now began to be enlisted against the authority of the creed itself; the progress of religious development brought about a transformation of the old protesting spirit, and the demand for intellectual and spiritual freedom grew out of the old demand for administrative freedom. The authority of the priest had passed over into the authority of the majority vote, and this rested on the authority of the creed-principle inseparable from Christian theology—that is, as Lecky well describes it, on "salvation by belief." The external conflict became an internal conflict; the rebellion extended, and broke out against the prime doctrines of the Christian creed, though still carried on in the name of Christianity. Calvinistic Puritanism, on the very heels of the "Great Awakening" under Whitefield and Jonathan Edwards in 1740, found itself confronted in its own churches with Arminianism, defending man's "free will,"—and, before long, with Socinianism also, defending his right to "free inquiry" and free thought. As Anglicanism had been a protest against Romanism, and Puritanism a protest against Anglicanism, so now, in its own New England stronghold, Puritanism was obliged to bear the brunt of a new protest against itself within the limits of its own communion. This new protest was Unitarianism.

THE PROTEST OF UNITARIANISM.

It was essentially a protest against the authority of "human creeds," as Channing loved to call them, that gave vitality to the Unitarian movement. Above everything else, it demanded "spiritual freedom"—and what it meant by this, let Dr. Channing himself declare:—

"I feel that I cannot better meet the demands of this occasion," he preached, in the Annual Election sermon of May 26, 1830, "than by leading you to prize, above all other rights and liberties, that inward freedom which Christ came to confer. To this topic I now solicit your attention. And first, I may be asked what I mean by inward spiritual freedom. The common and true answer is that it is freedom from sin. I apprehend, however, that to many, if not to most, these words are too vague to convey a full and deep sense of the greatness of the blessing. Let me, then, offer a brief explanation: and the most important remark in illustrating this freedom is that it is not a mere negative state, not the mere absence of sin; for such a freedom may be ascribed to inferior animals, or to children before becoming moral agents. Spiritual freedom is the attribute of a mind in which reason and conscience have begun to act, and which is free through its own energy, through fidelity to the truth, through resistance of temptation. I cannot, therefore, better give my views of spiritual freedom than by saying that it is moral energy or force of holy purpose put forth against the senses, against the passions, against the world, and thus liberating the intellect, conscience, and will, so that they may act with strength and unfold themselves forever. The essence of spiritual freedom is power."

Truly, it was a noble freedom that Unitarianism demanded; yet, noble as it was, it was not a perfect freedom. In Channing's own words, it was "that inward freedom which Christ came to confer." Channing had not learned, Unitarianism to-day has not learned, that true spiritual freedom cannot be "conferred,"—no, not by Christ himself.

To be free is man's inherent right, in virtue of his nature as a moral and intellectual being. The passage I have quoted reveals clearly the imperfection of the Unitarian protest; it did not go far enough; it admitted the spiritual Mastership and Lordship of Christ, as a supernatural Revealer; it did not even claim complete emancipation of the human mind, did not even demand entire freedom of thought, although it imagined itself to do so. The recognition of Christ's authority did not, and does not, appear to the Unitarians as a limit of liberty; but neither did the recognition of the authority of Bible-founded creeds appear as a limit of liberty to the Puritans or to the English Churchmen, or the recognition of the authority of their Church to the Catholics. They who submit voluntarily to personal authority are always unconscious of being fettered; but they are fettered notwithstanding, as appears plainly enough to all who seek the liberty of ideas. Channing and his followers avowedly submitted to the authority of Jesus as to "the voice of God"; and this submission gave rise to a new and inevitable protest.

THE PROTEST OF TRANSCENDENTALISM.

This new protest was made by Transcendentalism. The authority of the Church, of the Bible, of the Christ, no matter how plausibly disguised, was seen by the Transcendentalists to be what it really is—an external, arbitrary limitation of spiritual freedom; and they raised their voices against it, in all its forms, in the name of Intuition. Certain great ideas—God, Immortality, Duty—they claimed to be facts of consciousness, part and parcel of the human mind, truths wrought into the very structure of the human soul and wholly independent of experience, testimony, or demonstration. Channing demanded freedom in the name of Christ; Parker demanded it in the name of God,—the one simply as a Christian, the other as a Christian Theist, a Transcendentalist, an Intuitionist. The "religious element in man" was assumed by the Transcendentalists to be a "primary faculty," immediately cognizant of eternal realities which "transcended experience"; hence their name. Let me quote a few passages from Theodore Parker, the "Great Preacher" of Transcendentalism:—

"The Transcendental philosophy appears in its doctrine of God. The idea of God is a fact given in the consciousness of man. . . . The existence of God is a certainty; I am as certain of that as of my own existence." [Lecture on Transcendentalism, p. 34.]

"The knowledge of God's existence, therefore, may be called, in the language of philosophy, an Intuition of Reason, or, in the mythological language of the elder theology, a Revelation from God. . . . It depends primarily on no argument whatever,—not on reasoning, but Reason. . . . It comes spontaneously, by a law of whose action we are at first not conscious. The belief always precedes the proof, intuition giving the thing to be reasoned about." [Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion, pp. 21, 22.]

Max Müller very clearly states the same general position as follows:—

"If, then, there is a philosophical discipline which examines into the conditions of sensuous perception, and if there is another philosophical discipline which examines into the conditions of rational conception, there is clearly a place for a third philosophical discipline that has to examine into the conditions of that third faculty of man, coördinate with sense and reason, the faculty of perceiving the Infinite, which is at the root of all religions. In German we can distinguish that third faculty by the name of Vernunft, as opposed to Verstand, reason, and Sinne, sense. In English I know no better name for it than the faculty of faith, though it will have to be guarded by careful definition, and to be restricted to those objects only which cannot be supplied by the evidence of the senses, or by the evidence of reason. . . . There will be and can be no rest till we admit, what cannot be denied, that there is in man a third faculty, which I call simply the faculty of apprehending the Infinite, not only in religion, but in all things,—a power independent of sense and reason, a power in a certain sense contradicted by sense and reason, but yet, I suppose, a very real power, if we see how it has held its own from the beginning of the world, how neither sense nor reason has been able to overcome it, while it alone is able to overcome both reason and sense." [Science of Religion, pp. 13, 15.]

Now these passages sufficiently show that the freedom demanded by Transcendentalism, although abolishing the outward limitations imposed by Romanism, Anglicanism, and Puritanism, and also the inward limitation imposed by Unitarianism, nevertheless imposed another inward limitation of its own in the "Intuition of Reason," which, as you notice, Theodore Parker made synonymous with "Revelation from God," and which Max Müller regards as a special "faculty of faith" whose function is simply to receive this "Revelation." By this philosophy the ideas of God, of Immortality, of Duty, are elevated above the reach of legitimate doubt or question or examination; they are pronounced to be primordial truths, facts given in consciousness, absolute certainties, original revelations of God to the soul; they are too sacred to be tested or even scrutinized by the discursive reason or "understanding," and must be accepted by it unreservedly, unquestioningly, submissively. To exercise independent thought on these great ideas, to demand their credentials, to interrogate them touching the validity of their claim to be thus received, to subject them to the strict tests by which science sifts out truth from error,—all this, in the eyes of every genuine Transcendentalist, is proof of something worse than a pitifully low grade of intelligence: it is proof of a religious nature so imperfect or defective or perverted as to cast a sort of stigma or reproach. Thought must approach these great ideas, not with the freedom with which it approaches the Bible or the Church or the Christ, but self-fettered with foregone conclusions; it must believe, or be stigmatized as irreligious—perhaps secretly censured as immoral. A taint of "impiety," a suspicion of ethico-intellectual unsoundness, attaches to overbold speculation on these fundamental articles of the Transcendentalist creed; and the "Intuition of Reason" becomes thus the "last ditch" of dogmatism. A new protest must once more be made.

THE PROTEST OF FREE RELIGION.

In due time this new protest came, under the name of Free Religion. Its name reveals its nature. It was essentially a protest against any and all limitations of freedom of thought and fellowship in religion, whether imposed by Romanism, Anglicanism, Puritanism, Unitarianism, or Transcendentalism—whether in the form of external or of internal authority. It took no negative position. It affirmed the great fact of Religion, with all that Religion may be found necessarily to imply; what it denied was the limitations which all special, historic religions have imposed on the freedom of religious thought and religious fellowship. Its denial was only incidental, being made necessary by the restrictions which transitory creeds have hitherto laid on this freedom; its affirmation was primary, fundamental, vital; yet, while these restrictions exist, its main work in establishing its affirmation lies in vindicating and establishing its denial. That is, the power and beauty of religion can never be realized in human society so long as these limitations of freethought and fellowship are enforced on mankind by their own superstition. Free Religion, therefore, at the outset, found in that unrestricted liberty of thinking which the progress of science has made familiar to the world the one great object to be attained by its own religious reform. Against all the various forms of authority in religion, from the infallibility of the Pope to the infallibility of the Transcendental "Intuition of Reason," Free Religion has steadily maintained the right of the intellect to act unrestricted on any and all subjects, the right of thought to disregard all authority save that of its own natural laws, the right of the human mind to investigate fearlessly and freely even the momentous, tabooed questions of God, Immortality, and Duty. In short, that which differentiates Free Religion from Unitarianism and Transcendentalism,—that which gives it its permanent historical place in "the development of religious thought in our country during the past century,"—can be found only in its demand for unrestricted intellectual liberty on all religious topics, and for the abolition of all the arbitrary restrictions imposed on such liberty by its predecessors. The infallible Pope of Romanism, the infallible Bible of Anglicanism and Puritanism, the infallible Christ of Unitarianism, the infallible Intuition of Transcendentalism,—all these final authorities are heavy chains cast about the human mind; but Free Religion rends them all in the name of Science, and establishes unrestricted intellectual freedom in the pursuit of truth. Science knows nothing of finalities, or authorities that may not be doubted; it accepts all the risks of a fallibility which cannot be escaped, but which is reduced to a minimum by the cooperation of many minds. And this is precisely what Free Religion does in all questions of religious belief. There is no room for a further protest on behalf of religious liberty. If there were, I would make it here to-day.

THE CONFLICT OF METHODS.

From beginning to end, the series of protests I have been depicting has been a slow development of the intellectual comprehension of what freedom in religion really is, and an historical development of the demand for it. The whole process has been a gradually intensifying conflict between two methods of thinking—the method of authority and the method of reason. The outward authorities of the Pope, the Bible, and the Christ, on the one hand, and the inward authority of the Transcendental Intuition, on the other, agree in this,—that they must be accepted as final and conclusive, and as cutting off all doubt or discussion. The principle of implicit faith, the suppression of all right in the intellect to demand a reason, is equally characteristic of them all. The Roman Catholic Church recognizes all four of these authorities; the Anglican and Puritan churches recognize three of them, but reject the Pope; the Unitarian Church of to-day recognizes the authority of the Christ and the Intuition, but rejects that of the Pope and the Bible; the Transcendentalist rejects the authority of all but the Intuition; Free Religion rejects them all. To those who believe, as I do, that the Roman Catholic Church represents Christianity in its only complete form, this diminuendo process has a double aspect,—that of a gradual decay of Christianity and that of a simultaneous growth of Free Religion. In Theodore Parker we behold, on the one hand, the last great radical preacher who could justly retain the Christian name, since his Transcendentalism was the vanishing point of Christianity,—and, on the other hand, the great precursor of Free Religion, since one more step would have brought him out upon the platform of the scientific method. This vast step, however, it is very unlikely that he would ever have taken, even had his great and noble spirit still remained among us. In all its forms, from Romanism to Transcendentalism, Christianity rests on the ancient, traditional method of authority; it cannot cut loose from it, and live. With all its glorious freedom in other respects, Transcendentalism has always retained a certain profound veneration for the authority of Jesus,—not as that of an infallible teacher, it is true, yet as that of the Natural Chief of Transcendentalists. Mr. Gannett has very truly said: "Jesus is the Intuitionist—the man of deep moral insight, which gives him great faith in God and in man and in the goodness of all things: a faith that asks no reason for itself [the italics are mine], and could give none satisfactory, yet is the great fact in him." That phrase utters the inmost soul of Transcendentalism—"a faith that asks no reason for itself." It unfolds the method of Christianity in all its forms, from the Catholic to the Transcendentalist. It is a method which neither "asks a reason" itself, nor permits another to ask it; it settles the most tremendous questions that the soul of man can ever ask by authority, not by reason; and it matters little whether this authority be that of an infallible Pope or an infallible Intuition. The method is fundamentally that of dogma, cutting off all discussion, all doubt, all query, by a naked "I say so"; and it is just as marked a characteristic of Transcendentalism as it is of Catholicism. Jesus was indeed the great Intuitionist, meeting the questions which are now stirring the human spirit to its depths with no answer but—"Verily, verily I say unto you." That method makes him not only the great Intuitionist, the great Transcendentalist, but also the great Dogmatist; and therein lies the necessity of a new protest against Christianity in the name of religion itself—a new and irrepressible demand for an enlargement of the freedom of religious thought.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not voicing a protest against the substance of the great ideas of God, of Immortality, of Duty; far from it. The protest I voice is not against these ideas themselves, but against the method which imposes them on the world as dogmas. As dogmas, they must die; as the wonderful guesses of untutored man at the solution of the universal mystery he inhabits, they must submit themselves to the tests of his now educated intelligence. Thought is to-day asserting its native and indefeasible right to sit in judgment on this sublime Guess of the infantile human race; and its claim must be—yes, I say it with all the strength of conviction of which I am capable—its claim must be allowed. Be the result what it may, it is no longer possible to deny jurisdiction in these high matters to the scientific method. For the scientific method is nothing mysterious or recondite; it is nothing but freedom of thought in active exercise—nothing but the legitimate use of Reason, disciplined thoroughly and impelled by hunger and thirst after truth, which is just as holy as the hunger and thirst after righteousness, and which, like that, "shall be filled." As well exclaim, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther!" to the rising tide on yonder sea-shore, as hurl a futile prohibition against the rising tide of human thought. I stand here to-day simply to warn you of the advancing ocean, and beg you to desist, if to desist you are not disposed, from the vain attempt to keep back the roused Atlantic with a fence of sand. The dogmas of Christianity, the dogmas of Transcendental Intuition, must go down forever before the love of truth; and Thought, with its victorious waves, will roll over their unresisting ruins. God—Immortality—Duty! Those mighty words of power are not more dear to you than to me; you cannot cherish them more tenderly in your heart of hearts than I. But yet I say there is one word mightier still, and that is—TRUTH! To those who question you whether those great words are words of truth, you cannot wisely fall back on the bare affirmations of "a faith that can give no reason for itself,"—on the authority of Jesus or the strength of your private Intuition; you cannot quiet the questioning thought of the nineteenth century with a simple "I see—I know!" Quick as a flash comes back that other question: "How do you know?" If indeed there is no answer to that question but a repetition of the bare assertion, "I see—I know!" then, in spite of your own undoubted certitude, whether based on the authority of Jesus or on the self-guaranteeing Intuition, the intellect of the age, which has been taught by a brilliant and ever-growing galaxy of discoveries to trust the scientific method, will silently record this unchangeable verdict: "You do not know—you dream!" And the verdict will be just.

"The Moving Finger writes, and, having writ,
Moves on: nor all your piety nor wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a line,
Nor all your tears wash out a word of it!"

THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD: WHAT IS IT?

Believe it or disbelieve it who may, it is a simple fact of observation that the scientific method is slowly but surely extending its jurisdiction over every department of human thought; and it will yet do this, with universal acquiescence, in the domain of religious belief. What, then, is this scientific method?

It is, as I have said, nothing mysterious or recondite, nothing new or unfamiliar; it is simply ordinary thinking corrected by the canons of a more cautious and exact procedure. No one is better qualified to speak on this subject than John Stuart Mill, who says: "A complete logic of the sciences would be also a complete logic of practical business and common life." [System of Logic, 8th Ed., I., 328.] In practical affairs, in all concerns vitally affecting their practical interests, men have learned to respect and to use their intellects, and to distrust the unreasoning impulses of mere feeling. Sagacity, prudence, foresight, soberness of judgment, knowledge of affairs, persistence of purpose, executive energy, trained and experienced minds,—these are the things that command success in life; and the same mental qualities are the things that command success in science. Patient industry and resolute clear-headedness are quite as much the secret of insight into scientific truth as they are of professional, commercial, or political achievements. The method of authority in religion relies on inspiration, revelation, supernatural illumination; the method of science relies on brain,—on the mastery of actual facts by accurate thought. The one receives—or imagines it receives; the other patiently acquires. The one appeals to faith, to feeling, to sentiment; the other appeals to knowledge and to intellect. Hence, while science, aiming solely at truth and sacrificing everything else to its attainment, has created an intellectual system of the universe which bears the severest test of verification, religion has only created a theology which the educated world is every day more and more emphatically rejecting as mere mythology. What is the reason of this difference in results? At bottom it is nothing but a difference of method. There is but one way of arriving at truth, though there are countless ways of arriving at myths; and this one way, the way of scientific method, science alone exemplifies. If, therefore, the love of truth is an essential part of religion, and if the attainment of religious truth is an object of supreme importance to mankind, religion herself must learn wisdom by experience, discard her old method of authority with its proven worthlessness, and courageously adopt the method of science as the only pathway to a true comprehension of man's nature and destiny. I plead to-day for a universal recognition of the transcendent and supreme importance of truth in religion; I vindicate the rights of the human intellect as the sole discoverer of truth; I maintain the unique and exclusive claim of the scientific method, as the sole organon of its discovery. Let me, then, in the briefest possible manner (for it needs no tedious amplification), state the chief characteristics of this scientific method.

ITS CHIEF CHARACTERISTICS.

1. In the first place, it begins with experience alone—with realities—with facts. Among the primary data of knowledge it admits no assumptions, dreams, guesses, abstractions, fancies; it plants itself on that alone which is established and verifiable certainty. Before it proceeds to build, it rigorously sifts and tests its materials; and it throws out as worthless all alleged facts which cannot stand the test of positive verification. So-called "innate ideas"—that is, specific truths furnished a priori by the mind itself, in advance of all experience—find no place among the data of science. Experience alone is the basis of the scientific method.

At the same time I must add that scientific men have been too prone to limit arbitrarily the field of human experience; they have cultivated only a part of it hitherto, and have been too ready to deny the existence or scientific value of the rest. By "experience" they have usually meant only sensuous experience—the experience of the senses. The scientific method itself permits no such arbitrary limitation; and the first great debate, when this method is fairly applied to solve the great problems of religion, must turn on the question: "Does not the human intellect come as immediately as the senses into contact with the outer universe?" I cannot discuss this question here; it pertains to philosophical sciences. But I must indicate its existence, and simply state that, in my opinion, the field of human experience with which the scientific method is to deal will prove to be of immensely vaster extent than the scientific men of to-day suppose—will prove to include spiritual no less than physical phenomena, capable of equally valid verification. When the scientific method is applied to religion, I base on this anticipated extension of verifiable experience all my confidence in the final rendering of affirmative answers to the momentous questions of God, Immortality, and Duty.

2. In the second place, the scientific method, beginning with experience, proceeds by comparison, inference, and hypothesis,—by analysis and synthesis,—by induction and deduction,—by classification and generalization,—by observation and experiment,—in short, by all the mental processes exemplified in any text-book on the subject. These will not vary substantially when applied in the new field of religion; they are the well-recognized modes of arriving at truth, and are applicable wherever truth is sought. But there will doubtless be special adaptations of them to the nature of the new inquiries that will arise. Comparative Philology and Comparative Mythology are the precursors of more than one new science as yet in its ante-natal state; and when the "Science of Religion," which Max Müller has already heralded with his affluent learning and charming style, shall have achieved its inevitable place in the sisterhood of the sciences, it will illustrate still the rich, inexhaustible method to which are due all the real conquests of the human mind over its own ignorance of the universe.

3. In the third place,—passing over much that might be said,—the scientific method will (if I rightly anticipate in my own thinking the results to which it will at last conduct the human mind) generate a calm and lofty spiritual state unspeakably nobler than the "faith" which Christianity enjoins. I grant that the idea of God, for example, as interpreted by the scientific method, is not at all "a fact given in consciousness,"—the intuitional beholding of an Infinite Object whose existence is as certain as our own; I grant that it is an hypothesis, a conjecture, a great and sublime Guess; I grant that the knowledge of God is not a present possession, but simply the grandest aspiration of the human reason—the deepest and holiest and most passionate longing of the human heart. All this I grant, surrendering frankly the absolute certitude which Christianity professes (but, alas, as thousands of tortured souls confess within themselves, professes in vain) to bestow. But nevertheless I maintain that the establishment of the truth in this greatest of all great questions, whether it be at last a resolute proof or a resolute disproof of God's existence by the scientific method, will be an unspeakably greater boon to mankind than any possible blind faith that has no better support than the method of authority. I maintain that the love of truth for its own pure sake which brings one to see and feel and admit this, is a loftier spiritual virtue, grace, and treasure than the most absolute faith and trust in God without it. I maintain that the brave appeal to the intellect alone on all questions of truth or error, the brave acceptance of the scientific method as the final judge on all these questions, must at last generate a nobler, fuller, stronger, juster, sweeter religious character than Christianity has ever exemplified to the world. In short, I maintain that truth is of infinitely vaster moment to mankind than any consolations, hopes, ecstasies, or other emotional satisfactions, which rest only on blind and unreasoning faith—that the intellect is the only guide to truth—that the scientific method is the only honest use of the intellect—and that without this honest use of the intellect no religion can create the grandest or fairest or loftiest character that is possible to man. Just as the tested and rugged virtue of the moral hero is worth more than the lovely, tender, untired innocence of the child, so is the massive strength of a soul that has conquered truth for itself worth more than the soft, peach-bloom faith of a soul that takes truth on trust. There is a boldness and purity of the Reason, no less than that of the conscience; and Faith does but corrupt, pollute, and debase its integrity, when she intrudes to bias or warp its independent judicial action. There is no sanctity so sacred as that which crowns a soul self-dedicated to truth in thought, word, and deed—no betrayal of humanity so enormous as that which relaxes the soul's absolute loyalty to it. Therefore, I say, the very essence of religion is staked on the triumph of the scientific method; for this is the coming of the Kingdom of Truth.

MIXED ISSUES.

To this conclusion, then have we been led: that the development of religious thought, from the first stirrings of the Protestant Reformation, has been a long battle for the right to think. That is the root of the whole matter. One by one have the ancient fortresses of Authority been razed to the ground; slowly has the standard of Liberty been advanced from post to post. The Church of England separated from the Church of Rome; the churches of Puritanism separated from the Church of England; the churches of Unitarianism separated from the churches of Puritanism; and there the process of conscious and outward separation ceased. There has never been a church of Transcendentalism—never a church of Free Religion. The Transcendental movement in this country grew up within the Unitarian communion, and never, as a whole, broke with it. Some of the leaders went out of the churches altogether; a few founded scattered, isolated, and independent churches of their own; more have remained in Unitarian pulpits to this day. The division never proceeded further than to the establishment of two well-marked schools or wings,—Theodore Parker having never discarded the Unitarian or Christian name, and being still the chief representative of the Unitarian Transcendentalists.

When Free Religion came upon the stage in 1867, it did not effect or propose a separation of churches, or make any attempt to found a new church at all; it simply formed an Association of Individuals. But it totally ignored Unitarianism, and even Christianity; it planted itself on wholly new ground, far in advance both of Unitarianism and Transcendentalism—ground which in truth is utterly irreconcilable with either. But the members of the new Association retained whatever individual connections they pleased, and many of them are to this day Unitarians or Transcendentalists. The issues, therefore, between these three types of religious thought, which I have shown to be philosophically very distinct and marked, have remained historically very much mixed and confused; and I cannot carry out the purpose of this lecture, which is to trace clearly and intelligibly the "development of religious thought," without referring to some technical details of organization. Technicalities, I know, are dry; but I trust that my references to them here will not be uninteresting, since they are essential to the understanding of a great movement of ideas.

ANTECEDENTS OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

In 1865, for the first time, Unitarianism denominationally organized itself. This step immediately precipitated a collision between its two component schools, which turned on the basis of the new organization, as laid down in the preamble of the Constitution. By this preamble, the Unitarians pledged themselves collectively, as a body of Christian churches, to the "Lordship and Kingship"—that is, to the authority—of Jesus Christ. That was all; it contained no special dogmas, but also no recognition of the old Unitarian principle of the right of "free inquiry." Both the assertion and the omission were equally significant; the Christian denial of liberty of thought was made once more in the name of Jesus.*

On the following year, therefore, at Syracuse, a substitute for this preamble was proposed, discussed all day, and defeated. This new preamble affirmed that "the object of Christianity is the universal diffusion of Love, Righteousness, and Truth,"—that "perfect freedom of thought" is "the right and the duty of every human being,"—and that Christian organization should be "based rather on unity of spirit than on uniformity of belief."†

Now these two preambles embodied respectively

* The text of the original preamble was as follows:—
PREAMBLE.—Whereas, The great opportunities and demands for Christian labor and consecration at this time increase our sense of the obligation of all disciples of the Lord Jesus Christ to prove their faith by self-denial, and by the devotion of their lives and possessions to the service of God and the building-up of the kingdom of his Son:—

ARTICLE I.—Therefore, the Christian churches of the Unitarian faith here assembled unite themselves in a common body, to be known as the National Conference of Unitarian Churches, to the end of energizing and stimulating the denomination with which they are connected to the largest exertions in the cause of Christian faith and work.

† The text of the reform preamble was as follows:—
PREAMBLE.—Whereas, The object of Christianity is the universal diffusion of Love, Righteousness, and Truth; and the attainment of this object depends, under God, upon individual and collective Christian activity; and collective Christian activity, to be efficient, must be thoroughly organized; and
Whereas, Perfect freedom of thought, which is at once the principle of authority and the principle of freedom—the old method of Dogmatism and the new method of Science. That was the clear and clean issue. The reform-preamble was an attempt to put Christianity on the basis of "perfect freedom"—to reconcile it with modern science by frankly planting it on the scientific method. It was, in fact, the protest of the scientific method in religion against the Unitarian dogma of the authority of Jesus; it was not a protest by Transcendentalism in the name of Intuition, but the embryo-protest of Free Religion itself, in the name of "perfect freedom"—that is, the freedom of science; it grew out of the more liberal tendency or side of primitive Unitarianism, and, wholly passing over the intermediate stage of Transcendentalism, expressed the entire movement of Free Religion in everything but in name. But this last circumstance was very important. It was a great mistake to imagine that Christianity could ever be brought to adopt the method of science; for two thousand years, it had lived by the method of authority; it had grown too gray in obedience to be able now, in its decrepitude, to begin a new life of liberty. Hence the great reform of Free Religion was impossible under the Christian name or in the Unitarian communion; new wine must be put into new bottles. In fact, Unitarianism was too much like the recently elected Scotch baillie, who, taking his seat for the first time on the magisterial bench, looked sternly around, and thus addressed the audience: "Hitherto there have been many complaints as to how impartially affairs have been carried out here; but I intend that the business of this Court shall be hereafter conducted neither partially nor impartially!" Halting between authority and liberty, Unitarianism had a little of both, but not much of either; it could not make up its mind either to think freely or not freely; and by way of compromise it concluded not to think at all. Hence it has left the van of religious progress, and remains respectable, but stationary. Its new Conference was not the place for the appearance of Free Religion.

THE PLATFORM OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION IS ITS CONSTITUTION.

But it was, nevertheless, out of the Unitarian Conference that the Free Religious Association grew. This Association, formed in 1867, is the true representative of Free Religion, to which, indeed, it gave name. Unitarianism had its Channing; Transcendentalism had its Parker; Free Religion has no single representative preacher, but represents itself by an Association, as befits a great protest against all personalism in religion. The members of this Association have individually no right to speak for it; individually they represent only themselves. But the Association has not therefore left itself voiceless—it utters its voice clearly in its Constitution. This is the only authorized declaration of the Association as a whole, by all the members without exception—the only definition and exposition of Free Religion which all the members are bound to accept. No individual member can do more than declare his own individual views, which commit nobody but himself; but the Constitution commits him, for it is his own voice, his own individual declaration, so long as he remains a member. With this point clearly understood, let me point out what the Constitution teaches—no one else, of course, being responsible for my interpretation of it. But if any one dissents from this interpretation, I conjure him to correct it by appealing to the Constitution itself and proving by its own words that my interpretation is erroneous. For, if I am not fundamentally mistaken, the Constitution of this Association, under whose auspices these lectures are given, is pledged irrevocably to the scientific method in religion, and thereby pledged against the method of authority, whether in the shape of an infallible Pope, an infallible Church, an infallible Bible, an infallible Christ, or an infallible Intuition. On all questions of mere opinion or belief or special conclusions, the Association is neutral, and commits nobody; but on the question of method, it is pledged by its Constitution to the method of science, and thereby commits us all. A clear comprehension of this fact, and consistent action based upon it, are essential to the true and enduring success of the Association in prosecuting the great reform for which it was organized; and I maintain that its Constitution unmistakably defines this reform as consisting in the substitution of the scientific method for the method of authority in religion. And that means a mighty religious revolution throughout the world.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION PLEDGES IT TO THE SCIENTIFIC METHOD.

The principles and objects of the Free Religious movement, its whole practical and ideal significance, are contained in the first Article and half of the second Article of this Constitution. What are they? Permit me to read them, as they are not long:—

"I. This Organization shall be called the Free Religious Association,—its objects being to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history; and to this end all persons interested in these objects are cordially invited to its membership.

"II. Membership in this Association shall leave the right and the duty of every human being, always leads to diversity of opinion, and is therefore hindered by common creeds or statements of faith; and

Whereas, The only reconciliation of the duties of collective Christian activity and individual freedom of thought lies in an efficient organization for practical Christian work, based rather on unity of spirit than on uniformity of belief:—

ARTICLE I.—Therefore the Churches here assembled, disregarding all sectarian or theological differences, and offering a cordial fellowship to all who will join with them in Christian work, unite themselves in a common body, to be known as THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF UNITARIAN AND INDEPENDENT CHURCHES.

each individual responsible for his own opinions alone, and affect in no degree his relations to other associations; and nothing in the name or Constitution of the Association shall ever be construed as limiting membership by any test of speculative opinion or belief,—or as defining the position of the Association, collectively considered, with reference to any such opinion or belief,—or as interfering in any other way with that absolute freedom of thought and expression which is the natural right of every rational being."

All the rest of the Constitution is devoted to the mere details of organization: what I have quoted is the complete and only declaration of the Association's position in reference to religion. Now the essential elements of this position are these:—

