Resolved, That the preservation of the Christian institutions of our Republic, such as the Sabbath, the family, and the school, depends upon the anchorage of the State to the Rock of Ages, and a proper recognition of the authority of Him who hath upon his vesture and thigh the name written, King of kings and Lord of lords.

Resolved, That the desperate efforts of infidels to destroy should arouse Christian earnestness to conserve the Christian features of our institutions.

Resolved, That the success of efforts to protect the Sabbath encourages us to renewed and redoubled efforts in behalf of other reforms.

Resolved, That the Amendment to the United States Constitution, presented by Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, affords an opportunity to press the claims of this Association and secure such amendments to the Constitution as will settle forever its Christian character.

Resolved, That we regard as a providential furtherance of the objects of our organization the wide and careful dissemination of our fundamental principles in the current Sabbath-school lessons, which so clearly teach the vital connection between the national prosperity and national recognition of dependence upon God.

Resolved, That we approve the recommendation of our General Secretary and Executive Committee, looking toward the more efficient prosecution of our work in the appointment of District Secretaries to organize local agencies for the purpose of arousing and educating public sentiment in the interests of National Reform.

THEOLOGY IN OUR GEOGRAPHIES.

There is usually a chapter in school-geographies entitled "Religion." Its object is to classify mankind according to their religious beliefs. There seems to be no special reason why such information should be given in a work on geography. One would suppose that, if it had any appropriate place in a school-book, it would rather come under the head of history. But if information on this matter is to be given in a school-geography, it would seem to be an easy thing to give it from an impartial point of view, —to state it in such way as to give no offence to any class of religionists; in other words, to give correct information. Yet I do not remember to have ever seen a school-geography in which the chapter on religion was not written not only on the assumption that the Christian religion is alone true and worthy of consideration, but with needlessly disparaging statements concerning the character of other faiths,—statements which adherents of those other faiths, or any impartial students of them, would reject as false.

For instance, in a geography now before me, which is extensively used in our public schools, and which may be taken in this particular as a sample of the geographical text-books prepared for the use of schools, it is taught that all "Pagans believe in false gods"; that "Mohammedans are followers of the false prophet Mohammed"; that "there is little doubt that in the course of a few generations the Christian religion will be spread over the greater part of the earth." These statements, it is true, are so entirely in unison with the popular Christian belief that most people in Christendom will wonder that there can be any objection to them, whether in a geography or anywhere else. But in later years, so much has been learned of religions external to Christianity, that it is quite time the geography-makers, if they must retain a chapter on the religious faiths of mankind, should show somewhat of the impartiality of scholars on the subject. No competent historian of Mohammedanism to-day adjudges Mohammed an impostor. That the religion he taught, considered all in all, is inferior to Christianity may be admitted; that his character is perfect need not be claimed; but the later writers on his life and mission, generally, concede that he was a man deadly in earnest. That he was a false prophet, an impostor, is one of the obsolete war-cries of a bigoted, arrogant Christianity, that will have no place in the court of historical judgment. At least, a definition of the faith of Mohammedans that should go into a secular school-book should be one that could be accepted by a Mohammedan himself, and not one that stabs the faith as an imposture.

So, too, with regard to the beliefs of the so-called Pagans. The study of comparative religions has developed the truth that the terms "false" and "true," applied to systems of worship and names of deities, are of relative, not absolute, signification. Said an intelligent, but rather narrowly-educated, lady, after hearing quoted some of the wonderful spiritual sayings of the ancient Hindus, "Did those people have any knowledge of the true God?" The question almost shocked me, after what we had heard,—as if any one people or religion could have a monopoly of divine knowledge—a monopoly of the Infinite One. Yet this is the mood in which our geography-makers write their definitions of the pagan faiths.

And it is a practical affront given to all Jewish children, of which there are many in our public schools,—an affront of which their parents might justly complain,—to make them learn that the Christian religion is so superior to any other that it is likely before long to spread over most of the earth.

In the interests of truth and justice, the religious chapter in our geographies should either be remodelled or expunged. It doubtless helps to buttress the popular faith in Christianity; but it does it at the expense of fairness and right. The public schools are for all sects; and therefore theology had better be left to the catechisms of the churches.

W. J. P.

INDIVIDUALISM AND COMMUNISM.

John Stuart Mill has remarked in perhaps the most valuable and interesting contribution yet made upon this subject,—the fourth book of his Principles of Political Economy, devoted to the elucidation of the "Influence of the Progress of Society on Production and Distribution," as follows, in the concluding chapter, where he sums up his previous deductions "On the Probable Futurity of the Laboring Classes" in these decisive sentences:—

"It is the common error of socialists to overlook the natural indolence of mankind,—their tendency to be passive, to be the slaves of habit, to persist indefinitely in a course once chosen. Let them once attain any state of existence which they consider tolerable, and the danger to be apprehended is that they will thenceforth stagnate,—will not exert themselves to improve; and, by letting their faculties rust, will lose even the energy required to preserve them from deterioration. Competition may not be the best conceivable stimulus; but it is at present a necessary one; and no one can foresee the time when it will not be indispensable to progress.

"Instead of looking upon competition as the baneful and anti-social principle which it is held to be by the generality of socialists, I conceive that, even in the present state of society and industry, every restriction of it is an evil; and every extension of it, even if for the time injuriously affecting some class of laborers, is always an ultimate good. To be protected against competition is to be protected in idleness, in mental dulness,—to be saved the necessity of being as active and as intelligent as other people," etc., etc.

"Most fitting, indeed, is it, that while riches are power, and to grow as rich as possible the universal object of ambition, the path to its attainment should be open to all, without favor or partiality. That the energies of mankind should be kept in employment by the struggle for riches, as they were formerly by the struggle of war, until the better minds succeed in educating the others into better things, is undoubtedly more desirable than that they should rust and stagnate. While minds are coarse, they require coarse stimuli, and let them have them."

"Adam Smith always assumes that the condition of the mass of the people, though it may not be positively distressed, must be pinched and stinted in a stationary condition of wealth, and can only be satisfactory in a progressive state. The doctrine that, to however distant a time incessant struggling may put off our doom, the progress of society must 'end in shallows and in miseries,' far from being, as many people still believe, a wicked invention of Mr. Malthus, was either expressly or tacitly affirmed by his most distinguished predecessors, and can only be successfully combated on his principles."

"Only when, in addition to just institutions, the increase of mankind shall be under the deliberate guidance of judicious foresight, can the conquests made from the powers of Nature by the intellect and energy of scientific discoverers become the common property of the species, and the means of improving and elevating the universal lot."

"It is only in the backward countries of the world that increased production is still an important object; in those most advanced, what is economically needed is a better distribution, of which one indispensable means is a stricter restraint on population. Leveling institutions, either of a just or an unjust kind, cannot alone accomplish it; they may lower the heights of society; but they cannot, of themselves, permanently raise the depth."

"A guarantee of subsistence can only be practically kept up, when work is enforced, and superfluous multiplication restrained, by at least a moral compulsion. If the improvement which even triumphant military despotism has only retarded, not stopped, shall continue its course, there can be little doubt that the status of hired laborers will gradually tend to confine itself to the description of work-people whose low moral qualities render them unfit for anything more independent; and that the relation of masters and work-people will be gradually superseded by partnership, in one of two forms: in some cases, association of the laborers with the capitalist; in others, and perhaps finally in all, association of laborers among themselves. The prospect of the future depends on the degree in which they can be made rational beings."

Thus do we arrive at last at the matured conviction of, undoubtedly, the greatest political economist of the present century; that, as Herbert Spencer has also insisted, "Were not their judgments warped by the class-bias, working-men might be more perceptive to the truth that better forms of industrial organization would grow up and extinguish the forms which they regard as oppressive, were such better forms practicable. And they might see that the impracticability of better forms results from the imperfections of existing human nature, moral and intellectual."

A. W. K.

THE NEW MEXICO QUESTION.

The Boston Daily Advertiser, one of the least radical journals in the country, speaks of the Jesuit triumph in New Mexico as follows, in its issue of March 15:—

No Special Privileges.

The Catholic question, or a phase of it, is now brought before Congress. Thus far, happily for the country, sectarian issues have rarely arisen in the national legislature. A case, however, is now presented from the Territory of New Mexico which is well calculated to arouse denominational prejudices. The population of that Territory is largely Catholic, and the legislature has just passed, over the governor's veto, a bill incorporating a society of Jesuit Fathers, who propose to take charge of the education of the youth of the country. The bill authorizes them to hold every kind of real and personal property, and exempts it from taxation. The governor claims that such an act is in violation of the laws of the United States, and calls upon Congress to exercise the authority given that body by the Constitution, and to annul it. The section of the United States statutes which, in the opinion of the territorial governor, prohibits such legislation, is as follows:

"The legislative assemblies of the several Territories shall not grant private charters or especial privileges; but they may, by general incorporation acts, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate, for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits, or the construction and operation of railroads, wagon-roads, irrigating ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any benevolent, charitable or scientific association."

Another section limits the amount of real estate which any corporation or association for religious or charitable purposes may acquire and hold to the value of $50,000. The act of the Mexican legislature grants a private charter and especial privileges to the Jesuits; and it does not appear that any limitation is placed by it upon the amount of real estate they may hold. It would seem, therefore, to be in clear contravention of the laws of the United States.

The object of the act is to withdraw as far as possible from the influence of free and unsectarian schools the children in New Mexico, and so to maintain and build up there a stronghold of Catholicism of the most ultra fashion. The universal experience thus far, in all countries, has been that where the Jesuits have been favored, and permitted to control and direct the education of the young, disastrous consequences have followed. In Europe the order is regarded with profound distrust by a large class of Catholics than even by Protestants. There cannot, therefore, be any good reason why we should depart from a settled policy in order to grant it exceptional privileges. The most that can be demanded is that we should treat it with the same tolerance which we extend to other religious associations. The abrogation of the act in question will be simply carrying out a law that applies equally to all denominations, and will afford no ground for any charge of intolerance or of hostility to the Catholic Church.

Communications.

A WORD ABOUT OUR STATE PRISONS.

After nearly two thousand years of suffering, the world is slowly recovering from the malign influence of a religion which, like the poisonous herb that shrinks from the warm sunlight and thrives in the noisome air of the vault, has ever grown thriftiest in the shadow of ignorance and superstition.

The struggle of humanity to throw this "old man of the sea" from her neck has been as terrible as it has been long-continued. Religion has halted at nothing. When she could not rack the unbeliever's body till the cold sweat of blood stood on his brow, she has not hesitated to torture his soul with threats of everlasting fire and flame. But the day of reckoning has come at last. Christianity stands at the bar of a court of competent jurisdiction. The indictment is a terrible one; but she must plead. She stands charged with the consecration of error, fraud, and deceit, with submission to tyranny, with the degradation and enslavement of woman, with cruelty to children, with the encouragement and perpetuation of superstition, with assent to human slavery, with opposition to science and learning, with persecution for opinion's sake, with the inculcation of the Jesuitical principle, the suppression of human aspirations, and discredit of human institutions, with war, murder, torture, pillage, sword, fire and flame, all in the name of a God of love and tenderness; and last, though not least, the invention and perpetuation of a system of punishments for crimes at once harsh, illogical, degrading, and infamous.

It is scarcely a century ago, that petty larceny was not punished with the halter; while for equally insignificant crimes, so-called, branding with hot irons, cutting off the ears, slitting open the nostrils, lopping off a hand, whipping till death ensued, imprisonment in the foulest dungeons, confiscation of property, banishment from the realm, etc., were meted out as fit and proper punishments. And to all this, the Church of the meek and lowly Nazarene stood by and consented. Even to-day, in the blaze of this century's enlightenment, do our statutes—unctured as they are in the blood dye of Leviticus—make more criminals than they save.

An ignorant and brutal magistrate, for a petty offence, involving no moral turpitude, is allowed to rob a citizen of his liberty for days and months, and thrust him in among the lowest and vilest. The man whom hunger forces to steal bread or meat to save himself from death by starvation, or the man whom love leads to commit a forgery in order to save his family from want and destitution, is in no sense of the word a criminal. That man is to be dealt with tenderly and carefully. Nature gave him a stomach; nature gave him a heart; and when society steps in and says: "Thou shalt not eat, thou shalt not love," society must bear the consequences of the wrong it commits.

"Ah," you say, "that man must earn his bread honestly!"

But society has so built her fabric that all men cannot at all times find work to do; and so I repeat, Society must shoulder the blame without a murmur, and the law that punishes that man is infamous. Society's only right is to say: "You must make reparation to the citizen you have wronged." It will be time enough upon a repetition of the offence to begin to talk of criminal intent.

And this brings me to the subject upon which I desire to say a few words.

The other day, Superintendent Pillsbury (honored name) announced that the prison at Sing-Sing had become "self-supporting." This simply meant that convict flesh and blood has, under the iniquitous contract system, been sold for money enough to pay all expenses. Let us look calmly at the terrible wrongs that flow from this Christian system in a Christian land.

1st. The State has no right even to attempt to make a prison "self-supporting," any more than a father has to say to a disobedient son: "You shall, for this disobedience, toil for me until you earn $5 for me."

2d. The State, by attempting to make a prison "self-supporting," under the contract system, does violence to the laws of trade, and throws the burden of supporting the institution upon a few instead of upon the community at large.

3d. The State, in order to make a prison "self-supporting," must force the convict to toil from morning till evening, and from the work-shop transfer him to the narrow stone cell. No human being can stand this strain without danger to body and soul. The man who toils all day must have the evening's freedom and converse to recreate him for the morrow. Hence it is, the contract system is a greater crime than any which the prison is striving to punish, as it is termed.

4th. The contractor who secures the services of one hundred convict shoemakers at 75 cents a day commits a daily larceny from the person of one hundred honest shoemakers. The crime is greater than any the State is endeavoring to punish.

5th. The State may have a claim upon the convict for a portion of his labor sufficient to pay for food and clothing, but no more. The fruit of man's labor—convict or no convict—belongs to the laborer. This principle alone is safe; this principle alone will prevent the State from committing a greater crime than any she is so anxious to punish, as she terms it; and that crime is to discharge a convict at the expiration of his term of imprisonment branded with dishonor, robbed of his citizenship, friendless and penniless! From this condition to confirmed criminal tendencies is but an easy step, and one that is often taken.

6th. The State's only right is to rob the convict of his liberty; but when she sells his labor, and robs him of the proceeds, she sets up a system of slavery viler than any the world has ever known.

Prisons self-supporting! Out upon such hypocrisy! Cannot a child see that when the State says to the convict: "You shall not toil for those you love; you shall not provide for your reentry into the social body," she crushes out his humanity, she treats him like a beast of burden, she throws his wife into the poor-house, his daughter on the street, his heart into the blackness of despair; she turns out upon society a fiend, or a physical wreck, not a reformed man? And though the prison he has just left may be "self-supporting," it is so at a terrible cost; for it matters not whether a State or an individual commits a crime, the consequences are the same; the expense in dollars and cents weighs just as heavily upon the community. And, as if to crown the edifice of wrong with a fitting ornament, the wretched slaves are called together on Sundays, and prayed at and preached at concerning the wonderful goodness of a God who unceasingly watches over them. . . . But, it may be urged, how can you in any way hold Christianity responsible for the production of criminals and the increasing difficulty of the problem that society is called upon to solve? My reply is, that we have given this system of religion a fair and honest trial. It has done its best; but it finds itself powerless to restrain the passions of its votaries.

The rum-shop, the brothel, the gambling-hell, the lottery, flourish under the very shadow of the church-spire. The weak denunciations of the clergy have utterly ceased to produce any effect upon these corrupters of humanity; as well set up catapult and ballista in front of a modern fortress. Such a thoroughly brutum fulmen is the Sunday sermon, that a prominent rum-seller of our city lately offered his saloon for religious services on Sundays. The Church is but a social phase of the century. It can be no purer than its sources. It reaches out its greedy palm for the gold offered by these defilers of the social stream. It is part of a compact. To prove this, look at our city, with its army of rum-sellers; probably two-thirds are Irish Catholics. But the Church dares not say to them: "Cease your traffic, or come not within the holy temple."

Our prison system cries aloud for reform. Will the Church help us? Nay, humanity must fight its own battles, as it always has done. But, when the victory is won, see to it that the Church does not step in and say, as she has often done: "That was my work."

INGERSOLL LOCKWOOD.

NEW YORK, March 11, 1878.

"THE SOUTHERN QUESTION."

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Politics—I mean partisan politics, matters that must be viewed and interpreted differently by different readers, because they relate to, represent, and defend but parties or party measures, have, then, no real bearing on the national well-being and the common benefit and interest of all citizens—ought, I think, never to find a place in THE INDEX. Genuine, true politics, of which we have scarcely any—at least not near enough, in this country—are of the highest importance, and can never be treated of too much; but partisan politics will do no good to any one, hardly even to the party in whose interest they are used or discussed. This thought impressed itself on my mind in reading Mr. Tomlinson's lecture in last week's INDEX (Feb. 21). "The Southern Question, Is It Settled?" It is partisan politics, and nothing else, and ought, therefore, I think, never to have been imposed on the readers of that excellent journal, where they expect and are used to find, editorials and communications of quite a different nature, and of a much superior quality. Mr. Tomlinson himself, in order to make out his case, quotes very largely from the South Carolinian press. But do we not, all of us, know the nature of such witnesses, what they amount to, and can be worth? Articles of the nature of this lecture must therefore give, and I have no doubt the one in question will have given, offence to many an honest reader. They must also impair the interest in and obstruct the furtherance of the objects of THE INDEX, by lessening the sympathy and cooling the zeal of such readers for either. But THE INDEX has a hard enough

"struggle for life;" needs the assistance and goodwill of all its patrons; and you can but ill afford to thus jeopardize its existence. For these, if for no other reasons, I think such partisan articles ought to be rigorously excluded from its columns.

True, you may claim that you are not, and in fairness cannot be held responsible for the utterances of others, but only for what you yourself say. Yet while every sensible reader will fully agree with you in this, no one can entirely acquit you, when you, as editor, give such an article the prominent place of Leader, and declare your approval of it so unqualifiedly in the "Glimpses." It is quite clear then, to me, that you made a mistake in giving said lecture any place at all in THE INDEX, and more especially in giving it so prominent a one. But at the same time I must admit that your mistake redounds more to your honor than it deserves blame, originating as it obviously did, in your philanthropy, and your warm sympathy with the freedmen. But I also must apprehend that this time your sentiments got the best of your discretion. To convince you of this, I have cut out, and send you enclosed, a quasi-official correspondence from Columbus, S. C., in the New York Herald of the 23d inst., giving such a horrible description of the "carnival of fraud and extravagance" (as this correspondent calls it) of the late carpet-baggers and negro Legislatures of that unhappy State, that, if it will not justify, must most certainly excuse, most any act of these victims of legislative thieves and scoundrels to free themselves from these leeches. You will perceive that this correspondence—and remember that the Herald's writer says he copied from official documents—gives quite a different color to Mr. Tomlinson's partisan talk; and I should be much mistaken if you yourself should, after its perusal, not coincide with my views, and admit that you were mistaken. Equity and your own sense of justice, so generally manifested in every edition of THE INDEX, and in all your acts generally, might even require of you the publication of this Columbus correspondence, if it were not that its considerable length might be too great for THE INDEX. But a short extract, giving the principal parts, would answer; and that, I think, you should give, to make good your mistake in publishing the lecture.

But the burden of this lecture is, after all, President Hayes's "Southern Policy," to which you as well as Mr. Tomlinson seem to take so much exception. In this I differ as widely from you as in regard to this lecture itself, if not yet more so. Shall we never have peace in this country, not even now, ten years after the war? Shall these Southern "Sovereign States" never, even after their repentance and punishment, be restored to their (I believe inalienable) sovereignty? Shall they never be reinstated into their "State's Rights," even after having accepted all the conditions and complied with all the demands imposed on them by the nation and its government? You and Mr. Tomlinson appear to answer these several questions in the negative. I would answer them affirmatively. The reason for your negation is the negro or freedman. You demand additional legislation and special guarantees for their freedom. [No. This is a mistake.—Ed.] This is another mistake. Special, and more so, class legislation is always dangerous; monopolies ought always to be opposed. After her acceptance of the conditions, and compliance with the demands stated, I do not know in the South any more than in the North "Whites" or "Blacks," "Slaves" or "Freedmen"; I know but citizens,—citizens with equal rights and equal duties. [That is exactly what we said.—Ed.] You claim that the negro, though free, is not yet secure enough in his freedom, and demand prerogatives for him. I do not believe it our duty to grant him any. Our superior duty is to make him equal with other citizens; educate him, and give him a chance to make the best use of his citizenship, not merely for himself, but for his fellow-citizens as well. Interested politicians are as apt to ask too much for him as those interested otherwise to refuse him, or, as the case may be, abuse him too much. But we of the North are, it seems to me, in relation to the South often in the position of a man who "sees the splinter in his brother's eye, but not the beam in his own." Have we no "whites," "free whites" here in the North, who stand as much in need of "protection" as the "blacks" South? Let us be just to all, "blacks" and "whites," by making just and equal laws for all citizens, black or white, laborer or capitalist, and let us execute these just and equal laws with impartiality and honesty. The great need of the hour is justice,—justice to all citizens black or white. [Amen to that!—Ed.]

But look to Washington, look to the separate States' Legislatures; do you find justice there? Is not money and (shame) piety the moving power in Congress as well as in Legislatures? Is not all legislation in the interest of the rich, the monopolists, and against the poor? Is not ecclesiasticism and hypocritical Orthodoxy encroaching upon the rights, the most sacred rights of citizens, "blacks" as well as "whites," South as well as North? If not, why your Herculean labors for the "Liberal League"? But, if they are, why will you so unwisely frustrate your own laudable efforts, by estranging many a valuable co-worker in your supreme cause in giving undue prominence to subordinate questions on which your forces will divide? You claim on every occasion, and claim it most justly too, that the principles and the platform of the "Liberal League" are all-sufficient, and, if honestly carried out, would do justice to all; are a veritable panacea for all wrongs, political as well as social. Do, then, not divide your forces by agitating minor but troublesome questions. Leave them to individuals to be solved according to their own individual liking. But let us unite all friends of true freedom into one great valorous army; let us concentrate all our energies in the support and final victory of the cause of universal liberty and freedom, the cause of the Liberal League, and the negro will have all the protection he needs.

MORRIS EINSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., Feb. 28, 1878.

P.S.—Since the foregoing lines were penned, I have received and read the New York Herald of March 1, which contains an exposure of the "reconstruction" of South Carolina, written by no less a competent historian, "of the wrongs and injuries inflicted on that unhappy State," as he says himself, than ex-Governor Moses. Mr. Moses in this his first chapter of Reconstruction in South Carolina, will show the true character of Mr. Tomlinson's lecture, and much more than merely justify what I say in the foregoing article. I most earnestly request you to read Mr. Moses' "story."

M. E.

CONSERVATIVE LIBERALISM.

You may think me a timid weakling, fit only for the enervating caresses of the Christian faith; but I must say that I am tired of so much dare-devil radicalism among liberals. The chief ambition of many liberals seems to be to outstrip every one else in irreverence toward all ideas of religious belief. They have no modest doubts; but bold, defiant negations, which they delight to flaunt in the face of the "slaves of superstition," as they denominate all persons who have any religious sentiments.

I may be too weak in mental and moral courage to appreciate the true heroism of this advanced type of liberalism; but it will appear to me that the world is not in need of so much of this image-breaking valor. Religion in some form still constitutes a leading element of the life of the masses. It is a powerful moral force in the world yet, however fast it may be weakening; and the time has not yet come when it can be ignored by the student of moral science. You may say that religion has no connection with morality; that man's moral sense should be freed from all extraneous conceptions, and left to stand on its own human basis. But it still remains true that the world has a religious conscience; and that at present the majority of people are not capable of viewing moral questions aside from religious considerations. In attacking all ideas of religion, then, we are not dealing with mere abstract questions; but we are assailing that which is to thousands the foundation of right and the highest incentive to duty. I am speaking now of the common conscience, the average man and woman of to-day. I know there are many noble souls who need not the aid of religion in any supernatural sense to make their lives true and loyal to the highest standard of right as man is capable of conceiving it. But we must deal with the world as it is; and I am not yet prepared to believe that an indiscriminate assault on all forms of religious faith is wise or liberal. Could we persuade all persons to discard their religious belief and embrace any species of unbelief now known to the world, I feel sure that the results would be disastrous to the best interests of life. Indeed I think that scepticism is already spreading faster than conservative liberalism could desire. The new gospel of liberty is making more converts than it has wholesome provisions for. To inculcate doubt merely on the great questions of religious belief without educating the heart and conscience to a higher conception of right is not making any progress toward a better life. The world needs its conscience elevated and strengthened more than it needs its theology demolished. Liberalism needs its moral standard adjusted more than it needs a fresh supply of raw recruits. There is yet much good in Christianity for the world; and conservative liberalism will be careful how it deals with this venerable faith, lest it make untimely attacks on a religion which it is not prepared to supplant.

I have in these few words merely pointed out a line of thought which I should be glad to pursue at length did my claims on the columns of THE INDEX permit. I have said just enough, I hope, to enable the sympathetic reader to follow up the direction of thought here indicated. Conservative liberalism, if there is such a thing, is a subject I should like to hear discussed by some of the logical writers of THE INDEX.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

OZARK, Mo.

WALKING IN TRUTH.

I have no greater joy than when my children walk in truth.—ST. JOHN III, 4.

These are words of an earnest teacher of Christianity. To all whose faith finds infallible inspiration in Christian Scripture, they ought to prove conclusive against any repressing of the earnest search for truth which distinguishes the present period. Yet strange as it may seem, those who most loudly proclaim such a faith are often first in fearing an earnest search for truth, loudest in deprecating scientific investigations.

When Galileo indicated his belief in the Copernican system, the Church compelled him to recant. When Garrison and his brave coadjutors proclaimed their warfare against slavery, the guns of pulpit and press were turned against them. They were denounced as fanatics and infidels. And not till war's wild fury came, till death and carnage stalked abroad leaving a shadow in every heart, and in every home a pall, did the truth that slavery was a crime against humanity take position and ruling power in the firmament that spanned the nation's thought.

The same reluctance to accept new or unfamiliar truth is manifest on all sides of us. Thousands of intelligent and thoughtful people are afraid to read the works of Darwin, Tyndall, Huxley, and Spencer, lest their faith in the dogmas of their creed may be shaken. They discern between science and "revelation" an "irrepressible conflict," and arrange themselves without regard to the claims of truth on the side of creed and dogma. Blind men sit by every way-side and in the shadow of each church, rejoicing in their blindness, and turning from each master of thought as he passes by.

A spirit of active hostility has always been in the world, and has ever been its greatest curse and barrier to progress. It lit the fires of the religions wars that constitute the deepest stain upon the annals of man. It built the palace of the Inquisition, and roared in the flames of the auto-da-fé. It drove English Puritans from their homes, slaughtered Scotch Covenanters in their mountain fastness, cut out the tongues of Quakers, and drank the blood of thirty thousand victims at the massacre of St. Bartholomew's eve. The same spirit is still in the world instinct with life; and, though its methods of opposition have changed with an advancing civilization, its hostility to truth that shakes the foundations of cherished systems remains as determined as ever.

Such a spirit is no less injurious to individuals than baneful to the world. That one's life may be true, truth must have her seat in the secret springs of his soul, shape his courses of thought, and give direction to all his acts. As rays of light stream forth from the sun, so the light of truth beams forth from God, glorious in the brightness of its shining; blessed in its effects upon those whose souls, bathed in the flood, are warmed and enlightened, refreshed and strengthened, enriched, and rendered fruitful thereby.

The first step toward "walking in truth" is in the conquest of one's prejudices, and counteracting educational influences which enchain the reason. Not until such a frame of mind is attained is one prepared to "prove all things" and "hold fast that which is good." Many people are allured by false aims in life, and need to be shown that their views are shortsighted; that manhood and womanhood have holier meanings than they have conceived, and truth a more sacred character as an end, an aim of human attainment. They need to be shown how meagre and unsatisfying are mere selfish achievements, and to catch fairer views of Truth's golden fruitage. Others have sealed their hearts against all truth save such as is contained in their creed; and the lightning flashes of higher and holier truth may gleam before their self-sealed and blinded eyes in vain. Others still, and these constitute the bulk of the people, have permitted certain fixed doctrines to become a portion of their intellectual being, so that they are no more capable of apprehending truths conflicting with these doctrines than their bodies are capable of assimilating elementary substances not first prepared for human food by the organizing forces of Nature.

How blessed will this world be when all people shall be so educated as to walk reverently in the truth as they perceive it, and when every heart will open to its light, as flowers turn their petals to the sun! A hopeful sign of the times is found in the eagerness with which many grand souls are pressing forward into brighter light, and slowly drawing the world after them.

B. F. HUGHES.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

ON LIBERAL LEAGUES.

TO MR. H. L. GREEN:

Dear Sir,—I received your card requesting me to organize a Liberal League in Keokuk, Iowa.

I should certainly comply with your request without hesitation, if I could believe as you do, in the pressing importance of this movement. I will not say that your zeal is not wiser than my indifference, or that your fears are not better founded than my confidence.

And yet let me assure you that I read THE INDEX regularly and with a great deal of pleasure and profit. I earnestly hope that it will live and prosper. To keep abreast of the times, I study the discouraging facts which THE INDEX presents and dwells upon with so much eloquent emphasis; facts which certainly look threatening at times, and would seem to indicate a backward movement in society. There are times when those facts make my blood boil. Then it is that I feel like buckling on the armor of my younger days and entering the field again as a warrior. But, checking my zeal, I try to be the philosopher and take a calm survey of the situation. I say to myself: "Is it possible that this old world of ours has actually taken to turning the wrong way? Is it possible that the wrinkled and crippled past is coming back to conquer and trample down the young and vigorous present? Is it possible that the Church has got its grappling irons on the Middle Ages and the Inquisition and is dragging them into the nineteenth century? Is all Europe, Catholic and Protestant, manfully emancipating herself from ecclesiasticism, and is America going blindfold into slavery?"

To these questions we say "No," and "No a thousand times." The old creeds of Christendom we see are crumbling into ashes with unprecedented rapidity; and no law, no preaching, no Bibles, no tract societies, no organizations, and no constitutions, State or national, can possibly save them. Already they are dead letters in many of the churches which actually profess to believe them. The light of science and criticism and free thought has shattered them beyond remedy.

Then I look at the thousand potent influences which are at work here and everywhere, to complete the deliverance of mankind from the rule of superstition and the priest,—influences such as the world never had before. I look at the vast host of grand and good men,—preachers, scientists, philosophers, journalists, poets, historians, statesmen, whose word and influence are all on the side of liberalism; and we say, "It is impossible that the priest should ever again be the ruler of this world. He is doomed. By all the manhood and humanities of our nature he and his dark creed are doomed. By that one grand truth alone, of modern science, evolution, they are doomed. By all the tendencies of our modern thought and life, they are doomed.

What cause then, we ask, for alarm? With progressive there are always, of course, retrograde movements. Look at the high churchism of England, and yet what a grand, steady, onward movement there is there towards broader and higher and more liberal ideas! Look at the struggles of the old creed here and everywhere to maintain its ground, and yet what wonderful strides have been taken in every direction, spite of adverse influences!

We may be mistaken, we may be too hopeful; but we certainly cannot see the danger which you see requiring organized political effort to meet it.

Since writing the above, which we have withheld for a week or two, we have received another card from you. We will hand it to some one less hopeful and more zealous in this particular movement than we are. With a heart, however, full of interest in the cause of free and reverent thought and speech, believe me to be,

Yours respectfully,

R. HASSALL.

KEOKUK, IOWA, March 4.

[We are glad to receive thoughtful articles on this subject, whether on one side or the other. Optimism is always indisposed to admit the possibility of reaction; yet progress is a succession of waves which ebb as well as advance, and the tides themselves turn. For one, we rely neither on hope nor fear in this matter; we coolly note passing events, and generalize their tendency on the whole. It is those that do this who believe most strongly in the Liberal League as a practical necessity of the times. Set down the facts, extenuating and exaggerating nothing; and then ask whether the secular principle is growing stronger or weaker in our government. That alone is the question.—ED.]

PIGUS DEFAULTERS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 14, 1878.

DEAR INDEX:—

A few days since, the Chicago Tribune published the items of the thirty millions of which we have been robbed since July, 1873,—four years and a half ago. This "black list" contains only "defalcations and embezzlements,"—no names of the many who have "failed to make money"; yet it fills five columns, crowded lines, small type.

In the article inclosed, I have shown that Massachusetts is not a sinner above all others; but, says the Tribune, "she has tried to rival us in enterprise and wickedness, and in the latter has fallen only a little short."

I have looked over this long list with pain, for, whenever more than the name of defaulter and amounts stolen is given, the comments, for all parts of the country, run in this wise:—

"Methodist minister and insurance agent, Des Moines, Ia.; embezzlement, $10,000."

"The Treasurer of Bishop Cheney's Reformed Episcopal Church, Chicago; defalcation, $15,000."

"Treasurer of Presbyterian Church, Florida, N.Y.; defalcation, $35,000."

"Assistant Cashier of Methodist Book Concern; defalcation, $15,000. Very religious; took an active part in Sunday-school work."

"Reverend Keebaugh, Glasgow, Mo.; embezzlement by forgery of from $28,000 to $50,000."

And the greatest satisfaction in this wretched catalogue comes in the next phrase,—"sentenced to the State Prison for eighteen years." But if they chance to have a pious Governor in Missouri, he will be pardoned out, as our Methodist Beveridge pardoned the most adroit thief that ever appeared in Chicago,—a man who kept half of our city from sleep for months, and robbed more houses than there were days in the year; who was caught after no end of trouble and expense, sentenced for fifteen years, was "brought to Jesus" immediately after going to Joliet, and at the end of two years was let loose upon us "because he had consumption and was hopefully converted." He recovered from both maladies so rapidly that in a month he was able to climb through my chamber-window and relieve me of the care of the few ornaments he had not appropriated at his first visit.

"Nathan Lenheim, Montrose, Pa.; defalcation over $100,000. A devoted member of the Church."

"Deacon Edward Southworth; defalcation, $100,000."

"Edward Lambert, Treasurer of Brooklyn Presbyterian Church; defalcation, $50,000."

Gilman (whose conviction must have netted a handsome sum to laundresses, so profuse was the weeping over the "refined and pious" wretch) is fresh in every one's mind.

And with tiresome iteration occur the same nauseating statements, not from one State or region, but over the whole broad continent.

Pious Orthodox people are, as you know, in a state of chronic "wonderment" because rationalists are not always and everywhere criminals; and I have written out a few of these heart-aching items because I wish you to call attention to the sort of persons who, among the educated, make up "the criminal class"; for I really believe this condition of things will never cease till a different standard is set before people, and different motives for good conduct are urged; till the "ministers of God" find other personages than Abraham, Lot, Jacob, and David to present to their flocks as "well pleasing" in "His sight."

In this whole list of blackness there is not recorded one free thinker. Had there been one, all the changes would have been rung upon "the consequences of unbelief."

The last issue of the Tribune has seventeen columns of sermons, from sixteen ministers of the city, upon the subject of hell-fire; but not one from the Scriptures, "Thou shalt not steal!"

Yours,

KATE N. DOGGETT.

REASONABLE CONSERVATISM.

Conservatism is of three kinds. There is an optimist conservatism, the organized selfishness of the well-to-do classes. Not that the well-to-do citizen is worse than another (perhaps he is rather better), but an average amount of selfishness naturally renders him unduly conservative. Then there is a pessimist conservatism: better "bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of." Or, as George Eliot amusingly says: "Whatever is is bad, but any change is sure to make it worse." But lastly there is a reasonable conservatism,—a solid quality in which many generous and enthusiastic young men are grievously deficient, but which most sensible people acquire in the experience of life. This naturally goes along with scientific pursuits and a sceptical temper; and this, and this alone, enables us to discuss even the most delicate moral and social questions calmly, and yet with that thoroughness and openness which is so conducive to the advancement of mankind in knowledge and material prosperity. In politics, discretion is in sober truth the better part of valor. It is always for the reformer to prove his case. Meanwhile the conservative may cross his legs, and whistle a tune, if he likes.

On the other hand, superstition, while it prevents all rational progress, is yet no safeguard of order. How should it be? Where is the guarantee? The bare ipse dixit of one man or book is as good as another's. But against established science there is no appeal, and from the morality of Nature there is no escape, any more than from the influence of gravitation. Hell is not down below. The devil lives next door.

For very shame the Christians should hold their peace about the sanctity of marriage. We Anglo-Saxons inherit feminine chastity, and male chastity too (what we have of it), not from any Christian source, but from our pagan ancestors; whose women, when captured by the Romans, frequently stabbed themselves in self-defence, like the pagan Lucretia. Contrariwise, when the Bible was given to the people at the period of the Reformation, what was the effect of it? Was it to lighten the marriage bond? Just the reverse; and that too not only among the multitude, but among the learned. Luther and Melancthon were avowed polygamists; and Milton advocated an extreme freedom of divorce, supporting his arguments with Scripture texts. It was to the Bible, too, that Joe Smith and Brigham Young appealed.

Neither superstition nor ignorance nor tyranny can ever be preservative of human purity; but if the moral tone of the community could be elevated, and if children could be instructed in the laws of hygiene, and not merely told but intelligently taught that the preservation of the mens sana in corpore sano is a duty which they owe, not to a superstitious, heavenly taskmaster, but to society and to themselves, then prudence coupled with a sentiment of honor might not be found an ineffectual restraint upon lasciviousness.

CHARLES ELLERSHAW.

NEW YORK CITY.

INTUITION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Knowledge acquired through the medium of the senses seems a sufficiently miraculous and wonderful thing; but as it is one of "Nature's wonders" (which are always suggesting to the curious mind the hope, if not the possibility, of their solution), we feel justified in holding the rationale of it subject to the order of further research in the domain of biological science. But the idea of knowledge obtained by intuition has a flavor of supernaturalism which, in the interest of scientific truth, those holding to that idea should strive to remove. To that end, I wish your correspondent, Mr. G. B. Stebbins, could define the word intuition as used in describing a method of discovering truth without the aid of the senses. I would like to have him also give his opinion as to whether the method of intuition (as he will define it) is available for the acquisition of knowledge in the case of a child who should be born into the world destitute of every human sense,—sans seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, or feeling. If Mr. Stebbins sees proper to comply with the above wish, I trust he will not fly too high, but keep right down to the heart of the matter, clearly showing us that intuition is natural and not a miracle.

Z.

THE FRENCH laborer probably gets more for his wages than any other. His food is cheaper and more nourishing. His bouillon is the essence of beef at a penny a bowl. His bread at the restaurant is thrown in without any charge, and is the best bread in the world. His hot coffee and milk are peddled about the streets in the morning at a sou per cup. It is coffee, and not slops. His half bottle of claret is thrown in at a meal costing twelve cents. For a few cents he may enjoy an evening's amusement at one of the many minor theatres, with his coffee free. Sixpence pays for a nicely-cushioned seat at the theatre. No gallery gods, no peanuts, pipe smoke, drunkenness, yelling, nor howling. The Jardin des Plantes, the vast galleries and museums of the Louvre, Hotel Cluny, palace of the Luxembourg and Versailles are free for him to enter. Art and science hold out to him their choicest treasures at small cost or no cost at all. French economy and frugality do not mean that constant retrenchment and self-denial which deprive life of everything which makes it worth living for.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Harford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual report of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of Important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 8 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Monismism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	1.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	1.25
The World-Priest.....	1.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	5.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	1.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	1.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	3.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Legend of Cleland Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gerhardus Erasmus Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stieler. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FRUEBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	8.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	1.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
I. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.00
The Marble Faun.....	1.00
The English Note-Books.....	1.00
The American Note-Books.....	1.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion, Tradition, and Customs. Vol. II. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
HUGO'S (V. F.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	1.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (ORPHEUS C.). Verses, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	3.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 3 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. N.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	1.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1853 to 1855.....	5.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMIES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.20
The Subjection of Women.....	2.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.10
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bad-Time Stories.....	1.20
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion, Tradition, and Customs. Vol. II. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Klucks from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	5.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	2.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.00
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PEEL'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tretty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Edged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.25
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 12 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	1.25
SCHLLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in the Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.25
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.25
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.25
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.25
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	11.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.00
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Human and the First of them Developed.....	1.00
The Principles of Biology. 4 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. The Classic-Romantic Tale. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	7.50
TANNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.00
The Newcomes.....	1.00
Adventures of Philip.....	1.00
The Virginians.....	1.00
Ramona, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.00
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.00
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Daur, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.00
THAYER'S (MRS. OELLA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THORAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Lectures.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Ferms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Addresses before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLE (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Seamstresses.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

GIRLS—3 nice perforated mottoes for fancy work 15 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address E. HALLWELL & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STIMSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TAUS & Co., Augusta, Maine.

$125 a month and expenses to Agents. Send stamp for terms. S. C. FOSTER & Co., Cincinnati, O.

E. A. SAWTELLE,
PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX
IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

is an enterprising, 8-page, Liberal, Family Paper, devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth.

Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft, and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds. It has no reverence for bibles or man-made gods, and opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasures in another.

It has a variety of Departments, is chaotic and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a First-rate Liberal Paper.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published weekly, at One Dollar a year, or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address EMMY WILSON PAYNE, 141 Eighth St., New York.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 25 cents, or free to any one paying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BECKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF
CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, Sir Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.
Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE

INDEX for
1 8 7 7,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION

REPORTS.
Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals,

Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform.

The Wharton Patent Switch,

and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points.

The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,

General Manager. General Passenger Agent.

C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,

203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.

... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.

E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defense of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,

President of the Society,

No. 141 5th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYNEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. R. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. R. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XIV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
 2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
 3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
 4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
 5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.
- This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	.15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	.40
FIFTY.....	.75
ONE HUNDRED.....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED.....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED.....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED.....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND.....	12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 4, 1878.

WHOLE No. 482.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

THE ULTRAMONTANES of Paris propose to give the new Pope a tiara worth a million francs.

A MEETING is called at Bailey's Hall, Malden, Massachusetts, Monday evening, April 8, for the purpose of forming a Liberal League in that town. All interested are invited.

TWO MORE new Liberal Leagues have been organized, auxiliary to the National League. One is at Enterprise, Kansas,—officers not yet reported. The other is at Passaic City, New Jersey, with J. H. Adamson, President, and F. W. Orvis, Secretary. The movement is spreading in all directions, and organizations are reported as about to be formed in many places.

A MR. JONES has lately moved, in the New York Assembly, to strike out the word "intoxicating" in a bill to regulate the sale of liquor, offering a decidedly original reason: "There was no such thing as intoxicating liquor. A man might drink too much liquor and become intoxicated, but that was his fault, not the fault of the liquor. A man may eat too much roast turkey and suffer from gluttony, but no man ever heard of gluttonous roast turkey."

THE MILWAUKEE Liberal League has published in pamphlet form the able and admirable discourse of Rev. G. E. Gordon on "What is the Relation of the State to Religion?" delivered in the Assembly Chamber at Madison, February 1. It is a document of great value for circulation, especially at the West, in behalf of the new reform of State Secularization. Copies can be obtained through Mr. Robert C. Spencer, Chairman of the Wisconsin State Committee of the National Liberal League, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

IT IS CHARGED that Colonel Ingersoll is unfair to the Orthodox in treating the doctrine of everlasting punishment as if it were still preached or believed by them. On the contrary, this doctrine is disavowed only by those whose orthodoxy is justly suspected. Rev. Mr. Hammond, the well-known revivalist, recently preached to the six hundred and fifty children in the New York Juvenile Asylum at Yonkers, and, according to the New York Sun of January 20, told them "that they would certainly be doomed to literal fire for all eternity, if they did not become Christians"; and that he "dwelt with uncommon particularity on his doctrine of hell." Within a week, over four hundred of these poor little victims were scared into "conversion."

SAYS THE Pall Mall Gazette, as quoted in a London despatch of March 18: "The Pall Mall Gazette has the following despatch: The Pope, notwithstanding violent opposition, has ordered the Italian bishops to legalize their positions, giving them liberty to demand an exequatur from the government. This defines the Pope's policy. It means tacit acceptance of the loss of temporal power." Do not be too sure of that. Rome has but one policy, and her boast is Semper Eadem. She cannot without suicide change her own fundamental theory of Church and State; she knows it, and laughs at the sanguine superficiality of those who are eager to patch up a compromise between her and civilization. Leo XIII. may, like Pius IX., think it prudent to begin as a liberal; he will also, like him, find it prudent very soon to abandon that rôle.

GOVERNOR RICE, of Massachusetts, begins his Fast-day proclamation as follows: "The Father of Mercies, whose power is infinite, and whose loving kindness is everlasting, invites his people in his Holy Word to make known their requests unto him in every time of their necessity. Following accepted example, I hereby appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the council, THURSDAY, the eleventh day of April next, to be observed by the people of Massachusetts as a day of Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer, for the forgiveness of our sins, and for God's gracious benefactions in the time to come." This practice of proclaiming by State authority a fast to which not one citizen in a hundred pays the least attention, is only clung to in order that Orthodoxy may set itself up as the State Religion. Is it not about time to drop the curtain on this mischievous farce?

THE WAY in which a secular government may justly interfere to protect the rights of individuals against ecclesiastical tyranny has recently been well illustrated in Ohio. About three years ago, James Leichty, a member of the Menonite Church at Bryan, in that State, was excommunicated, and his wife and children were affected to leave him. This he did, although he begged them to remain. A strong church influence was brought to bear upon the wife, and she refused to live with her husband, dreading the same ban, which, according to their creed, would have consigned her soul to everlasting damnation. Mr. Leichty brought suit against the church authorities for compelling his wife to leave him without his fault or consent, and demanded $10,000 damages. The case was on trial for nearly a week, and on March 5 the jury returned a verdict of $2,500 for the plaintiff. Who can question the justice of this verdict? The wife is not compelled to return, since her poor, misguided conscience makes her a voluntary victim of her tyrants; but the church authorities are most righteously punished for desolating and destroying the plaintiff's home. They too may plead conscience as the justification of their act; but a secular government holds the plea of conscience to be no justification for a crime. When conscience makes a man infringe on the rights of others, as was done in this case by the church authorities, it ought to be totally disregarded by the courts; for the courts are bound to protect individuals even from conscientious violation of their rights. Otherwise, what would prevent honest bigots from burning heretics at the stake, as they used to do in the name of conscience towards God?

SENATOR SARGENT, of California, said in the United States Senate, March 20, that the following law was in force in the District of Columbia, until the "Revision of the Statutes" in 1873: "That if any person shall hereafter, within this province, wittingly, maliciously, and advisedly, by writing or speaking, blaspheme or curse God, or deny our Savior Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, or shall deny the Holy Trinity, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, or the Godhead of any of the three persons, or the unity of the Godhead, or shall utter any profane words concerning the Holy Trinity, or any the persons thereof, and shall be thereof convicted by verdict, or confession, shall, for the first offence, be bored through the tongue and fined twenty pounds sterling to the lord proprietor to be applied to the use of the county where the offence shall be committed, to be levied on the offender's body, goods, and chattels, lands or tenements, and in case the said fine cannot be levied, the offender to suffer six months' imprisonment without bail or mainprize; and that for the second offence, the offender being thereof convicted as aforesaid, shall be stigmatized by burning in the forehead with the letter B and fined forty pounds sterling to the lord proprietor, to be applied and levied as aforesaid; and in case the same cannot be levied, the offender shall suffer twelve months' imprisonment without bail or mainprize; and that for the third offence, the offender being convicted as aforesaid, shall suffer death without the benefit of the clergy.—Compilation of Laws of the District of Columbia in force April 1, 1868, page 138." It was the same year 1878 which got into bad odor with the devotees of the silver dollar on account of the demonization of silver; and it will now get into equally bad odor with the devotees of Christian government on account of the remonetization of blasphemy!

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
MR. O. K. PROTHINGHAM, New York.
MR. W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT, San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
HARRI B. FELSETHAL, Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZ, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLYER, Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK, Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON, Tenafly, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Lottsburg, Va.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB, 141 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLE, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. C. MICHELER, Adel.
Kansas.....JOHN FARMER, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wilmore.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....W. B. SAWYARD, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL SCHMERMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LUTY, Manchester.
New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PALCH, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Amarillo.
Virginia.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
West Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
Wisconsin.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wyoming.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
District of Columbia.....D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
Washington.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho.....W. FERGUSON, Pocatello.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, 131 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lechard, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Eliza Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritz, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. F. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.

Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]

Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheppard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunson.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.

Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.

Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Gale Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.

Issued to L. Garron, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.

Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.

Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.

Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.

Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, K. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]

Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Senft, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Senft, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.
SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

History of the National Reform Association.

The National Reform Association assembled for its annual meeting in the First Presbyterian Church, Pittsburgh (Rev. S. F. Scovel, pastor), on Thursday, the 7th instant, at 7½ o'clock. The Hon. Felix R. Brunot occupied the chair, and called on Dr. David R. Kerr to open the meeting with prayer. In the absence of the Secretary, Rev. W. W. Barr, D.D., of Philadelphia, the Rev. Wm. H. Vincent was chosen Secretary pro tem.

MR. BRUNOT'S ADDRESS.

Mr. Brunot said that it seemed fitting to give, at this annual meeting, something of a history of the movement. In the year of 1863, on the 3d day of February, a conference of Christians was held in Xenia, Ohio, which had been called with special reference to the then unhappy condition of the country, and at which eleven denominations of Christians were represented. Among the topics set for consideration were: "Religion in the Heart," "Religion in the Church," and "Religion in the Nation." When, before the second day of the session, the last-named of this series was under discussion, a paper was presented and read, which bore the single indorsement, "From a member of the Convention." Beginning with these words, "In this day of our national calamity, it becomes us to inquire what the Lord would have us to do," it briefly called to mind the nation's early struggle for independence; its devout reliance upon God during that struggle, and his marvellous interference in our behalf against the enemies of civil and religious liberty,—and then spoke of the ingratitude of the nation after its prayer had been answered:—

"Instead of going on to promote more and more the glory of God and the rights of man, a terrible and, if God's mercy prevent not, a fatal, backward step was taken; in adopting that otherwise noble instrument without any direct recognition of God or his authority, and with a toleration of human slavery; thus contradicting two of the noblest principles of the Declaration of Independence, viz., Reliance upon Divine Providence, and acknowledgment of the equal rights of man. . . . These two defects in our otherwise inimitable Constitution, so dishonoring to God and unjust to man, we believe to be the plague-spots in the heart of our nation, corrupting its vital fountains and threatening its dissolution. . . . We regard the Emancipation Proclamation of the President and his recommendation to purge the Constitution of slavery as among the most hopeful signs of the times; but we regard the neglect of God and his law by omitting all acknowledgment of them in our Constitution as the crowning original sin of the nation, and slavery as one of its natural outgrowths. Therefore, the most important step remains yet to be taken,—to amend the Constitution so as to acknowledge God and the authority of his law; and the object of this paper is to suggest to this Convention the propriety of considering this subject, and of proposing such an amendment to the Constitution as they may think proper to propose."

The paper also set forth a form of amendment, such as seemed to its author suitable, in the preamble of the Constitution, and which is substantially that which is advocated by this Association. Some objection was at first made to the consideration of the paper in the conference; but it was referred to a committee embracing members of each of the eleven denominations in the conference. The committee made a favorable report on the sentiments and suggestions of the paper, and the report was adopted. It seemed to the conference, said one who took part in its proceedings, that the question presented "was the real question of the hour and of the weightiest importance; God was forcing it upon them, and there was danger in delay; they must begin the work, and begin it then."

THE FIRST STEP.

The action of this conference was the first step that led to the organization of the body which holds its annual meeting to-night; and the composition of the body attests the unsectarian character of the origin of our movement.

Before the final ratification of the Constitution, in some of the State legislatures and conventions which discussed it, and at every period since its adoption, the religious defect of the Constitution has been lamented by many of the wisest and best men our country has produced. Says one who has collected their recorded utterances on the subject for publication: "The witnesses are of the highest standing. Learned and patriotic men, lawyers, judges, divines, legislators, editors, professors of political science, all unite in harmonious and most explicit testimony to the religious defect of our Constitution." But there seems to have been no definite proposition to set about the work of removing the defect until it was made in the little assemblage of Christian patriots at Xenia.

The friends of the measure at first thought that the already organized church bodies presented the machinery through which the work could be carried on; and accordingly they were invited to appoint delegates to a Convention to be held in Allegheny on the 4th day of July following. But few delegates were appointed, and it became evident that more efficient measures should be adopted. The Allegheny meeting issued an able address to the public, and invited all persons who felt interested in the subject to meet in Allegheny, on the 27th day of January, 1864.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

At this meeting the National Association, to secure the religious amendment of the Constitution, was organized, and most fittingly chose for its first President, John Alexander, Esq., the author of the paper which had been presented in the conference at Xenia. The Association adopted appropriate resolutions setting forth its objects, and a form of memorial to Congress, and appointed a committee to prepare and present an address to the President of the United States. A short extract from this address will serve to indicate the mind of the movement at this early stage:—

"For we hold it as most certain truth, that nations, as such, and not individuals alone, are the subjects of God's moral government, are responsible to him, and by him are graciously rewarded for their obedience, or justly punished for their disobedience of his divine laws.

"We believe also that our civil and religious liberties, our free institutions, and all our national prosperity, power, and glory are mercies and blessings derived from God to us, through the channel of the Christian religion. Notwithstanding, either from inadvertency or following some Godless theory of civil government, we have omitted even the mention of his blessed name in the most significant and highest act of the nation.

"We believe that in thus leaving God out of our political system, we have grievously sinned against him; have brought upon ourselves and children his just displeasure. . . .

"We believe, therefore, that it is our duty to repent of this, and all our national sins, and to return to our obligations as a Christian people by acknowledging the true God as our God in our fundamental and organic law, in order that we may consistently implore his merciful interposition in our behalf; to give victory to our national arms and success to the national cause; to establish the unity of the nation and the authority of the government now assailed and shattered by rebellion. We ask for no union of Church and State,—that is a thing which we utterly repudiate. We ask nothing inconsistent with the largest religious liberty or the rights of conscience in any man. We represent no sectarian or denominational object, but one in which all who bear the Christian name, and all who have any regard for the Christian religion, can cordially agree, and one to secure which we are persuaded that any lawful and wise movement would call forth an overwhelming public sentiment in its support."

THE FIRST ANNUAL MEETING.

The first annual meeting of the Association was held in the Eighth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, on the 7th and 8th of July following. Rev. J. C. Eddy, of the Tabernacle Baptist Church, was elected President for the ensuing year, and an address issued to the public in furtherance of the cause. This able paper abounded with clear and conclusive argument; and in a few words at its close, again expressed the animus of the body from which it emanated: "In this movement, prompted by pure Christian patriotism, participated in by various Christian denominations, all of whom are opposed to any sectarian establishment of religion, we invite the coöperation of every lover of his country and every follower of Jesus Christ."

A Convention was held in the Arch Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, on the 29th of November, 1864, at which ex-Governor James Pollock presided, and a meeting in New York, May 16 and 17, 1866. The next important meeting was held in Philadelphia, March 5, 1867, at which Hon. Wm. Strong presided. Judge Strong was at this meeting elected President of the Association. In September of that year Rev. D. McAllister and T. P. Stevenson began the issue, in Philadelphia, of the Christian Statesman, a semi-monthly journal, devoted to the cause. The Statesman proved itself to be a most efficient agency in carrying on the work of the Association, and has now become one of the most valuable and useful unsectarian religious weeklies published in this country.

ACTION OF REPRESENTATIVE BODIES.

During the war of the rebellion, the representative bodies of nearly every religious denomination, in their deliberances relative to the state of the country, in some form indicated the same convictions which lie at the foundation of our movement. Nor was this conviction confined to the religious bodies. In the days of our calamity, the rulership of Almighty God, and the dependences of the nation upon his divine mercy and power for its relief, was the dominant thought which found expression upon every hand. The Senate of the United States, on the 2d day of March, 1863, passed a resolution "devoutly recognizing the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and nations. . . . Deplored the national offences which have provoked his righteous judgment, yet encouraged in this day of trouble by the assurances of his word to seek to him for succor according to his appointed way through Jesus Christ." And in his proclamation, President Lincoln, "acknowledging the duty of nations, as well as of men, to own their dependence on the overruling power of God," recognized also, in glowing words, "the sublime truth announced in the Holy Scriptures, and proven by all history, that those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord."

This action of the Government of the United States, it will be observed, was almost coincident in point of time with the beginning of our Reform movement. The moral entity of the nation, supposing as such the just punishment for its national crimes and its forgetfulness of God, was an awful fact in those dark days which none ventured to deny, if any dared to doubt it; and, as a personality, it sought in God's appointed way of repentance, humiliation, and prayer to deprecate his wrath.

Said President Lincoln, speaking for the nation in the noble document from which I have already quoted, "Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us. It behooves us, then, to humble ourselves before the offended power, to confess our national sins, and to pray for clemency and forgiveness."

OPPOSITION TO THE MOVEMENT.

It is a noticeable fact that, whilst the hand of God pressed heavily upon our country, and so many voices were raised in behalf of the duty of conforming the Constitution to the devout and God-fearing spirit of the nation and the people, none ventured to demand that the national authorities should cease their unconstitutional acts of religion. It is not so now. Hardly had our prayers been answered, and God's messenger of peace returned with her attendant train, when this key-note of ingratitude sounded from the metropolitan city through its then leading newspaper: "We deny that this is a Christian nation," it said, "though a majority of its inhabitants probably are. 'Almighty God' is not 'the source of all authority and power' in our government; the people of the United States are such source. . . . The Federal Constitution is based on the idea that religious faith is purely a personal matter with which governments have properly nothing to do."

MEMORABLE UTTERANCES.

Among the memorable utterances of the ecclesiastical bodies, was the admirable pastoral letter of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, issued from the General Convention in October, 1862. This document sets forth with consummate ability the scriptural argument, with its examples and warnings, which inevitably shadow forth the duty of a national constitutional acknowledgment of Almighty God, and the peril of the neglect to honor him.

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which met in Philadelphia in May, 1864, unanimously adopted a series of resolutions, reported by the committee on the state of the country, of which the third and fourth were as follows:—

"That we regard our calamities as resulting from our forgetfulness of God, and from slavery, so long our nation's reproach, and that it becomes us to humble ourselves and forsake our sins as a people, and hereafter, in all our laws and acts, to honor God."

"That we will use our efforts to secure such a change in the Constitution of our country as shall recognize the being of God, our dependence on him for prosperity, and also his word as the foundation of civil law."

The General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church in May, 1863, adopted a preamble and resolutions, a part of which reads as follows:—

"WHEREAS, The exigencies of the war have brought the authorities of the nation, civil and military, subordinate and supreme, to formal recognition of the being, providence, and grace of God and of Jesus Christ, his son, to an extent and with a distinctness such as the country has never witnessed before; therefore

"Resolved, 1. That in the judgment of this Synod the time has come for the proposal of such amendments to the Federal Constitution, in the way provided by itself, as will supply the omission above referred to, and secure a distinct recognition of the being and supremacy of the God of divine revelation."

FIRST NATIONAL DELEGATE CONVENTION.

The first National Convention, properly so called—it being the first to which delegates were generally appointed by the local associations and meetings of the friends of the movement,—was held in Pittsburgh on the 7th and 8th of February, 1870. It was followed by National Conventions in Philadelphia on the 18th and 19th of November, 1871; in Cincinnati, January 31 and February 1, 1872; in New York, February 25 and 26, 1873; and in Pittsburgh, February 4 and 5, 1874; and again in Philadelphia on the 28th, 29th, and 30th of June, 1876.

CONCLUSIONS.

After referring to the successive National Conventions which have been held under the auspices of the Society, the speaker said: "In giving this history of the National Reform Association—so brief as compared with the amount of material which crowds itself upon the attention as worthy of record,—I have but touched a few of its facts from point to point. I make no attempt to indicate the amount of work it has done, or to weigh the influence it has exercised in resisting the attacks upon the religious life and usages of our country.

"Whoever has listened to the statements I have made, will have ineapably concluded:—

"1. That the origin of this Association was unsectarian, Christian, and patriotic.

"2. That the Association aims for no 'union of Church and State'; no restriction upon the freedom of religion; but, on the contrary, its aim is to maintain inviolate the God-given right to religious liberty.

"3. That the Association is not laboring in behalf of a mere sentiment, as has been ignorantly charged, but for important moral and political principles."—Christian Statesman, Feb. 14, 1878.

CONSTITUTION OF THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

Believing that Almighty God is the source of all power and authority in civil government; that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Ruler of nations, and that the revealed will of God is of supreme authority in civil affairs;

Remembering that this country was settled by Christian men, with Christian ends in view, and that they gave a distinctly Christian character to the institutions which they established;

Perceiving the subtle and persevering attempts which are made to prohibit the reading of the Bible in our public schools, to overthrow our Sabbath laws, to abolish the oath, prayer in our National and State legislatures, days of fasting and thanksgiving, and other Christian features of our institutions, and so to divorce the American government from all connection with the Christian religion;

Viewing with grave apprehension the corruption of our politics, and the prevalent disregard of moral and religious character in those who are exalted to high places in the nation;

Believing that a written Constitution ought to contain explicit evidence of the Christian character and purpose of the nation which frames it, and perceiving that the silence of the Constitution of the United States in this respect is used as an argument against all that is Christian in the usage and administration of our government;

We, citizens of the United States, do associate ourselves under the following Articles, and pledge ourselves to God and to one another to labor, through wise and lawful means, for the ends herein set forth:

ARTICLE I.

This Society shall be called the "NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION."

ARTICLE II.

The object of this Society shall be to maintain existing Christian features in the American government, and to secure such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all the Christian laws, institutions, and usages of our government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

ARTICLE III.

All persons approving these objects, and contributing annually to its treasury, shall be members of this Association.

ARTICLE IV.

The Officers of this Association shall be the President, Vice-Presidents, General Secretary, Corresponding Secretary, Recording Secretary, and Treasurer. The Secretaries and Treasurer, with twenty-one other members, shall be the Executive Committee of the Association.

ARTICLE V.

Any Society adopting a Constitution in harmony with the aims of the National Reform Association, and contributing annually to its treasury, shall be recognized as an Auxiliary, and all members thereof shall be members of the National Reform Association.

The following form of petition to Congress in behalf of the proposed Religious Amendment was recommended by the National Convention in New York, Feb. 27, 1873:—

To the Honorable, the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, citizens of the United States, petition your honorable bodies for such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as shall suitably express our national acknowledgment of Almighty God as the source of all authority in civil government; of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler of nations, and of his revealed will as of supreme authority; and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all the Christian laws, institutions, and usages of the government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

OFFICERS OF THE NATIONAL REFORM ASSOCIATION.

PRESIDENT:

The Hon. Felix R. Brunot, Pittsburgh, Pa.

VICE-PRESIDENTS:

The Hon. James M. Harvey, U. S. Senate.

The Rev. Julius H. Seelye, D.D., President of Amherst College.

The Hon. Lorenzo Sawyer, U. S. Circuit Court, San Francisco, Cal.

Prof. Edmund H. Bennett, LL.D., Boston University, Mass.

The Hon. G. W. Brooks, U. S. District Court of North Carolina.

The Hon. Roger S. Greene, Supreme Court of Washington Territory.

The Hon. Edgar W. Hillyer, U. S. District Court of Nevada.

The Hon. B. F. Saffold, Supreme Court of Alabama.

The Hon. C. C. Cole, LL.D., Supreme Court of Iowa.

The Hon. James Phelps, Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut.

The Hon. M. B. Hagans, Superior Court of Cincinnati.

The Hon. J. Rockwell, Superior Court of Massachusetts.

The Hon. George W. French, Chief Justice of Supreme Court of Dakota.

The Hon. David Noggles, Chief Justice of Supreme Court of Idaho.

The Hon. Madison E. Hollister, Supreme Court of Idaho.

The Hon. Robert W. Furnas, ex-Governor of Nebraska.

The Hon. Ezekiah S. Johnson, Supreme Court of New Mexico.

The Hon. J. W. Kingman, Supreme Court of Wyoming Territory.

The Hon. C. M. Hawley, Late Justice Supreme Court of Utah.
 The Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D.D., Peoria, Ill.
 The Rev. Henry J. Fox, D.D., Charleston, N.C.
 The Right Rev. F. D. Huntington, D.D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of Central N.Y.
 The Right Rev. W. M. Green, D.D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of Mississippi.
 Vice-Chancellor J. Gorgas, University of the South, Tennessee.
 The Right Rev. John B. Kerfoot, D.D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of Pittsburgh.
 The Right Rev. G. T. Bedell, D.D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Ohio.
 The Hon. Ellis A. Appar, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, New Jersey.
 The Hon. A. N. Fisher, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Nevada.
 Prof. J. R. Herrick, D.D., South Hadley, Mass.
 The Hon. Josiah H. Drummond, LL.D., Portland, Maine.
 The Rev. Edwin B. Webb, D.D., Shawmut Avenue Congregational Church, Boston, Mass.
 The Rev. A. A. Miner, D.D., LL.D., Boston, Mass.
 John Alexander, Esq., Philadelphia, Pa.
 The Hon. Thomas W. Bicknell, Editor of Journal of Education, Boston.
 The Rev. J. H. McIlvaine, D.D., Newark, N.J.
 The Rev. M. Simpson, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of the M. E. Church, Philadelphia.
 The Rev. Levi Scott, D.D., Bishop of the M. E. Church, Delaware.
 The Rev. J. Blanchard, President of Wheaton College, Illinois.
 Prof. O. N. Stoddard, LL.D., Wooster University, Ohio.
 The Rev. C. H. Edgar, D.D., Easton, Pa.
 The Hon. Charles D. Drake, Chief Justice U. S. Court of Claims, Washington.
 James W. Taylor, Esq., Newburg, N.Y.
 President David H. Cochran, Ph.D., LL.D., Collegiate and Polytechnic Institute, Brooklyn, N.Y.
 The Hon. E. K. Howell, Supreme Court of Louisiana.
 The Hon. J. W. McClurg, ex-Governor of Missouri.
 The Hon. O. Phillips, Mayor of Allegheny City.
 Brig-Gen. James A. Ekin, Louisville, Ky.
 The Hon. N. W. Battle, Judge of the Criminal Court, Waco, Texas.
 The Rev. Charles Elliott, D.D., Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill.
 The Rev. Richard Newton, D.D., Philadelphia.
 The Rev. Wm. H. Nicholson, D.D., Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, Philadelphia.
 The Right Rev. Thomas H. Van, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of Kansas.
 The Right Rev. Wm. Ingraham Kip, D.D., Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Diocese of California.
 The Right Rev. Thomas A. Jagger, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese of Southern Ohio.
 The Rev. S. J. Wilson, D.D., Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa.
 The Rev. Gilbert Raven, D.D., Bishop of the M. E. Church, Atlanta, Ga.
 Prof. W. Henry Green, D.D., LL.D., Princeton Theological Seminary, N.J.
 The Rev. E. D. Morris, D.D., Lane Theological Seminary, Cincinnati.
 The Rev. A. A. Hodge, D.D., Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa.
 The Rev. David R. Kerr, D.D., United Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa.
 Prof. J. R. W. Stoen, D.D., Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa.
 The Rev. William Spear, D.D., late Corresponding Secretary of Presbyterian Board of Education, Philadelphia.
 The Rev. J. Weaver, D.D., Bishop of the United Brethren in Christ, Dayton, Ohio.
 The Rev. J. Dickson, D.D., Bishop of the United Brethren in Christ, Decatur, Ill.
 The Rev. J. J. Esler, D.D., Bishop of the Evangelical Association, Chicago.
 The Rev. E. O. Haven, D.D., LL.D., Chancellor of Syracuse University, N.Y.
 The Rev. C. H. Payne, D.D., President of Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio.
 The Rev. Josiah Sweet, D.D., President of Norwich University, Fairfax, Va.
 The Rev. George C. Heckman, D.D., President of Hanover College, Hanover, Ind.
 President George P. Hays, D.D., Washington and Jefferson College, Washington, Pa.
 President Daniel Rice, D.D., Logansport Female College, Logansport, Ind.
 President F. M. Bartlett, D.D., Marysville College, Tenn.
 The Rev. Dorus Clarke, D.D., Boston, Mass.
 President David A. Wallace, D.D., LL.D., Monmouth College, Monmouth, Ill.
 President Milton Valentine, D.D., Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, Pa.
 The Rev. H. A. Thompson, D.D., President of Otterbein University, Westerville, Ohio.
 The Rev. W. Colegrove, D.D., President of West Virginia College, Flemington, W. Va.
 The Rev. E. T. Jeffers, D.D., President of Westminster College, Pa.
 The Rev. J. C. Holbrook, D.D., Secretary of Congregational Missionary Society, Syracuse, N.Y.
 The Rev. B. M. Marston, D.D., Muskogee, Indian Territory.
 The Rev. R. A. Browne, D.D., New Castle, Penn.
 The Rev. E. G. Brooks, D.D., Philadelphia.
 The Rev. J. E. Rankin, D.D., Washington, D. C.
 The Rev. Wm. R. Clark, D.D., Boston, Mass.
 The Rev. James P. Lane, Bristol, R. I.
 The Rev. T. W. Hawks, D.D., Marietta, Ohio.
 The Rev. S. F. Scovel, Pittsburgh, Pa.
 The Rev. James N. Crowell, D.D., Philadelphia.
 The Rev. Edward Sullivan, S.T.D., Chicago.
 The Rev. L. G. Olmstead, LL.D., Fort Edward, N.Y.
 The Rev. E. W. Hagar, D.D., Chaplain U. S. Navy, Norfolk, Va.
 The Rev. Joseph Cummings, D.D., LL.D., Middletown, Conn.
 The Rev. F. Merrick, ex-President of the Ohio Wesleyan University, Delaware, Ohio.
 The Rev. John B. Dales, D.D., Philadelphia.
 The Rev. Joseph T. Cooper, D.D., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 The Rev. J. Banvard, D.D., Paterson, N.J.
 The Rev. D. Steele, D.D., Philadelphia.
 The Rev. John S. Stone, D.D., Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass.
 The Rev. H. Dyer, D.D., Corresponding Secretary of Evangelical Knowledge Society, N.Y.
 President W. F. King, D.D., Cornell College, Iowa.
 President Thomas Holmes, D.D., Union Christian College, Merom, Ind.
 Gen. Charles H. Howard, Editor of Advance, Chicago.
 The Rev. Stephen H. Tyng, D.D., New York.
 The Hon. W. H. Cumbach, ex-Lieutenant-Governor, Ind.
 George W. Hill, Esq., Philadelphia.
 Charles G. Nazro, Esq., Boston, Mass.
 William Getty, Esq., Philadelphia.
 Prof. E. Kirby Smith, University of Nashville, Tenn.
 The Rev. George B. Chaevers, D.D., Englewood, N.J.
 The Rev. Milton H. Wright, Editor of the Religious Telescope, Dayton, Ohio.
 The Rev. Thomas S. Johnson, D.D., Lebanon, Pa.
 The Rev. A. Rittenhouse, Presiding Elder M. E. Conference, Philadelphia.
 The Rev. E. D. Morris, D.D., Oxford, Ga.
 The Rev. James Brown, D.D., Columbus City, Iowa.
 The Rev. J. G. Craighead, D.D., Corresponding Secretary Presbyterian Historical Society, Philadelphia.
 The Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D.D., Brooklyn, N.Y.
 The Rev. R. Patterson, D.D., San Francisco.

The Rev. J. A. Lansing, D.D., Brooklyn.
 The Rev. M. M. Marshall, D.D., Raleigh, N.C.
 The Rev. G. A. Latimer, D.D., Wilmington, Del.
 The Rev. Robert Irvine, D.D., Augusta, Ga.
 The Rev. J. A. Todd, D.D., Tarrytown, N.Y.
 The Rev. Malcolm N. McLaren, D.D., Auburn, N.Y.
 The Rev. E. A. McAyen, D.D., Oskaloosa, Iowa.
 The Rev. C. A. Foster, LL.D., Kalamazoo, Mich.
 The Rev. T. H. Newton, D.D., LL.D., Lebanon, Mo.
 The Rev. George Diehl, D.D., Frederick, Md.
 The Rev. William Clark, D.D., Amherst, N.H.
 The Rev. Edward F. Berkeley, D.D., St. Louis, Mo.
 The Rev. Wm. F. Sabine, New York City.
 The Rev. E. K. Craven, D.D., Newark, N.J.
 The Rev. Lyman Whiting, D.D., Philadelphia.
 The Rev. M. Hoyt, D.D., Yankton, Dakota.
 The Rev. John D. Easter, D.D., Omaha, Nebraska.
 The Rev. C. H. Thompson, D.D., New Orleans.
 The Rev. S. Corbett, D.D., Minneapolis, Minn.
 The Rev. F. Jacobs, D.D., Cokesbury, S.C.
 The Rev. W. Wishart, D.D., Ontario, Ohio.
 The Rev. Noyes W. Miner, D.D., Oskosh, Wis.
 The Rev. George M. Everhart, D.D., Kenosha, Wis.
 President J. F. Cook, LL.D., La Grange College, Mo.
 President Solomon Pool, D.D., University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N.C.
 President Walter Hulman, LL.D., Central Female Institute, Miss.
 The Rev. Robert Bethell Claxton, D.D., Philadelphia.
 The Rev. B. P. Aydelott, D.D., Cincinnati, Ohio.
 S. H. Ford, LL.D., Editor Christian Repository, St. Louis.
 President Reuben Andrus, D.D., Indiana University, Ind.
 President A. B. Miller, D.D., Waynesburg College, Pa.
 President O. L. Smith, D.D., Emory College, Oxford, Ga.
GENERAL SECRETARY:
 The Rev. D. McAllister, No. 7 North Tenth Street, Philadelphia.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY:
 The Rev. T. P. Stevenson, No. 7 North Tenth Street, Philadelphia.
RECORDING SECRETARY:
 The Rev. W. W. Barr, D.D., Philadelphia.
TREASURER:
 Samuel Agnew, Esq., 1128 Arch Street, Philadelphia.
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
 The Secretaries and Treasurer, ex officio.
 William Neely, H. O'Neill, Henry Harrison, James Spence, George Silver, S. E. McGuire, New York; R. B. Sterling, John Alexander, Rev. A. Rittenhouse, Rev. S. O. Wylie, D.D., M. McConnell, J. S. Martin, Robert H. Elliott, Rev. D. Steele, D.D., Robert Taylor, William McKnight, Thomas Walker, Alexander Kerr, Philadelphia; D. Chestnut, Pittsburgh; Henry Martin, Cincinnati.

THE NEW YORK "SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE."

Preamble.
 WHEREAS, The need of a permanent and effective organization to support the cause of enlightenment has become apparent; and

WHEREAS, We whose names are hereunto subscribed do now propose to consolidate such an organization for the purpose aforesaid, therefore be it

Resolved, To enunciate the following as the sentiments by which we are guided in the formation of such union:—

That the integrity and consistency of life in all its parts is the noblest good, and its achievement the supreme duty of human existence.

That insincerity, while it is justly condemned in every circumstance, deserves the severest reprobation when permitted to enter the fundamental questions that give direction to the character and determine the moral welfare of man.

That the forms of dogmatic belief, as currently taught, have ceased to satisfy our highest needs; that they obstruct the free development of mind and heart; and that to emancipate ourselves from so grievous a thralldom is at once a stern obligation and a privilege.

That we recognize in the great truths of man's moral nature the essential safeguard of life, the source of nobleness in effort, of power in action, and of fortitude in affliction.

That to further the recognition of these truths in word and deed is a sacred duty which we owe both to ourselves and to our fellow-men, and whereby we shall best secure the common happiness, prosperity, and peace.

That to insure the moral elevation of the "masses" in particular, with all the great benefits which that includes, we hold to be a lofty aim, and one well-calculated to afford true satisfaction to all who behold in the work of progress the fitting accomplishment of human destiny.

That it is desirable to transmit to the incoming generation the best convictions of the present unimpaired; to acquaint them in such manner as befits their years and understanding with the principles, aspirations, and consolations of the modern view of life, and thus to train them in the enjoyment of the inestimable benefits of liberty from their youth upward.

That for all these purposes the necessity of united action, in which alone lies the pledge of extended usefulness, permanency, and strength, is self-evident.

We, therefore, in view of these convictions, and in response to the solemn obligations which they impose, do hereby consolidate ourselves an association to be known by the style and title of the SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE. And we agree that the main channels of its influence shall be:—

1. A system of weekly lectures on Sunday, in which the principles of ethics shall be developed, propagated, and advanced among adults.

2. A school wherein a course of moral instruction shall be supplied for the young, the same to be erected and enlarged as time and circumstances may favor.

And with implicit confidence in the simplicity and the greatness of our cause, we do hereby invoke the cooperation of all who think and feel with us, sincerely trusting that the new union which we now form may become an instrument of lasting good in the community in which we live, and may at all times faithfully serve the best and truest interests of mankind.

By-Laws of the Society for Ethical Culture.

ARTICLE I.

Members.

1. Any person of either sex may become a member of this Society upon the approval of three-fourths of the Trustees present at a regular meeting of the Board of Trustees, at which the name of the candidate shall be presented and balloted for.

2. No subscription or assent to any formula of faith, belief, or creed shall be required as a qualification for membership.

3. Any person whose rent for sittings or contributions shall be nine months in arrear, and who shall neglect to discharge the same within thirty days after notice shall have been mailed him by the Treasurer, shall not be entitled to vote at any meeting of the Society, until such indebtedness shall have been liquidated.

4. Sittings may be rented to others than members by the Trustees; but persons hiring sittings shall not thereby become members of the Society.

ARTICLE II.

Trustees.

1. The executive power of the Society shall be vested (subject to the control and direction of the Society itself) in a Board of Trustees, consisting of fifteen members, whose duties and powers shall be those generally performed by similar officers in corporate societies; and especially it shall be their duty to fix the sittings to which members and hirers may be entitled; to pass upon the applications of candidates for admission to the School of the Society; and to attend to, manage, and conduct the financial, temporal, and social affairs of the Society.

2. A Lecturer or Lecturers shall be elected by the Society. Such Lecturer shall be ex-officio a member of the Board of Trustees. On such Lecturer shall devolve more especially the intellectual concerns of the Society, and to him shall belong powers such as are generally exercised by ministers of religious societies. He shall be the rector of the School of the Society and its classes and meetings for ethical instruction.

3. The Board of Trustees shall have power to fill vacancies in its own body.

4. The Board of Trustees existing at the time of the adoption of these By-Laws shall hold office until the Regular Annual Meeting of the Society in 1878, at which time a new election shall take place. The Trustees then elected shall hold office for one year thereafter, except five Trustees, who shall hold office for two years thereafter, and five Trustees who shall hold office for three years thereafter.

5. The election of Trustees and of the Lecturer shall be by ballot; and a majority of the whole number of votes cast shall be necessary for a choice.

6. In case it shall at any time happen that an election of Trustees or Lecturer shall not be made on the day designated by these By-Laws, the same shall take place at a special meeting to be called for the purpose.

ARTICLE III.

Meetings.

1. There shall be a general meeting of the Society on the second Monday of May of each year for the purpose of hearing the report of the Trustees, taking measures for the support of the Society, electing Trustees whose terms of office then expire, and generally to transact any business that shall be regularly brought before such meeting.

The day of such meeting shall be the commencement of each fiscal year.

2. Special meetings of the Society shall be called by the Chairman, at the request of a majority of the Board of Trustees, or at the written request of ten members of the Society. At least two days' notice of all meetings shall be mailed to members by the Secretary. Notice of special meetings shall specify the object thereof.

3. The Board of Trustees shall meet on the first Monday of each month, except from July to October, when meetings shall be held at the discretion of the Board. At the meeting in June of each year the Board shall, by a majority vote and by ballot, elect from among the Trustees a Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Secretary, and Treasurer, who shall hold office as such officers of the Board, and of the Society, with the usual power of such officers, until after the next ensuing annual meeting of the Society.

Special meetings of the Board may be called by the Chairman at any time, and shall be called by him at the written request of three members of the Board.

4. The office of any member of the Board of Trustees may be declared vacant by a two-thirds vote of the Board, if its incumbent shall absent himself from three successive meetings thereof. But such vacancy shall only be declared after notice shall have been given to the delinquent.

5. Fifteen members shall constitute a quorum at the meetings of the Society, and five at meetings of the Board of Trustees.

ARTICLE IV.

1. As long as ten members shall desire to perpetuate the organization of the Society, the same shall not be dissolved.

ARTICLE V.

These By-laws shall not be altered, modified, or amended except by a two-thirds vote of the members present at the time of the consideration of such amendment; and no amendment shall be considered at any meeting unless notice thereof shall have been first mailed to the members by the Secretary.

Certificate of Incorporation of the Society for Ethical Culture.

I.

This instrument certifies that we, the undersigned, under and pursuant to the Act of the Legislature of the State of New York, passed on the 12th day of April, 1848, entitled "An act for the Incorporation of Benevolent, Charitable, Scientific, and Missionary Societies," and the several acts amendatory thereof, and particularly the acts passed by said Legislature on the 10th day of April and the 11th day of May, 1872, amending and extending the act so as to include societies having for their purpose mutual improvement in religious knowledge, or the furtherance of religious opinion, or for any two or more combined, do associate ourselves together to form a Society for the purposes hereinafter set forth.

II.

The name of this Society will be THE SOCIETY FOR ETHICAL CULTURE.

III.

The object of said Society will be mutual improvement in religious knowledge and the furtherance of religious opinion, which shall be in part accomplished by a system of weekly lectures, in which the principles of ethics shall be developed, propagated, and advanced among adults, and in part by the establishment of a school or schools wherein a course of moral instruction shall be supplied for the young.

IV.

The number of the Trustees of said Society will be fifteen.

V.

The names of the Trustees who are to manage the affairs of said Society for the first year are as follows:

JOSEPH SELIGMAN,	MAX LANDMAN,
ALBERT A. LEVI,	EMIL SALINGER,
HENRY FRIEDMAN,	MEYER JONASSON,
EDWARD LAUTERBACH,	JACOB STETTHEIMER, JR.
WILLIAM BYFIELD,	SAMUEL V. SPEYER,
JOSEPH SEIDENBERG,	SAMUEL A. SOLOMONS,
MAX ABENBERG,	JULIUS ROSENBAUM,
	MARCUS GOLDMAN.

VI.

The principal office or place of meeting of the Society will be situated in the City of New York.

In witness whereof, we do hereunto subscribe our names this 21st day of February, 1877.

[The certificate is subscribed and acknowledged by the Trustees, and a consent to its filing is indorsed thereon by a Judge of the Supreme Court.]

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.

LETTER FROM CATHERINE E. BRECHER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRIBUNE:

Sir.—The subject of eternal punishment now discussed in both secular and religious papers is all dependent on a theological theory as to what constitutes a perfect mind, and how it originates. There are two parties on this question which are named Calvinistic and anti-Calvinistic. Both hold that a mind is perfect when it knows what is best for all concerned (and so right), and also has a controlling purpose to act right in all cases, and thus never failing in judgment or choice. The Calvinist holds that God created such minds in the case of the holy angels and Adam. The anti-Calvinist holds that it is impossible for God to create such a mind, inasmuch as perfect knowledge and choice cannot be created in finite beings, but must come by experience and training. Right choice is choosing what is best for all concerned for both time and eternity; and as none but God can know this, choosing to obey God's laws and doing right mean the same. "Sin is transgression of law," either natural or revealed; and the infant cannot help from sinning any more than "the sparks" can help from "flying upward." And so all are born with a sinful nature, but as perfect as God can make it. The Calvinist holds that though God could have created every infant mind holy as he did the holy angels and Adam, for some mysterious reason, Adam, by one act of disobedience, became totally depraved in nature, and transmitted this to all infants. And so total is this depravity that no child can feel or act right till God partially, but not wholly, re-creates the depraved nature. The anti-Calvinist holds that God creates every infant in his own image as to constitutional powers; some of higher and some of lower grades, and with diverse combinations of mental faculties, all good in nature, and wrong only by excess or misuse. The Calvinist holds that all not re-created by God will go to eternal misery; and that there is no certain method of gaining this re-creation, as all depends on election and sovereignty. The anti-Calvinist holds that a child is saved by education and divine aid, given to all who seek it; that this life is but the beginning or infant school; that God and good beings continue it till the Day of Judgment, when the righteous and the wicked will be placed in separate worlds, and experience only the natural results of obedience and disobedience to God's laws. On this view, the number saved depends on the labors and sacrifices of Christ's true followers, who are the educators of the race, from Noah, Abraham, and the Apostles to this day. The Calvinist holds that death ends probation; and then all the unregenerate go to hell, and forever live in literal fire and brimstone, or in equal torments of mind.

The following views are now current in our secular papers as the Calvinistic teachings on eternal punishment: Augustine, who originated the Calvinistic system, taught that the bodies of the damned, among whom are unbaptized infants, will burn in everlasting fire. In Baxter's Saint's Rest, given to me when I was vainly trying to love God, it is written that the torments of sinners will be universal. The liquid fire will prey on every part, the eyes will be tortured with sights of horror, the ears with howls and curses of companions in torment, their smell with fumes of brimstone, and no drop of water shall cool their tongue, no respite relieve their agonies. President Edwards, in a work given me to lead me to love God, says the saints in glory will see the sufferings of the damned with no grief, but rather with rejoicing. They will not be sorry for them; but will be excited to joyful praise. Dr. Emmons, whose preaching I heard when sorrowing for a friend supposed to have died unregenerate, taught that the happiness of "the elect" in heaven will in part consist in watching the torments of the damned, and among them will be their own children and dearest friends; and yet they will sing Hallelujah, praise the Lord! My father's friend, Dr. Gardiner Spring, of New York, said that, when an angry God undertakes to punish, he will convince the universe that he does not gird himself in vain. It will be glorious when he who hung on Calvary shall cast those who have trodden his blood under their feet into a furnace of fire, where shall be weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth. My father's friend, Dr. Nehemiah Adams, of Boston, says it is to be feared that the forty-two children who mocked Elisha are now in hell. President Edwards, in his sermon, "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God," says, "You cannot stand an instant before an infuriated tiger; what, then, will you do when God rushes against you in all his wrath?" Spurgeon, of England, says, "At the day of judgment thou wilt have twin hells, thy soul sweating drops of blood, and thy body suffused with agony." Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, paints the miseries of hell in similar language. The Methodist Christian Advocate represents that this denomination, on yearly average, gives only thirty-four cents for each person to save seven hundred million brothers and sisters from wading chain-deep through the torments of eternal death. The biographer of President Edwards says that when preaching on the dangers of hell, at times, the whole congregation arose, smiting their breasts, weeping, and groaning. My father rejected the idea of literal fire and brimstone torments; but I once heard him in Cincinnati describe the miseries of the wicked shut up together with all their horrid passions, and I should have been affected, as were the hearers of President Edwards, had I not escaped by leaving the church, as did my sister, Mrs. Stowe.

I was educated in the Calvinistic system, and lived many years in constant fear lest myself and most of those dearest to me were destined to such a horrible doom as is herein described. In a period of great distress from such fears, I took charge of some of the finest minds I ever met, and with them studied and discussed Stewart's Mental Philosophy, by which I learned to detect and apply the principles of reason or common-sense. The result was a text-book, in which I maintained that by a process of reasoning without revelation we could prove the doctrines here set forth as anti-Calvinistic. As I had never met such an argument, nor could hear of one, I privately sent this work to the leading theologians of the chief Calvinistic sects, asking to have the book returned with criticism and counsel. The criticisms thus gained were some of them very complimentary, and some of them insulting, all on supposition that the author was a gentleman. But in not a single case was an attempt made to show any fallacy in the argument. The same argument was then published in another form. In the introduction I gave some of my personal experiences, by the advice of a critical and fastidious gentleman who said it would do more good than all my arguments. This work was widely reviewed, sometimes with complimentary and sometimes with insulting remarks. But in not a single case was there an attempt to controvert the arguments. I then published an appeal, dedicating it to the editors of the secular press, in which I maintained that the Calvinistic system is as contrary to the Bible as it is to reason and common-sense. This also was both courteously and severely criticized, but no attempt was made to meet the arguments. In some cases, the reason assigned was that they had long ago been shown to be nothing or worse; but I was never told when or where. But my father and my brother Henry conceded that the arguments were unanswerable. Dr. Taylor, Professor of Theology in Yale College, wrote me: "I have never supposed that man has a depraved nature, in any sense, or a corrupt nature to be changed; but that in nature he is like God." I privately appealed for help to several personal friends who were editors. From those editing the Independent, I learned that they would not open their columns to "a psychological and theological discussion" like this. Even the honorable, fearless, and benevolent Horace Greeley wrote as his excuse that he had promised his Orthodox friends that he "would not needlessly introduce here into his paper, and the greatest of all heresies is common-sense." Leading publishers as well as editors stated that theologians, in whatever else they differed, were united in the determination that this discussion should not be permitted. And so in every denomination every influence was used to prevent the sale of these works; also my succeeding work.

For many years I have been with family connections or intimate friends who are counted as sceptics and scientists, and have had these questions proposed which I know not how to answer: "Your own brothers now are connected with Calvinistic churches, or those so regarded by the common people. They and leading theologians have read your works, and are able to correct your definitions or show the fallacy of your arguments if they find any; is it manly or honorable to take the course of apparently cowardly or contemptuous silence? Your claim is, that it is your special mission to illustrate the grand truth that common-sense, without unusual talents or learning, united with the desire to learn and obey the truth, is all that is needed to understand the Bible correctly, so as to gain eternal blessedness. Yet you stand alone in this wise and solemn mission. The Calvinistic system is more absurd and cruel than any of the Pagan or Mohammedan tenets; and how can theologians, after such an exposure, redeem themselves from the pity and contempt of all honorable minds who understand the case?" I ask my friends to furnish me a reply.

BROOKLYN, Feb. 23, 1878.

C. E. B.

FOR YEARS no one supposed that a piece of soft coal, dug from its mine or bed in the earth, possessed any other quality than being combustible, or was valuable for any other purpose than as fuel. It was next found that it would afford a gas which is also combustible. Chemical analysis proved it to be made of hydrogen. In process of time mechanical and chemical ingenuity devised a mode of manufacturing this gas and applying it to the lighting of buildings and cities on a large scale. In doing this, other products of distillation were developed, until, step by step, the following ingredients or materials are extracted from it: 1. An excellent oil to supply light-houses, equal to the best sperm oil, at lower cost. 2. Benzole,—a light sort of ethereal fluid, which evaporates easily, and combined with a vapor or moist air, is used for the purpose of portable gas lamps, so called. 3. Naphtha,—a heavy fluid, useful to dissolve gutta percha, India rubber, etc. 4. An oil excellent for lubricating purposes. 5. Asphaltum,—which is a black, solid substance, used in making varnishes, covering roofs, and covering over vaults. 6. Paraffine,—a white, crystalline substance, resembling white wax, which can be made into beautiful wax candles; it melts at a temperature of one hundred and ten degrees, and affords an excellent light. All these substances are now made from soft coal.

THE PRESIDENTIAL custom of Sunday evening singing receives commendation from religious papers. The Christian Advocate, of Pittsburgh, says: "One of the institutions of the White House is the Sabbath evening devoted to song; not gay, frivolous song, but cheerful Christian song. We met there, upon the occasion of our visit, the President and Mrs. Hayes, their nieces, Misses Platt and Foote, their son Webb, the Vice-President, General Sherman and daughter, Secretary Schurz, Attorney-General Devens, Senator Ferry, General Hastings, Congressman McKinley, Assistant-Surgeon General Woodward and wife, and Mr. Dickinson, private secretary of the Vice-President. The singing of hymns filled up the hour, closing with—

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

A season of genial conversation, and the company breaks up. No cant, no assumed solemnity marred the hour. It was a time of Christian cheerfulness. Nothing was more pleasing than to see General Sherman, the hero of so many battles, whose name history will speak in connection with Grant's and Moltke's, join with evident relish in the exercises of the evening."—Tribune.

MR. JOHN BRIGHT, the orator, has Hebrew blood in his veins; one of his ancestors, a Quaker, married a handsome Hebrew lady. Mr. Bright's father, Jacob Bright, is remembered in Rochdale as a man of very remarkable character. He stood high in the opinion of his work-people as a kind and considerate employer. On winter nights, with a large lantern in his hand, and wrapped up warmly in a thick overcoat, he would stand at his mill-gates, giving directions to the respective men to superintend the children on their way home. If he heard the slightest cough in the mill, out came Spanish juice from his pocket, and the sufferer received a lump sufficiently large to subdue the most stubborn cough. One of his regulations was, that when any of his work-people became infirm through age or disease, and had not, from unforeseen circumstances, been able to provide for such contingencies, he pensioned them off; but the majority of his work-people received such a high rate of wages, that in old age large numbers of them were enabled to live with the utmost comfort.—Ex.

GEORGE WASHINGTON could lose his temper on occasions, as well as more common folk. It is related that when he and the other commissioners were locating the city of Washington, they found a certain David Burns, the owner of some property, rather disgruntled. After enduring for awhile his opposition, the Father of his Country hastily remarked, "Mr. Burns, if the federal city had not been located here, you would have been a poor tobacco planter, instead of a rich land-owner." "Vera weel, Mr. Washington," replied Burns, "an' if ye had na married the Widow Gattis, ye wad ha' been a poor land-surveyor, instead of a rich slave-owner." Subsequently the two became great friends.—Ex.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 26.

J. Aulbach, 40 cents; Mrs. Mary C. Decker, 80 cents; A. B. Bradford, $1; Frank W. Currier, $1; Noah Green, $3.25; Mrs. Robert Haydock, $3.20; Dr. G. W. Topping, $5; Miss E. J. Leonard, $11; J. H. W. Toohay, $1.50; Dr. A. H. Brockway, $3.20; Henry Holt & Co., $6.25; William Hill, $3.20; O. B. Hoffman, $1; Sam. L. T. Robinson, $1.50; J. B. Holroyde, $9.15; A. Walther, $3.20; Daniel Fitzhugh, $13.20; Jacob Koffner, $10; Morris Einstein, $3.20; J. J. Perry, $8.40; Cash, $7.25; Rita and Lizzie Marshall, $3.20; Dr. E. E. Sisson, $3.20; William Phillips, $5; W. A. Thurston, $3.20; B. B. Whyte, $1.00; D. Wright, $10.80; Mrs. A. Dorman, 85 cents; J. H. Holley, $3.20; D. H. Hunnewell, $8.40; F. P. Partridge, 30 cents; E. R. Brown, $3.20; Wm. H. Barr, $3.20; Albert W. Foster, $3.20; H. Coleman, $3.20; Mrs. L. F. Johnson, $2; C. H. Pierce, $3.20; Mrs. M. O. Giles, $3.50; G. Grove, $4.66.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 4, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLAND OFFICE, No. 25 MONROE STREET; J. T. FINE, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
GEORGE BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. FOSTER,
WILLIAM H. SPRINGER, MRS. E. D. GREENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LIBERAL LEAGUE.

ONE WAY TO DO IT.

Reader, do you desire to organize a Liberal League in your town? If so, this is a good way to do it: Draw up a paper in the following form, and present it to all the liberals in your vicinity:—

"We, the undersigned, are in favor of organizing a Local Liberal League in the town of —, and agree to meet for that purpose at the house of — on Saturday evening next. We each agree to pay the sum set opposite our respective names towards the ten dollars required to procure a charter from the National Liberal League."

Names.	Residence.	Amount.
When you have procured ten names and ten dollars, you are ready for organization. Of course, the more names the better. I shall be pleased to furnish form of Constitution when required. Reader, will you attend to this work immediately, before it passes from your mind?	H. L. GREEN,
Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., March 15, 1878.

MANLEY HOWE, Esq., of this city, has published an extremely valuable pamphlet of ninety pages on Equitable Taxation; or, The Debtor's Lien. It is one of the widening ripples from the stone dropped into the water by the First Liberal League of Boston in 1873. Its interest for us is chiefly in the fact that it favors the taxation of church property; but whoever is interested in the general question of taxation, particularly in Massachusetts, will find much to instruct him in this handsome pamphlet, which can be had of the author at 376 Broadway, South Boston. The price is twenty-five cents, postpaid.

THE Pamphlet Mission for Freedom, Fellowship, and Character in Religion is a new semi-monthly, published by a committee consisting of Robert Collyer, J. L. Jones, W. C. Gannett, C. W. Wendte, and J. C. Learned, with J. T. Sunderland and G. W. Cooke as "Editors of Notes and News." The Business Agent is Miss Frances L. Roberts, 65 Washington Street, Chicago; and the subscription price $1.50 a year. Its object is "to publish a fortnightly series of Liberal Religious pamphlets on the Unity, the Evolution, the Doctrines, the Bibles, and the Leaders of Religion; on the relations of religion to science, to devotion and conduct, and on kindred topics, written by men whose word combines liberal thought with religious feeling." We have examined the first number (March 1) with deep interest, with much sympathy, and with some disappointment. If we have not mistaken its scope, the Pamphlet Mission represents a type of religious thought broad enough to include Liberal Christianity and Liberal Judaism, but not broad enough to include Liberal Atheists such as George Jacob Holyoake or B. F. Underwood,—that is, a type of religious thought which shrinks from recognising atheism, no matter how reverent, aspiring, or conscientious, as properly to be covered by that great word religion. This is a type of thought less broad and advanced than that embodied in the Constitution of the Free Religious Association. But the ignoring of the Christian name shows a great advance even on Radical Unitarianism; and the Pamphlet Mission will certainly be hailed with pleasure by a large class of readers.

NO "OMISSION."

Our readers have already become aware (see THE INDEX of February 14) that La Religion Laïque is the organ of a movement in France in many respects analogous to that of Free Religion in this country, and that M. Charles Fauvety, its editor, published a translation of the larger portion of the "Fifty Affirmations" in his January number. The next number, that of February, contained a translation of the whole of the "Modern Principles" (which with the "Fifty Affirmations" composes the first Index Tract, entitled Truths for the Times). There would be no occasion to mention the fact, except to call attention to a criticism of M. Fauvety on these papers of ours which possesses a general interest in relation to the question: What is the essence of Religion? Is there no Religion without belief in God and Immortality?

M. Fauvety prefaces the translation above alluded to with remarks which may be rendered as follows:—

"In order to complete our task of making known to our readers the 'Free Religion' of Mr. Abbot, we give to-day that part of his manifesto which he entitles 'Modern Principles.' There will be found in it, even more than in the first part, the confirmation of what we said in our preceding issue,—that there is at this moment a religion which is in process of manifesting itself to men, and that this religion is, as it were, the multiplied and collective revelation of essentially the same truth. This fact, however, does not in the least exclude differences in the mode of manifestation. If everything in the world is at the same time one and peculiar, it must be conceded that religious forms are so likewise. Nevertheless we cannot refrain from pointing out a very important omission in the Free Religion of Mr. Abbot: neither in his 'Fifty Affirmations' nor in his 'Modern Principles' have we found the words God and Immortality. Does he then exclude these two terms from his conception, and does he regard these two grand aspirations of the human spirit as superfluous and useless to moral and religious life? If this is the case, we desire to emphasize our dissent from Free Religion on this point. At the very least, this is an omission in it."

What was the reason for this "omission"? Briefly, (I.) because Religion, studied as a great fact of universal human history and experience which should be treated in all its breadth and comprehensiveness, without being mutilated by personal or provincial preconceptions, proves to be inclusive of much that contradicts the notion of it as derived merely from the teachings of Christianity; (II.) because, while Judaism, Christianity, Mohammedanism, Brahmanism, and certain other historical religions, include the ideas of God and Immortality as essential elements, Buddhism at least, if not also Confucianism and Positivism, does not include them, but had its origin in a conscious protest against the ideas of God and Immortality; and (III.) because Religion, when thus considered in a cosmopolitan rather than in a provincial light, appears to be a phenomenon covering both theism and atheism, both the belief and the disbelief of personal immortality.

It was this scientific necessity of interpreting Religion by the usage of the world rather than by the usage of any particular section of the world (e. g., Christendom),—this scientific necessity of including in the definition of the genus (Religion) all that is common to the several constituent species (Mohammedanism, Christianity, Mohammedanism, Zoroastrianism, Buddhism, etc.),—that caused the "omission" of which M. Fauvety, like a multitude of other critics during the past ten years, has complained. It was no part of the cause of this "omission" that we personally discard the ideas of God and Immortality, for the contrary is the fact. The whole drift and tenor of our thought is to confirm the belief in God and to justify the hope of continued individual existence after death. These are characteristics of what we consider to be the natural manifestations of religion in its highest development; and for this very reason we have not the slightest hesitation or fear in committing the future of these great treasures of the soul of man to the care of man's free, unfettered, scientific intelligence. Others may be unable to restrain the desire of making a reservation with regard to them, though in all other respects welcoming the coming empire of science over human thought, and of holding them as dogmas on the treacherous authority of "Intuition"; but not so we. It is impossible for us to hold any belief whatever as a dogma, too sacred for the scrutiny of human thought; all we covet is the truth, to which thought alone is the guide; and we are willing to sacrifice any belief, however tenderly cherished, whenever thought shall have finally pronounced it untrue. Such a mental attitude as this, although implying a stronger "faith" (if the word is permissible in such a sense) than the timidity which shrinks from entrusting these reserved dogmas to the severe jurisdiction of the scientific method, is evidently too novel, too excessive a strain upon the inherited tendency to dogmatize which inheres in all "Christian" rationalism, to be adopted by any "Christian" or "Intuitionist," however liberal. The self-restraint which is imposed by fealty to the scientific method is too great a tax upon him; he cannot forbear to elevate these reserved dogmas of God and Immortality above the reach of reasoning, and to proclaim them as infallible truths, not subject to the revision or final judgment of the scientific intellect. But the "omission" of which M. Fauvety complains was neither an "omission" nor a mistake; it was dictated by long and careful study of the problem how to attain such a broad, inclusive, universal conception of Religion as should harmonize with all its historical manifestations. Those who have criticised our conception have not yet so much as fairly understood the problem to be solved—much less showed our solution of it to be wrong. Our position has not yet been perceived—much less overthrown. But all who desire to ascertain its exact grounds can easily do so by reading the Index Tracts, especially The God of Science and A Study of Religion: the Name and the Thing.

Now the Free Religious Association, as represented by its Constitution, has planted itself by implication upon the very conception of Religion which we have above set forth. Declaring it to be one of its objects to "promote the practical interests of pure religion," and at the same time avowing its allegiance to "absolute freedom of thought and expression," it makes no reservation in favor of the ideas of God and Immortality; it submits these, like all other beliefs, to the scientific intelligence of man; it at once affirms its devotion to Religion and to Freedom in the most unqualified manner. Herein lies its just claim to be far, immeasurably far, in advance of all other religious bodies. But it makes precisely the same "omission" complained of by M. Fauvety and so many others, without being in the slightest degree chargeable with any denial of the ideas omitted. It recognizes these ideas as subject, like all others, to the final adjudication of the scientific method, to which it commits the determination of truth in all directions without reserve. It is this advanced position which will lend an imperishable interest to this Association in the history of religious thought. Whether all its members appreciate, or not, the full significance of this position, it has been taken and held now for many years, and there is no likelihood that it will ever be abandoned; and what is regarded by our highly esteemed French critic as a grave defect and "omission" is precisely that which marks the ripeness, invincibility, and ultimate world-wide triumph of Free Religion.

A NEW VOICE.

"And after the fire a still small voice." And it was this small voice, and not the great and strong wind, which rent the mountains and brake in places the rocks, that roused the old Hebrew prophet to resist more manfully the progress of decay and corruption in his country. One was reminded of this in listening to the lecture of JULIA E. WRIGHT before the LIBERAL LEAGUE Sunday before last at Palma Hall. It was a discourse combining the profoundest philosophy with artistic genius in expression. There was no rant, no noise, not the slightest attempt at oratory; but a soft, "small voice," commanding a silence in which a whisper could be heard,—and the hall was full of hearers. If they had paid the lecturer the highest price paid for a lecture in the last twenty years, they would not have overpaid her, nor been the poorer for it themselves. The value of words so fitly spoken cannot be measured in money. The Palma Hall Liberal League is certainly in luck for good female lecturers; and if the numerous sister Leagues throughout the land will avail themselves, as they ought and may, of the services of Mrs. Julia E. Wright and Mrs. Clara Neymann, the day of their power is not far distant.

Mrs. Wright (who may be addressed "Box 109, Boston") entitled her lecture "Mutual Providence the Foundation of the Family; the Family the Foundation of the State." This hardly foretold its scope. She might have modified the old judicial maxim, and written it, Cum fiat justitia, stat cælum; To make heaven here, let justice be done. If this lecture could only be heard in all the churches in the United States, there would be left little for the Liberal League to do.

E. W.

Communications.

DIRECT TAXATION AND WEALTH LIMITATION.

In Mr. Wright's excellent article in THE INDEX of Nov. 15, 1877, on the subject of "Republican Taxation," there is more good sense touching the question of the rights of labor than anything I have elsewhere seen. Direct taxation has been a mooted question with the true friends of Republican government, probably from its first inception on American soil. But it does not seem to have ever been generally agitated, or to have had much attention given to it, either from the bulk of the people whom it intimately concerns, or from the legislators who should be more immediately interested in devising equitable and just laws for the benefit of their constituents. Politics, in their legitimate and true sense, appear to be very little studied by the people, else they are blinded to their own interest by an overweening thirst for their own individual and immediate wants, without regard to the true and just methods of supplying them.

In the San Francisco Chronicle of January 4, there is the report of a speech having been delivered on Sunday, the day previous, to the Anti-Monopoly Association of that city, in which the following passage occurs: "The Church has been the most potent factor in keeping the people down, the robbers sharing their plunder with the pulpit in return for its aid. In all lands the masses of the people are ignorant of their rights; and whenever they have become restive under oppression some of their own number have taken advantage of the crisis to raise themselves to power; then they have joined the robber class, and there has been simply a change of masters without much amelioration of conditions."

So it would appear that it is not any particular class of men that must bear the stigma of oppression as capitalists; but it is the system which engrosses the cupidity of all classes of humanity into its whirling vortexes of greed and injustice, and crushing the unfortunate, the losers in the scramble for wealth, for place, and position. We may talk of education as a most necessary means, as it surely is, of fitting people for their responsibilities under republican institutions; but, if they will not think for themselves, and put enlightened principles into practice, what can be the use of all our educational processes? These cannot be of much use, truly, unless they are accompanied by holier and more potential influences than have heretofore attained. Still, education is the only panacea, but it must have more vigor and masculinity in its methods. The principles of right and justice between the laboring man and his employer must be practically vindicated; not by a soft, slope-sided, truckling to property claims on the one hand, nor a dictating, debasing, or admonitory advisement on the other. The people must learn something more than the mere rudiments of literature, which are for children and youth; but the principles of government are for men. It is adult education that is needed. The people must acquire positive convictions as preliminary to a steadfast faith in each other; but a faith which must be built on compulsory edicts against all forfeitures of pledges or non-compliance with the principles for which their candidates may be elected. Let agitation never cease, nor organization ever flag until it is perfected for these purposes. It requires that the laboring classes be educated by themselves to action, to an abiding faith in their cause, until they shall move in solid columns against all monopoly of property, either of land or cumulated wealth.

"The only atmosphere," says Mr. Wright, "in which a republic can exist, is one of general intelligence; as soon as such an atmosphere is established, it will be impossible to support the national government by any system of taxation which virtually exempts the rich." It is not "inevitable," however, that property shall continue "to distribute itself more and more unequally," under the civilization process, as he seems to state. For as soon as that atmosphere of intelligence is established, the ignorance and apathy that were the foster parents of this unjust and unequal distribution will forever vanish; and though property may even then, for a time, continue to distribute itself unequally, it is to be hoped that the inequality will be less and less, and not more and more, as such civilization progresses. The unequal distribution of property is, as the essayist affirms, not an evil in itself when duly governed and kept within due bounds; for what laborer would work early and late, and endure all the attendant hardships of his toil, if, like the horse, he had no passion for laying up in store against future want, nor the prospect of some future rest from his labors. Yes, certainly; "the acquisition of property is an attribute of human nature, one of its grand passions, to be governed but not eradicated." It is capable of the noblest uses and applications," Mr. Bates's objections thereto notwithstanding.

The moderate accumulation of wealth—the governed and limited acquisition of it—being therefore, in itself, a great good to civilized man, it is the duty of government to legislate for its encouragement, and to regulate its accumulation to the extent that the poor and unfortunate shall not be robbed of the just reward of their labor. Nothing, in my estimation, can be so conducive to this end as direct taxation, and graduating the rate of that taxation in proportion to the amount of property that any one may possess, which might be one, two, or three per cent. above the ordinary rate.

I do not, however, consider the amount of taxes the people have to pay, were they but properly adjusted, according to the amount of property possessed, as at all onerous or oppressive in a general sense; rather, I consider that so regulated, like a balance-wheel to machinery, they would be a benefit to humanity in its social aspect. If property alone were to bear the burden of taxation, and the greater the amount of the former the greater the pro rata of the latter, taxation in that case would be made to play the part of a regulator to keep down inordinate wealth from the possession of the few. For what capitalist would care to amass riches beyond the regulated limit that would make it profitable to him to do so? It would take from him the incentive for the amassment of great wealth, beyond the amount which could be made available to him for either further accumulation or political aggrandizement. Thus, neither could he, if he would, be able to monopolize the gains of labor; for if the rate of one's taxes were six per cent. in the aggregate, and he could not obtain more than that rate by loaning out his capital, or investing it in safe property, where would be the use of his possessing it? Better, much better would it be for him to retire from the field of operations, and let others have a chance to acquire a moderate competence. This, it may be said, is but shifting the responsibility from the few to the many; but it will enable the laboring man to become their own capitalists, and to diffuse the benefits accruing from labor among those who have earned them. At all events it would bring capital down from its high, lordly attitude to a nearer level with labor.

It may appear questionable to some minds, whether or not such interference with personal and private possessions is consistent with the genius of our free institutions. But it is universally admitted that taxation for the support of government and other purposes is an indefeasible right which must be exercised against the immediate interest of the individual for the benefit of the body-politic; then, the graduating of taxation is only an extension of the same right, and those who create the property are the only ones to decide how it shall be held and under what conditions.

Shall the people continue to slumber under this lotus atmosphere of increasing inequality of property distribution, the rich constantly becoming richer and the poor poorer, merely because it is the nature of man, like the animals from whom he has descended, to grasp all for himself, and because this disposition is a heritage which has been entailed upon him from the crude ages of antiquity? Not, surely, if the masses of the people are sufficiently awakened by the clarion notes of dire necessity to a realizing sense of their condition, and of their power and competency to manage their own political affairs. Not if ever the people become enlightened enough to disregard all precedents of a civilization that has heretofore given all political prestige to the rich. A new era in civilization may have to be inaugurated, and if not in our day, or to ameliorate the present condition of labor, some future republican government, wiser than we, will most assuredly bring it to pass.

It may not be judicious to agitate this question in the columns of THE INDEX, if it should in the least detract from the Liberal League movement; as the latter is a question which I admit should be prosecuted by itself; and, as there is a necessity for Liberals to be united, and to have an eye single to the grand question of religious freedom, so there is a necessity for the question of justice to labor being strenuously advocated, but always by itself, and especially that phase of it which requires direct taxation and wealth limitation, without the admixture of finance, currency, and other questions, which also may be politically of vital importance in themselves, but which would only weaken the preceding question, and be not at all themselves promoted by being mixed up with it.

R. P. THOMSON.

SAN JOSE, Cal., Feb. 11, 1878.

P.S.—Just before mailing the above, I have seen a notice in the daily papers to the effect, that the Ways and Means Committee of Congress are expected to report in favor of an income tax on all incomes of over $2,000, graduated at the rates of two and three per cent. This, if carried out, will be a move in the right direction.

R. P. T.

FISKE ON IDEALISM.

OTTAWA, Canada, March 2, 1878.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I read Mr. Fiske's article, entitled a "Crumb for the Modern Symposium," in THE INDEX of February 7. I was not much surprised to see in it a restatement of the paradoxical and irrational idealism of Berkeley; but I was much astonished to read that "no one has ever refuted it, and it is not likely that any one ever will."

Mr. Fiske is a very warm admirer of Herbert Spencer, and I have always understood it on very intimate terms with him. Can it be possible that he has never read the Principles of Psychology, wherein no less than nineteen chapters are devoted to the complete refutation of the Berkeleyan hypothesis and idealism in general? Surely the arguments given at such length by one who is acknowledged to be one of the greatest thinkers of the age, are worthy of some little attention. I do not wonder so much at Mr. Harrison writing in the same vein recently in the Fortnightly, ignoring the arguments of Mr. Spencer, because he is in some sort regarded as the opponent of positivism; but in the case of Mr. Fiske the matter seems to be inexplicable. I should like to hear his explanation.

I know that Mr. Spencer, while arguing so warmly on the subject as to speak of the "Insanities of Idealism," nevertheless refuses to be called a materialist; he has entered on much refined and subtle argument to show why,—the sum and substance of which is that he cannot conceive that consciousness should be the product of molecular transformation in the brain. But there are other processes going on in the organism leading to results which are just as inexplicable, but which we know to be facts. It is quite inconceivable that the inert farinaceous and albuminous materials which we use as food should be converted into the living fluid of the blood; yet we can trace all the different stages of the process. And it is quite possible that the enlarged physiology of the future will enable us to trace all the processes by which thought is evolved from the molecular changes going on in the nervous system.

Notwithstanding the admittedly dogmatic assertions of Mr. Fiske and his labored and illusory argument from the correlation of forces—which could be easily disposed of did your space permit,—there can be no question that it is the tendency of modern science to make an end of the futile reasonings of idealists. The evolution theory will in a special manner have this effect. It teaches that all the organs and functions of animals—human consciousness not excepted—have been produced by continual contact with the external material world; the light of the sun created the eye; contact with the outer world created the nerves; and so on. So far from Mr. Fiske's table having no objective existence except as a cognition of the mind, it is the contact of such things as tables, trees, rocks, and sunlight that has developed the cognizing power in man, that has led to all the wonderful variety of functions he exhibits, even to his self-consciousness. Such appears to be the inevitable result, if the evolution theory be accepted.

It ill-becomes Mr. Fiske, or any one who values the results of modern scientific research, to sneer at Dr. Maudsley and his co-workers in the study of matter and its laws. It is to the labors of such men, though some of them stoutly deny the name of materialist, that we owe all the wonderful progress which the last century has unfolded. They have studied the material world and its laws, as if there was nothing else in the universe, and the consequences have been an enlarged control of natural forces, and an amelioration of all the conditions of human life such as the ancients never dreamed of; while the labors of the medieval schoolmen and their modern successors, from Berkeley to Mill, have led to absolutely nothing,—unless it be to strengthen Mr. Fiske's faith in immortality.

It would be impossible to calculate all the benefits which have resulted from the labors of the modern school of physiologists, of which Dr. Maudsley is a shining example, in the knowledge of the causes and right treatment of insanity and other diseases, but especially on the improved sanitary condition of towns and cities. These benefits have been great; and it would be safe to say that we shall never again be desolated by the pestilences which swept off half of the inhabitants of Europe at the time when Mr. Fiske's idealistic predecessors were burning with heresies, and studying metaphysics in its native purity, unmingled with facts.

J. G. WHITE.

"BE ANGRY, AND SIN NOT."

It is declared by people who are profane in conversation when provoked, that though that practice may be objected to as vulgar, it has, on the other hand, the real advantage of allaying irritation, and permitting a more speedy return of the customary serene and equable state of mind; in fact, that such blowing off of steam prevents worse evil in the human being not less than in the locomotive.

On the supposition that this theory is correct, some Episcopalian has lately suggested that the authorities of that church prepare "a form of sound words" to be used by its members under circumstances of sudden excitement or provocation.

The suggestion struck me as a good one; and I mentioned it to a bishop of that church whom I chanced to meet. The bishop, being a man of courage as well as wit, said promptly that the imprecatory Psalms would furnish satisfactory formulae for the purpose.

On looking at a few specimens of these Psalms, I found that there would be a double advantage in acting upon this suggestion. Not only would the expressions in question be strictly canonical and scriptural, and thus suitable to be used by a churchman, but the cursing would gain in intensity and thoroughness, and thus, probably, sooner accomplish the desired purpose of restoring calmness of mind. For instance: an unregenerate, angry person is often contented with d—ing his opponent's eyes, leaving the remainder of his bodily frame, and all the powers of his mind and soul in their normal condition; but the pious man may draw out his prayer-book (when the bishops shall have made the proposed addition to it), and solemnly read at his opponent: "Set thou a wicked man over him; and let Satan stand at his right hand. When he shall be judged, let him be condemned; and let his prayer become sin. Let his days be few; and let another take his office. Let his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow. Let his children be continually vagabonds and beg. Let the extortioner catch all that he hath; and let the strangers spoil his labor. Let there be none to extend mercy unto him; neither let there be any to favor his fatherless children. Let his posterity be cut off; and in the generation following let their name be blotted out. Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembered with the Lord, and let not the sin of his mother be blotted out."

Or if it be several persons—say a business firm, or a corporation, or a board of managers—who have excited the wrath of the pious man, he can say: "Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake. Pour out Thine indignation upon them, and let Thy wrathful anger take hold of them. Let their habitation be desolate. Add iniquity unto their iniquity; and let them not come into Thy righteousness. Let them be blotted out of the book of the living, and not be written with the righteous."

Or, if there be time for only a brief statement, the following may be found sufficiently effective: "Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into hell."

The late convention of bishops in this city was criticised as dealing not sufficiently with practical matters. If, at their next meeting, some arrangement like the one above sketched can be carried into effect, it will be felt as a relief by many who are now sorely tempted to use the unjustifiable, popular forms of commination.

C. K. W.

A LAST WORD ON SILVER.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The silver bill having passed, amended so as to injure us more in reputation than in our worldly goods, I did not mean to say anything except to acknowledge my mistake about Bank of England notes. But that error did not affect the correctness of my statement that our case is not analogous to that of England at the time in question. It would no doubt be a dangerous and disastrous experiment to attempt to do away with the use of paper for currency, and substitute for them metallic money. But the Resumption act contemplates no such thing. It provides that, "each existing banking association may increase its circulating notes in accordance with existing law, without respect to such aggregate limit; and new banking associations may be organized in accordance with existing laws, without respect to said aggregate limit." The effect of raising the greenback from being worth ninety-eight or ninety-nine cents in gold to being worth one hundred cents in gold could hardly be disastrous, and certainly is not at all comparable to what was done in England. The government could have no power to pay the greenbacks, if they were not presented for payment; and, when they were once at par with gold, it is difficult to believe that many would be presented.

The truth is that no sane person believes that we can do our business with a metallic currency, except as subsidiary coins; and the only question practically is, what sort of paper shall we use?

But for the importance of the silver issue, I should leave Gen. Warner's article to refute itself, or to have such effect as it may; but as this question is very complex, and very little understood, and as the economists always contradict each other, and generally the truth and the facts, I desire to restate some fundamental propositions which cannot be successfully denied or ignored, and which I believe to be capable of mathematical demonstration, if there were time and space for it.

The price of gold and silver is determined by its cost and by that alone. If the precious metals were not universally desired by mankind, and were not in constant and steady demand for use in the arts, and if you could by legislation alter the laws of the universe, you might put the price of gold and silver up or down by demonetizing or remonetizing one or the other metal. I do not mean, of course, that the sudden throwing of a large amount of silver on the market will not produce temporary fluctuations in the price. At the present moment, the silver ring have succeeded in making silver worth more in New York and San Francisco than in London; and, if it goes a little further, gold will flow out, and silver take its place.

It is true that large issues of inconvertible paper will increase the price of goods payable in that paper; while, as in the war time, the price in gold remains the same. But no such effect is produced by the issue of an honest, symbolic, or representative paper currency, based on the merchandise which is exchanged by means of it, as is the case with bank-notes issued on correct principles in a legitimate business way.

Such bank-notes are redeemed by their use to pay the notes of the borrower, to whom they were issued in discounting his business paper. There is no necessary connection between the amount of such notes that can be used and kept at par and the amount of gold and silver in the vaults of the bank or in the world.

Such a currency is automatically regulated by the demands of business, by the amount of merchandise being exchanged.

No nation or combination of nations can change the value or price of any freely-produced, readily-transported, and universally-declared article; and no law can cause more silver to be circulated than the people find it convenient to use.

In France, according to the last statement I have seen, there were only about $30,000,000 of silver in circulation, though the Bank of France had a very large quantity in her vaults.

I think no one believes that the silver dollar authorized to be coined will go largely into circulation, any more than the dollar of the fathers did. The old dollars disappeared from circulation according to natural laws; and the new ones will be governed by inherent laws and not by laws of Congress. We can only circulate silver to the extent of its use as subsidiary coin.

For all other purposes it will have, and can only have, the value of silver bullion; which is determined by its cost, and ascertained by what it will bring in open market. I am glad to be able to agree fully with Gen. Warner when he says truly that "an ounce of silver coin is worth no more coined than uncoined"; but when he says there is no profit to be derived from free coinage, when a 412½ grain dollar can be used to pay a debt that would otherwise be payable in a greenback worth seven cents in gold more than the market price of the silver bullion in the dollar, he forgets his arithmetic.

Let us do a little sum; I owe $10,000 in legal tender, which without the silver law would be payable in greenbacks worth to-day in gold 98.8. I take greenbacks and buy silver enough to coin $10,000 at the market price of silver, say ninety-two cents gold, and I save $880 in gold. If that is not a profit, what would be? If I paid this $10,000 to my workmen in small sums, it is possible they might be able, before prices have adjusted themselves, to pay it out without loss; or, if they owed debts, they could pay with silver, so that the loss would be widely diffused, but there would be a large profit for me all the same.

When Gen. Warner says that a hundredth part of a silver dollar is as much a cent as the hundredth part of a gold dollar, and that "there are as many quarters to an apple as to an orange," he is using words and not reason. Because an apple can be divided into quarters and into hundredths, and when so divided there are as many quarters, or as many hundredths in it as there are in an orange or in our globe, it does not follow that the apple is as large as the orange or the globe, or as valuable in the market.

The Eastern opposition to the silver bill is based upon the fact stated by Gen. Warner, and which cannot be denied, that an ounce of silver is not made more valuable by being coined; and that, while, as he further says, the "government does not undertake to give to 412½ grains of silver the same purchasing power as 25.8 grains of gold," this act of Congress does enable a man to pay his debts in a dollar possessing less purchasing power than the greenback, measured in gold, and less than that of the only dollar contemplated or used as a standard when the debt was contracted.

F. S. C.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

Every one admits that Congress has the power to fix the standards of length, weight, and value, and that the absolute values of these units is purely a matter of convenience. We can buy cloth in yards, or in half-yards, with equal ease, and should never think of quarrelling with a debtor, if he insisted on paying us twenty half-yards of cloth instead of ten yards. We should only begin to protest when he manifested a desire to pay back less than he had borrowed.

But although Congress may fix the unit of value, it cannot fix relative values. The value of ten yards of cloth may be equivalent to that of 412½ grains of standard silver, or 25.8 grains of standard gold, or sixteen pounds of iron, to-day; but Congress has no more power to continue these relative values than it has to control the motions of the stars. In assuming to do it, these gentlemen simply make themselves ridiculous.

It is in the interest of the producing class, that the standard of value shall not change. Those who speculate upon the products of labor desire such changes.

With these truisms before us, to what are we to ascribe the desire to adopt a new standard of value? It is to the idea that is held by a large class of people, that in some inscrutable way they are going to get some money that they have not earned. Can any mortal tell us how a laboring man is to get money excepting by working for it, and spending less than he earns?

It is not difficult to see the cause of our present "hard times." In the city of St. Louis, as in all large cities, there are millions of dollars which are withdrawn from the banks, and which are hoarded away in iron safes, which the possessors refuse to use in any business enterprise. Why? Because men have lost confidence in their fellows. There has been too much extravagant living. Too many men have been obliged to become defaulters, in order that they might support their families in "style"; and it is perfectly clear that notwithstanding all "Acts of Congress," people who have money will hold to it, until all the insolencies have come to light, and it is then known where money can be safely used.

If those who are rash and improvident could be made to suffer to the uttermost the consequences of their folly, instead of being allowed to shift the burdens to the more prudent, we should have fewer returns of such periods as the present. Perhaps we should not now have the spectacle of a nation palming off upon its creditors a coin which counterfeiters can manufacture in standard purity with profit.

F. E. NIPHER.

St. Louis, March 9.

INJUSTICE—OR NOT?

MARIETTA, O., March 9, 1878.

F. E. ABBOT, EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—In the editorial columns of March 7, referring to silver, you say, "Fraud and hypocrisy go hand in hand. We cheat our creditors, and 'Trust in God.'" This, I feel bound to say, is a charge no one has a right to make unless he is able to maintain it. And this he cannot do unless he can show that debts payable in coin are justly payable in dollars of 23.22 grains of gold, coupled with the abandonment of the use of silver as money.

The value of a gold dollar is one thing with silver also in use as money throughout the world, and quite another thing with no silver used for money. That is, a gold dollar as one of ten thousand millions of valuating units is a very different standard or measure from a gold dollar as one of only five thousand millions of money units. Are debtors, then,—are the United States equitably and morally bound to pay, where coin is stipulated, gold dollars doubled in value by the demonetization of silver?

That gold would be virtually doubled, or, which is the same thing in effect, prices of other things reduced one-half, by a general abandonment of silver as money by the world, is an economic question almost as patent as that a piece of cloth would measure only half as many yards with a yard-stick of seventy-two inches as with one of thirty-six.

Would you not think it uncalled for to charge those with intention to deal who demand payment of debts in dollars increased in value by reducing the quantity of money? But where does the truth lie? If by the words "In God we Trust," is meant obedience to the command, "Remove not the ancient landmark," as opposed to the code that would sanction the substitution of gold alone as a measure for the payment of debts contracted on the basis of a measure consisting of both metals, I must say let it stand.

Honestly yours,

A. J. WARNER.

[The grounds of our seemingly severe statement are expressed clearly in President Hayes' veto message. If that reasoning can be answered, not evaded or ignored, we shall be quick to recant and apologize.—Ed.]

IMPERATIVE WANTS.

ITHACA, N. Y., March 14, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND:—

Since the INDEX is, or should be, in the hands of every secularist who is really liberal and is active for the cause, he ought to find there all the definite facts which he needs to use in convincing his neighbors that the evils to be remedied are not outgrown or merely in the future and in theory, but are present, grave, and practical. THE INDEX is read by intelligent, earnest people, who would make effective use of such facts in almost every part of the country. Doubtless they already find it indispensable as an inspirer of thought and effort; and it would be all the more useful to them as a repository of special data upon which, in writing or conversation or public debate, they must often rely.

Cannot your editorial and other contributors provide this without overtaxing any one? A may give us instances of Sabbatarian tyranny; B, of the evil working of church exemption, as THE INDEX has done so effectively in the case of Trinity Church; C may narrate how good men have been excluded from public office on account of religious views; D may tell us in what States the courts may exclude the testimony of heretics, and for what heresies, and in what cases this has recently been done; E may exemplify by facts the unfairness and possible abuses of the non-secular feature in public schools; F may report any clear case of religious persecution; and so on.

In all this there need be little of argumentation, and less of rhetoric. But there must be scrupulous accuracy; clear and compact statement; great fairness; as to dates, localities, names, and authorities; and very great care lest one injure the cause by reporting matters which are too trivial, or too personal, or too little illustrative of the real issues. Little good can be done by statements for which no one is responsible and which no one can verify; or which, in any way, betray a petty and unmaganimous spirit of mere fault-finding.

Others may give us data which are more historical and bibliographical. Thus, G may collate the chief points of the Christian Amendment movement, and of the liberal counter-movement, giving platforms, successes, or indications of strength, etc., with dates and references. H may confine himself to the history of the Edmunds Amendment, and its predecessor the Blaine Amendment; a history of which some of us could at this moment make good use if we knew it better. K and L may each select some important topic, and examine with care the back numbers and volumes of THE INDEX, so as to give us a list of references to all the pages on which are recorded facts bearing thereupon. Probably these are but specimen suggestions. There must be a great deal of this kind of work which, if once thoroughly, conscientiously, reliably done, and so done as to admit of ready verification and of ready use, would immensely help liberals in their controversy with people who have no faith in ideas except as enforced by concrete "facts."

Yours ever,

J. E. OLIVER.

[Nothing but practical difficulties—want of time and want of money—stand in the way of the much-desired improvements in THE INDEX above noted.—Ed.]

THE CLAIMS OF PHILOSOPHY.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In your comments on my last article in THE INDEX, you say that you aim "at the great principles of freedom, truth, justice, fraternity, the rights of man, . . . infinitely more important than either of the competing isms or all isms combined."

But you find dogmas and creeds clouding men's minds and filling their souls with narrow and false ideals of God and man, standing in the way of the practical realization of those great principles, and wisely devote a share of space in THE INDEX editorial, and in selections and communications, to the breaking up of those false ideals.

To give entire attention to philosophy and ignore practical reform would be a grave error. To ignore philosophy, to cease all effort for wise and reverent thinking, and devote entire attention to external reforms would also be a grave error, making the most earnest efforts lame and poor.

Buddha was the great thinker of the ancient Orientals, and the great reformer, too. Perhaps no man up to his day ever wrought such changes as he did for the benefit of humanity,—breaking down the iron sway of Brahminical caste, elevating the condition of woman, lifting the daily life of millions up to a higher level. In his Eight Steps to Nirvana (the self-poised life of the saint), the first is right belief, and right doing followed that; growing from it as the tree from the germ. Belief was not, with him, a blind assent to dogmas, but the soul's conviction freely reached by untrammelled thought; and he put that first as the guide and inspiration to the highest right doing.

So it seems to-day, with the decay of theological dogmatism, a matter of high moment to see what shall best come in its place, what right thinking shall best inspire and help the practical reforms we seek. To this end I put my question, "A material or a spiritual philosophy, theism or atheism, which?" and will let it stand. To the same end I made my frank and friendly criticism, suggesting larger selections, fairly drawn from writers of these two schools to give both views of an important matter.

Of course an editor is king in his realm, and the editorial chair is the only throne I know of where the "one man power" should be exercised; but the wise and good ruler will hear and weigh friendly counsel,—that is all.

In conclusion, let me call attention to a very valuable lecture in THE INDEX on "The Southern Situation," given in Horticultural Hall, Boston, last winter, by R. Tomlinson of South Carolina. It tells the sad story of treason to humanity, the smiting down of right and political liberty, the destruction of all real democracy in that State. And this is called a conciliation policy! Yours truly,

G. B. STEBBINS.

WASHINGTON, D.C., March 18, 1878.

[Positively, we cannot understand exactly what our esteemed correspondent's complaint rests upon. If he has facts to state showing unfairness of treatment on our part, will he please to state them? THE INDEX has never been closed to any Spiritualist who can write an able or interesting article; but we do not feel self-reproached in confessing that we follow our own taste in the selections we make for these pages. It may be our misfortune not to be interested in the dogma of Spiritualism, but how can we help it? Evidently THE INDEX ought to have a Spiritualist for its editor, or at least some one to whom Spiritualism is "philosophy." It is lucky for our readers that we have consideration enough to keep our own "philosophy" for private consumption. It is our ambition not to be a bore!—ED.]

DR. L. J. RUSSELL.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Sometime since, Dr. Denbar, our representative of the State of Texas on the Executive Committee of the National Liberal League, wrote me that for certain reasons he should be unable to serve on that Committee; and I wrote to Dr. Russell, of Harrisville, Texas, inviting him to accept the position. I am pleased to receive a line from him, in which he agrees to serve. He writes so good a letter, that I take the liberty of giving your readers some extracts from it. THE INDEX readers will remember Dr. Russell as the man who was recently so brutally mobbed by a band of pious ruffians for expressing liberal views in Bell County. The Doctor says: "Your favor of the 10th instant at hand. In reply, will say that I will accept the position, and will do my utmost to organize a good and efficient Committee,—a working Committee. I know a great many liberals in this State. I will leave for San Antonio in a few days to attend the annual meeting of the State Medical Association, and hope to effect the organization of the State Committee at that place. I will also visit Austin (where there are many liberals), also Galveston and Houston, in the interests of the good cause, and hope to arouse some of our good liberal friends to a sense of duty. I love the liberal cause, and would be glad, if possible, to devote the remaining days of my life to its advancement. I have already suffered for my devotion to truth, and may suffer again; but neither threats nor violence short of death can deter me from advocating what I honestly believe to be for the greatest and best interest of the whole human family. We have a Liberal Association at this place, organized in September, 1875. We have about thirty members, and good prospect of adding many more. There is also a Liberal League in San Antonio. All we need is a few good, earnest, working liberals, and coöperative work, and our great State will soon be dotted over with Liberal Associations."

As Dr. Russell says, we want "coöperative work"; and for that reason every Liberal Society and League in Texas should at once unite with the great Liberal League movement, by taking out a charter from the National Liberal League. "In union there is strength."

H. L. GREEN.

P.S.—Rev. S. W. Sample, whom the liberals of this section have named "the young Ingersoll," has now established himself at Strawberry Point, Iowa, and is prepared to give liberal lectures or establish Liberal Leagues anywhere in the vicinity of his new home. I know of no abler defender of the Liberal League platform.

H. L. G.

THE DENVER LEAGUE.

DENVER, Col., March 18, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Thinking your readers may be interested in the League movement in the Rocky Mountains, I send herewith a short account of our situation. Colorado has two Leagues, a State League and the Liberal League of the city of Denver. The outlook for an increase is promising. The Denver Liberal League celebrated its first anniversary yesterday, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—

President, Henry C. Dillon; Vice-Presidents, W. J. Kinsey, Ed. C. Sumner, P.M., H. C. Towner, and

N. A. Heinsfurter; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll; Treasurer, John G. Jenkins; Chairman of Committee on Public Works, A. L. Richard; on Discussion, Hyatt Hussey; on Social Affairs, W. H. Fisher; on Finance, Louis Anfenger. This League is in a very prosperous condition. In fact, it is in a better financial condition than any similar society in Denver, not excepting the Blue Ribboners. Its receipts during the past year exceeded its expenditures; and now its cash on hand exceeds its debts.

Thanks for this state of things is mainly due to Austin W. Smith, D. M. Richards, John G. Jenkins, and W. H. Fisher, who have been indefatigable and unselfish in the work for the League. The new year starts out in a most auspicious manner. The League supports a reading-room and a lecture-hall. On Sunday afternoon the League holds a Children's Fraternity in the lecture-hall. At present the school numbers about sixty scholars; at any rate, that number of Youth's Companions are circulated every Sunday afternoon. The Fraternity is in a very flourishing condition, and increasing weekly. Many ladies take a great interest in it. Mrs. Charles Roth, Mrs. Dodd, Miss Crump, Mrs. Kerth, W. H. Fisher, and John G. Jenkins deserve especial mention on account of their increasing efforts in the interest of the Children's Fraternity. We are in great need of suitable children's books and sensible singing-books. We are now using the Golden Robin as our song-book. The League takes great pride in the Children's Fraternity. Sunday morning we have lectures, when we can get a volunteer. Wednesday evenings we have alternately a Lyceum and a Social Hop, both of which succeed admirably; although we fear the larger attendance is on the latter alternate evening.

The newspapers treat the League respectfully, and acknowledge that some of the most respected and solid citizens of Denver are members. All in all, the Denver Liberal League is an undoubted success. THE INDEX may rest assured that its circulation in Denver will increase largely the present year.

FRANK W. INGERSOLL, Secretary.

"WHAT GOD HATH MADE PURE, CALL NOT THOU IMPURE."

Reading the communication from Mrs. E. L. Saxon, in your issue of January 17, upon obscene publications, and the wrong of teaching children that what is natural is impure, I am reminded of the wise and beautiful teaching of a French mother, the knowledge of which came to me years since when my two boys were but babes; and as it was so helpful to me during the development of their minds and bodies, I want others to have the benefit also; yet I shrink from attempting to tell it, for the pen that would do justice to it needs inspiration.

One morning a young mother leading her seven-year-old twins by the hand, entered the lecture-room of Dr. S— in Paris, just as he had dismissed his class, and politely asked that herself and children might be shown the large anatomical plates of the human body. As one after another was exhibited and explained, the plate showing the womb in the seventh month of pregnancy with twins, came in order; and as the doctor was hastily withdrawing this without comment, the mother said, "Please do not lay that aside; it is the one of all others I am most anxious that my children should see. Be so kind as to explain it fully to them." And placing her little sons directly in front of it, said, "You know, my darlings, that I have told you that some day I would show you a picture of the little room in my body, where you lived and slept so long a time before papa or I saw you. We can't help loving one another as we do, when you see how close to mother's heart you both lay for nine happy months. By that time you had grown too large to be comfortable in that warm home, and then it opened for you to pass out into my arms. Dear little sister lived there, and came to us in the same way; and God lets all little babes have such a home in their mother's body until they are old enough to leave it. How sad it would be if those who for so long a time lived so closely together should ever be unkind to one another." Dr. S— was moved to tears by this beautiful incident, and said to her, "Madame, you have given to me, as well as to your children, the best explanation of that plate that was ever made. I cannot add a word." And as she left the room, "Ah!" said he, "we need have no doubt as to the kind of men those sons will make, privileged as they are with such a mother and her pure instruction."

The knowledge that one mother had so thoroughly understood and performed her duty to innocent childhood, stimulated me to tell my sons, at an early age, the simple truth in a similar manner. And now in their early manhood, the uprightness of their character, and the purity of their lives, their daily devotion to me and all womankind, is a glowing testimonial in favor of intelligent truth against falsehood and deception.

ELIZABETH CURTISS.

COL. INGERSOLL'S WORDS.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 23, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

It would appear from your comments on Mrs. Laura Kendrick's criticism of Col. Ingersoll, that she, in her quotations, has relied on no better authority than the statement of some blundering reporter, instead of ascertaining for herself the lecturer's actual words. Permit me to corroborate her report. I heard the lecture myself, and gave especially close attention to the passage denunciatory of anti-marriage advocates, newspaper reports of which had previously aroused my interest. Not only did he use the exact words which Mrs. Kendrick attributes to him, but he delivered them with a bitterness of tone and vindictiveness of manner which left no room for doubt as to the impression which he intended to give.

And in the lecture, as published in pamphlet-form, even stronger terms are employed; the phrase "long-haired men and short-haired women" indicating an attack on persons as well as arguments; for it is incredible that Col. Ingersoll, while so emphatically declining to accept the statement that Samson's physical strength lay in the length of his hair, is still superstitious enough to find the same peculiarity an element of mental weakness in social reformers.

I trust, Mr. Editor, that, on the appearance of your next vigorous assault upon the Christian system, favoring its utter demolition and destruction, root and branch and fruit and flower, some moderate individual, who never goes to extremes, will be inspired to suggest the probable necessity and benefit of amending and improving Christianity, but the unwisdom of "throwing out the baby with the bath." Be assured that I shall read your answer to such a person with keenest relish. Sincerely yours,

BENJ. R. TUCKER.

[Mr. Tucker's testimony is conclusive as to the words used by Col. Ingersoll. We cannot believe, however, that the latter would hesitate to disavow the harsh and insolent meaning they have been understood to contain.

Inasmuch as we have never desired the "demolition" of Christianity in any sense that implies the destruction of a single element of good it may contain (and it contains many such elements), we should not be in the least disconcerted by the suggestion of the above "moderate individual." We should be thoroughly ashamed of the incapacity to draw any distinctions, however delicate, which either reason or justice demands. We are grateful to any one who will point out a new, real, and important distinction anywhere; and it has not raised our opinion of the general public to perceive, as we have been forced to do of late, that so many liberals have proved themselves either unable or unwilling to recognize distinctions of the first importance on the "obscene literature" question. Let Mr. Tucker convict us of "throwing out the baby with the bath" on any question, and we promise to pick up the ill-used infant as speedily as possible.—ED.]

REASON IN RELIGION.

The folly of trying to rise above necessary human limitations is embodied in no more patent form than that of dogmatic religion. The recognition of one's own imperfectness of judgment and knowledge is the very starting-point of liberty, and the very hope of human advance. As THE INDEX has so often said, Roman Catholicity is the logical outcome of Christianity, as a system professing to be absolutely true, and absolutely superior to every other faith. The weakness of the dogmatic position I never had so clearly shown me as in a recent dialogue between a friend of mine, Mr. S., and a Roman Catholic, Mr. M. It ran substantially as follows:—

S. Are you a Catholic from the accident of birth, or because Catholic doctrine commends itself as true to your reason?

M. From the latter cause.

S. Are you aware that there are other great religions in the world, claiming to be true; all more or less systematic and logical, and numbering adherents by very many millions?

M. Yes.

S. Do you suppose your reason to be so clear and fair that, had you been born in Turkey or China, on presentation of the evidence, you would have become Catholic?

M. Perhaps.

S. Have you not found your reason fail you in many important matters? Have you not often erred when you took the utmost pains to be right?

M. Yes.

S. Well, then, your reason may be wrong in telling you that you ought to be a Catholic. It requires the assumption of your personal infallibility to accept, among many conflicting claims, that of some particular institution, professing infallibility. If, as you say, you remain in Rome from reason, then both of us are rationalists; only we have come to different conclusions. But if you are a Catholic from mere accident, which is more likely, from your remaining where birth placed you, and from the great difficulty of justly weighing and balancing religions, then your adherence to the Church of Rome is valueless to me as an argument for its claims. Something more than an assertion of infallibility is wanted to bear them out. If Catholics, Buddhists, Mohammedans, and the rest are to be propagated each after their kind, age after age, how is the race ever to get at the truth which cannot be presented by any of them in sight but imperfection? Until there is a strong endeavor to stand outside of the rut we find ourselves in by hope of time and place, and try to look at things independently of their immediate atmosphere, no progress toward the perfecting and assuring of knowledge can ever be made.

G. I.

MONTREAL, Feb. 4, 1878.

THE FATHER of Ruskin lies buried at Shirley, near Croydon, under a granite tomb thus inscribed: "Here rests from his well-sustained burden, John James Ruskin, born in Edinburgh, May 10, 1783. He died in his home in London, March 3, 1864. He was an entirely honest merchant, and his memory is to all who keep it dear and helpful. His son, whom he loved to the utmost and taught to speak truth, says this of him."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 "13 " 25 " 8 " "
 "26 " 51 " 6 " "
 "52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSN., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STREIBER.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MÜLLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loe, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains various reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooks Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Leaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at this office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Humanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Maestri: The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BACON'S on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Parables and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Mental Science; A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTON (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. OSWALD). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Idylls of Virgil.....	2.25
The Tenth Muse.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUNYAN'S Pilgrim's Progress.....	1.25
BURTON (HENRY THOMAS). History of England in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Hesperus and Mere Words, 1 vol.; Letters, 1 vol.; Dryden's Letters, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Application to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thomas: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Widdie, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. J. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Beginning in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 3 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.00
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBOIS (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Second Lady's Secret. 2 vols.....	3.25
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.25
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Poems.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	2.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athenase Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	6.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Electric Amulet.....	1.25
William Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Cred of Christendom.....	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	3.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown Life.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.00
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Kismet.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
Mere Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.00
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.00
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Star's Tale.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Snow, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. 2. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Joseph P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Description of an Apparatus. By J. Ball Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Oude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERN (ORPHEUS O.). Versities, Poems, Pastories, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESLING'S (G. K.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS'S Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
Biography. History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	2.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LURBOOK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilisation, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
6.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1835 to 1865.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MILNER (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversions of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversions of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.00
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.60
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN) Voltaire.....	1.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	2.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.00
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Clips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	3.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	3.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Mkrees from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	1.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PABSON'S (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PEEL'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trothy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Possibility of Worlds situated under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Eclipses, and Physical Conditions, with numerous Photographs and many Plates, &c., &c.....	1.50
The Expense of Heaven.....	.50
REMAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMER:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Professor Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Nisbet, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 21 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus; Sacred History.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.00
Social Status; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.....	3.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.00
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	6.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature.....	7.50
The Classic Age. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.00
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Round and Level the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.50
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.50
3. Sketches, Denis Derval, &c.....	1.50
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.50
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unpublished Pieces.....	1.50
THAYER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Week in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture, 2 vols.....	4.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Elements of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLE (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folk.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

GUMS—4 nice perforated notices for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $6 cuts free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STEINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUM & Co., Augusta, Maine.

$125 a month and expenses to Agents. Send stamp for terms. S. C. FOSTER & Co., Cincinnati, O.

E. A. SAWTELLE,
PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Millingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
251 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

is an enterprising, 8-page, Liberal, Family Paper, devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth.

Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft, and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds. It has no reverence for bibles or man-made gods, and opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasures in another.

It has a variety of Departments, is chaotic and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a First-Rate Liberal Paper.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published weekly, at One Dollar a year, or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address SMITH WILBUR PAYNE, 141 Eighth St., New York.

NEW BOOKS TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We lease a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT- RONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Clifford,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Lealie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year. Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.00 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to getter up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $1.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 251 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to anybody who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience. Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX,
No. 251 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 251 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion.

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 251 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. E. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 251 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 251 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
251 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHAPTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
251 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 34 pages, entitled,
"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	40
FIFTY ".....	75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.25
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.60
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N.B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
251 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 11, 1878.

WHOLE No. 438.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1878.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Springfield, Ill., April 14; at Kirksville, Mo., April 16 to 21; at Warsaw, Mo., April 23 to 25.

COLONEL INGERSOLL has been "selected to deliver the annual address before the Boston University Law School." So it is announced, but we cannot vouch for the fact.

THE BOSTON HERALD says that "there is a student at the Bangor Theological Seminary who bears the ominous name of Allichin. He will probably become a Monday lecturer."

THE VALUE of church property in New York State, by the just completed census of 1875, is $101,105,785; other clerical real estate, $18,491,385; total of salaries, $5,308,231; average salary of ministers, $840; total number of church edifices, 6,243,—of members, 177,537,—of sittings, 2,537,470.

LOWELL has had a contest over the question of introducing Brookes' Primer of English Literature into the High School of that city. The book has been opposed on the ground that it is sectarian; but this objection is now overruled by the School Committee, who have decided in the book's favor.

THE BOSTON BUNSBY, in a recent "Monday Lecture," announced this scientific and solemn paradox, which fairly overwhelmed his "Intellectual" audience with admiration: "If there is any young man in this audience about to be married to a young woman of about his own age, that future wife is now living somewhere upon the earth!"

TWO MORE Liberal Leagues have been organized auxiliary to the National League. One is at Linesville, Pa., with officers as follows: President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks; Treasurer, James Wallace; Councilors, Mrs. W. P. Brooks, Mrs. B. J. Butler, W. P. Brooks, S. C. Thayer. The other is at Xenia, Indiana, with officers as follows: President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Vice-President, Dr. B. B. Stephenson; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins; Treasurer, J. M. Darby.

WHAT AN EXHIBITION of bigotry is this! (We quote from the Albany Express): "Only last month a prominent clergyman of New England, Rev. Washington Gladden, in the Independent, strongly condemned the practice of Orthodox Christians mingling socially with those whose views were heterodox. He says that the Bible lays on Christians the imperative duty of 'shutting the doors of our houses upon them'; and adds: 'We do not any longer curse the "unsound" teacher. We pass polite and even complimentary resolutions about him. We do not refuse to associate with errorists. We sit at their tables and they at ours; we dance at their weddings and weep at their funerals. How shall this grave discrepancy between precept and practice be explained?'"

THE Pall Mall Gazette not long since thought that the Pope had concluded to relinquish the claim to temporal power, because he had directed the bishops to recognize the national government. But a London dispatch of March 28 states that "the Pope, in his allocution to-day, said that the loss of temporal power rendered the free exercise of spiritual power impossible"; and another London dispatch of the next day declares that "in consequence of the re-establishment of the Catholic hierarchy of Scotland the Pope desires entering upon diplomatic relations with the British Government, and has instructed Cardinal Franchi, the Pontifical Secretary of State, to take steps with that object." The man is not yet born who will see the Papacy abandon its claim to temporal power.

PROFESSOR FELIX ADLER is encountering heated denunciations from bigoted Jews, who can neither understand nor tolerate the advanced position he has taken with reference to Judaism; and even "Reform Jews" shrink away from his side. On the very Sunday (March 24) when we occupied his platform in New York, the cauldron of bigotry was violently bubbling. The Sinai Literary Association of Chicago had invited Prof. Adler to lecture before them, and Rev. Dr. K. Kohler, minister of the Sinai Congregation, vehemently protested, declaring in a letter to the Association: "I shall not allow my temple to be disgraced by a lecture to be delivered within its walls by one who blasphemes God and Judaism." In this outburst, even the Reformer and Jewish Times of New York sees nothing but praiseworthy courage and honesty. This may be conceded, as one concedes courage and honesty to the Grand Inquisitor Torquemada, who used to burn Jews for the crime of Judaism; but one may well wonder that such flaming intolerance should call forth no word of rebuke from a Jewish "reformer." We shall before long print in full the Chicago Tribune's article on this subject.

REV. MR. THORPE, chaplain of the Iowa Legislature, the other day prayed the Lord to "cure President Hayes of his insane and ruinous sympathy for a certain section of the country," and "enable him to see it to be his duty to heed the sentiment of all the people." Thereupon Mr. Bleidung, a Democratic member, rose and introduced a resolution censuring the chaplain and his prayer. Mr. Thorpe resigned his post, declared that his prayer was to God, not to the legislature, and sarcastically advised the house, if they did not like his sincere and independent method of praying, to appoint Mr. Bleidung "a committee of one to draft a form of prayer, neutral in religion and politics, to be forever used by the chaplains." On all this absurd business the Pittsburgh Sunday Leader made very sensible comments: "There never was an incident which better illustrated the inherent absurdity of the whole legislative chaplain business. Rev. Thorpe certainly was right when he refused to pray except according to his own light and conscience, and did a manly thing in resigning rather than submit to a censure for praying as sincerely as he could. On the other hand, Mr. Bleidung was right in resenting the idea that the Democratic tax-payers of the State should be compelled to contribute to the salary of a man who made their political convictions a subject of offensive petition to the Almighty. Finally, Mr. Thorpe's fine sarcasm states nothing but what really ought to be done if the theory of official chaplains is to be retained. A form should be prepared in which chaplains should pray so as to give no advantage to one side in politics, or of one religious sect over the other in the official prayers. This would result, of course, in making the chaplains as neutral and non-committal in politics and religion as water. But that is the only way in which offences can be avoided. It is by exactly this neutrality and vagueness that those chaplains, who do not get into trouble, succeed in maintaining their positions. The Congressional chaplain, who, in the heat of a private debate, recently prayed that 'whether we shall have silver or gold, let us devote ourselves to Thy service,' is a fair type of these men of large caution, and glittering generalities. Their prayers, boiled down, mean nothing but the Arab petition, Kismet, 'It is written, Thy will be done,'—a very excellent sentiment, but scarcely requiring the services of a regular salaried chaplain to rehearse. 'But such chaplains are worthless!' Yes, of course they are; that is what we are coming to. This kind is useless; the Thorpe kind impracticable, and stirs up rather than allays political passions. The true remedy is—no official chaplains at all. Let anybody be free to pray before a legislative body who is invited or is acceptable. Let not the people be compelled any longer to pay to support this 'survival' of the times of the union of Church and State, which has worn out the last shred of its usefulness long ago."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS

President.

FRANCOIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIEN, Washington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York.
 MR. W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUBERT, San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM FAYNE, Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL, Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER, Chicago, Ill.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ISAAC WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Banner," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thermidite, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COOLYER, Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. A. MOOREHEAD, Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH OGDY STANTON, Tenny, N. Y.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Littleburgh, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

Miss JANE F. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. ORANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENRY, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. HALE, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. E. DOWDY, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BRILL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARMER, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....B. B. CLARK, Wilmoreville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BRETHERTON, New Orleans.
 Maryland.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maine.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHNEEMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....J. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COFFLAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN, Chatham.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Limerick.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICH, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 West Virginia.....D. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 Wisconsin.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wyoming.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 District of Columbia.....D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
 W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 NORMAN S. POSTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. ORANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH E. OTIS, 137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN F. HYDE, 221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the
National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, D. A. Cline; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeldt.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeldt, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACOBSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, B. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie W. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claassen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
 CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Orandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grunlike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry O. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Eliza Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, O. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, O. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. House.
 Issued to C. M. House, George Riker, J. C. Pratt, Daniel Jones, F. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Glass, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Badal, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, E. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harcourt, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermande, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Henson, E. E. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheppard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunning.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. O. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
 Issued to L. Carlson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
 Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
 Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
 Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
 Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, E. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. E. Steele.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sent, M. Benn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sent, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eych, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:
PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or of the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious observance shall be observed, or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

[For THE INDEX.]

The Recent Controversy about Endless Punishment.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED IN COSMIAN HALL, FLORENCE, MARCH 3, 1878.

BY DAVID H. CLARK.

The craving for popular excitement, which is so characteristic of the common mind, and especially in this country, has been quite bountifully supplied, in the sphere of morals and religion,—at least, of late. For a considerable while, Messrs. Moody and Sankey were without a rival. They were the chief centres of this particular species of agitation,—the principal disturbers of the peace; accompanied, it is true, on a somewhat reduced compass, in respect to popular effect, by the bluster of the renowned theological and rhetorical trickster, the Rev. Mr. Cook. The Presidential campaign for a time comparatively overwhelmed and superseded this commotion. It was well-nigh forgotten. Then came the Murphy movement, which has been spreading and rolling on: upon either hand, until it is here, and we are in the midst of it, compelled to succumb, in some degree, whether we will or not, to the irresistible force of its swelling and engulfing tide.

I have passed over, in this review of recent popular excitements or sensations, one which belongs to the same category, though of a somewhat different nature and more local character, which has not so far subsided or passed out of mind but that this tardy glance at some of its circumstances and suggestions may still be timely and of ordinary interest.

I refer to the case of the Rev. Mr. Merriam, of Springfield, and the discussions which it has called forth. There has not been, for a good while, any event in the ecclesiastical world, in our section, certainly, which has caused more comment. Nearly every pulpit of every sect has had its say about it. The Springfield Republican remarked, in one of its Saturday issues, when the controversy was at its height, "It matters not what church one may attend anywhere in Western Massachusetts to-morrow, it is quite probable that he will have the doctrine of endless punishment sprung at him." Nor has this been peculiar to the area just indicated, nor confined to the sphere of the theologians and religious press alone. The preachers all over the country appear to have shared in the contagion. I had, a few days since, a Monday morning paper of a Western city, a considerable portion of which was devoted to reports of sermons of the day before, nearly all upon this theme,—from both the Orthodox and heterodox stand-point. The secular press has also shown itself eager for the fray. Some of the magazines are determined to be counted in. It is announced that one of the solid leading reviews of the country proposes to publish a discussion of the subject by several clergymen of different persuasions. And, according to the last report, a committee of the Mississippi Legislature has had it before them, and decide that "both analogy and revelation teach the doctrine of punishment in hell, and forever." So it stands a pretty fair chance of getting considerably "ventilated," as we say, before the public is done with it.

The case is a somewhat puzzling one. There have been, from time to time, similar instances of heresy in the Orthodox Church,—some of a much graver character; but they have generally been dealt with in a more summary manner, attracted less attention, and been sooner forgotten.

I presume that it was owing to the stronghold which Mr. Merriam still retained on Orthodox ground, notwithstanding his lack of conformity to the general standard of the faith of his church, that made his case so conspicuous. It was the peculiar phase of heresy which he represented that made it more difficult to dispose of, and afforded an occasion for the latent uneasiness of certain minds in respect to correlative dogmas to manifest itself, which else would have been silent.

If, for example, Mr. Merriam had denied the doctrine of the Trinity, it would have been easy to classify him. It would have been settled at once that he is a Unitarian. If he had denied the doctrine of endless punishment, but affirmed the final holiness and happiness of all mankind, which he did not, it would have been easily decided that he is a Universalist. If he had rejected the theological system, as a whole, or subjected it to modifications which caused it to lose its essential Christian character, then it would have been said he is a Free Religionist or Radical. But it was his fortune to steer clear of all these perilous contingencies. Adhering with all firmness and openness to the divine inspiration of the Bible, and its infallible authority in matters of faith and doctrine, he accepted, or did not certainly directly deny, any of the cardinal tenets of his church, with the exception of the one in respect to which the controversy arose, and simply substituted for this another which might, or might not, be an improvement according to the view taken. Important, it must be confessed, as was this point, when adequately considered, it will be seen, therefore, that his heresy was not in itself of a very sweeping or destructive character, regarded with reference to the system as a whole. But as a small leak in a ship already proven unseaworthy or sinking greatly adds to its disastrous condition, and diminishes its prospect for an extended voyage, so this break in the creeds, which seemed, in a certain aspect, of trifling moment, let in a deluge of free inquiry and discussion which has materially contributed to the damages they have hitherto received, and rendered more sure and speedy their ultimate extinction.

Contemplated in the narrowest sphere of its relation, the most immediate effect of the event under consideration was upon the Congregational body in which it occurred. It raised at once the question in that denomination whether belief in the doctrine called in question is essential to its fellowship, or is demanded as a qualification for the ministerial office, providing the individual is sound on all other points. That such a question should have come up at all is conclusive evidence that it is relaxing rather than strengthening its hold upon the minds of those of this sect,—of the growth within it of rationalistic tendencies. Still more is this confirmed by the fact that in a council to decide as to the fitness of a candidate for one of its pulpits, so many were ready to cast their votes in his favor, even with the anomaly of a Christian theology—with hell left out.

It is true that those who took this position justified their action by the pretence that Congregationalism has never stood for uniformity of faith; that it is compatible with and has ever included diversity of belief. Of course I do not profess to be as conversant with the history of Congregationalism as those who make this assertion. But yet I feel quite sure that I know something about it, as every tolerably informed person does, and am confident in saying that the statement just referred to has no warrant in the facts of the case in the sense in which it is put forth. Christians, and especially the clergy, have a marvellous skill in accommodating their religion and creeds to special exigencies and the side with which they happen to ally themselves.

In certain matters of church government and administration, doubtless Congregationalism has been somewhat freer than some of the Protestant sects; but, in respect to the cardinal doctrines of its creeds, there has always been essential agreement. This was affirmed by the Rev. Mr. Reed, a Congregationalist of Springfield, in a sermon occasioned by Mr. Merriam's defection, in which he said "that his Church, the First Church of Springfield, is a Congregational Church, and that it has for two hundred and forty years stood upon the doctrines put forth by the Congregational councils, which have always asserted the eternal punishment of the wicked. Their creed is a deliberate, conscientious expression of what the Bible teaches." Abundant evidence in confirmation of this might easily be cited.

It will be seen, therefore, that the plea of some who gave their support to Mr. Merriam, that belief in the doctrine of endless punishment has not been or is not an essential part of the Congregational faith, is inconsistent with all its antecedents. It is plain that if it can be thus construed, it is a position which has never been openly assumed before. But, be this as it may, the very fact that such a plea should have been made, shows that the human mind, even within religious bodies, and this one in particular, is growing less positive in respect to this doctrine, and not only this, but others with which it is associated. It shows that it begins to be disposed towards, and ready to demand, even under these more stationary and restricted conditions, greater freedom of thought and opinion; that the creeds of the fathers fail to receive the passive support of the children. This is a great point gained, a very important principle in itself; although the actual or definite progress apart from this should be but little perceptible. For intellectual freedom is fatal to all forms of superstition and every irrational conception. It is a sure and unfailing prophecy of their ultimate extinction. They must dissolve beneath its disintegrating power as the rivulets and streams unlock their icy fetters before the warmer and more penetrating rays of the rising sun in spring-time, as the darkness of night before the dawning of day. For, suffer it to be admitted, though simply, as in the case, as a concession to liberty, that a person in any church is free to think for himself in respect to a particular dogma, and ere long some one is sure to appear who presents a bolder front, and directly avows his disbelief of it; and the same will inevitably follow, sooner or later, in respect to others, until the whole is abandoned.

It is very clear that this is seen by the more ultra and conservative of the Congregational denomination; and hence the occasion has led such not only to repudiate the principle of freedom indicated, but to a reaffirmation of the doctrine imperilled. What will be the issue of this? Will it split the denomination, as has been conjectured? I do not believe there is the least prospect of it. And there are a number of reasons that lend weight to this conclusion; among which are these:—

It has been ascertained by an unequivocal test—

namely, letters of inquiry, sent out in one instance by the Springfield Republican, and in the other by the Boston Congregationalist, the first to one hundred clergymen in Western Massachusetts, and the other to as many of the most prominent in various parts of the country—that there is an overwhelming majority of the clergy of the Congregational church who assent to the doctrine of future endless punishment. It is very doubtful, therefore, if there could be any considerable split at the present time upon this issue, even with the disposition evinced by some to lay less stress upon it, if not to discard it.

Nor is it probable that those thus infected will be disowned or subjected to denominational exclusion, since it is becoming quite clearly perceived that this is an act which cuts both ways; or, in other words, to raise a cry of heresy against persons or opinions in our day reacts upon its authors, and is sure to swell the number of friends and sympathizers for the accused. Still further, as all religious parties, like all political ones, covet power and external prosperity, conscious also that the influences of the present time are unfavorable to these realizations, Congregationalism is more likely to adopt a policy of compromise and concession than to make great sacrifices in order to secure unity or strictness of faith, however much it might be desired, or some should urge such a course.

The breach which the recent event has made in Orthodoxy is therefore an irreparable one; its consequences can neither be effectually restrained nor overcome. They must go on and gather force, let the final result be what it may; and we know very well what that result is destined to be at last. And beyond the bounds of the church, or the sphere of its most immediate relation, the discussion must serve to make the general mind more clearly perceive the unreasonable and revolting nature of the article of belief, and positive against it.

Indeed, there is little doubt that the attention it has elicited in ecclesiastical circles, as well as outside of them, has proceeded from a more or less defined sense of this, already existing, which has simply taken this occasion to show itself.

It has been noticeable that the secular press, with all its customary apparent shrewd and wary effort to avoid the risk of committing itself to the one side or the other, as is usual when the public mind is thus divided, has exercised, to say the least, a fairness and impartiality toward the dissenting class, the negative side of the question, if not an obvious leaning to its favor, which is in marked contrast to the treatment heresy usually experiences from these organs and guides of popular intelligence.

Such are some of the considerations which the more outward survey of the case presents; there are others which are less cheering and encouraging. It is most gratifying for us to believe that we live in an age of surpassing progress in civilization and enlightenment; that not only have great transitions in man's material relations transpired, and still are going on, but that also humane ideas are being rapidly advanced and becoming a part of the life of the world; that ignorance and superstition are swiftly disappearing before the increased and increasing opportunities and efforts for the diffusion of intelligence; that our time is almost an entire contrast in these distinctions to all that has gone before. But every now and then something occurs which serves to forcibly remind us that what we are accustomed to call the past is not so distant as we are in the habit of thinking; that much of the barbarism of what was worst, most irrational, and crudest in its usages, customs, and conceptions still survives with all that has been gained; that slow and wearisome evolution, rather than sudden change, is the invariable process of human development. We think of the terrible wars which have devastated the earth, and fancy the time must have gone by for such scenes to be enacted again by the foremost people of mankind; and then we look over the world, and see that half the nations, if not directly engaged in waging them, are sustaining vast armies and formidable navies that bristle with hostile intent, or building forts and providing equipments of warfare at enormous expenditure, with the means wrung from the hard hands of toll.

And so of numerous forms of cruelty and brutality which prevail among nations and communities, of social customs, and the low ideals which to so large an extent are pursued,—the jealousies, rivalries, prejudices of races, peoples, classes; the inequalities on account of sex; the degradation of labor in most of the countries of the world; the aggressions upon the rights of the individual, and inflicted penalties because of opinion, in various forms of experience; the inappreciation of the great principle of liberty in human relations, with its accompanying bigotry and narrowness of intellectual vision; the relics of ancient superstitions still manifest, such as, for example, the Roman Catholic ceremony of kissing the Pope's toe; the revival of pilgrimages in Europe, and the worship of sacred relics as witnessed in an exposition of this kind a few years since in one of the principal churches, the Notre Dame of Paris; the whipping of a person last fall in Texas, because he was an infidel; and a bill at present before the Legislature of Virginia, to disqualify those of this class from the right of holding office,—these, and innumerable others of kindred character that might be added, show that we have only entered upon the age of reason, and that much of the less enlightened past must be outgrown before it is completely attained.

Conspicuous among these is this doctrine of future perdition. How the conception ever got into the human brain is an enigma to a rational mind; it is so at variance with all large experience, thorough and efficient use of the power of reason, with the highest modes of thought, and the best spirit of the time. We can only account for its existence through a study of the ancient faiths, as we seek to interpret the origin and significance of their gods and mythologies. It is but a part and piece of these. It is no more distinctive of Christianity than of the religion of Egypt, India, Greece, and Rome. Its source is far back in the old heathen world. It was inherited or contracted by Christianity at its advent, and has been, with various modifications and elaborations, transmitted to our time. It would be impossible for it to arise, or be thought of in an age like the present, or in any other than a barbarous and unenlightened one. Until recently it was well-nigh forgotten by the most rational and advanced minds. It had been supposed it was almost extinct. As another has lately said, "In the world of art, literature, history, philosophy, or science, it was unknown; and it was only here and there, as some revival preacher went his dreary rounds, that ever and anon a bold man ventured to bring it forth from behind a screen of gauze, to materialize it, as the saying is, so that people might think there was something there, they knew not what."

But all of a sudden this horrid conception of a perturbed imagination stalks before, and arrests general attention. Like Banquo's ghost, it would seem, it will not down. Grave and learned divines, in positions of exalted influence, set to work to discuss it in a dignified and serious manner, as though it were to be regarded a reality. The Boston ministers, it was reported, took up the subject at their Monday morning meeting; and the general sentiment was, that no minister should be installed who denied the doctrine. In other Orthodox gatherings, it has been discussed with a like result. Even the Universalists, in order to put themselves right upon the subject, have lately declared in one of their Conventions that they believe much more in it than they have been supposed to. While Dr. Bellows, as the representative of Unitarianism, and President Porter join hands in the persuasion that if it is not positively endless in every instance, it is likely to be in many of a very protracted duration.

Out of the ninety-six clergymen addressed by the Springfield Republican, forty-seven sent back the answer that they teach "endless conscious suffering for the finally impenitent"; out of one hundred by the editor of the Boston Congregationalist, eighty replies were received. Of these, sixty-seven testify that there has been no "essential departure" from the faith on this subject, while thirteen take a somewhat different view. Sixty-three insisted upon belief in the dogma as a prerequisite to eligibility to the ministry, or denominational indorsement. The New York Observer declares its position in these words: "The Lord Jesus Christ has stated the doctrine of eternal punishment more strongly and impressively than any formula or creed; and if Mr. Gladden and other ministers (this gentleman, it will be remembered, was one of those who voted for Mr. Merriam's installation) disbelieve it, they ought to say so, and resign their places as Orthodox ministers. Let us not have Blaueveltism in New England. There and everywhere it becomes a preacher to state squarely what he believes and what he denies, and to face the consequences." Even Mr. Gladden, just mentioned, of the more liberal wing of Congregationalism, affirms his belief in punishment after death; the only question in his mind in regard to it is as to the term of its duration, whether it is limited or eternal.

So it is plain that there is among Christian bodies a very large preponderance of belief in future punishment still existing. Among the Orthodox ones, including the Congregational type, with all the freedom which it claims, and its advanced intelligence, it is very largely a preponderance of belief that the punishment is of endless duration; a few scattering exceptions within it uniting with the so-called liberal denominations in the view that it is limited.

It will be seen that among Orthodox sects it is essential to believe that the greater portion of the human race are doomed to be eternally miserable, in order to obtain good and clean credentials of fitness for the ministerial office. It is true that this conception, as a general thing, is of a less materialistic character, and of less local and definite conditions than formerly. Its sulphurous odors are not so stifling. The devil and his imps do not figure so conspicuously in the descriptions of it. Realizing that these delineations of physical suffering and misery with which theologians were once accustomed to terrify mankind are too shocking to be longer listened to with credulity or patience, it has gradually assumed a considerably modified and more indefinite character. One need but turn over the pages of the old theologians for striking illustrations of this contrast. Take such a passage as this, from Jonathan Edwards, recently quoted by the editor of the Popular Science Monthly, as an example near at hand: "The world will probably be converted into a great lake, or liquid globe of fire, a vast ocean of fire, in which the wicked shall be overwhelmed, which shall always be in tempest; in which they shall be tossed to and fro, having no rest day nor night, vast waves or billows of fire continually rolling over their heads, of which they shall forever be full of a quick sense within and without. Their heads, their eyes, their tongues, their feet, their loins, and their vitals shall forever be full of a glowing, melting fire, fierce enough to melt the very rocks and elements; and also they shall eternally be full of the most quick and lively sense to feel the torments; not for one minute, nor for one day, nor for one age, nor for two ages, nor for ten thousands of millions of ages, one after another, but forever and ever, without any end at all, and never, never to be delivered." It is no wonder that those who listened to such preaching lost their interest for a time in everything else, and under its influence frequently fell down in swoons, or were stricken with insanity, as has often been the result since. How could it be otherwise, if it carried with it any conviction? It is obvious that the doctrine, as a general rule, has a good deal changed since then.

But there are portions of Christendom, and the country, where the old ideas in respect to it are far from obsolete. I have heard, myself, in Roman Catholic churches and in revival meetings, sermons upon this theme which would rival those of Jonathan Edwards. This very renunciation of the grosser and more definite delineations of the abode and condition of the damned in another world has been most effectual in causing the conception itself to be distrusted and discarded; for when one comes to admit that he has held a belief erroneously, even in respect to the form which it assumed,—whenever he begins to hold it vaguely and indefinitely,—then he is likely soon to doubt whether it has any truth, and cast it altogether aside. The literal views of heaven and hell that have prevailed carried with them as strong and positive conviction. The more vague conduct as surely to utter disbelief in respect to them.

And yet, with all these allowances, the doctrine, under any circumstances or in any aspect, the barest implication of the possibility of its truth, is still now, as it has ever been, simply and solely horrible. Col. Ingersoll starts off in one of his lectures with this passage: "I have no respect for any human being who teaches the infamous dogma of hell. I have no respect for any man who preaches it. I have no respect for any man who will pollute the imagination of childhood with that infamous lie. I have no respect for the man who will add to the sorrows of this world with that frightful dogma. I have no respect for the man who endeavors to put that infinite cloud, that infinite shadow, over the heart of humanity." Now this sounds severe, like the language of extravagance. But when we reflect how utterly baseless and untenable is this idea of an endless hell—the intimation that under any circumstances a human soul is to suffer forever for the pitiable shortcomings and mistakes of his weak and imperfect nature during the brief period of his mortal existence; when we reflect that this doctrine is still adhered to and taught by men of sound minds in respect to all other matters,—men who have enjoyed the best advantages of our schools and educational institutions, who live amid all the favoring influences of the present,—we cannot but feel that were they ruled by strict honesty and sincerity, it would not require another day to sweep it from the Church and the imaginations that cherish it.

What a commentary it is upon our methods of education and their results, upon the popular intelligence and integrity, that it should be longer entertained, or that the mere allusion to it with any insinuation of its truth should be listened to with toleration and patience! I confess that when I look at the case as it thus appears to me; when I see how the masses are swayed by the twaddle of Moody and Sankey and the popular revivalist, and realize that the great underlying, impelling purpose of such movements is escape from an endless hell; when I see how utterly swamped the churches and the clergy become in them, and how little clear, independent, and direct criticism they receive, I cannot but sympathize with the heroic work of Col. Ingersoll, and believe that, with all due exceptions for his mode of operation, nevertheless there is need of just such hard thrusts and death-dealing blows as he is giving to the old dogmas of the creeds, which have too long hindered the progress of the human mind, and still becloud and bewilder it like the lingering effects of a distressing nightmare from which it is awakening. It is high time, as we say in familiar parlance, that we were done with such fooling.

Consider how preposterous is the authority upon which belief in the dogma rests,—a few passages in an ancient Jewish book, a notable people, no doubt, but only in their way as other ancient people were in theirs,—a book with much that is lofty and soul-inspiring, but with much also that is absurd and immoral in character, the record and indices of old-time barbarities, the obsolete notions and fancies of a civilization which went to pieces upwards of two thousand years ago; yet this is the ground of the whole controversy. Mr. Merriam, as we have seen, is sound on all points of Orthodoxy except this of endless punishment; and has simply come to the conclusion, through exegetical study—the use of the grammar and lexicon—that the balance of Bible evidence inclines to the doctrine of annihilation rather than to that just referred to.

There must be something dreadful in reserve for the sinner. The penalties and sufferings of the present are altogether insufficient to atone for his offences against one of such perfections as his Creator; and therefore he is doomed to be blotted out of existence at the end of his mortal career, since none but those who have been sanctified through their acceptance of Christ's salvation can share the company of the blessed hereafter, or the presence and glory of the enthroned Sovereign of heaven. This is the best which the Bible promises to the unconverted at death. It is deity's most merciful alternative. It is the utmost stretch of concession to the transgressor consistent with the righteousness and majesty of the Being whose law has been violated,—the biblical or theological Creator and Ruler of the universe.

And it is on just such authority as this that the discordant and warring sects of Christendom have arisen, and their creeds have been established. They have been built up, and their peculiar tenets set forth, on the authority of particular renderings, as a general rule solely of certain texts of the Jewish or Christian Scriptures; as indeed has been the case in respect to many of the political and social barbarities and errors which have survived and found support in our civilization. Now it would be singular, to put it no stronger, if, after all this strife of centuries, all this expenditure of words and energy, the book should turn out to be a very different one, in all its make-up, import, and character, from what the theologians and the Christian world have supposed it to be; and this appears to all who are informed in respect to the new light and criticism which is being thrown upon it by the most competent and independent scholarship of our time is the inevitable result to which we are tending. Indeed, I may say, this has already been effected.

The Orthodox view of the Bible is no less absurd and untenable in the light of modern knowledge than the doctrines deduced from it,—than even this of endless perdition for two-thirds of the human race. Nay, even with the Orthodox view of the Bible, Canon Farrar, one of the great dignitaries of the Church in England, has come forward of late to declare that he has discovered that the texts which are usually construed in support of the doctrine we have been considering are mistranslations of the original, and therefore cannot offer any warrant for the belief; and a number of others no less high in the Church endorse the annunciation. Now this is a very notable occurrence. It is taking the bottom out of the doctrine. It should certainly be good news to those who have experienced the fears and anxieties which it tends to awaken. At the same time it must seem like rather a poor compliment to the wisdom, learning, and penetration of those who have assumed to be the expounders of religion, and the spiritual guides of mankind, if after all the noise and strife and discomfiture of spirit which belief in this doctrine has caused, it shall be determined that they have been simply blind leaders of the blind.

If this doctrine of a condition of unending suffering for mankind hereafter is true, it is impossible to overestimate its importance; and I cannot see how any one who really believes it can refrain from teaching it, nor how they can lend their aid or countenance to any to preach a Christianity with it left out. I have more respect for those, therefore, in such a case as that of Mr. Merriam's, who adhere strictly to the stern requirements of their creeds, than for those, who, professing to believe in the doctrine in respect to which the issue was involved, were yet ready to admit him to the pulpits of their faith. I cannot see how there can be any half-way course, if a person is thoroughly honest in such a matter. I cannot see much more, how a person who occupies a pulpit of a religious body which is supposed to hold this doctrine, or is charged with holding it, at such a time as this, should shrink from openly acknowledging where he stands in respect to it, if he has the manliness or moral courage which one should have in such a position. But of those to whom inquiry was sent by the Congregationalist and the Springfield Republican, a large number, in each instance, sent no reply; and those who did reply in many instances coupled it with the request that their sentiments should not be made public; in other words, they had not sufficient courage to avow their convictions, and take the consequence,—surely not a very admirable display of their qualification for teachers of truth and honesty.

Should a person be undecided in regard to what the Bible teaches pertaining to a doctrine of so much importance? Ought he not to settle it at once and forever, before he attempts to preach Christianity further? And this ought not to be so very difficult. If the Bible is what it is claimed to be, "The Word of God," a revelation to man's ignorance, a guide to heaven, "a light to his feet, and a lamp to his path," the solution to the enigmas of life, so plain that the wayfaring man, though a fool, may not err therein, there is, to those who belong to the radical class, a lesson of great significance as well as incentive to more earnest and strenuous exertion in behalf of their truths and principles, in the disclosures and suggestions in connection with the theme to which we have asked your attention. While it presents, in some respects, a rather discouraging view of intellectual progress in our day, it presents in others much which is cheering and hopeful. It shows us that the stand and effort which freethought is making for clearer and more rational ideas in religion, and in all departments of human thought, and to mould society into more perfect accord with them,—to demolish and exterminate ancient errors and superstitions which still linger in the world,—is a most needful and noble work; as great in its influences and far-reaching results, and as exalted in dignity as any for which men have sacrificed and striven in any age; capable, when fully appreciated and apprehended, of making heroes and martyrs, of founding an order of saints as pure and ideal in the excellence of their spirits as any whose names are inscribed upon the roll of the past. Let us see to it that it does not appeal to us in vain, nor languish through our neglect, our want of zeal, self-sacrifice, and appreciation. Let us seek to teach, and make men realize, the greatness and worth of the present existence,—its duties, opportunities, and manifold sources of rational enjoyment, even with all its sadness and its miseries; to realize that heaven and hell are here and now, and not in some distant place. Thus shall we pursue realities rather than phantoms, the energies of our minds be given to truth rather than error; to our own genuine advancement, and that of the race.

THE OTHER DAY, as a lady of this city was passing some small boys, one of them opened his hand to display some fine agates to his companions. They looked at them admiringly; and presently one of the boys, turning to the fortunate owner, said: "I owe you a licking; but give me one of those agates, and I'll call it square." The little fellow looked up in the other's face, hesitated a moment, and then, selecting a marble, silently passed it over, after which all the lads went on with their play as if nothing unusual had occurred; the little marble-owner seeming to think the bargain a fair one.—Portland Press.

A SPECULATION IN MIRACLES.

HOW A THIRTY SPECULATOR TRIED TO MAKE HIS FORTUNE OUT OF AN ALLEGED APPARITION OF THE VIRGIN MARY AND WHAT CAME OF IT.

LONDON, Feb. 13, 1878.

A miracle was brought before a Paris police court a short time ago. The case was really a curious and interesting one; but at that time all eyes were strained toward London and Constantinople, and the story was almost unnoticed. It would be a pity not to cull it; your readers will perhaps be willing to give it a few minutes' consideration. The case was that of a business man who had formed a partnership with a banker and a photographer for the purpose of making money out of a miraculous vision of the Virgin Mary.

THE APPARITION ON THE APPLE-TREE.

Last spring, in the heart of a small town which had been completely unknown until then, at Cheppy, in the Department of Meuse, a rumor suddenly spread that the Virgin Mary had descended from heaven. She had appeared to two young girls,—to two idiots, say the incredulous; to two candid and pure virgins, say the devotees and good Catholics. Be this as it may, the Virgin showed herself to the masses precisely as she is shown in all pictures of her: clothed in white, with blue ribbons and a blue sash. She stood above an apple-tree, in bloom, her feet resting on the blossoms, which did not even bend under her weight. It was a miracle, in short! The good Virgin exhorted the young girls in the style of the village curate. France, she said, had drawn all her misfortunes upon herself by forsaking the cause of our Holy Father, the Pope, and by working and dancing on Sunday instead of going to mass and to vespers. "Go," said the divine apparition, "go tell the world that it must do penance."

So saying, the apparition vanished from the sight of the masses; there remained nothing but an apple-tree,—a white apple-tree, and nothing more.

The girls hastened to the curate's and to the good sisters; they spoke to the ignorant brothers and to the church-warden's, expatiating upon the favor of which they had been the object to all devout souls. The miracle was noised abroad. From village to village throughout the whole province, and farther still, spread the rumor of the apparition. Pilgrimages were organized; many visitors flocked from all sides to behold the miraculous apple-tree and to see the girls to whom the Virgin had appeared.

THE ADVENT OF THE SPECULATOR.

So far, all was according to rule; everything had followed the ordinary course which miracles are wont to follow. But here there stepped in an intruder, an unauthorized individual, who turned the case aside from its natural course. A certain Collin, a speculator, conceived the idea of forming a partnership, for the purpose of reaping a benefit from the miracle, with a photographer, Dagrin by name, and with the brother-in-law of the photographer, a certain Gorre, a banker in Paris, on the Boulevard Beaumarchais. The banker risked twelve thousand francs in the undertaking, the photographer put in his apparatus, and Collin his intelligence and his wits.

THE MIRACLE ON A BUSINESS FOUNDATION.

The first proceeding of the partners was the purchase of the apple-tree and the surrounding field from a crafty peasant, who charged them three or four times what the land was worth. The second was the erection of a shed on the spot, which served two purposes,—it was a chapel in the front and a public house in the rear. In the chapel the speculator set up an altar, and kept wax tapers constantly lighted; he furnished it with bouquets of artificial flowers, a statuette of the Virgin, and a gorgeous painting representing the Queen of Angels erect on her apple tree and beckoning to the kneeling girls, who gazed upon her in bewilderment.

In the chapel the pilgrims performed their devotions, prostrated themselves, and recited, their novenas; in the public house refreshments were sold to them; and, beside these, zinc medals which had been allowed to remain on the altar, and photographs of the Mother of God on her apple-tree. These photographs were produced in court, and revealed an unexpected resemblance between the Virgin Mary and a pretty actress of the Boulevard theatres, Mlle. Alice Regnault, an account of whose suit with the shirt-maker was still to be found in most of yesterday's newspapers.

THE SCHEMES AND PLANS OF THE SPECULATORS.

The object of the speculation was, then, the sale of photographs and medallions commemorative of the marvellous apparition. If the pilgrimage "took," brilliant business could be done, and the apple-tree field could be re-sold for ten times the purchase price. Of course, for would not the clergy have need of the spot for the erection of a church, perhaps even of a cathedral and inns like those of Lourdes, in La Sabette? It was therefore necessary to push forward the sale of the medallions and photographs; it was necessary to incite the fervor of the faithful. With this end in view the three confederates spread a circular far and wide, which read thus:—

"OUR LADY OF CHEPPY.

APPARITION

OF

OUR LADY OF THE SACRED HEART

AT CHEPPY (MEUSE), MAY 15, 1877.

Photographs of the Apparition.

Commemorative Medallions.

"A Parisian banker, residing on the Boulevard Beaumarchais, has just been cured of a disease which was considered incurable, after a novena in honor of Our Lady of Cheppy. In recognition of this divine favor, he is going to erect a magnificent votive chapel on the site of the apparition.

"Moreover, we are notified of two other miraculous cures in the cantons of Ville-sur-Tourbe and Vienne-le-Château.

"A numerous and meditative crowd is constantly visiting this sanctuary and imploring the powerful protection of Our Lady of Cheppy."

The Parisian banker who thus speaks of himself as an incurable cured by Our Lady of Cheppy was the partner, Mr. Gorre.

TEMPORARY SUCCESS.

Allured by the prospect of special protection, of personal favors, and of miraculous cures, pilgrims flocked to Cheppy. On one occasion, no less than twenty-five hundred persons, both curiosity-seekers and devotees, all simpletons, were counted defiling before the marvellous apple-tree. The speculation seemed to be in a fair way to become lucrative. This was in the good time of the government of moral order; M. de Broglie governed for the account of the Vatican, and Madame la Maréchale de MacMahon wrote to the Pope: "Holy Father, are you satisfied?"

THE RESULTS OF A FAILURE TO PLACE STOCK WHERE IT WOULD DO MOST GOOD.

However, the speculation miscarried. The clergy had not been invited to have a finger in the pie. The partners had seen fit to do without them; or at any rate they had not given them a sufficient interest in the matter. This was a great blunder. It is impossible in France to carry on an altar for any length of time if the priest is not to find it profitable. In such cases, it is usual for the bishop to hold himself prudently aloof until success is assured; but in this particular instance the aloofness soon became an underhand hostility. The confessors, when consulted, and the curates in the pulpit, by no means denied the reality of the divine apparition; but they expressed doubts as to the authenticity of the photographs, and as to the efficacy of the medallions, so that cures became rare. It was established that the apple-tree decidedly lacked power. The pilgrims could remain kneeling about it and gazing at the heavens for days together, but the Virgin no longer appeared to anybody; the deaf remained deaf; persons afflicted with catarrh retained their catarrh; and the impotent remained impotent. In order to obtain a prodigy, a true prodigy, more capital was needed; for the subjects fit for the production of authentic miracles do not abound, and they charge high prices. By degrees the clergy had incited open hostility; in a charge by the Bishop of Verdun the faithful had been put on their guard against the new miracles which had been promised at Cheppy. In short, the pilgrims became fewer and fewer, and soon they remained at home. Collin was left with his field, his apple-tree, his public house-chapel, his medallions, his photographs, and the debts he had incurred for the carrying on of the miracle, for he had far exceeded his twelve thousand francs.

THE QUARREL AND THE REVELATIONS.

As is usual in such cases, two of the confederates turned against the third. They wanted their money refunded; Dagrin wanted payment for his photographs, and Gorre wished his money returned; and, setting the sheriff's officers to work, they seized upon a piece of property held by Collin; they even seized upon the public house-chapel, the miracle field, and the divine-apparition apple-tree!

But Collin was struggling against his creditors, to whom, he maintained, he owed nothing, on account of their act of partnership. In order to intimidate the photographer, he had a visiting-card prepared as follows:—

"FAYOLLE,
Secrétaire du Parquet,
Affaires Criminelles."

(Fayolle, Secretary of the Public Prosecutor, Criminal Cases.)

Provided with this stern talisman, he went to an engraver's, had a seal made to correspond with it, and had this delivered to him. Being in possession of these threatening weapons, he wrote a letter to Dagrin, bearing the stamp of the above mentioned terrible seal, and summoning him to appear at the bar of the Procureur de la République.

By means of these deceptions, Collin hoped to work on the mind of Dagrin, and through him on Gorre's; but he had forgotten to pay for the seal he had ordered; the engraver went to the Public Prosecutor's to demand payment for it, and the fraud was detected.

Let us add that during the proceedings a charge of breach of trust was made against the defendant by a woman named Betton, who had entrusted him with government bonds yielding an income of fifty francs, which he was to sell, and the amount of which (less two hundred francs which were lent him) he was to employ for the purchase of another bond. He kept all. Collin therefore appeared before the police tribunal under an indictment for counterfeiting a magistrate's seal, for using the counterfeited seal, and finally for attempted blackmail and breach of trust.

The facts were patent. The defendant was overwhelmed by the evidence; his tricks and his fraudulent manoeuvres had turned against him. The judges were lenient toward this rascal, whose craft and effrontery they could not but admire. Collin was condemned to only three years of imprisonment: one year for having counterfeited a public seal and for having used it fraudulently, one year for attempted blackmail against Dagrin, and one year for breach of trust against Madame Betton.

As for the very knot of the question, the speculation on the miracle, the sale of the photographs, and the miraculous medallions, after the facts had been duly established, no farther mention was made of them. Collin was not found guilty on this head. There is an old precept that "Devant le peuple, il ne faut pas manier les casseroles du sanctuaire." (The saucepans of the sanctuary must not be handled before the people.)—ELIE RECLUS, in Evening Post.

TRINITY CHURCH LEASES.

THE BLIGHT THAT HAS FALLEN UPON PROPERTY ON THE WEST SIDE OF THE TOWN.

At a large meeting of the tenants of Trinity Church, last evening, Mr. Weyman in the chair, the Hon. George M. Chapman said:—

We have assembled to join in a respectful petition to our landlord for a reduction of ground rents upon about seven hundred lots in the central part of the city, which, from the depreciation of property and rents, have become too grievous to be borne. Our landlord is a great religious corporation which bestrides the city from the Battery to Houston Street, and from Broadway to the Hudson River, holding $60,000,000 of property under a grant somewhat like a feudal legacy of the Middle Ages. The Trinity Church charter was annulled by the Legislature after the Revolution, and a bill was introduced to secularize the estate; but, before its passage, the church called to its aid Aaron Burr, who obtained the present charter, and secured from the corporation for sixty-nine years the lots you now occupy. He sold his lease to John Jacob Astor, who cut up the property, and leased it in lots to our predecessors. They and we have covered the ground with buildings, have graded, paved, and sewered the streets; and, in short, everything that has been done to improve the property has been done by the tenants.

You own all the houses and improvements, and this great religious corporation owns only the naked land.

Trinity Church exists and holds its property in trust by the will of the people of the State, expressed through their servants at Albany; and the Legislature can at any time, for cause, repeal its charter, secularize its immense property, realize upon it, and apply the proceeds to the public good. The property of this corporation is nearly, if not quite, valuable enough to pay the debt of the State and of every town and city within its limits; but with that fact we have nothing to do.

Trinity Church has held the land for one hundred and fifty years. Up to a very recent period, it was liberal to its tenants,—so liberal, indeed, that their leases were considered to be nearly equivalent to the ownership of the property in fee, and mortgages upon it were frequently taken by money lenders. Under the present policy, it cannot be mortgaged or sold at any price.

This sixty-nine year lease to Aaron Burr expired May 1, 1868, and the property reverted to Trinity Church. You were then told that the vestry needed a little time to deliberate as to whether they would sell out the fee of the land to the owners of the buildings, or follow their old practice, and grant twenty-one year leases at a rental of five per cent. on the appraised value of the land with renewals. They told you that in the mean time they would grant leases for two years at a five per cent. rental on the present value of the land, with taxes and water rents to be paid by the tenants, the leases to be renewed at that rate until they could mature some plan to sell or to grant twenty-one year leases to the owners of the houses, who, they acknowledged, had a vested right to purchase or to hold a perpetual lease on the original terms. Relying upon their representations, you accepted their terms. The rent fixed was not unreasonable, when we consider that it was soon after the war, when gold was at 250.

When these two-year leases expired, they were renewed; and the renewals have continued at the same rental, despite the fact that gold is down, money value is doubled, and our well-to-do tenants have left us. When we asked for a reduction of our rents, equivalent to the rise in money and the consequent reduction in the value of property, we were told that we had signed away all our rights to our property, except the right to tear down our houses and remove the lumber, and that we had no rights which Trinity Church was bound to respect.

Twelve years ago the property was in flourishing condition. Hudson Street was a great thoroughfare, and the chief centre of the furniture and upholstery trade. The refusal of Trinity Church to give leases longer than two years has driven these and other great industries from the street, and has converted one of the fairest portions of the city into a region of tenement houses, making the property unsalable at any price, reducing the rental of both houses and land below the ground rent exacted by the church, and compelling us to pay all taxes and water rents, or abandon $2,000,000 of our property in houses to the corporation.

A short time ago one of the vestrymen told me that he happened to pass through this part of the church property, and was struck with its squalid and dilapidated condition. He said that it would be a godsend if a fire would sweep over it, and wipe it out. It would not be a godsend to the insurance companies, nor to the church; for at present you could not find tenants who would be willing to take the ground rent free, and put thereon such buildings as the church requires.

The rent now exacted is more than seven per cent. per annum upon the whole assessed value of the property, land, and houses; and fourteen per cent. ground rent upon their land. In addition, they throw the whole burden of the city taxation upon us, besides the water rents. There is no other landlord that would attempt to take such advantage of his tenants, and wring out of them more than the whole income of their property. When we complain, we are told that we may surrender our leases, and receive about one-tenth of the value of our buildings; and several of us have been obliged to accept these terms.

At the close of Mr. Chapman's address, it was resolved that a committee of five should be appointed to wait upon the vestry of Trinity Church, and ask, in the name of one thousand families, a reduction in their ground rents. On motion of Dr. Philip E. Donlin, of Houston Street, the committee were instructed to petition the Board of Assessment to reduce the assessment upon all real estate in the city.—N. Y. Sun, March 13.

COL. GEORGE W. FLOWER was standing in the square at Watertown, the other day, when he spied a farmer who some weeks ago had sold him some very "crooked" hay. The party in question is an active professor of religion, and a most zealous worker for his own pocket. The man's profession and practice being in such marked contrast caused the Colonel to eye him with dislike. When he came up, the Colonel charged him with deception in the matter of hay. The skindint stoutly denied the charge. The Colonel drew himself up to his full height, and disdainfully observed: "I am a soldier, sir—not a liar!" "So am I a soldier," whined the promoter of "crooked" hay. "You!" ejaculated the Colonel, in a tone of disgust! "What kind of a soldier are you?" "I am a soldier of the Cross," said the skindint, with a detestable flourish of the hand. "That may be," said the Colonel, dryly, "but you've been on a furlough ever since I knew you."—Carthage (N. Y.) Republican.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE HOPE OF IMMORTALITY.

BY S. P. PUTNAM.

I have not pierced beyond the tomb,
And caught the secrets there;
I cannot see a shining world,
And blessed angels fair;
The oracles of Nature still
To farthest star are dumb;
Its flashing wonders give no voice
Of any life to come.

We know death only as a sleep,
What may be is untold:
From its wide blankness not a beam
Hath o'er our pathway rolled,
We know this life; we know no more;
Beside the falling sod
Our vision falls; it sees no soul
Upspringing to its God.

Yet, when we press the silent lips,
And shroud the form so dear,
We do it with a wondrous hope,
And not in pain and fear;
We lay the body in the dust,
Yet still our love proclaims
That what in love is beautiful,
In deathless glory flames.

Our heart is greater than our sight,
Our reason than our sense;
For thought is first, and thought is last,
Its own bright evidence. |
It makes the world where science tells;
And shall that world still bound
The height and breadth of its vast fire
Whose secret is not found?

From realms of thought our life aspires,
The glowing deeps within;
And all the amplitude of stars
Shines with a light akin.
The music of the sea but throws
An echo to the mind,
Of what its very nature prompts
That it is unconfined.

Thus knowledge falls; but faith is winged
With hope and love divine,
And force and matter, sweeping on,
Give no destroying sign;
So still affection's wealth of joy
And conscience' fervor bright,
Beyond the grave exultant flow,
Unchecked by its brief night.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N. B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 6.

Chas. S. Adams, 25 cents; Theophilus Brown, $10; American News Co., $5.05; Jonathan Watson, $10; F. A. Angell, $3; Ezekiel Walker, $3.20; L. S. Haggood, $3.20; Daniel Johnson, $3.20; Rev. G. A. Thayer, $3.20; John Bantin, $3.20; W. H. Hamlen, $3.20; J. A. J. Wilcox, $4.25; James Shaw, $3.56; S. W. Varney, $1; C. A. Gurley, $30; Frank L. Pope, $3.20; Elizabeth Butterworth, $3; Cash, $1.25; H. C. Orth, $3.20; Abraham Roth, $3; George Lewis, $3.25; C. Whitaker, $5; F. Loefer, $3; M. M. Pratt, $2; J. B. Tenney, $1; L. F. Robinson, $2; Joseph Michl, $6.40; J. W. Goodrich, $3.20; Warren Griswold, $10; B. B. Griswold, $10; Jos. S. Hill, $10; J. G. Jenkins, $4; Rev. J. H. Allen, $3.20; Enoch Plummer, $3.20; Lydia M. Plummer, $10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 11, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. M. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB
WILCOCK (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUBUR, BRUCE F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSBY, Editorial Contributors.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LIBERAL LEAGUE.

ONE WAY TO DO IT.

Reader, do you desire to organize a Liberal League in your town? If so, this is a good way to do it: Draw up a paper in the following form, and present it to all the liberals in your vicinity:—

"We, the undersigned, are in favor of organizing a Local Liberal League in the town of —, and agree to meet for that purpose at the house of — on Saturday evening next. We each agree to pay the sum set opposite our respective names towards the ten dollars required to procure a charter from the National Liberal League."

Names.	Residence.	Amount.

When you have procured ten names and ten dollars, you are ready for organization. Of course, the more names the better. I shall be pleased to furnish form of Constitution when required. Reader, will you attend to this work immediately, before it passes from your mind?

H. L. GREEN,

Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., March 15, 1878.

ANOTHER JOURNAL is to enter the liberal field, despite the discouragements of the times. Mr. Oliver Hull Lowrey has issued the prospectus of the Liberal Age, a new weekly, to be published at 41 South Clark Street, Chicago, at $2.00 a year. The first number is announced for May 1. It is to take "Anti-Christian and Scientific" ground, and promises various well-arranged departments. The prospectus gives a favorable idea of it in the main, but further notice must be reserved for its first issue.

A CALL TO ORGANIZE IN NEW YORK.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Will you be so kind as to publish the following lines in THE INDEX?

More than a week ago, several liberal friends assembled privately to discuss the importance of forming another auxiliary Liberal League in the city of New York. A committee of four gentlemen agreed to make the necessary arrangements for a more extensive meeting in a central location of our city, the express purpose of which is to organize. The arrangements have so far been made, and the meeting will take place Friday evening, the 12th of this month, in the parlors of the Liederkranz Building, at No. 35 East 4th Street. Several speakers are invited to state the object and aim of our gathering. Questions pertaining to the necessity and importance of organization will be freely discussed. The means and ways by which we can best further and give prominence to the liberal ideas of our age will be carefully considered.

There are numbers of able liberal friends in our city, and we would like to invite them, through the columns of your paper, to a fellowship in this great movement of organized liberalism. We want their help, their presence, their sympathy at our next meeting. Only a little effort from our liberal friends in and around New York is demanded. Let us assemble, let us meet, let us exchange our hopes and our misgivings; let those who are still doubtful as to the necessity of organized liberalism be fired by the enthusiasm of those who consider this movement of vital importance, which requires, however, some insight to be appreciated. We desire to see the readers of THE INDEX and other liberal friends, whose abode is in New York or in its neighborhood, at the next meeting of Liberals, Friday evening, the 12th inst., at the Liederkranz Building, No. 35 East 4th Street, New York city.

Yours truly, CLARA NEYMAN.

NEW YORK, April 4, 1878.

GENERAL DIX ON TRINITY CHURCH.

Six or seven weeks ago, a friend in New York city wrote to us that, suspecting some injustice had been done to Trinity Church in our article of January 5, and relying on the fairness of THE INDEX, he had invited Rev. Morgan Dix, D.D., rector of Trinity Church, to send a statement of his own on that subject for publication in these columns; that Dr. Dix had replied to him, expressing a desire to send such a statement, but doubting whether THE INDEX would publish it; and that he (the writer) desired to know whether he would be authorized to give Dr. Dix a definite promise of publication on our part. To this letter we immediately replied: "Of course I shall be willing to print any article the Rev. Morgan Dix may send on that subject, and just as he writes it. This you may say to him, for I mean no injustice to any one. Equally of course, I shall feel free to publish any statement on the subject on the other side that I may be furnished with," etc.

Since that time we have been daily expecting to receive the proposed statement, and for this reason have refrained from noticing any of the press comments on our original article, preferring to present the objections to our article in the most authoritative form. Last Friday Causten Browne, Esq., of this city, a personal friend of General Dix (who, as is well known, is ex-Governor of the State of New York, Comptroller of Trinity Church Corporation, and father of Rev. Morgan Dix), called at THE INDEX office and very courteously placed in our hands the subjoined article. In order to give as great prominence to these criticisms as to the original article criticised, we publish it here on the editorial pages, and with leaded type, contrary to our usual practice with occasional communications; for in so important a matter nothing less would satisfy the genuine spirit of fairness and the honest love of truth. Without further explanation we append General Dix's letter:—

OFFICE OF THE CORPORATION OF TRINITY CHURCH,
No. 187 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK,
April 2, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX, BOSTON, MASS.:—

Sir,—An article in your paper of the 5th of January last, to which my attention has very recently been called, professes to state some "ASTOUNDING FACTS ABOUT TRINITY CHURCH."

As these alleged facts have no existence, I ask, as an act of justice to Trinity Church, the use of your columns to correct the misstatements which have been imposed on you. I present them in the order in which I find them.

1. "Trinity Church owns a vast amount of real estate in New York city, lying compactly between Broadway and the North River, and extending nearly two miles in length, and from one-fourth to three-fourths of a mile in breadth. The whole district enclosed by a line running eastward from the North River through Cortland Street to Broadway, thence northward seven squares to Warren Street, thence one square westward to Church Street, thence eleven squares northward to Canal Street and (continuing on Green Street) seven squares still northward to Amity Street, thence six squares westward to Sixth Avenue, thence four squares northward to Greenwich Avenue, and thence seven squares south-westward on Christopher Street, where the line strikes the North River once more,—all this immense district lying in the most valuable part of the city belongs to Trinity Church, together with considerable territory south of Cortland Street concerning the exact boundaries of which we are left in some doubt."

The district embraced in the boundaries above described contains, as nearly as can be calculated, five thousand lots of the usual dimensions in the city—twenty-five feet by one hundred. The whole number of lots belonging to Trinity Church is seven hundred and fifty,—about one-seventh of the number in the above described district. The property of Trinity Church is, therefore, overstated about six hundred per cent. In other words, of the five thousand lots four thousand two hundred and fifty belong to individuals, and not to this Corporation.

The seven hundred and fifty lots belonging to the latter do not lie "compactly" in the district referred to, but are scattered over it singly or in small groups.

2. "The value of this enormous amount of real estate is, at a low valuation, fully SEVENTY MILLIONS of dollars."

This estimate is obviously founded upon the misapprehension that Trinity Church is the owner of the whole district referred to, instead of one-seventh part of it.

Thus the whole of the real estate of this Corporation, according to the estimate of your informant, correcting his statement as to its extent, would be but ten millions. This, however, is an exaggeration. The income derived from it last year was $456,786.45,—less than the legal interest of seven millions of dollars. This year it will be much less; and the whole property is productive, except the ground occupied by seven churches, four cemeteries, four school-houses, a rectory, an infirmary, and a very few vacant lots. No reasonable estimate would place it at a higher value than seven millions.

3. "If we correctly understand our informant, Trinity Church pays no tax on the land itself, though the lessees pay taxes on the buildings they have erected upon it under long leases."

The entire inaccuracy of this statement will be seen by the following extract of a letter, which I addressed to General Grant in March, 1876, to correct a like misapprehension on his part:—

"The fact is, that the Corporation of Trinity Church is taxed, under the laws of this State, precisely in accordance with the suggestions in your message to Congress. Its property consists of church edifices, cemeteries, school-houses, an infirmary, a rectory, and several hundred lots of ground, which, with the exception of a few used for parochial purposes, are leased partly for short, and partly for long, periods. On the short leases the Corporation pays the taxes; on the long leases the taxes are paid by the lessees. I paid in September last, as Comptroller of the Corporation, on the former, $46,943.91; and we estimate the amount paid on the latter at $80,000, making over $100,000 paid to the city this year for taxes, besides a considerable sum for assessments. We pay taxes on every foot of ground used for secular purposes. We pay on our rectory, in which the rector resides, on the office, in which the business of the Corporation is transacted, although it is within the boundaries of St. Paul's Cemetery. In fact, nothing is exempt except the church-edifices, the cemeteries, four school-houses, in which free schools are kept, and an infirmary, in which the sick receive gratuitous treatment."

I will only add that I have, as Comptroller of Trinity Church, paid to the city for taxes on its real estate since Oct. 1, 1877, the sum of $64,107.97.

4. "According to the official records in the offices of the Chief of Police and the Excise Commissioners, the real estate of Trinity Church supports SEVEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY-FOUR LIQUOR-SALOONS, or gin-mills, and NINETY-SIX HOUSES OF PROSTITUTION (ninety-two white and four colored), with many others suspected to be such."

The utter recklessness of this accusation cannot be better illustrated than by the statement of the fact that the alleged number of liquor-saloons and houses of prostitution is eight hundred and sixty; exceeding by one hundred and ten the whole number of lots owned by Trinity Church. If the accusation were true, there would be a liquor-saloon on every lot belonging to this corporation, and on ninety-six of its lots a liquor-saloon and a house of prostitution. The charge is destitute even of a shadow of foundation. The number of lots of which the corporation has the entire control is four hundred and eighty-three. On two hundred and fifty-nine of these the lessees own the houses; on two hundred and twenty-four the houses belong to the church. The former are leased for two years, and the latter for one. On all the leases of these four hundred and eighty-three lots there has been for years a covenant on the part of the lessee that no intoxicating liquors shall be sold on the premises. It is as follows: "That he, the said party of the second part (lessee), his executors, administrators, and assigns, and each and every under-tenant or occupant of the said premises, or of any part thereof, shall not, nor will at any time during the term hereby demise, sell, or expose for sale, any strong or spirituous liquors, wine, ale, or beer, or take or have a license for such sale."

This covenant is rigidly enforced, and I say without fear of contradiction that there is not a single liquor-saloon or "gin-mill" on any one of these four hundred and eighty-three lots. It is proper to add that there are two hundred and sixty-seven lots held for long terms on old leases; over these the Corporation has no control; but a ground rent is regularly collected, and the Vestry have no knowledge, nor do the records of the Police or Excise Department show that any one of them is used for either of the purposes alleged by your informant.

To put this calumnious accusation against Trinity Church effectually at rest, I addressed letters of inquity to the Police and Excise Commissioners, and have received the following answers:—

POLICE DEPARTMENT OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
300 MULBERRY STREET, NEW YORK,
March 30, 1878.

Dear Sir,—In response to your letter of inquiry of the 18th instant, I transmit the enclosed report, which I trust will prove satisfactory.

Very respectfully,

WM. F. SMITH, President.

GEN'L JOHN A. DIX.

POLICE DEPARTMENT OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
300 MULBERRY STREET, NEW YORK,
March 30, 1878.

GEN'L WM. F. SMITH, President Board of Police:
Sir,—Referring to the letter of Gen'l John A. Dix to you, dated March 18, 1878, the undersigned have the honor to report:—

That the letter calls attention to the following statement as having appeared in a newspaper published in Boston: "According to official records in the offices of the Chief of Police and the Excise Commissioners, the real estate of Trinity Church supports SEVEN HUNDRED AND SIXTY FOUR LIQUOR SALOONS, or gin-mills, and NINETY-SIX KNOWN HOUSES OF PROSTITUTION (ninety-two white and four colored), with many others suspected to be such."

The Records of the Police Department do not state nor show that the real estate of Trinity Church supports seven hundred and sixty-four, or any other number, of liquor-saloons or gin-mills, or ninety-six, or any other number, of known or suspected houses of prostitution.

Having a very general knowledge of the records and reports of the Police Department and its officers, it is our belief that the name of Trinity Church does not appear on them at all.

Very respectfully submitted,

GEORGE W. WALLING, Supt.
S. C. HAWLEY, Chief Clerk.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF EXCISE,
296 MULBERRY STREET, NEW YORK,
April 2, 1878.

JOHN A. DIX, Esq.:

Sir,—Yours of the 18th March duly received, and I am instructed by the Board of Excise Commissioners to send you the information requested.

I would respectfully state that the official records in this office do not show the granting of any license to parties selling liquors, or saloon-keepers occupying property owned by the Corporation of Trinity Church.

By order,
CASPER C. CHILDS,
Clerk to the Board.

I might well be pardoned the strongest expression of indignation at these calumnious accusations against Trinity Church; but I forbear, from the belief that you have published them without any suspicion of their untruth, and that you will cheerfully give the same publicity to their refutation.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN A. DIX.

Inasmuch as we possess no original knowledge on the subject discussed in the above letter, but, as we stated at the time, relied on information furnished by another person in whose good faith we had and still have the utmost confidence, we refrain for the present from all comment on the statements of General Dix, except to point out that the original assertions respecting the number of liquor-saloons and brothels self-evidently grew out of the supposition that Trinity Church owned the whole territory described in our article. In order to show that the charge of "utter recklessness" on this point does not in the least affect ourself or our informant, it becomes necessary for us to state on what authority we gave that description of the real estate owned by Trinity Church.

Our immediate informant, whose own name it is unnecessary to give, even were we authorized to give it, furnished us with a map of New York city, "upon which," he wrote, "is outlined by the Hon. Clinton Roosevelt (an old and prominent lawyer of that city, and who is conversant with every inch of property owned by that corporation) the property owned by the Trinity Church Corporation. To any one conversant with the city of New York, there need be no difficulty in forming an estimate of its value. When I stated to Mr. Roosevelt that I had been guilty of making the assertion that the Trinity Corporation owned property in the city of New York worth seventy millions of dollars, upon which were situated more houses of prostitution and gin-mills than upon the combined ecclesiastical property of the rest of the city, and I had called upon him to learn whether I had been guilty of misrepresentation, that I might correct my statement, he unhesitatingly declared that I had told the truth, and he would direct me to the facts. The map enclosed is, or was, outlined by that gentleman. Upon his suggestion I employed a detective, who had access to the offices of the Chief of Police and the Excise Commissioners, and the following is his report, obtained from the records of those offices: From the Police Department, the number of known houses of prostitution situated upon the property so outlined is ninety-six (ninety-two white and four colored). The number of known liquor-saloons, taken from the office of the Excise Commissioners, is seven hundred and sixty-four."

This information and the map referred to were what we relied upon in writing our original article. So extraordinary a discrepancy as that between the statements of General Dix and Mr. Roosevelt (both of whom we believe to be honorable gentlemen) respecting the amount of real estate owned by Trinity Church astonishes us; and we must leave it unexplained as it stands. If there is "utter recklessness" in the description of that property given by us, it was certainly not our own. The confidence expressed by General Dix in our intention of publishing only the truth in this matter is not undeserved; we should scorn to let either prejudice or partiality color any statement of ours on a question of fact. We can only wait for further light, expressing profound regret if inaccurate information has led us into injustice to Trinity Church.

DEMOCRACY versus COMMUNISM.

"The highest ideal of a democracy is that which secures to every citizen equality before the law, freedom of person, freedom in the family, freedom of conscience, freedom of opinion, freedom of speech, freedom of trade, freedom of labor, freedom of property, freedom of action when not injurious to the State or to society, a share in the election of his rulers, and in the making of the laws by which he is governed, and in the voting of taxes which he is called upon to contribute: which provides that the enlightened will of the majority shall be the rule of all, while none shall be restrained, but for the general good; which, combining the strength of a whole people, has for its first object security for the rights and liberties of every member of the State."

But such an ideal of freedom is decried by communists as "individualism." Their scheme utterly ignores liberty. The individual man is no more than a mechanical part of the whole community: he has no free will, no independence of thought or action. Every act of his life is prescribed for him. Individual liberty is surrendered to the State. Everything that men prize most in life is to be taken out of their hands. Their religion, their education, the management of their families, their property, their industry, their earnings, are dictated by the ruling powers. Such a scheme of government, if practicable, would create a despotism exceeding any known in the history of the world. It was one of the evils of the religious creeds that the dignity of human nature was abased until the nobler aspirations of men were humbled to the dust. In civil life, communism aims at the same abasement of the human character. But, in the one case, men at least humbled themselves before God; in the other, they are required to prostrate themselves before their equals among men, for the sake of an arbitrary scheme of government in which all are called upon to sacrifice their liberty for the remote and speculative good of the community. "For the sake of equality," said Mably, in his treatise De la Legislation, "the State ought to be intolerant." And in this scheme of affected equality, the higher natures are subjected to the lower. According to Louis Blanc, "De chacun suivant ses facultés: à chacun suivant ses besoins." (Histoire de dix Ans.) In other words, no man is to profit by his own strength, abilities, or industry, but is to minister to the wants of the weak, the stupid, and the idle. To want much and to do little would be the aim of the communist economy.

The natural effect of such theories would be to repress the energies of mankind: and it is their avowed object to proscribe all the more elevated aims and faculties of individuals, and all the arts and accomplishments of life. Babeuf even denounced intercourse with foreigners as dangerous to principles of equality! Helne, writing from Paris in 1840, thus spoke of the communists: "Truly, only with fear and trembling can I think of the time when those dark iconoclasts shall attain empire: with their horny hands they will break up those marble statues so dear to my heart; they will shatter all those fanciful playthings and gewgaws of art which poets loved so much; they will cut down my laurels and plant potatoes there," etc., etc.

Since critics of communism have shown that equality could not fail to deprive nations and society of their highest distinctions, of genius, of learning, of the arts, of invention, of cultivated taste and manners, its professors have not shrunk from confessing their jealousy and hatred of those aspirations which have ever been the pride and glory of mankind.

Doctrines so repugnant to any existing scheme of society and to human nature might be regarded as the visions of some eccentric Utopia. But the dreams of philosophers in ancient and modern times were to be reduced to a terrible reality in France. It was too late to construct an ideal community with the general consent of its individual members. Society was already established upon the basis of property and public and private rights; and the communists were resolved to subvert it. Whether by social contracts, or progressive taxation, or prohibitory laws against accumulation, or a legislative division of property, or by force, the aim of all alike was the redistribution of property for the common enjoyment of the community.

In the first revolution, the political principles of communism were so widely spread through the mass of the working-classes, and received so much recognition, that their dangerous power continued to threaten every successive government, and is still the dread of France and of Europe. Its dangers becoming more formidable in every revolution, culminated in the brief reign of the Commune in Paris in 1871, which revealed the power of the communist party, and the disastrous operation of their subversive principles. Meanwhile, the social theories of communism assumed a new revolutionary character. It had been the aim of the early revolutionists to overthrow thrones and aristocracies in order to insure liberty and equality. It was the further aim of the communists to crush capitalists and the middle classes, thus fulfilling the foreboding of the gifted De Tocqueville: "Pense-t-on qu'après avoir détruit la féodalité, et vaincu les rois, la démocratie reculera devant les bourgeois et les riches? S'arrêtera-t-elle maintenant qu'elle est devenue si forte, et ses adversaires si faibles?" (Democr. en Amérique.) Communism was accepted by working-men as a revolt against capital. It was in this spirit that they took part in the revolutions of 1830, of February, 1848, and in the terrible insurrection of June in the same year. For a time they were utterly routed and cast down. The strong rule of the second empire left them no hope of a successful resistance in France, and at length they resolved to advance their ends by a general combination among the workmen of Europe.

By far the most mischievous and dangerous fanatics of European democracy are the socialists and communists. But as their wild schemes for the reconstruction of society are repugnant to all the principles of liberty, and to the eternal instincts of mankind, they must not be confounded with the recognized principles of political democracy which may be expressed as summoned up by Cicero in his De Republica: "Nam in ullâ civitate, nisi in qua summa potestas populi est, ullum domicilium libertas habet."

While rational liberty has been gaining ground in many European States, its principles have been discredited by the violence and dangerous designs of democratic and socialist factions. One of the most repellant characteristics of the extreme democratic party throughout Europe is its irreverent spirit. Without veneration for the religion, the history, or the traditions of their own country, without respect for its great men, they are possessed by an overweening confidence in themselves. Without toleration for the opinions or regard for the interests of others, they pursue their own objects with obstinate resolution. They seem to hate their own governments more than a foreign enemy. Their patriotism displays itself in the abuse of their rulers. In every international dispute their own country is in the wrong. All who are not with them are against them, and are reviled as corrupt and wicked. Such a spirit naturally repels noble minds, otherwise earnest in the popular cause and confident in the people. As the frantic democracy of the French revolutionists of 1793 outraged the sober friends of liberty throughout Christendom, so the disciples of that school in France and other countries—red republicans and communists—have since alarmed the higher and middle classes, who are now associated with the government of their country, and have become the strongest defenders of property and order against the excesses of democracy.

An "International Association of Workmen" was established in 1864, for mutual defence against employers of labor in all countries. But it was not enough to combat the power of capital by combinations of working-men. Capital itself was their natural enemy and must be overcome. It had made workmen slaves, and it was now their turn to subject it to their own uses. Socialism and communism were uppermost in their councils. All rights of property were to be confiscated in the interests of the many. They declared that the emancipation of labor, in all countries, was the end to which every political movement should be subordinate, and that it was their duty to recognize the rights of man and of citizen. War was thus declared against capital, and societies of workmen were affiliated in all parts of Europe. Newspapers supported the movement, and proclaimed its objects with even less reserve than its leaders. L'Egalité warned the bourgeoisie that they were about to be swallowed up, and that the triumph of the workmen, upon the ruins of capital, was at hand. L'Internationale contended for the collective proprietorship of the soil, coöperative work-shops, and the exclusive taxation of the rich. The same journal affirmed that the working-classes had overthrown the nobility merely to put the bourgeoisie in their place, and that the domination of the bourgeoisie was the slavery of the proletariat. This journal at another time stigmatized the aristocracy and the bourgeoisie as wild beasts, and declared a social revolution as the aim of the Association.

Congresses were held at Geneva, Brussels, Basle, and elsewhere, in which the principles of the Association were boldly avowed. At the Congress at Brussels, in 1868, the President, Eugène Dupont, declared: "The clergy say we wish neither government, nor army, nor religion. They say, truly, we wish no more governments, for they crush us with taxes; we wish no more taxes; we wish no more armies, for they massacre us; we wish no more religions, for religions stifle intelligence." The Congress at Basle, in 1869, declared that society had a right to abolish individual property in the soil, and restore it to the community, and that it was necessary to exercise that right.

Local sections of the Association also, from time to time, published their sentiments to the world. The Marseille section, in April, 1870, wrote: "Let the State, the Church, and the bourgeoisie combine for a work of imposture and ignominy,—the avenging people will confound them in a common ruin." In the same month the workmen of Lyons, addressing their countrymen, bid defiance to capital and to employers of labor, and promised to the working-classes possession of the soil, the mines, and the work-shops. "Henceforth no employers, none but workers." In the trial of communists by the Correctional Tribunal of Lyons, in April, 1874, evidence was produced in proof of the dangerous doctrines of the prisoners. One of them had said: "God and property can only make tyrants and slaves, and that is why I declare against both." In a pamphlet entitled Social Liquidation, it was written: "Massacres ought to be the sole thought and occupation of the working-man, whose interest it is to rid himself completely of those who live by his labor." Other evidence to the same effect was given.

The leaders of this mischievous Association were the chief promoters of the movement of the Commune of Paris in 1871; and their dangerous activity has continued to disquiet many European States. They have found little favor among the working-men of England, as is proven by the following extract from a report of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, in 1873: "The council could not shut their eyes to the fact that the International Working-men's Association has departed from its original design, by having degenerated into a political society which, through its leaders, has been permitted to be used as the mouth-piece of the disaffected from all parts of Europe; and therefore from this fact decides against any representative from our society attending the Congress at Geneva." Other associations of English working-men evinced the same alienation from the International Society. (See London Times of Sept. 6, 1873.) Elsewhere they have been rigorously repressed, as dangerous conspirators against the peace of society and the rights of property.

"Proudhon, one of the apostles of communism, in a memorable phrase, 'Propriété c'est le vol,' denounced property as theft; and every government, every propriety class, and all friends of liberty and order have combined to put down his disciples as robbers. Whatever disorders may spring from this wide-spread conspiracy, society will be strong enough to repress and to punish them; their brief triumph will endanger public liberty and encourage political reaction. The natural advancement of society will be checked, and even a revival of absolutism may be endured for the sake of peace and order."

Thus writes Erskine May in the introduction to his recently-published Democracy in Europe; and his succinct statement regarding the objects of communists in Europe may be accepted as equally true of their motives and purposes in America.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY.

Communications.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

BY IVAN PANIN.

No question which has puzzled the heads of statesmen has such a venerable pedigree as the "Eastern" one. When, in the ninth century, the Varangians embarked from Scandinavia on their rude boats, crossed the Baltic Sea, and, by the favorable river-system of Russia, approached Constantinople, which very often the weak emperors could not defend against these daring seamen, birth was given to the problem which required centuries for its solution. When, a hundred years later, Oleg nailed his shield to the gates of Byzantium as a memorial of his victories over the Greeks, he left there a shrine which his successors considered their sacred duty to visit,—with an accompaniment of an innumerable army. Igor twice compelled the Greek emperors to pay him tribute; while his son, Sviatoslav, even removed his residence from Kiev to Pereiaslav on the Danube so as to be nearer the monument Oleg left. And when Vladimir, whom the Russian Church admitted into the society of saints, wickedly fell in love with a Greek princess, and being too proud to ask her hand, resolved to conquer the queen of his affections by force of arms, the marriage ceremonies were celebrated on Greek territory, a Russian army bearing witness to their union.

During the dark period of Russia's history, the Eastern question disappeared, but was not solved. And we see it revived when the proud Catharina, on her arrival at Cherson, ordered the inscription put on its gates: "Here is the road to Constantinople." When she proposed to Joseph II. of Austria the partition of European Turkey, the astonished monarch exclaimed: "But what shall be done with Constantinople?" A question that has been ringing ever since in the ears of European statesmen.

From the geographical position of Russia, we see that it may hope for commercial prosperity only from the undisturbed and undisputed possession of the Black Sea; and as long as the Dardanelles are not watched by Russian coast-guards, the prospect of Russian commerce is not very hopeful. We can, therefore, understand why the Eastern question is of such importance to Russia. It is not a question of sentimentality,—to help the suppressed Christians; nor is it wholly due to misdirected ambition that the longing after Constantinople is cherished. It is, however, another question whether Russia is justified in using the means I am about to describe for solving the problem. Among candid, honorable people there can be only one answer,—that of condemnation!

A few months before the commencement of the present war there appeared in Constantinople a pamphlet, which has since gone through a second edition, and has been translated into German. By official documents, it proves that Russia sent powder, volunteers, and even women to seduce the leading men, in order to effect a rebellion of the Serbians and Bulgarians against Turkey. Heaven and earth were set into motion to execute this infamous deed, and it finally succeeded. A sum of fifty thousand roubles, yearly, was appropriated for the noble Ignatieff to organize this criminal scheme. The Tsar, indeed, issued solemn proclamations, regretting the "Turkish troubles." Before the rest of Europe he plausibly lifts his hands to heaven and laments the bloodshed produced among the subjects of the Sultan. But General Ignatieff has accomplished his task. With an appointment of imperial councillor in his pocket, he laughs in his sleeve; and from his comfortable seat on the Neva he triumphantly looks upon the result of his labors,—the war between the sick man on the Baltic and the sick man on the Bosphorus.

The same Russia which declared war with the purpose of ameliorating the condition of Turkish subjects—Russia with its civilizing mission,—had to see the day when in the streets of Moscow were found huge bills demanding a constitution like that of despoiled Turkey.

The fact is, there is nothing perfect on this sinful earth,—not even a perfect tyranny. Thus, though the Russian monarch is an absolute ruler, even he feared the ominous signs of an unknown something, which, however, plainly indicated that his throne rests not on a safe basis. The government, therefore, attempted the remedy which proved so fatal to Napoleon III. By military glory it hoped to dazzle the eyes of the disaffected, and turn their attention from the inward weakness. It wanted but little, and the disastrous affair at Plevna would have been the Sedan of the Romanoffs. The otherwise tame nobility of Moscow dared even to address the emperor, begging him to remove his brother, who proved to be utterly unfit for the high position to which he was appointed. The emperor, of course, refused to accept such a disloyal utterance. This is, however, an important sign of the times. And even now, amid the constant clash of victorious arms, the courts are holding daily sessions over hundreds of so-called conspirators, to be tried for crimes known only to those initiated in the mysteries of the Code of Laws.

But we live in an age when human conscience acquires great elasticity. Moral considerations are ushered into a small side-room, while flattering attentions are paid to considerations of mere success. It is not asked whether, in the bloody contest now going on near the banks of the Danube, Russia is right. Is it successful? Is the question, the answer to which is most sought; for success is now the standard for right. The successful thief is admired for his ingenuity, and the successful robber for his executive ability. Well, Russia is successful, it is victorious. It will find, perhaps, some day the keys of the Bos-porus in its possession. But what is the price of that so-called success which so dazzles the masses? Let us see:—

Even in times of peace, the unhappy country has to maintain an army of about three-quarters of a million men, composed of the very flower of the population. Hands that are urgently called to the uncultivated soil, muscles required in the factories, mills, and other industrial establishments, are kept idle to serve in the army,—maintained for the purpose of man's slaughtering man; for the purpose of satisfying the vanity of a tyrant, whose ear is deaf to the groans of widows and the tears of orphans; whose eyes are closed for the blood-drenched soil, for the crippled invalids filling the hospitals; whose heart is dulled against the sight of deserted villages, depopulated cities, and empty regions.

The Russian government itself admits the loss of one hundred thousand men since the commencement of the war. How many more victims will be required to complete this expensive success it is now difficult to tell. But in regard to the financial cost of the war, we have some official data. Until November 20, 1877, Russia made three loans, necessitated by the glorious aggrandizement policy, amounting to four hundred and fifty-two million roubles. To this must be added a portion, if not the whole, of the two hundred and forty millions of credit notes paid by the imperial bank for the interest on previous foreign loans. The Russian rouble cannot circulate now, unless its owner has provided its back with a stamp of ten copecks, or one-tenth of a rouble. Adding to those sums the new debts contracted since November 20, 1877, we find that the so-called Russian success has been bought at the price of one hundred thousand men, one billion roubles, in round numbers; and, in addition to that, it sustains, and will have to sustain, a loss in industry which is beyond computation. Thus we have the sum total of the grand success!

"LA RELIGION LAIQUE."

BY BISHOP FERRETTE.

Consulto involvit veritatem Antiquitas,
Ut sapiens intelligeret, erraret rudis.

PRÆTORUS.

When on the day of Pentecost the Apostles, filled with the Holy Ghost, began to speak in "tongues" (that is in allegorical figures), some of the bystanders, who did not appreciate that esoteric language, irreverentially asked whether those men were drunk. Hear the answer which Peter gave: "The case is not, as you imagine, that these men be drunk. But this is what was said by the prophet Joel, 'And it shall be in the last days, says God, that I shall pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh' [not upon priests and prophets alone]; 'and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your elderly men shall dream dreams; and even upon my handmaidens and my men-servants shall I pour out of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy.'" Is it possible to say more clearly that the advent of Christianity is that of "THE LAY RELIGION"?

The Gospel of John distinguishes itself from the three others as the lay Gospel. It makes no mention of the sacraments which, in the early Church, and indeed in the Church of our time according to canonical strictness, are secret initiations which nobody can know anything about except those who have actually received them. The Gospel of John presents Christianity in the only aspect in which it can be presented to those who have not been initiated to its esoteric form through baptism. Yet the esoteric and exoteric forms cannot be supposed to differ in purport: otherwise, nothing would be more frequent in ecclesiastical history than the unheard-of occurrence of converts stepping out of the baptismal font at the first mention of doctrines so astounding, if grossly and carnally meant, as those of Trinity and the Real Presence. Now this exoteric Christianity, which exoteric Christianity merely expresses in another language, what is it according to Saint John? "In the beginning was Reason (Logos), and Reason dwelt with God, and Reason was God; and Reason was made flesh and dwelt among us." In other words, Jesus is nothing else but that innate rationalism which, from the beginning of the world, is the light of every man coming into this world, that very same rationalism incarnated in a man.

I do not mean to say that Christianity, being in substance mere rationalism, and having in fact never been presented to the world in any other light by the Fathers of the Church, has no dogmas, or that its dogmas are not mysterious. On the contrary, its dogmas are nothing else than mysterious or initiatory: they are initiations through symbols into the truths which reason teaches in a simple form, into those other truths of which reason feels the existence, but for which she can find no adequate formulas, and into the practical fellowship of the initiated believers. Nor do I mean to say that Christianity, being a lay religion, has in no sense a priesthood. It has a priesthood composed of all the baptized members; for if among those some happen to be deacons or presbyters or bishops, that is an inner concern with which the outer world, so to speak, has nothing to do. To this priesthood, in which the Spirit of Christ will always abide with phases of light from age to age, is mystically entrusted the salvation of mankind. But lest the claim should be deemed in any sense self-assuming or high-handed, let it be well understood that the first word of that priesthood in constituting itself in the Holy Spirit was, as its last word is, that the Spirit of God is poured upon all flesh, and that Christianity is a lay religion.

It is because the Spirit of God is not limited to the particular body constituting the historical Church that I deem the above hints sufficient to enable sensible men to see three things at least.

The first is the absolute superfluity of heresy, the dogmas and sacraments as they are being susceptible of any interpretation which the progress of science or the perfectionment of mankind may suggest or require.

The second is the absolute beastliness of Protestantism, which would bring us back to a dead letter, when we have in the midst of us a living priesthood whose heart throbs with the same pulse as the heart of mankind, and whose steps can accommodate themselves to the steps of mankind from infancy to manhood.

The third is the pardonable mistake of those rationalists who think it indispensable for themselves to blame Christianity, when they are themselves nothing but a part of its evolution. I have seldom seen so clear, able, and amiable an exposé of what those men believe, as was given in THE INDEX, March 21, under the heading of "Free Religion in France," in the form of three extracts from M. Charles Fauvety's monthly La Religion Laïque. Any one who has read the Fathers of the Church, and especially the Christian Apologists of the three first centuries, will easily perceive that the profession of such views would have been in those times deemed a sufficient qualification for baptism. That the Nicene Creed itself means nothing else must be plain enough to any one who has any idea of the manner in which antiquity interpreted its religious formulae. Even to this day the clergy of every Christian Church is in great majority composed of men who openly or secretly interpret in a broad sense the dogmas which they preach, and who could not on any other terms reconcile for a single instant their conscience with the position which they occupy. But leaving priests alone, so as to narrow the subject to what is announced in my title, I give it as the result of my very extensive acquaintance with laymen both in the Orthodox (Oriental) and in the Latin Church, that nine out of ten persons who conscientiously adhere to either church see nothing in its dogmas but that Religion Laïque which M. Fauvety upholds. If by this expression, the Church, we understand the Christian people; and if by ascribing the infallibility of the Church, we mean at least that the Christian people are not universally deceived as to the nature and purport of the religion which they profess, no other conclusion is possible than that La Religion Laïque is the only true, recognized, and Orthodox Christianity.

MRS. BESANT'S TRIAL.

DEAR INDEX:—

The literary element is necessarily very little thought of in a paper like yours, attending so busily to the deeper questions of life, that matters of mere style become a very secondary consideration. But there is another than literary view of the book I would mention. Possibly, before this reaches you, some other hand will have done the work involved in reading and commenting upon the small but closely-printed pages, from the press of the "Free Thought Association" in England,—The Trial of Annie Besant and Charles Bradlaugh. With the details and issues of that trial your readers are already familiar; but this, I believe, the first connected account, giving its course from day to day, and including the defence and summing up of both parties. However thoroughly one may differ from the modes of thought prevalent in the "Free Thought Association," or deprecate the tone too often found in their discussions, Mrs. Besant represents a quiet and intense devotion to a noble purpose which must command the respectful admiration of friends and enemies alike. Not only is the book a record of facts, but it contains also one of the most convincing and powerful arguments ever made by woman,—an argument lasting some three days, and conducted with a force as well as delicacy which marks an era in the history of such cases. Through the whole runs a pathetic, entreating womanliness, a quality indescribable, but producing its full effect upon the Lord Chief-Justice, who treated her, so far as his position admitted, with an almost chivalrous respect, shielding her all he could from the attacks of the coarse-grained, coarse-tongued Solicitor-General. It was a cruel position, bravely held, and the moral lies open to all. Pleasant or unpleasant, under every problem of the present age, pauperism, education, marriage, the labor question is this one underlying fact, inexorable as all facts, and demanding an answer we shall one day be forced to give. Radical or Conservative, Free Thought or Orthodox, must face it sooner or later; and no better key to solution can be found than in the quiet, convincing statements of a woman who knows whereof she speaks; has sacrificed to her belief something quite as dear as life; and who knows to the full every phase of sadness and misery making up the struggle for existence in this "year of our Lord" 1878.

CAMPBELL WHEATON.

NEW YORK, March 22, 1878.

"UNHISTORIC RELIGION AND BORROWED CONSCIENCES."

Mr. D. W. Vaughn, of Providence, delivered yesterday (March 31) an excellent address upon the above subject in the vestry of the Bell Street Chapel, under the auspices of the Free Religious Society of Providence. It is sentimentally said that Christianity is a quotation. It is a borrowed faith, and so are the consciences of the people that profess it. Mr. Vaughn spoke of the innumerable instances there are around us of persons who cannot be induced to depart from certain requirements of their church, yet who entertain lax ideas of truth, and possibly of honesty. These, he said, are borrowed consciences, a product of ignorance and superstition in the combined proportions to cause the laws of bigotry and fanaticism to pass for religion. Religion is a part of man's nature as much so as his chyme or his chyle. God, by this faculty, reveals himself to man.

Historical religion, or Christianity, as to-day understood, has had various characteristics at different epochs of its history. The change began not long after the translation of the Bible by Tyndall and Coverley, and its whole tendency was towards theocratic ideas of God and government. The people became the people of a book, and that book the Bible. It affected their language with its cumbersome phraseology, and usurped their whole attention. That influence which to-day is exerted by countless books, reviews, essays, newspapers, tracts, etc., was, at this date, all furnished by this one single book. Ere long theological controversies commenced,—an inevitable consequence of the theocratical dogmatism of the Book. Venomous discussions followed between churches that followed Luther and those that followed Calvin. The nation became so many theologians.

There are no greater examples of moral grandeur to-day than there were a thousand years ago. The teachings of the early philosophers are the summit of morality now. The sayings of Confucius are the admiration of the world; yet knowledge has been steadily advancing and widening its borders.

Unhistoric religion is faith in the moral sentiment. It is a belief in the affirmations of the soul which are the direct inspiration of the Almighty, and which outrank all other revelations, no matter how sacredly believed in, nor how time-honored.

Contrasting the religious teaching of to-day with that of the Bible, Mr. Vaughn said the stern old Hebrew prophets never called upon the people "to get religion," but "to get wisdom." The English hell is the terror of not succeeding, of not making money; and this is, par excellence, the American one.

The pure ethics of Jesus transcend all others. He showed that deep philosophic insight into man's being and that conception of his possibilities which proclaim him the sublimest moral teacher of the world. It is this very revelation of Jesus, this conception of man's real dignity and value in God's providence which are to regenerate the world, redeem it, and save it, and not a contrivance of sick theologians to meet the requirements of a morbid conscience.

True religion is the development of man's whole nature. To be a great soul hereafter, one must commence to be one here.

NEW YORK STATE ORGANIZATION.

We hope soon to have a working Liberal League County Committee in every County of New York State. The committee for the City and County of New York will consist of five members; other counties of three members.

Prof. A. L. Rawson has been named as the chairman of the New York city committee, and writes: "I will act as suggested, and send names as soon as it is practicable to consult the right men. The work is too important to trust with indifferent persons."

Gen. Robert Avery, of Nyack, has been named as chairman of Rockland County, and writes: "I accept with much pleasure the chairmanship of a Liberal League County Committee, and name as my associates Horace G. Knapp and William W. Hinton, of this place. We mean to organize a Local League soon, and hope to be some service to the cause of freedom."

J. G. Reynolds, Esq., of Bombay, has accepted the chairmanship of the County of Franklin, and has appointed as his associates Alvin Russell, of Bombay, and Joseph W. Brown, of Mohra. Mr. Reynolds writes that a League will soon be organized in his county.

Dr. Freeman Lyon, an earnest, intelligent liberal of Bloomingdale, is the chairman of the Essex County Committee, and has chosen as his associates Luther T. Bryant and Royal Perrigo, of Bloomingdale. The committee will immediately move for the organization of a Liberal League.

Other counties will soon have their committees perfected. Within thirty days there should be a Liberal League Committee in each of the sixty counties of this State; then each committee should see that at least one Local Liberal League is at once organized in its county. That would give us sixty Leagues in the State and a representation in the next Liberal League Congress of three hundred members. If every liberal will do his and her duty before September, the Empire State can accomplish this and more. Friends, will you make the effort?

H. L. GREEN.

LIBERAL LEAGUES.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., April 1, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

A few days since, I sent to the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League an application for a charter for the prosperous Liberal League at Linesville, Penna. This morning I have sent an application for a charter for "The First Liberal League of Indiana," at Xenia; and I am just informed of the organization of a Liberal League of some forty members in Elmira, N. Y., that will make application for a charter soon. From the city of Buffalo comes the most encouraging news. A League of some seventy-five members has just been organized under the name of "Liberal League No. 1 of Buffalo," which meets every Friday evening, and which will immediately apply for a charter; and that is not all from Buffalo. The old "German Freethinkers' Association," numbering over one hundred members, have recently received a bequest of two thousand dollars, and have now decided to take out a charter as an auxiliary Liberal League. So that Buffalo, as well as the city of Rochester, her near neighbor, will have two Leagues. And now I will reveal a secret that may cause two Boston Liberal Leagues to look well to their laurels. The Spiritualists of Boston are preparing to organize a third Liberal League in your city; and I predict if they do it will from the start take the lead as to numbers at least, if not in earnestness and enthusiasm. May that be the case! The more the better.

H. L. GREEN.

P.S.—The Tompkins County Liberal League, by its able and well-directed monthly public meetings at Ithaca, is producing valuable results for our cause in Central and Western New York, and throughout the country generally.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION IN LOUISIANA.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 17, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

During the past year, quite an active movement has been in progress, on the part of Church and temperance organizations, to enact Sunday ordinances in the parishes, and a general law for the State. In perhaps ten parishes, all places of business, with exception of druggists, physicians, etc., are ordered closed under heavy penalties. In St. Mary's parish where an ordinance was adopted, the police jury afterward temporarily suspended it to accommodate the labor interests of planters in the sugar-making season.

The present session of the Legislature, petitions and bills for Sunday laws have been received in unusual numbers. A bill to regulate labor was checked in the Senate by the following effective speech of State Senator Zacharie:—

The Sunday Labor Bill.

"Senator Zacharie replied to the advocates of the Sunday labor bill with great effect yesterday. Senator Stamps moved its adoption, and Young to indefinitely postpone, when Mr. Zacharie spoke as follows:—

"Mr. President,—I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without availing myself of it to place myself on record against all such legislation. Sir, the very basis of republican government, I mean of American republicanism, is this principle: that the Church and State are perpetually divorced; that legislative authority is without right to force upon any man any religion or religious observances. Our government is formed for Jew and Gentile alike, and I am at a loss to understand by what process of reasoning a majority can force upon a minority a religious observance. If this be proper, I know not what may be the next step; it may be a law compulsory to force people to attend church. Sir, this projected law is not only unrepugnant, but it is unchristian. The very genius of Christianity consists in winning its way by affection and persuasion. Here, sir, is an attempt to adopt the Mohammedan method, and to lend the sword of justice to enforce upon unwilling consciences a semblance of a religious observance which they do not desire. In eighteen centuries by these methods of gentleness, catching its spirit from its founder, the Divine Master, Christianity has spread and dominated over nearly three-quarters of the habitable globe.

"Those are no true friends of the religion of Christ who seek now to resort to the force of law to compel an adherence to its doctrines or observances. I have trusted, sir, that such ideas should never prevail in this section of the country, where tolerance, liberality, and the utmost freedom of conscience have always been maintained; and I hoped that in this blending of the races here, at the mouth of this great river, the principle would never be touched, but should remain forever inviolate; that each citizen should be left to worship God according to his own conscience, without let or hindrance or control from the government.

"The bill was recommitted."

As Senator Zacharie is a prominent political leader, and dealt a sturdy blow for free religion at the proper moment, I thought it advisable to introduce him to a more intimate acquaintance of THE INDEX family.

Very respectfully, EMMERSON BENTLEY.

LITTLE LESSONS FOR LITTLE FREE-THOUGHT LEARNERS.

What is religion? A force in Nature regulating the moral function of the mind.

What is a church? A business corporation of individuals organized to utilize this force.

What is God? An impersonation of this force.

What is the devil? An imaginary opponent of this force; need for argument.

What is hell? A perversion of language recently abolished.

What is an idol? An ideal impersonation of this force in visible form.

What is a Catholic? A person who believes the Church the mother of religion.

What is a Protestant? A person who protests against this; and sees religion the parent of the Church.

What does this force ultimately produce? Manhood.

What is business? Buying in the lowest, and selling in the highest market; and formulating these transactions in a set of accounts that he who runs may read.

What force regulates business? The law of supply and demand.

What is the tendency of this law? To create business at the expense of men.

Which does society need the most,—men or business? Men could not exist without business, and business could not exist without men; one should balance the other.

How is a panic caused? By society ignoring this balance, and rushing to the business extreme.

What is the antidote? The other extreme: more manhood.

R. G. T.

DORCHESTER, Mass.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.00.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Burlingame, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chandler Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laaser, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of Important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1866 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. E. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.
 PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AURBACH (HERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	6.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUNDESEN'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 4 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 2 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-4. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARK (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWELL). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I: "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	3.00
Journal of Researches.....	3.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	4.50
DESCARTES (RENE.) Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 4 vols., each.....	1.40
Comprising: Adam Bede.....	1.40
Romola.....	1.40
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.40
Fanny Hill.....	1.40
Silas Marner and other Novels of Moral Life.....	1.40
The Scotch Library Edition. 3 vols.....	1.50
Middlemarch.....	1.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.50
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 4 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Electric Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG (W. R.). Enigmas of Life.....	2.50
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.50
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMESTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.50
The Unknown River.....	5.50
The Intellectual Life.....	2.50
Chapters on Animals.....	4.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Old-Fashioned Days.....	2.00
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of, Translated from the German. 1 vol., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, & Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Mandale, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by S. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.50
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESLING'S (G. R.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 1 vol.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1864.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Woman—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	6.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	5.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds situated under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, &c., &c., &c., With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Position, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expansion of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) Dante.....	1.50
SCHIELEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in the Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMER: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.00
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics, or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	4.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	1.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.00
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Round and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. OELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Lectures.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	1.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Science of Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lectures on Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITLEY (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sanctaries.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.50
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

GIRLS—5 nice perforated motives for fancy work 16 cts. J. W. BUSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $13 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUM & Co., Augusta, Maine.

$125 a month and expenses to Agents. Send stamp for terms. S. C. FOSTER & Co., Cincinnati, O.

E. A. SAWTELL E,
PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

is an enterprising, 8-page, Liberal, Family Paper, devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth.

Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft, and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds. It has no reverence for bibles or man-made gods, and opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasure in another.

It has a variety of Departments, is chaste and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a First-rate Liberal Paper.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published weekly, at One Dollar a year, or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address SETH WILBUR PAYNE, 141 Eighth St., New York.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT- RONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Trollope, Prof. Clifford,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Lealie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,
AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to getter up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to:
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $5.50, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD- ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND ORPHANS,

at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA- TION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sent at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals,
Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform,
The Wharton Patent Switch,
and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employes are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent,
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
208 and 206 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS.
Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSNY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA- TION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XIV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 24 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.
 2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.
 3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.
 4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.
 5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.
- This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	15
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	40
FIFTY ".....	75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.40
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.80
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 18, 1878.

WHOLE No. 434.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1878.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

THE FIRST official act of King Humbert was to commute eighty-five death sentences, with the declaration that he was happy to begin his reign by the virtual abolition of capital punishment.

THE LAST eminent defaulter, S. Angier Chace, of Fall River, was a member of the Central Congregational Church. Single cases prove nothing; but dishonest church-members have become painfully common of late.

MR. POTTER'S essay on "Christianity and Modern Civilization," which we are permitted by the author's kindness to publish this week, adds another to the many papers of superlative value which have given a quite peculiar character to THE INDEX; and it must rank with the ablest and the best. There is a comprehensive and judicial quality in Mr. Potter's thought which is scarcely equalled among the other radical writers of the day, and which is above all price in the estimation of those whose main desire is to know what is true. His essay should be not only pondered, but studied; and study of it will yield rich returns.

THE VENERABLE and beloved radical, Mrs. Lydia Maria Child, has kindly copied for us the following form of exorcising rats, used by the priests in Norway: "I do exorcise you, pestiferous rats, by God the Omnipotent Father [sign of the cross], and by Jesus Christ his Son [sign of the cross], and by the Holy Ghost proceeding from both [sign of the cross], that forthwith ye depart from these fields, vines, and waters, nor longer abide in the same, but that ye go away to places where you can do no mischief to anybody. And, in the name of the Omnipotent, and all the Court of Heaven, and the holy Church of God, be ye accursed wherever ye go; wasting within yourselves, from day to day, and decreasing, so that no remnant of you may be found anywhere; saying that it be needful for the good and salvation of man. May God, who is to come to judge the quick and the dead, and the world by fire, bring this to pass! Amen."

IT IS AMUSING to learn that the promulgation of the "Jasperian theory" of the universe, in Richmond, Va., has given rise to a fierce theological war among the colored people of that vicinity, and given its author, the Rev. John Jasper, colored preacher, a great notoriety. At the second delivery of his sermon, in which he "proved" that the sun moves round the earth, he attracted an immense crowd, representing, says a report, the crème de la crème of Richmond society, both ladies and gentlemen, including some of the high State officials. When he brought out his strong points, there were such remarks heard as, "Dat's so," "He's got de Bible on dem," "Now I know de sun is movin'," "Yes, Lord," "Honey, you's tellin' the truth," and "Give it to dem, Brother Jasper!" When the preacher, describing the passage of the children of Israel over the Red Sea, said, "Den de lynch pin in Pharaoh's chariot comed out," a sister in the gallery cried, "Dar my Lord."

THE NEWARK Daily Advertiser not long since gave this significant hint not to lecture in the State of New Jersey: "It is not only the peripatetic lecturers who are hungry for the shekels of the people, but the guardians of the law themselves, who are apparently unaware that there is a law in this State which it is expected some people shall obey and others execute. It may be found in Nixon's Digest, under the head of 'Crimes,' Section 22; and it reads after this fashion: 'If any person shall wilfully blaspheme the holy name of God, by denying, cursing, or contumeliously reproaching Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost, or the Christian religion, or the holy word of God (that is the canonical scriptures contained in the books of the Old and New Testaments), or by profanely scoffing at or exposing them, or any of them, to contempt and ridicule, then every person so offending shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine, not exceeding two hundred dollars, or imprisonment, at hard labor, not exceeding twelve months, or both, at the discretion of the Court.' So it would appear that this is not a free country, after all, and that liberty does not include the license to abuse everything that other people consider decent and sacred. Perhaps there are some people who will make a note of it."

IT IS STATED by the San Francisco Post that among the recent arrivals on the steamship, "City of Peking," were two priests from the interior of Japan, claiming to be endowed with miraculous power. They are on their way to the Paris Exposition with a party of their countrymen, conducted by two English gentlemen who have for several years resided in Japan. A reporter interviewed these gentlemen last evening. They told him that the priests are religious enthusiasts, who profess through the power of faith and by the medium of prayer to be enabled to do the most remarkable things—such as are recorded in the Christian Gospels as in the power of the followers of Jesus—referring to those passages which speak of their being able to remove mountains, and to swallow deadly poisons without harm. One of the miraculous things that these priests are able to do is to walk with naked feet over the edges of swords ground to the keenness of a razor, and also over a bed of live coals. They never attempt this without a formal and fervent appeal to their divinity for protection; and they assert most positively that it would be impossible for them to perform the works they do without divine interference in their behalf. They intend to exhibit their remarkable powers in Paris during their stay, and will challenge the devotees of the Christian or any other faith to do the things that they do. In answer to an inquiry whether they would exhibit their powers in this country, the gentlemen said that such was not their intention.

"YESTERDAY'S VOTE in the State Senate," says the New York Tribune of April 10, "on the bill for the taxation of clergymen, shows that no proposition to put church buildings and land on a level with other property, with respect to taxation, is likely to be received with favor at Albany at present. The discussion of the bill covered this whole question; and strong feeling was shown against church taxation. An amendment providing for the taxation of all churches worth over $5,000 was rejected; and the bill itself was killed by almost a three-fourths vote." A report of the proceedings in the same issue is as follows: "There was a strong debate in the Senate to-day over Senator Raines's bill for the taxation of clergymen, Senators McCarthy, Goodwin, Hughes, Ecclesine, and Edick earnestly opposing the passage of the bill. 'Altogether,' as one senator remarked, 'the piety of the senate was thoroughly proved.' Senators Raines, Marvin, and Sessions made speeches in favor of the bill. Senator Ecclesine was especially violent in his attack upon the bill, declaring it an attempt to tax God's temple. He also said that it would be unjust to tax a class of the community who were doing so much good—the poor clergymen. Senator Raines replied that it was the modern spirit to make all things and persons equal. Seamstresses and poor laborers ought to be protected as well as the poor clergy. He had yet to learn that it was a precept of the Christian religion to confiscate the property of an unbeliever to support the Christian religion. The bill was killed; the enacting clause stricken out by a vote of twenty to eight. Previously an amendment offered by Senator Sessions, providing for the taxation of all churches worth over $5,000 in value, was rejected." It ought to be evident to all that this righteous reform of church taxation can only be carried by extensive organization of the liberals. The result of this attempt ought to give a great stimulus to the Liberal League everywhere.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL R. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. O. B. PROTHINGHAM,.....New York, N. Y.
MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. F. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBERT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. B. F. SELWY,.....Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE BEAVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER,.....Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MOORE,.....Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS,.....Mound, Mo.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
MRS. AMY POST,.....Rehoboth, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON,.....Tuxedo, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY,.....Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN,.....221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....143 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committees.
Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN ARNOLD, Monticello.
California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUBBERT, Colebrook.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Scio.
Iowa.....J. O. MICHENER, Adel.
Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. B. OLARK, Louisville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....W. H. SATWAD, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL BORMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....B. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.....W. E. COFFLAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt.
Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Limerick.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DEET, Weston.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT G. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....151 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE,.....221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the
National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Philsterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHESA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Denver Liberal League.
FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Beaver, J. P. Mendum, Elsur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John B. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. E. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Bittenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Bittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korne, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, E. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harcourt, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Bopson, E. B. Whiting, E. B. Seaman, A. O. Harrison, E. F. P. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Bruning.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. E. E. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Greege, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. B. B. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Boys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griawold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransoh, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASE COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Case County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Seuff, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Seuff, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

[For THE INDEX.]

Christianity and Modern Civilization.

A LECTURE DELIVERED IN HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, MARCH 3, 1878.

BY WILLIAM J. POTTER.

Modern civilization and modern Christendom are territorially nearly coterminous. Modern civilization had its origin within the already-occupied domain of Christianity; and for a number of centuries the two have developed together. From these simple facts, our discussion takes its departure. Out of these facts has arisen the wide-spread popular opinion—which is also not infrequently shared and defended by persons of culture,—that modern civilization is the direct and legitimate product of Christianity; that Christianity is the parent, modern civilization the child; that wherever the former goes, the latter follows. They are bound indissolubly together, it is alleged, as cause and effect.

I propose in this lecture to examine this opinion. I ask you, solely in the interests of truth, to inquire with me whether this popular judgment rests upon solid foundations. Often the opinion takes very extreme form. It is common to hear it declared by Christian preachers, and to read it in essays by zealous partisans of the Christian faith, that we owe to Christianity all the specially distinguishing and most desirable features of modern society,—not only the religious progress, the moral advance, the humanitarian and philanthropic spirit of our times, but the general circulation of knowledge, the literary activity, the vast material and commercial enterprise, the social and industrial progress, the triumphs of science and art, the increase of civil and personal liberty. All these characteristics of modern civilization are frequently claimed to be the fruit of Christianity. Other persons, holding essentially the same opinion, but more conversant with the actual course of historical events and more prudent in statement, would refrain from any such specific computation of the products of Christianity to be found in modern civilization, and would be content with the claim that Christianity was present as the chief and most powerful force among the social elements from which modern civilization sprang, and thus became the inspiring and controlling genius of it; and hence, though not directly the special creator of all these great secular results above-named, it may yet be claimed to have been indirectly their vital cause. So common and so deeply-rooted is the opinion that modern civilization grew out of Christianity, and that without Christianity modern civilization would not have been, that the question is sometimes asked, How will you explain the stagnation of Asia, where civilization began centuries before the origin of Christianity, and while Europe was barbarian, if it be not true that the civilization of Europe is owing to the inherent superiority of Christianity over the prevailing Asiatic faiths? As if Christianity had only to set its foot in a country, and, without any regard to the character of the population or to their existing traditions and institutions, civilization would follow!

Now the only legitimate way to examine this question is to study the facts of history. It is not a metaphysical question; not a question primarily or chiefly of theology. It is not a question concerning the a priori probability of a religion, which is assumed to have had a supernatural origin, and to continue under supernatural protection, being able to produce a certain recognized condition and temper of society. The question is one of historical facts. It involves, it is true, a philosophy of history; but it is a philosophy of history that rests upon the actual social processes and events which are open to the investigation of the historical student, and not a philosophy based on any preconceived theories.

And the first question that meets us is the simple one, When did modern civilization begin? By what particular events is this important era indicated? We know when Christianity began, and how. That is, we know well enough for all purposes of our present discussion; though, if it were necessary to consider the whole rationale of the origin of Christianity, we should probably have to trace its lineage back considerably farther, and to more complex sources than is done by those historians who date the birth of Christianity at the birth of Jesus. But where shall we date the birth of modern civilization? Mr. Buckle in one place says that modern civilization is not yet three hundred years old. The French historian, Guizot, in his important lectures on "The History of Civilization in Modern Europe," dates modern Europe back to the fall of the Roman Empire,—at the end of the fifth century. Yet these two authors, though seemingly in these statements so far apart, are in essential agreement as to the real sources of modern civilization. But, for the time being, one was looking at the building definitely framed and erected; the other at the first rude preparations, the mere clearing of the ground for it. Close students of history do not find the different ages and epochs of human development to be separated from each other by such clear lines of demarcation as are popularly supposed to exist. They discern the hidden social forces that may be long working under the soil before any great event appears to mark an era. Guizot was right, and Buckle would indorse him, that modern Europe cannot be understood without going back to consider the social materials that existed at the fall of the Roman Empire,—aye, we may add, without a close study of the Roman Empire itself before it fell. But, at its fall, one civilization, the old Roman, came to an end. Infirm and tottering from inward disease, it was buried under the irruption of the barbarian tribes from the north of Europe; and no civilization arose to take its place until the modern civilization appeared. Yet nearly a thousand years elapsed after the fall of Rome before there was any definite appearance of a civil order entitled to be called a new civilization; nearly a thousand years of transition when Europe had no civilization,—unless we can call the sway of the Christian Church, which was the ruling power of this time, a period of ecclesiastical civilization. It was, in fact, a period of mental stagnation, of moral darkness, of social disorder,—a period during which the various forces of barbarism, civilization, and religion that had come into violent conflict were recovering from the shock of the collision, and were mutually adjusting themselves to the new conditions.

This was the period of the so-called "Dark Ages,"—ages not so dark as they were once painted, perhaps; ages when there was still some stirring of life under the soil in preparation for the things that were to come. Hidden away in obscure corners, and under the rubbish of the vast ruin, were some noble products of the buried civilization, in which the spark of life was not dead, but sleeping; and in that vast mass of mobile barbarism which had rolled down from the north there was a power of vital assimilation and growth which held already in prophecy a new order of things. Yet the period in the main, compared with what had gone before, and with what has come after, is rightly called the "Dark Ages." It was nine hundred years after the sun of one civilization had set in Europe before the sun of another civilization had appeared sufficiently near the horizon to declare the coming day. Popularly speaking, the end of these Middle Ages and the dawn of the era of the Protestant Reformation marks the beginning of modern society; and this is sufficiently exact for giving us a date. But we must not be led astray by it into the argument that the Protestant Reformation was the cause of modern civilization. All philosophical historians of the Protestant Reform carry that movement back much beyond Luther's time and vigorous activity, and trace it to causes not wholly connected with the moral condition of the Roman Church nor exclusively religious. The Protestant Reform is not the cause of modern civilization, but it is one of the first and most momentous consequences of a train of social forces which produced them both; and this train of forces may be followed back to the moment when human reason began to arouse from its long slumber, and to assert again its supremacy in human affairs. This, to speak generally, was somewhere about the twelfth century; though several centuries followed before this self-assertion of the human intellect gathered strength enough to make a desperate struggle for its rights; and then long periods of further conflict before it won its place as leader of the new civilization.

And this brings us to a more important question than that of determining the precise era when modern civilization began,—to the question, namely, of the distinguishing characteristics of modern civilization. But the question, though very important to our discussion, is not difficult to answer. All good observers of the events and movements of the age in which we are living, with power to generalize their observations, are on the jury for deciding this question. What, then, shall we say are the dominant peculiar qualities of present civilization? They are marked; and we can hardly miss them, or disagree concerning them. First and foremost, as in a sense the parent of all the rest, is the characteristic to which I have just alluded in tracing modern civilization to its origin,—namely, the self-assertion of human reason, in opposition to the claims of a merely traditional authority, whether put forth in the name of political or ecclesiastical power. From this assertion of the supremacy of the human intellect follows the practice of mental liberty, or of free inquiry, in the whole domain of human thought, and the claim to civil and personal liberty in the domain of government. Then, for other marked features of modern civilization, more or less nearly allied to this of free mental activity, we have the wonderful advance in natural science and in inventive skill, and the consequent marvellous power which man has gained over Nature; the general spread of knowledge among the people; the growth of nationalities and of the doctrine of international rights for their mutual protection in respect to each other; and of individual welfare as the object of each nation within its own domain; the vastness of commercial and material enterprises; the widening range of industries; the increase of domestic and social material comforts; the eager pursuit of wealth; the absorption of human thought upon secular interests; the spirit of a practical philanthropy,—a philanthropy that aims specially at bettering man's condition in his earthly life, and that shows itself both in voluntary philanthropic organizations and in civil legislation for benevolent ends. These, I think we shall agree, are the most distinguishing features of modern society. We cannot call modern civilization specially religious, though religion flourishes under it, as it has under other civilizations. As distinguished from the age immediately preceding in Europe, it is decidedly a secular civilization. Nor can we say that our modern civilization is characteristically moral, though there has been moral progress under it. But other civilizations have been quite as moral according to their own standard of morality; and there are nations to-day reckoned without the pale of modern European civilization that are quite as moral as those within it. Nor should we put philanthropy at the head of the list of characteristics by which modern civilization is specially distinguished. It occupies an honored but subordinate place in comparison with the other features I have named. But with respect to these—the free activity of human reason, the vindication of individual independence, the growing supremacy of natural science, the power of man over Nature, the zeal for wealth, the commercial and industrial enterprise, the pursuit of individual well-being, and the recognition of individual rights in national existence—there can be little doubt. These are the features that come prominently to our view when modern civilization is named.

Now if modern civilization be the product of Christianity, we might naturally expect to find these same distinguishing features, or at least the elements of them, in the Christian religion. But, with the exception of the spirit of philanthropy, not one of them do we find there. None of the most peculiar and dominant characteristics of modern society is a specially controlling quality of Christianity. There could hardly exist, indeed, a more complete contrast between any two systems of active impulse and thought than exists between Christianity and modern civilization. But there will be some demur to this statement. And since it is a statement that brings us very near the centre of our theme, we must at once recognize the difficulty that meets us here and causes this demur.

The difficulty consists in the problem of determining what Christianity is: a modern problem, let me add, which has originated in those liberal and elastic interpretations of the Christian faith which tend to erase all clear lines of distinction between it and other religions. If we cut historical Christianity into several sections, and look only at each section separately, we shall see, indeed, several kinds of Christianity. By this process of dissection, the Christianity of the organized Christian Church is one thing, the Christianity of the New Testament quite another thing. And then in historical organization there are Roman Christianity and Greek Christianity and Protestant Christianity,—all different. There are, in fact, two Christianities in the New Testament itself, one in the teachings of Jesus, and another in the teachings of Paul; and we might even find a third in the mystic spiritual philosophy of the Fourth Gospel; that is, there are these three kinds of Christianity in the New Testament, if we do not look for the vital bond that joins them into one. But the difficulty of bringing a statement of what Christianity is that would satisfy all minds greatly subsides when we consider more definitely the nature of our previous question: Did Christianity produce modern civilization? For no definition, no mere statement of what Christianity is—whether Protestant or Roman Catholic statement, primitive, apostolic, or modern liberal,—would help us to a conclusion, unless we justified our definition or statement by a thorough presentation of the historical contents of Christianity. What we have to do, in any case, is to study the actual character of Christianity as it has been unfolded in its centuries of historical existence. We have to look at the social forces, impulses, and agencies it has specially set in operation, the motives it has appealed to, the direction it has given to human activities, the kind of thought it has aroused, the doctrines it has predominantly taught, the spirit it has inculcated and produced; and we have especially to observe what were its prevailing tendencies, what its efforts, teachings, and doings, at the time when the elements of modern civilization were beginning to crystallize. Did the Christian religion, beginning in Judea eighteen or nineteen centuries ago, develop by natural process, through the gradual growth of these centuries, the essence and characteristics of modern civilization? That is the real question to which we now come; and to answer it we have to note the character and progress of Christianity all along the line.

Of course, in the limits of this lecture, we can but rapidly sketch the main points in this part of our argument, gleaming from a large field, to which only a book of many chapters could do full justice. And first we must look at Christianity at its beginning,—at Christianity in the New Testament, which, for the scope of the present question, at least, may be considered as essentially one.

In the teachings of Jesus, as we gather them from the Evangelical narratives, we have a system of morals of exceptional purity and beauty, a very elevated spiritual sentiment, a devout and confident tone of religious trust, and a few simple principles of religious doctrine which may mostly be summed up in the sentence, "Believe in the goodness of God, and do good to your fellow-man," and which look startlingly small and childlike by the side of the vast edifices of dogma that have since been built in his name. We see, withal, a man of wonderful gentleness and sympathy, especially towards the sinful and sorrowing, living and teaching in the very pathos of tenderness and charity, yet holding a defiant and revolutionary attitude towards the outward ecclesiastical authority of Judaism, combined with a claim, rather vaguely defined and asserted, to the office of the expected Jewish Messiah. In a word, we have in the character and teachings of Jesus a religious prophet and reformer of the highest order. But what one of the specially dominant features of modern civilization do we find in his teachings and example? The ethics of Jesus, the whole spiritual aim and tone of his life, and the entire spirit and inculcations of the New Testament as a whole, are, indeed, directly and expressly opposed to some of the most characteristic and ruling tendencies of modern society. Who must not admit that the general teaching of the New Testament, and of Jesus in particular, discourages rather than fosters the spirit of material enterprise and commercial profit; that it rebukes the desire for wealth; that it chides even the natural prudential anxiety which looks ahead for to-morrow's means of livelihood; that it was not concerned to discover new facts about Nature or man, nor to stimulate mental activity, nor to invent new methods for the amelioration of man's physical condition, nor to promote intellectual aspiration and culture?

In this primitive Christian era, the idea of the responsibility of individual man for the general material and moral condition of this world does not appear to have dawned. Alms-giving was the one mode of individual obligation thought of for the relief of poverty. The supernatural agencies of prayer and miracle were the means most depended upon for remedying the disorders of the world. The main emphasis of religious teaching was, "Have as little as possible to do with this world; it is not the divine kingdom devout people are seeking; come out of it, and so live a life of moral purity and spiritual trust, of devotion and self-abnegation, as to merit an entrance into the true kingdom that is coming." Modern civilization says, "Prudently care to-day for to-morrow's necessities." The Christianity of Jesus replies, "Take no thought for the morrow, saying what shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed." Modern civilization says, "Set all possible industries in operation to supply man's physical needs and to improve his physical condition." The Christianity of Jesus replies, "Seek first the kingdom of God, and all these things shall be given you." Modern civilization says, "Girdle the earth with commerce, and join the nations in the bonds of trade." The Christianity of the New Testament says, "Go ye and teach the gospel to all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost." Modern civilization says, "Disease is the result of violated physical law: For remedy, learn the law and obey it." The Christianity of the New Testament says, "Disease is an arbitrarily inflicted penalty for moral transgression; it is sometimes possession by demons; the remedy is prayer, repentance, forgiveness of sins." Modern civilization in sickness sends for a physician. The Christianity of the Apostle James in the New Testament says, "Send for the elders of the Church, and let them pray over the sick man, and anoint him with oil in the name of the Lord." Modern civilization says, "Be individually independent; acquire property, and have your own." The Christianity of the New Testament says, "Hold all things in common; and, as to money, the love of it is a root of all evil." Modern civilization says, "Better, if possible, your condition; lose no opportunity to rise in the world; be free, by all means, even if you have to fight for it." The Christianity of the Apostle Paul says, "Let every man abide in the vocation where he is; and it matters little whether he be bond or free, married or single, rich or poor, in sorrow or rejoicing. Let him have no distraction nor care about any of these worldly things,—for the fashion of this world passeth away." These primitive Christians believed literally in the speedy coming of the end of the world.

I am not now passing judgment on these inculcations on one side or the other. Nor does the question we are considering call upon me to explain how this primitive Christian teaching may have been adapted to the conditions of the time; nor to enforce the possible moral lesson, that modern civilization might be better if it were somewhat tempered by the spirit of this primitive Christianity. The important point, for our present purpose, is to note the complete unlikeness, the world-wide contrast, between the temper of the New Testament Christianity and the temper of modern civilization,—with a view to answering the question, whether it seems probable that they are related to each other as cause and effect.

We may observe, again, the same contrast in respect to the type of virtues most strongly emphasized in the two epochs. The virtues specially inculcated in the New Testament are self-denial, self-sacrifice, gentleness, charity, docility, patience, contentment, resignation, long-suffering, passive endurance, and submissiveness. Not that virtues of another type are not approved in the New Testament; but these are made so predominant that they have come to be popularly styled the "Christian virtues." And yet, though they have always held their supremacy in the moral teaching of the Christian Church, and have had the advantage of being enforced in innumerable pulpits and religious books, they are not the virtues that modern civilization has specially encouraged. These dominant virtues of the Christian Church have lost ground just in proportion as the characteristic qualities of modern civilization have strongly asserted themselves; and in their place a new type of virtues has come to the front. These are self-respect, self-assertion, self-reliance, moral independence, manliness, pride of character, love of truth for its own sake, heroic conquest of obstacles, aspiration for mental culture, ambition for moral worth and dignity, serene acceptance of the inevitable. All these virtues, and the class to which they belong, are allied to the very essence of modern civilization, and grow out of its central principle of mental and moral liberty. We are not asked now to say which we think the better, these or the so-called "Christian virtues." It may be that they will yet modify each other to advantage; but we are asked only to note the great difference between them, and to consider whether there appears to be any hereditary relationship between the two. When the New Testament says, "Give to him that asketh thee; and, if any man take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also," the social science of modern civilization answers, "Indiscriminate alms-giving makes paupers"; and upon the tracks of the thief who has taken your coat, modern society sets a detective. When the New Testament says, "Resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also," modern civilization replies with standing armies and equipments of war, more terrible and deadly than the world has ever before known. Indeed, a recent Orthodox writer, considering the wide discrepancy between the peace-doctrine of the New Testament, and the practice of war by modern Christian nations, and considering also the New Testament doctrine with regard to property, very frankly says, "When the question is put,—how, while human nature official and unofficial is what it is, are these theories to be turned into actual facts?—there is no answer which political economy, even under Christian manipulation, can give, which it will do to date this side of the millennium." Whether this be so or not, it is certainly a fact that any persons who should attempt to live at this era strictly according to the individual and social ethics inculcated in the New Testament, the features of which we have been now considering, would appear wofully out of place in the midst of the agencies and forces of modern society. The sect that has most nearly illustrated in principles and mode of life the New Testament type is perhaps (barring their aversion to marriage) the Shakers. But, however great their virtues, they are according to the common judgment of mankind an anomaly in modern civilization. If such a type of character, formed so closely on the ethical teachings of the New Testament, had been largely in the ascendant throughout modern Christendom, it is safe to say that modern civilization could not have existed.

Again, the doctrine of mental liberty,—the freedom to inquire, to doubt, to think, to hold and express opinions untrammelled by any outward authority,—this principle, which is so central and controlling an element in modern civilization, is a conception which has hardly any recognized existence in the New Testament in the sense understood to-day. The early Christian movement, relatively speaking, brought mental emancipation; there can be no doubt on that point. But it was an emancipation that was wrought through an intense moral enthusiasm, through a new direction given to the religious emotions and to the spiritual imagination, and that scarcely touched at all the realm of thought. Once or twice, indeed, Jesus seems to have been on the point of grasping the pure idea of intellectual liberty,—as when he exclaimed, almost impatient at the child-like dependence of his disciples upon the authority of his word, "Why judge ye not of yourselves what is right?"—and when he uttered his bold discourse, a defiant challenge of Jewish authority, on the free use of the Sabbath day. But a little study of the context discloses the fact, that the liberty in these cases was not based on the absolute rights of human thought, but on the abrogation of the Mosaic law by the proclamation of another law equally authoritative, the Messianic,—under which, not reason, but faith, was to be the main thing. In like manner, Paul taught a grand doctrine of liberty; and he did it with magnificent vigor and success. And it was a doctrine that had a vast and momentous result; it was spiritual liberty from the enslaving ritual of Judaism; liberty from the rigorous and petty demands of an external piety; liberty especially from the narrow and intolerant exclusiveness of the Judaism which refused communion with the Gentile races. But it was always the liberty wherewith Christ had made free: and Christ, through faith, was to be received as the new representative of supernatural authority. The mental and religious conditions of Judea in that age could not admit the conception of the absolute freedom of human thought.

Christianity took a long step away from the Judaism of the time; it broke many fetters. It brought a sense of freedom to many souls that had felt themselves bowed down under a burden of sins, for which the Mosaic law exacted a punishment from which they were now released. It lifted up the lowly, the weak, the poor, into places of hope and joy. It introduced a purer morality, a loftier enthusiasm, a sincerer faith, and a splendid consecration of human energies to living convictions; and as such it can never fail to win the reverent admiration of all morally earnest souls. It combined several important anterior streams of national religious sentiment, which gave it breadth and strength. It made emphatically a new religious era; marked a new departure in the history of religious development. But it did not strike the key-note of mental liberty. That service was reserved for a later and riper day. It was not so much an intellectual as a moral movement,—not chiefly an appeal to the reason, but to the emotions. It was a religious agitation that displaced one authority, which had proved itself incapable of meeting the spiritual conditions of the time, and enthroned another authority, better adapted to the epoch, and which surprised its own first adherents with its capacity, as time proceeded, to gather disciples and organize churches. But that it was not the leadership of mental liberty, but only the superior power of a new authority, is proved by the fact, that, after the inspiring enthusiasm of the first agitation had subsided, and there succeeded, in the early Christian centuries, the mental effort to interpret the contents of the new religion, the first and only allowable question was, not what is conformable to reason, but what was taught by Jesus and his immediate apostles.

Looking, then, at the Christianity of the New Testament—at its principles of social economy, at its prevailing type of virtues, at some of its distinguishing moral precepts, and at its relation to the principle of intellectual liberty—we certainly do not recognize here the characteristic lineaments of modern society. And if our discussion were to rest here, we assuredly could never believe that between this Christianity and modern civilization there is any relation of parent and child.

But the discussion cannot rest here, for Christianity did not rest here. We are asked to consider that Christianity was then but a child, confined chiefly to the home of its birth; and we are bound to consider into what kind of manhood this child grew up, as the years went on, and it travelled into other countries, and gained a larger outlook upon the world,—in other words, it is claimed that the elements of modern civilization were there in primitive Christianity, and that in the progress of historical development, from these elements, as seeds, sprang the tree on which has appeared the blossom of modern civilization. And the vast difference in appearance between the blossom and the seed does not disprove the statement that the one has come from the other. So far as we have yet advanced in our argument, this claim may be true. Powerful as is the law of heredity, we do not often see the exact lineaments of the parent in the face of the child. Man may even outgrow the features of his own childhood. We must look, therefore, into historical Christianity, and see if we can trace this process of natural growth by which modern civilization came as the product of the Christian religion.

The natural development and growth of Christianity—to which, however, the spread of Buddhism presents a parallel case—is, indeed, one of the greatest surprises of history,—a dramatic surprise. When we study the simplicity of Christianity in the teachings of Jesus' Sermon on the Mount, and in his life of plain human benevolence, and then look at the religion again in the vast and powerful organization of the Roman Catholic Church when modern civilization began, we can hardly believe that we are looking upon the same thing. The difference, certainly, in outward aspect, between modern civilization and the Christianity of the New Testament is no greater than is the apparent difference between the Christianity of the New Testament and the Church of Rome in the fifteenth century,—between Jesus and Pope Alexander VI., Christ's recognized viceroy on earth in the year 1500.

It was once my fortune to be in Rome on Christmas day, and to witness the spectacle of the religious services in St. Peter's. Several thousand people were gathered in the hospitable spaces of Michel Angelo's grand edifice. At the signal of martial music, it was announced that the papal procession was at hand. The pontifical guard of Swiss soldiers, in their fanciful motley array, and with glittering spears upright, swept down the broad nave, and divided the crowded assembly to either side; then stood in their armor like a fortified wall between the people and the advancing dignitaries of the church. They came, a long and varied line, coarsely-clad monks and cardinals in satin and gold, portly bishops in purple, and friars who were lean with fasts and vigils, priests of many orders and colors,—a numerous host, many of them bearing in their hands the jewelled crowns and all the costly insignia of the ecclesiastical power; and at last, borne on the shoulders of stalwart men, high above the heads of all, in a regal chair gorgeous with golden glitter, clothed in robes of royal magnificence, sat the pope. On each side high officials, brilliantly decorated, marched to guard his person, and to wait upon his needs. As he passed, the people fell upon their knees in homage, scarcely daring to lift their eyes to look upon his face. It was Pius the Ninth. He has just joined another procession,—that which is ever marching into the valley of the shadow of death, and in which pope and monk and humblest, poorest layman are equal at last. Peace to the kind old man's ashes now, even though as living pope he declared war on the deepest convictions of modern living men! But as I gazed on that Christmas spectacle, in the midst of the splendors of St. Peter's, I could but wonder whether Jesus would recognize in this man of royal and military pomp his successor, and in the scenic display of this ecclesiastical festival his religion. Yet between these two men, wide apart as they appear, and between the Jesus of Jesus and the Rome of Hildebrand and Pius ninth, there is a direct organic historical connection. We can trace the lineage right through the intervening centuries,—not, indeed, by the uncertain line of papal succession, but by the thread of the Messianic idea. This is the bond of vital principle which connects these extremes together, and preserves the historical identity between them. The Messianic idea, inherited from Judaism and applied to Jesus,—the conception of Jesus as a divinely commissioned royal ruler sent upon earth to inaugurate the kingdom of God—this was the central, organizing principle of primitive Christianity, under which its religious doctrines and moral precepts and spiritual enthusiasms were marshalled to one object, and by which individuals were gathered into churches, and individual churches were united in one spirit and one body. Christ, though crucified, was still recognized as the spiritual head over all; but it was natural that in an organized visible Church, the growing divine kingdom, there should be a recognized visible head as the earthly representative of Christ,—natural, too, and logical, when once the primitive promises were admitted, that this visible earthly representative of Jesus should come even to be regarded as officially clothed with the divine infallibility which it was believed Jesus himself possessed. Hence it is not difficult to see how primitive Christianity, simple as its elements seem, having begun to organize on the conception of Jesus as Messiah, though the first disciples ventured but timidly to confess him to be the Christ, might yet have grown, in time, into the imperial sovereignty and splendor of the Roman Catholic Church. And so we must not too hastily conclude, because primitive Christianity and modern civilization appear so wide asunder in character, that they, too, are not connected as cause and effect. We must examine the historical evidence between these two terms. We must see if we can trace the primitive Christian blood in the lineage of modern civilization.

And this examination will reveal two things: two special points among many: it will reveal that the primitive Christian blood did come down by direct descent, as we have just intimated, into the Roman Catholic Church,—though not without most important admixtures from foreign sources; from which admixtures came the modifications effecting many of the vast external differences we have just noted between primitive Christianity and the papal Christianity of the Middle Ages and the present time. The examination will also reveal that these commingling elements from foreign sources continued to increase as time elapsed, and to become more powerful, and that finally they disrupted the Church; and that the same foreign elements, the same social tendencies and forces that became strong enough to break asunder the Roman Church were the chief agencies in producing modern civilization. The Christian Church, as we shall see, did not carry these agencies in its own bosom. She resisted them, when she saw their logical result, with all her might. They came from without, and proved too strong for her power to check or subdue.

For the first two centuries of its existence, and to a considerable extent during the third, the Christian Church preserved its primitive standard of simplicity. It grew rapidly, but it was still unworldly. Its attitude towards the civil power was that of submissiveness, not ambition. Its spread was a magnificent illustration of the contagion of a pure moral enthusiasm. Its prominent doctrinal picture, of sin and hell on one side, with but one way of escape, of heaven and happiness on the other, won, by the Messiah's suffering, for all who would accept him, startled the fears, and aroused the hopes, of people in masses. The Church had no help from earthly government, but was, instead, the object of suspicion and persecution. It appealed to no sword but the sword of the Spirit. It maintained its own high moral code, and stimulated even unbelievers to a purer habit of living. It courageously assailed the appearance of moral corruption in its own limits, and with remarkable success. By a purely peaceful propaganda, it passed into many lands, girdling the Mediterranean Sea. It had no country of its own, and wished for none; inculcated no spirit of patriotism, no national pride. It cared for men's souls, not for their nationalities or race. As its founder had declared, its kingdom still remained not of this world. It was an ideal kingdom—a kingdom of faith and charity and peace—a sublime hope, an ecstasy of vision. As it travelled from its Eastern birth-place to the West, it imbibed somewhat of the Greek philosophy; and, as it spread through the Roman Empire, it caught the transcendent ability of that power for practical organization. But with all its growth, and its wonderful advance in organization, and the development under Greek influence of a more theologically elaborate creed, it retained in large measure, for nearly three centuries, its inner moral and spiritual character uncorrupted; while the Messianic idea was still the vital centre of the movement.

But during the third century, from their vastly increased numbers, Christians began to be found not infrequently in public civil offices, and even in the Roman armies; and thus they began to be susceptible to the temptations of temporal power. And when, near the beginning of the fourth century, the surprise came which gave to Christianity the throne of the Cæsars, its triumph was also its defeat and its fall. With power came the evils of power. I need not trace the long story. It is one of the saddest stories of all history. But there are two or three things concerning it that need to be said. After the conversion of the Emperor Constantine to Christianity, it was a thousand years before the light of modern civilization had much more than dawned. During this thousand years, the Christian Church held, not undisputed, but triumphant sway. What happened under this thousand years of imperial Christian sovereignty? For one thing, the Roman Empire, the most magnificent monarchy that human power has ever constructed, went to pieces in Italy, overrun by barbarians; and eight hundred years of mental imbecility and civil disorder followed,—the Dark Ages. For another thing, the Byzantine Empire was founded in the East, with a capital at Constantinople, on new soil free from pagan traditions, with ethics, it was professed, to be drawn only from Christian sources. And of that Christian government, Mr. Lecky, a very fair historian towards Christianity, thus sums up the judgment of history: "Of that Byzantine Empire, the universal verdict of history is that it constitutes, without a single exception, the most thoroughly base and despicable form that civilization has yet assumed. . . . There has been no other enduring civilization [it continued eleven hundred years] so absolutely destitute of all the forms and elements of greatness, and none to which the epithet mean may be so emphatically applied. . . . The history of the empire is a monotonous story of the intrigues of priests, eunuchs, and women; of poisonings, of conspiracies, of uniform ingratitude, of perpetual fratricides."

Such was the result of the Christian attempt to transplant the Roman Empire to virgin soil, free from pagan contamination. If there be any civilization which can be properly called the sole product of Christianity, it is this period of Byzantine civilization. Yet it would be manifestly unjust to judge the moral standard of Christianity by the immoralities of the Byzantine Empire; and it would be also unjust to hold Christianity wholly responsible for the fall of the Western Empire at Rome and for the Dark Ages that ensued. Yet I think Christianity must by the verdict of history share that responsibility,—the responsibility both for the corruption of the Eastern Empire and for the downfall of the Western and the ensuing darkness. The cause, in part, was the immoral and barbarian nature of the populations nominally under the sway of the Church. After Christianity took the sceptre of temporal power, vast numbers of people were baptized in the Christian name who had experienced little or no conversion of heart; nations were converted in mass by the example or command of their rulers, and the moral character of the Church suffered in consequence. But the cause of this long period of imbecility and corruption is also, in part, to be found in the fact that Christianity had not the intellectual ability required for the task of imperial government which it had assumed. It had had no mental training for the work. It possessed no such intellects as had adorned and led the defunct civilizations of Greece and Rome. It had not encouraged mental culture nor national loyalty, nor military heroism nor statesmanship. At the outset it had attracted the ignorant, the credulous, the simple, the poor, the suffering and sinful, but not to any great extent the cultivated. This was one of its most boasted glories. It was rather disposed, for centuries, to condemn culture as pagan and sinful. It preached salvation by faith, not by culture; addressed the heart and the spiritual imagination, not the reason. Hence, when it mounted the throne, its constituency was largely from the ignorant and superstitious classes. The men of finest ability and culture and training mostly stood aloof; and, with an empire on its hands to govern, Christianity had not the men with mental capacity to govern it. The issue showed the disastrous weakness of Christianity on the intellectual side.

And thus, when the sun of Roman civilization went down, human intellect, for the time, went down with it; and the character of Christianity cannot escape a large share of responsibility for the long intellectual night that followed. For several centuries whatever of civil and social order there was in Europe, excepting during the Saracens' occupation in Spain, was under the guidance of the Christian Church. It was ecclesiastical government and ecclesiastical order of society. All the intellect of the period was turned to questions of theology, and in large measure to mere quibbles of theology, to ecclesiastical organization, and spectacular religious ceremonies. Superstitions of the wildest sort, legends and traditions of the most incredible character, were held for truth, even among the most learned. But few except priests were even learned enough to read and write. During all this time, while the Church had supreme sway, hardly a book was written that added anything to the mental or literary riches of the world. There was no art save some architecture of Oriental splendor in Constantinople reflected from the neighboring land of the Moslems. The spirit of demolition rather than construction prevailed. There was slight industrial progress and little advance in social habits of life. Mental doubt and error were condemned as guilt, and ecclesiastically punished. A blind, unquestioning belief in the teachings of the Church was regarded as the highest of duties. For three or four centuries, says Buckle, there were only three or four men in Europe who dared to think for themselves. And the moral degradation of the time corresponded to the mental. The lofty ethical standard of Christianity was trailed in the very dust of its religious triumphs. Some of the moral annals of this period, reciting acts of Christian sovereigns and priests, of men and women direct from Christian baptism and the Lord's Supper, it makes the blood run cold to read.

Here, surely, is not a very promising soil for modern civilization to spring up; and yet this condition of Christian Europe brings us close to the time when intimations of the coming revival of society began to appear. The light did not come full day at once. There was to be a long twilight first. But upon this long night of mental and moral darkness, while mediæval Christianity governed Europe, the twilight was at hand. And the test-question now comes. Did the light of the new day break from the Church?

To this question we must answer No. The doors and windows of the Christian Church were barred against the light, whether from without or within. The dawn of the new day of civilization, not to speak of some previous prophetic streaks of light, came with the Renaissance in the fourteenth century. "The history of the Renaissance," as defined by its able historian, Symond, "is the history of the attainment of self-conscious freedom by the human spirit, manifested in the European races"; and again, as "the emancipation of reason for the modern world." These definitions define also the central principle of modern civilization, as previously indicated. But the Renaissance did not spring from any impulse given in the Christian Church. The Christian Church adopted some of its results at last, but its causes were outside of Christianity. It was to the Christian Church that reason was enslaved, and the power that broke the fetters was not in that Church. The Renaissance had two special sources; one of them the revival of Pagan literature, the old classics of Greece and Rome, which had long been slumbering in monasteries unread or uncared for; the other, the importation into Europe of a rationalistic spirit from Mohammedanism in Spain. We owe, therefore, the primary impulse of the Renaissance, and hence of modern civilization, to non-Christian sources. The restoration of Pagan learning, which was especially favored by the capture of Constantinople by the Mohammedans, who brought to light and put into circulation the rich stores of Greek classics hidden there, acquainted Christian Europe with the mental greatness and brilliancy of the past civilizations on whose ruins the Church had built its power, and aroused a new mental vigor and ambition. These classics had lain there in the dust of monasteries all through the period of Byzantine sovereignty; but the Byzantine Christians were too busy in political intrigues to study them, or too deeply enamored of theological wrangling to understand their worth. It was reserved for Mohammedanism to set these treasures free, and to introduce Christian Italy and Greece to their great Pagan ancestors. It was the just claim of Mohammedanism, too, that it had kept the knowledge of classic literature while Christian Europe was in ignorance of it. And it was partly from this cause, and partly from its native culture of reason, that Mohammedanism was able from its vantage ground in Spain to start a rationalistic movement in Europe. The Moslems were cultivating learning, making progress in the sciences, encouraging philosophical speculation, while Christian Europe was in mental stagnation and darkness. Moslem scholars were accustomed to doubt, to inquire, to think freely; while the Christian Church was condemning doubt as a sin deserving eternal punishment. But there is a contagion in free thought. The spirit of Mohammedan Rationalism got across the Pyrenean mountains. The books and speculations of Moslem scholars began to find some eager readers here and there, in Christian countries. Christian Abelard was a disciple of Mohammedan Averroes. The Albigenses were a Mohammedanized Christian sect. Wickliffe in England, it is believed, had felt the influence of Saracen free thought. The intellect of Europe was astir again with new life. It was re-vitalized, through the Renaissance, from two intellectual centres,—from the resuscitated Pagan literature raised from its grave alive with all its old inspiration, and from the free thought of Mohammedan Rationalism. A French historian says "the great achievements of the Renaissance were the discovery of the world and the discovery of man." The new mental life that had come—impulse and inspiration of modern civilization—brought with it these two discoveries. It revealed the material world to the eye of Science, and said, "In the name of truth, take possession of it!" It revealed to man's consciousness the power and dignity of his own thought, and said, "In the name of liberty, take possession of thyself!"

Closely allied with the mental stir of this new time, and illustrative of it, there came in rapid succession several most important inventions and discoveries. The telescope was invented in 1250. The compass was discovered in 1302. Paper began to be made of rags in 1319. Gunpowder came in 1320. Printing, most momentous of all, invented earlier, was put to real use in 1438. And America was discovered, revolutionizing both commerce and theological science, in 1492. All of these events had a most important bearing in promoting the new intellectual activity, and in determining the conditions of modern civilization; though in the limits of Christendom they did not occur through any special fostering of the Church. Some of these inventions and discoveries had been previously made in other parts of the world, but they were new to Christendom.

Another very strong element that made itself felt in the new tendencies and spirit of European life was the native independence of the Teutonic mind. It was an inherent temperament of the race, a quality of the stock and blood, which, now that its long-waited-for era had come, would take its destined place, and marshal the interests of modern society under its leadership. That barbarism, which, in its restlessness, its love of activity and conquest, swept down from the North of Europe, and overwhelmed the civilization of the Roman Empire, possessed a robustness of mentality and an ingrained loyalty to liberty whereby it was to make grand atonement for its wrong against mankind, by putting itself in time at the head of a new civilization, which should make more conquests by science than Rome ever made by the sword, and should push around the globe an empire of free thought and free citizenship such as Rome never knew in its palmy days. Guizot says, "It was the rude barbarians of Germany who introduced this sentiment of personal independence, this love of individual liberty, into European civilization; it was unknown among the Romans, it was unknown in the Christian Church, it was unknown in nearly all the civilizations of antiquity." And he adds—and I ask you to note that this is no anti-Christian sceptic who so speaks—"The spirit of Christianity wrought a change in the moral character of man, opposed to this principle of independence; for under its influence his mind struggled to extinguish its own liberty, and to deliver itself up entirely to the dictates of his faith. But the feeling of personal independence, a fondness for genuine liberty displaying itself without regard to consequences, and with scarcely any other aim than its own satisfaction,—this feeling, I repeat, was unknown to the Romans and to the Christians. We are indebted for it to the barbarians." Here, then, is another of the most powerful impulses of modern civilization—an element vastly more important than the brief space here allotted to it would seem to indicate—which has no source, no ancestral relationship whatever, in Christianity.

But the argument against Christianity being the parent of modern civilization is rendered still stronger, when we consider the attitude of the Christian Church towards this new intellectual life that was welling up in all parts of Europe. If the rising civilization was her own child, Christianity was guilty of the most brutal attempts at infanticide. But the Church was consistent with her past record. She knew that the rising mental movement, the new birth of human reason, was not from her loins. She knew that it was a foreign foe, and that, if she did not slay it, it would slay her. The Christian Church exerted itself to the utmost to crush the mental activity which resulted in the new civilization. So far as the Renaissance created art, the Church gradually accepted it, and endeavored to turn it to her own advantage. But so far as it brought science, and stimulated liberty of thought, and started theological doubt, she declared war against it, and pursued it with relentless persecution. She stamped out the heretical Albigenses with the iron heel of her soldiers; she burned Giordano Bruno, for teaching that the earth went round the sun; imprisoned and tortured Galileo for telling what his telescope revealed; hunted down heresy, wherever it appeared, with fire and sword; and finally invented the diabolism of the Inquisition by which spiritual detectives were set to eaves-dropping at the houses of scholars, and all opposition to the authorized creeds of the Church, even a mere heretical thought which had made no public utterance, was to be punished with death. The Christian Church set itself deliberately to the task of extinguishing intellectual liberty—the very life-spark of modern civilization. But why multiply words to enforce this argument, when the same spirit, lacking the sword, exists in the same Church to-day? The late Pope, less than fourteen years ago, sent forth a famous Encyclical Letter, in which he branded as heresies to be denounced and resisted, "the notions of liberty of conscience and of worship, of liberty of the press, of the independence of the secular government from the ecclesiastical, of the equality of laymen and clergymen before the law, of the right of a people to make their own laws and elect their own magistrates, and to educate their own children outside of the Catholic Church." When such an anathema as this is put forth by the head of the Church of Rome in our own day, against some of the most cardinal principles of modern civilization, who can venture to say that modern civilization is the product of Christianity, since the whole of Christianity bearing on the question, when modern civilization began, was embodied in that Church?

But did Christianity make no contributions to modern civilization? Certainly she did; for no moral nor social force can absolutely cease, any more than can material force. But Christianity made no such important and preponderating contributions as to entitle it to be called the creator of modern civilization. Far from it. What the Christian Church did in the middle ages that was of value to the after life of Europe consisted specially in her far-reaching and potent practical organization; which, however, she got originally not from her own intellect, nor from any primitive revelation in Judea, but from the Roman Empire. But she deserves the credit of adapting this organization to her uses. In the collision and crash

[CONCLUDED ON PAGE 187.]

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

"CHARITY," OR JUSTICE?

A response to the last line of "A. O.'s" beautiful "Invocation" in THE INDEX, 6 Sept., 1877, p. 423: "And live in lenient charity."

Not "Charity," beloved friend,
Is what I crave for,—what I aim
To plant in all men's minds, to end
The strife of sects, the heart's deep pain.

I stand where we together stood
In earnest times, in days of yore;
I hear again the Man of Good
Proclaim societary lore:

"Let us have Justice!" was the cry
Of him who taught us how to feel
For other's woes, perchance to die,
Thereby to save the common weal.

"Man's character for him is formed
By circumstance; he cannot choose
But love the good, hate the deformed,
Or move as he is moved; or lose
His childhood's faith, if later life
Should bring him light. The soul of man
Requires no priestly aid, no zealot's strife
To save it; no, these are its ban."

No; nor needs man "Toleration."
(Mark the usurping tyrant's term.)
The man who truly would be free,
Who has within him hopes that burn,
Scorns e'en the term of "charity"
For his great thoughts; his soul doth yearn
For "Justice"; "Justice—the light of love."
"Justice for all" and "Liberty." B. R.

NEW SOUTH WALES, February, 1878.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 13.

C. N. Bovee, $4; Bear-Admiral Maxie, $48.71; J. Church-ill, $1.60; John Shackleton, $3.20; Mrs. E. L. Bigelow, $3.20; John W. Griffith, $3.20; F. P. Partridge, $1; Dr. E. Evans, $3.69; John Logan, $2.10; Miss T. F. Von Arnim, $3.20; W. D. Le Sueur, $2; John Hiatt, $5; M. F. Whitehead, $3.25; Mrs. C. B. Hoffman, $2; Prof. Felix Adler, $20; G. B. Stebbins, $1; E. M. Warner, 50 cents; J. H. Philco, $2; A. M. Lathrop, $3; Doeringer & Co., $5.75; J. R. Hawley, $1.70; Carroll Wright, 25 cents; Dr. G. W. Topping, $2.20; Charles Richardson, $3.20; Mrs. M. J. Egan, $2; Gen. A. J. Warner, $10; E. G. Horr, $7; J. D. Van Slyke, $3.20; Mrs. L. E. Johnson, $3.40; M. H. Howard, $1.60; Henry Damon, $3.20; P. P. Churchill, $2; Miss E. Homer, $3.20; Mrs. G. R. Russell, $3.20; A. Williams & Co., $7.48; A. T. Lilly, $3.20; James Damon, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 18, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LIBERAL LEAGUE.

ONE WAY TO DO IT.

Reader, do you desire to organize a Liberal League in your town? If so, this is a good way to do it: Draw up a paper in the following form, and present it to all the liberals in your vicinity:—

"We, the undersigned, are in favor of organizing a Local Liberal League in the town of —, and agree to meet for that purpose at the house of — on Saturday evening next. We each agree to pay the sum set opposite our respective names towards the ten dollars required to procure a charter from the National Liberal League."

Names.	Residence.	Amount.
--------	------------	---------

When you have procured ten names and ten dollars, you are ready for organization. Of course, the more names the better. I shall be pleased to furnish form of Constitution when required. Reader, will you attend to this work immediately, before it passes from your mind?

H. L. GREEN,

Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., March 15, 1878.

UNDER A SECTION of a city ordinance punishing vice and immorality, George M. Howell, a druggist, was tried before Judge Ford at New Brunswick, New Jersey, February 27, charged with selling cigars on Sunday. The City Attorney appeared as prosecutor, and the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department and one Honnell as witnesses for the city. The defence objected to the trial proceeding, on the ground that it was illegal and without warrant of law, on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction, and that the section of the ordinance under which the complaint was made was null and void. The defendant also objected to any evidence of the sale of cigars in his store on Sunday, February 10, by his alleged clerk, until the prosecution had first shown that the sale was especially authorized by him. In conclusion, defendant's counsel moved to dismiss the complaint, on the ground that no power is given in the city's charter to pass such an ordinance; that, it being lawful to keep open the store on Sunday, the defendant being allowed to sell one article cannot be prohibited from selling any other which he had a right to sell on any other day of the week. Each and every objection was overruled by the Judge; and the druggist was mulcted in the sum of $30 for the offence. The case will be appealed. These statements rest on the authority of the Philadelphia Herald.

THE BOSTON EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE have had a long debate about prison chaplains, two conflicting reports on that subject having been offered by the majority and minority of a committee. The majority were in favor of substituting a "teacher of [Christian] morality" for the present chaplain (which would really be only a change of name), and providing for religious instruction by volunteers from all denominations. The minority favored the present system. These resolutions were finally adopted:—

On certain points concerning State chaplaincies—however we may differ on others,—the Evangelical ministry here are agreed; namely, in opposition to denominational chaplains and paid denominational chaplains in our State institutions; therefore the Evangelical Ministers' Association of Boston and vicinity sets before the public the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That we wholly and emphatically protest against denominational chaplains in our State institutions.

Resolved, That we wholly and emphatically protest against paid denominational chaplains in our State institutions.

Resolved, That we earnestly call upon the government of the State and upon the good people of this Commonwealth to prevent these mischievous institutions from being established in Massachusetts.

This means simply a protest against "denominational," but not against "unsectarian Christian" chaplains. The only sensible course is to exclude both.

MORE ABOUT TRINITY CHURCH.

Since our last issue, we have been gratified by the receipt of the following letter from General Dix, which, as it gives additional information upon the subject under discussion, should in justice be laid before our readers:—

OFFICE OF THE CORPORATION OF TRINITY CHURCH,
No. 187 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK,
April 11, 1878.

DEAR SIR:—

I thank you for the satisfactory manner in which you have given my letter to your readers. Mr. Roosevelt ought not to have made so great a mistake in regard to the extent of the property of this Corporation. Its affairs were investigated by the Legislature of the State more than twenty years ago, and everything concerning it was a matter of public record. The street number of every lot it possessed was given and the value stated as ascertained by two disinterested persons. The whole number of lots was stated at nine hundred and eighty-five, but many of them were not more than twenty feet front—some less,—so that the number of full lots, twenty-five feet by one hundred, was not far from what it is now. The largest estimate of the value of the property was six millions, one hundred and eight thousand, one hundred and fifty dollars. Differing with you widely in opinion in regard to religious matters, it is gratifying to know that you have no desire to advance the cause you advocate on any other grounds than those of fairness and truth.

I propose to send by mail the Year Book of Trinity Church and a communication which I addressed to the Legislature in 1857. When you have leisure to look at them, I hope you will be satisfied that we are using the ample means in our hands to promote the cause of morality, as well as religion, by our ministrations among the poor.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN A. DIX.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Esq.

We return our acknowledgments to General Dix for the pamphlets mentioned, which have been safely received. One is the "Year Book and Register of the Parish of Trinity Church, in the City of New York, A.D. 1878. Published by Authority," etc. The other is a "Communication from Hon. John A. Dix to the Select Committee of the Senate on the Report of Trinity Church. New York: 1857." These documents give interesting information. The latter, especially, exhibits the grounds on which Trinity Church would justify her exemption from taxation, so far as she enjoys it, as being a public benefactor. Referring to some resolutions which he had introduced into the Vestry in 1854, General Dix said:—

"Their design was to rescue the lower part of the city—that portion which has not only an immense body of resident poor, but which receives into its bosom the greater part of the destitute who seek a refuge here from hardship in other countries,—to rescue this combined mass of permanent and temporary indigence from the utter spiritual abandonment with which it was threatened by the removal of those to whose wealth and liberality it had been accustomed to look for sympathy and pecuniary aid to more congenial districts. The plan comprehended not only the spiritual instruction of the adult inhabitants of this deserted district—once the seat of nearly all the wealth of the city,—but the education of their children, and, to the extent of the means of the Corporation, a ministration to their temporal wants. Trinity Church, with its endowments, fortunately growing more valuable with the progress of the city, was to stand in the place of the individual opulence which has fled from a district where," etc.

"Though the plan has not been formally adopted, it has been practically acted on; and it is due to my associates in the Vestry to say that they have responded to all appeals in behalf of the destitute districts below Canal Street by as liberal an expenditure as the income of the Corporation, crippled by a heavy debt and burdened by large annual contributions to other churches, has admitted. The clerical force of the parish has been nearly doubled; the Sunday-schools have been greatly enlarged; parish schools for the gratuitous education of children have been established; by far the greater part of the pews in Trinity Church, one hundred and four out of one hundred and forty-four in St. Paul's, and a large number in St. John's, are free; efforts have been put forth to bring into the church those who have not been accustomed to attend any religious worship; Trinity Church is opened twice a day throughout the year for divine service; a mission office has been established to receive applications for aid; lay visitors are employed to seek out want and relieve it; missionary agencies have been instituted in connection with the Commissioners of Emigration; the whole lower part of the city has been virtually made a field of missionary labor; and a degree of energy has been infused into the ministrations of the church, temporal and spiritual, which compensates in a great degree for the lost support of the religious societies removed to other districts."

"The State, nay, the whole country, has a deep interest in this question. The city of New York, embodying as she does, to a great extent, the commercial and financial power of the Union, must exert a sensible influence upon the moral and intellectual character of all with whom she is brought into association. The slightest agitations on her surface undulate in all directions to the great circumference of which she is the centre. On Trinity Church are devolved, in the order of events, the spiritual instruction and guidance of the district by which she is brought most directly into contact with all that lies beyond her limits. If this duty is not faithfully performed, no voice should be raised in palliation of the delinquency. On the other hand, if any of those who have withdrawn from this part of the city the wealth which Providence has, in such disproportion, bestowed on them, shall seek to deprive the destitute whom they have left behind of the sole resource for spiritual instruction and for the alleviation of temporal want—if they shall succeed, by misstating the condition and unjustly impeaching the motives of Trinity Church, in defeating her efforts to carry out the great system of labor with which she is occupied,—they will incur the gravest and most odious of all responsibilities, that of consigning one of the most important districts in the Emporium of the Union to an intellectual and spiritual death."

Here we find clearly stated, by one of the most distinguished members of the Corporation of Trinity Church, their own general conception of the benefits which they undertake to bestow upon society at large,—the general ground, therefore, on which they must claim exemption from taxation for any portion of the large property under their control. Turning to the Year Book of 1878 to learn how far this general plan is carried into effect, we find that Trinity Parish to-day contains seven churches,—Trinity Church, St. Paul's Chapel, St. John's Chapel, Trinity Chapel, St. Chrysostom's Chapel, St. Augustine's Chapel, and St. Cornelius' Chapel; and that it makes annual donations to eighteen other churches, amounting in all for the year ending August 1, 1877, to $47,660.19. It also sustains a multiplicity of educational and charitable organizations, of which the entire activity seems to be directed by strictly ecclesiastical conceptions of "education" and "charity." Provision is made to a certain extent for the temporal wants of the poor, the sick, the aged, though apparently with a large discrimination in favor of members of the various Parish organizations. The education of the three hundred boys of the Trinity Church Parochial School includes "religious instruction according to the Holy Scriptures and the Book of Common Prayer"; the girls at St. Paul's Chapel Parish School "are thoroughly and assiduously instructed in the principles and doctrines of the Church. The child is regarded, all through her school term, as a candidate for confirmation and communion; and, on leaving the school, the effort is made to keep her in connection with the Church by placing her in some Bible-class or Guild." In a word, the whole administration of the Trinity Church property appears to be devoted, as was indeed to be expected, to the furtherance and propagation of Christianity, according to the strictly Episcopalian form of faith; and whatever secular good is attempted or done appears to be merely subordinate and incidental to this central, dominant purpose.

Now, accepting as conclusive General Dix's denial of last week that any portion of the estate of Trinity Church is used for the support of vicious establishments, we are "satisfied" that, as he states in the foregoing letter, the Vestry "are using the ample means in [their] hands to promote the cause of morality, as well as religion, by [their] ministrations among the poor,"—that is, according to their own Christian conception of morality. But that does not dispose of the whole matter. The "public" work of the Corporation is neither more nor less than active propagandism of their own religious faith and creed; it is not public in any proper sense of the word, nor does it promote any genuine public interests to any considerable degree or in any but incidental ways. It is of no advantage to the State that Trinity Church should be kept busily at work in New York City making converts to Episcopalianism and strengthening its own power thereby; and it is a positive wrong to the people to tax them for any such purpose. If the Corporation chose to do this work of proselytism at their own cost alone, paying an equitable tax on their whole property to the State, there would be no cause of complaint; they would only be exercising their undoubted rights. But it is a very different matter to do this purely sectarian work at the public expense, which is the result of exemption from taxation to whatever extent. So far as Trinity Church is exempted from taxation, she legally defrauds the State and legally robs the people; so far as she defends this exemption, she justifies legal fraud and robbery, teaches a corrupt morality, and makes herself an example of evil and a fountain of public demoralization. She is not permitted, it seems, to enjoy exemption on all her property; so much the better for public justice and good morals. But she enjoys it on a considerable part, and to that extent exerts a mischievous influence on society. How large is this part?

There needs to be a much more frank and full statement on this question than any that has been made. Trinity Church Year Book for 1877 (for a copy of which we are indebted to a friend) says that "the property, in all probability, is not worth more than from seven to eight millions"; General Dix last week estimated it at seven millions. Accepting this estimate, at a rate of taxation of two and a half per cent. (which, we are told, is less than the rate of taxation in New York City), Trinity Church ought to pay $175,000; whereas General Dix says that he has paid only $64,107.97 for the current year. Even on the acknowledged value of the productive part of the property, there seems to be an under-assessment of taxes; which is exemption from taxation precisely to that extent.

But this estimate of seven millions as the value of the Trinity Church property is a very unfair one. If any private tax-payer were to make a tax-return on the principles of the Year Book, he would be exposed to very ugly suspicions. We quote the Trinity Church Year Book of 1877: "In estimating the value of the property, the calculation ought to be limited to what yields an income. . . . Leaving out of account the unproductive part of the estate, and estimating that portion only which yields an income, the value of the property is comparatively small; small in comparison with the inflated and erroneous opinions about it. 'Sixty millions of dollars' is the stereotyped phrase at present in vogue; the property in all probability is not worth more than from seven to eight millions."

The value of all the exempted part of the estate is here thrown out as valueless! For instance, the whole block bounded by Broadway, Church, Vesey, and Fulton Streets is avowedly counted out as of no value whatever! It is in this way that the immense property is ciphered down to "seven or eight millions." The community has a right to demand the honest figures, the actual market value of all the land and buildings belonging to the Corporation. We affirm that such statements as we have just quoted from Trinity Church Year Book show that the necessity of defending their unjust exemption has demoralized the minds of the Corporation,—that they here resort to a device for evading criticism which they would blush to use as private men. There is not one of them who would sign and swear to a similar statement of his own property, throwing out the "unproductive" portion as of no value; there is not a tax-assessor who would permit such a return. Trinity Church, by her own confession, possesses a vastly larger and more valuable estate than she wishes to be the reputed possessor of; and by setting afloat such misleading statements as that she only owns "seven or eight millions" she knows (or ought to know) that she is deceiving the public at large. All that we want in this matter is strict honesty and strict justice; and we can never profess to be "satisfied" with less.

ABOUT MEANNESS.

This is a word of many meanings. It is worthy of remark that the adjective mean, of which meanness is the derivative noun, and the verb mean, which expresses what a word or person signifies or intends, and of which meaning is the derivative noun, probably came from the same root, man. In one direction the root sprouts thus: man, many, mean. The powerful few despise the subject many; and to them whatever pertains to the many is mean. In another direction, the root sprouts thus: man, mind, mean. This is the intellectual sprouting of the root, as the other was the physical. Thus we have from the same root man, an adjective which expresses the average quality of human nature, but which, through the happy egotism of human nature, always means, to one who uses it, something beneath himself, and a verb which implies that the mind is the man, and that just as the mind is the man, the meaning is the soul of the word; that is, to all intents and purposes, the word.

The word meanness (manyness) has many meanings, because men view man differently. To some, he is merely an animal,—a beast of prey, by force or stealth. To others, he is a mind, a meaning, a soul, using vital animal powers for intellectual and moral purposes. To them, a man as a mere beast of prey is as much bosh as a word without meaning. To the former class, to be poor is, of course, to be mean; not to take every advantage afforded by both body and mind to become rich and powerful is to be mean. To the latter, nothing is mean but baseness of mind, laziness, filth, injustice, want of honor, tricky greediness, and the use of superior strength to set aside the rights of the weaker.

It seems to me a pity, and not indicative of progress, that the "Improved Webster's Dictionary," which bears the names of two Noas, should have dropped out of the definition of meanness, which was in the first edition, the following excellent remarks: "Poverty is not always meanness; it may be connected with it, but men of dignified minds and manners are often poor." "All dishonesty is meanness." "4. Sordidness; niggardliness; opposed to LIBERALITY or CHARITABLENESS. Meanness is very different from frugality." The emphasis above on the words liberality and charitableness is as the first Noah left it. There is also dropped out of the two-Noah Dictionary the remark, "Meanness in men incurs contempt." And, really, there seems to be some reason for dropping this; for it almost seems to be true, that meanness has ceased to incur contempt. Who despises the great railroad managers who deal so meanly with their bond-holders? Who despises legislators and statesmen who shave the notes of the government in the hands of the people? Who despises the great life-insurance presidents who rob the poorer policy-holders for the benefit of the richer ones, and count their receipts over twice for the sake of making their expenses appear less, and bribe examiners with the money of their policy-holders? Who, above all, despises the meanness of the great teachers of theology in trying to get a religious test smuggled into the Constitution of their country, which would deprive it of the public services of any future Jefferson or Lincoln or any kind of freethinker not base enough to be a hypocrite? Who despises the meanness of those uncharitable Christians who would compel men that do not believe in that cruel God of the Bible, who is absurdly said to have allowed his own Son to be sacrificed to redeem men from his own wrath, to listen, themselves in legislative halls and their children in schools, to prayers,—prayers paid for partly by their money,—prayers which to them are rank blasphemy? Considering that all Christians are not only protected, but by exemption from taxation on their churches subsidized, in worshipping God in their own churches, according to the dictates of their own consciences, it seems the utmost depth of meanness and bad manners to oblige pagans, infidels, philosophers, savants, and their children, in senate and school, to listen to and pay for what to them is a foolish waste of time, at the best. But it does not "incur contempt" among Christians, as it surely will, if Christianity should ever acquire the right to claim the Golden Rule as its property. E. W.

A FUNERAL ADDRESS.

Mr. B. F. Underwood has kindly sent us the following copy of his remarks at the funeral of an early friend of THE INDEX, Dr. B. Michener, of Adel, Iowa, who died in that place on March 10, 1878. We regret not to have received the obituary notice published in the Dallas County News, which was mailed to us at the same time.—ED.

Our brother was worn out by age and illness, when death kindly came to his relief, touching his weary heart, and taking him from the empire of the living to the silent realm wherein he will rest forever more. We are now about to commit our dead to the care of mother earth, in whose bosom he will sleep the quiet, unbroken, everlasting sleep of death.

Suns will rise and set, moons will wax and wane, generations will come and go, empires will flourish and decay, bringing hopes and fears, joys and sorrows, suffering and death to all who live and the millions yet to be; for these are the common lot and heritage of man. But no vicissitude of earth, no event of time will ever disturb our brother's rest, or wake him from his dreamless sleep! for, his career finished, his conscious life ended, he belongs now to that vast realm whose monarch permits no sound, not even a whisper or a sigh, to disturb the dead's repose, or to break the silence that reigns supreme throughout his wide domain.

What though the storms of winter sweep wildly over him, or the lightnings flash and the thunders roll above his narrow home; what though the tramp of armies and the roar of battle shake his grave, or the earthquake sinks him deeper in the bosom of mother earth; what though the globe itself, waxing old, dissolves and passes into the great mausoleum of worlds, as our brother, growing old, died "to mix forever with the elements" of earth,—the great mausoleum of man,—he will heed not, he will hear not, he will feel not these conflicts and commotions. The convulsions of Nature, even a world's dissolution, will be no more to him than the decay of a flower on his grave, or the mouldering of the marble that marks his burial-place.

The influence of his upright character and useful life will remain with us and be a legacy to the living of all ages, as long as the race of man endures. Farewell, brother. Careful hands and loving hands will deck thy grave, and keep thy monument whole, and thy memory green.

[CONCLUDED FROM PAGE 185.]

of the barbarian invasions, when everything went by the board, the Christian Church stood, and became almost the sole bond of society for a number of centuries. By extending over the half-converted barbarians its ecclesiastical government, it helped to discipline them to self-restraint, which came but slowly, and taught them cooperation in common aims and interests; and thus it prepared the way for a better government to follow. In spite also of the glaring moral corruption of the mediæval church, it preserved in good measure the ideal moral standard of its better days; and this standard, when the mental revival came, was brought finally to bear successfully against existent vices. And it is but just to say that modern civilization, though not the product of Christianity, has doubtless been elevated and strengthened by the Christian standard of morals and philanthropy,—not so much by its special precepts, for these have been largely rejected by modern society, as by its demand for purity of heart, for sincerity in conduct, and for lofty disinterestedness of aim. These are virtues, however, not to be credited specially to Christianity,—for they are to be found in other religions; they are to be credited to humanity. So, too, we must say of the spirit of brotherhood and philanthropy,—that it is not specially Christian, but human; and though Christianity is to be credited with having given it special emphasis, and brought a certain temper thereby into modern civilization which otherwise might have been deficient, yet modern civilization on the other hand, by its knowledge of natural laws, of social science, of political economy, is giving direction and methods to philanthropy such as the Christian Church by all its revelations never discovered, and, before social science gave her the key, never thought of adopting.

We may sum up the argument, then, not only with the special statement that modern civilization is not the product of Christianity, that it is as much pagan as it is Christian, that it has within it Roman jurisprudence and Mohammedan science and Grecian classics quite as much as it has of Jesus and Paul and Judea, and that it has more of Anglo-Saxon love of freethought and free bodies and free souls than it has of anything else,—we may sum up the evidence presented not only by these special statements, but we may say more generally, that behind all religion, behind all civilization, is the human mind—the human mind, open to the boundless realms of truth, open to the boundless inspirations of honor and goodness. The development of the human mind is the stream which bears them both, religion and civilization, on its current. Religion is the inspirer, but civilization, which is but another name for applied knowledge, is the leader. Religion is the wind that fills the sail; but civilization is the strong hand that holds the helm. That is allied more to the heart, this to the intellect. According as intellect is benighted or educated, religion is degraded and degrading, or enlightened and elevating. Religion can powerfully aid civilization, by bringing into individual character and life consecration and devotion to the highest ends of human existence; and civilization in turn may benefit and serve religion, by rectifying its doctrines, and keeping its thought abreast with the freest science. The facts of its history prove that Christianity has been modified by the intelligence and character of the people adopting it quite as much as it has modified them. It has taken color and shape and temper from the nations and races through which it has passed. Modern civilization, since the era of its birth, has been making a new Christianity. Protestantism is the product of modern civilization; or, at least, they are twin-children of the same parentage. And, as the civilization advances, this new form of Christianity is becoming more and more modified, until already the ancient authority of the Church and of Christ is reduced in some quarters of the Protestant fold to the thinness of shadows. A noted Episcopal clergyman of New York has recently said that every new truth discovered becomes a part of Christ's truth, and is to be counted as gospel. And another clergyman of the University of Cambridge, England, says that some of the distinctive precepts of Jesus in the New Testament are not to be obeyed, because, "through facts of modern knowledge and experience, Christ teaches us to-day just the opposite." So the human mind to-day sits in judgment on the words of Jesus, and, even in the Christian Church, virtually discards his authority, barely saving the form of ancient allegiance by a quibble of words. Yet these are signs that the time is approaching when Christianity, in order to preserve its true place and influence in the world's history, will abdicate its own authority, and in appeals to the human heart will even yield its name to the broader title, humanity. The Christian Church has thus far been guided by Paul's exhortation, "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free." But a greater than Paul or than Jesus—the spirit of modern civilization—now exhorts, "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith the truth shall make you free."

Communications.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XXIV.

The detailed criticism of the Wakemanian vertebration, or of the main stem of scientific classification as propounded by Wakeman, would carry us into too much particularization for my present purpose. There is one point, however, upon which, even here, I would suggest an improvement, both upon the ground of intrinsic correctness and because its ratification will tend to a furthering of reconciliation, especially with Elsberg. Wakeman, following Comte, divides the whole larger science of anthropology, hominology, or man-lore into I. sociology, — Elsberg's synanthropology, — and II. ethics, or "morale," which concerns the conscience and deportment of the individual man, in his relations with other men, or society.

The point of rectification here is, that there should be recognized a threefold, instead of a twofold division of the great, all-embracing science of man. There is first, man singly considered, — man as an individual, or in his individual character and properties; secondly, man collectively, or society as a grand organism, having an expansion in space, and a continuity, protension, or history in time; and thirdly, ethics, which is then the science of the integration and inter-relationships of the former two. Ethics is purely a science of relations between the individual and the community; and it is obvious that a science of pure relation cannot be properly introduced until the termini of the relation have first been posited. The final one of Comte's series of Universal Laws consecrates (in the French sense) this principle. (See Politique Positive Vol. IV., p. 180—French edition.)

I have, in The Basic Outline of Universology, furnished the name mon-anthropology, for the science of the individual man. Elsberg, accepting it, has suggested syn-anthropology as better than sociology to denote the science of society; and Comte had already introduced morale (ethics) in this connection, but with no very exact definition. Elsberg has contented himself with the two terms monanthropology and synanthropology; and Wakeman with the two terms sociology (synanthropology) and ethics. Elsberg has omitted the third term, ethics; and Wakeman has omitted the first one, monanthropology. They are thus both out of harmony with the fulness of discrimination requisite, as it seems to me; and, at all events, out of harmony with each other. The harmony is restored, in both senses, by admitting the threefold discrimination. Wakeman might, perhaps, better sacrifice Haeckel's somewhat doubtful subdivision of biology—called protistology—than to omit monanthropology.

Upon strictly a priori grounds, there should be a science for the one man; then for the many; and then for the relations of the one and the many. I am not aware of Elsberg's reasons for omitting ethics (Comte did so, also, originally, and admitted this branch as an afterthought); but I believe that Wakeman is "ahy" of monanthropology, on the ground that man, considered out of his relations with society, is simply a particular species of living being; and that therefore his physiology, anatomy, etc., belong to the general science of biology. This idea, urged a little further, would, however, swamp sociology, in the same manner; for animals and even plants have their consociate as well as their individual lives, and man in every aspect is first a living creature, and only afterwards, or from another point of view, something more than, or different from, ordinary living beings. That other point of view is not, distinctively, his tendency to an aggregative life; but it is his difference, in a quite discrete degree, from other living beings, in the general dignity and rank of his nature.

If even it be granted that ordinary human physiology, anatomy, and hygiene fall properly within the general scope of biology, there is still a large special department of single-man-lore, which has been extensively cultivated under the name of anthropology; but which, inasmuch as it omits all special treatment of society, as such, and of ethics, should be confined, by the prefix mon- (monos) to the domain of individual man. Of this so-named science of anthropology, intermediate between human physiology and psychology, the name of Joseph R. Buchanan, an American scientist and real discoverer, of great astuteness and breadth of scope, stands preëminently representative. It includes phrenology, sarcognomy, psychometry, the temperaments, etc.

Recurring to, and re-stating the most general aspects of universal scientific classification, which so far result from the comparison we have made of the different most prominent systems of classification, the primary practical schema, that of Comte and Wakeman, eked out and modified by that of Vander Weyde and Stuart-Glennie (vertical and vertebral—ex hypothesi), constituting the vertical axis of the great globe of conception, may, and should be denominated altitudinology; the Spencerian schema, reaching from the back-lying and thickened concrete to the frontwise thinness of the abstract, protensive or forth-reaching, is longitudinology; and the side-wise presentation, named by Elsberg aspectology, is the latitudinology of this grand exhibit. The exhibit itself, grand as it is, is still, however, only static, in space, or existential. The changes which occur in time are unprovided for in it. While it collectively is, therefore, the statology, the science of those changes is the motology of being. These are denominated by Comte (in respect to society) the statiques and the dynamiques, or, again, solidarity, and continuity, instead. Of natural science at large, Elsberg makes the corresponding division into physiography, for the science of objects in respect to "their spacio or static existence, or the state of their existence at a definite time, i. e., the present," or as answering to the question, "How or what are you?" And physiogeny, or the science of objects "in respect to their development in time, or their tempic, i. e., their motic or sequential existence," or as answering to the question, "How came you so? or what were you before?" To all this he makes the exceedingly important addendum and suggestion, That every "ology" has its "ography" and its "ogeny." A strict compliance with his injunction, to use these terminations in these specific senses, would remove a great deal of confusion from our scientific literature.

It again results, from this analysis, somewhat unexpectedly perhaps to the reader, that latitudinology (the aspectology of Elsberg) is metaphysics, or our old friend "philosophy" under a new guise; and that Elsberg is wrong in transferring this term (metaphysics) to his and Spencer's "abstract science" (including mathematics and logic). This last, in conjunction with metaphysics, is abstractology; and singly, it is physio-abstractology, Elsberg's physiology being then physio-concretology (the science of dead and living real objects). This identification of latitudinology with metaphysics is made as follows: The substantial (hylic), the morphic, and the dynamic of Elsberg have been previously identified with the real (and good), the true, and the beautiful of Wakeman. We have only now to recur to the great masters of metaphysical philosophy to discover that the subdivisions they have made, as most fundamental of their immense field of speculative investigation, have been precisely those of this newly recognized, aspectological department of science; if not in explicit terms, still really so.

Kant, the greatest of masters in the metaphysical sphere, treated the whole field of philosophy in three Kritiken; which are: I. Of the pure reason, which is obviously of the TRUE; II., PRACTICAL REASON; and III., Kritik of the judgment. This third or last proves, however, to mean "judgment of the laws for the emotion of satisfaction and dissatisfaction"; that is to say, aesthetic determination, or the mental criterion of the beautiful. Metaphysics concerns then primarily, or in the first division of its scope,—the true, the practical, and the beautiful. (The good [and evil] fills the distinct branch called ethics.)

I have previously identified, in a preliminary way, form with the true, substance with the good, and the practical with action or achievement; but more specifically I may now quote Schelling's sublime generalization, on this head, of the three potencies of the ideal, as I., the assimilation of matter (substance) into form, for the true; II., the assimilation of form into matter (substance) for the good; and III., the absolute assimilation or smelting of these two, for the beautiful. (Schlegel's History of Philosophy, Stirling's Translation, p. 301.) But what is still more important for our present purpose, we have the authority of Schlegel for the assertion, that the three parts of Schelling's Transcendental Philosophy correspond completely with Kant's three Kritiken (ib. p. 285). Now these three parts are respectively: I., theoretical—the true; II., the practical; and III., philosophy of Nature, design, and art—the beautiful.

Let us now recast the scale of these several grand aspects of the ideal, as follows (reading upward):

5. THE BEAUTIFUL; design, art.
4. THE PRACTICAL.
3. THE GOOD.
2. THE TRUE, "theoretical," "pure reason," form.
1. THE REAL, the hylic, substance.

It will then appear that of the authors cited all except Wakeman having attempted to condense these "aspects" into a series of three, Elsberg has, virtually, taken the first, the second, and the fourth; while Kant and Schelling have taken the second, the fourth, and the fifth; and Wakeman has, I think, taken them all, at various times, but not quite systematically. It also appears that Elsberg and Wakeman, by a mere enlargement of scientific classification, have come out, it would seem quite unconsciously; upon the beat of the metaphysicians, in its most transcendental attitudes—the realm in philosophy of the (of late) much-reviled absolute, as contrasted with the relative. The relativity-domain furnishes Schelling's nature-philosophy—the realm of the ordinary sciences.

Twenty years ago, Lewes, the English historian of philosophy, performed the funeral services over metaphysics as a dead thing, giving it no place as science any longer; and the empirical scientific world followed in his wake. Quite of late he has reconsidered that somewhat rash judgment, and revokes it, reinstating metaphysics as a legitimate scientific arena, and introducing metempirics, as the name for what he meant to condemn. At the same time, scientific classification by the mere enlargement of its own borders finds itself embracing the metaphysical domain. I am not aware whether Wakeman is aware that his "Infinitology" is, again, this "aspectology" and the dread region of transcendental metaphysics itself. Let, however, all apprehensions be allayed. We have in all this merely a new swinging of the pendulum, back towards philosophy; which, however, must now rise to the higher plane of a broad science-philosophy, and show itself competent to the reconciliation of all past dissensions.

Recurring to the scale of ideal aspects, and introducing Schelling's modification, they may be most perfectly exhibited as follows:—

- I. OBJECT; THE OBJECTIVE.—(Naturismal.) Compounded of SUBSTANCE (objective reality) plus FORM (material shape)—matter, the material, THE REAL.
- II. SUBJECT; THE SUBJECTIVE.—(Scientismal.) Compounded of FORM (mental, the categories of thought) plus SUBSTANCE (the objective materials of thought, imparted through the senses, from objective reality),—mind, the ideal, THE TRUE.

III. SUBJECT-OBJECT; THE SUBJECTIVE-OBJECTIVE.—(Artismal.) MIND-and-MATTER, in co-existent and co-actionary relation with each other; subject to another tri-grade distribution as follows:—

III., 1. Artismo-naturalismal.—MATTER affecting mind, THE GOOD (or, in a state of inversion, the evil).

III., 2. Artismo-scientismal.—(Useful, Technological). MIND affecting matter, THE PRACTICAL (or inversely, the impractical; or misconceived purpose).

III., 3. Artismo-artismal.—(Fine-art-like, the true artismal). MATTER-and-MIND, perfectly correlated, or harmoniously adjusted to each other,—THE BEAUTIFUL (or, inversely, the hideous or ugly).

These are the infinities; and such is the completer explication of what, with its new names, is aspectology and infinitology, and with its old names metaphysics, and transcendent or speculative philosophy. The work of reconciliation is then, here again, immensely forwarded. Physics and metaphysics need no longer stand aloof from each other. To marry these great segments of human knowledge is no small achievement; it is, however, a preparation only for still more important conquests over the dissension and dissensions of humanity. In the next article, we shall make the transition to the social, the religious, and the more practical spheres of being.

THE PRESIDENTIAL SYSTEM.

NEW YORK, March 28, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—When the President was on his way to the White House, he said, referring to the duties to devolve upon him, that, "he placed trust in Almighty God, who rules the destinies of nations." If this be true, the President is a quasi Pope, and rules this nation under the direction of a personal god. I do not doubt he spoke from conscientious motives; but I object to his promulgating these errors in the capacity of a public officer. This theory was long since exploded in Europe, and should not be resuscitated here.

It was this creature of the imagination which he calls Almighty God that the framers endeavored to relieve from the cares of State. Any well-informed Englishman will tell you that the Queen reigns by virtue of an act of Parliament, not by "God's grace." I believe that the remarks of the President have the smell of the monarch about them, and a very ancient kind of monarch at that.

Be that as it may, he has already been charged with breaking up a legislature and deposing two governors. The effete idea that we must have a ruler, has a lodgment in the American mind; but when the question is more thoroughly understood the royal executive will be dethroned. I wish to submit the following in respect to President and Cabinet-making:—

I. The presidential powers of appointment and removal are monarchical. He has at his absolute command an immense army of office-holders. This alone has developed patronage-bribery into a science. It reduces the election of the President to a pitched battle for power. While the Queen of England must sign her own death-warrant if the Parliament so direct, the President vetoes any bill he desires. This is one-man power. This great error crept into the Constitution by mistaking an ancient theory of the British Constitution for its actual workings. The consequence is, that our Congress is too unimportant, and our executive is too strong.

II. The country is puzzling its brains over what should be the term of the President. The answer is, that he should not be elected for any fixed period. As it is now, no matter what he turns out to be, we must endure him. Whether his works are good or bad, he can only be removed by impeachment, and that is regarded as next to revolution. We elect a person of unascertained diminutiveness to serve in a time of unapprehended greatness. This is a lottery.

III. One of the first things a President does is to conceive of a policy, which he often attempts to enforce against the will of the people. Why should a mere ministerial officer have a policy? Our Presidents play the role of principals when they are but agents.

IV. Under our presidential system there is no continuous course for a statesman. If he becomes prominent in the legislative branch, strange as it may seem, he is practically disqualified for the executive.

V. Our Cabinet Secretary lurks in his office and need do nothing in public. There is no way to find out his qualifications. This secret and irresponsible concave is a fit adjunct to the present form of the Presidency.

VI. Under the system of presidential governments the most available man is selected. King Caucus declares that the best men of the nation be stricken off the list of candidates. The wire-pullers agree upon a man who has little experience in the science of government. The Vice-President who has twice become President in ninety years is generally a still less competent man. The machinery of our colleges is most complex. The whole of the vast engine is rickety and out of joint. The framers intended to remove the election away from the people, but we have drifted away from their conception. In my opinion, if the decision of the Electoral Commission is to stand, the death-knell of liberty has been rung in this country. By its provision a few desperate and ambitious men in an obscure State can control the destinies of the nation. The reign of fraud and the shot-gun is now secure.

VII.

But I am asked what I would substitute for the presidency. As destruction is but a form of construction, I have already indicated what changes I would make. But to be more specific:—

- 1st. The civil service to be regulated by law.
- 2d. Abolish the rotten borough system of the senate.
- 3d. Vest in the senate and house supreme legislative and executive power.
- 4th. Dispense with the office of president and substitute a federal council, its presiding officer to be called president of the council.
- 5th. Each of the members of the council to have a seat in the house.
- 6th. Each of the members of the council to act as chief of his respective department.
- 7th. The council to be elected by a concurrent vote of the two houses of congress.
- 8th. The council to hold office at the will of and to be required to conform to the controlling majority in congress.
- 9th. The right of interpellation to be acknowledged. It would be impossible to point out all of the advantages of this proposed system in a short communication. The American idea, as formulated in the declaration, is that the supreme power should be vested in the people's representatives in congress. By the adoption of the foregoing plan, the government could select a proper executive council for any emergency,—in time of war a war council, and in time of peace a peace council. The supreme power would be centered where it could be found,—not scattered in coordinate branches as it is now. The strongest men of the nation would belong to this council. The friendly relation of the council with congress would be incessant. Congress would lead and guide them; there would be no conflict as now. The president would be stripped of his monarchical power. The inducement to use fraud and force for the purpose of controlling the civil service would be removed. The proposed council would be the embodiment of the intelligence; the genius, the brain and the conscience of the nation. Amend the constitution in the way proposed, and the question of the election of president, which every four years agitates the whole country, would disappear; and the demoralising, destructive, insensate, and complicated death-struggle, known as a presidential election, would pass away forever.

Respectfully, H. C. LOCKWOOD.

"PURIFYING" LIBERALISM.

TO MR. HENRY CLAY NEVILLE, of Ozark, Mo.:

THE INDEX of the 21st March contains your communication on "The Purification of Liberalism," in which you protest against allowing some of the liberals to be considered representative men in the world of free thought. You seem to be actuated by a desire to imitate the policy of the churches, and make a selection of those who shall be spokesmen for you, and whom you would be willing to associate with as liberals. Any person brought up in the Church can see precisely how you think and feel on this subject.

Now there is not an organization on earth, religious or political, in which there are not some who feel and complain as you do of those with whom they are compelled to associate. Republicans loathe and abhor Republicans, and charge them with doing more harm than good to the party. Democrats ditto. Among the churches the presumptuous and conceited clergy who push themselves forward as the Lord's ambassadors extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary are exceedingly disliked by others who condemn their methods, their impudent and supercilious claims. These personal animosities are as bitter among the saints as they are among other people. There are no more unpopular men among the clergy of Brooklyn and New York than Talmage and Beecher, their more Orthodox brethren believing them both to be doing the Church infinitely more harm than good. There is an elective affinity based upon a congeniality of taste which runs through all organizations, and which, by its tendency to exclusiveness more or less, hinders them from accomplishing the general purposes each has in view. Of course the same thing is observable among the liberals. But what are you going to do about it? You can do nothing.

The grand object in view by the class of men called Liberals, Radicals, or Freethinkers is, if I understand it, twofold: first, to preserve and increase the secularity of the Constitution and Government of the United States, and to lead the States in their school systems and general legislation to conform to this principle; secondly, by discussion, through the press and rostrum, to enlighten the American people on the questions at issue between them and the Christian Church, and to show that the Church and her claims are an obstacle to the cause of human progress which can be and ought to be removed. Association and co-operation are absolutely necessary to carrying out these purposes. Hence organization of Liberal Leagues with these specific ends in view. Those who join these Leagues do not constitute themselves into a mutual admiration society, or bind themselves to indorse what each other may say or do, even in the advocacy of the specified objects of the League. We have nothing to do with our co-laborers except as we have with our fellow-Republicans, Democrats, or Nationals, with whom we may co-operate in politics. We have no right to inquire into the private character of our fellow-leaguers, or what they think on temperance, spiritualism, materialism, or free love. These are all side issues. If you want to go from Ozark to New York by railroad, instead of your private carriage, you must associate, for the time being, with all sorts of people on the train as travelling companions. Some will be pleasant persons to associate with, and others may be exceedingly repulsive. But you cannot put the latter out, for as travellers who have paid their fare, you are all on terms of perfect equality until you arrive at New York. Then the mutual toleration is at an end.

In like manner the liberals tolerate each other in their opinions on subordinate subjects, and in unpleasant traits of character, in consideration of securing harmonious co-operation on those higher points on which they are fully agreed. It would be very desirable indeed if every radical were a highly cultivated gentleman in his taste and manners. But as we are all striving with might and main to push the car of progress up the hill to the summit level, we will be glad of every man's help, even if he shock us sometimes with his profane speech, or puff tobacco-smoke into our faces, or tread roughly and inconsiderately on our toes. The League is not a church with a creed and code of church morals, licensing and ordaining its public teachers. It is a voluntary association like a political party, and every man has a right to join it and be its advocate, whether he have brains and morals or not. I read much in our radical papers which I consider is of no use whatever in promoting the cause. I read much which I exceedingly dislike. But we live and move on different planes. One method of advocacy which would displease and disgust me is the very one which will please and profit another man on another plane. I grate my teeth in anger, but remain silent, because we want to get the car to the top of the hill; and to accomplish this we must have the help of those whose ways and manners offend us, but who are as much interested in the cause of progress as we are. I have often admired the harmonious working, in the glorious cause of intellectual freedom, of the antipodes,—the spiritualists and materialists. How diametrically opposite their views are in regard to the question of a future life! Yet they get a hearing in each others' papers, and are kind and considerate to each other, because, with all their differences, they perfectly agree on the living, practical questions now before the public, which affect the right of every sane human being to think and act according to the convictions of his own conscience. So holy a cause as this ought to lead men to be kind and considerate to each other on subjects that are mere theories, while it unites their hearts and hands in the greater matters of practical importance. We are denizens of this world, at all events, for sixty or seventy years, whether there is another world or not; and as we value our liberty and independence of thought and action above everything else, it is an honorable ambition in us to transmit the same blessing to posterity. And in the carrying out of this purpose, which requires vast co-operation, we must not be squeamish and particular, as we might be in inviting a number of guests to dinner. In matters of mere opinion, and in social life, we may choose our associates; but when a great thing is to be done like that which the radicals propose in their Leagues of effort, we must gladly accept the help of every man whose strong hand goes with his good will.

A. B. B.

ENON VALLEY, Pa., March 24, 1878.

"THE ETHICS OF JESUS."

Recent numbers of THE INDEX contain an article which appeared in the February number of the Radical Review, entitled "The Ethics of Jesus." The article is ingenious only in its deception. The writer asserts that "Jesus is the central figure of the Christian system," assigns to him in that system a place "as a part of Deity," and then attempts to destroy his divinity by undermining his superior position as a teacher of morals.

All intelligent persons assert the humanity of Christ; some deny his divinity. I am no stickler for his place in the Trinity; and, as the article professes only to define his position as a teacher of ethics as compared with other men, I, too, will pass that by.

After comparing the moral teachings of Jesus with the precepts of ante-Christian sages,—namely, Mencius, Socrates, Buddha, and Confucius, and others of a far remoter date,—the writer draws the following main points in his conclusions:—

First, that the ethical teachings of Jesus were not original, having been taught by others before his time. And,

Secondly, that they were inferior to analogous teachings of other masters, because Jesus did not wholly teach virtue for virtue's sake, but supported his teachings by the selfish incentives of rewards and punishments.

I quite agree with the writer that the teachings of Jesus were not original with him at the time he expounded them. And I will go farther than the writer, and say they were not original with the contemporaries of Jesus nor with Mencius nor Socrates nor Buddha nor Confucius, nor with the still more ancient sages,—Hebraic or what not; but, not to look for a higher source, nor to a more remote period, they were co-existent with the consciousness of man to know good and evil, whether the origin of that consciousness was six thousand or six hundred thousand years ago.

As to the other point, that the ethics of Jesus were inferior to the moral precepts of those other great moral teachers, we can only judge from the subsequent effects of those teachings. Added to the moral precepts of those great ante-Christian sages the hope of reward, as inculcated in the ethics of Jesus, and we find with that "selfish incentive" the world has progressed to a higher and more permanent civilization than ever known before. The moral precepts of ante-Christian sages did not save the civilization of India or Greece or Rome; the ethics of Jesus have not yet destroyed ours.

Reward is the essential element in the progress of physical and moral life. It is the hope of the soul, the inspiration of love, the eye of conscience, and the motive of life. Virtue cannot be taught without the hope of reward, for the reward of the virtuous is the enjoyment of virtue. That the soul longs for, hopes for, and seeks for reward is not more beautifully or pathetically expressed than in the closing lines of the writer's essay. He says:—

"For not alone from the slopes of Palestine rises the lofty mountain peak to reflect the glorious dawn of moral truth to the darkened world beneath; but rather, as we journey backward up the stream of Time, do we discover one height of progress answering to another, until we stand admiringly before a glittering chain of snowy summits, from whose sunlit glory we catch the refulgent beams, and in whose lustrous splendor we find our inspiration and our hope." Hope of what,—of reward? GORDON A. STEWART.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

PAXTON, Ill., March 8, 1878.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

A little affair occurred in our church-ridden town, Wednesday evening, which in itself is of no importance; but, as moving straws determine for us the direction of the current in a sluggish stream that otherwise would not be manifest, it assumes significance as pointing to the growing encroachment of the churches upon the secular power of the government. As a beacon, warning the people against this danger to their liberties, THE INDEX stands almost alone.

A difficulty had arisen as to the propriety and good effects of a certain rule which had been introduced by the principal into our public school, and was disapproved by most of the other teachers. The contention had been waxing for some weeks, and many in the town had become warmly partisan. At the prayer-meetings on Wednesday evening, all the churches in town, save one (and this with great propriety declined), appointed committees of its members to meet and confer with the school directors and teachers on the matter of difference between them. The meeting was held the next day. Thus the churches as churches assumed to act, at least, as an advisory council in a matter wholly secular and beyond their jurisdiction. The items of grievances specified in the Declaration of Independence did not more unmistakably point to the coming revolution, than the signs of the times foreshadow a coming conflict to be fought with carnal weapons between ecclesiasticism and secularism. This government can no more permanently remain partly secular and partly ecclesiastical, than it could continue to be partly free and partly slave. This is boldly stated by ministers who are laboring to get God into the Constitution; and the dogmas of the Church make this the only consistent ground. The Bible is everything, or it concerns us only as a literary production.

Very truly,

L. B. FARRAR, M.D.

FREE MASONRY.

NORFOLK, Va., March 24, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

IN THE INDEX of March 31 in a communication of "E. W.," the author I think does not understand "Masonry." He speaks of the "secrecy" of the order. Let me say that all the rules, precepts, in fact the fundamental law of masonry, are published and can be bought at most book-stores, by any one. They are really a mutual protective association, bound to assist each other only when the sufferer shows a disposition to help himself. As regards secrets, each member has a letter of recommendation, not written, but committed to memory; this is his pass, and must be kept secret as a protection against imposition. Beyond this, Masons have no secrets more than other people in general. Again, "E. W." says: "We read of no female Pope." I have read of the female Pope Joan; but the time of her existence was so long ago, I will not vouch for its truth. I am not writing for controversy, for in the main I agree with him; but I do think he has attacked Masonry without a full knowledge of its tenets, and would advise all to examine Masonic text-books before commenting too harshly.

Respectfully,

L. SPAULDING.

ST. LOUIS can well lay claim to the champion juvenile prodigy of the year. Emma McCann, eight years old, was suddenly taken sick the other day, and in a moment threw up a silver dime. The mother was surprised, but as the child recovered thought no more of the matter, until, two hours after, she was again taken sick, and added eight more dimes to the amount of legal tender possessed by the household. A physician was sent for, but before his arrival four more dimes and a five-cent piece were coined and put into circulation in the same mysterious way. The next day four more dimes were issued by the precocious child, who, to vary the monotony, and to show her ability to perform other remarkable feats, threw up two glass beads and a fancy glove-button. Thus, in two days, this prodigy added no less than $1.75 to the finances of the family; and had not they given her medicines out of a mistaken notion that she had previously swallowed the coin, she might still be turning out money—perhaps gold dollars by this time—and a choice assortment of miscellaneous articles adapted to general family use. It would seem that another feature of the insidious silver scheme has been revealed by the above singular case, and a breed of children possessing unlimited coinage abilities has been found which will flood the country with cheap money.—Boston Journal.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 "	6 " "
" 52 " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1873.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STARRIS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keechub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.	1.50
Little Men.	1.50
My Boys.	1.50
Shawl-Straps.	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.	2.00
New Poems.	2.00
Literature and Dogma.	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.	2.00
Edelweiss.	1.00
German Tales.	1.00
BACON'S Essays.	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.	2.25
Physics and Politics.	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.	2.50
The Rising Faith.	2.50
BARTON (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.	2.25
The World-Prize.	2.25
The Tall Student.75
BURCHNER'S Force and Matter.	2.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France. Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.	2.50
Common-Sense in Religion.	2.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.20
COEWAY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Experiments by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.50
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.	2.50
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.	1.00
The Descent of Man. 1 vol.	4.00
Journal of Researches.	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.	1.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.	1.00
Scenes.	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.	1.00
Felix Holt.	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.	1.00
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.	1.50
Essays. Second Series.	1.50
Miscellaneous.	1.50
Representative Men.	1.50
English Traits.	1.50
Conduct of Life.	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.	5.50
Society and Solitude.	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	6.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	5.00
Elective Affinities.	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.	8.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.00
GREG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.	2.50
Literary and Social Judgments.	2.50
Creed of Christendom.	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Palmer's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.	1.50
Thoughts about Art.	2.00
The Unknown River.	5.00
The Intellectual Life.	1.00
Chapters on Animals.	4.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.	1.00
Child World. Part First.	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.50
Twice-Told Tales.	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.	2.00
The American Note-Books.	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.	1.50
Atlantic Essays.	2.50
Oldport Days.	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.	3.00
Suburban Sketches.	2.00
Venetian Life.	2.50
Italian Journeys.	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.	1.25
Bits of Travel.	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.	1.25
On the Origin of Species.	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.	1.75
INGELW'S (JEAN) Poems.	2.25
The Migrations of the Unseen.	1.50
Songs of Seven.	1.50
INGELW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.	1.25
A Sister. By a House.	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix illustrating the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by J. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.00
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.	2.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.	1.50
Among my Books.	2.00
My Study Windows.	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1836 to 1848.	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols.	1.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.	3.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government.	1.50
Autobiography.	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Harp.	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.	3.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.	1.50
MULLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.	2.50
The Same. Second Series.	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols.	3.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swings' Round the Circle.	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.	4.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.	4.50
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	2.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.	1.00
PEELER'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Getes Ajar.	1.50
The Trolly Book.	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.	1.50
Hedged in.	1.50
The Silent Partner.	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	1.50
The Expansion of Heaven.	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.	1.50
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.	2.50
SCHELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	31.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.	1.50
First Principles.	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.	3.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.	3.00
Philosophy of Style.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.	2.00
Sociology.	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	5.00
Universal Progress.	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.	7.50
The Classic-Boom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair.	1.25
The Newcomes.	1.25
Adventures of Philip.	1.25
Pendennis.	1.25
The Virginians.	1.25
Diamond and Love the Widower.	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	2.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. No. 66, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. OLLIE) Among the Isles of Shoals.	1.50
THORNTON'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.	1.50
The Maine Woods.	2.50
Cape Cod.	2.50
Letters.	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD E.) The Early History of Mankind.	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.	1.50
Light and Electricity.	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.	2.00
On Sound.	2.00
Radiant Heat.	1.50
Forms of Water.	1.50
Lectures on Light.	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.50
Lessons in Electricity.	1.50
Addresses before British Assoc. at Belfast.50
TYTTER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.	2.25
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.	1.50
Banisterings.	1.50
Back-Log Studies.	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHITNEY'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.	1.50
Essays and Reviews.	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.	1.50
Success and its Conditions.	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.	1.50
Real Folks.	1.50
The Other Girls.	1.50
Pantheas. A volume of Poems.	1.50
WHITNEY'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life.	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX.

251 Washington St., Boston.

GIRLS—5 nice perforated mottoes for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUX & Co. Augusta, Maine.

$125 a month and expenses to Agents. Send stamp for terms. S. C. FOSTER & Co., Cincinnati, O.

ENTERPRISE.
Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

is an enterprising, 8-page, Liberal, Family Paper, devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth.

Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft, and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds. It has no reverence for bibles or man-made gods, and opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasures in another.

It has a variety of Departments, is chaste and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a First-rate Liberal Paper.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published weekly, at One Dollar a year, or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address SIXTH WILSON PAYNE, 141 Eighth St., New York.

NEW BOOKS TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one paying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on live issues with a promptitude unequalled. The contents of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred B. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Talmage, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.
Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.00 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,

PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ARBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Fenton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

No. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For Twenty-Five Dollars, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

CIRCULATE IT

EVERYWHERE!

The new Liberal League Tract of 34 pages, entitled,

"PATRIOTIC ADDRESS,"

contains:

1. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS of the National Liberal League to the people of the United States.

2. CHIEF RESOLUTIONS of the League.

3. PROTEST of the League against shutting the International Exhibition on Sundays.

4. CONSTITUTION and List of Officers.

5. EXTRACTS from Approving Letters by Distinguished Citizens.

This is the Liberal's best CAMPAIGN DOCUMENT in the great impending contest over amending the Constitution of the United States with reference to the school question. It should be in the hands of EVERY VOTER, and has been published expressly for gratuitous distribution by earnest friends of State Secularization.

Local Liberal Leagues

Cannot do better than to order this Tract by the quantity, as an excellent auxiliary in their local agitation.

INDIVIDUAL LIBERALS

Cannot do better than to use them privately, as opportunity offers.

Promptly mailed, at the bare cost of paper, press-work, and postage, on the following terms:—

TEN COPIES,.....	.35
TWENTY-FIVE COPIES,.....	.60
FIFTY ".....	.75
ONE HUNDRED ".....	1.50
TWO HUNDRED ".....	2.50
THREE HUNDRED ".....	3.50
FIVE HUNDRED ".....	6.00
ONE THOUSAND ".....	12.00

N. B.—Packages of over 100 copies will be sent by express at the expense of the purchaser, without any charge for postage.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 25, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 435.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 5, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Independence, Kansas, April 28, 29, 30; and at Iowa City, Iowa, May 23, 24, and 25.

THE LATE "Boss Tweed" is now claimed as having been a diligent reader and admirer of the Bible! We surrender him to the Orthodox without a regret.

A FRIEND informs us that a lady has just bequeathed $400,000 to Cardinal McCloskey for the Church, and suggests that such bequests should be prohibited.

THE "HOLLIS STREET SOCIAL CLUB" gave private theatricals in the Hollis Street Chapel in this city, a week or two ago. A correspondent pertinently inquires: "Why tax theatres?"

THE "APPEAL" of the Massachusetts State Committee of the National Liberal League ought to be read attentively by all interested in that growing movement. It is as good for other States as for this.

MR. PARKER PILLSBURY lectured on "Ecclesiastical versus Civil Authority," before the Liberal League of Milwaukee on April 10, and declared that Presidents Lincoln, Grant, and Hayes have all more or less favored the Christianizing schemes of the National Reform Association.

THIS ITEM appeared in the Boston Advertiser of April 15: "An adjourned meeting of persons interested in the establishment of a Liberal League in Malden was held last evening at Bailey's Hall. Mr. A. A. Knights occupied the chair. The committee on organization reported a constitution, which was adopted with slight amendments. Officers were elected as follows: President, the Rev. D. M. Wilson; Vice-President, Loring Moody; Secretary, Dr. W. W. Gleason; Treasurer, Mrs. Annie M. Moody. It was voted to hold the annual meeting on the third Thursday of May."

WE REPUBLISH this week two papers of great historic interest and also of great present value, as exhibiting clearly the ideal which animated the minds of two of the most illustrious among the founders of the American republic,—Madison and Jefferson. For the opportunity of printing these papers, we are indebted to the Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, of Albany, who very kindly sent to us from his private library the fifth volume of the Correspondent, a sixteen-page weekly published in Philadelphia some fifty years ago, with a suggestion to reproduce these papers in THE INDEX. What "statesman" of the present breed ventures publicly to take the ground here defended by these great men?

THIS STATEMENT is made by the Providence Press of April 13: "The Western heirs to the estate of the late Anneke Jans, whose property in New York, held by the Trinity Church Corporation, is said to be worth from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000, have formed themselves into an association for the purpose of prosecuting their claim to the property. It is claimed that Mrs. E. H. Wallace, of Cincinnati, one of the original heirs, has found the lease under which the Trinity Church acquired the property, which lease was for ninety-nine years, with power of renewal; but which was not renewed in 1838, as it should have been, according to the claim of the heirs, but seized upon as the property of the corporation. The case has been before the Supreme Court of the United States, and Mrs. Wallace will move for a rehearing on the ground of the discovery of this valuable paper."

THE BOSTON POLICE made a descent on some rooms in Nassau Hall building on Sunday, April 14, and captured some Chinamen occupied in gambling. This exploit elicited the following communication in the Advertiser under the heading—"Heathen and Christian Gambling": "The feat of our police last Sunday evening in arresting twenty or more Chinese for gambling on the Sabbath, and the infliction of $10 fine upon each for the offence, seems indefensible when all the circumstances are considered. Surely Sabbath-breaking cannot be imputed to the heathen man, who has yet, it may often be, to learn even of the institution of the Sabbath, and to whom, therefore, it can have no more sanctity than the commands heard in the joss-house have to a Christian man. How then, in equity, can we criminally indict him for disregarding it? How pass by the Jew, who pleads liberty of conscience, and is permitted to keep open shop? Or, if the sacred majesty of the law be pleaded by the police, in the name of decency why not first enforce its penalties against its Christian violators? Why not make the violators of the law everywhere, who have friends, feel and be taught its lessons first? After that it will be full time to take in hand the poor and friendless heathen. Until then such acts are an outrage upon justice, and call for public inquiry and public condemnation. What lessons such an experience must teach these men of Christian law, and what new barriers it will put in the way of our true Christian workers who shall seek his spiritual well-being! FAIR PLAY."

REV. MR. ELDRIDGE, pastor of the Congregational Church, East Weymouth, Massachusetts, gave a sermon on April 7, which contained the following passage, as reported in the Weymouth Gazette of April 12: "If there is a work of hell carried on on earth, it is the dissemination of obscene literature among the young. Comstock, the Christian man who has waged war on this crime, declares that years past tens of the vilest matter have annually been sent to tens of thousands of children in our schools, to defile their imaginations, inflame their passions, and initiate these little ones in a course of vice. Just when Comstock had his hand ready to throttle this gigantic iniquity, a bill [petition] is handed in to Congress to protect it, and on the list the name of Robert Ingersoll stands first. 'By their fruits ye shall know them,' saith the Scriptures; and now look upon these flowers of infidelity, and tell me what it is worth?" That is a specimen of the attacks on Liberalism which have been directly invited by the petition referred to; and they will multiply like mushrooms. Of course we all understand that very few of the liberals who signed it really intended to protect the kind of literature above referred to; but, misled by unwise counsels, they blindly blundered into petitioning for the total repeal of the "obscene literature" laws, and not simply for their radical modification. They will have to pay for this blunder by being held up (falsely, of course) by their opponents everywhere, as champions and defenders of the vile stuff described above. The consequence in all likelihood will be that, instead of securing the repeal of those vague and dangerous laws, they will fail to secure even the least modification of them. The blunder of despairing the necessary discriminations we pointed out at the time will react most mischievously on the liberal cause everywhere; it gives Anthony Comstock and his backers exactly the argument they wanted. We have drawn an avalanche of angry and absurd abuse on our head, by giving timely warning of the trap into which the petitioners have been decoyed, and we expect more of the same sort; but those who appreciate the wisdom of our warning will multiply just in proportion as sober reflection takes the place of indiscriminate excitement among the liberals of the country. Liberals who have signed that petition, you cannot afford to stand before the people as the apologists or defenders of the kind of literature above referred to; you cannot defend your own undoubted rights, if you persist in confounding free thought with free nastiness; you have got to make the discriminations we have pointed out, and the sooner you do it, the better it will be for yourselves and your cause. You may vilify us all you please; but you will regret your own vilifications at last, for they will only make your miserable mistake all the sooner visible to the world.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HOW. K. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
HOW. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
HOW. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
HOW. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
HOW. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Baltimore, Md.
HOW. ELIJAH WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. D. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York.
MR. W. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. K. F. HOLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
HOW. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
HARRI. B. FELSETHAL,.....Boston, Mass.
REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. AMUSE. L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
HARRI. ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Traveller," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. WENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGH, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. R. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.
DR. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
HOW. R. S. MCCORMICK,.....Franklin, Pa.
HARRI. F. W. EVANS,.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
MRS. AMY POST,.....Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CUDY STANTON,.....Tombury, Va.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY,.....Lottsburgh, N. J.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENRY, Monticello.
California.....L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....V. O. MICHEER, Adair.
Kansas.....JOHN EARNWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....B. B. OLARK, Wilkesville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....W. H. BAYARD, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL SOHNMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. H. BARNETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....R. E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARE, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt.
Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PAICH, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....L. STAUDLING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DEKT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Mequon.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho.....W. FERGUSON, Pocatello.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....131 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Oline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Philaster, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MISHICOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grunlike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendam, Elzsur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMIRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Critts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, E. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Bittenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Bittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gius, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi E. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi E. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunke.
Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Harman, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, E. F. P. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, E. Brumming.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Irving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bood, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen-Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert O. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, E. F. Smith, Julius Mothbults, A. O. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, E. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MAINTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heinemann, F. Ransoh, F. Kostomolasky, F. Scim, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrells, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. E. Steele.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Senft, M. Senft, C. B. Hedman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Senft, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINCOLN, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Lincoln Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.
SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

Madison's Protest against State Christianity.

A MEMORIAL AND REMONSTRANCE, DRAWN BY JAMES MADISON, LATE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, IN 1785.

TO THE HONORABLE THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA:—

We, the subscribers, citizens of the Commonwealth, having taken into consideration a bill printed by order of the last session of General Assembly, entitled, "A bill for establishing a provision for teachers of the Christian religion"; and conceiving that the same, if finally armed with the sanction of a law, will be a dangerous abuse of power, are bound, as faithful members of a free State, to remonstrate against it, and to declare the reasons by which they are determined. We remonstrate against the said bill:—

Because, we hold it for a fundamental and unalienable truth "that religion, or the duty which we owe to the Creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction, not by force or violence." The religion, then, of every man, must be left to the conviction and conscience of every man; and it is the right of every man to exercise it as these may dictate. This right is, in its nature, an unalienable right. It is unalienable because the opinions of men depending on the evidence contemplated by their own minds cannot follow the dictates of other men. It is unalienable, also, because what is here a right towards men is a duty towards the Creator. It is the duty of every man to render to the Creator such homage, and such only, as he believes to be acceptable to him. This duty is precedent both in order and time and in degree of obligation to the claims of civil society. Before any man can be considered as a member of civil society, he must be considered as a subject of the governor of the universe. And if a member of civil society who enters into any subordinate association must always do it with a reservation of his duty to general authority, much more must every man who becomes a member of any particular civil society do it with a saving of his allegiance to the universal sovereign. We maintain, therefore, that in matters of religion no man's right is abridged by the institution of civil society; and that religion is wholly exempt from its cognizance. True it is that no other rule exists by which any question which may divide society can be ultimately determined but by the will of a majority; but it is also true that the majority may trespass on the rights of the minority.

Because, if religion be exempt from the authority of the society at large, still less can it be subject to that of the legislative body. The latter are but the creatures and vicereges of the former. Their jurisdiction is both derivative and limited. It is limited with regard to coordinate departments; more necessarily, it is limited with regard to the constituents. The preservation of a free government requires, not merely that the metes and bounds which separate each department of power be invariably maintained, but more especially that neither of them be suffered to overleap the great barrier which defends the rights of the people. The rulers who are guilty of such an encroachment exceed the commission from which they derive their authority, and are tyrants. The people who submit to it are governed by laws made neither by themselves nor any authority derived from them, and are slaves.

Because, it is proper to take alarm at the first experiment on our liberties. We hold this prudent jealousy to be the first duty of citizens and one of the noblest characteristics of the late Revolution. The freemen of America did not wait until usurped power had strengthened itself by exercise, and entangled the question in precedents. They saw all the consequences in the principle; and they avoided the consequences by denying the principle. We revere this lesson too much soon to forget it. Who does not see that the same authority which can establish Christianity in exclusion of all other sects,—that the same authority which can force a citizen to contribute threepence only of his property for the support of any one establishment, may force him to conform to any other establishment, in all cases whatsoever?

Because, the bill violates that equality which ought to be the basis of every law, and which is more indispensable in proportion as the validity or expediency of any law is more liable to be impeached. "If all men are, by nature, equally free and independent," all men are to be considered as entering into society on equal conditions,—as relinquishing no more, and therefore retaining no less, one than another, of their natural rights; above all, are they

to be considered as retaining an "equal title to the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience." Whilst we assert for ourselves a freedom to embrace, to profess, and observe the religion which we believe to be of divine origin, we cannot deny an equal freedom to those whose minds have not yet yielded to the evidence which has convinced us. If this freedom be abused, it is an offence against God, not against man. To God, therefore, and not to man, must an account of it be rendered. As the bill violates equality by subjecting some to peculiar burdens, so it violates the same principle by granting to others peculiar exemptions. Are the Quakers and Menonists the only sects who think a compulsive support of their religions unnecessary and unwarrantable? Can their piety alone be entrusted with the care of public worship? Ought their religions to be endowed, above all others, with extraordinary privileges, by which proselytes may be enticed from all others? We think too favorably of the justice and good sense of these denominations, to believe that they either covet preeminences over their fellow-citizens, or that they will be seduced by them from the common opposition to the measure.

Because, the bill implies, either that the civil magistrate is a competent judge of religious truths, or that he may employ religion as an engine of civil policy. The first is an arrogant pretension, falsified by the extraordinary opinions of rulers, in all ages, and throughout the world; the second, an unhallowed perversion of the means of salvation.

Because, the establishment proposed by the bill is not requisite for the support of the Christian religion. To say that it is a contradiction to the Christian religion itself; for every page of it disavows a dependence on the power of this world; it is a contradiction to fact, for it is known that this religion both existed and flourished, not only without the support of human laws, but in spite of every opposition from them; and not only during the period of miraculous aid, but long after it had been left to its own evidence, and the ordinary care of Providence: nay, it is a contradiction in terms; for a religion not invented by human policy must have preëxisted and been supported, before it was established by human policy: it is, moreover, to weaken in those who profess this religion a pious confidence in its innate excellence, and the patronage of its author; and to foster in those who still reject it a suspicion that its friends are too conscious of its fallacies to trust to its own merits.

Because, experience witnesses that ecclesiastical establishments, instead of maintaining the purity and efficacy of religion, have had a contrary operation. During almost fifteen centuries has the legal establishment of Christianity been on trial. What have been its fruits? More or less, in all places, pride and indolence in the clergy; ignorance and servility in the laity; in both, superstition, bigotry, and persecution. Inquire of the teachers of Christianity for the ages in which it appeared in its greatest lustre; those of every sect point to the ages prior to its incorporation with civil policy. Propose a restoration of this primitive State in which its teachers depended on the voluntary rewards of their flocks—many of them predict its downfall. On which side ought their testimony to have the greatest weight, when for, or when against their interest?

Because, the establishment in question is not necessary for the support of civil government. If it be urged as necessary for the support of civil government, only as it is a means of supporting religion, and if it be not necessary for the latter purpose, it cannot be necessary for the former.

If religion be not within the cognizance of civil government, how can its legal establishment be said to be necessary to civil government? What influence, in fact, have ecclesiastical establishments had on civil society? In some instances, they have been seen to erect a spiritual tyranny on the ruins of civil authority; in more instances, they have been seen upholding the thrones of political tyranny; in no instance have they been guardians of the liberties of the people. Rulers who wished to subvert the public liberty may have found an established clergy convenient auxiliaries. A just government instituted to secure and perpetuate it needs them not. Such a government will be best supported by protecting every citizen in the enjoyment of religion, with the same equal hand which protects his person and property; by neither invading the equal rights of any sect, nor suffering any sect to invade those of another.

Because, the proposed establishment is a departure from that generous policy which, offering an asylum to the persecuted and oppressed of every nation and religion, promised a lustre to our country, and an accession to the number of our citizens. What a melancholy mark is the bill of sudden degeneracy? Instead of holding forth an asylum to the persecuted, it is itself a signal of persecution. It degrades from the equal rank of citizens all those whose opinions in religion do not bend to those of legislative authority. Distant as it may be, in its present form, from the inquisition, it differs only from it in degree; the one is the first step, the other the last, in the career of intolerance. The magnanimous sufferer under the cruel scourge in foreign nations must view the bill as a beacon on our coast, warning him to seek some other haven, where liberty and philanthropy in their due extent may offer a more certain repose for his trouble.

Because, it will have a like tendency to banish our citizens. The allurements presented by other situations are every day thinning their number. To superadd a fresh motive to emigration by revoking the liberty which they now enjoy would be the same species of folly which has dishonored and depopulated flourishing kingdoms.

Because, it will destroy that moderation and harmony which the forbearance of our laws to inter-meddle with religion has produced among its several sects. Torrents of blood have been spilt in the Old World by vain attempts of the secular arm to extinguish religious discord, proscribing all differences in religious opinion. Time has at length revealed the true remedy. Every relaxation of narrow and rigorous policy, wherever it has been tried, has been found to assuage the disease. The American theatre has exhibited proofs, that equal and complete liberty, if it does not wholly eradicate it, sufficiently destroys its malignant influence on the health and prosperity of the State. If, with the salutary effects of this system under our own eyes, we begin to contract the bounds of religious freedom, we know no name that will too severely reproach our folly. At least, let warning be taken at the first fruits of the threatened innovation. The very appearance of the bill has transformed that "Christian forbearance, love, and charity," which of late mutually prevailed, into animosities and jealousies, which may not soon be appeased. What mischiefs may not be dreaded, should this enemy to the public quiet be armed with the force of law?

Because, the policy of this bill is adverse to the diffusion of the light of Christianity. The first wish of those who ought to enjoy this precious gift, ought to be that it may be imparted to the whole race of mankind. Compare the number of those who have as yet received it with the number still remaining under the dominion of false religions, and how small is the former! Does the policy of the bill tend to lessen the disapprobation? No; it at once discourages those who are strangers to the light of truth from coming into regions of it, and countenances by example the nations who continue in darkness, in shutting out those who might convey it to them. Instead of levelling, as far as possible, every obstacle to the victorious progress of truth, the bill, with an ignoble and unchristian timidity, would circumscribe it with a wall of defence against the encroachments of error.

Because, an attempt to enforce, by legal sanctions, acts obnoxious to so great a portion of citizens tends to enervate the laws in general, and to slacken the bands of society. If it be difficult to execute any law which is not generally deemed necessary nor salutary, what must be the case when it is deemed invalid and dangerous? And what may be the effect of so striking an example of impotency in the government on its general authority?

Because, a measure of singular magnitude and delicacy ought not to be imposed without the clearest evidence that it is called for by a majority of citizens; and no satisfactory method is yet proposed by which the majority in this case may be determined, or its influence secured. The people of the respective counties are, indeed, requested to "signify their opinion respecting the adoption of the bill, to the next session of Assembly." But the representation must be made equal, before the voice, either of the representatives or of the counties, will be that of the people. Our hope is, that neither of the former will, after due consideration, espouse the dangerous principle of the bill. Should the event disappoint us, it will leave us in full confidence that a fair appeal to the latter will reverse our sentence against our liberties.

Because, finally, the "equal right of every citizen to the free exercise of his religion according to the dictates of his conscience" is held by the same tenure with all our rights. If we recur to its origin, it is equally the gift of Nature; if we weigh its importance, it cannot be less dear to us; if we consult the "declaration of those rights which pertain to the good people of Virginia, as the basis and foundation of government," it is enumerated with equal solemnity, or rather with studied emphasis. Either, then, we must say that the will of the legislature is the only measure of their authority, and that in the plenitude of this authority they may sweep away all our fundamental rights; or, that they are bound to leave this particular right untouched and sacred. Either we must say, that they may control the freedom of the press, may abolish the trial by jury, may swallow up the executive and judiciary powers of the State, nay, that they may annihilate our very right of suffrage, and erect themselves into an independent and hereditary assembly; or we must say that they have no authority to enact into a law the bill under consideration. We, the subscribers, say, that the General Assembly of this Commonwealth have no such authority; and that no effort may be omitted on our part, against so dangerous an usurpation, we oppose to it this remonstrance, earnestly praying, as we are in duty bound, that the supreme law-giver of the universe, by illuminating those to whom it is addressed, may, on the one hand, turn their councils from every act which would affront his holy prerogative, or violate the trust committed to them; and, on the other, guide them into every measure which may be worthy of his blessing, may redound to their own praise, and may establish more firmly the liberties, the prosperity, and happiness of this Commonwealth.—From "The Correspondent," a weekly journal edited and published by George Houston: Philadelphia, April 4, 1829.

THE REV. B. S. TAYLOR, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Sandlake, N.Y., instead of preaching a sermon, last Sunday, made this announcement: "The Board of Trustees have not paid my salary, have taken no notice of my demands, circulated no subscription paper, nor made any other effort to fulfil their obligations to me. I am badly involved in debt, and do not propose to continue preaching for nothing. I therefore declare the pulpit vacant until God in his mercy can send you a minister who can live on air and wear buckskin breeches of his own make."

JEFFERSON'S RELIGIOUS FREEDOM ACT.

The following Act was submitted to the Virginia Assembly by the illustrious JEFFERSON, and exhibits in lively colors the opinions of that eminent man on a subject which is deeply interesting to every citizen of this free country.—[Ed. Correspondent, Philadelphia, June 27, 1829.]

An Act for establishing Religious Freedom, passed in the Assembly of Virginia, in the beginning of the year 1786.

Well aware that Almighty God hath created the mind free; that all attempts to influence it by temporal punishment or by civil incapacitations tend only to beget habits of hypocrisy and meanness, and are a departure from the plan of the holy author of our religion, who, being lord of body and mind, yet chose not to propagate it by coercions on either, as was in his almighty power to do; that the impious presumption of legislators and rulers, civil as well as ecclesiastical, who, being themselves but fallible and uninspired men, have assumed dominion over the faith of others, setting up their own opinions and modes of thinking as the only true and infallible, and as such endeavoring to impose them on others, hath established and maintained false religions over the greatest part of the world, and through all time; that to compel a man to furnish contributions of money for the propagation of opinions which he disbelieves is sinful and tyrannical; that even the forcing him to support this or that teacher, not of his own persuasion, is depriving him of the comfortable liberty of giving his contributions to the particular pastor whose morals he would make his pattern, and whose powers he feels most persuasive to righteousness, and as withdrawing from the ministry those temporal rewards which, proceeding from an approbation of their personal conduct, are an additional incitement to earnest and unremitting labors for the instruction of mankind; that our civil rights have no dependence on our religious opinions, more than our opinions in physics or geometry; that, therefore, the proscribing any citizen as unworthy the public confidence, by laying upon him an incapacity of being called to offices of trust and emolument, unless he profess or renounce this or that religious opinion, is depriving him injuriously of those privileges and advantages to which in common with his fellow-citizens he has a natural right; that it tends also to corrupt the principles of that very religion it is meant to encourage, by bribing, with a monopoly of worldly honors and emoluments, those who will externally profess and conform to it; that, though indeed these are criminal who do not withstand such temptation, yet neither are those innocent who lay the bait in their way; that to suffer the civil magistrate to intrude his powers into the field of opinion, and to restrain the profession or propagation of principles on supposition of their ill tendency, is a dangerous fallacy, which at once destroys all religious liberty, because he, being of course judge of that tendency, will make his opinions the rule of judgment, and approve or condemn the sentiments of others only as they shall square with or differ from his own; that it is time enough, for the rightful purposes of civil government, for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order; and finally, that Truth is great, and will prevail if left to herself; that she is the proper and sufficient antagonist to error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict, unless by human interposition disarmed of her natural weapons,—free argument and debate,—errors ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them:—

Be it therefore enacted by the General Assembly, That no man shall be compelled to frequent or support any religious worship, place, or ministry whatsoever, nor shall be enforced, restrained, molested, or burthened in his body or goods, nor shall otherwise suffer an account of his religious opinions or belief; but that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise diminish, enlarge, or affect their civil capacities.

And though we well know that this assembly, elected by the people for the ordinary purposes of legislation only, have no power to restrain the acts of succeeding assemblies, constituted with powers equal to our own, and that therefore to declare this act irrevocable would be of no effect in law; yet we are free to declare, and do declare, that the rights hereby asserted are the natural rights of mankind; and that, if any act shall be hereafter passed to repeal the present, or narrow its operation, such act will be an infringement of natural right.

THE JOURNALISTIC SABBATH.

The following communication was received yesterday:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE PIONEER PRESS:—

We, the subscribers, respectfully ask you to discontinue the publication either of the Sunday or Monday morning edition of your paper, in view of the following considerations:—

First—We fully appreciate the great influence which the press of this city has heretofore exerted in behalf of the public morals; and we are, therefore, all the more pained to have its influence now exerted for Sabbath desecration. Not that we regard other corporations or institutions which require unnecessary work on the Sabbath as any less guilty than yourselves, but that we consider the influence of the press as greater than any,—perhaps than all combined.

Second—Our petition is not laid against the Monday edition as such, but against the publication of a paper upon seven days of the week, without any intermission as should respect the day which the Christian community accounts sacred. Inasmuch as the Monday edition was the seventh, it is but the occasion of this remonstrance.

Third—While there are many of the subscribers who would much prefer the discontinuance of the Sabbath edition, believing that it involves the desecration of the day, and others who believe that the sanctity of the day can be as well conserved by the discontinuance of the Monday edition, yet we are confident that it is neither to your own best interests nor in accordance with the wish of the better class of your subscribers, that you should continue the publication of seven editions per week; and we hope that you may, therefore, see fit to comply with this request.

St. PAUL, Feb. 18, 1878.

David R. Breed,
Maurice D. Edwards,
David Tice,
E. J. Hiescher,
J. Schneider,
H. Baitscher,
J. S. Pillsbury,
D. Burt,
H. P. Van Cleve,
H. M. Knox,
Edwin Treasure,
R. Marvin,
Robert P. Lewis,
T. F. Masterson,
A. P. Heichhold,
Wm. W. Billson,
Henry J. Horn—I believe the Monday edition especially objectionable on account of work done on Sunday in preparing that edition.
A. G. Manson,
C. G. Lewis,
Romaine Sheire,
J. P. Allen,
J. B. Spencer,
J. H. Murphy,
C. A. Eaton,
H. C. Burbank—I favor the discontinuance of the Monday morning edition.
Horace Thompson — In favor of omitting Monday morning's paper.
J. C. Green,
W. P. Donaldson,
Fred. G. Hawes,
J. D. Pollock,
C. S. Rogers—in favor of omitting the Monday morning paper.
W. L. Wilson,
G. W. Sherwood,
W. J. Dyer—in favor of the omission of the Monday paper.
Henry Schurmeier — In favor of omitting Monday morning paper.
F. Knauff,
J. H. Schurmeier,
Henry Gotzian,
A. H. Lohliker,
J. F. Tostevin,
J. C. Quinby,
Charles E. Magraw,
W. R. Tostevin,
C. W. Hackett—in favor of omitting Monday edition.
Fred. S. Swisher,
Henry Cross,
John Stafford,
Edward J. Funk,
H. J. Crist,
S. W. Lloyd,
Wm. McKibbin,
Wm. R. Marshall—I hope the Monday morning edition will be discontinued. I heartily favor one day's rest and abstinence from labor in seven.
Pennock Pusey—For reasons similar to above.
H. R. Brill,
David Day,
A. E. Clark,
Thos. Cochran, Jr.,
Wm. F. Mason,
L. A. Gilbert,
D. W. Ingersoll,
Edward Corning,
D. D. Merrill,
J. W. Griggs, Jr.,
George H. Hazzard,
J. A. Allen,
A. J. Goodrich,
H. H. Sibley — In my judgment there should be an intermission of labor one day in each week, in justice to employees in the printing-office and elsewhere, and in deference to the religious sentiment of the community.
John S. Prince,
E. F. Drake,
A. H. Wilder,
John Way,
R. W. Johnson,
H. S. Fairchild,
Gates A. Johnson,
E. Walther, M. D. — In favor of discontinuing the Monday morning edition.
C. Meyer,
J. W. Nabersberg — To discontinue Monday morning paper.
C. Gotzian,
Stephen F. Buneman,
Martin Pfaff,
Jacob A. Weiss,
Wm. H. Stormer,
C. D. Strong—My views are same as those expressed by Governors Marshall and Sibley, and H. J. Horn.
Wm. H. Johnston.

The Pioneer Press feels deeply grateful for the kindly interest in its business affairs and in its morals which is exhibited by the gentlemen whose names are attached to the above communication; and we can best reciprocate it, perhaps, by endeavoring to show them that their solicitude on our behalf is quite unnecessary. They request us to discontinue the publication of either our Sunday or Monday edition on grounds which present a curious confusion of ideas, and which would seem to be hardly consonant with the Christian morality for the interests of which they are so much and so properly concerned. They are careful to inform us that they do not object to a Monday edition as such, but to "the publication of a paper on seven days of the week without such intermission as should respect the day which the Christian community accounts sacred." But as some of them hold that it is the Sunday edition, and others that it is the Monday issue which involves the desecration of the Sabbath, they have kindly consented to compromise the matter by permitting us to choose either of these two modes of desecration which we may deem most expedient; and we are afraid that, in their amiable desire to make things agreeable all around, they have thus compromised away the whole ground of their opposition to seven papers a week. As the Sunday edition involves a certain amount of labor in the wee sma' hours of Sunday morning, and the Monday edition requires considerable labor on Sunday night, the dilemma is a fearful one for a conscience which is burdened with the belief that the Almighty has set apart a definite astronomical period of time from midnight of Saturday to midnight of Sunday as a day sacred to religious observances, meditation, and rest; and we should be deeply pained if we thought our evangelical brethren were willing to compromise with sin in the manner they propose, by permitting us to choose which end of this astronomical Sabbath we shall desecrate with the impety of newspaper work. But, of course, it is implied in the very terms of such a compromise that both parties are agreed in attaching no peculiar sacredness to any given period of time—that they thus give up the doctrine of an astronomical Sabbath even while seeming to maintain it,—and only insist on the observance of one day of rest in seven, including one end or the other of Sunday, which end being a matter of individual preference. After such an example of latitudinarianism on the part of the religious teachers, the elders, and the deacons, to whom we naturally look for guidance in these matters, they can hardly be surprised that we accept their interpretation of the requirements of Sabbathical morality in all its logical consequences, and that we agree at once with those who hold that it is no desecration of the Sabbath to issue a Sunday morning paper, and also with those who account it no sin to issue a Monday morning paper; and they will not fail to see how beautifully we are carrying out their own sensible spirit of compromise by supplying those who regard the one edition as a mortal sin with the other edition which they look upon as innocent, or at least as venial. Indeed, if we had had any misgivings or doubts on the subject of the propriety of issuing a paper every day of the week, they must have been entirely dissipated by the enlightened views which have been laid down for our guidance in the above communication by our evangelical friends and counsellors. They give us to understand that the setting apart of one day of rest in seven, whether the days of labor trench on the astronomical Sunday or not, will fulfill the requirements of Christian morality as respects the Sabbath. We fully accept this view of the matter, and it will perhaps surprise them to learn that the Pioneer Press conforms its conduct and the management of its affairs, as far as possible, to the rule here laid down. As a matter of fact, the employees of the Pioneer Press, with very few voluntary exceptions, are required to labor but six days in the week. All our business arrangements look to the giving of every one connected with the establishment, as far as possible, one day of rest in the seven. They have in fact already the same alternative which Messrs. Breed, McKibbin, Cross and their associates request that they should have. They choose for themselves whether they shall work on the early hours of Sunday morning or on Sunday night, and thus everybody's convenience and conscience are respected; everybody has his Sabbath or day of rest, and the same choice is given to those who, for reasons of conscience, prefer a Monday to a Sunday paper, or vice versa. In practice, therefore, they will perceive that the Pioneer Press fully conforms to the rule which the subscribers of the above communication have been good enough to lay down for our guidance, and they would probably have deemed their communication superfluous if they had taken the pains to inquire into the facts. In the mean time, if it should at any time hereafter suit the convenience of the Pioneer Press to make any changes in its business arrangements for the public benefit, we need not say that it would add to the satisfaction we always feel in our humble efforts to serve the public if we should be so fortunate as to meet the approval of gentlemen for whom we entertain so much esteem and respect as the signers of the above communication; and if not, any advice they may choose to tender us for the better management of our private business will always be received with the respectful consideration which is due to their friendly solicitude for "the best interests" of the Pioneer Press.—St. Paul Pioneer Press, March 2.

OBSERVANCE OF SUNDAY.

MR. EDITOR:—

It is amusing to observe the chagrin and disappointment which the report of Senator Johnstone, on the transportation of the mail on Sunday, has caused among the whole corps of Orthodox editors. Some of them, indeed, are so extravagantly outrageous in their remarks as to assert that Sabbath-breaking ought to be punished as severely as house-breaking, or even murder! Were it not that the great body of the people entertain more correct ideas of the nature of civil polity than these fanatics, it is evident that, with all their pretended "good-will" for their species, they would not be slow in practically illustrating their novel principles of criminal jurisprudence. This is frequently said to be an age remarkable for its improvements in the arts and sciences, and the extensive diffusion of knowledge. And I believe, speaking generally, that it is so. But if we compare the ideas entertained as to the observance of Sunday nearly a century ago by the Puritans of New England (of whose bigotry and rigid fanaticism we have heard so much) with those of modern Puritans, we shall find the result to be in favor of the former. Although they never overlooked an infraction of the Sunday law, the punishment was so slight, so trivial, as to indicate that they had still remaining in their breasts some portion of the milk of human kindness. To illustrate what I now state, I have extracted the following account of the proceedings against the captain of a vessel, charged with violating the Sabbath, from a London publication entitled the Gazetteer, and dated Dec. 20, 1774. This account, the main circumstances of which were afterwards published in Burnaby's Travels Through the Middle Settlements of North America, also serves to show, that those who make the greatest pretensions about the sanctity of the Sabbath, or the most forward in urging the punishment of transgressors, are generally the least circumspect in their own conduct:—

About forty years ago, many of the chief saints at Boston met with a sad mortification,—yes, a mortification in the flesh. Captain St. Loe, commander of a ship of war, then in Boston harbor, being ashore on a Sunday, was apprehended by the constables for walking on the Lord's Day. On Monday he was carried before a Justice of the Peace: he was fined; refused to pay it; and for his contumacy and contempt of authority, was sentenced to sit in the stocks one hour, during the time of change. This sentence was put in execution without the least mitigation.

While the captain sat in durance, grave magistrates admonished him to respect in future the wholesome laws of the Province; and reverend divines exhorted him ever after to reverence and keep holy the Sabbath day. At length the hour expired; and the captain's legs were set at liberty. As soon as he was freed, he, with great seeming earnestness, thanked the magistrates for their correction, and the clergy for their spiritual advice and consolation; declaring that he was ashamed of his past life; that he was resolved to put off the old man of sin, and to put on the new man of righteousness; that he should ever pray for them as instruments in the hands of God of saving his sinful soul.

This sudden conversion rejoiced the saints. After clapping their hands and casting up their eyes to heaven, they embraced their new convert, and returned thanks for being made the humble means of snatching a soul from perdition. Proud of their success, they fell to exhorting him afresh; and the most zealous invited him to dinner, that they might have full time to complete their work. The captain sucked in the milk of exhortation as a new-born babe does the milk of the breast. He was as ready to listen as they were to exhort. Never was a convert more assiduous, while his station in Boston harbor lasted: he attended every Sabbath day their most sanctified meeting-house; never missed a weekly lecture; at every private convective he was most fervent, and loudest in prayer. He flattered and made presents to the wives and daughters of the godly. In short, all the time he could spare from the duties of his station was spent in entertaining them on board his ship, or in visiting and praying at their houses. The saints were delighted with him beyond measure. They compared their wooden stocks to the voice of heaven, and their sea-convert to St. Paul; who, from their enemy, was become their doctor.

Amidst their mutual happiness, the mournful time of parting arrived. The captain received his recall. On this he went round among the godly, and wept and prayed, assuring them he would return, and end his days among his friends in the Lord. Till the day of his departure, the time was spent in regrets, professions, entertainments, and prayer. On that day, about a dozen of the principal magistrates, including the selectmen, accompanied the captain to Nantasket Road, where the ship lay with everything ready for sailing. An elegant dinner was provided for them on board; after which many bowls and bottles were drained. As the blood of the saints waxed warm, the crust of their hypocrisy melted away: their moral see-saws and the Scripture texts gave place to double entendres and wanton songs; the captain encouraged their gaiety; and the whole ship resounded with the roar of their merriment. Just at that time, into the cabin burst a body of sailors, who, to the inexpressible horror and amazement of the saints, pinioned them fast. Headless of cries and entreaties, they dragged them upon deck, where they were tied up, stripped to the buff, and their breeches let down; and the boatswain with his assistants, armed with dreadful cat-o'-nine-tails, provided for the occasion, administered unto them the law of Moses in the most energetic manner. Vain were all their prayers, roarings, stampings, and curses; the captain, in the mean time, assuring them it was consonant to their own doctrine and to Scripture, that the mortification of the flesh tended towards the saving of the soul, and therefore it would be criminal in him to abate them a single lash. When they had suffered the whole of their discipline, which had fayed them from the nape of the neck to the hams, the captain took a polite leave, earnestly begging them to remember him in their prayers. They were then let down into the boat that was waiting for them; the crew saluted them with three cheers; and Captain St. Loe made sail.—Philadelphia Correspondent, April 11, 1829.

THE SEAL OF HARVARD COLLEGE.

Some of our readers will be interested in the discussion called out by Dr. Holmes' sonnets, sent with a letter to the Harvard Club of New York at the February meeting. The sonnets have been printed, but it would be difficult to repeat his verses too often; and they are accordingly given again with his exegetical letter, and the comments of Dr. Osgood and Mr. Sargent, the president of the club:—

HARVARD.

"CHRISTO ET ECCLESIE." 1700.

TO GOD'S ANOINTED AND HIS CHOSEN FLOCK:
So ran the phrase the black-robed conslave chose
To guard the sacred cloisters that arose
Like David's altar on Moriah's rock.
Unshaken still those ancient arches mock
The ram's-horn summons of the windy foes
Who stand like Joshua's army while it blows
And wait to see them toppling with the shock.
Christ and the Church. Their church whose narrow door
Shuts out the many, who if over-bold
Like hunted wolves were driven from the fold,
Bruised with the tails those godly zealous bore,
Mindful that Israel's altar stood or old
Where echoed once Achan's threshing-floor.

1643. "VERITAS." 1878.

TRUTH: So the frontlet's older legend ran,
On the brief record's opening page displayed;
Not yet those clear-eyed scholars were afraid
Lest the fair fruit that wrought the woe of man
By far Euphrates—where our sire began
His search for truth, and seeking was betrayed—
Might work new treason in their forest shade,
Doubling the curse that brought life's shortened span.
Nurse of the future, daughter of the past,
That stern phylactery best becomes thee now;
Lift to the morning star thy marble brow!
Cast thy brave truth on every warring blast!
Stretch thy white hand to that forbidden bough,
And let thine earliest symbol be thy last!

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

February 21, 1878.

Dr. Holmes sent, with his regrets for his absence in person, the following few words of explanation of the sonnets:—

At the first meeting of the governors of the college under the charter of 1642, held in the year 1643, it was "ordered that there shall be a college seal in form following," namely, a shield, with three open books, bearing the word Veritas. This motto was soon exchanged for In Christi Gloria, and this again shortly superseded by the one so long used, Christo et Ecclesie. The latter change took place, as President Quincy believed, "during the presidency of Increase Mather, when a violent struggle was making to secure the college under the influence of the old-established Congregational church." The date (1700) which I have assigned to the last motto must be considered as only approximate.

The Harvard College of to-day wants no narrower, no more exclusive motto than truth—truth which embraces all that is highest and purest in the precepts of all teachers, human or divine; all that is best in the creeds of all churches, whatever their name, but allows no lines of circumscription to be drawn round its sacred citadel under the alleged authority of any record or of any organization. This is what I mean to express in these two squares of metrical lines, wrought in the painful prolixity of the sonnet,—a form of verse which suggests a slow minuet of rhythms stepping in measured cadences over a mosaic pavement of rhymes, and which not rarely combines a minimum of thought with a maximum of labor.

May I venture to remind you, Mr. President, that it is nearly fifty years since you, as editor of a college magazine, gave a kindly welcome to the earliest printed verses known as coming from my pen? I was as a bird on the wing then, hardly knowing whither I was flying, with the morning sun behind me, with all the wide world and the unmeasured years before me. Now I am on my nest, and the evening shadows are fast falling around me. I am sure, that you, at least, will be as indulgent to my failing as you were to my forming voice; and for those around you, I will trust their hearts and their memories,—for we are children of the same mother, and to-day we forget all else in the one feeling of brotherhood.

The allusion in the last paragraph is to the magazine called The Collegian, published by the undergraduates of the classes of Dr. Holmes's time, of which Mr. Sargent, now president of the club in New York, was at one time the editor. To the suggestion of the sonnets, Dr. Osgood has made the following answer, to which Mr. Sargent felt called upon to add "one word more":—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:—

The account of the seals of Harvard University, which was published in your paper of February 24, with Dr. O. W. Holmes's striking sonnets, interested many readers; and it was read by Harvard graduates with especial attention. There is much to be said in favor of returning to the old seal of 1643, with the inscription of "Veritas" upon the three open books; and upon some of the new Harvard buildings this has been done without giving up the present motto upon the border, "Christo et Ecclesie." I am authorized to say, however, that there is no purpose or wish on the part of the college to change its seal, and that, while the spirit of the institution is unsectarian, and able ministers have gone from its walks into Roman Catholic, Congregational, Episcopalian, Baptist, and Unitarian churches, a positive and practical Christian influence is exerted upon the students; and one of the most learned, wise, and earnest men, the Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody, is professor of Christian morals, and to all intents and purposes the chaplain of students and their adviser and friend. The regard in which Dr. Peabody is held may be known by the enthusiasm with which his name was greeted at the late Harvard dinner here.

Allow me to say in conclusion, on behalf of many graduates, that much good might be gained by putting the price of tickets to the Harvard dinner in New York hereafter at five dollars instead of ten dollars, and lessening at least in equal proportion the length of the speeches, and thus relieve at once the pockets and the ears of the majority of guests who abound more in brains than in bullion.

SAMUEL OSGOOD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:—

The letter of Dr. Osgood in your impression of this morning in reference to the seals of Harvard College calls for a reply, for which I beg the courtesy of your columns. When Harvard College was, to many intents, a mere theological school—and we are told that the maintenance of the learned profession to which Dr. Osgood belongs was the "prime object" of its foundation—there was a significance in the legend which claimed her exclusive devotion to "Christ and the Church." Harvard College is now a national university, in which young men are not merely trained for the pulpit, but are also educated for the various pursuits which graduates of recent years have raised to the level of the so-called "liberal professions." There is no more propriety in continuing the use of the present seal, in view of the present relations of the university to education, than there would be in substituting jurisprudence, medicine, journalism, agriculture, or civil engineering for Cotton Mather's "Ecclesie." In the absence of any action by the college on this subject—first brought before the alumni by Dr. O. W. Holmes in his letter to the Harvard Club of this city, at their recent annual dinner—I am not aware that any one can be "authorized" to say that there is no purpose or wish on the part of the college to change their seal. The most that can be fairly said is, that the college has not hitherto been called upon to discuss the subject. That the restoration of the original seal, in its grand simplicity, would be favorably entertained by a considerable portion of the college, we have reason to know. The price of the tickets to the annual dinner, to which Dr. Osgood alludes, is a matter for discussion in the club, and not in the newspapers. The valuable suggestion in this regard, and that as to the length of the dinner-table speeches, so far as they imply a reflection on the dinner committee and on invited guests, would have come with an ill grace from any one but a gentleman of whom it can be said with so much truth as of your esteemed correspondent, that he never taxed club or congregation with too long a speech, and never indulged in an unwelcome appeal to their pockets. Our chief reason for regretting that the speeches were not shorter was that we were thus deprived of the pleasure of a discourse of Orthodox proportions from the doctor himself.

JOHN O. SARGENT.

—Boston Advertiser, March 26.

THE STORY OF "MARY'S LITTLE LAMB."

This is the last week of the spinning-bee at the Old South Meeting-house, and the children will be interested in the following story, which is substantially correct, except that the lamb fed upon a more singular beverage than milk; namely, catnip tea. Mary has, at some inconvenience, promised to come each day this week, if possible, so as not to disappoint the children. Friday will be her seventy-second birthday:—

Who would have believed that the little pet lamb which followed Mary everywhere would now be helping to save the Old South Church? All children know the old song:—

"Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go."

And many of them know that there is in Boston an old church on Washington Street, at the corner of Milk. The land upon which it stands is worth a great sum of money; and as the property was offered for sale there was much danger that the house would be torn down to make room for a block of stores. The old church has been so famous in the history of Massachusetts that there was a strong feeling against tearing it down, and to save it a number of women of wealth bought it, pledging over $400,000. For months they have been hard at work in a great many ways to secure money enough to pay for it. For several weeks past "Aunt Tabitha" has held a spinning-bee in the church. Three or four old ladies, who were famous spinners in their young days—when it was the custom to wear homespun garments,—have had their hatchets and reels and wheels, and have spun for the people. A great many have watched them at their work each afternoon. To add to the attractions of the exhibition, the old ladies have been dressed in the styles which were common when they were young, and have worked in an old-time kitchen with its open fire-place and glowing logs.

Among the visitors one day was the real Mary, who, when a little girl, had the pet lamb for her own. She was very willing to tell the story. Suppose we listen with the rest. Little Mary's name was Mary Sawyer, and she lived in Sterling, Mass. She is now Mrs. Tyler, of Somerville, a vigorous lady over seventy years old. One morning she went out to the barn and found two little lambs, which had been born in the night. One was so weak and small that her father said it was of no use to try to raise it. Mary's tender heart pitied the tiny creature, and she begged her father to let her try to save it. He gave it to her care, promising that if it lived it should be her lamb. Mary took it into the house, wrapped it up, laid it in a warm place, and fed it carefully with milk. All day she watched it, and all night too. In the morning how glad she was to hear her father say that the lamb would live!

It was no wonder that the pet lamb loved its small mistress, and wanted to go everywhere with her. The day that it went to school, and was turned out, it happened that a young man was there, who saw the whole, and wrote out the story in the verses which the children know so well. The lamb lived and thrived and had lambs of its own; it ran in the fields with the cattle, till one day a cow, with sharp horns, while playing, tossed it into the air, and it fell bleeding at the feet of Mary, who happened to be in the field. With deep grief she watched its life go out. From the lamb's wool a quantity of yarn had been spun, and Mrs. Tyler brought some of it to Aunt Tabitha's bee, and sold it at twenty-five cents for each piece; so that up to last week, Mary's little lamb had earned sixty dollars toward paying for the Old South Church in Boston. This is the true story of Mary's little lamb.—Boston Daily Advertiser, March 19, 1878.

BISMARCK's recent speech would not have been characteristic, if it had not contained a mot which all Europe would remember. This was the exclamation, "Beati possidentes," which has already passed into history, as one of the keenest sayings of the keenest of diplomatists. With fine irony, The Pall Mall Gazette contends that this maxim cannot be regarded as one of the "authorized beatitudes," nor even as a "pious quotation." A correspondent, however, takes up the matter quite seriously, and proves that the Prince's wisdom is Scriptural; being based upon Matt. v. 5, in the Vulgate: "Beati mites, qui niam possidebunt terram." This he regards as a syllogism, of which the implied major is, "Beati possessori terram." "Blessed are they who are about to possess the land;" and he can scarcely avoid the inference, "Blessed are they who possess the land," or "Beati possidentes terram," which he assumes to be signified in a more compendious form by "Beati possidentes."—New York Tribune, March 16.

Poetry.

A BABY KNIGHT.

BY HENRIETTA R. ELIOT.

One day, as I sat looking out
Across the shady street,
I saw two funny little tois,
With pretty air discreet;
Which seemed to say, "We're out to-day
Alone, without a nurse!"
A little boy, scarce out of frocks,
Swinging a tiny purse;
And leading with his other hand
A chunky two-year morsel,
Who held, with all the pride of trust,
A small brown paper parcel.
"Ah, yes," I thought, "the little folks
Have been for sugar-plums;
I hope they got their money's worth:
They sometimes cheat at Blum's."
"But who would cheat—"my heart stood still!
A clamor filled my ears,—
While round the corner heading rushed
A maddened drove of steers!
I caught the look of mortal fear
Upon one little face;
And, with a blind desire to help,
I darted toward the place.
Right through a parting in the drove
I ran, I scarce know how,
And safely reached the other side;
I wonder at it now.
But then I had but one clear thought,—
To get across the street;
The high board fence that side the way
Gave no place for retreat.
And there the babies were alone;
That was enough. I flew,
And found them, thank the Lord! still safe,
And giving to my view
A sight for angel's gladdest tears!
So pitiful and brave,
It might be put with all sweet deeds,
Since Jesus came to save!
The boy held baby to the fence
So close she could not stir,
And stood himself with arms outstretched,
Between the beasts and her.
And Oh, the wonder of his face,
The sweetness, strength, and pain!
Ah! may God shield, I ne'er see face
So beautiful again!
His wide blue eyes were tense with fear,
But his mouth was firmly set,
Though the pavement, not two feet away,
With muddy boots was wet.
I snatched both children in my arms,
And there I held them fast
For two long seconds, till the herd
Had all rushed madly past.
And then I spoke out cheerily,
To calm the beating heart
Of the pale and o'er-wrought little boy
Who'd done so good a part.
"Indeed," I said, "they wouldn't dare
To hurt your little sister,
When you took such brave care of her!"
And then I stooped and kissed her,
To give me time to choke away
The tears that only waited.
"How could you be so brave, my child?"
His eyes again dilated.
The horror all came back again,
His sweet voice grew nsteady;
But he answered, in clear childish speech,
"Why, I had little Lyddie!"
"I guess if I had been alone,
I would have cried out, may be;
But I kept remembering mamma said,
"Take good care of the baby."
"And so I prayed to God real hard,
And stood on the outside;
For nurse says, when cows run like that,
They'll kill, unless we hide."
The baby hero's simple words
Must end this simple story;
His upturned face, while speaking them,
Needed no ring of glory
To perfect it; and this true tale
Needs not that I should try
To make it fine, with trailing robes
Of wordy drapery.

PORTLAND, OREGON, 1878.

—Christian Register.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 20.

H. D. Sisson, $5; D. B. Tripp, $6.40; Wm. E. Sutton, $3.20; Mrs. John Hurst, $3.20; Dr. J. E. Jones, $3.20; Geo. M. Olcott, $3.20; Rev. S. B. Stuart, $3.20; J. D. Oppenheim, $3.20; E. H. Neyman, $3.20; M. H. McKay, $3.20; W. H. Williams, $3.20; Chas. P. Tenney, $3.20; Gustav Looser, $3.20; Wm. Blanchard, $4.14; J. C. Lutz, $5; Joseph Brockway, $5.20; Cash, $20; O. Wilhelm, $6.40; Harrison Bliss, $3.20; J. H. Clark, $3.25; Z. S. Wallingford, $3; Sam'l Warbassee, 70 cents; L. F. Robinson, 25 cents; J. T. Sanderland, 10 cents; Geo. D. Henck, $3.25; Am. News Co., $6.10; Mrs. E. H. Francis, $3.20; A. H. Waite, $3.20; E. W. Dickinson, $3.20; James Parton, $3.20; W. T. Newton, $3.20; Dr. C. B. Michener, $3.05; Jesse Cook, $1; Dr. L. F. Babb, 50 cents; L. G. Hoffman, $3; Mrs. Albert Angell, $3.25; Thos. F. Hamilton, $5.47; T. W. Higginson, $20; B. F. Horton, $1.50; Geo. A. Farr, $10; Robt. J. Turnbull, $50; J. C. Kearns, 50 cents; R. C. Bassett, $7; C. N. Overbaugh, $5; John Trask, $1.60; J. S. Shaller, $3.50; H. E. Peckham, $6.74; J. H. W. Toohy, 50 cents; Jno. Briggs, $3.20; T. G. Hovey, 87 cents; Wm. Smith, $6.40; Mary S. Osborne, $3.20; Dr. C. A. Bartol, $3.20; Nathl. Little, Jr., $10; S. F. Libbey, $1.10; Chas. Nichols, 50 cents; R. Marston, $3.20; E. H. Sargent, $1.55.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 25, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LIBERAL LEAGUE.

ONE WAY TO DO IT.

Reader, do you desire to organize a Liberal League in your town? If so, this is a good way to do it: Draw up a paper in the following form, and present it to all the liberals in your vicinity:—

"We, the undersigned, are in favor of organizing a Local Liberal League in the town of —, and agree to meet for that purpose at the house of — on Saturday evening next. We each agree to pay the sum set opposite our respective names towards the ten dollars required to procure a charter from the National Liberal League."

Names.	Residence.	Amount.
When you have procured ten names and ten dollars, you are ready for organization. Of course, the more names the better. I shall be pleased to furnish form of Constitution when required. Reader, will you attend to this work immediately, before it passes from your mind?

H. L. GREEN,
Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L.
SALAMANCA, N. Y., March 15, 1878.

THE BOSTON Daily Advertiser of last Saturday, taking its cue from the fact that the Massachusetts Legislature only refused by a vote of 73 to 71 to recognize Good Friday as a State occasion by adjourning over that day, recommends that Good Friday be substituted for the obsolescent Fast Day now appointed annually by the Governor. Who cannot see that such a substitution would greatly strengthen the mischievous belief that the State as such is bound to acknowledge Christianity? And who cannot see that it is the cunning scheming of ecclesiasticism which now seeks this substitution? We print the Advertiser's editorial here in full, in order to show to the careless liberals of Massachusetts what rapid progress the ideas of the God-in-the-Constitution party are making even in Boston itself:—

Fast and Good Friday.

The discussion in the House of Representatives on Thursday, on the motion to adjourn over Good Friday, suggests the question why our annual Fast Day, which has degenerated in Massachusetts into a meaningless holiday, should not give way to an official recognition of the anniversary of the day upon which, according to the highest authority, our Saviour suffered? This is the custom in Connecticut, and it is said to satisfy Christians of every denomination; while with a large part of the community the day has such a solemn significance that it is redeemed from the glaring inconsistencies which distinguish our Fast Day. All religious people denounce the misuse of our old-fashioned Fast Day in the present times. As a holiday it may have use; as the continuation of an old New England custom it perhaps ought to be supported; but its observance as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer is little better than a mockery. Its origin as an annual holiday was doubtless designed to take the place of the English observance of Good Friday, just as Thanksgiving Day was a substitute for Christmas Day. But its religious character is rapidly dying out, while the respect and desire for the observance of Good Friday is steadily increasing. By appointing Good Friday as an annual Fast Day we should fall into accord with the greatest part of Christendom, and the solemnity of the day itself would tend greatly to do away with the almost profane inconsistency between the character of Fast Day and the way it is kept. An annual Fast Day, too, without regard to the condition of public feeling, preserved simply as a national custom, is now an anachronism; the observance of Good Friday as a Fast Day commends itself to most Christians as eminently proper. We believe there have been governors of Massachusetts who, recognizing this, have been ready to appoint the annual Fast Day on Good Friday; but both Catholic and Episcopal clergymen have been opposed to it for fear that what to those churches is a sacred and solemn anniversary would be desecrated in a worse manner than non-observance of it is. We believe their fears would prove in a great measure to be groundless. The community is too religious to lose sight of the origin of the day. So far from Good Friday being degraded into our present meaningless Fast Day, Fast Day would be purified and elevated into a venerable and religious commemoration of the sufferings and death of Christ.

TRINITY CHURCH ASKED TO ARBITRATE.

The subjoined letters concerning Trinity Church have been received since our last issue, one from the Hon. Clinton Roosevelt, and the other from a gentleman who desires us to withhold his name from the public for the present; and we judge it no more than just to give them the same prominence accorded to the letters of General Dix. The public will doubtless read them with equal interest.

NEW YORK, April 15, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—A number of years ago I was applied to to prosecute the Corporation of Trinity Church in behalf of the heirs of Bogardus, they paying me a fee for the same of $1000.

I declined to follow the tracks of all those proceedings, in holding the church as the original Corporation, and concluded to demand an answer by which the statutes of limitations might bar the action, and therefore endeavored to compel an answer under the Act of 1784, by which they became Trustees to the heirs of Bogardus as well as the City of New York; nor has it been possible for the mother Church of Trinity Parish to defend legally against this charge. However, Judge McCune published, or the church published in his name, a most wonderful document in which Trinity claimed to be not at all responsible for the immoralities committed on the property she holds. I made a case for appeal which, on advice of other counsel for the heirs, was not accepted, since which time the undersigned has had nothing to do in the case as counsel. But a stranger to me came some time ago and asked of me the boundaries of the church property, which, not recollecting exactly, I referred him to one better acquainted with its limits, and wish to have it understood that, until I receive what the lawyers term a "refreshment," I prefer to be considered out of the case.

Yours respectfully,

CLINTON ROOSEVELT,
No. 11 Wall Street, New York.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—The writer of this article was requested by the Hon. Clinton Roosevelt to give an outline of the property originally known as the "King's Farm and Garden and the Bogardus Estate," which property was claimed by the Corporation of Trinity Church, of which the Hon. John A. Dix is Comptroller, to have been granted said Corporation by "Royal favor."

The boundaries of these lands, as the city is now laid out, commenced near Cortland Street, running north along the line of Broadway to Reade Street; west to South Fifth Avenue; north and north-west until it reached Christopher Street; thence to North River, and thence to place of beginning. The dividing line between the "King's Farm and Garden" and the "Bogardus Estate" was near Chambers Street. It is presumed this will not be denied by the Hon. John A. Dix.

The entire letter of the Hon. John A. Dix is one of special pleading, as will be seen from certain facts, a few of which are here given, which he well knows to be true,—hence the occasion on his part for "the strongest expression of indignation at these calumnious accusations against Trinity Church."

The title to the property in question has always been in dispute, the said Corporation holding the same originally as Trustees for the State of New York and the Bogardus heirs; and as Trustees they never could or can acquire title. Hence long leases were given by them at a small rental. This will account for the smallness of their income; if they have but seven hundred and fifty lots in their possession, it can readily be seen where the balance are, and how seven hundred and fifty lots cannot support "seven hundred and sixty-four liquor-saloons or gin-mills and ninety-six known houses of prostitution"; also, as the present leases that are made for one and two years should contain the clause against "liquors," when there is such a just cause of complaint against it.

Whenever an inquiry has been attempted by the Legislature to examine into their affairs, it has either been stifled, or the said Corporation has denied the right of such examination, and boasted that "they had a political weight that was not to be disregarded."

Whenever any action has been brought to test the rights of the respective parties, every means has been used to avoid a direct issue of the facts and to crush out the party attempting it. A most singular fact is that the press of New York would publish everything to favor the said Corporation and nothing from the opposite side.

A fair, honorable, and Christian offer was made to the said Corporation, as a professed Christian body, through their attorney, the Hon. G. M. Ogden,—"to submit the entire matters in controversy to a Referee, so as to avoid scandal and place them forever at rest,"—which they positively declined; and the same offer is again made by the same party in this public manner, that the said Corporation may vindicate themselves honorably, and not by special pleading and denunciations of those whose characters may bear as close scrutiny as their own, if they are not possessed of the same amount of wealth.

These facts are perhaps sufficient, unless the Hon. John A. Dix, or those associated with him, deny the same in your paper; when, with your permission, the writer will refer to matters which may not be quite so pleasant.

JUSTITIA.

It will be noticed that Mr. Roosevelt refers to "a most wonderful document in which Trinity claimed to be not at all responsible for the immoralities committed on the property she holds." Is not such a "claim" an admission that such "immoralities" were actually committed there? And how is such an admission to be reconciled with General Dix's letters?

It will also be noticed that the boundaries of the "King's Farm and Garden and the Bogardus Estate" are substantially as given on the outlined map which we followed in our original description of the property, and that Trinity Church claimed this property, containing (according to General Dix's calculation) about five thousand lots. Has Trinity Church sold the four thousand two hundred and fifty lots of which she now disclaims ownership, or, holding them still as Trustee, does she evade responsibility for the immoral uses to which they have been put by taking advantage of a mere quibble? Or what is the explanation of the enigma? We must dissent from the opinion expressed by "Justitia" that, "if they have but seven hundred and fifty lots in their possession, it can readily be seen where the balance are." This is a point which we, at least, are quite incapable of seeing without further light.

Moreover, it will be noticed that the title of Trinity Church to the original estate is disputed; that the land is stated to have been on that account let on long leases at a small rental; and that the value of the whole property cannot, consequently, be determined by reckoning the actual income as the "legal interest" of that value. If "Justitia" is correct, it is evident that "seven or eight millions" is an undervaluation even of the "productive" portion of the property.

Lastly, it will be noticed that the Corporation is directly charged by "Justitia" with boasting of its "political weight" in order to defeat examination of its affairs by the Legislature of New York; and that it is indirectly charged with "using every means to avoid a direct issue of the facts, and to crush out the party attempting" to test its title to the property it holds. It is also asserted that the press of New York, for some reason not stated, have refused to give both sides a fair and equal hearing before the public.

Since, therefore, "Justitia" (whose name is at the service of the Corporation whenever they desire it) renews explicitly and formally the offer "to submit the entire matters in controversy to a Referee, so as to avoid scandal and place them forever at rest," we cannot but hope that the Corporation will unhesitatingly accept this fair and peaceable offer. The charges made are of the utmost gravity; they can be effectually disposed of in no better way. The public have immediate interests of the highest character in securing the establishment of the truth, whatever it may be, with respect to these charges; and it is only as a mouth-piece and defender of these public interests that THE INDEX has taken up the matter at all. The "New York press" may or may not be influenced to become partisans of one side in this controversy; but THE INDEX is of no side except that of the truth. It is solely as a friend of the truth that we now invite the serious attention of the Corporation of Trinity Church to the above offer of arbitration; and we shall await its reply with the greatest interest.

IDEALISM.

THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—As it is possible that Mr. Fiske, who is so sharply attacked by Mr. J. G. Whyte in the INDEX of the 4th inst. may not find leisure to reply for himself, I would just like to make a remark or two on Mr. Whyte's communication.

He says he was "much astonished" to find Mr.

Fiske saying that "no one had ever refuted" the idealist philosophy, and proceeds to ask if it is possible that the author of "Cosmic Philosophy" has never read Mr. Spencer's Principles of Psychology, in which "no less than nineteen chapters are devoted to the complete refutation of the Berkeleyan hypothesis and idealism in general."

Now if Mr. Fiske had said that no one had ever tried to refute—that no one had ever written nineteen chapters in attempting to refute—the idealist philosophy, there would be some pertinence in Mr. Whyte's question; but seeing that Mr. Fiske had simply ventured the assertion that no one had refuted, i.e. had succeeded in refuting, the idealist philosophy, it does seem a little out of place to ask a man so well known as a profound student of the evolution philosophy whether he has ever read Mr. Spencer's Psychology. Does it absolutely follow that the man who reads Mr. Spencer must be convinced by his arguments? One would think so, to judge by the tone of Mr. Whyte's question; but read a little further, and you will find that Mr. Whyte himself takes the liberty of doing that which he thinks it so outrageous in Mr. Fiske to have done. Here is "the law of equal liberty" with a vengeance. When Mr. Spencer undertakes to refute idealism, Mr. Fiske must bow in humble submission, and own himself convinced; but when Mr. Spencer undertakes to refute materialism, Mr. Whyte stands erect, and calmly observes that Mr. Spencer "has entered on much refined and subtle reasoning"—of a very inconclusive kind. All that Mr. Spencer has to say on this head, Mr. Whyte can dispose of by a very simple consideration indeed. Did it never occur to him that other people may have found those portions of Mr. Spencer's arguments with which he agrees just as inconclusive as he finds the portions which (as he would say) "refute" materialism?

Now for a question or two. In what sense are Berkeley and Mill more the successors of the medieval schoolmen than Descartes, Locke, Hume, Hamilton, Spencer, and Clifford? What proof, or beginnings of proof, has Mr. Whyte, that those predecessors of Mr. Fiske's (his own predecessors never did anything of the kind) who burnt witches and heretics were adherents of the idealist philosophy? It would seem as if Mr. Whyte, after wading through those nineteen chapters, had emerged with the impression that to believe in ghosts and demons is to be an idealist. Yet he surely does not need to be told, that the great multitude of those who believe in spirits to this day would laugh as long and loud, or turn away in as complete disgust, or in as complete despair, as he possibly could himself, at the first hint of the idealism of Berkeley or Hume.

I would conclude by expressing the hope that Mr. Fiske may be able to answer for himself, in the columns of THE INDEX, and explain—which I think he would not have much difficulty in doing—how his idealism, with all its "insanities," survived the reading of the celebrated nineteen chapters.

I remain, dear sir, yours very truly,

WM. D. LE SUEUR.

THE MENACE TO THE CONSTITUTION.

We invite particular attention to the following communication, which shows that keen observers of the deeper currents of the time are multiplying. In THE INDEX of January 31, there was a full exposure of the ulterior consequences of the Bible Amendment alluded to,—a measure which ought to arouse the whole liberal element to determined activity in behalf of the Liberal League:—

The Conspiracy.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The telegraph reports a possible basis of agreement between the President and the leaders of his party in Congress, one of the points being a Constitutional Amendment prohibiting appropriations to sectarian schools, etc. This, on the face of it, seems well enough (if there is any demand for it, which is not entirely clear); but such a measure would be made to include the Edmunds Amendment, sanctioning the use of the Bible in the schools, which would not be well enough. If this proposition be included in the final basis of agreement between the President and his friends, it will be the first definite move toward the formal establishment of Protestant Christianity as the religion of the country. The argument will be that the amended Constitution recognizes the Bible; that the Bible is the basis of Christian unity; that divisions in the Church are denominational merely, not sectarian; and that "non-sectarian" Christian teaching in the public schools, in accordance with the Bible, is implied, if not guaranteed, by the Amendment. The scheme needs watching, as one step in the conspiracy against civil and religious liberty.

S. B. MCCracken.

DETROIT, Mich., April 16, 1878.

AN APPEAL TO MASSACHUSETTS LIBERALS.

BOSTON, 231 Washington St., April 25, 1878.

FELLOW-CITIZENS:—

You must be painfully aware by this time of the existence of a growing ecclesiastical party in this country, officered by a large number of the most eminent men of all professions, and actively working to incorporate the Orthodox creed in the United States Constitution. We refer to the organization known by the wily and misleading name of the "National Reform Association," the objects of which, if successfully carried out, would involve grave encroachments on our political and religious rights as American citizens. This organization represents, in a new and active form, the ecclesiastical power already too strongly entrenched in our laws and institutions, particularly in and by the exemption of church property from taxation; the enforcement of Bible-reading and other religious exercises in our public schools; the support of sectarian chaplains by public money in our legislatures, prisons, asylums, etc.; the enforcement of oppressive Sunday laws, and so forth. All these practices constitute a practical UNION OF CHURCH AND STATE, and are radical violations of the spirit of our National Constitution. It is the avowed object of the "National Reform Association" to defend and extend the abuses, which would otherwise be gradually outgrown, by securing such an amendment of the Constitution as shall (in their own language) "suitably express our national acknowledgment of Almighty God as the source of all authority in civil government, of the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler of nations, and of his revealed will [i.e., the Bible] as of supreme authority, and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all Christian laws, institutions, and usages of the government on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land."

Already has a Constitutional amendment been proposed for the second time in Congress which, if adopted, will have the effect of recognizing the Bible in the public schools as there by "Divine right," and of protecting church property in its present unjust exemption from taxation. Already has the motto "In God We Trust" been stamped on the national coinage, through the same spirit of ecclesiastical encroachment. Already has the successful attempt of the same spirit to shut on Sunday the great Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia been followed by renewed zeal for the enforcement of obsolete and oppressive Sunday laws all over the country. In our own legislature, a bill for equitably taxing Tremont Temple in this city has just been defeated. And in many other ways the determination to refuse recognition of our equal rights as citizens is constantly manifesting itself afresh.

Fellow-Liberals, are you willing to look on quietly and see this secular government gradually but surely transformed into a vast machine for propagating the Christian religion, or any other religion? Do you wish to see the mighty influence of the State perverted into an instrument of cunning priestcraft to sweep into the churches the unwary and timid multitudes who never resist a supposed public opinion? Will you give a new lease of life to usurping ecclesiasticism by allowing it to triumph in this, its latest and most desperate struggle to subvert our political and religious rights? We are convinced that you do not desire this and will not permit it. But how are you to prevent it? Individually you are powerless against the strong arm of aggressive and well-organized ecclesiasticism, availing itself of public heedlessness of the dangers lurking under its plausible but false pretences of "National Reform." But by acting together you can avert these dangers and preserve the republican government founded by our forefathers on the TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE. Let us tell you how:—

The National Liberal League was organized at Philadelphia on the Centennial Fourth of July, for the express purpose of vindicating this great principle of the Total Separation of Church and State. Numerous Auxiliary Local Leagues are springing up all over the country in furtherance of the same object. Massachusetts has already some of these, and more are needed. Every town and village should have one or more. The State Executive Committee, recently constituted, urges every fair-minded citizen to engage at once in this great work. Next autumn the Second Annual Congress of the National Liberal League is to be held, at some point not yet determined, to take efficient measures for the common cause; and every Local League, organized under the National League, will have the privilege of sending five delegates. Call your neighbors, state the issues, and invite them to unite with you in forming a Local League. No expense need attend your meetings until you have outgrown the accommodations of a private house, beyond the ten dollars requisite for procuring a charter from the National Liberal League. Send your application for this, signed by ten persons and accompanied by this small fee, and you will at once be enrolled in the growing army of freedom. Blanks and tracts specially prepared for your use will be furnished at once at cost price. We will gladly render any assistance in our power. When a sufficient number of Local Leagues is formed, a State Convention will be called to organize a State League. As this is a work neither aggressive nor partisan, but defensive and humanitarian, and designed only to promote a genuine human brotherhood by establishing mutual justice and universal reverence for equal rights, we are confident you will meet us with a hearty response.

Yours for freedom and right,

W. H. SATWARD,

D. G. CRANDON,

E. A. SAWTELLE,

G. H. FOSTER,

A. B. BROWN,

Mass. State

Exec. Comm.

of the N. L. L.

Communications.

THE "METRIC REFORM"—IS IT NECESSARY?

EDITOR INDEX:—

In your issue of January 17, your valuable contributor, Julius Ferrette, makes an earnest protest against the attempt to introduce the decimal system of weights and measures into this country. Are his objections well taken? With great deference to his recognized dialectic ability, it must be confessed that the general impression, which his article leaves upon the mind, is not unfavorable to the movement he is assailing. In an opening paragraph, he presents a description of the metric system so clear and concise that a person of average intelligence, who had never heard of it before, could fully master it in an hour; while several perusals of the remainder of the paper seem insufficient to furnish a satisfactory opinion as to exactly what sort of a scheme he would like to see continued or adopted. In one place he appears to recognize the value of the decimal ratio by proposing its application to some base selected from the present English system; in another, he condemns it on account of "its extreme poverty, so far as factors are concerned." Or does he really imagine that people could be induced to carry in mind and use in computations either one or the other of two varying systems according to the divisors which they might need to employ? The attempt to introduce such a double system would prove to be about as futile as the effort hitherto has been to keep up the actual circulation of both varieties of a bi-metallic currency. There would not, however, as between gold and silver, be any fluctuation in relative values. The experience of various nations gives us reason to confidently expect that, whenever a decimal system is given anything like a fair trial, it will speedily push its rival to the wall. But again, such a combination, were it possible to establish it, would be a very unprofitable investment. What is needed is, that the tables of weights and measures in use should be so few, their bases so related, and the ratios of their denominations so simple, that it may be practicable to acquire and retain an accurate conception of their actual values. It is a notorious fact, that a large number of the terms at present employed in concrete numbers convey almost no meaning at all to nine minds out of every ten. This disadvantage would be greatly increased by such an additional complication as Bishop Ferrette would seem to desire. He is certainly correct in saying that we could, if we chose, apply the decimal ratio and notation to some base selected from our present denominations—for instance, "five links of goodly Gunter's chain." But if it is anticipated to make this the prevailing system—and, as it has been said, it would be quite impossible to keep two different systems in actual use—such a partial concession to the tendency of the times would be quite in keeping with the proverbial self-complacency of England, but not at all worthy of Yankee good sense. If we are to have a decimal system at all, it would hardly seem wise to adopt one which would differ just enough from that in use by a large portion of the rest of the world to make our scientific works unintelligible or confusing in foreign countries and vice versa, and to complicate and hinder instead of simplifying and encouraging international intercourse. And it must be borne in mind that the constantly increasing use of the metric system, and the very general adoption which it seems destined to attain, is a strong argument in its favor. Originating in France less than a century ago, and but slowly overcoming the prejudices which arrayed themselves against it in its native land, it is already employed to some extent in almost every part of the civilized globe. It is in practically exclusive use in Austria, Belgium, Brazil, France, Germany, Holland, Italy, Portugal, Roumania, Spain, and Switzerland. Sweden adopted it in 1876, and has passed a compulsory law which is to take effect in 1889; and Norway is likely to soon follow the example of her neighbor. There are obligatory laws which, however, are only incompletely enforced in the Argentine Confederation, Ecuador, Mexico, and Uruguay. It is legal, though other measures are also in use in Chili, Costa Rica, Peru, the United States of Columbia, and Venezuela. Greece uses it with a modified nomenclature. An imperial commission in Russia has reported in its favor, and its use in the custom house was ordered in 1870. Our own government legalized it in 1866, and employs it in the mint; and the coast-survey, and even Great Britain, has condescended to adopt it in the construction of some state railway in India. When Mrs. Partington succeeds in mopping up the Atlantic Ocean, there may seem to be some prospect of our making headway against so cosmopolitan a movement with a mongrel system of our own. If the English-speaking nation wishes to extend its "language and institutions over the whole planet," as your contributor confidently predicts it will succeed in doing, prudence dictates that it should accept such suggestions from its neighbors as will assist in making its civilization acceptable to the rest of mankind.

"The greatest objection, however, which can be made to the decimal system, pure and simple, is its extreme poverty, so far as factors are concerned. It cannot divide by three without an irreducible fraction."

But how many of the ratios found in the old system are exactly divisible by three? Not one in the avoirdupois table—which is the only one Mr. Ferrette would retain in measures of weight—and only two in linear measures. The advocates of the old regime ought to be allowed to extract all the consolation possible from the fact, that "three feet make a yard" as a partial return for the penance they pay in submitting so contentedly to the absurdly inconvenient "five and a half yards make a rod." And it is a valuable commentary on the claims set up for the number twelve as a convenient ratio, that engineers almost universally abandon the duodecimal for the decimal division of the foot. Right here is to be found the most satisfactory answer to this general objection to the metric system. The judgment of the race is uniform in favor of the decimal ratio in abstract numbers, and almost as pronounced in behalf of its application to concrete numbers wherever this receives a fair trial. Bishop Ferrette says that this is due to the fact that men have ten fingers. If the theory is correct, the advantage of this ratio is not at all diminished; for the probability is quite small that the phalangeal extremities of the human body will ever vary from their present number.

It is urged, that the foot is a desirable unit of length, from its having a natural foundation in the human body. Shades of St. Crispin! What a god-send to cobblers, if this were only true! But the stern fact remains, that the average length of the human foot, according to Dr. Thomas Young, is only 9.768 inches; or, according to another series of experiments made by Dr. B. A. Gould, upon sixteen thousand American soldiers, only 10.038 inches. President Barnard pertinently remarks, that "this approaches much more nearly to a quarter of a metre than to a third of a yard!" As to the origin of the English linear foot, there seems to be no question that it is simply a third of a yard, (which has always been the English unit of length), and received a name which is misleading instead of helpful. The desirability of analogies between the denominations of length and the various parts of the human body is not to be ignored; but these can be found as accurately for the metric as for the old system. To quote again from President Barnard, who has published a very learned and exhaustive treatise on this subject, "the breadth of the palm is a decimeter; the breadth of the little finger at its extremity is a centimeter; a pace is practically nine-tenths of a metre;" and the distance from the tips of the fingers, when the arm is extended horizontally sideways, to the opposite breast, or the angle of the jaw or lobe of the ear on the opposite side of the head—measuring around in front of the face, across the lips—is a metre.

"In its decimal subdivision, the foot has again a most lucky relation to our ordinary standards of weights, one cubic decifoot of water weighing just one ounce, avoirdupois."

Our arithmetics ordinarily make this loose assertion, but as a matter of fact, according to the relation established under authority of law, between our denominations of weights and measures, a cubic foot of water, at maximum density, weighs only 998.0067 ounces. Here is seen an illustration of the difference between trusting to a Providence which is only personified "luck" and making an intelligent use of one's powers for the accomplishment of a desired result. In the metric system, the gramme is exactly the weight of a cubic centimeter of distilled water at its maximum density.

"Should I undertake to unfold all the wealth of possible applications contained in our American system of weights and measures, I should have to write a volume."

Very likely. Quite a respectably large volume is needed to give a mere statement of the various unsystematizable tables and scattering denominations which that "system" includes. But even your contributor would do away with our Troy and apothecaries' weights, as well as such useless duplicates as "gills, pints, quarts, gallons, pecks, hogheads, bushels, chaldrons, and pipes." And yet the apothecary's drams, if not his scruples, are quite as "indiscoverably identified with the habits, the history, the literature" of the English-speaking nation as are the denominations of the avoirdupois table, which is so very un-Anglo Saxon as to bear a French name. If we are to make such great changes as even Bishop Ferrette would indorse, why not go a step farther, and place ourselves abreast with the remainder of the civilized world?

HENRY DOTY MAXSON.
MILTON, Wis., March, 1878.

THE PRINCIPLE OF COMMUNISM—ITS UNIVERSALITY.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I had occasion in a late INDEX to controvert some mistaken views on Communism. Let me now add a few considerations, in an affirmative way, to quiet the nerves of fearful adversaries.

There were brave men before Agamemnon; and there were sociologists, and discoverers in human development before even Herbert Spencer, and especially before John Stuart Mill, who was in no sense a sociologist, but only a logician, metaphysician, and political economist. Their authority is good as far as it agrees with the facts, and no farther. "They didn't know everything down in Judea"; and there are some small scintillations of wisdom outside of England. There were Owen, St. Simon, Comte; and, head and shoulders over all, Charles Fourier. But I am not going to pit authority against authority. The facts that are thick as blackberries right before our eyes are good enough authorities, and sufficiently convincing proofs of all the positions I have taken upon the subjects of communism and socialism. The facts which I presented in my last article are conclusive as to social growth and its continued and farther-on tendency. "A. W. K." does well, and exhibits discretion in not attempting to controvert those facts.

Let me now give another series of facts as to the presence, the prevalence, and, I may almost say, the universality of communism right about us in our every-day life. Communism is one of the commonest things under the sun; and all opponents are themselves surrounded by it, and even practicing it and subsisting upon it to an unknown, unobserved, and (if they could know it, they might think even to an) alarming extent.

First, there is the common air of which all alike breathe; and the common waters of which all drink, and the common earth on which the whole race dwells. All Nature is common to all men and women alike.

Then the institutions which have grown up among men are all common to the individuals participating in them. The streets and highways are common to all travellers. What a state of things that would be where every man, journeying on business or pleasure, must hew out his own private path to church, or tavern, or market town, through fear of the communism which must inevitably pervade the frequented road! The very existence of railways depends upon the communism which universally prevails. Railway companies elaborate time-tables, and appoint the departure of trains for months and even years ahead, in the undoubting confidence that the people will come together from all quarters in common, at the appointed hours and places, and fill their cars; and not a train could or would run, if only one person could be carried in it. Not a ferryboat could cross those great rivers between New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City but for communism; and it is to communism that we owe the low price of one, two, and three cents for passage.

We drop our letters in the common boxes; and millions of them are dispatched in all directions thousands of miles distant for the trifling sum of three cents each. Nothing of the kind would be possible but for great numbers, and the principle of communism that pervades them all. The fewer the numbers, the less the communism, and the higher the price must be. My existence as a letter-writing animal makes your postage cheaper, and your existence lessens the cost of mine. When you take passage for Chicago, you cannot help cooperating with me and with all the rest of the passengers, in making it possible to carry us cheaper and cheaper as our numbers increase.

Then there are the common schools, where the children assemble in common rooms, under common teachers, using common books; and it would not be possible to have good schools for all the children without communism. There is also communism in every church whose congregation assembles in one building, under one preacher, with common Bible, prayer, and hymn-books; and the very Orthodox and official name of it is "communism." There too is the very air in the Church,—how very common that is! I have known a congregation to shut up all the windows and doors, and then sit there, and worship, and breathe that air over and over again, each brother breathing the air that a sister had breathed, each sister inhaling the air that had been in a brother's lungs; and every one of them practicing communism, in that common air, at a most deadly rate. I have known men to get into a bar-room, railway car, or ferry cabin, and, besides breathing each other's breaths, I have known them to smoke each other's smoke over and over again, thus adding nicotine to carbonic acid, and making a most nauseating amalgam of communism generally.

The great steamship lines could not exist one day but for the principle of communism; nor could our immense factories, nor extensive trading establishments. Not a ton of coal could be mined and sold for three, four, or five dollars per ton, if there were not millions of common consumers to buy it, and each purchaser makes it cheaper to all the rest. Not a newspaper on the globe could be published for any such paltry sum as two to ten cents per copy, but for the millions of readers and the communism that pervades them all. Gas and water could not be supplied to cities, but for the communism of millions of consumers.

The very ballot which executes the free man's will so like lightning falls, as the common snow-flake falls, into a common ballot box; and the $50,000 President, and the $8000 Cabinet Ministers, and several hundred $5000 Congressmen, thence resulting, could not be enjoyed by "we the people," if there were not millions of us to be governed, and to share the expense.

Then there are hotels—especially the large boarding and family hotels. A common kitchen, laundry, parlors, and dining-rooms are the indispensable requirements of every family hotel; and that so oft-asserted impossibility has become an every-day success, several families living amicably and agreeably under one roof. All that is needed to develop the modern family hotel into a full-blown community,—that bugbear of people who have what they are pleased to call opinions, but no knowledge of the subject—is to drop out the proprietor, and let the boarders own and run the concern themselves, through their own appointed agents, sharing the expense according to cost. A nursery, hospital, school, and trades and manufactures added, would still farther develop it into an industrial, self-sustaining community with all the modern improvements, and in the most perfect order. This development social evolution is slowly and surely accomplishing, urged on by the "servant-girl" difficulty, adulteration in supplies, high prices at retail, and all the thousand vexations that pursue and will never cease to harass the isolated family.

These are only a few of the many examples of the already wide-spread prevalence of communism. It is ever present in every enterprise. It is as inherent as form is to substance, and as inexpugnable as shadow from light. Its action is restless, too, whenever it appears, and beneficent also in all good enterprises, and can be bad only in bad causes. Monopolists can make use of the communism of millions of customers to fill their own pockets; but the antidote to monopoly is coöperation among the customers themselves, with unlimited away allowed to the principle of communism.

If the principle of communism, then, is so powerful and beneficent whenever it appears in society as it is, whence comes the scare, whence the starting eyeballs and dishevelled hair, whenever communism is mentioned in circles of fashion and to ears polite? Where is the danger attending one or two more applications of the principle of communism to this outgrowth, or that farther-on step, in social evolution? If the shriekers would descend a moment into their own meditative consciousness, if they have such a convenient outfit about them (or rather in-it within them), and would really consider the situation, they would soon see the groundlessness of their fears, and would give their free consent to let social progress go on and have its perfect work.

To the "A. W. K.'s" then, who clamor—"Show us a successful application of communism,"—I answer, as the well-informed captain of one vessel did to the thirty captain of another who had been drifting about in a fog, and hailed him for water: "Dip it up yourself; you are in the Amazon!"

THEOBALD C. LELAND.

NEW YORK, April 11, 1878.

THE "SOUTHERN QUESTION."

EDITOR INDEX:—

I have just read Morris Einstein's article in THE INDEX of March 28, entitled "The Southern Question"; and in the main I think it is a very timely communication. If we are to discuss political questions from a partisan stand-point, why not give both sides a hearing? Why not give us a leading article on the gross violation of the principles of right and justice which was committed when R. B. Hayes fraudulently took his seat in the Presidential chair, and thereby shook the confidence of mankind in republican institutions, as being the best means of securing justice and popular liberty? Why not give us an editorial on the evil which the loss of confidence and respect for the decision of the highest tribunal in the land (on account of their partisan and unjust decision of the Presidential question) has caused to our republican institutions? I would think that your acknowledged love of justice would prompt you to point out this terrible evil which the greatest fraud of the nineteenth century has inflicted on our country. My sense of justice would demand that you present both sides of this question, or that you ignore it altogether. As long as fraud sits enthroned in the Capitol, every true lover of justice and liberty must hang his head in shame and despair for the liberties of his country. Where is there one who, when the decision of the Supreme Court goes against him, will not fear at the Court, and point to the decision of the Electoral Count as a justification of his conduct? The judicial ermine is trailed in the dust of partisan politics; and as a consequence, all our interests suffer, through lack of confidence, from centre to circumference.

I have read Mr. Tomlinson's lecture in THE INDEX, and freely admit that it is a very able presentation of his side of the question, though it is one with which I do not agree; but I do not propose to discuss this or any other political, partisan question. The object of this article is simply to put myself on record with Mr. Einstein as opposed to the discussion of all partisan politics in THE INDEX; or, if we are to have such discussion, let both sides have a hearing. Let us not vote not to go behind the returns, if we are to consider the question at all.

H. NYE, M.D.

ENON VALLEY, Pa., April 5, 1878.

[If we had received a lecture on the other side written as ably and in as thoroughly courteous and unpartisan a temper as Mr. Tomlinson's, we should have printed it just as willingly; but none such was offered. That fact answers most of the "why not?" of our esteemed correspondent. As to the propriety or impropriety of publishing articles in THE INDEX on this, that, or the other topic, let us quote from our "Prospectus" of November 1, 1869: "The editor will speak for himself alone, and so will each contributor; neither will commit the other. The only tests in the acceptance of articles will be ability, fairness, courtesy, and pure moral tone: in the application of these tests, the editor will take all responsibility. No article will be rejected because of its opinions as such." We are not aware that we have ever in a single instance violated these principles. But we have been again and again blamed for not violating them! For instance, "R. C." contributed to THE INDEX during the year 1876 weekly notes on "Current Events" which offended many subscribers, and cost the Index Association their subscriptions, simply because they could not tolerate an honest difference of political opinion; and we received from a professed liberal on this account the most insolent and malicious letter we ever received from anybody. Now it is precisely the opposite opinions which offend another class of our subscribers, though we are glad to say that not one of them has stopped his paper, or written a less temperate protest than Mr. Einstein's or Dr. Nye's,—for which we proportionally respect them. But liberals themselves have generally only half-learned the lesson of liberty; and THE INDEX seems still solitary in the resolute inflexibility with which it adheres to the ideal of freedom presented in its "Prospectus." Rather than abandon or modify it in any degree, we would see every subscriber stop his paper, and would go cheerfully about other business. Our subscribers must get used to hearing their dearest convictions controverted, for we do not hesitate, and have never hesitated, to publish articles controverting the convictions which are dearest to us; we ask in this matter no more than we habitually concede. Let us all learn such reverence for truth that we may listen more attentively to those who oppose than to those who echo our own thoughts—for that is the way in which truth is won.—ED.]

"RELIGIOUS" vs. "SECTARIAN."

WASHINGTON, March 15, 1878.

DEAR SIR:—

It always strikes me when I read "liberal religious" papers that they make a mistake in applying the terms "religion" and "religious" to organizations that are purely sectarian or political. Thus in "the Demands of Liberalism":

Section 4, you have, "we demand that all religious services" in place of sectarian services.

Section 5, you have again "religious" in place of sectarian "festivals" etc.; and Section 9, "to Christianity or any other special religion" in place of special opinion.

Religion, it seems to me, is the culmination of all the highest moral sentiments in conjunction with intelligence, viz., justice, benevolence, veneration, hope, etc., with reason.

When, as in sectarian or political organizations for mere worldly power and advantages, as in all church or temple systems, veneration is active for the most part with the lower sentiments, viz., acquisition, competitiveness, excessive self-conceit, dogmatic assurance, etc. Such mere VENERATION for their own interested personal opinions cannot be called RELIGION, because it always dwarfs itself into the wrath and fierceness of persecution.

The religious man is an extremely rare creature. Man, as yet little more than a mere animal, venerates or adores only the objects of his own opinions and interests, and unblushingly "curses" modes of worship or thought different from his own. He has not religion enough to respect the diversity of opinions and forms which it has pleased the Creator to establish in every part of the world. Impelled by his avarice, his lazy pride, and his ambition, he curses the peaceful who live as God has placed them, and blesses the cut-throats whom he launches forth to destroy or subject others to his sway.

When a pious pope and his pious adherents curse in solemn conclave all others differing from their ignorance, they publicly proclaim their own irreligious character. Why then should they with their denunciation of religion be styled religious, a name that implies the highest moral sentiments?

When a man from the pulpit revels in depicting the "wrath of God" in the horrors of hell, and dilates with evident pleasure in the supposed sufferings of his fellow-creatures, why should such a man, manifesting himself through the lower faculties to be a demon, be called a minister of God, a pious man, a religious man?

It is time, I think, to separate the sheep from the goats. The goats have had a brutally good time long enough. Let them be classed with the criminals they belong to. Respectfully, JAS. M. McDONALD.

[The word "religious" was used in the Demands of Liberalism in its commonest, not in its truest or most philosophical sense; for otherwise the breadth of the Demands would not be understood. The defence set up for the various "services," etc., against which the protest lies is that they are not "sectarian," but are "religious." To ask only for the abolition of "sectarian" services, etc., would have the effect to leave things as they are—the fact being that all so-called "religious services," as usually conducted, are really "sectarian."—ED.]

"DID HE RISE?"

THE RESURRECTION OF JESUS. By W. S. Bell. New York: D. M. Bennett. 1878.

To the Christian believer there is something absurd in the attempt to invest this question with the significance of historic doubt, since it is answered dogmatically every Sunday in prayer, praise, and sermon, to make no mention of the week-day and evening efforts, when special anthems publish the glories of "a risen Saviour," making him "victorious over death and the grave."

But all these ministrations of the Church, Catholic and Protestant, have failed to convince W. S. Bell, of New Bedford. He appears to see in them the "substance of things hoped for" rather than the evidence of an historic fact. He meets the issue as a matter of experience, and goes back to interrogate the actors in the drama of New Testament times. His integrity as a thinker and his happiness as an individual require this re-examination before the answer of the ages can be either conclusive or final to him.

Mr. Bell is correspondingly pointed and direct in his issue. He comes before the public with the Text-book of Christendom as authority, and the principle—"Truth is a unit, and always consistent with itself"—for a guide. The issue centres on the assumption of "the resurrection of Jesus." The witnesses to be examined are the friends of the "risen Saviour"; the testimony to be analyzed is the language of the New Testament. The result is, that eighteen supposed-to-be-reliable persons are brought forward as evidence,

Mark furnishing three, Matthew two, Luke, three, John four, and Paul six (pp. 10, 11.). The conclusion reached is, that, "Upon this most momentous question every one of the Christian writers is at variance with every other" (p. 11).

This is the language of Amberly, and is credited to his Analysis of Religious Belief. But it foreshadows the more general conclusion of Mr. Bell; who says,—"We have pointed out the facts of the record, which show beyond question that the story of the resurrection is a myth, . . . and that all theology resting upon this myth must be false" (p. 49). But he does not part with his reader without assuring him that there is consolation for all the losses incidental to the progress of the intellect in the fact that truth remains; and that morality, virtue, and science continue to be beautiful and useful to the sons and daughters of men; in brief, that "the stores of the universe are inexhaustible"; and that all these are working together to enrich human affection and replenish the earth."

The detail of the points developed, and the argument by which Mr. Bell reaches his conclusions must be read in their logical connections. It would occupy too much space to attempt to re-produce them here. It is simple justice, however, to add, that the argument is prudently worded and convincingly stated; and (what is no less to the credit of the author and the merit of the essay) that the issue is seriously, consistently, and logically supported, without any attempt at cheap wit or flippant commonplace. He also shows he has kept good intellectual company, and quotes from Amberly, Renan, Leslie Stephens, Greg. Mansel, and Farrar in illustration and support of his conclusions. He reports his examinations briefly, but fairly; and parts company with the witnesses only when they fail to be evidence for "the Resurrection of Jesus."

The limitations of the work, as well as the exclusive character of the witnesses, confined the inquiry to the physical re-appearance of Jesus, as that is the test-fact in the resurrected man and "ascended Savior." Were it otherwise, the singularity of the phenomena would disappear; for Pagan spirits were believed to rise above death and the grave, and ascend into heaven. Here is an example. It reads so like a Christian story, that it might find place in an Orthodox tract without offence to the Young Men's Christian Association; nevertheless, it occurs in a letter written by Seneca to his friend Lucilius. Seneca says: "I write to you, Lucilius, from the Villa of Scipio Africanus, after rendering due homage to the manes and the tomb of that great man, wherein, I suspect, his ashes repose. I have no doubt of his soul being returned to heaven, from whence it came; and this opinion I hold, not because he commanded mighty armies, but because he possessed great moderation and great piety,—virtues which were more to be admired in him when he left his country than when he defended it." (Quoted by the Rev. Edward Berwick, in his Memoirs of the Life of the Elder Scipio Africanus; Appendix IV., p. 187. The italics are those of the present writer.)

Brief as this extract is, it contains most of the points supposed to be peculiar to the resurrection drama of the New Testament; and it is to be hoped that Mr. Bell, or some other thoughtful student of comparative religion, will add a well-written chapter or two in explanation of the resemblance; for though Mr. Bell commences his examination with Mark, and confines his examination to the physical transformations of Jesus, yet something remains to be said why the apocalyptic image of John became the "spiritual body" of Paul, and was materialized into the "flesh and blood" theory of the later writers of the New Testament. The more, as the present survey of Mr. Bell is so logically suggestive of the nothingness of "the resurrection of Jesus," that something seems due to the history of the myth; as otherwise, the conclusion will be alike unfriendly to the evolutionary philosophy of progress, and the implied wisdom of the self-improvement efforts of mankind.

J. H. W. TOOHEY.

AN EARNEST YOUNG LIBERAL.

MR. ABBOT:—

I am so much pleased with the following letter from an earnest young liberal, that I send it to you for insertion in THE INDEX. The times demand hundreds of such young men. Many older liberals can learn their duty from this letter:—

"ITHACA, N. Y., April 13, 1878.

"MR. H. L. GREEN:—

"Dear Sir,—I am a student of Cornell University, and feel a great interest in the spread of freethought. I am from St. Lawrence County, and have not heard of the appointment of a committee for the organization of Liberal Leagues in that county. Thinking I might possibly help you a little in the promotion of the cause, I have taken the liberty to write to you. There are several places in the county where Liberal Leagues might, I think, be organized. The places are Ogdensburg, a city of about twelve hundred inhabitants; Potsdam, of about five hundred inhabitants; and Gouverneur, Canton, and Norwood, large villages, but somewhat smaller than the first-named places. It would be well to have a member of the committee in each of the large towns, Ogdensburg, Potsdam, and Gouverneur. The other places could be easily visited from Potsdam.

"I am quite well acquainted with the liberal people of Potsdam. Among the more prominent liberals are Dr. L. E. Felton, S. E. Crane, W. H. Faulkner, Theo. H. Swift, C. E. Sanford, and George Swain. Mr. Crane is probably the most energetic worker for the liberal cause among those named. He is a Spiritualist, and has made himself somewhat odious to a certain class by his advocacy of liberal ideas. He is bold, yet careful. He is justice of the peace, and has considerable influence.

"Dr. Felton is an enthusiastic Rationalist, but has never been much engaged in reform movements. If he could be made to see the importance of the work, he would do well. The same may be said of Franklin, Swift, and Sanford, who are young lawyers. Mr. Crane would probably devote more time and energy to the work than any of the others; but the others, if interested in the work, would be more likely to secure the support and good-will of the leading business and professional men of the place.

"Although the people of Potsdam have many churches, and are quite a church-going people, I think, if rightly managed, a prosperous League might be supported. There are a good many people in the place who, as Ingersoll says, 'believe in God and pay their pew-rent.' I think by a careful organization these might be secured. I shall visit Potsdam during the summer vacation, and will do what I can to stir up an interest in the work. If I can assist you in any way in the future, I shall be glad to do so. If this letter will be of any service to you, I shall be satisfied; if not, I shall feel that I have but done my duty in trying to help you. With best wishes for the liberal cause, I remain your friend,

"FOREST P. RANDALL."

I am sure Mr. Randall can be of great help to the liberal cause. There is a Freethought and Liberal League Committee in St. Lawrence County; namely, Messrs. J. B. Armstrong and Joseph Studholm, of Ogdensburg, and Mr. S. E. Crane, the gentleman named in the above letter, of Potsdam. I hope our young friend's letter may stimulate them to renewed action.

H. L. GREEN.

A "SAINT" OF FREE RELIGION.

MR. EDITOR:—

It is generally supposed that "Free Religion" blunts the finer sensibilities of our nature, crushes all tenderness, and dries up the fountains of usefulness. Having met with many practical refutations of this, I will write of one. We have in this city an "infidel" so-called by his Orthodox friends; yet he is generous, upright, alive to the claims of society, and active in every beneficent scheme. He not only aids all who apply for assistance, but seeks opportunities for doing good. Compassion beams in his face, flows from his lips, and glows in all his actions. As his means increase, his influence widens, and his devotedness to deeds of mercy grows more intense. To do good is his aim and delight. He is sought for in all charitable purposes; and his name is sure to be found on the list of benefactors. At his own expense he has purchased and fitted up a building for the practice of the kindergarten system, and without the assistance of others meets all the bills; yet he is not a wealthy man, but is dependent upon his employment for subsistence. Such goodness ought to shame those who traduce "Free Religion," when it is thus shown to ennoble the character, lead to the practice of humanitarian principles, and adorn the life with a galaxy of bright deeds. This man is unobtrusive in his charities. He works in secret, not letting his left hand know what his right hand doeth; and, if others did not speak of his generous acts, they would remain secret. How like the representative man, who said "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Respectfully,

MEADVILLE, Pa., April 5, 1878.

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE ON CAPE COD.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

On Tuesday evening, April 2, I was permitted to meet with, and lecture to a goodly company of gentlemen in East Dennis, Mass., on the necessity of the Liberal League movement. The lecture was supplementary to what was said on the previous Sunday.

The result was, that the names of a dozen of the most active and responsible townsmen of Dennis and vicinity were put on record as members of a Local Auxiliary League. The length of the lecture made further organization inconvenient that evening; but additional members and more time will enable these interested to complete the good work thus begun.

These new Leaguers, be it remembered, are old workers for progress and the right, and are supporters of an association that meets every other Sunday afternoon and evening. Education rather than religion is the essence of the enterprise; nevertheless, they invite Theologians, Spiritualists, and Scientists to address them, their watchword and rallying cry being "Liberty and Union."

I hope much from this fresh expression of radical energy in the extreme east of the Cape, and doubt not it will prove itself equal to the issues of the National Liberal League and the Conscience Party.

Coöperatively yours, J. H. W. TOOHEY.

GERBET SMITH, according to Mr. Frothingham, was not so much a newspaper reader as a newspaper student. He was a man of vast and varied information, and his knowledge was always available for use. But his library of eighteen hundred volumes was a most miscellaneous, hodge-podge affair. The Greek and Latin classics were conspicuous by their absence. A single work of Darwin completed the scientific department. Somebody presented him with a copy of Campbell's British Poets, which he evidently had not read, and this exhausted the poetical department. It was a strangely unintellectual library for a man of remarkable intelligence to own, composed of reports, digests, and other things with which a merely literary man or scholar would not lumber up his shelves. But Mr. Smith read the newspapers regularly and diligently, and sucked out of them the nutriment his mind needed for its sustenance, and the material it required for use. The daily paper, the great circulating library of the people, was his educator and resource, and the arsenal from which he drew the facts he knew how to use with so much effect.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to the patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HERBERT S. STUBBS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish
THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Seneca Falls, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.25 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE
FREE
 RELIGIOUS
 ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Bowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keah-n Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
 A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Seneca Falls, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

GIRLS—5 nice perforated motives for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 sent free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address THOMAS & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $1 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TOWN & Co. Augusta, Maine.

$125 a month and expenses to Agents. Send stamp for terms. S. C. FOSTER & Co., Cincinnati, O.

ENTERPRISE.

Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON

is an enterprising, 8-page, Liberal, Family Paper, devoted to the affairs of this world, and published in the interest of the people now on earth.

Editorially, it labors to free mankind from the bondage of priestcraft, and all forms of superstition. It does not believe in churches or creeds. It has no reverence for bible or man-made gods, and opposes all attempts to impoverish this world by laying up treasures in another.

It has a variety of Departments, is chaste and pure in its tone, and in all respects aims to be a first-rate Liberal Paper.

PAYNE'S AGE OF REASON is published weekly, at One Dollar a year, or it will be mailed one, two, or three months on trial for ten cents per month. We pay the postage, and stop the paper at the expiration of the subscription. Address SIXTH WILSON PAYNE, 141 Eighth St., New York.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Bookkeepers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 25 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT- RONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The contents of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred B. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn, AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7, Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $4.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to anybody who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager. C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 208 and 206 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,

PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878. THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x3 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN, President of the Society, No. 141 5th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, R. H. RANNEY, F. R. ANBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Wales.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.00.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1878.

WHOLE No. 436.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 8, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

THE PAINE HALL Liberal League will hold their monthly meeting next Sunday evening. Good music will be had, and an address by the editor of this journal. All are invited.

THE ORTHODOX press complains that the Sabbath Bill was defeated in the Pennsylvania Legislature by a parliamentary trick. If this is true, a bad measure was defeated by means as bad, and "honors are easy."

A BILL has passed both houses of Congress to annul the act of the New Mexico Legislature of January 18, 1878, by which the Jesuits were incorporated as a society, and empowered to hold an unlimited amount of real estate exempt from taxation,—an act which was passed over the Governor's veto, as explained in THE INDEX of March 14.

SAYS THE BOSTON Post of April 22: "A petition was presented in the House yesterday, proposing to change the motto 'In God we trust' on the new silver dollar to 'In God's name we trust.' It was referred to Alexander Stephens' Coinage Committee." So there are some Christians who trust more in God's name than they do in God himself! The only thing worth noting in this petition is the tendency it illustrates to extend the encroachment on the secular principle already marked by that motto. Little by little will that spirit grow until it has become insufferable. What infatuation it is not to "resist the beginnings of evil!"

ANOTHER Liberal League has been organized in New York City, auxiliary to the National League. Mr. F. W. Christern was elected Treasurer pro tempore, but the election of other officers was postponed to a future meeting. Mrs. Clara Neymann, to whose unselfishness, energy, and earnestness the formation of this League is largely due, has a communication about it in another column. If the other liberals of New York will only show half as much devotion to freedom as this brave and gentle lady, they will soon make this League a power felt throughout the land.

THE INTELLECTUAL EVENT of last week in this city was Ralph Waldo Emerson's lecture at the Old South Church, on the evening of April 24. His subject had been announced as "The Superlative," and it was understood to be a new lecture. Although the Advertiser said next day that "there were no children there," one young boy was present to see and hear the man whose name means more than that of any other living writer of America; and, on being smilingly asked afterwards to tell what was the leading idea of the lecture, he gave as good an answer as could have been given by the oldest and closest listener: "It was to avoid exaggeration in speech and action." Mr. Emerson spoke with the same simplicity and dignity as of old, and gave the same impression of reserved power; we felt that the now aged seer had lost nothing of that which has made him great in the eyes of all who know in what true greatness consists. It does not speak well for Boston that the rant and cant of Joseph Cook should draw larger houses than the wisdom of New England's loftiest mind; but when was wisdom ever rated at its true worth by the populace? May Emerson long remain to delight his "fit audience, though few."

HOW MANY liberals keep a keen eye on such things as these? On Monday, April 22, in the United States Senate, Mr. Herford, from the Committee on Claims, reported favorably on the House bill for the "relief of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Charleston, West Virginia"; on motion of Mr. Bailey, it was "ordered that the Senate bill for the relief of book-agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church South be taken up as soon as the unobjected cases on the calendar were disposed of"; and "the President pro tempore presented the petition of George W. Partridge and two hundred and sixteen others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of Senate joint resolution No. 13, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States respecting an establishment of religion and the free exercise thereof; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary." This was undoubtedly the Edmunds Bible Amendment. Here is an ominous record for a single day of Congress, in a country where Church and State are supposed to be separate! The attention of liberals is drawn off to the more attractive spectacle of speculative contests, while their opponents, determined to rule in practical matters, are steadily and stealthily intrenching themselves in precedents, usages, and the laws.

IT IS NOT pleasant to see so many secular papers threatening the enforcement of the so-called "dead letter" laws against blasphemy—that invented sin which has no existence except in the artificial morality of clericalism. Says the Baltimore American of April 19: "This is not intended for an advertisement, but we merely ask for the sake of drawing out public opinion on the subject, how would it look to see Bob Ingersoll defending his own case in a criminal accusation under the laws of Maryland? Section 12 of Article 30 of the Code of Public General Laws enacts that, 'If any person, by writing or speaking, shall blaspheme or curse God, or shall write or utter any profane words of and concerning Our Savior, Jesus Christ, or of and concerning the Trinity, or any of the persons thereof, he shall on conviction be fined not more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned not more than six months, or both fined and imprisoned as aforesaid, in the discretion of the Court.' Now here is the statute, plain, straightforward, and emphatic, by means of which Maryland soil may be tabooed to the feet of the revolutionary lecturer, and an expedition across it on a Pullman car made a venture fraught with danger for him. We seriously suggest that Colonel Ingersoll should be obliged to deliver a free discourse in court on this subject as a diversion from his pleading at the bar of public opinion." Yet liberals see "no danger," and are mostly apathetic towards the attempt to abolish such dangerous laws as the above.

THERE IS at least one Christian minister in whose work every genuine liberal must take pure delight. This is the Reverend Willard Parsons, of Sherman, Pennsylvania,—and we call him "Reverend" with no touch of irony, for he is to be revered. Why? Because last year, moved only by his own tender sympathies, he devoted his time and energy during the summer to securing a season of rest, good food, fresh air, and kind hospitality for sickly and poor city children among his own people and neighborhood. It was a blessed work of mercy, love, and human kindness, and did incalculable good. Whoever would know all about it should send twenty-five cents to the American News Company, New York City, for the May number of Sunday Afternoon, or order it of his own newsdealer. In this magazine, Mrs. Eleanor I. Lovett, herself an invalid of many years whose warm heart goes out in pity and tenderness to the wretched so beautifully befriended, tells in a simple but touching manner the whole story of this noble beneficence. She says: "Sixty persons have been taken one hundred and eighty miles away from New York, and kept in mountain air two, three, four, five, and even eight weeks, at only the cost of one hundred and eighty-seven dollars and sixty-two cents. There were three adults, seventeen young people between the ages of twelve and twenty, and forty children under twelve." All this good work, as shown by Mr. Parsons' quoted letters and post-cards, was prompted and governed by simple humanity; there is no cant mixed up with it, so far as he is concerned. And that is why one should stand uncovered in the presence of the Reverend Willard Parsons.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
MR. O. S. FROTHINGHAM, New York.
MR. W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
MR. B. F. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUBERT, New York.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FRIEDMAN, Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZ, Editor of "Der Arbeiter," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MCGOWAN, Franklin, Pa.
MR. F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MR. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
MR. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
MR. ELIZABETH CUDY STANTON, Teneff, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Louisville, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN,
J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN,
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN A. HENRY, Monticello.
California.....J. L. HATON, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GOODING, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Indianapolis.
Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adet.
Kansas.....JOHN FARMWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. B. OLARK, Wilkesville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. E. BROWN, Bangor.
Massachusetts.....T. G. ROBBELL, New Market.
Michigan.....W. H. BAYWARD, Boston.
Minnesota.....KARL SCHNEIDER, Detroit.
Mississippi.....J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....J. E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Ohio.....SAMUEL OOLT, Hamboldt Basin.
Oregon.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lincolnville.
Pennsylvania.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
Rhode Island.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
South Carolina.....DR. E. H. PRICH, Chattanooga.
Tennessee.....DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Texas.....H. L. HASTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....L. SEALDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming.....D. P. WILCOX, Jackson.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
MR. SARAH B. OTIS, 127 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN F. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeld.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeld, Julius Plisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Bransch.
Issued to Anton Bransch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Fred. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Bransch.
CHESA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, E. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lockhead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Ellsbur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cossad, and others.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Pitts House.

Issued to C. M. Pitts House, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel E. P. W. Himes, John Ann, Philip Glass, A. E. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

STURGEON, KANSAS.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Sturgesville Liberal League.

ANDERSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.

Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. E. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunle.

Issued to E. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wlas; Secretary, H. Brunsing.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. E. L. Irving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.

Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.

Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JACKSONVILLE, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.

Issued to L. Garrison, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhult, A. C. Allen, C. E. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.

Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.

Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Lovell, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANTO, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.

Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.

Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscoope.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASE COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Case County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]

Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sentf, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sentf, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. E. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauer, T. C. Leland, J. Desaur, F. Desaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Fraustein, M. D., E. Lebeuf, and others.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious assembly or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

Free-thought.

THE FREE-THINKER OF YESTERDAY AND THE FREE-THINKER OF TO-DAY.

A DISCOURSE DELIVERED BEFORE THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF MINNEAPOLIS, JAN. 13, 1878.

BY REV. W. C. GANNETT.

A new type of man is wanted in religion,—a man wholly free in thought and honest in word, but wholly reverent in feeling and broad in sympathies. That is what might be called the "freethinker of to-day." He is coming. He is in making,—but making as they make costly furniture, in pieces. The freedom and honesty are being made in one shop, the breadth and reverence in another. It takes the second generation, and more than one generation, to make the several parts of a costly new man and get him finally put together. But Nature grants no patents and monopolies. She throws all improvements open to the trade. Each shop borrows hints from the neighbors' successes, and the average article produced grows finer. The Orthodox shop appropriates some of the heretic shop's freedom, and the heretic borrows some of the Orthodox shop's reverence. The Methodist shop offers feeling, and the Episcopal shop provides good taste. The Unitarian shop furnishes breadth and common-sense, and the Swedenborgian shop its sense of mystic and poetic meanings. The Calvinist contributes his sense of God as moral law, and the Universalist his sense of God as love; and the Radical his trust in reason, his hearty welcome to new thought, and his blunt honesty. And thus the type of the religious man improves as a hundred years go by.

When we say, therefore, that to-day a new kind of man is wanted in religion, it is not meant that freedom, honesty, reverence, and breadth do not now exist in even large measures and noble combinations, but this, that the day in which we live demands a measure and a combination of these qualities that has never yet been struck out as a type by any Church or sect or circle of religious thinkers.

THE ORTHODOXY OF YESTERDAY.

To-day and a hundred years ago,—these are the words to emphasize; for the day has greatly changed since the freethinker won his early reputation so deservedly as the Ishmaelite of Christendom. He had to win it. Not to be a martyr, he had to be Ishmaelite, his hand against every one, because every one's hand was against him. There were noble men and tender women not a few within the churches of a hundred years ago; and the freedom was already beginning in the persons of those who urged with strong and stronger urgency, "Let us shorten our creeds; the fundamentals in religious doctrine are few." But, looking at the general mind, it was a rough and hard and crude and literal age in matters of religion. The first protest of Protestantism was not yet quite finished. Protestantism, you know, was by no means a movement to freedom, only a movement towards it,—a first step. Each national Church into which Northern Europe split in the revolt from Rome, and each sect of non-conformists that splintered off inside the churches, national, would fain be a little Rome,—these child and grandchild churches inheriting the Mother Church's theory of a One True Rock, and setting up their baby-house Zions everywhere. The baby-house Zions were inevitable. Peoples trained for a thousand years to rest on such a rock could not think of safety off of rocks; and there they still sat, a hundred years ago, on Bible rocks instead of the Old Church rock,—on Bible rocks all fortified with creeds. This first attitude of Protestantism was not yet abandoned. To stand for reason in religion was dangerous, even if it left you Orthodox. To claim the right of boldly saying No to the dominant church creeds was self-banishment from good society; to claim the right of free inquiry into the Bible-statements, the right to sift and test and, if need be, reject its contents, was tantamount to irreligion. Only the reckless would adventure that.

In our own land, church-thought was, if anything, more rigid than in the older lands. In New England, hardly elsewhere, there were some "moderate Calvinists," as they were styled; and they were the frontiersmen of orthodoxy. To be an open "Armenian," i. e., to believe in man's free-will rather than in God's predestination as determining salvation, was to put both feet well across the line. To be a "Socialian,"

i. e., to think that Jesus Christ was not God absolute, but a man, exalted above archangels, however, by supernatural commission and endowments,—if you thought that, it was a secret you had better not whisper to your best friend. To be an "infidel," i. e., to doubt the fact of that commission, the reality of a miraculous Christian revelation, and own up to the doubt,—that was to be a man who was pointed out to children on the streets, and gibbeted in pulpit sermons.

Nor was it only that beliefs such as these words indicate prevailed: the temper of mind, also, that logically went with these beliefs prevailed; for the thought of mind is one thing, the temper of the mind is a somewhat different thing. You can believe a noble doctrine like a bigot, hard and coarse and literal; you can believe a narrow and fearful doctrine like a noble man. Two brother ministers met of a Monday morning. "What did you preach about yesterday, John?" "Hell; I preached on hell," was the answer. "But O John!" and the eyes filled, and the voice trembled, and the hand was laid on John's shoulder. "John, did you preach it tenderly?" A century ago, the thought was, for the most part, believed with the bigot's temper. Belief was exalted above life. Did you disbelieve the Church, the churchmen preached hell at you, and did not do it tenderly. It sent you there with short shrift, and with a good deal of open hallelujah, that he was not as this publican who didn't believe the Word of God.

Let me give a picture of two from American life a hundred years ago: Hosea Ballou was born in 1771 in a little New Hampshire town. He tells us: "When I was a youth, it was the sentiment of all Christian people, as far as I knew, that not more than one in a thousand of the human family would be saved from endless destruction."

When Dr. Channing was a little boy, his father took him in the chaise one Sunday to hear a famous preacher in the neighborhood. The lost world, the helplessness of man, the need of grace and prayer to escape the woe,—this made the theme. As the boy listened, his heart sunk within him; he wondered at the quiet people. In the church-porch, after meeting, as they passed out, greeting each other, and buzzed and praised the sermon, he heard his father say to a friend with satisfied decision, "Sound doctrine, that, sir?" Then it was all true, was it? The little fellow could not raise his head in the chaise on the way home to ask about the horror, when, in the silence, as they jogged on together, he heard his father—whistle, whistle! And when they reached home, he saw him take off his boots, draw an arm-chair to the fireside, and begin to read a newspaper. And so young Channing got his first lesson in Unitarianism. This was in cultured Newport life; and culture then, as now, liked a sound doctrine at church without too close an application at the home.

But in Philadelphia, about the same time, John Murray met a minister of the Seventh-Day Baptist persuasion. He told me, says Murray, that "he passed on foot nine miles upon the return of every Saturday to preach." I asked him how many his congregation contained. "About a hundred." "How many of this hundred do you suppose are elected to everlasting life?" "I cannot tell." "Do you believe fifty are elected?" "Oh, no; not twenty." "Ten, perhaps?" "There may be ten." "Do you think the non-elect can take any step to extricate themselves from the tremendous situation in which the decrees of heaven have placed them?" "Oh, no! they might as well attempt to pull the stars from the firmament of heaven." "And do you think your preaching can assist them?" "Certainly not; every sermon they hear will sink them deeper and deeper in damnation." "And so, then, you walk nine miles every Saturday to sink ninety persons out of a hundred deeper and deeper in never-ending misery?"

AS IS THE ORTHODOXY, SO IS THE HERESY: YESTERDAY'S FREE-THINKER.

Such was the established orthodoxy, and such its temper a hundred years ago. No wonder, then, that the freethinker of that time was crude and coarse and hard. As is the orthodoxy, so is the heresy. Greek met Greek. It was crudeness against crudeness, coarseness against coarseness, hardness against hardness. He was sentenced to perdition by a Bible-text literally interpreted. What wonder that he delighted in hunting through the Bible for contradictions and absurdities and immoralities—there were plenty of them,—and harling them as literally at the heads of priests and church members, and believing that thereby he had sent them to all the hells of common-sense?

What wonder to one who thinks how the Roman Church then had its mill-stone tied to the throat of France to choke all utterance; its hands upon her eyes to shut out light; its bandage on her ears to shut out truth,—what wonder that the watchword of Voltaire and his friends, in their long struggle with that Church, was "Ecrasez l'Infame!"—"crush out the wretch!" What wonder that Thomas Paine wrote his strong, rank sarcasm? People should remember why he wrote it. Here is Mr. Paine's creed: "I believe in one God and no more; and I hope for happiness beyond this life. . . . The world is my country; and to do good is my religion." And he wrote his famous book to overthrow Christianity, indeed, but to overthrow it in order to uphold religion; in order to get that creed of his believed by men who were throwing all religion to the wind; in order to stem French "atheism," by showing that there was a religion free from the absurdities of Christianity. Because the injustice of Christians has made Paine a scapegoat and an ogre, his followers have treated him as followers always treat a martyr. It is a blazing piece of folly to revere him as some still seem to revere him in 1877, as the last and best and allsufficing speaker in religion; but it is a burning shame, also, that his memory is not honored in our Independence Hall among the other fathers,—his bust not there because of the good work which he did for America in her darkest days. He did not add belief in the Philadelphia religion, and spoke out his disbelief in the same bold, terse, ringing way in which he waked the country to its courage by the pages of his Crisis.

We owe these men something besides scorn. Coarse and crude and hard and unpoetical they were; not the kind of men you care to meet. To them a spade was a spade, and a foolish story was a foolish story, and six days were six days. "A primrose by the river's brim, a yellow primrose was to him, and it was nothing more." A Bible verse to them was three lines of print, and it was nothing more. A dogma, hallowed through the centuries was a queer, perhaps a devilish dogma to them, and it was nothing more. They had one eye blind and one eye seeing. They saw nothing in the popular faith besides the blemishes; but their plain common-sense revolted angrily against the imposition on them of the Bible chapters as the truth of God; and that revolt was part of the revolt of reason in that age. They denied much then, when few denied it, that you and I, and many far more Orthodox than we, are now denying with equal sense of error and of moral shock. And to-day, we are denying it at ease, and even with honor, in part because they denied it then so boldly through difficulty and dishonor. We owe them thanks, and even a certain admiration, but not copying to-day. They were the freethinkers of a hundred years ago.

THE ORTHODOXY OF TO-DAY.

Why not copying to-day? Because between their time and ours the thought and the temper of the thought inside of churches and outside have so greatly changed; and the free-thinker, in order to be free-thinker, still must change in correspondence. We have glanced at the religious world of a century ago; let us glance in the same quick way at the religious world that lies around us to-day. I know right well that there is much to bear and much to sorrow over and laugh over in the rigidity around us still. I know that men and women like ourselves are hardly welcome to do even the good Samaritan's work by those afraid of our Samaritan name. I know about Prof. Swing in Chicago, and young McCune in Cincinnati, and how dangerous it is in almost all communions, even among the Universalists, and sometimes the Unitarians, to utter freely your farthest thought. I know all this, and know that there still is need of staunch bravery and of frank criticism, and strong appeal to our neighbors' better natures, and to their common-sense and sense of manliness and honor as against their creeds and their establishments. But I also know—and do not you?—that these hundred years, and specially the fifty years just gone, have made freethinking in religion almost respectable, and half-free thinking almost popular. Our Orthodox friend will claim to-day outright that it is "reason" brings him to his Bible faith; our cultured Catholic friend that none is so "free" as she in kneeling to a Pope infallible. Look at these three signs as signs of the Church tendencies to-day:—

1. The fact of approach, instead of farther separation, between those churches kindred in their faith and constitution: there is the Young Men's Christian Association, the laymen's church, whose wide walls hold in fellowship so many of the churches separated by the usual names. The several Presbyterian families are yearning towards each other in Pan-Presbyterian congresses. The Methodists north and the Methodists south are calling across to each other to be friends again. The Episcopalians are longing to clasp again the successful sister Methodism; and three Episcopal churches, English, Greek, and old Catholic, have met and tried, though tried in vain, to re-adjust the patchwork of the old historic creed, that all might lie down together under it. Even the Trinitarian and Unitarian Congregationalists have exchanged public courtesies; and half-a-dozen of the great church bodies long sundered have sent representatives to the general Evangelical Alliance.

2. There is a distinctly broad church party within more sects than one; a broad church party among the Presbyterians even, though a small one; among the Baptists, though again a small one; larger among the Episcopalians; larger yet among the Methodists; perhaps most marked among the Congregationalists, who in 1871 refused with a very striking refusal (since it closely followed the strained assent of only six years previous) to longer indorse their venerable creed as true except "for substance." Who are the most popular preachers of the day? There can be no doubt. Such men as Beecher, Murray, Swing, Phillips Brooks. Or again, which are the most popular religious papers? Those broadest in their sympathies, freest in their orthodoxy. Ask the young ministers who from time to time give up the Orthodox Congregational pulpit to enter the Unitarian about the men they have left behind them, and they will say, "I can name you ten, twenty, fifty ministers thinking just about my thoughts, but who believe they are staying at the post of duty in staying where they are inside the old Church and broadening it, rather than seeking a broad place for themselves outside.

3. Beside the presence of the broad church parties, think of the immensely changed tone of orthodoxy in its general utterance and emphasis; how much less literal it uniformly is in its insistence on the dogmas, the Christian evidences, the Bible's inspiration; how much less gloomy and savage and threatening in its appeal! Christ was judge a hundred years ago, now friend. Hell was many degrees hotter and many leagues bigger and its census roll far longer, and the smoke of its burning made lurid and shadowy much wider tracts of human life, and cracked in many more sermons and pamphlets a hundred years ago than now,—though craters still exist. Are you thinking of Moody and Sankey? They themselves are proof of what I mean. Once the revivalist's instrument was a whip, now it is a magnet. Once it was fear that was appealed to, now the love of Christ is urged—Christ's blood, instead of sinners in the hands of the angry God. And among the more thoughtful class of Orthodox, the centre of gravity is ever shifting, if I am not mistaken, from one of the two great Christian emphases to the other; from the doctrine of vicarious atonement to the doctrine of the incarnation; from the Cross to the mystic Emanuel, "God with us" in flesh; and thus Orthodox itself is harmonizing itself somewhat with the Pantheistic tendency of modern reverence.

Observe the growing reverence for man as a child of God; for this life and its opportunities of good and pleasure, and for this earth in and by itself, not merely as a portal to the heavens. More and more religion is being tested by life-tests rather than by mere belief-tests; and what kindly recognition is given to at least a great deal of our heretic goodness now! A poet like Whittier is the poet laureate of American religion by general assent. And the week-day press—a better gauge of religious tendencies than the religious papers—widely represents a demand for freedom and for fellowship in churches.

SCIENCE OF HISTORIC CRITICISM.

But for the signs of tendency that are most significant of all perhaps, we must look at the two great intellectual forces outside of the churches that are accomplishing so much of this change inside of them. Science has almost remodelled the universe before our minds during this last century, stretching it in time till the six thousand years of Bible record seem like an hour, stretching it in space till the little world of Bible thought seems like a hillside pasture, stretching it in mystery and beauty till every land seems Holy Land and every bush aflame with the touch of God. The comparative method in history has wrought almost as great and as ennobling a change in all our views of man and man's origin and life and destiny on earth. By its aid men have travelled far into other languages and other scriptures, and brought home facts about the other great religions and the beginnings of their own; and it has become impossible to avoid the thought, that miracles and revelations and God-descents in the Christian faith at home might be explained on the same principle by which we explain them in the heathen faith abroad—as the guess of the childlike human mind facing the mystery of things and bending low in awe. And as in science, so here again in history, not the great wonder and beauty have vanished in the little, but the little wonder and crude thought have given way to grandeur. Human nature and human history seem marvels to-day, such as they never seemed before.

Now these two forces of science and historic criticism have been playing for fifty years upon the old Church dogmas, as the forces of light and heat play upon the hard seeds in the earth—not destroying them, but softening them, and drawing out and up the hidden truths to flower. Only so destroying them. But indeed this is destruction. Each dogma is a seed, which dies that it may live. "This mortal puts on immortality, and this corruption puts on incorruption." So all around us in the churches we see the creeds bursting with germination, the hard shells dropping off, the nobler meanings coming forth. Imagine this process, already well begun, to go on for another fifty years; instead of the Bible chronology and its accompaniments, on which even our own generation was partly fed, imagine the new views of the universe and of man's history to get thorough possession of the school-books and be taught our little men and maidens from five years old and upward; imagine it working down through people's heads into what is so well called "common-sense."—Imagine this, and remember all those other signs of tendency already visible in the various orthodoxies around us, and let us answer. Need the Free-Thinker of to-day be what his brother was a hundred years ago,—coarse and hard and crude and violent? The religious world of a hundred years ago, and that that lies before our eyes, are widely different; the free-thinker then to be free-thinker still must greatly change in correspondence with this new environment.

As a result of this new science and new history, the whole idea of progress in religious thought has radically altered. The idea a hundred years ago was revolution; the idea to-day is evolution. The method a hundred years ago was combat; the method to-day is growth. The theory then was, that man had absolute truth or absolute error. Not to be with this Church was to be against this Church, tooth and nail. Not to be with that band of unbelievers was to be against those unbelievers with all kinds of social and pulpit maltreatments. The theory now is, that truth is yours in part and mine in part; that era is truth in the making; that absolute truth does not exist for the human mind; that all minds in their earnest seeking see visions, more or less complete, of that which the highest mind is seeing, and that to-morrow's vision for the highest will be better, truer, than to-day's.

THE FREE-THINKER OF TO-DAY.

To be to-day's free-thinker, then, I should suppose that a man must recognize these facts of change, and accommodate his spirit, his emphasis, his whole proceeding to them. There is need, great need, of the free-thinker still. There always will be. His title is one of the patents of nobility that will never be extinguished. He must still stand for reason in religion, for perfect rights of free inquiry there. This principle he must champion against all comers—freedom in faith-making is even more important than the faith; just as in politics freedom to make and better laws is more essential than any given good law, even though to that law we owe the day's peace and happiness. Dear as a certain great conviction is, dearer yet is the path by which we reach and may ennoble it. We believe in God; but we word a greater faith in saying we believe in freethought in religion; for this gives us not only what we now name God, but that right of search that will make "God" more and more to us forever.

Again, to be to-day's free-thinker he must still be honest, too, with perfect honesty—honest about his thought, honest about the very names for that thought. Is he "non-Christian," he will say so. Is he "materialist," he will say so. Is he "radical," he will say so. Even if to him those names are a matter of small moment, even if all thought seems trifling to him compared with larger moral emphases, yet since to others the names and trifling thoughts so largely count, he will be simply himself before all eyes—just what he is, and no one else,—his mind naked; his conscience on his breast as well as in it. Not for him that esoteric and exoteric way—the thinking one thing in the silence of his brain, the saying, hinting, half-divulging another thing upon the pulpit or by the death-bed. His simple self, not as opposed to other people's selves, but as the only thing there is for him to be. If he can be that in all consciousness, so far is he the true free-thinker of to-day.

Again, to be to-day's free-thinker, he must be free from what? From religion? Nay, from all that is not religion. But that is a theme too large to enter on: we pass it by. Free from what? From other folk's traditions? Yes, that was said; for that is reason in religion. But still more free from his own personal traditions. We mean from those biases of education, temperament, taste, circumstance, which more than all things else count to make a man narrow and hard in mind. There are two bigots—the Orthodox and the radical bigot; and they are twin illiberals. To be free in thought to-day, one must be large in heart. Sympathies with other minds are the doors to knowledge and understanding for one's own mind. To take another's thought at its best and not its worst; to see its inner meaning to the person who believes it; to estimate it largely by its moral stimulus as well as by its intellectual rightness; to distinguish between the substance and the symbol of a doctrine, its deep intent and aim and drift and the outside crudeness and error, perhaps the superstition of its formula; to reverence another's reverences even when they are not your own, because to him they are what yours are to you, holy and God-suggesting; to recognize the law of relativity in minds, and that some minds cannot take your symbol any more than you can theirs, for a thought which may be common to you both, and to be able to translate faith-symbols like two languages into one another; to be fully possessed of the idea of evolution and belief in all the bearings of that idea; to perceive that in Nature's method growth is four-fifths, crisis and cataclysm one-fifth, and to proportion one's own emphases accordingly; to have for one's order of emphases in religion: (1.) Life before thought, and (2) in thought the unities before the differences as both practically and scientifically of the larger import; to be not mainly negative but mainly affirmative in one's talk about religion, not mainly critical but mainly sympathetic; and to be always humble in talking about the mysteries of the eternal and the universal—these are the marks by which the free-thinker of to-day, the new type wanted in religion, will be known. The greatest freedom in religion is the greatest fellowship; the truest free-thinker is the truest Catholic; that will be his motto.—Minneapolis Tribune.

THE WRONG OF DEMONETIZATION.

BY GEN. A. J. WARNER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The remarks of the editor in THE INDEX of April 4 would seem, perhaps, to impose upon me the duty of sustaining the criticisms made by myself, or tacitly admit the position untenable. I like answers that are directed to the heart of questions, and will endeavor not to evade nor ignore the bearing of any fact.

But first permit me to correct a misapprehension of what I said by "F. S. C." I think those who have taken the trouble to read what I have written in relation to silver will see that I carefully included the condition of free coinage when I said that an ounce of silver coined could have no greater value than an ounce uncoined. With coinage free and unrestricted, this is very true; and no profit could accrue, under such conditions, to the bullion dealer, not shared generally by the public. I have, however, nowhere affirmed or admitted that an ounce of silver may not be made to have a greater value when coined than uncoined. Quite the reverse of this is true. It is certainly within the domain of legislation to give to an ounce, or to 412.5 grains of coined silver, many times the value of the same weight of silver uncoined; or many times the value of 25.8 grains of gold even. It is only necessary to sufficiently limit the coinage,—that is, the number of dollars coined,—and prevent counterfeiting, and make the silver so coined the only legal tender in payment of debts, and alone receivable for taxes and dues to the government, to almost indefinitely raise its value within the country so limiting it.

Suppose, for illustration, the coinage in the United States to be limited to one hundred millions of silver dollars (412.5 grains, or for that matter any less weight), and that no other money were coined or issued, and nothing else made legal-tender, or receivable for dues to the government, but such coined dollars, would not their value be greater than the same weight of silver bullion? Most certainly it would. It has been estimated that from seventy to eighty per cent. of the entire value of silver, and nearly as large a per cent. of the value of gold, is due exclusively to their use as money. On precisely the same principle, the entire value of an inconvertible paper money may be said to be due to its use as money, and by limiting the quantity of either metallic or paper money, and at the same time increasing its use, its value may be proportionally increased. It is on this principle alone that an inconvertible paper money has value at all; and if limited in volume to the quantity of metallic money a country would have if there were no other, it would possess the same value as certainly as that a vessel made of papier-maché, of a capacity of 231 cubic inches, would contain a gallon the same as if made of gold. Indeed, with both paper and gold now legal-tender money in this country, a greater value is given to coined silver than the same weight of silver bullion has, and this will last until coin enough is added to our present money volume to raise it to the level of the currency of the world, when this difference must disappear, and it would disappear at once with the restrictions on coinage removed.

The fact that silver bullion is at a discount as compared with paper is in itself ample proof—proof too of the most positive kind—that, as compared with bi-metallic money, our circulation at this time is deficient rather than redundant, and that if left to self-regulation,—that is, the restrictions on coinage removed,—the equilibrium would soon be restored by an inflow of silver. For further and better elucidation of this principle, allow me to refer my readers to the chapters of Ricardo on Currency and Banks, and on Seigniorage, the latter of which, together with his other chapters on the Report of the Bullion Committee in reply to Bosanquet, published in 1811, Mr. J. R. McCulloch says, "is one of the best essays that has appeared on any disputed question of political economy"; and of the same question, in another essay, "This is a principle of great importance; for it shows that intrinsic worth is not necessary to a currency, and that, provided the supply of paper notes declared to be legal-tender be sufficiently limited, their value may be maintained on a par with the value of gold, or raised to any higher level."

The proposition that "There is no necessary connection between the amount of such (bank) notes that can be issued and kept at par and the amount of gold and silver in the vaults of the bank or the world" cannot possibly be what "F. S. C." meant to say.

On the close relation between volume and value, or rather on the dependence of value upon quantity of money, as compared with use or employment, turns the whole question of the ethics and economy involved in silver demonetization, or remonetization. When gold and silver are declared to be money, or money metals, and there left, and no other currency is substituted for them, the quantity of money any country will possess will be determined solely by the laws governing the distribution of these metals over the world. The principles governing this distribution are given in almost all works on political economy, and need not be repeated here. Also, when a paper currency is made convertible into metallic money, the volume or quantity of the whole, coin and paper, any country can maintain in circulation is determined by the same laws. In 1861, this total volume consisted in round numbers of $487,000,000, including bank-notes, coin in circulation, coin in reserve, etc.

If for the increase of population, accumulated wealth, etc., and the increase of the precious metals for the world, we allow as an equivalent increase of currency fifty per cent., it would give us $730,000,000 as an equivalent currency for 1878. Taking this as our distributive share of the currency of the world, and if paper is made convertible, that quantity and no more will circulate in the United States. Any excess will flow to other countries by the exportation of the metallic part, as certainly as that a vessel already full will overflow if more be added.

But suppose metallic money be reduced from gold and silver to gold alone. Is it not as clearly apparent that our distributive share of metallic money would be lessened as it would be if half the waters of the ocean were annihilated or drawn to the moon that the various seas would contain proportionally less water than they do now? If $730,000,000 would be our distributive share of the world's money with both gold and silver, supplemented as it is by the inconvertible paper now in use, it could not be much, if any more than half that, or say $360,000,000, with gold alone as the currency of the world. And if made up of part coin and part convertible paper, that would be substantially the limit, too, of such a volume. Nothing is plainer, then, than that the value of gold itself depends largely on the coordinate use of silver as money.

Now for the application of these principles to the President's Message with "measure for measure."

Was our debt created on the basis of such a volume of money as would be our distributive share of metallic money with bi-metalism for the world, say $730,000,000, or on the basis of gold alone, with, say, but $360,000,000 as our distributive share? Or was it with any understanding or right to expect that metallic money should be reduced to one metal? If so, then there is an end to the argument; and I yield the point, notwithstanding the hard bargain driven on the part of the lender, that "we cheat our creditors" by remonetizing silver.

On the other hand, if debts were not created on that basis, nor with a stipulation that the money volume should be so reduced, but, on the contrary, on the larger basis of bi-metalism, and of the larger volume as our distributive share of metallic money, than by parity of reasoning it must be admitted, I think, that they who seek to secure the payment of loans made by one measure according to another, increased in value by a wholesale contraction of the money volume, stand wholly unjustified.

The whole question turns on this point: Does the demonetization of one metal increase the value of the other as a standard? If so, then gross injustice would most plainly be wrought by demonetization.

That demonetization of silver in Germany and other parts of Europe did, and that the general demonetization of silver if only extended to Europe and the United States, would, by increasing the use of gold (the quantity remaining substantially the same), necessarily enormously enhance its value is a principle so patent and so universally admitted that it were a waste of time to dwell on it.

There is not a money dealer in Lombard Street, or on the Bourse, or in the Marts of Germany, that does not know Ricardo by heart, and that did not know perfectly well what would be the effect of silver demonetization, with twenty or twenty-five thousand millions of public debts, more than half of which are held in the few States where the demonetization movement had its origin. The money interest is always beforehand with the great body of the people; and that such a movement as silver demonetization was an innocent, benevolent effort in the interest of an improved money system may do to tell to confiding innocents, but will not be accepted by the knowing.

The President in his veto message says: "It is well known that the market value of that number of grains [412.5] standard silver, during the past year, has been from ninety to ninety-two cents as compared with the standard gold dollar." Granted; but this is due quite as much to the increase in the value of gold caused by the demonetization of silver, as to the comparatively lessened value of silver, resulting from the same cause. Besides, silver has not declined in value as compared with commodities, but has risen not less than thirty per cent. That is, an ounce of silver will exchange now for at least thirty per cent. more of other property, on the average, than four years ago. Again, from the Message: "Thus the silver dollar authorized by this Bill is worth from eight to ten per cent. less than it purports to be worth." This is an error. It is exactly what it purports to be, a dollar consisting of 412½ grains of standard silver. It does not purport to have, nor did our government ever obligate itself or undertake, before a limitation was placed on coinage, to give to 412½ grains of silver the same purchasing power that 25.8 grains of standard gold might have.

The stipulation was always understood to be coin of 25.8 grains of gold or 412.5 grains of silver; the purchasing power of either no government undertakes to guarantee, any more than a man who borrows wheat and returns it guarantees that it shall sell for the same price when he returns it as when he borrowed it. The lender of anything always assumes that risk.

Quoting from the Message again: "$1,143,493,400 of the bonded debt now outstanding was issued prior to February, 1873, when the silver dollar was unknown in the circulation of this country." True; but nevertheless silver, in a lower ratio than with us, was money as well throughout nearly all Europe as over the rest of the world, and as much kept down the value of gold in the United States as though it had been actually in circulation here. In my former article, I think I made this point plain.

Again from the Message: "If it is now proposed, for the purpose of taking advantage of the depreciation of silver, in the payment of debts, to coin and make a legal-tender a silver dollar of less commercial value than a dollar, whether of gold or the paper which is now the lawful money of this country, such a measure, it will be hardly questioned, in the judgment of mankind, will be an act of bad faith." This may, perhaps, be best tested by a specific case for which dates and names can be furnished, and which is not at all an exceptional one. In 1864, a gentleman took from this part of Ohio to New York $10,000 in coin, gold and silver; I presume principally gold, as that was then the cheaper metal. This he sold for some over $27,000 currency; $27,000 of this he invested in six per cent. bonds at par, having enough left to pay the expenses of his trip. On this original investment he has received as interest, in gold, $810 semi-annually, or in all $21,870. If this interest, as paid, had been put out again at six per cent., and compounded, it would amount now to $35,844. But leaving out the question of reinvestment, in thirteen and a half years he has received twice the original sum invested, and that, too, in coin increased in value, if not each year, at least in the whole time by thirty or forty per cent., as compared with coin in 1864, or as compared with other property. This increase is due, in part at least, to the gradual withdrawal of paper, resulting in the increased use of metallic money.

Now, according to the President, it would be accepted as "bad faith" to this creditor not to demonetize silver and thereby double the value of gold, in which alone he would have all future interest, and finally, the principal sum paid! But it has been gravely said these men were impelled by patriotism to come forward and offer their money when the credit of the government was doubtful. Well, suppose that to be the case. Soldiers, or many of them, were compelled to serve in the front of battle,—to have their patriotism tested at the cannon's mouth—at $13 per month, payable according to the terms of enlistment, in coin. But they took, in full payment, $13 in paper, when that paper would not buy $5 in silver! It may rightly perhaps be claimed that this was a necessity; but if so, I insist that in the same connection life should not be counted less than meat, the body less than raiment. These men have, many of them, since labored and saved; and by investing savings, and using credit, have partially procured homes, houses, and farms. How many instances now can be pointed out all over this country, where homes so acquired and half or two-thirds paid for, have been lately swept away under the sheriff's hammer for the balance due? Why is it so? Why is property in every part of the country so depreciated and taken for debts, on the average, at half or one-third its former value? One answer only can be made, and that is, by changing the money volume its value has been changed, and a new standard set up, a different scale; an enlarged measure is applied to property, while debts remain the same. Obligations made by one scale are enforced according to another and greater. What justification has ethics to offer? If by a single inch the yard-measure should be increased by Acts of Congress, as it might be, the courts would compel adjustment of contracts according to the equities of the case; but when the value of money is increased one-third or one-half, by reducing the volume, there is, it seems, nowhere a remedy; and sadly it has to be admitted that thus far the highest word that ethics has to offer is "It would be bad faith to the creditor" not to give the flesh with the blood.

Again, the President says, "The standard of value should not be changed without the consent of both parties to the contract." This is plain justice; let it be kept.

Finally, there is one, and only one, claim in the President's Message that even apparently involves any equity on the other side, and that is respecting bonds sold or exchanged since 1874, or after the fraudulent demonetization of silver. On this point there can be no question, as I view it, that for the government making such a loan to change by legislation the value or the kind of money specifically stipulated or rightfully understood to be alone receivable in payment of such loans cannot stand justified. But there is, in the case of this part of the national debt, first, the legal question of the terms in which lawfully such loan could be made at all, and, second, the equities involved, if any conflict is found between the law and the equity.

No officer of the government—and no more the President or the Secretary than anybody else—can make or issue bonds binding the government or the people except as authorized by law. All investors in public funds well understand this. The Act authorizing the five, four-and-one-half, and four per cent. bonds left nothing in doubt, nothing to construction as to the payment of such bonds. They were to be payable, principal and interest, in "coin of the standard value of the United States," on said July 14, 1870, the date of the Act. This condition is set out in the face of the bonds. This is the stipulation on the part of the people, as to all these bonds. The Secretary had not the shadow of a right to promise anything different; and this all purchasers of bonds knew or ought to have known. That the Secretary did hold out other promises, or partial promises, there is too much reason to believe; and for it he deserves severest censure. But that, as the agent of the people who, through their representatives in Congress, stipulated on what conditions bonds might be issued and sold, the Secretary or the President had the least authority or right to change the terms of the stipulation cannot be for a moment sustained. In this connection, however, I must deny that there was ever any saving of interest by these transactions. There was no time when silver could not have been borrowed at as low a rate of interest as gold. Interest does not depend upon the kind of money. It is as low in francs as in dollars or pounds sterling; as low in paper to be repaid in paper as in coin to be repaid in coin; as low in silver to be repaid in silver as in gold to be repaid in gold.

But whatever may be rightfully claimed on this one point, as to the remainder of the public debt, and debts generally, there shines the broad equity clear as the sun, that the measure by which one lends should be the measure by which payment should be made and accepted.

And the economic fact stands irrefutable, that by the reduction of metallic money from both metals to one, with, at the same time, the great reduction in the volume of paper money, has produced a sweeping change in the value of money as compared with all things which go to pay debts, affecting beyond calculation all property rights and all money obligations.

Then it is irrefutably follows, as a matter of ethics, that to exact payment by a measure greater than was meted out or agreed is as unjustifiable as any other form of confiscation; hence, instead of being accepted as an act of "bad faith" not to further change the value of the measure by which payments are to be made, the Acts by which such injustice has already been, and still is being wrought, would be more fitly designated as Acts permitting the spoliation of one class for the benefit of another, and will be so known, and take their place in financial history along with kindred acts of unscrupulous monarchs like Heliogabalus and Philip the Arab.

The effect upon labor, on production, wealth, trade, and commerce, of depreciating money, to be carried on through a term of years, although vastly greater and working vastly greater injustice even than the effect on debts, is not treated here for want of space, and because it is not taken into consideration in the President's Message, but which, nevertheless, ought not to be left out of view in this connection.

The loss to the nation as the direct consequences of the depreciation of money,—a loss that falls, too, principally upon producing classes,—from the idleness of capital in the form of mills, factories, furnaces, tools, and machinery designed for reproduction, as well as of money, and the idleness of labor with it, can hardly have been less than a thousand millions a year since 1873; which is a sum equal to our net savings in the most active years of production. This means no aggregate net gain to the nation. If so, then the large gain to one class through the increased value of money and capital invested in public securities measures a corresponding absolute loss to another class.

A whole volume of political economy lies in this one fact, that when money is undergoing appreciation, it is made profitable to hold it in idleness for the growth given to it, and both hazardous and unprofitable to employ it, because all other property while money rises must decline. It is the buried talent that at such times gives increase. They reap who have not sown, and they gather most who have not sown. Any wonder, then, that a deep sense of wrong should pervade the public mind? But space forbids further expression on this point, which, although perhaps more an economic question, is not without its moral side also.

The fault in the East on these questions apparently arises, if one may be allowed to judge, from having submitted them to the arbitrament of conscience before they had been subjected to due examination at the bar of judgment.

MARIETTA, Ohio, April 12, 1878.

HENRY THOREAU.

His figure was familiar in the village. He was a man of the ordinary height, always very plainly dressed, but without any oddity of costume. His habitual gait was rapid; and whether or not his known fondness for Indians affected the observer, his movements seemed not unlike that of an Indian. His features were large, the nose very prominent, and his complexion fair. He was not shy, and was always ready to talk; but he was serious, although wholly without melancholy, and had no small talk or twaddle. The personal impression that he made was that of entire composure and self-possession, with a frosty, grave cheerfulness, earnest, without affectation of devotion,—a man with a serene, perpetual consciousness of the richness and beauty of life and Nature. He seemed to need no relaxation of mind or body; sat upright in his chair; and, although with entire appreciation of humor, he made no jokes. It was the impression of this inflexibility, a rigidity without intention, which was inevitably, but unconsciously, a rebuke of frivolity, this constant but natural tension at concert pitch which made Hawthorne half-impatiently call him "that cast-iron man." He was not indignant with conventional forms; he was merely unconscious of any force in them; yet he never offended good breeding. He evidently thought that civilization had so loaded life with artificial embarrassments that its freshness and vigor and enjoyment were lost; and the simplicity of the Indian and the easy satisfaction of his few wants seemed to him to offer to the educated man the opportunity of the real knowledge and pleasure that elaborate civilization made impracticable.

Yet there was not a touch of cynicism in his nature. He could not be disappointed or embittered. Swift would have been as strange to him as Rochester. The discomposure or the attempted discomposure of his life from the usages of society was instinctive. He made no fuss about it. He did not self-consciously and ostentatiously protest. To pay taxes was to support an unnecessary and cumbersome machinery, which, among other absurd and unjust things, undertook to return innocent persons to slavery. To get money to contribute to this unworthy purpose, time and labor must be spent that might be devoted to some useful end, to the acquisition of knowledge, to peaceful contemplation, and he therefore declined to do anything so ridiculous. The officers naturally enforced the law, and he went cheerfully to jail, and stayed there until a neighbor procured his release. If he had been asked how society could hold together if nobody should pay taxes, he would certainly have answered that he did not know; and still less did he know that it was desirable society should hold together for the purpose of doing injustice. But there would be no heat, no personal feeling of any kind, in the discussion, and he would unquestionably have mounted the scaffold with the same composure and good humor that he went to jail.

Thoreau's true life was in the observation and the suggestion of Nature, and of these his books are the record. His distinction among observers is that while he had the eye of the naturalist, he had the mind of the poet. He had a healthy and refreshing delight in every detail of the spectacle of Nature, and no less an exquisite perception of its infinite symbolism and correspondence. His eye and his mind are simultaneously busy. There is no such comprehensive observation as his recorded in literature, united with a style so racy, so inclusive, and so pictorial.—Editor's Easy Chair in Harper's.

ARE MEN restrained by what you call religion? I used to think they were not; now I admit they are. No man has ever been restrained from the commission of a real crime; but from an artificial one he has. There was a man committed murder. They got the evidence, but he confessed that he did it. "What did you do it for?" "Money." "Did you get any money?" "Yes." "How much?" "Fifteen cents." "What kind of a man was he?" "A laboring man I killed." "What did you do with the money?" "I bought liquor with it." "Did he have anything else?" "I think he had some meat and bread." "What did you do with that?" "I ate the bread and threw away the meat; it was Friday." So you see it will restrain in some things.—Ingersoll.

MAN IS GREATER than these phantoms. Humanity is grander than all the creeds, than all the books. Humanity is the great sea; and these creeds and books and religions are but the waves of a day. Humanity is the sky, and these religions and dogmas and theories are but the mists and clouds changing continually, destined finally to melt away.—Ingersoll.

Poetry.

THE IDOL. [FOR THE INDEX.]

Shrouded was my life in midnight,—
Shrouded in the pall of midnight,
With no star to light the gloom;
Longing was I for the gloam-light,
E'en the mist-like breaking morrowlight,
But to break the living tomb.

For my soul there was no idol;
And my soul, without its idol
That would blind it evermore,
Wandered powerless in the dreamlands,
Culled alone the buds in dreamlands,
Culled alone the flowers in dreamlands,
Waiting for its own adore.

Faith had told me she was coming,
That the night should find its gloaming,
In her smile should come the day;
But Faith fled before the midnight;
In her path had gone the sunlight:
Hope with her had fled away.

Then the midnight broke with morning;
When I thought there was no dawning
Came an angel mid a halo
Such as earth ne'er knew before.
From those eyes it was the heart's beam,
From those cheeks the heart's own gleam;
It was the idol of my dream,—
Swept the queen across the floor,
Drove the midnight from my door.

Daring earth she stood beside me;
And I know no night betides me;
Dare I with the idol soar:
For that halo crown was glowing—
Round that brow of love is glowing—
In love's light of evermore.

Spoke her beauty deeds and daring,—
Deeds of love that all are sharing;
That the world the brighter grow:
But the earth had bound her loving
More to make her beauty moving
Other hearts to strike the blow.

Yet beside me past the morning,—
Till the sunlight flowers were blooming,
Till the gloom of night was gone,—
There, as if it was her mission
But to give my soul fruition,
She seemed to live for me alone.

Then I found it was to save me,
That in mercy she had gave me
This bright dream for all my soul;
And her eyelid drooped in sadness,
That my life then knew love's madness,
And her heart had bound my soul.

There did claim my soul the idol,
There did bind my soul the idol,—
Sealed my life forevermore;
Just because there was no other,
Never yet could live another
Like the idol I adore.

For the angel 'neath that eyelid
All my heart and soul has guided
Where the midnight is no more;
And I'll keep her picture ever
In my soul this side the river,
And to light the other shore:

Keep in faith the soul that made it,
Keep in love the heart that made it,—
Made the beauty I adore:
For when faith in her is dying,
With the heart's ideal dying,
Never can the song-heart soar.

Earth had told me I was dreaming,
That the idol was but seeming;
But a dream it is no more,—
Like the prophets who lived dreaming,
With their visions only seeming;
And they live forevermore.

Tell me those who never loved her
That the trifter's heart has moved her,
Yet I'll drive the thought away;
For I know the earth-world bound her,—
Only that its chains had bound her,
Has the idol fled away.

For I named the idol Cora,
Just because her heart was Cora,
Lived in light of love alone;
And though Christ-life bind the idol,
Yet as Nature made the idol
Lives by me the heart that's flown,—

An ideal pure and holy,
Like a queen yet meek and lowly,
Stands beside me and says on,
On and upward in the battle;
Scorn the earthy in life's battle,
And the victory shall be won.

This for all the idol gave me,
The bard's own idol worship gave me,
And just knew my soul's her own;
And eternal worship living
In my life for all this giving;
There the idol reigns alone.

ROCK GALE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 27.

M. L. Hawley, $3.20; F. E. Abbot, $1.00; W. A. Clark, $3.20; A. D. Newcomb, $2; Allen Greeley, $3.20; J. O. King, $3.20; Frank Cheney, $3.20; A. B. Hartford, $1; George Iles, 25 cents; Dr. S. N. Whistler, $2; Mrs. Julia Webster, $2.50; H. O. Southworth, $6; Mrs. Lucy S. Richardson, $2; Mrs. John H. Sweet, $5; Wm. R. Agnew, 25 cents; H. Van Pelt, $1; Mrs. Sarah D. Hawes, $5; J. J. McIntosh, 10 cents; Hon. Thomas Davis, $5; John Hammond, $3.75; John Badcock, $3.52; Sarah E. Whitney, $5; Rev. J. W. Winkley, $3.20; T. B. Skinner, 10 cents; G. A. Stewart, 10 cents; A. J. Griffin, $4; Rev. George Batchelor, $3.20; A. J. Grover, $1; F. Plimpton, $6; Rev. J. C. Learned, $3.20; Jos. T. White, $3.20; Anonymous, "F." $10; T. B. Skinner, 10 cents; C. C. Biles, $3.20; H. E. Parsons, $3; Mrs. M. A. Stewart, $3.20; W. S. Cunningham, $6.40; C. K. Matthews, $3.20; Mrs. W. J. Rutch, $3.25; J. P. Bradley, $3.20; Hon. G. F. Talbot, $5.20; Horace Hunt, $3.20; Henry Whitmore, $3.20; Mrs. Lita B. Sayles, $3; E. M. Berry, $3.20; R. Wilkin, $6.40; Deacon Mundy, $6.40.

*In the sense of poet.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 2, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FENT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SURE, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LIBERAL LEAGUE.

ONE WAY TO DO IT.

Reader, do you desire to organize a Liberal League in your town? If so, this is a good way to do it: Draw up a paper in the following form, and present it to all the liberals in your vicinity:—

"We, the undersigned, are in favor of organizing a Local Liberal League in the town of _____, and agree to meet for that purpose at the house of _____ on Saturday evening next. We each agree to pay the sum set opposite our respective names towards the ten dollars required to procure a charter from the National Liberal League."

Names.	Residences.	Amount.
When you have procured ten names and ten dollars, you are ready for organization. Of course, the more names the better. I shall be pleased to furnish form of Constitution when required. Reader, will you attend to this work immediately, before it passes from your mind?

H. L. GREEN,
Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L.
SALAMANCA, N. Y., March 15, 1878.

THE NEW YORK Tribune, although sufficiently Orthodox in the main, have an evidently heterodox paragraphist on its editorial corps, to judge by the following item: "It is eighteen hundred and odd years since a Christian gentleman named Paul wrote to one Timothy, 'I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.' And now as many as twenty-nine women are advertised in the Chicago papers as conducting religious services and preaching on a single Sunday."

ON THE OCCASION of his recent visit to the West, Prof. Felix Adler was reported in the Milwaukee News as follows: "Mr. Adler called attention to the fact that Milwaukee papers had termed him a 'Jewish rabbi.' He desired the announcement to be made that he was not a Jewish rabbi, but a leader of ethical culture in New York. His society, he said, is entirely non-sectarian in character. Its chief aim is to apply the principles of the humanitarian religion to the practical problems of life. It seeks to supply a higher moral education to the young, free kindergartens to the children of the poor, and to assist the working-men of our great cities in achieving a more elevated and worthy position. This society, he said, stands out of Judaism and Christianity, but seeks and welcomes the coöperation of the best elements in both. It claims that the aim of all religion should be to deepen and broaden the moral life of the times."

HERE is Australia, indulging in the luxury of ridiculous proclamations of a supposed religious character:—

Proclamation by His Excellency Sir Hercules George Robert Robinson, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Colony of New South Wales and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

Whereas, It is deemed fitting that the inhabitants of New South Wales should testify their thankfulness to Almighty God for his great mercy in sending the welcome rain with which the colony has recently been blessed: Now, therefore, I, Sir Hercules George Robert Robinson, as such Governor as aforesaid, do, with the advice of the Executive Council, hereby appoint Friday, the first day of March proximo, to be observed as a special day of prayer and public thanksgiving throughout New South Wales; and I further invite the clergy and ministers of religion of all denominations, and all other of Her Majesty's subjects in the colony of New South Wales, to observe the day appointed as one of special thanksgiving to Almighty God for his great mercy in delivering the colony from the suffering and loss attending a long continued drought.

Given under my hand and seal, at Government House, Sydney, this twentieth day of February, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and in the forty-first year of her Majesty's reign. By command,
MICHAEL FITZPATRICK.

TEACHING MORALITY IN THE SCHOOLS.

Senator Burnside has brought forward in Congress the following bill—"To introduce Moral and Social Science into the Public Schools of the District of Columbia":—

Be it enacted, etc., That the school officers shall introduce as a part of the daily exercises of each school in their jurisdiction instruction in the elements of social and moral science, including industry, order, economy, punctuality, patience, self-denial, health, purity, temperance, cleanliness, honesty, truth, justice, politeness, peace, fidelity, philanthropy, patriotism, self-respect, hope, perseverance, cheerfulness, courage, self-reliance, gratitude, pity, mercy, kindness, conscience, reflection, and the will.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the teachers to give a short oral lesson every day upon one of the topics mentioned in section 1 of this act, and to require each pupil to furnish a thought, or other illustration of the same, upon the following morning.

SEC. 3. That emulation shall be cherished between the pupils in accumulating thoughts and facts, in regard to the noble traits possible, and in illustrating them by their daily conduct.

That morality is grounded in the nature of things rather than in any revealed or unrevealed "will,"—that it can be and ultimately will be unfolded into a science, coördinate in basis and method with all other sciences,—and that a simple, useful, and interesting manual of morals, wholly independent of what is called "religion," will one day be written, such as all good people will be glad to see taught in the public schools,—these are convictions which we have cherished for several years. But until morality has been thus reduced to a truly scientific form, dealing with the ethical relations of life and society as facts to be studied like all other facts, and presenting the rules of right conduct as resting for their authority on a profound comprehension of these facts, we look with misgiving on any such proposal as this most thoroughly well-intentioned one of Senator Burnside. The people at large are not by any means sufficiently enlightened to understand the scientific conception of morality, or to permit any attempt to teach it on scientific principles. Their minds are too deeply imbued with the superstitious notion that morality rests somehow on the Bible, and that it cannot be effectively taught except by teaching the Bible. Although Senator Burnside's bill, therefore, exhibits an admirable ideal in his own mind, shows that he himself is quite capable of treating morality as wholly distinct from theology in all its forms, and seems to have been drafted with a scrupulous regard for the requirements of the secular principle of government, we should be sorry to see it pass at present, simply because the people who must execute it will by no means rise to the level of his own high purpose. They will certainly pervert this bill to ends for which it is not designed, and take advantage of it to plunge the nation still deeper into the political recognition of Christianity.

The danger we have in mind is expressed in the Christian Statesman's comments on this very bill. This astute organ of the National Reform Association clearly sees its chance to turn the bill, if it becomes a law, to the advantage of the party seeking to Christianize the Constitution; and the majority of public functionaries will easily allow themselves to be made the instruments of carrying out this ulterior design. Read carefully the closing sentences of this passage from the Statesman, especially the last one, which we have italicized:—

"All these are important elements in any system of moral training; and if it were possible, through the schools, to train our future citizens to practise them, an inestimable blessing would be conferred on future generations. All sound philosophy of education, however, forbids us to expect that mere teaching about virtue has any powerful tendency to make men virtuous. We must supply motives of sufficient strength to overcome the temptations which are continually presented to the mind. The American people has been receiving a solemn and emphatic lesson in the futility of merely secular or material motives, if relied on as the mainstay of morality. One of the secular papers published on the last day of 1877 an awful catalogue of the defalcations which had occurred during the year. It showed that nearly a hundred millions of dollars had been stolen within a twelve month by men in offices of trust. It was not knowledge of the distinction between these virtues and their opposites which these men lacked, but motives strong enough to constrain them to obey a rule which they well enough understood. Such motives are supplied by religion. They can be drawn from no other source. If the secularists should succeed in driving the Bible from the place which it has held in the schools of the District of Columbia since their first establishment in 1805, they will do more than in any other way is possible to thwart the purpose of Senator Burnside's bill. If that bill had included provisions for the more careful and thorough instruction of the children in the Bible, it would more effectively have served its own purpose. Probably, if the bill prevails, the now famous example of the Trustees of Girard College will be followed. The will of Stephen Girard provided for instruction in the best system of morals; and the Trustees decided that that system was found in the Bible, which is accordingly carefully taught in the institution."

No—the public mind is not yet enlightened enough to grasp the conception of scientific morality; and, until it is, such a law as Senator Burnside proposes would be unscrupulously perverted by the clerical party to their own interests. For the present it is better to trust to that constant, though insensible, tuition in morals which children to-day receive in the public schools, wherever these are wisely managed. It is an impossibility for a faithful, conscientious teacher not to exert a healthy moral influence over the young minds committed to his or her charge. The discipline of life is teaching us all, every day of our existence, more and more about our true moral relations to each other; that is the mode in which children imbibe their earliest moral ideas, and a well-conducted school is, like a well-conducted home, necessarily a moral teacher of all the virtues enumerated by Senator Burnside. It does not take preaching or set lessons to educate children in their moral natures; they learn chiefly from the influence and example, often unconscious, of those who surround them. The public schools are a place for formal instruction in positive knowledge alone,—in those branches of knowledge which have been already reduced to scientific principles. Morality is at present conceived by the American people as merely an humble but useful adjunct of "Divine Revelation"; and just so long as this crude, grotesque, and ignorant notion rules their minds, it will be altogether expedient not to confide to ordinary Boards of Education or School Commissioners the very grave and delicate task of forming the moral ideals of the youth of the nation.

REMINISCENCES OF TRINITY CHURCH.

The following spicy letter from the Hon. Clinton Roosevelt, of New York, was received last Friday, and will interest our readers:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Your imp made a misprint, in the letter which I thank you for publishing in your INDEX of 25th inst., in omitting a not in the fourth line from the beginning of the second paragraph which should read as follows:—

"I declined to follow the tracks of all those preceding me in holding the church as the original corporation, and concluded to demand an answer by which the statute of limitations might not bar the action."

If not too much trouble, I would thank you to repeat the whole letter, if you have the space to spare. But allow me to refer once more to an allusion in your valuable paper to my humble name.

Your informant (who appeared to me to be a very fair and honorable man) will probably remember that I showed him the list of lots and property referred to by Gen. Dix, as being in the boundaries of the map obtained from one of the Bogardus heirs to whom reference has been made; but there appears to have been a misunderstanding after all. I have a copy of Mother Trinity's account to the Legislature which has been referred to by Gen. Dix, as one such as he may send to you. But I showed the list to your informant as containing all my information on this point. I did recollect, however, that the "King's Farm and Garden" and the Dominie Bogardus Bowery extended from the Battery up to Christopher Street; but how the line between Broadway and the rear line of these tracts turned and returned was beyond my recollection.

There is one little scrap of scandal which I have often heard repeated in connection with the line along Christopher Street upon the north. The present writer's father gave that street to the city; for what purpose, do you fancy? It was to hold out at arm's end old Mother Trinity. For a certain rector—whose name I would mention, were it not that it might wound the feelings of some inoffensive citizens descended from him, or related otherwise—used to go at night with his wardens and vestrymen, in cartmen's frocks and blackened faces, and tear down their neighbors' landmarks, to get in possession; and the writer's father, one of the old merchants of this city, had too much upon his hands with his business to stop to fight for his possessions. He recollected the old proverb, "When you sup with one who hides his cloven foot, use a long spoon." He desired to keep good old Mother Trinity at arm's end.

But I have never had a quarrel with the old lady. However, in former times, at least, Church Street contained more houses of ill-fame than perhaps any other in the city; and it may be that it was the recollection of this fact that gave the impression to your informant that the moral status of the good old mother was as low as ever. I believe, however, it has been improved ever since the actions begun by the undersigned's advice were first commenced.

In that case it would seem ungrateful on the part of Trinity to find fault with her tutors. But a great-uncle of the present scribe, John Roosevelt, in 1714, made the first assault as leader of the vestrymen and wardens, who had a very poor opinion of the first Rector Vesey, who had gone to England to obtain from the Lord Bishop of London certain favors for the church by way of easing up demands of rent for the "Queen's Farm and Garden"; an action having been commenced by the attorney, Gen. Mopperson. It seems the rector had absented himself without leave of absence, and the city fathers elected as wardens and vestrymen would not pay the stipend they allowed him from the city treasury, unless he informed them what he had been after. And even when he had obtained an order to pay over, the wardens refused to pay his salary until they should first learn whether he had acted fairly in his application to the Lord Bishop of London.

But as to the title to the property thereby obtained, let the curious consult the representations of Col. Morris and Col. Hethcote, who were the agents of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, and members of the church. Their hostility to the Rector Vesey was more bitter than any more modern iconoclast has yet exhibited; for he had been brought up at the feet of a noted Presbyterian of New England, and the old cavaliers detested him most heartily. But I must stop with these reminiscences, or some will fancy I have been "refreshed," or yet indulge a bitter grudge for the assaults I have endured thus far without redress. Indeed, for some time past, I have stood between three cross-fires, if not four. But, you know, "The keen vibrations of bright truth are hell."

Respectfully, CLINTON ROOSEVELT.

HISTORY OF COMMUNISM.

The theory and principles of Communism have been discussed from time immemorial. They are to be traced in the ancient Institutes of Menu. They were recognized in the laws of Sparta, of Crete, and of Carthage. Jesus of Nazareth distinctly inculcated their maxims; and the Christian communities of the first two centuries of our era are among the most admirable essays of this nature of which history has any record.

The society of the Essenes—of which, according to his own statement, the Hebrew historian Josephus was a member, in his earlier life—are reported to have held their property in common, to have renounced marriage, to have lived an austere life, to have taught the essential equality of all men, to have contemned logic, metaphysics, and physical science as useless, to have inculcated abstinence and labor as the chief duty of man, and, in a word, to have anticipated most of the speculations and practical precepts of our modern communists. Philo, who lived about the time they appear to have attained their highest point of development, has left us the fullest account of their peculiar doctrines. Their number at the time of the commencement of the Christian era is estimated at about four thousand. They sought a retreat from the corruptions and conflicts of their age, and found it in the lonely deserts on the western border of the Dead Sea. They wore a white robe, prayed and meditated continually, made frequent abstinences, and practised medicine. It is more than probable that, in the long interval in the life of Jesus, of which no authentic record exists, he had come in contact with the Essenes, and derived no inconsiderable portion of his doctrines from them. Plato and Aristotle, Strabo and Plutarch, among the ancients, make allusions to the communistic creeds of their days. Toward the close of the middle ages, Plato's ideal "Republic" was imitated by an Italian monk, Tommaso Campanella, who deserves to rank with Fourier or Jean Jacques Rousseau, for the genius and energy which he brought to the advocacy of socialism. Campanella conceived the project of an universal, spiritual, and temporal monarchy, founded upon the principles of the earlier Christians, and designed to restore perfect unity to both Church and State. His was one of the foremost minds of his generation; and his eminent learning procured him the honor of banishment from his country, on a charge of sorcery. His scheme was given to the world under the title of Civitas Solis, seu Idea Reipub- licæ Philosophicæ. He was accused of entering into negotiations with the Turks, to obtain their assistance in procuring secure possession of Calabria, in order that he might be able to reduce his system to practice. He passed twenty-seven years of his life within prison walls, but was released in 1626, and became a protégé of the great Cardinal Richelieu; dying in Paris at the age of 71. Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor of England under Henry the Eighth, composed his Utopia in the preceding century. The "New Atlantis" of Bacon, the Oceana of Harrington, the Free Commonwealths of Milton, the Menduc Alter of Hall, Defoe's "Essay on Projects," the Bastille of Morelly, and the Salente of Fénelon, are all to be included among the speculative publications upon this subject. Auguste Comte affirms that the French Encyclopædists were anticipated by the English philosopher Hobbes in their socialistic views and publications. Guizot, in his Democracy in France, thus speaks of communism: "The ideas of the social republic are not new. The world has known them ever since it existed. Its views have risen up in the midst of all the great moral and social crises, in the east as in the west, in antiquity as in modern times. The second and third centuries in Africa, and especially in Egypt, during the labors attending the propagation of Christianity; the middle ages in their disorderly and tempestuous fermentation; the sixteenth century in Germany during the course of the religious reform; the seventeenth in England, in the midst of the political revolution—have had their socialists and their communists, thinking, speaking, and agitating like those of our own day."

The leaders of the first French Revolution avowed the doctrines of this school, and partially carried them into effect. In the Jacobin club, in 1792, Danton, Robespierre, and Billand-Varenne proclaimed that the governing power rested with the sovereign citizens alone, and that to them should be given the property of the rich. Marat preached an entire subversion of society. Mallet Dupin says, "This social contract, which breaks up societies, was the Koran of the elaborate speech-makers of 1789, of the Jacobins of 1790, of the republicans of 1791, and of the most atrocious rascals." After the 10th of August, 1792, socialistic principles were still more generally proclaimed. "The rich," exclaimed Marat, "have so long sucked the marrow of the people that they are now suffering retribution." The cry of the working-men was to raise the condition of the poor, by relieving the rich of their superfluities. "Everything belongs to the people, and nothing to the individual," said Isoré, one of the commissioners of the convention, at Lille.

In 1793, the convention decreed, on the motion of Barère, the right of every man to employment, graduated taxation upon the rich, and the division of the municipal lands of Paris among the poor. And much of the legislation of this period was leavened by the same principles. Later writers continued to maintain the like doctrines, which became more and more popular with the ouvriers. Disputes with their employers had embittered their feelings; and while, in the Revolution of 1793, the nobles and the clergy had been the objects of communistic fury, in the later Revolutions of 1830 and 1848 the bourgeoisie had taken the place of the aristocrats, and capitalists were regarded as the greatest of tyrants. In 1843, the principles of socialism were partially carried into practice; and since that time they have been widely extended throughout Europe and America by the International Society, and by various and influential French and German writers. Among the former we may mention as most prominent Proudhon, Blanqui, Louis Blanc, Pierre Leroux and Reybaud; while the latter are principally led by Karl Marx and Dr. Jacobi. Plato had been the first writer to regularly systematize the communistic idea which he propounded in his celebrated Republic. Diogenes of Sinope succeeded to Plato in its formal promulgation; Sir Thomas More and Campanella proposed the same labor to themselves in their respective works; and, finally, Fourier and Rousseau did their best to popularize communism; the genius of the latter, undoubtedly, having done more to render socialism attractive to the educated classes than all the efforts of other modern writers combined.

After the Essenes and the early Christians, the Anabaptists were the first to attempt to reduce the creed of the communists to actual practice. In France, Babouf, Mably, and Morelly labored to perfect a practical scheme of social life; and Fourier improved upon their efforts. Except, however, that they have been known to exist in the shape of primitive customs among certain barbarous and semi-civilized races (as originally all the cultivated lands were held by tribes in common, instead of belonging to the individual members), the fundamental ideas of communism—that is to say, the denial of the right of individuals to create large personal fortunes, and transmit them through their own descendants, by virtue of recognized public laws asserting the right of children to the inheritance of the property accumulated by their progenitors—have never been accepted by any considerable number of intelligent human beings; and socialism in modern times had never been able to obtain actual ascendancy in any considerable community up to the year 1871; but the exposition of the intolerant motives animating the hearts of its prominent expounders in that memorable year deserves an article by itself.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY.

JOHNSON'S CYCLOPEDIA.

The need of a good Cyclopædia, giving accurate and full information on miscellaneous subjects in a condensed shape, is felt by everybody, especially by those whose time is too precious to be wasted in wading through verbose volumes or in hunting up rare ones. Of course there is no substitute for a large and well-selected library, either public or private; there is no "royal road to learning," and he who would master any subject thoroughly must take the time to do it. But no man can master all the subjects of which, nevertheless, it is very useful to know something; and the works which help him to this knowledge are the best luxuries of civilization. The true place for "comfort" is a well-furnished home in which have been accumulated all the articles suggested by individual convenience or taste; yet on a journey one experiences the necessity of a trunk or valise in which the most important of these articles can be transported from place to place. So a great library is the scholar's favorite haunt, since there alone he can find full provision for his mental wants; yet in this hurried journey of life many a man with intellectual tastes finds himself so busy and scant of leisure that he can afford to spend few hours in great libraries, and is very glad to enjoy in his pilgrimage the comforts of that valise of the mind—a Cyclopædia.

Several years ago we purchased the Encyclopædia Britannica, and (to confess the truth) have regretted the purchase ever since. It has proved far less serviceable than we expected, and has seldom furnished the special information for which we consulted it. Of course it contains very much that is valuable; but, as a matter of fact, we have searched its pages again and again without finding what we wanted. Its twenty-one large volumes and elaborate Index are cumbersome to shelve and to handle, and supply only a small part of the knowledge which an educated American desires especially to have within reach. Hence we have learned from experience to desire possession of a thoroughly accurate and trustworthy Cyclopædia which shall be specially prepared with reference to the wants of American readers. The Appletons have published one which has undoubted merits, but also grave faults; and the field has been open for a far better one.

Having recently received two volumes of Johnson's New Universal Cyclopædia for notice, we believe that the want above alluded to is better supplied than by any other which we have ever examined. It originated in the persistent suggestion of the late Horace Greeley, who wrote several of the articles himself, and who well described the Cyclopædia adapted for general and practical usefulness, when he said that it should consist of "not more than four volumes—three would be better; and this book should have every general article abridged as much as possible, or, as they say in Vermont, 'botted down.'" And again: "I don't care upon whose shoulders Humboldt's cloak may have fallen, or if he had one, even; but I simply want to know when and where he was born, what he did, and when he died. The rest would be good for nothing except to lumber up the book. The lives and labors of men are the best kind of history, and the history that is needed; but lengthy dissertations upon them in a book of reference would be misplaced." In all this Mr. Greeley did but speak with great good sense. Condensed information, facts and figures and dates, are what one seeks from a reference book. If he wants more than this, he will of course consult special treatises on the subject that interests him; but it is extremely useful to have always at hand a closely-packed manual of this "botted down" knowledge. In this great and surpassing virtue of condensation, Johnson's Cyclopædia certainly excels its only American rival; it is complete

In four volumes, while Appletons' has sixteen; and, although it contains nearly as many words, it is claimed to treat twenty thousand subjects more than the latter,—a fact which is sufficient evidence of the great degree of brevity which has been attained in treating them.

Particularly with respect to the geography, statistics, and biography of our own country, Johnson's book is rich and full. In these, as in all other articles, a novel plan has been adopted which is calculated to ensure the greatest possible accuracy. Instead of making the editors responsible for all the work of their collaborators, the writers of all important articles sign their own names to their own work; and, being thus obliged to bear personally the discredit of any blunders they may have committed, they have had every conceivable motive to avoid them. Moreover, the general system has been to engage for each leading topic the writer who has already made himself a special authority in that department; and the errors into which even the best compilers so frequently fall are thereby avoided. We cannot speak too highly of this great feature of Johnson's Cyclopædia. It at once creates confidence in the reader's mind in the accuracy of the information imparted, when he sees at the end of the article the name of some distinguished expert in that subject, and is not obliged to make allowance for the carelessness of irresponsible penny-a-liners dealing with the matter at second-hand.

It is true that the persons selected have sometimes owed the invitation to mere official position rather than to any intellectual ability; an instance of which, in the first volume, is found in the two-page article on "The Evidences of Christianity." The writer of this article, which is a disgrace to the work, is Charles W. Shields, "Professor of History in the College of New Jersey"; and we never perused an article manifesting such mental imbecility from the pen of any man who could write "Professor" before his name. The first sentence is a perfectly fair sample of the whole: "The Evidences of Christianity, by the very fact of their existence, afford a strong presumption in its favor"!!! Yes—exactly as the evidences of astrology, or witchcraft, or any other absurdity, "afford a strong presumption in its favor." It would be cruelty to quote more of such a travesty on thought. Fortunately for the public, the class of subjects requiring from the nature of the case more or less intellectual incapacity to treat them with the necessary subservience to popular prejudice is a small one; we have seen nothing else so pitifully feeble-minded as the article of this "Professor."

Readers of THE INDEX will not be indisposed to think well of this excellent and faithfully elaborated Cyclopædia by the fact that Mr. Frothingham was one of the Associate Editors, and, in the division of labor rendered possible by the large number of editors, took charge of the department of "The Fine Arts, Liberal Christianity, Biographies," etc. They will also not unnaturally place much confidence in the testimony of Mr. Samuel Johnson, the scholarly and learned author of Oriental Religions, who wrote to one of the publishers: "On close examination, I am confirmed in the very high opinion I expressed to you last evening of the value of Johnson's New Cyclopædia, as a library of Scientific and Practical Reference, brought down to latest dates. Some other departments, such as Religious Beliefs and general New Testament Literature, are not so satisfactory, either as to thoroughness or freedom from bias. In most respects, however, the book seems to me to be of great and permanent value, and fills a place hitherto vacant in private libraries."

JONATHAN EDWARDS wrote: "The world will probably be converted into a great lake, or liquid globe of fire,—a vast ocean of fire in which the wicked shall be overwhelmed; which will always be in tempest, in which they shall be tossed to and fro, having no rest day or night, vast waves or billows of fire continually rolling over their heads, of which they shall forever be full of a quick sense within and without; their heads, their eyes, their tongues, their feet, their loins, and their vitals shall forever be full of a glowing, melting fire, fierce enough to melt the very rocks and elements; and also they shall eternally be full of the most quick and lively sense to feel the torments; not for one minute, nor for one day, nor for one age, nor for two ages, nor for a hundred ages, nor for ten thousands of millions of ages, one after another, but for ever and ever without any end at all, and never, never be delivered."

THE REPUBLICAN papers in France are roaring over the atrocities committed in schools in the line of punishment of children by Catholic "brethren" and "sisters" who serve as instructors. Several cases of cruelty of the worst kind have been clearly proven.—Journal.

Communications.

OBITUARY.

Another of the true friends of THE INDEX and its cause has entered the concealing cloud. Mr. Lucius Everett, a well-known carriage manufacturer of Dover, N. H., died April 14, at 2 o'clock A.M., of pneumonia, at the age of seventy-five years. Before 1868, I think he was a devoted Unitarian; but at that time he threw off the last link of the ecclesiastical chain in obedience to his ripper reason, which he perfectly retained to the last. He did not expect any reward or glorification for the duties which he had performed as well and faithfully as he could; the only wish he expressed was for rest. The calm and smiling expression of his countenance, when I looked at his remains, impressed me with the thought that, if it is "the everlasting dreamless sleep," his last moment must have been pleasant. If conscious still, he must be happy. Farewell, dear brother, until we either share your dreamless slumber or meet again in a better land. This is the hope and wish of a brother in humanity. C. H. H.

DOVER, N. H., April 25, 1878.

[We too must bear our testimony to the worth of a noble man, and bid a sorrowing farewell to a true and faithful friend. Mr. Everett was single-eyed and sincere in his search for truth, uncalculating in his obedience to it when found, incorruptible and honorable in all the means by which he sought to advance it. Exceedingly fond of reading and reflection, he had a remarkably clear intelligence, and loved great principles because he fully understood them. None of his many admirable traits impressed us more constantly, when in his genial presence, than his guilelessness; he was as simple and sincere as a little child. Remembering the brave fidelity he showed to the cause of religious freedom in 1868, at a time when there were strong temptations to betray it, we shall always venerate his memory as that of one who equally loved uprightness of thought and uprightness of action, and who equally practised both. Of his kindly and affectionate nature little can be here said, but it bound to him all who knew him well with "hooks of steel"; and we say good-by to this good man with a sorrow as deep as our respect.—ED.]

COMMUNISM vs. THE COMMUNE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your editorial contributor, Mr. Kelsey, began, or rather, I think, intervened in a controversy in THE INDEX about communism, in the well-understood sense of that word,—that is, socialistic communism. I have, by your courtesy, followed him in defence and explanation of that meaning of communism, and have called him to account, and showed him his error when he confounded communism with the commune. Mr. Kelsey's article in THE INDEX of April 8, on "Democracy vs. Communism," is, in fact, an essay on the commune,—not at all on socialistic communism; and his article should, in fairness, have been entitled, Democracy vs. the Commune. Not one word, phrase, or sentence which he writes refers to communism at all, but does refer to the commune. As I am not a disciple of the commune, I have no interest in either advocating or defending it; and I leave Mr. Kelsey to the field where the controversy has landed him. I have no doubt he is as illogical and inaccurate in that field as he has been on the subject of socialistic communism. Indeed, I know he is in one instance, which I must cite to show readers his unreliability as a maker of quotations. He says, "It was the further aim of the communists to crush capitalists and the middle-classes, thus fulfilling the foreboding of the gifted De Tocqueville (I translate the French): 'Think you, after having destroyed feudalism and conquered kings, democracy will recoil before the bourgeoisie and the wealthy classes? Will it stop now, when it has become so strong and its adversaries so weak?'"

Now in this passage De Tocqueville asks, "Will democracy recoil," etc.—not will communism recoil. Mr. Kelsey would have us infer, either that democracy is one and the same thing with communism, or that "the gifted De Tocqueville foreboded" that democracy would one day degenerate into the commune. If democracy, halting not in the evolution it was rapidly undergoing when De Tocqueville wrote, should finally arrive at the triumphant establishment of the Republic which Dufaure, Waddington, and Gambetta govern to-day, it would sufficiently answer the question of the great writer, without violently assuming that he feared that the great body of the democracy, in any country, would go on to the destruction of all civil, political, and social institutions, including democracy itself.

After so much dogmatizing about what "never can be" nor "ever will be," let me put "A. W. K." and the readers of THE INDEX in the way of verifying what is. A little book of one hundred and seventy-six pages is just published, entitled American Communities: Brief sketches of Economy, Zoar, Bethel, Aurora, Amana, Icaria, the Shakers, Oneida, Wallingford, and the Brotherhood of the New Life. By William Alfred Hinds, Office of the American Socialist, Oneida, N. Y.

This is a true, succinct, and impartial account of the various communities in the United States. There are stripes, styles, and sects in socialism as there are in philosophy and religion; but the author has given no more prominence to Oneida, where he resides, than to the other communities differing from his own. All the communities here treated, however contrasted in other respects, agree in holding all things in common; and "A. W. K." and all other mere individualists, may learn from this account, and would still farther see with their own eyes, if they should visit one of these communities, that there is as much individualism in pursuing their various industries and in the conduct of community life, as there is in any coöperation or joint action in corporations, shops, or manufacturing anywhere in the world. The individual remains an individual, and supplies his individual wants at the same time that he puts his shoulder along with other shoulders to the common wheel and makes it grind grist for all. And he will see that competition is shifted from the individual, upon whom it falls now with such crushing weight, and is placed upon the shoulders of the entire community. He will learn also, that, so far from there being any laziness in these communities, the tendency is, on the contrary, to overwork; and the members have rather to be held in than spurred up.

Page 152, "On Inductions," is a summing up of what is proved and accomplished by these twenty-seven communal homes in the United States, and is well worth the attention of every reader who aspires to the perfection of the family home. On page 158 is a statement especially needed by "A. W. K.," who persists, after the error is pointed out to him, in confounding communism with the commune. The author reminds his readers that in the days of the two great Revolutions, French and American, republicanism had very different meanings on the different sides of the Atlantic. He says, "The American people, a century ago, established a republican form of government which was peaceable, orderly, and remarkably free from excesses of all kinds. Scarcely had their work been completed, when the French people also undertook the same task. Their effort was premature, and the result shocking to men and angels. Their Republic was soon transformed into a military despotism; but, during its short term of existence, under the name of liberty and of republicanism, the greatest disorder and most horrible excesses prevailed. It should have been plain to all the world that the republicanism of Marat and Danton, St. Just and Robespierre was a wholly different thing from the republicanism of Adams and Franklin, Jefferson and Washington; but the monarchists of Europe, the Tories of the United States, and the opponents of republicanism everywhere persistently confounded the two, and compelled the lovers of liberty here to suffer the opprobrium which belonged solely to the political demagogues and fanatics of France. 'Behold,' they continually cried, 'the fruits which grow on your boasted tree of liberty!' And it was a long time before a clear definition was recognized and expressed in the world's thoughts and language; but finally the republicanism of 1776 came to be known as American, in contradistinction from that of 1789 which was labelled French."

Communism is another unfortunate word whose history has been similar to that of republicanism. . . . The communism which has been practically illustrated in the United States during the last four score years is voluntary, peaceable, conservative. From it there is no violence to be feared. If there is a "strike" or "outbreak" or "uprising" or "mob" or "disorder" or "destruction" anywhere or of any kind, it may be safely assumed that communism, in the true American sense of the word, is in no manner responsible for it. It abhors all forms of compulsion.

All readers of THE INDEX who would like to know what has really been done in coöperative socialism in the United States; how efficiently evolution is at work even in the rudest social experiments, and to what attractive perfection in some of the communities it has attained, will do well to send sixty, seventy-five, or one hundred cents, according to binding, to the author at Oneida, N. Y., and procure this interesting work.

NEW YORK, April 17, 1878.

THE INDEX SYMPOSIUM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I observe that the discussions from week to week in THE INDEX have shown a decided tendency for some time to deal with socio-economic and financial questions. Permit me to offer a few more last words on this "subsistence problem," which is yet to a majority of mankind the most important, if not the most attractive, of questions.

It seems to me that Gen. A. J. Warner's "gray goose quill" feathers the truest shot-shaft in THE INDEX archery. He has shown up very happily the absurdity of the claim to superior morality on the part of the anti-popular creditor interest that demands payment in a harder, scarcer, more valuable dollar than it is equitably entitled to. It is probably more correct to say that gold and paper money have risen in value, than to say that silver has fallen. The scarcity of currency amounts imply to an augmentation (above its original absolute value) of the claims of the capitalist-creditor class on the productive energies of the laboring class.

It must be by this time quite generally understood that there is no absolute measure of value. The fallacy of the gold advocates' reasoning lies in their constant covert assumption that a gold dollar of so many grains weight is an absolute, unvarying valometer.

All money, bonds, or value-certificates of whatever sort are evidences of debt. A gold dollar, for instance, is legal evidence that there is due the holder thereof an (uncertain) amount of labor or commodities. It is natural that the holders of claims on labor should desire to make their claims yield as much as possible. It is equally natural that those from whom service is due should desire to pay up as easily as possible. Is equity possible between these two opposed interests? Material, monetary justice seems to be the most impracticable of ideas. Rich man's ethics and poor man's ethics never will harmonize. This stark, legal capitalistic morality, with its trick card of getting the people in debt on a soft money basis, and making them pay on a hard, yea, an adamant basis, is abstractly not much more admirable and God-pleasing than the unwillingness of the hard-run, impecunious masses to pay at all. As long as wealth is as unequally distributed as at present (and with so little reference to productive merit), so long must justice be impossible. The world must continue to be as it is now—the theatre of a conflict of class-interests. The poor must continue to bear the stigma of dishonesty; the rich the stigma of inhumanity.

I presume we all believe that in the largest cosmic sense justice is infallibly done; but justice, in the limited sense of satisfactory apportionment of worldly comforts and luxuries, is the problem which we are all trying to solve. Many are trying to get their material desires; and (horribly discouraging fact!) other many are confessedly trying to get more than they deserve. A well-to-do young business Christian was complaining to me the other day that he was not rich enough to build as fine a residence as he wanted to. I remarked to him that I thought he had all that he deserved of everything—with the exception, perhaps, of general godliness. "Yes," he answered, "but I want more than I deserve." There you have the street ethics in a nutshell. "Have what you can get," and "Vive Belli!"

But to stick a little closer to the currency question. There are always of all things squarely contradictory interpretations possible. The greenback, silver remonetization movement may be construed as an attempt of the indebted class to get out of a part of their indebtedness; or it may be viewed as righteous resistance to the skillfully disguised undertaking of the creditor interest to get more than the real value of their claims. The latter view seems much the more humane. As a matter of taste, if nothing more, I think we must prefer to sympathize with movements having an equalizing tendency, rather than with those which are calculated to make the rich richer and the poor poorer. G. E. TUFTS.

A NEW LIBERAL LEAGUE.

NEW YORK, April 16, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Although our meeting on Friday night for the organization of an auxiliary League was not as well attended as we anticipated, the result was satisfactory to those who are not over sanguine, and who have had more experience in liberal meetings and liberal movements. The New Yorker seems to me a most unpatriotic and indifferent citizen, in comparison to his natural intelligence and usual vivacity. He is quick, sharp, readily understands his own interest, but is indifferent to principles. He has literary taste, but it is of a superficial nature; he loves culture, but it must come easy: he is not fond of exerting himself. He is sparkling, but there is no depth to his wit; he lacks real earnestness; and it is a stupendous work to arouse his interest in any question where he cannot readily see the dollars and cents which it will bring him. He is liberal, but has no desire to make others so; and his love for outward show and light amusement would make him a much better subject of Emperor William or the Czar than fit him for a republican citizen. To be sure there are some earnest, self-sacrificing, devoted men and women; but these are rare exceptions, and make the absence of a larger number more deeply felt. The New Yorkers will perhaps appreciate this new great movement when the battle is almost won. In the mean time we are obliged to the few who attended and who have subscribed their names as members of our new League.

Twenty-two ladies and gentlemen have subscribed thus far; and it is hoped that at our next meeting many able and intelligent liberals will come forward to give us their help and their advice in planning our work for the future.

Those who would like to become members of this Liberal League, but were prevented from attending our meeting, will please send in their names to the temporary Secretary, Mr. E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington Avenue, New York.

Yours truly, CLARA NEYMANN.

A KERNEL WORTH PLANTING.

Among the pastimes of the class known as liberals in religious belief, a favorite diversion seems to be an incessant stir of the chaff and husks of mooted theories. The cloud of dust thus raised may give the listless eye some curious dissolving views in its atmospheric gyrations; but it might be questioned whether such a process would be favorable to the discernment of the vital grains that lurk beneath. Moreover, a suspicion might be in order as to the danger of blinding the timid glances of new inquirers, with a murky element that would justly discourage further investigation. The grotesque conjectures that are sprung upon the workers in the Liberal League, from the crude estimates of their neighbors, would be laughable, were it not for the vital and solemn issues that are thereby parried, and the triumph of mercy and justice in so far delayed.

Said a liberal divine, when asked to name which of the planks in the above-named trine platform he meant, in finding himself at "variances" with "some of the principles and purposes" of the League, "You can't legislate religion into a people." "That is far from being our aim," was the rejoinder. "You would banish," he continued, "Christian morality from the schools." "Yes, but not pure morality; that is a branch of the highest importance, although example may be a more efficient teacher of it than precept. We need no national nor sectarian label, such as Christian, Hindu, Chinese, or Feejean, so long as we have the genuine article."

If people could only get a little glimpse of the element of simple justice as one of the constituents of morality, it might transform a few of their vague apprehensions concerning the movement in question.

The silent power of a passively correct life is worth much in itself; but for the well-being of society beyond and beside individual security against aggressive error, it should be supplemented by positive exertion in the spread of truth. No luxurious code can release the soul of man from its share of responsibility in providing efficient means for noble life in coming souls. We are, indeed, mites in the reaches of immensity, and our conscious duration possibly a feeble point in eternity,—even with that bridging over of the gulf of which so many are hopefully confident. But despite the utmost allowance that may be given to those ideal depressors of human ambition and enjoyment, the experiences that have crowded upon us, and the lofty yearnings for progress that have moulded and brightened this wonderful existence, bespeak with thrilling urgency our best efforts for an improved vantage-ground for following generations. And, after all, why do we brood over this notion of extended time? The present is the girdle that encloses whatever germ of infinite capacity we may boast; and the right use of our faculties here and now, has as full a claim upon our allegiance as any other moment may control. However shadowy the problem of life may be, just such moments of opportunity as these we grasp with vehement zest are in store for kindred beings. Shall we relinquish the honor and joy of enhancing the value of theirs?

The methods of operation in furtherance of beneficent plans must of necessity partake of the special elements obtaining in specific surroundings, and the rapidity of gain in civilization time itself to the proportionate impetus of inherited principle. But nothing is surer than the working of a spirit devoted to the simple forces of equity and sympathy in human association. Whatever varieties of opinion may exist in the abstract, the relations of mankind in active life can furnish no excuse for bitterness of sentiment, eminently none for oppressive encroachment.

These are the tenets of the Liberal League, viz., justice for the living, and a generous, wise provision for their successors; and no apathy nor obtuseness nor distaste for change, in weighty masses of the community, can quench the fire of conviction that is burning through from the scattered points of awakening. J. P. TITCOMB.

THE NEED OF DIGNITY IN THE ADVOCACY OF LIBERALISM.

OZARK, Mo., April 8, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

There is nothing that so lessens my estimate of liberalism in this country as the popularity, among freethinkers of some liberal publications whose tone and spirit are so low and unmanly as to make them unworthy the respect and patronage of all high-minded liberals. How so many liberals can indorse the coarse, insolent style of discussion employed by those papers is to me a strange and painful question.

A respect for the feelings of mankind, as well as a decent regard for the dignity of discussion, must certainly constitute one of the essential qualifications of freethought journalism; but some of those who have assumed the work of publishing liberal papers have not this qualification, if I have any judgment on the subject. I know that such coarse irreverence as that which characterizes certain "Open Letters" to the Devil and Jehovah that are occasionally published in a leading liberal journal must disgust the refined feelings of many of the readers of that paper.

Now there is no need of this style of discussion. The cause of freethought can be promoted much faster and better by an honorable, high-toned manner of advocacy. Low ridicule will never vanquish Christian theology, however weak and antiquated it may be; and error is not made repulsive to the moral sense by the attacks of such vulgar wit as those papers under consideration employ in their assaults on the churches. I care not how radical a paper's views may be, it has my respect if its manner of discussion is pure and dignified; but I will indorse no publication, however bravely it may champion my own sentiments, unless it can exhibit a spirit of manliness and refinement superior to that manifested by several journals which claim to be exponents of liberalism.

Of course it is of little importance to any one what I indorse or reject in liberal literature, and I do not expect to change the course of any liberal publisher by expressing these sentiments; but I believe that my position is just and tenable, and having long felt a desire to speak on the subject, I present these thoughts to the readers of THE INDEX, as simply showing the state of feeling in one mind.

Yours truly, H. CLAY NEVILLE.

INFORMATION WANTED.

MR. ABBOT:—

Together with a large and restless audience, I listened last evening to a discourse delivered by a grey-haired presiding Elder. His text was a part of the twenty-fifth verse of first chapter of the first book of Samuel: "If one man sin against another, the judge shall judge him; but if a man sin against the Lord, who shall entreat for him?" I do not intend a review of the sermon, but merely wish to be informed concerning one assertion made by him.

After premising that the question, "How can a just God forgive sin?" was one that ancient philosophers sought in vain to answer, the Elder went on to state that "popular preachers are teaching to-day that sin does not exist; that the difference between thieves and murderers and people who practice righteousness is merely a difference in the circumstances attending the two classes; that great transgressors are only unfortunate in the influences brought to bear upon them." He stated also that this belief is "steadily growing in popularity."

I would not be so presumptuous as to question this "holy man of God," whose every utterance is dictated by the "Holy Ghost" in regard to the matter; and so I beg of you to inform me, through your paper, if you know of such teachers, and who they are,—whether they have a large band of believers, and what the sect is called.

Yours for the truth, M. E. D.

BOULDER, Col., March 20.

[We know of no "sect" with the above opinions, and can give no special information on the subject; but the Elder rather inaccurately described one phase of thought which is not infrequent in these days. It appears in all who hold that moral character is the necessary effect of the "environment" and its influences on oneself and one's ancestors. But this is too large a subject to be discussed in a mere note, for it raises the whole question of "fate, free-will, fore-knowledge absolute."—Ed.]

"FAIR PLAY."

ED. INDEX:—

The colored Jasper of Richmond, who is evidently a precious stone worthy to be among the foundations of the Holy City, if not of the "Immovable" earth itself, is not the first in modern times to proclaim the irreligious tendency of our astronomical theories. When the celebrated Nestorian bishop, Mar Yohanan, was in this country a few years since, he said to the Rev. Dr. Bacon of New Haven:—

"This idea that the earth is a globe and revolves on its axis, and also moves in an orbit around the sun, is clearly unscriptural, and should be denied by Christian men. For the Psalmist plainly says, Ps. xciii. 1: 'The world also is established; it cannot be moved.'"

Yet the Oriental bishop, in spite of his simplicity, was made the recipient of distinguished honors; while the Bible-trusting colored brother, equally simple and unquestioning, receives nothing but ridicule. H. B. BOSTWICK.

PHILADELPHIA.

[The Tribune of April 25 is of our correspondent's opinion, as appears below.—Ed.]

"Richmond's reverend sun-mover does not stand alone. The Rev. C. H. Parker, a colored preacher of Pittsburgh, thinks that Brother Jasper's astronomical theory may be correct. 'According to the Bible,' he remarks, 'the sun moves; and if we believe that the Bible is inspired, we must believe that God would not inspire the writers to say anything that is not true.' He then went on to state that in his opinion, however, the question was still an open one; not because there could be any doubt as to the inspiration of the Bible, or that there were not Scriptural passages to show that the sun did not move, but because there might be mistakes in the translations. The Rev. G. W. Jackson, of Allegheny, knows Brother Jasper well, and considers him an inspired preacher."

ANOTHER LIBERALIST.

WESTON, W. Va., March 16, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

An incident occurred in this county a few days ago which probably ought to appear on the records. An ancient farmer, full of years and superstition, and a firm believer in the divine mission of Lorenzo Dow, grew sick. He wanted a physician. It seems to me that a mere exercise of faith would have saved him, but it appears that he deemed physic essential. Now had he been as familiar with the Bible as I am, he would have recollected that "Aas consulted with the physicians; and behold, Aas slept with his fathers." The Orthodox doctor was called, and the farmer aforesaid grew from bad to worse; and as a last resort, a physician was called (although it was a bitter dose for the old man) who was an outspoken skeptic. He examined his patient, and prescribed for him. The old man grew better and stronger; and, horrible to relate, he dispensed with the services of the Orthodox, and clung to the infidel physician. When last heard from on the subject, the old granger explained it thus: "When I want medicine, I want the services of the best physician I can get; and I shall never again require him to exhibit a certificate of church-membership. I want medical skill from him, not theology and medicine mixed. When I want my will prepared, I want a good lawyer to do it for me; and I shan't ask him if his faith is firmly founded in the vicarious atonement. And when I am about to die, I may call in a preacher; but I don't know about that, for the fact is, since that infidel doctor cured me I am becoming very liberal on these matters."

VIRGINIAN.

THE CORPSE of the great Italian Republican, Mazzini, was petrified by the method invented by Señor Gorini of Lodi. Recent travellers say that it proves entirely successful; the features of the eminent agitator presenting no visible alteration, and the expression well preserved, as he reposes in his tomb, which is open to the inspection of visitors. Señor Gorini has not revealed the secret of his method, but has taken measures to give it to the public at his death.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 "	For 26 to 51 "	For 52 to 100 "
10c	8c	6c	5c

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLKIN, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen.—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEINER.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address
THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON,
Publish

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, including postage, or 30 cents for three months on trial.

Address
THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keeshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1866 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles," Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address
THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men, &c.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. The Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGHOT on the English Constitution.....	1.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.50
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (E. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	1.25
BUECHNER (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 1 vol.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.50
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thorstein: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARK (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.50
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARK (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWES). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	3.50
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	1.50
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Haeckel, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	1.50
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Selection to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50

Historical Pictures Etched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.00
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Poems.....	1.50
Kassas. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
KVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stieler. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.50
FURERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	3.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius, an Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Electric Amities.....	1.50
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	1.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.50
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.50
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	1.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mouldings of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lige.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.50
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Byes.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Stories, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.50
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities. Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	1.50
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of Europe, from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	3.50
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.50
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 3 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. B.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	2.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MAHN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1869 to 1868.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays. Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.25
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.50
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kirkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	5.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.50
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trosky Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Works, than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	5.00
Natural Phenomena: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	5.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expense of Heaven.....	5.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMER: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., scilicet cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	25.00
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	2.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Chaucer Manuscript. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Advances of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Maria, and Irish Sketches, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Diderot, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unpublished Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. OKLIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.25
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.25
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLE (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYAGE (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III IV and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	1.50
Child Life.....	2.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

GIRLS'—5 also perforated notions for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUM & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE. Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

NEW BOOKS TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Boden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Herbert Spencer, Goldwin Smith, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Lionel A. Tallemaque, M. E. Grant Duff, M. F., Hon. Robert Lowe, Leslie Stephen, John Morley (the Editor), G. H. Lewes, Alfred R. Wallace, Frederick Harrison, Prof. Tyndall, Prof. Darwin, Prof. Clifford, Author of Supernatural Religion, Sir John Lubbock, Anthony Trollope, T. Adolphus Trollope, Sir David Wedderburn, and numerous others.

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,
Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.00 a year; 8 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON
English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX
1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the publisher's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to anybody who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles? WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.
GREAT THROUGH LINE
AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT
THE
PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD
stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES
in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible

Pullman Palace Cars
are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis,

WITHOUT CHANGE,
and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience. Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager. General Passenger Agent. C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,
PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 461 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ... E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—
Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!
AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positives Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc. Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.
WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for
TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

No. II, III, IV, V, VI, 16 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 16 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!
CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—
LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 9, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 437.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

W. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

SAN FRANCISCO and Chicago seem to be seriously alarmed at the rumors of communist outbreaks of a violent character.

THE RUMORED CONVERSION of three millions of English Protestants to the Church of Rome is rather too absurd to be so seriously received as it has been.

IT IS STATED by the Independent that the city of New York "was taxed to the amount of $44,400 in 1875 to provide free gas for the lamps before church-doors."

A NEW Liberal League has been organized at Olathe, Kansas, auxiliary to the National League. President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin. This League starts with a membership of seventy.

THE NEW JERSEY State Committee of the National Liberal League has been duly constituted as follows: Francis W. Orris, chairman, Passaic; Dr. H. B. Martin, Newark; Samuel Warbasse, Lafayette; F. W. Greenwood, —; J. H. Adamson, Clifton.

VICTOR HUGO's masterpiece, Les Misérables, has been dramatized for the Parisian stage, and very recently acted at the Porte St. Martin. The character of Jean Valjean, the convict, which is the central interest of this matchless book, is in our judgment a nobler ideal than that of Jesus as presented in the New Testament.

MR. H. L. GREEN sends us this cheerful little message: "Rev. J. T. Sunderland, editor of the Pamphlet Mission of Chicago, writes me: 'We are all in sympathy with the Liberal League movement, and shall be glad to help it all we can.' That is good news from the Western metropolis; and now I wish that some Chicago liberal who is a good organizer would consolidate all these sympathizers into a Liberal League that would make its influence felt throughout the whole West. Who is the one to do it?"

MR. UNDERWOOD is very popular as a lecturer, as shown by the great demand for his services,—and most deservedly popular too, for there is no better advocate of his views in the field. Colonel Ingersoll is more brilliant, but less methodical and comprehensive in the treatment of his subjects; they are the complements of each other, and accomplish great good, each in his own way. Mr. Underwood's latest engagements are in Illinois, as follows: Peru, May 7 and 8; Oglesby, May 9 and 10; and Whitehall, May 11 and 12.

SIGNATURES to the Religious Freedom Amendment petition of the National Liberal League have been received as follows since our last acknowledgment: from C. Wilkins, Myrtle Point, Oregon, 98; from Charles S. Hamilton, San Diego, California, 88; from E. C. Walker, Florence, Iowa, 86 (collected at Adel); from A. C. Festerling, Mosel, Wisconsin, 31; from Roger M. Sherman, New Haven, Connecticut, 19; from A. C. Clark, chairman of the Committee on Work of the Liberal League, Wausau, Wisconsin, 101; from J. G. Rhodes, Brighton, Iowa, 149. Total thus far received—11,530.

MR. MAVERICK's letter on "Communism" is reprinted this week in THE INDEX, not because we accept all his statements (for we confess that we distrust some of them), but because of the wide interest taken in the subject. Notwithstanding his exaggerations, there is undoubtedly some ground for uneasiness at the spread of a movement which showed its true character by the riots of last summer. The final issue of such ebullitions is not doubtful; the people of the United States are accustomed to settle all issues peaceably, and detest the resort to violence; but in the end they will put down all mobs. There is danger, however, in an excess of peaceableness; and public attention should be directed to the necessity of prevision and prevention.

A CORRESPONDENT in Kansas encloses a slip from the Kansas Gazette, published at Enterprise, in which the editor remarks: "As Wendell Phillips said to a society of Free Religionists in Boston recently, so would we say to the National Liberal League: 'You cannot succeed. Your theories are opposed to the experience of mankind.'" Our correspondent desires to know if this quotation from Mr. Phillips is a false one. We understand that he did make some such remark as that at his lecture last winter before the Free Religions Association, and do not suppose him to have been misrepresented by the Kansas editor. But Mr. Phillips is not a liberal in a religious sense, considering himself still Orthodox. He thinks that "Anti-Slavery" will work in politics, but not in religion. If he really said what he was reported to have said at his lecture, his disclaimer of sympathy with the Free Religions Association means exactly that, and nothing else.

"APROPPOS TO Mr. Maverick's letter on Trades Unions and Communism in Saturday's Tribune, this little dialogue between Deputy Superintendent Dixon and a reporter of the Chicago Post is put: 'I am satisfied that the communists here are armed and organized for trouble.' 'What do they propose to do?' 'To force their views and rights at the point of the bayonet.' 'How many are armed in the city, do you think?' 'About two thousand.' 'Who are their leaders?' 'Some of them you know; but the most violent and revolutionary are French Communists.' 'When will the contemplated attack be made, do you think?' 'No one can tell exactly. It may be in a couple of weeks.' 'Have you any idea where?' 'In the business portion of the city, it is said.' In the opinion of the deputy superintendent, the slightest motion on the part of the Commune would be a signal for hostilities, during which thousands of vagrants would flock to the city and plunder and destroy without limit.'" The foregoing is from the Tribune of April 20.

THE SCEPTICISM with which we received the Pall Mall Gazette's declaration that Pope Leo XIII. had renounced the claim to temporal power, has been justified by the event. His recent Encyclical letter explicitly reaffirms this claim, though in a temperate manner, as shown by a London dispatch dated April 26: "The passage in the Pope's Encyclical issue, which was announced yesterday, regarding the civil power of the Church, is as follows: 'The hopes of Italy and the world rest on the beneficent influence of the Holy See, and on the intimate union of all the faithful with the Roman pontiff. It therefore stands to reason that we should, with all diligence, do all in our power to preserve intact the dignity of the Roman cathedra, in order, before all things, to guard the rights and liberty of the Holy See. We shall never cease to insist that our authority be respected; that our ministry and our power be left fully free and independent, and that the position be restored to us in which Divine wisdom long ago placed us. It is no vain desire of the dominion which moves us to demand the reestablishment of our civil power. We demand it because our duties and our solemn oaths exact it, and because it is not only necessary to conserve fully the liberty of the spiritual power, but also because it is evident that when it is a question of the temporal dominion of the Apostolic See, it involves the well-being and safety of the whole human family.' The Pope distinctly indorses the policy and acts of his predecessor, condemns civil marriages, and deplores the rejection of the authority of the Church, proclaiming that to be the cause of all existing evils, but in language of calmness and dignity, devoid throughout of any tone of offence or violence. The Encyclical contains no attack whatever upon the civil government of Italy, nor any mention, direct or indirect, of the house of Savoy."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT. Boston, Mass.
Vice-President.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT. New York, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL. Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES. Chicago, Ill.
HON. HENRY ROTH. St. Louis, Mo.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN. Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT. Boston, Mass.
MRS. O. H. FRUTTINGHAM. New York.
MRS. WM. J. POTTER. New Bedford, Mass.
MRS. E. F. HALLLOWELL. Boston, Mass.
MRS. J. J. FOSTON. Hingham, N. Y.
MRS. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT. San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE. Providence, R. I.
MRS. J. J. AVYGE. Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. EISENTHAL. Chicago, Ill.
MRS. W. H. SPENCER. Sparta, Wis.
MRS. SAMUEL L. HILL. Florence, Mass.
MRS. E. W. MEDDAUGH. Detroit, Mich.
MRS. KARL HMINZEN. Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MRS. HORACE SEAYER. Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MRS. D. M. BENNETT. Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MRS. MORITZ ELLINGBERG. Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MRS. E. F. UNDERWOOD. Thorndike, Mass.
MRS. ROBERT COLLYER. Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL. Peoria, Ill.
MRS. T. L. BROWN. Birmingham, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MOCORMICK. Franklin, Pa.
ELDER W. W. LANS. Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON. New York City.
MRS. AMY POST. Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON. Tenafly, N. J.
MRS. SALLIE HOLLEY. Lottsburgh, Va.
Secretary.
W. E. HANLEN. 21 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB. 142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX. 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
J. E. ABBOT.	W. H. HANLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.
Executive Committees.
Alabama.	J. H. HALEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN AMBERG, Monticello.
California.	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. BAKER, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Milledown.
Illinois.	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHAEL, Adel.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. CLARK, Wilmore.
Louisiana.	JOHN BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Mass.	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.	W. M. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.	RALPH SCHENEMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	E. E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.	E. C. PHELPS, Lincoln.
Nevada.	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.	M. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL COIT, Humboldt.
Pennsylvania.	JOHN B. BAKER, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.	B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	DR. A. M. DEBT, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT C. BURNER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming.	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Dak.	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.
Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman. Orleans, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS. 121 Warren Avenue, Boston.
MARLAN P. HYDE. 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the
National Liberal League.

GENEPOOL, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. M. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.

JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, B. W. Sample, David Prince, B. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kligore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.

MADISON, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.

ORLANDA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grudnik, J. Harrison, T. C. Mahon, A. F. Loebach, and others.

DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.

FAIRBANKS, ALASKA.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Wilbur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. E. Urbino, John B. Verity.

PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. E. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Eiker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Eiker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

ITURVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. L. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUMPHREYS, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi E. Peirson; Secretary, R. F. Egan.
Issued to L. E. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James E. Miles, J. W. Brown, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, J. W. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, P. H. Egan.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. Reed; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie.
Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. F. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. P. F. Eberard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, F. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunising.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeland, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Huchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. B. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter P. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothblitz, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. O. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, E. L. Roys, C. C. Mann, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marlon L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrelle, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. B. Swislocke.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, E. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASE COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. B. Steele.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Case County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sentf, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sentf, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Fraustein, M.D., E. Lebont, and others.

OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Wilson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.
SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of ~~any~~ religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably assembled to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his civil rights, privileges or capacities, or be disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body, of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

The Growth of Communism.

THE INTERNATIONALS: THEIR HISTORY, AIMS, AND WORK.
—LABOR CONGRESSES AND BROTHERHOODS.—TRADE
UNIONISM AND COMMUNISM IN ALLIANCE.

BY AUGUSTUS MAVERICK.

In the summer of 1871, M. Jules Favre issued an official circular, which was intended to put the French people on their guard against a mischievous element in the politics of Europe. It was evident from the tone of his declaration that he possessed more information than he cared to reveal. He contented himself with setting forth in general terms the character and aims of the "International Society," adding that at that time (seven years ago) it had committees which met in privacy in Belgium, England, and Switzerland, for purposes subversive of law and order. M. Favre directed attention to the facts, that this society had been organized in 1862; that its avowed basis was atheism and communism; and that in its first formal declaration, in 1869, it had announced its designs in the following terms; viz., "The Alliance declares itself atheist; it seeks the abolition of worship, the substitution of science for faith, of human nature for Divine justice, and the abolition of marriage; it demands, above all, the abolition of the right of inheritance, and that capital shall be at the disposition only of workers." "For us," the declaration continued, "the red flag is the symbol of universal human love."

On the 4th of March, 1872, in the course of a debate in the French Assembly on a bill imposing penalties upon members of the International Society, Deputy Tolain made a speech in defence of that organization, in which he confessed that its purpose was the overthrow of constitutional government.

In the same month, the Prefect of the Department of the Rhone asked for military reinforcements for the maintenance of order, which, he said, was "menaced by the rapid increase of workmen's clubs, and illegal secret societies,"—these being two of the forms assumed by the international in its plottings.

The month of March, 1872, had not gone by when the French Assembly adopted a bill which declared it to be a criminal offence to belong to the International Society,—the vote on the section which imposed severe penalties for entering into such membership being five hundred and one yeas to one hundred and four nays.

At the same time, the French Minister, Dufaure, publicly said that the International was "a standing menace."

These official acts and official warnings, inspired by the tragic scenes which grew out of the brief reign of the Commune in Paris, were not figments of distorted imaginations; they were illustrations of absolute truths.

The present writer now proposes to show, by authoritative citations and the collation of recent events, that the International Society, having ignominiously failed in its attempt to subvert European governments, has deliberately undertaken to overturn the American system.

In order to trace this new movement step by step, it is necessary to go back again to the historical records.

The first successful attempt at International combination proceeded from a small number of German workmen in London, who had been expelled from France in 1839 for taking part in an émeute at Paris (London Times, Oct. 27, 1871.) At that time several German workmen's societies in France and Switzerland were in constant communication with each other; and their chief aim, avowedly, was the propagation of communistic theories. The little group that had gathered in London founded a branch society, which emerged into the light in February, 1840, under the title of "The Deutsches Arbeiter Bildungs Verein." Its rules were printed in German, English, French, and Swedish; its members were chiefly Germans, with a fair muster of Hungarians, Poles, Danes, and Swedes. One of the few English members was Ernest Jones, who afterward became a shining light among the agitators. The earliest affiliations of this society were with the English Socialists, the Chartists, and the French Democratic Society. Out of this friendship grew the "Society of the Fraternal Democrats," of which Julian Harney, who opposed Lord Palmerston at Tiverton in the election of 1847, was the corresponding secretary.

In November, 1847, a German Communist Conference was held in London, at which Dr. Karl Marx, then living in Brussels, was present. At this conference the old communistic theories were announced, in a manifesto drawn up by Karl Marx and Frederick Engels, one passage of which was as follows:—

"The communists are no particular party in contradistinction from other workingmen's parties. They have no interests separate from the interests of the whole proletariat, and set up no particular principles according to which they intend to model the proletarian movement. They distinguish themselves, on the one hand, from other workingmen's parties, by defending the common interests, which are independent of nationality, of the whole class in the various national struggles; on the other hand, by representing the interests of the common movement at the different stages of development through which the struggle between the wages, laborers, and the capitalists has to pass. The immediate aim of the communists is the same as that of the other proletarian parties,—the overthrow of the rule of the capitalists by the acquisition of political power."

"The acquisition of political power" and "the overthrow of the rule of the capitalists" was therefore the summation of the programme. Remember that this was thirty years ago—November, 1847. Have the gangsters of the West and the trade-unionists of the East tried to carry out on American soil in 1877 the programme of the professed communists set forth in England in 1847; or have they not?

But to proceed with the record. Following the general plan indicated by Karl Marx and his fellows, the Fraternal Democrats made preparations to hold a public International Congress in Brussels, in the year 1848, to which the Democracy of Europe was to be invited; but the Revolution of February hindered that design. Subsequently, an unsuccessful attempt was made to create an International alliance among the exiled Revolutionists, who had felt the weight of the hand of Napoleon III., and who troubled France no more during the whole period of his reign. Banished, without organization or leaders, all the governments of Europe banded against and watching them, the French socialists fell into close but secret relations with the German communists in England. The years 1849, 1850, 1851, 1852, 1853, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, and 1858—exactly one decade—passed away without any notable outward manifestation that socialists or communists existed in organized bodies. The public records of that period will be searched in vain for reports of the proceedings of "Congresses" or "Leagues" or "Brotherhoods," such as have filled many columns of European and American journals during the period from 1859 to the end of 1877. But it subsequently came to be known that the apparent lull had been only a season of preparation.

In 1859 the great strike of the builders in London brought the advanced trade-unionists to the front. The agitation spread. The trade-unionists began to direct their attention to politics. Meetings, addresses, inflammatory appeals, attack, defence, crimination, and recrimination followed each other in rapid succession. The working-class began to show signs of uneasiness, and to give expression boldly to the sullen discontent implanted in their minds by demagogues through a long interval of delusive quiet. In 1860, George Odger became conspicuous as chairman of the "Trade-Unionist, Manhood Suffrage, and Vote-by-Ballot Association"; and several successful meetings of this body were held in England before the outbreak of the American War. (London papers of 1860-1861.) It was creditable to Odger and his followers that, during the whole period of our civil strife, their influence was exerted in favor of our Union. This fact should be placed to their credit.

From this point the history of the trade-union trends more and more closely toward that of the International Society; until, finally, trade-unionism has become but as the tender to the communist engine.

This fact, which is vitally important for American workingmen and the whole American people to apprehend at its full value, the writer will try to demonstrate, by evidence which any doubter may test for himself, if he possess the patience and can command the time requisite for the task. The material is scattered through endless pages and columns of books, periodicals, pamphlets, circulars—in English, French, German, Swedish, Bohemian,—a unique literature which coming writers and thinkers will study with wonder and amazement. But the communists are too shrewd to codify this enormous mass of fragments into a comprehensive, harmonious, and intelligible whole. They are eloquent and destructive, but secretive and Jesuitical.

Sifting out of the rubbish a few plain facts, let us see what they amount to, and whither they lead:—

I.
The year 1862 marks the beginning of an era. The International Exhibition in London attracted deputations of French artisans, whose inflammable minds were speedily fired by the magnificent projects of their English and German brethren, who had filled the public eye for the preceding three years. Their visit led to the establishment of the vast and powerful organization now known as "the International"—of which Mr. B. Cochrane, M. P., said, in his place in Parliament, on the 11th of April, 1872, that "its creed was infamous" and "its objects atrocious," but that it counted at that moment one hundred and eighty thousand members in Great Britain alone (Parliamentary report, April, 1872); and of which also Mr. Elliott C. Cowdin—a distinguished merchant of New York,—said in his address on "France in 1870-71," delivered at Cooper Institute on the evening of the 10th of February, 1872, that "every kind of absurdity and atrocity found utterance at the gatherings of the affiliated clubs," but that the International numbered, over the whole extent of Europe, not less than two million five hundred thousand members. Bear in mind that these were the figures, given by careful observers in England and America, of five years ago. The growth of the order since has not been backward.

A temporary check was interposed by circumstances beyond communist control. But it proved to be only temporary. The Polish insurrection broke out; Paris was excited; thousands of French workmen presented addresses of sympathy to Prince Czartoryski and the "National Government" of Poland; money was collected in the Paris workshops to aid the Poles; meetings were held in London at which Poles attended; and at a great Polish meeting, held at St. James Hall, in London, on the 22d of July, 1863, a deputation from Paris came forward to ask the coöperation of the workmen of England to liberate Poland. Revolt had taken form; and the International Society for the first time revealed its "international" character in a way that could not be misunderstood. The heaven had not been working in vain. It was impossible to refuse sympathy to a down-trodden people. It was easy to say kindly words. If nothing came of them, the intent was apparently good, and that was something. The words were said; and the movement attracted public attention, and won no small degree of public regard. The Ischoate International had scored a point.

II.

Out of this demonstration grew a new movement. Before the night was over, the French deputation was invited to a conference. A few days afterward, George Odger, instructed by a committee, drew up an address to the workmen of France, which may be read in the London papers of August, 1863, setting forth the statement that the time was ripe for a combination of labor against capital. "Let there be a gathering together of representatives from France, Italy, Germany, Poland, and all countries where there exists a will to coöperate for the good of mankind"—so ran this remarkable document—"let us have our Congresses; let us discuss the great question on which the peace of nations depends; let us bring our reason and moral right to bear with becoming dignity against the cajolery and brute force of the so-called rulers."

This was the first pronounced echo of Karl Marx's fulmination of November, 1847—"the aim of the communists is the overthrow of the capitalists by the acquisition of political power." The interval of sixteen years had been skillfully utilized in operating upon the prejudices of the working classes.

III.

From this point onward, rapid progress was made. The train had been fired. The years 1863 and 1864 were periods of excitement and alarm. The Trade Unions in England and on the Continent, already affiliated more or less openly with the internationalists or communists, increased rapidly in numbers and in strength. They had their newspaper organs; they had their fine yearly crops of demagogues, fluent of tongue and unscrupulous in method; they found weak-kneed legislators to plead their cause, and ambitious politicians to mount to power by the aid of their brawny shoulders. It was a formative period—a sort of evolution, with the difference from the Darwinian theory that it was a development backward toward barbarism. Nevertheless, the work went on.

IV.

The power suddenly developed abroad necessarily led to the consideration of another question, vital to the perpetuity of the new system. Across the sea there lay a vast country, just emerged from a great war which had tried all its resources to the uttermost, but stronger from the trials it had endured and the victory it had won—as gold is purer after the fire that purges it of dross, or the athlete harder after sharp training. Obviously, here was a field to be worked. The laborers ready to enter it were neither few nor timid. They had devoted themselves to a purpose, and that purpose they were resolved to accomplish—no matter at what cost of energy, skill, resource, chicanery, cajolery, riot, bloodshed, robbery, murder (witness Pittsburgh, the Erie Railway, Baltimore, the Pennsylvania Road, New York City, in July, 1877—of which more presently).

V.

When Samson saw the standing corn, he caught his forces, tied them in couples with a firebrand between their tails, and sent them to destroy law and order among the Philistines. It is not in the least degree probable that communists ever read their Bibles—if, indeed, they possess them—but they practised Samson's tactics. Looking at us over the vast expanse of the Atlantic, they saw here a great and populous and prosperous nation, which had fought out its long fight with murderous savages, tricky politicians, the pains of adolescence, the curse of slavery, the rebellion of the South, the war of tariffs and currencies and policies, and, near the end of its first century, had taken rank among the great powers of the world—full of vitality, wealth, energy. It had, in turn, inspired the Old World with feelings of indifference, contempt, curiosity, anxiety, anger, sympathy, fear, envy, malice, and all uncharitableness; but it had gone steadily forward, rarely faltering, never dismayed, never beaten. Its tribulations had made it great; it had its rich, it had its poor. The rich controlled its factories, its mines, its railways, its warehouses. Its poor served its rich, for a stipulated stipend. They were not, never could be, rich. Ergo, they were discontented. Why not enlarge the scope of the International Society—that is, Communism—by working shrewdly upon the passions and prejudices of this great class?

It was too good an opportunity to be lost. It was not lost. The desired end was accomplished in the neatest manner possible. It was really a work of high art. Let us trace its processes.

VI.

The internationalists, feeling that they were strong enough to make a decided move, opened their first "Congress" in Geneva, Switzerland, on the 3d of September, 1866,—a little more than three years after it had made its first "hit" in London. In the interval many Trade Unions had joined the International (North American Review, Art.: "The International Association," April, 1872; and London, Paris, and New York papers of September and October, 1866). But only seven delegates from England appeared, and none from America. The French societies sent seventeen; the Swiss thirty-six. Odger was prominent among the English delegates. The proceedings, on the whole, were creditable. The subjects discussed—and with a considerable degree of intelligence, too—were the statistics of wages, the reduction of the hours of labor, and coöperation. Nothing was said of agrarianism, proletarianism, socialism, communism, the wickedness of the rich, or the horrors of civilized government. The time was not quite ripe—it was eleven years ago, and some crops ripen slowly! But secret agencies were put at work. The eyes of the far-seeing leaders were fixed upon this country; they determined to stalk our workmen, as hunters stalk a deer; following closely, watching the wind, but bent upon bringing him down at last. The result proves what good huntersmen they were. They have bagged their game; and the wonder of it is, that the game does not know it has been bagged. This makes the business more interesting than ever. It becomes a curious study.

VII.

The year after the meeting of the first International Congress in Geneva—that is, in 1867—two "Sections" of the International Society were established in the United States, and the General Council of the International acknowledged them as auxiliaries.

This was the entering wedge.

There was no Trade Union affiliation, as such, with the International at this time. Far from it. The International was too well trained to show its hand so early in the game. Slow approaches, wariness, specious pretences, appeals to the gullibility of human nature, were the first manoeuvres—parallels, so to speak, zig-zagging up toward the bastions that were to be captured. A coup de main would have been a failure; and the internationalists knew it. They preferred to dig, sap, and mine; and they performed all these processes to such purpose that we are forced to stop and ponder how the explosion shall be prevented.

But let us follow the thread of the narrative and the argument.

On the 19th of August, 1867, the American societies affiliated with the internationalists held a "Congress" in Chicago. In this Congress—the first one held in this country—the supremacy of the foreign International Society was fully recognized, and absolute credence was given to the theories and plans put forth by the parent body. (Vide the Chicago and New York journals of August and September, 1867.) The formation of "Sections," or auxiliaries to the foreign International Society, went on steadily after this date, until in September, 1871, the New York correspondent of the Cologne Gazette was able to announce exultingly, in one of his letters to that journal, that although the International had "only lately obtained a foothold in the States," it had "a powerful organization in several parts of the country"; and then proceeded to give the following list of the American "Sections," ten in number, which were at that time in direct and acknowledged affiliation with the parent body, viz.:—

1. German Workingmen's Society, New York.
2. French Section, No. 1, New York.
3. Czechian Workingmen's Society, New York.
4. Social Political Workingmen's Society, No. 1, Chicago.
5. Social Political Workingmen's Society, No. 2, Chicago.
6. Social Democratic Workingmen's Society, New York.
7. Irish Section of the Irish Workingmen's Association, New York.
8. Social Democratic Society, Williamsburg, N.Y.
9. American Section of the Workingmen's Association, New York.
10. French Section, No. 2, of the Workingmen's Association, New York.

It will be observed that New York City and Chicago were the centres of these early movements; and also that the French and German elements in this country came uppermost in this business, six years ago. This latter fact illustrates the power that foreign demagogues can exert, when they are so minded. The Cologne Gazette's list was copied into the English papers, and so found its way back to New York, creating great joy among the Communists, who had quietly occupied the interval from the end of 1867 to the beginning of 1871 in shrewd preparation of our workmen's minds to receive their new gospel of labor. Thenceforth the mask was thrown off, and the aims and purposes of the International were not only openly avowed, but it was also given out that it intended to assume control of American politics through the organization of a Workingmen's party, the fundamental doctrines of which should be those set forth by the Geneva Congress of 1867.

A few weeks later (December 21, 1871), one of the leaders of the International Society in the City of New York published in one of our morning journals a bold and ingenious defence of that organization, together with a statement of the alleged grievances of which its members complained. The "tyranny of capital" and the evils produced by great monopolies were dwelt upon with peculiar emphasis; and although the writer was unskilled in the rules of logic or the forms of graceful rhetoric, his impassioned plea attracted the attention of the public, and provoked sharp comment by the press.

Manifestly, the International had begun to see its way in America in 1871.

VIII.

The summer of 1871 brought the Trade Unionists to the front, in the attitude of politicians. In July, a call was issued for a "Labor Congress," to be held in St. Louis on the 7th of August following. Ostensibly, the object of this gathering was the discussion of the laws which should govern trade organizations and the definition of the true relations between the employer and the employed. In reality, it was intended to establish the new programme of general opposition to organized government. Ambitious leaders appeared at St. Louis on the appointed day. They sounded the depths and the shallows of the delegates who represented the Trade Unions,—delegates who were in the main honest and simple-minded men, anxious only to do the best they could do for their own protection, and not in the slightest degree sympathizers with Communism. Let them have that credit. The leaders found the time was not quite ripe. Large bodies move slowly, and honest men are not transformed into rogues in a day. The leaders, recognizing these facts, determined to adjourn the meeting until a more fitting time; but, before doing so, they introduced the draft of a "platform," the main points of which were these: First, a demand for the expansion of the paper currency; second, the abolition of the gold basis; third, the destruction of the National Banks; fourth, the establishment of an eight-hour system; fifth, the exclusion of Chinese labor. The delegates listened to all this dazed. They offered no objections. They were in the hands of skilful manipulators. The document was put forth, apparently as the expression of the sentiments of the St. Louis Trade Congress. Trade-Unionism had taken its first step in politics, and the International had scored another point.

Scored a point—how? Let the records tell. No sooner had the adjourned "Congress" opened its next session, held in Columbus, Ohio, in February, 1872, than one Kilgore was admitted with the Pennsylvania delegation as the representative of "Section 26" of the International Society. This was a direct, open, unmistakable evidence of practical affiliation. It fixes an important date.

The political platform, revised and enlarged, was then brought forward, discussed, and adopted. It was very skilfully drawn; in fact, considering the antecedent circumstances which led to its production, it is still entitled to rank as a curiosity of political literature. It set out with the recitation of principles now commonly accepted, namely, the necessity of revenue reform, tax reduction, general amnesty, and equality of rights, and after enunciating these doctrines with no inconsiderable degree of force, glided into such fallacies as a demand for the legislative prohibition of Chinese labor, and a centralization of power in the Federal Government, with restrictions upon private enterprise in the construction and operation of railroads, telegraph lines, and the like. The platform, as a whole, was not sound; the leaders were injudicious; the official recognition of the Communist element was a dangerous precedent; but the Workingmen's party had openly taken its place as a political factor, and it had called the International to its aid.

The next step taken was still bolder.

In September of the same year (1872) a "Congress" of the Internationalists was held at The Hague. It was in every way a remarkable gathering. At the opening of the session, two antagonistic parties pitted themselves against each other; and at the opening of the session, also, delegates from New York presented their credentials, and were admitted to seats. Among these delegates were William West, an old Socialist and Trade-Unionist, who has recently made himself conspicuous as a stirrer-up of disorder in this city; Osborn Ward, an American agitator, who, previous to the Franco-Prussian war, visited most of the cooperative societies in the different countries of Europe, engineering the projects of the International; and Edouard David, a Frenchman, who afterward published in Le Socialiste, of New York, an explanation of his reasons for rejecting some of the conclusions at which the Hague Congress arrived. A trial of strength between the "Federalist" delegates, who opposed a political organization, and the "Centralizing General Council," led by Karl Marx, ended in the utter defeat of the former. Karl Marx was a good organizer and a masterful leader. He succeeded in driving out of the Congress the French party of Blanqui, and the moderate party of the English, the Swiss, and the Belgians; and the net result of an angry conference was the lodgment of all the effective power of the organization in the hands of the extreme German Centralists. This point gained, and all the moderates being worsted, it became an interesting question where and how the reconstructed General Council could best continue the work so elaborately planned and so persistently carried forward. England had shown the cold shoulder; France was entirely out of the question; neither at Leipzig nor at Berlin would the International be permitted to sit. It was resolved to establish headquarters in the City of New York. (See the Independence Belge, London Times, London Spectator, and cable despatches to the New York papers of September, 1872.) "We do not at all grudge Dr. Karl Marx to New York," said the London Spectator of September 14; "on the contrary, we think London can well spare him." Karl Marx's acceptance of the responsibility placed upon his shoulders appeared in the London Times in January, 1873, under his own signature; and the last clause of his letter, written in reply to some protest issued by the French malcontents, established the fact that the centre of operations had been formally transferred to New York. "If in France individuals have been expelled from the International," wrote Marx,

"it has been by the local Sections, and not at all by the New York General Council." (Letter of January 2, 1873, in the London Times.)

The close of the year 1872, therefore, witnessed the transfer of Internationalist headquarters from London to New York. This completes another link in the chain of evidence.

X.

The transfer was not regarded with favor by the American people nor the American press. Sagacious observers of affairs knew it portended evil. Many of our public journals pointed out that the purpose of the change was to employ the machinery of a mischievous organization to create discord between capital and labor in the United States; to stir up our industrial class to deeds of violence; to war upon society; and to attempt, by underhanded methods, to achieve in this country the ends it was unable to compass in Europe. Proof was soon at hand that the Internationalists had begun to busy themselves with the workingmen. In January, 1873, labor agitations broke out in New Orleans. On the 2d of February, a letter written by one John Little, of that city, was openly read at a regular Sunday session of the International Society in New York, in which it was stated that the workingmen of New Orleans were "fast getting to that state of desperation" when a change in their condition must be made; that "the manner in which it is to be changed will be no object to them"; that a letter had been sent to the Chief of the Fire Department of New Orleans, notifying him that the city would be "laid in ashes" on the 15th of January; and that, in consequence of this warning, guards had been placed in charge of the fire apparatus, and the police patrol had been doubled. "The capitalists are in dread" was the cheerful comment added by Mr. Little in his epistle addressed to "Citizen Hubert, Corresponding Secretary of the International Society," in New York. The Communists had begun their work betimes. They came here to inflame the minds of the working classes, and they did their work so thoroughly that the events of 1877 are no longer wonderful nor inexplicable, when studied by the light of history. New Orleans was not burned in 1873, nor New York sacked in 1877; but neither city owed its safety to the Internationalists.

XI.

While the plotters who figured at The Hague had been engaged in preparing their well-devised programme of future operations, their agents here had helped to widen the breach between labor and capital; and the great strike of May-June, 1872, was the result. Forty thousand men "went out" in the middle of May. Every manufacturing interest in this city was paralyzed. The middle of June came; and then the employers, forced to take action in self-defence, banded themselves together under a mutual pledge that they would not thereafter "retain in their employ any workman guilty of an act looking to the arbitrary establishment of relations between employer and employed." Three hundred employers, driven to extremity by the embarrassments and losses caused by the strike, united in declaring this ultimatum. It was published in the newspapers of the day (June, 1872), with an imposing array of signatures, and it gave the death-blow to the organized movement of the workingmen. The latter had been led to believe that they were all-powerful. They stood out for four weeks, and their losses in wages, at the rates then current, were not less than $1,500,000. The determined attitude of the employing class convinced the strikers that nothing was to be gained by holding out longer, living upon the charity of their Trade Unions, and hearing their children cry for bread. Little by little, they fell back into their old ways, and the strike ended peaceably.

But this episode had a deeper meaning—not thoroughly understood by casual observers of events. Its inner history bore a close relation to the secret movements of the International Society, and some of the unguarded expressions used by indiscreet and hot-headed leaders of the strike revealed the teachings of the Communists, and curiously echoed the utterances of 1847 and 1869—already cited in the present paper. The chain becomes more complete when the stray rivets are found and fitted into the places made for them. For example:—

At a mass-meeting of workingmen held in Masonic Hall, in New York, on Saturday evening, May 18, 1872, at which, according to a statement made by the chairman, the interests of six thousand carpenters and joiners were represented, one McDonagh declared that the men would demand the general adoption of the eight-hour system, "if it caused a revolution or the reënacting of the days of the Paris Commune and all its horrors." Another prominent speaker, named Monroe, bade the strikers remember that "they had the employers on their knees, and there they would keep them till they came to terms." A third orator, Charles Dowling, said that if the strikers did not succeed, "violence and bloodshed would be resorted to, and those opposing and working against the society would be beheaded: they were a determined body, and meant business." These remarks were vigorously applauded. The full reports of the proceedings of this meeting will be found in the New York morning papers of the following day. The inflammatory addresses were at the time attributed, not unnaturally, to the excitement of the strike and the over-zealous efforts of the Trade Union leaders to keep their men in line, and well up to the work in hand. Looking back to this period, in the light afforded by subsequent revelations and events, and comparing the European fulminations of 1847 and 1869 with the American fulminations of the spring of 1872, a strong family likeness becomes startlingly apparent, and that which was at first supposed to be the violent language of unskilled speakers becomes, by parity of reasoning, but as the calm recitation of a lesson well conned. The International had been a patient and skilful teacher.

The great strike of 1872 ended in the total defeat of the strikers. But the snake was scotched, not killed. Sullen discontent took the place of bravado. Labor had combined formidably against capital, and it had failed, because capital had formed a stronger combination. The employing class did not improve their victory altogether wisely: the laboring class still had its grievances, and still bore its burdens. What wonder that the Internationalists in conference at The Hague saw their way clearly to the establishment of general headquarters in New York, where a great discontented body of forty thousand workingmen were smarting under failure and defeat? The histories of these two events look.

XII.

The stirring time of 1872 was followed by another season of quiet preparation. A bold experiment had been made. It had failed. It was necessary to try a new deal. The winter of 1872-1873 was unmarked by any notable demonstration of labor agitation or Internationalist scheming; but early in the spring of 1873 there were significant indications that the interval of apparent repose had been skilfully utilized by the uneasy plotters. In March and April of that year, outgivings came from Washington to the effect that the leaders of the Trade Unions had held secret conferences, and that some new movement was contemplated. Early in the following May the story came out. The secret conferences had resulted in the formation of a body entitled "The United Workingmen of America," which first announced its existence by the publication of a programme setting forth the details of a system of national and local organization for the purpose of guarding the interests of labor. The new organization declared its purpose to be the elevation of the American workman, intellectually, morally, materially, and socially, and to secure consideration and justice in legislation. In other words, a new party had challenged public attention,—the party of labor; without a political platform, certainly, but hopeful of an increase of strength by the speciousness of its appeals to the personal interests of a great class.

It soon became apparent how the new organization intended to begin its work. During the spring of 1873, the eight-hour movement had been revived in New York and elsewhere, and the Internationalist delegates had again appeared at the meetings of the trades. But no decided steps had been taken up to the time of the issue of the Washington manifesto. It remained for the new party to assume the leadership. The ferment had been carefully nursed, in preparation for a general and concerted demonstration when the time should have become ripe for it. In the spring and early summer of 1873, the eight-hour agitation was continued from month to month with varying degrees of success; but the new party did not show its hand boldly until July, when an "Industrial Congress" was held in Cleveland, Ohio, which was composed of seventy delegates from Trade Unions, representing twelve States. The presiding officer announced that it was the purpose of this body to form a new political party. The declaration was a bold one, but it was made shrewdly as well as boldly,—for the counsel given to the great body of the Trade-Unionists of the United States was moderate, and even dignified. The workingmen were advised to adopt a general system of arbitration for the settlement of difficulties between employers and employed; and the principle of coöperation was earnestly commended to their attention. The discussions of the Congress were conducted decorously; its wise counsel was spread broadcast; the popular belief was that the Trade Unionists had shown signs of returning sense. Lulled into security by the fair exhibit, the great mass of our people thought the International was dead and the Trade Union fangless. The scenes of July, 1877, were needed to dispel this dangerous delusion.

XIII.

The fall of 1873 and the winter of 1873-1874 brought out new and alarming developments.

The Communists had been busy. They had determined their line of operation, and meant to follow it; and while men slept they had diligently sown tares. Gathering courage from immunity, their leaders, in January, 1874, thought the hour had come to throw off the mask, and to display their strength. Out of this thought grew the famous mass-meeting, held at the Cooper Institute on Friday night, Jan. 30, 1874,—a meeting ostensibly called to utter a public protest against the suppression of an incipient riot at Tompkins Square, in which act of suppression, as all honest men now know, the municipal authorities acted wisely as well as promptly. At this mass-meeting, the principal speech in the English tongue was delivered by Mr. John Swinton. His companions on the rostrum were chiefly French and German,—all of them pronounced Communists. To this company, claiming to be workingmen, came Mr. Swinton, charged with a speech which was one of the most extraordinary recorded in the annals of oratory. Given with calm deliberation; manifestly prepared with unusual care by an acute, logical, and comprehensive mind; adorned with illustrations exactly calculated to fire the inflammable element to which it was addressed; appealing with nervous eloquence to the passions of an excited multitude that bowed instinctively under the magnetic influence of a superior mind—was it wonderful that Mr. John Swinton's harangue stirred that Communist gathering to the pitch of frenzy; or that he was offered (and accepted) the "Workingmen's" nomination for the office of Mayor of the city; or that, three years later, he became a recognized leader of the Commune when Communism rose against law and order? Not at all. It was as natural as that water should run down hill. Mr. Swinton openly affiliated with Justus Schwab by marching in public procession with him in 1874; and again by appearing on the same platform with him at the Tompkins Square meeting in 1877. The interval between these two appearances was two-and-a-half years. Mark how this considerable interval of time was occupied by the leaders of the Communists, and the effects produced by their machinations.

The disastrous consequences of the panic of September, 1873, had given the Communists a strong hold upon the minds of the laboring-classes. That hold they were determined to retain. Insidious appeals to the passions of the multitude were constantly put forth through the columns of the so-called labor journals, in public meetings (avowedly Communist), in circulars and pamphlets,—and, unfortunately, too often in the editorial columns of widely-circulated daily newspapers. The great unthinking mass of our workmen, suddenly thrown out of employment by the suspension of factories and the stoppage of large business houses, saw their families drifting into want, and they turned a willing ear to the smooth-tongued varlets who sought to convince them that property was robbery, and capital tyranny. It is needless to recapitulate here the processes through which this poison was instilled into the workingmen's minds. The records of 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 are familiar to the general reader. It is, however, but common justice to add that a large proportion of the members enrolled in the older Trade Unions resisted the effort to change the character of those bodies. The American Trade Unionists had borrowed his plan from Europe, it is true; but had borrowed it before the Internationalists had become a vital force—before Communism had raised its head—before the red flag had been declared "the symbol of universal human love." Mistaken as our Trade Unions were and are in many of their theories, nothing was further from the thoughts of their founders than open revolt against constituted authority or ambitious striving for the attainment of political power. Had the native-born Trade Unionists been let alone, they would probably have been content with the self-protective, cooperative, and benevolent features of their system, and willing to compose such differences as might have arisen between themselves and their employers on a fair basis of arbitration and compromise. But now the moderates have been swept aside, and the radicals are stepping forward, with no regard for the protests of a helpless minority. It is time to appreciate this fact at its full value.

XIV.

The events of July, 1877, were but the natural outcome of the heresies assiduously preached by the foreign leaders who falsely claimed to be workmen and the friends of the workman. Idleness, poverty, distress, distorted notions of the relations of labor and capital, ill-regulated passions, lack of thought, had been skillfully turned to account by the unscrupulous Internationalists in order to debauch the workmen and to twist the Trade Union organization into a dangerous weapon of offence. How successfully this work was accomplished, the appalling scenes of the summer of 1877 demonstrated only too clearly.

The suddenness and completeness of the catastrophe showed the care with which the mine had been laid. In an incredibly short space of time after the first outbreak at Martinsburg, the great strike had extended to Baltimore, thence to Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, New York, and half-a-dozen other States. The trunk railway lines were blocked; travel and trade were stopped; troops were called out by federal and State authority; fifteen thousand Trade Unionists were banded together to defy the law; blood was shed; property valued at millions of dollars was wantonly destroyed; perishable goods in transit were irretrievably lost; the great cities were profoundly agitated; and, but for the prompt action of the State and local authorities, and the brave bearing of our citizen soldiery, would have been panic-stricken, through justifiable apprehension of a renewal of the mob violence of July, 1863. If any proof had been needed to establish the complicity of the Communists in the plot, it was given in ample measure by the "Internationalists" themselves. The strike had hardly gained headway before the chiefs of the International "sections" opened communications with the Trade Unions enlisted in the conspiracy. "Secretary" Goldsmith, in Hartford; Van Patten and Schilling, in Chicago; Curlin, Curtis, Cardell, Ratz, Porter, Cope, and Sykora, in St. Louis; Schwab, Swinton, Doyle, Kaiser, Thompson, Demorest, and others, in New York, put forth continuous efforts to encourage the strikers, and to arouse the sympathy of the whole class of workmen. Out of this grew the Tompkins Square meeting of July 25, which was wisely permitted to take place; and which, quite as wisely, was kept in restraint by eight thousand national guardsmen on duty in their armories, and one thousand policemen on duty in and around the square. The strong arm of the law was potent to avert scenes of violence. It did not exercise its potency to prevent free speech,—nor should it have done so. Hence the bold appeal made to the President of the United States, as the embodiment of the unanimous sentiment of the meeting; and hence, also, the "declaration" published by the Communists on the following day.

The "declaration" recited (1) that the "Workingmen's Party of the City and County of New York" tendered its heartfelt sympathies to the railroad men then on strike in different localities in the country; (2) that it considered all legalized charter corporations the enemies of the working-class; (3) that the chartered companies were responsible for acts of violence provoked by oppression; (4) "that we do earnestly request and advise all the working-classes throughout the country to unite as speedily as possible for the purpose of forming a political party, based on the natural rights of labor," and "that nothing short of a political revolution, through the ballot-box, on the part of the working-classes, will remedy the evils under which they suffer"; and, still further, "that it is the purpose of the Workingmen's Party to confiscate, through legislation, the unjustly gotten wealth of these legalized and chartered corporation thieves that are backed by the Shylocks and moneyed syndicates of Europe and this country."

This looked like rhodomontade. It was regarded at the time, by the great mass of our people, as only a fresh spurt by crazy fanatics. The press gave very little attention to it. The mob had been quelled; what matter? So men went about their business again; order was restored; the wheels of trade revolved; and the thrifty American concluded that the storm had blown over, and that all he had to do was to attend to his own affairs in his own way. Lulled into this false security, all but a very few of our people left the Communist free to do as he pleased,—provided only that he should not again rise in insurrection.

Among the few observant thinkers who, reasoning logically from cause to effect, found reason to apprehend future evil consequences from the outbreak, one of the earliest to sound a note of warning was the Hon. William M. Groves, who wrote in the International Review (October-November, 1877): "By the light of the flames at Pittsburgh we may see approaching a terrible trial for free institutions in this country. The Communist is here." Enforcing this statement by a formidable array of evidence, as well as by inferences based upon solid conclusions, Mr. Groves sought to arouse the public mind to a sense of impending danger. He linked the Western granger with the Communist, and argued that the panic of 1873 was the immediate effect of granger legislation, and that it was "greatly extended, prolonged, and intensified by the communistic war upon capital at the West." He also contended that our local governments, "as now constituted, are utterly incompetent to deal with the spirit of communism,"—a statement which may well be questioned, in view of the summary measures adopted in New York and Pennsylvania to put down the riots of last year. But let that pass. It is not likely that the scenes of Pittsburgh will be repeated very soon. The Communist has determined to go into politics. He has found that mobs can be put down here more speedily than in Paris; and he has also discovered that the ballot is more potent than the bullet in getting the control of American institutions. Here lies the real peril. It is full time for the American people to recognize its existence.

XV.

At Newark, N.J., in the last week of December, 1877, a body of delegates assembled who called themselves a "Congress of the Workingmen's Party of the United States." Eighty-four "Sections" were represented, and it was claimed that the aggregate membership of the Sections amounted to twelve thousand or fifteen thousand. Probably the numbers were not exaggerated. The avowed purpose of the gathering was the preliminary organization of a new political party; the notorious Justus Schwab put in an appearance very early in the session, and was accepted as the leader; and on the twenty-ninth of December, in open meeting, the Congress unanimously voted to change its title from "The Workingmen's Party" to that of the "Socialistic Labor Party." Here was a starting-point from which a new era dates.

The Newark Congress will become historical. It is therefore proper to put its "platform" on record, for purposes of future reference. Briefly stated, the points of that remarkable document are these:—

1. Introduction of a legal work-day of not more than eight hours, and strict punishment of all violations.
2. Sanitary inspection of all conditions of labor, means of subsistence, and dwellings.
3. The establishment of bureaus of labor statistics in all States, as well as by the National Government. The officers of these bureaus shall be elected by the people.
4. Prohibition of the employment of children under fourteen years of age in any industrial establishment.
5. Prohibition of the use of prison-labor by private employers.
6. Compulsory education for all children under fourteen years of age; all educational facilities to be furnished free.
7. Strict laws making all employers responsible for injury to employees resulting from negligence of employers.
8. Strict laws requiring all wages to be paid in the lawful money of the country at intervals not exceeding one week.
9. Abolishment of all compulsory laws tending to prevent combinations of workmen to strike or induce others to strike.
10. Gratuitous administration of justice in all courts of law.
11. Abolishment of all indirect taxation, and adoption of a graded income tax.
12. All banking and insurance to be conducted by the National Government.
13. Strict prohibition of any laws limiting the right of male suffrage.
14. Introduction of direct popular legislation; the people to have the right to adopt or reject all proposed laws.
15. A system of minority representation to be adopted as soon as possible.
16. The Senate to be abolished in all Legislatures and the National Congress.
17. All public officers to be subject to prompt recall by a direct vote of the people.
18. Prohibition of female labor in occupations injurious to health and morals; the wages of women to be equal to those of men where the same labor is performed.

Sections 1, 9, 10, 12, 13, and 14 of this platform are shrewdly offset by other declarations which would be generally accepted—and workmen will be asked to swallow the offensive six together with all the rest. The Communist is a cross between Machiavelli and Ignatius Loyola.

Men have scoffed at the theory that a political party can be organized out of the chaotic material furnished by the Trade Unions. Nevertheless, it has been proved (1) that the International Society has ambitious political projects in view; (2) that it is in close affiliation with the Trade Unions; (3) that to-day it virtually governs the whole Trade Union system of this country; (4) that attempts have been made to exhibit the strength of the so-called Workingmen's (or Communist) party at the polls, and (5) that a respectable exhibit of votes in Ohio and in New York at the elections in November, 1877, and again in the spring elections of the present year in the same States, when they showed increased strength, gives palpable evidence that that party is not a myth, but, on the contrary, is constantly growing.

The Trade Union is the agency which the Communists intend to employ to compass the ends indicated in the Newark platform; and they will employ it.

XVI.

The facts that have been cited show:—

1. That the process of affiliation between Trade Unionism and Communism is no chimera.
2. That the inflexible purpose of the International Society is "to overthrow the rule of capital by the acquisition of political power."
3. That the failure of the Communists in Europe led them to occupy the new field temptingly opened to them in the United States.
4. That the doctrines of the International Society, boldly enunciated by Karl Marx, in 1847, have been emphatically reaffirmed here in 1877, and put in practice by the conjoint efforts of Communists and Trade Unionists.
5. That the vast army of coopers, blacksmiths, shoemakers, printers, carpenters, masons, plumbers, and other skilled mechanics, defeated again and again in their efforts to coerce the employing class, are now met by counter-combinations which refuse (as the Tribune did last summer, and as the Lynn manufacturers are doing to-day) to employ Trade Unionists on any terms.

6. That the Trade Unionist, loth to lose the power he once enjoyed, hopes by his affiliation with the Communist to establish a new order of things upon the ruins of American institutions.

It follows that, if the nation is to be efficiently guarded against an imminent peril, the Trade Union must be shorn of the powers it has assumed to exercise. To break the Trade Union is to destroy the fulcrum the Communist is using. The Trade Union, which places good and bad workmen on the same footing, which pursues its course relentlessly until every industry is in turn subjected to paralysis and loss, which so weakens the apprenticeship system by absurd regulations that the coming generation of operatives will be unable to hold their own against foreign competition, and which learns nothing from disaster, is precisely the instrument for the purpose the Internationalists came here to accomplish. If it be true—and there are few right-minded men who will question it—that there is no necessary conflict between capital and labor, it ought to be equally true that capital shall not be the slave of labor; yet this is what the Trade Union seeks to make it, while the Internationalist seeks to destroy it altogether. The employer being necessary to the workman, and the workman to the employer, the Communist with his crazy notions, is not wanted. He nurses the Trade Union, and controls it; and he will continue to shape it to his own ends as long as our employing class give vitality to Trade Unionism by employing its members and acceding to its preposterous demands.

It is not extravagant to predict that if Trade Unionism, now identified with American Communism, is permitted still to have its own way, the combined forces of the two affiliated systems will yet produce a serious political complication,—perhaps create the chief issue in a Presidential contest, to the exclusion of tariffs, financial problems, or other questions of government policy. The signs of the times are full of portents; and the presence of the Communist is one of our present dangers. The Trade Union suppressed, the Communist in America would die the death he deserves to meet; for then he might say with Shylock, "You take my life when you do take the means whereby I live."—New York Tribune, April 27.

I WILL NOT invade the rights of others. You have no right to leap from the hedges of superstition, and strike down the pioneers of the human race. You have no right to sacrifice the liberties of man upon the altars of ghosts. Believe what you may; preach what you desire; have all the forms and ceremonies you please; exercise your liberty in your own way, and extend to all others the same right.—Ingersoll.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 4.

R. R. Kelly, $2; R. J. Rogers, $2; H. W. Beach, $3; D. Roggenban, $3.20; J. W. Pike, $3.20; Charles Mead, $5; William Barbour, $1; William Galpin, $1; Rev. B. W. Sample, 75 cents; Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, $0.60; H. L. Houghton, $0.60; A. A. Levi, $3; C. A. Simpson, 30 cents; R. F. Kellogg, $1.80; T. C. Randolph, $3.20; E. W. Abbot, $3.40; Allen Keen, $3; J. E. Sutton, 25 cents; A. C. Clark, $3.20; Mrs. Clara Neymann, $4.40; S. Hammerlough, $12; Rev. D. M. Samfield, $3.20; S. S. Ball, $3.20; Jno. M. Ramsey, $10; J. T. Clarkson, $10; E. D. Stark, $10; Mrs. W. F. Southworth, $25; W. Johnson, $10; H. B. Baneroff, $10; A. P. Rose, $3.20; O. M. Lawler, $3.20; Dr. E. M. Moore, $7.07; Hon. G. L. Clark, $4.27; Jane E. Curtis, $2; Charles M. Cuyler, $3.20; W. H. Savage, $3.20; Charles T. How, $3.20; Cash, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 9, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FANT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTATIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIEUR WRIGHT, O. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

THE NEW YORK Tribune gives these paragraphs in recent issues:—

While the attention of the public is directed to the dangerous tendencies of Communism, the incendiary speeches of Agitator Kearney, of San Francisco, may not fall upon deaf ears. A week ago Sunday he faced a large assembly of workmen, and reminded them that they had an organization of twenty thousand drilled and able-bodied soldiers, with muskets and bayonets in their hands. "We are going," he cried, "to fight the men that employ Chinamen individually; we are going, instead of hurting their heads, that are empty, to hurt their pockets, that are full. I was about to announce my remedy for the suppression of lepers and leprosy. When we have about twenty thousand drilled men, with muskets and bayonets, and powder and bullets, we have the sympathy of forty thousand more, which will make sixty thousand able-bodied men ready to fight for independence, ready to fight for bread and butter. We march down to the wharf some fine morning, the ship will be coming in at the Golden Gate with a couple of thousand lepers aboard. We march down to the wharf and we present arms, and say, Now land, you lepers, if you dare." This demagogue has been rattling on in this way for a twelvemonth.

That the Socialists of Chicago are arming and drilling, one of their leaders, A. R. Parsons, frankly admits. He informs a reporter of the Tribune that they intend to try the merit of the constitutional provision of the United States which guarantees to every citizen the right to keep and bear arms. "At our mass-meetings this summer," he says, "we shall carry our arms with us; and if the armed assassins and paid murderers employed by the capitalistic class undertake to disperse and break up our meetings, as they did in such an outrageous manner last summer, they will meet foes worthy of their steel." "In other words, you don't propose to use the arms until the other side become the aggressors?" "We don't propose to use arms unless they interfere with us and try to break up our meetings. But as to their being the aggressors, why that's what the capitalists always are. They are always treating the working classes with violence. Isn't starvation wages violence? Isn't trampism violence? Isn't depriving men by the hundred thousand of the right to live and support their families violence, and violence of the most infamous character? We simply resist. We protect ourselves. That's all."

The Communist Society in Cincinnati, which believes that bullets are better than ballots, was organized under peculiar circumstances. The Enquirer states that several months ago a member of the socialist party attended a meeting of men of his own order of restlessness, and proposed that, as they were unable to accomplish their ends by ballot, they should resort to more violent means, and arm in enforcement of their peculiar doctrines. This was voted down by the wiser and more conservative heads; but the result was, that the mover of this resolution, followed by a considerable number of his adherents, proceeded to organize in the proposed manner, and now had in his single company about seventy-five men. These men meet every Sunday, at a hall on Ninth Street, for practice and drill, and are becoming very efficient in the use of arms. They have full uniforms of gray, military hats, with green cockades, Springfield rifles, and breech-loaders. The leaders affirm that they are drilling for "the fun of it."

A mysterious activity among the laboring men of the District of Columbia is reported to have been observed within the past few weeks. A few days ago, it is said, a representative from some Western laboring-men's organization visited Washington and held consultations with the leading officers of trades unions here, as well as with the leaders of organizations of colored men. It is reported that he informed them of an impending strike to be started about next August, and advised them to prepare for participating in it. The presence of such an agent in Washington, and the renewed activity of the workingmen's associations already referred to have given rise to some rather sensational reports. For instance, it is asserted that military companies have been formed; arms have been procured, and frequent drills have taken place. A crowd of white and black laborers congregated in the vicinity of the City Hall to-day; and some of their number have been heard to use very violent language,—threatening, in fact, that if they are not relieved before the summer passes, forcible measures, resulting in the destruction of the public property, will result.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, May 30, at 7.45 P.M., session for business in Horticultural Hall; election of officers; reading of reports; and general consideration of the practical work of the Association.

Friday, May 31, at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject: "The Religion of Humanity, and how it may be Organized"; essayist, Thos. B. Wakeman, Esq., of the Society of Humanity, New York. Afternoon subject: "The Religion of Supernaturalism, and how it is being Disorganized"; essayist, Mr. Wm. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, Mass. Further announcement as to speakers will be made hereafter.

On Friday evening there will be a social gathering in Horticultural Hall.

WM. J. POTTER,
Secretary.

"LOGIC" AND "FAITH."

It has been a pleasant surprise to us to receive the many touching responses elicited by our little article called "Peering," in THE INDEX of March 21. Mostly such as we felt it would be indecorous to print, not one of them has failed to deepen and quicken that sense of sympathy with unseen friends which is the necessary support of such solitary work as ours. There is one, however, which was evidently designed to reach others, and which we find so thoughtfully and candidly written as to invite a further consideration of the subject. We refer to the letter of Professor Long, of Palmyra, Missouri, which is published on a succeeding page. The writer is presumably a Christian; but he waives all appeal to the standard authorities of his religion, and addresses himself so frankly and courteously to reason that fraternal colloquy becomes a pleasure. It will be advisable to peruse his communication before reading further here, since we purpose merely to make some comments on the leading points he presents.

1. "Now you admit that you, in common with others, have implanted in your soul a yearning after immortality, but say that you know of no logical process by which this vague longing can be developed into certain knowledge."

In order to be clearly understood, it is proper to make a slight correction of the "admission" referred to. We did not admit that any such yearning had been "implanted"; that would be to recognize the innateness of it, or its complete independence of experience. It happens that in our judgment experience is the sole origin of all human knowledge, though we take the word in a far more comprehensive sense than usual, so as to include intellectual perceptions as well as mere sensations. We do not believe that a special "yearning for immortality" has been "implanted" in the human mind in any sense inconsistent with its derivation from experience and education; that belief is a part of the "Intuitionism" of the Transcendental school, but not of scientific philosophy or theism. Moreover, as a matter of fact, the longing for perpetuated individual existence after death varies so much in intensity in different individuals that its universality cannot be conceded,—still less its assumed "implanted" character. These statements are indispensable for clearness, and we pass on.

2. "In this you must admit, I think, that the Christian has greatly the advantage over you."

No, we cannot admit that. We do admit that the Christian may have (not that he always has) a fixity of belief in immortality which is a source of great comfort to him. But shall it be said that fixity of belief is a "great advantage," if the belief itself is not a true one? That is the real issue: is the belief true? No subjective certainty, no emotional satisfaction, no rapture or ecstasy or glorified imagination, can be counted advantageous in any high sense, if its basis is after all a delusion. The real advantage is with the soul which loves truth better than any indulgence in delicious fiction.

On this point, the supreme sanctity and supreme authority of truth, we hold that science teaches a far loftier and purer morality than the Christian religion. If the Church had counted the interests of truth as superior to the interests of her own dogmatic system or ecclesiastical rule, she would never have set her face like a flint against every new discovery or idea which menaced those lower interests. Granted that it is pleasant to believe a lie than the truth, when the truth calls for the sacrifice of beliefs that have become dear to us; it still remains the dictate of wisdom, as well as of the highest ethics, to turn steadfastly towards the truth, and make the needed sacrifice. Pain is not the worst of evils,—for this is loss of spiritual integrity. Cost what it may, that soul has the immeasurable advantage which bends reverently before the true, and spurns all temptations which would seduce it from its allegiance to this supreme ideal. The Christian is welcome to all the comfort, the solace, the rapture, the moral support, or the spiritual stimulus, which flow from the absolute certainty he cherishes of a glorious futurity of bliss; we would rob him of none of these things, and envy him as little. He may fancy they give him a "great advantage"; but they make him the victim of a delusion. The only advantage we covet is ours—the advantage of dealing fearlessly, gravely, humbly, with that august Truth of the Universe which no supplications can bend, no longings reverse, no insurrection of passionate wishes undermine. Whatever moral or spiritual strength may issue from the Christian's steadfast faith in the life to come, a mightier moral vigor flows from the free soul's obedience to the highest laws of the life that now is. To the Christian's affrighted imagination, the free thinker's relinquishment of the glowing torch of Faith seems a plunge into eternal night. But the calm radiance of the stars was only hidden by its flaring flames and clouds of smoke; the solitary pilgrim towards the temple of truth finds the starlight more luminous than any torch; and, notwithstanding the uncertainties of his pathway, he fares onward with a serene and—why should we not say it?—with a more truly religious spirit. For religion is the highest life of the soul, and who lives it better than he to whom truth is all?

3. But Professor Long argues at some length to show that the highest truth cannot be won by the "logical faculty," and that it is necessary to postulate a "faith-faculty, which," he says, "I regard as a higher faculty than the understanding, or reason, for the reason that it seizes truth directly and immediately."

The distinction here drawn does not distinguish; for the "logical faculty" itself, if it "seizes truth" at all, seizes it "directly and immediately." Take the syllogism, the typical process of the logical faculty; it consists of two premises, a major and a minor, and the conclusion. For instance:—

All virtues are commendable;
Justice is a virtue;
Therefore, justice is commendable.

Now here are three propositions, related to each other in a certain manner. Each of the three propositions expresses a relation between its subject and predicate; and the third, containing the inference, really expresses a mere relation between the two premises. How are these relations affirmed? By the "logical faculty," which "seizes the truth directly and immediately." In other words, the logical faculty, or understanding, sees the relations to be true; and the understanding constructs its longest chain of reasoning only by attaching to each other the separately perceived relations as so many links of the chain. In its essence, the logical faculty is nothing but an "immediate and direct seizure of the truth" of each separate relation, and a linking together of the separate relations in the unity of a still larger relation. It is to this extent an "intuitive" faculty, in the correct or philosophical meaning of the word "intuition"—which has nothing to do with the theological meaning of it; and it has two functions, one passive and one active. So far as its passivity is concerned, it simply receives impressions from the vast, complex environment of relations objectively existing in Nature; and so far as its activity is concerned, it simply coordinates these impressions in a definite series, according to natural laws of its own. Thus we see that the "logical faculty" simply converts facts of being into affirmations of thought,—dissolves Nature, so to speak, into Mind; in Professor Long's phrase, it "seizes truth directly and immediately."

Now since Professor Long conceives that it is the distinctive function of his postulated "faith-faculty" to do this, it is evident that his postulate of such a faculty is wholly superfluous; there is no need of a "faith-faculty" to do what the "logical faculty" itself does. That is our reply to him. His assumption of a special "faith-faculty" distinct from the "logical faculty" ("intuition," as the Transcendentalists style it) rests on a defective analysis of the essential processes of the logical understanding. He, like the Transcendentalists, having invented this superfluous faculty of "faith," forthwith proceeds to make use of it to sustain various doctrines which are really the product of his own mere understanding. He may quote De Quincey, Tyndall, Herbert Spencer, Dr. Bastian, or whom he pleases; it is not our fault if these honored thinkers failed to discern the real functions of the logical faculty, and we certainly entertain no special veneration for their mistakes on a subject they have so insufficiently studied. Our point is that Professor Long and all other Christians are really employing that despised "logical faculty," when they fondly imagine they are soaring into the empyrean on the wings of "faith"; with this addition, however, that, not knowing what they are using, they unconsciously misuse it. There is no light for man on anything in this whole vast universe except the light of reason; and we shall all be wiser—in the end, also, happier—for coming at last to comprehend this momentous truth. There is no light on the impenetrable future of man beyond the grave to be derived from "revelation" or "intuition" or "faith"; these are will-o'-the-wisps, and will guide us only to bogs and fens. The advancing science of the world is our truest guide; and, though she has to-day no positive answer to our wistful questionings on this subject that lies so near our hearts, it is much to know that she does not and cannot extinguish the star of Hope.

THE GNOMIC WISDOM.

Perhaps there is no juster test of the mind of a people than its proverbs. The maxim tells of the quality of thought, the recognised standard, the norm of life, and the power of expression. There must be condensation and point. The proverb must have, in two particulars at least, what Martial says of the epigram:—

"Three things must epigrams, like bees, have all,—
A sting, and honey, and a body small."

The pains taken by the old Hindus to reach compactness and brevity is indicated in this from Max Müller: "Shortness is the great object of this style of composition [he is speaking of the Sūtras]; and it is a proverbial saying among the Pundits, that 'an author rejoiceth in the economizing of half a short vowel as much as in the birth of a son.'" A proverb has been well defined as "the wit of one and the wisdom of many."

This wisdom, thus minted, becomes coin current in society. It is an important part of the scripture of humanity. The apothegms and maxims of the wisest and most exalted minds of the race may well form our ever present vade mecum, our guardian and phylactery. They may become our guiding genius,—an ethereal presence, that lifts and protects us perpetually from temptation and sin. It is probable that in this age of ours, which inclines more strongly towards the realm of pure intellect, affects the "dry light" of the understanding, as Bacon calls it, more perhaps than any age which has preceded, there will be a deeper interest, a more sedulous cultivation of this branch of knowledge and source of quickening than ever before. These scriptures will come more and more into the foreground, and be cherished with a greater, warmer love.

Few persons, doubtless, are aware how much of the best things we have in the Greek and Hebrew Testaments is of this origin, coming down in the saws and apothegms of gnomic wisdom, sometimes from immemorial ages, and adopted and applied by the teachers whose names became canonized and deified. Some of them had a very remote origin, came from distant lands, and travelled like the myths and fables of old across all boundaries, till they reached the place where we find them. Not only Babylonia and Persia, but India, and possibly China also, had enriched Judea. The Sermon on the Mount is made up largely from this wisdom. A writer in Chambers's Cyclopædia says: "Even certain Jewish proverbs quoted by Christ and the apostles, which hitherto did not seem to offer any analogy in other languages, might be traced back to India, where they had existed for many centuries before they found their way into the popular speech of Palestine and Babylonia, and thence into the Talmud. There are passages in the New Testament that are well-nigh identical with some that we find current among the Chinese. The tracing of these migrations as well as those of myths, fables, etc., becomes a question of great interest; and it will be prosecuted to successful issue, doubtless, when modern scholarship, which is doing so much to-day to lay open this field, shall have put the full materials into our hands.

The Chinese have been very fruitful in this regard; the quality of their brain seems to impel them to the framing constantly of practical saws and maxims.

Mr. Samuel Johnson, in his admirable work on China, has given us a considerable sample of their gnomic wisdom, and has put us all deeply in debt to him for that as other great service. The Hindus and the Persians appear to have been not less gifted; and they have more juice in their speech, more of imagination, and the true poetic quality. Prof. Bohtlingk, of St. Petersburg, has published three volumes containing seven thousand six hundred and thirteen maxims and aphorisms from the Hindus alone.

Some of them are very striking and quaint, having for us a coloring, a freshness, and a force derived from the peculiarity of the temperament and the special surroundings of the people that spoke them.

I give a few of these, gathered from different sources. First from the Chinese:—

"Prevention is better than cure."

"One thread does not make a rope; one swallow does not make a summer."

"Judge not by appearance; the sea cannot be scooped up in a tumbler."

"Three days without study makes one's thought insipid."

"If the blind lead the blind, both go into the pit."

"If you reject the iron, you will never make the steel."

"Seek not every quality in one person."

"The gods cannot help one who loses opportunities."

"One desires to hide his tracks, and walks on the snow."

"The highest of men," says Confucius, "is he who does what is right without effort."

"Never did one who bent himself," says Mencius, "make another straight."

"A real man is he whose goodness is a part of himself." (Id.)

"That male and female should dwell together is the greatest of human relations." (Id.)

"Man," says Chu-hi, "is the bloom of the five elements, and contains their highest meaning."

"Recompense injury with kindness." Lau-Tsze.

"He that humbles himself shall be preserved entire." (Id.)

"The sage wears a coarse garment, and hides his jewel in his bosom. He is not self-displaying, and therefore he shines." (Id.)

"To keep tenderness, I pronounce strength." (Id.)

"He who knows the masculine nature, and at the same time keeps the feminine, shall be the whole world's channel, i.e., the centre of universal attraction." (Id.)

The following are from Hindu and Persian sources: "This universe is compacted from divine and active principles; a mutable universe from immutable ideas."

"Who finds activity in repose, and repose in action, he is the wise man."

"That alone belongs to you which you have bestowed."

"A crocodile in the water can destroy an elephant; out of the stream it is discomfited even by a dog. Where he is not at home, the skilful is of no avail."

"Mourn not the past; pry not curiously into the future. Study only to meet the high requirement of the present: this is the motto of the wise."

"Through large intercourse with men, the wise meet both their merits and their faults. When the gods churned the sea, they brought up both ambrosia and poison."

"Ravana, who, seeking to burn the tail of the monkey Hanuman, set fire to it, lived to see his own city burned down in consequence."

"Great trees, as fig-trees, make shade for others, and stand themselves in the glowing heat of the sun; they bear fruits for others, not for themselves."

"What wonder is it that noble men think only of the service they may render to others? Sandal trees thrive and grow, but not for themselves; they yield their cooling medicines to man."

"Though the sun should rise in the West, Mount Meru tremble and quake, fire congeal, and the lotus bloom upon the summit of the rock on the peak of the mountain, never shall the speech of noble men transmute to empty words."

"Not in good fortune but in ill is the power of great men revealed; when the wood of aloes is exposed to the flames, its fragrance exhales stronger than ever."

"How can the conceit engendered in any one's mind be quelled? The titibha (a species of bird) sleeps with its feet thrown upwards, from an apprehension that the sky may break down."

"A jar is gradually filled by the falling of water-drops. The same rule holds good in regard to all sciences, to virtue and to wealth."

"Birth closes the gate of gifts."

"The sandal-tree imparts fragrance to the axe which fells it."

"Wherever the tree of beneficence takes root, it sends forth branches beyond the sky."

"Be not anxious for subsistence; it is provided by the Maker."

"He by whom the swans are made white, parrots green, and peacocks variegated will also feed thee."

"Books are endless, the sciences are many, time is very short, and there are many obstacles; a man should therefore seek for that which is the essence, as a swan seeks to extract the milk which is mixed with water."

"Though one devote himself to many teachers, he must extract the essence, as the bee from flowers."

"The natural disposition is hard to overcome. If you make a dog a king, will he not still gnaw his shoe-strap?"

"The wound burnt in by fire may heal, but a wound burnt in by the tongue will never heal."

"I fear that this intemperance (in eating) may destroy you. Somebody nourished a wolf's whelp, which, when full grown, tore its master to pieces."

"Lot's wife associated with the wicked, and her posterity forfeited the gift of prophecy; but the dog of the companions of the cave, by long converse with the virtuous, became a rational creature."

"Although a discourse be captivating and sweet, commanding belief and admiration, yet, when you have once delivered it, repeat it not again; for, when you have once taken sweetmeats, it is enough."

Saskya Pandita, a Thibetan Lama of the thirteenth century, left a small volume of aphorisms and maxims, from which I can select here but two:—

"Good qualities, though hidden, become unveiled, and shine throughout the world. The flower of jasmine, although dried up, sends a sweet fragrance everywhere."

"Although there be an immense number of forests, few are the lands that have growth of sandal wood. In like manner, though there are many wise men, the golden sayings are very rare."

"Suppose me a steel weapon," says an ancient Chinese king to his minister, "I will use you for a whetstone; suppose me a year of drought, I will use you for a copious rain. Open your mind, and enrich mine. Be like medicine, which will not cure the patient, if it do not distress him."

Such office we may any of us warmly welcome from the sages of history.

C. D. B. M.

IS THE "POINT DESTROYED"?

We give the benefit of our circulation to the following, which appeared in the Boston Herald of April 26:—

Social Club Entertainments.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—

In your issue of April 25, I notice the following clipping from THE INDEX:—

"The 'Hollis Street Social Club' gave private theatricals in the Hollis Street Chapel in this city a week or two ago. A correspondent pertinently inquires: 'Why tax theatres?'"—THE INDEX.

I presume it was accidental that the Hollis Street Social Club happened to be selected for illustration in this case, as the "social clubs" connected with the Church of the Disciples, the South Congregational Church, the Mt. Pleasant Church, and several other churches frequently give similar entertainments in the vestries under their churches or in their chapels. Now I wish to state in behalf of the Hollis Street Social Club that their entertainments are given in the chapel in the rear of the church and not in a vestry under the same; that the profits of such entertainments are used for charitable objects; and, furthermore, that the proprietors of the meeting-house on Hollis Street are taxed by the city of Boston on a sum which more than covers any income received outside of the taxes and rents of pews. Much more could be said on this subject, but I will only ask your space to destroy the point of the above paragraph as applied to the H. S. S. C.

D'ARCY.

Boston, April 26, 1878.

The statement about the taxes paid by the "proprietors of the meeting-house on Hollis Street" is impenetrably foggy,—conveniently so, perhaps. The fact is that churches are not taxed in Massachusetts, "D'Arcy" to the contrary notwithstanding. "Much more might be said on this subject" by him, if he desires to be understood.

But the implied "point" which this rash but anonymous champion wants to "destroy" was that Hollis Street Church makes its property productive, and ought therefore to be taxed like theatres, even conceding that unproductive church property ought to be exempted. Has "D'Arcy" succeeded in "destroying this point"? Not in the least. He admits that these abunch-theatres produce "profits," which are used exactly like the profits of any other theatres: namely, as they please. The common argument that churches ought to be exempted from taxation because they are unproductive property is proved by this case to be false; they produce "profits." Very well; by this very argument, then, they ought to be taxed. Instead of "destroying" our "point," "D'Arcy" has only fortified it by his admissions. He must try again!

Communications.

THE "FAITH FACULTY."

ST. PAUL'S COLLEGE,
PALMYRA, Mo., March 31, 1878.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:—

A friend has handed me a number of THE INDEX, containing an article which has struck me with peculiar force. I allude to your reply to one who, from the depths of his heart, imploringly asks you to give him the "grounds" on which you seem to base a hope of a future life. Your friend is so earnest in his request that, if he had the grounds on which he might obtain a single foothold, he would prize them above all riches. But you candidly confess that you can give your friend no certain knowledge of immortality,—that all you can do is merely to reach back the voice of one equally bewildered and lost in the thick darkness.

Now you admit that you, in common with others, have implanted in your soul a yearning after immortality, but say that you know of no logical process by which this vague longing can be developed into certain knowledge. In this you must admit, I think, that the Christian has greatly the advantage over you. For, though he may not have arrived at this knowledge or belief of immortality by what you would call a logical process, yet this does not diminish the good effects of such a belief amid the sorrows and difficulties of our present mortality. With men of your type of thought it would seem that everything must come into the soul through the logical process, or not at all. But every student of psychology knows that the best results of human thought are often not arrived at through the logical faculty, but by altogether a different process. The heliocentric theory of the solar system was believed and taught ages before it was logically demonstrated. In fact, minds of the highest order arrive at truth by processes which you would not admit as logical. There is a higher faculty of the mind than the reason or the understanding. This you will doubtless think is a startling assertion to be made in an age when the faculty of reason is so highly lauded as man's crowning attribute. But I would quote from De Quincey, who warns us against implicitly trusting to the understanding, even in matters of literary criticism. He says: "The mere understanding, however useful and indispensable, is the meanest faculty in the human mind, and the most to be distrusted, and yet the great majority of people trust to nothing else; which may do for ordinary life, but not for philosophical purposes."

Let us, then, waive any appeal to a book-revelation, for you will not admit such authority. Let us take our stand within the precincts of consciousness. Now consciousness asserts itself to us under the double aspect of subject and object,—an internal spiritual sphere of conscious existence surrounded by an external world of material existence. The fundamental problem of theology, of philosophy, and even of science, is to discover a safe and easy passage between these two worlds, the spiritual and the material. We can assume that both worlds exist; there can be nothing more certain than consciousness. "I think, therefore I am," is the celebrated formula of Descartes. The external world must also exist as the very condition of conscious activity; as the opposite polar force against which consciousness may exert itself, and through which it may reflect itself. Even Fichte, who denied the reality of an external world, was compelled to hypothecate an ideal world lying out of the sphere of consciousness as the condition of its activity.

Now is there any faculty of the human mind by which it can pass from the seen, the sensuous, and material to the unseen, the supersensuous, and spiritual, a faculty by which spiritual existence can be felt and realized to be a permanent and enduring thing, independently of materiality? I maintain that there is. This I would call the faith-faculty, which I regard as a higher faculty than the understanding, or reason, for the reason that it seizes truth directly and immediately. The existence of such a faculty might be fairly assumed to exist; otherwise we must assume what is more difficult to believe; namely, that human consciousness must be at perpetual war with itself, haunted forever by aspirations and intimations of a spiritual world without ever being able to lay hold of it. The whole course of philosophy from the beginning of speculative thought till now, has been a double movement, ever alternating between idealism and realism, between the material and the spiritual. This has been because the attempt has been made to solve the problem through the logical process solely.

Hegel would solve the mystery of existence with his logical dialectic, while the realist, who begins on the other side of existence, would explain every thing by logical induction. The first method leads to mysticism, the second to gloomy scepticism. But by falling back upon the faith-faculty, realism and idealism became reconciled as the two hemispheres of complete being. Herbert Spencer, our great teacher in psychology, finds his universal postulate in this faith-faculty, or belief. Hamilton teaches that in every mental act, even in sense-perception, there is invariably present the operation of this faculty of the soul. Science can no more do without this mental faculty than theology and philosophy. Dr. Bastian says that he knows that matter and force can evolve life "by a sublime act of philosophic faith." "Out of experience in science," says Tyndall, "there arises something finer than mere experience. Experience, in fact, only furnishes the soil for plants of a higher growth." Hence theology, philosophy, and science all alike demand the exercise of this faith-faculty of the mind; neither does theology make any greater draught upon it than do those other departments of thought.

What account can we give of the origin or genesis of this mental faculty? Assuming with modern psychology that this, in common with the other mental faculties, has become organized in the soul through the experiences of countless generations, it still follows that it must have its external counterpart in the objective universe. As eyes imply light, so faith implies its appropriate objects,—an outlying universe of divine and spiritual realities. Thus the soul through the power of the faith-faculty climbs to a knowledge of that "lexicon" of the cosmos, which you admit is mind. If, then, one mighty, all-creating and all-prevailing mind exists behind the visible and moving hieroglyphics of the cosmos, why may not finite and human spirits pass over into that world, and feel themselves at home?

True, this faith-faculty may become enfeebled and even atrophied from the want of exercise on its proper objects. When this is the case, the soul is in the deplorable condition of still retaining this "longing after immortality," and "dread of falling into naught," without the power of extricating itself.

J. M. LONG.

THE METRIC REFORM.

I express my thanks to Mr. Henry Doty Maxson for his able discussion in an adverse sense (April 25) of my article in THE INDEX (Jan. 17) on "The American Metric System." I have since re-written that article in a shorter form; but, mindful of the proverb "Krámbe dis hepsoméne pótmón phérei," I shrink from burdening our friend, THE INDEX, with what would be in part sheer repetition, and will rely on the following table to convince Mr. Maxson that the system which I propose is not only as simple, but far more simple, than the French metric system:—

ANGLO-AMERICAN MEASURES, WEIGHTS, AND COINAGE.

1. MEASURES OF LENGTH.

- 1 Myriofeet=10,000 feet.
- 1 Khillifeet=1,000 feet.
- 1 Hecatontafeet=100 feet.
- 1 Decafeet=10 feet.
- 1 FOOT=one-third of a yard, a yard being the 7,000,000th part of the earth's radius and the 11,000,000th part of the quarter of the earth's circumference.

- 1 Decifeet=one 10th of a foot.
- 1 Centifeet=one 100th of a foot.
- 1 Millifeet=one 1,000th of a foot.

2. MEASURES OF SURFACE.

- 1 Myriofeet=10,000 square feet.
- 1 Khillifeet=1,000 square feet.
- 1 Hecatontafeet=100 square feet.
- 1 Decafeet=10 square feet.
- 1 SQUARE=1 square foot.
- 1 Decisquare=one 10th of a square foot.
- 1 Centisquare=one 100th of a square foot.
- 1 Millisquare=one 1,000th of a square foot.

3. MEASURES OF VOLUME.

- 1 Myriocube=10,000 cubic feet.
- 1 Khilliocube=1,000 cubic feet.
- 1 Hecatontacube=100 cubic feet.
- 1 Decacube=10 cubic feet.
- 1 CUBE=1 cubic foot.
- 1 Decicube=one 10th of a cubic foot.
- 1 Centicube=one 100th of a cubic foot.
- 1 Millicube=one 1,000th of a cubic foot.

4. MEASURES OF WEIGHT.

- 1 Myriounce=10,000 avoirdupois ounces.
- 1 Khilliounce=1,000 avoirdupois ounces.
- 1 Hecatontounce=100 avoirdupois ounces.
- 1 Decounce=10 avoirdupois ounces.
- 1 OUNCE (avoirdupois)=the weight of one millicube (cubic decifeet) of water.
- 1 Deciounce=one 10th of an ounce.
- 1 Centiounce=one 100th of an ounce.
- 1 Milliounce=one 1000th of an ounce.

5. GOLD COINAGE (INTRINSIC VALUE).

- 1 Decagolden=10 goldens.
- 1 GOLDEN=one ounce avoirdupois of standard gold (nine-tenths of gold, one-tenth of copper).
- 1 Decigolden=one 10th of a golden.
- 1 Centigolden=one 100th of a golden.

6. SILVER COINAGE (INTRINSIC VALUE).

- 1 SILVERN=one ounce avoirdupois of standard silver (nine-tenths of silver, one-tenth of copper). Value $1.0000 . . . on the basis of the present silver dollar, or 33 silvers=$35.
- 1 Decisilver=one 10th of a silver.
- 1 Centisilver=one 100th of a silver.

7. BRONZE COINAGE (LEGAL VALUE).

- 1 Centim=weight one deciounce. Legal value, one centisilver.
- 1 Millim=weight one centiounce. Legal value, one 1,000th of a silver.

N.B.—Bronze coin is merely a check redeemable at the Treasury in its legal value of silver coin. No legal relation between gold and silver coin; but a golden is worth about 16 silvers, more or less, according to the state of the market.

The above is as complete a table of weights, measures, and coinage as need be made legal. The primary unit, the longitudinal foot, is related to both the radius and the quarter of the circumference of the earth through the factors 2, 3, 5, 7, 11, which are the great factors of Nature, of art, and of human transactions. The primary unit once found, all the system follows by an application of the decimal system entirely free from those exceptions and redundancies which are the blemishes of the French metric system. When I was twelve years old I learned the French system in half-an-hour. I would have learned the system which I now propose in five minutes.

My foreseeing that, concurrently with this system, if made legal, those among the existing units which bear to it the most intelligible relation—Gunter's chain and link, in which our country is surveyed, the pace of five links, almost identical with the French metre, etc.—would be conversationally retained more in nothing the simplicity of the system. The people would retain them so far only as it would find them a convenience and not a complication. But even those existing measures which I propose to entirely reject as ill-related and absurd could always be exactly reduced to the denominations of the reformed scale. I therefore claim for my system that it is not a new system, but merely the old historical Anglo-American system regularized on a decimal basis and made consistent in all its parts: a well-digested table of contents added to a confused treatise, and not only serving as a key to it, but actually superseding it by answering all of its purposes more efficiently than the book itself. The French metric system, on the contrary, while it is not more accurately related to the earth's circumference alone than our foot is to both its circumference and its radius, while by utterly ignoring in its relation to the earth the factor 8 it comes into grating contact with the cog-wheels of time and of the sphere, has this additional matter-of-fact disadvantage, that it stands in an irreducible ratio to every one of our existing units. As our admirable land survey, according to which nearly all our country is divided into townships, sections, and quarter sections, is an accomplished fact which cannot be undone, and on which all tenure of property will rest in this country for all generations to come, the adoption of a system which bears an irreducible ratio to the measures on which our land survey is based will condemn all generations to come to irretrievable logomachy.

I suspect there must have been a little mischief in me when I spoke of our lineal foot as the ordinary measure of "an honest Anglo-Saxon foot." Else I must have relied on the powers of St. Crispin. But sure there must have been a smile on Mr. Maxson's face when he wrote (speaking of the French metric system): "Greece uses it with a modified nomenclature." Modified? Shade of Pericles! Yes indeed; for the pretended Greek nomenclature of the system, as the French use it, is as untranslatable into Greek as a theological treatise on baptism by sprinkling.

The nations which are generally mentioned as having [on paper] adopted the metric system make a very intimidating list; and it is by thus representing the movement as irresistible and already an accomplished fact that those who make a business of selling metric standards entrap legislation after legislation. In twenty years hence, nations will discover that they have had the metric system for twenty years, as President Grant discovered three years after that he had signed the silver demonetization bill.

Mr. Maxson's statement that a cubic foot of water weighs only 998.0667 avoirdupois ounces, instead of 1,000 as assumed by me, is inconsistent with his other statement, that the French centimetre of distilled water weighs just a French gramme. Were this latter statement true, the difference would be more than twice as great as he says, as a cubic foot contains 28,214 cubic centimetres, and 1,000 ounces weigh 28,333.4 grammes: difference more than 4 ounces, an ounce being 28.3334 grammes. But both of these statements of my able antagonist must rest on erroneous and probably antiquated authority. It is now generally recognized that there was inaccuracy of manipulation in the measurement or weighing of a cubic centimetre of water in order to establish the French gramme. My giving 1,000 ounces as the weight of a cubic foot of water at its medium density was not a loose assertion picked up in common arithmetics, but was based on the minority report of the recent congressional commission on the metric system,—an authority which I must consider as irrefragable on such a point of scientific fact. In the tables of density contained in the latest editions of all the encyclopedias on which I have been able to lay my hand, water, assumed to weigh 1,000 ounces per foot cube, is taken as the unit; and I cannot imagine that in a matter requiring so much accuracy all scientific men could have been satisfied with an approximation in which there would have been an error of almost 2 per 1000. The error, if any, must be very much smaller; and, if small enough to satisfy professors of chemistry, it must be small enough not to mar a metric system. Mr. Maxson is no doubt aware, moreover, that the cubic measurement of a liquid is a mechanical manipulation in which there is always an amount of inaccuracy, and the indefinite repetition of which would never, in the course of eternity, twice give the same result.

Perhaps the best way of settling this metric question satisfactorily would be for some commercial house to manufacture the reformed Anglo-Saxon standards which I propose, including the coins, under the guarantee of its trade-mark, and introduce them in all countries of the world through the ordinary channels of commerce. The coins might be introduced as articles of jewelry, namely medals of standard fineness and exquisite workmanship, a hole in the upper part for the purpose of suspending the ornament to the neck or wrist forming a part of the design. The world is absolutely weary of politicians' money, which an act of legislature can enhance or debase, and a Secretary of the Treasury can lock up or let loose to produce scarcity or the reverse, and so create panics, and enable a ring of sharpers who are in the secret to speculate on the public ruin. Money is simply an article of commerce, its additional value over that of the bullion it contains consisting in the guarantee, as to its weight and fineness, which coins annexes to it. This guarantee can be given by the trade-mark of a responsible firm as well as by the stamp of a public mint; and as commercial houses, under the law of free competition, would supply the article in the measure of the public demand for it, the ornamental medal, being neither peculiar to each country, nor subject to legislative tricks, would in its secondary use as money be a better commodity than the government coin and supplant it in the market. As ornaments, Eastern countries would want even the smallest gold and silver pieces to any amount. JULIUS FERRETTE.

RIGHT OF ASSOCIATION AND FREE SPEECH.

THEIR LATEST DENIAL.

EDITOR INDEX:—

If, as you have well said, "religion is the effort of man to perfect himself," exponents of such reasonable faith will condemn efforts to limit investigation, especially politico-ecclesiastical usurpations which presume to say what opinions shall or what shall not be privately held or publicly expressed. The latest blow at Free Speech was struck in Boston, April 15, when, during my absence in New York, Angela T. Heywood being acting manager of the Convention at Nassau Hall, "an officer of the law" came in to forbid her taking a collection, admission fees at the door to defray expenses, because she "had not a license from the City Government!" Of this arbitrary stretch of power the Daily Globe of April 17 said:—

"We cannot see why those people should not have the privilege of holding their meetings without any interference from the License Commissioner or of the police authorities. . . . If they see fit to meet in public and to discuss their peculiar notions upon social, moral, or religious affairs, they should have the liberty of doing so without a license, so long as their meetings are conducted in decency and in order."

"I think that every intelligent friend of progress will endorse the view of the editor of the Globe. The power to permit public meetings implies the power to forbid them; for, if the authorities do not like the opinions to be presented, they have only to refuse to grant a license in order to suppress a meeting before it assembles! That the issue is not whether the collection shall be taken at the door, or from the audience, is evident from the fact that this subtle game of requiring "a license" is never played except where the reform to be promoted is especially unpopular. The old antislavery society, the Woman's Suffrage and Temperance societies, the Labor Reform League during ten years, the Paine Hall Free Thinkers, Spiritualists meetings of every kind, the Horticultural Hall Lecture Association, Joseph Cook's Monday Lectureship, the Hospitalier Hall philosophers, the Parker Fraternity, church festivals,—all schools of religionists and reformers charge admission fees, take collections at the door when necessary to defray expenses, without being required to "procure a license" to do so. The meetings at Nassau Hall are selected for suppression simply because certain religious conservatives do not like our views! If the old Puritans had hit upon this "license" invention, no modern reform could ever have been advocated in Boston.

The Banner of Light of April 20 spoke of a case in Rochester, N. Y., where the authorities attempted to require Mrs. Markee, a Spiritualist medium, to procure a license for her sances. She sued for damages; the case went up to the Supreme Court of that State, and was decided in her favor, and the city of Rochester now has to pay damages and all the cost of litigation! In February, 1873, the Mayor of Boston undertook to suppress a convention of the N. E. Labor Reform League, because Mrs. Woodhull was to be one of the speakers! He said that we must not take admission fees without a license; and, if we asked for a license, the City Government ought not to grant it. The Convention was held nevertheless, Mrs. Woodhull spoke, and the police, sent in citizen's dress as spies to watch us, paid fifteen cents each Sunday night and fifty cents each Monday night for admission! We supposed intrusive bigotry then learned the law of liberty regarding speech and public assembly, but it seems not. Refusing to recognize illegal terrorism as law, Mrs. Heywood dismissed the meetings April 15; and the right of the people to assemble and confer together without a license will be asserted in the regular May Conventions to be held the 19th and 20th and 26th and 27th of this month. With the case, U. S. vs. E. H. H. on my hands to be argued about May 15, I prefer, as Abraham Lincoln said, "One war at a time"; but, though a dozen prisons threatened me, I cannot submit to this last outrage on popular right. While you, Mr. Editor, earnestly dissent from the views of many social reformers, you have always warmly favored free speech, and, I am sure, will raise your voice in its behalf now, when the prevailing spirit of repression is so fiercely intent on denying it. Hoping you can give me space in your columns for the above.

Ever truly yours, E. H. HEYWOOD.

PRINCETON, Mass., May 1, 1878.

[Of course, we consider the practice of requiring a license for public meetings in hired halls to be utterly indefensible, whether those who hold them do or do not please the authorities. We had not heard of the above case before; but, on the facts as stated, the action of the police was clearly an outrage. So long as the public peace is not disturbed, the police ought to be conspicuous by their absence. All the more ought all public speakers to respect their audiences by observing the unwritten laws of public decency and good taste. If they fail to do so, however, the condemnation of their own audiences and of the public at large is a sufficient penalty for the offence. Knowing nothing of the particular occasion referred to, we can say no more.—ED.]

IN THE MADELEINE, PARIS.

It was Christmas day in Paris, and there were to be the usual grand ceremonies to celebrate the occasion in the Madeleine Church, that imposing edifice built in semblance of a Grecian temple which is so well known to strangers; and as we were told that the pomp and circumstance of this splendid ritual was indeed a sight to see, we thitherward wended our way amid the eager crowd that literally thronged up the immense flight of marble steps, filling the great building to its utmost capacity. As a general thing very few men are to be seen in a Parisian church; but on this one day in the year the stronger sex salves its conscience with the unusual enjoyment of the senses provided for the delectation of an uncommon audience, and thus made a more equal division of the genders than is customary; and, though the service was tediously long, there were no signs amid the decorous silence constantly maintained that the entertainment flagged in interest or that the assembled people were particularly wearied by the solemn pageantry which to the greater part of them could have had nothing more than a surface meaning.

It was in truth a grand spectacular pantomime, for which the altar with its sculptured Assumption served as scenery. The principal priests, of which there were over a dozen officiating, wore robes of cloth of gold embroidered elaborately in brighter gilt; and the boys who served were dressed in long red trains with short white robes over them, red shoes, and broad light blue sashes. At times the whole large space around the altar was quite crowded; and it was not especially conducive to reverence to behold these boys of various ages and heights kicking their trains out behind, in order to make them hang gracefully down the steps on the edge of which they stood in rows. There was much ceremonious bowing, right and left, to the altar, and to each other; and at one time four platforms covered with lace-bordered white cloths, and holding some significant articles, were carried in from one side to the other in slow procession by four boys each, who marched in, across, and out, very much like the same sort of thing in a play on the stage. In fact, it was easy to see that every person on this arena had his drilled part to perform, their arranged entrances and exits, and their indicated places to form a harmonious tableau of color, size, and position. The music was superb, the show was solemnly grand, the light dreamily soft; and it was easy to understand that to souls in which imagination predominated over reason, this wonderfully-arranged ritual would be impressively affecting. Through the densely packed crowd two important officials were almost continually pressing; two very large beings they were with good-natured faces, attired in what looked like full military uniform, with cocked hats, gold epaulettes, gold embroidered red scarfs, and a great staff with an immense gilt knob on the top. Their business it was to precede the priest, who carried the money-box through the aisles, making a way for him by their size and perspiring exertions; while he, humbly following in their wake, received the coins of the faithful. When this was accomplished, they returned to each side of the altar to add splendor to the spectacle by standing in immovable attitudes, like gorgeous and glittering court chamberlains. Then there were inferior priests, who answered to the staves of a theatre, who did all the manual labor, such as moving reading-desks, etc., and two directors, who stood in front; and, when it was the turn of any particular priest to do anything, one would stalk round before him, bow, and then return to his own place, bowing to the altar as he turned and came back to it.

One could not help, as we sat there looking at it all, mentally wondering how any two of those augurs could look in each other's faces without laughing. And we thought also of the sweet Jesus born in a stable, working at a carpenter's bench, wandering, poor and despised of men, on the shores of Galilee, not having where to lay his head, and how he would have denounced and rejected such pompous service. And when we found that we had to pay half a franc each for the seats we occupied at this cheap performance, in addition to the contribution to the collection box, and at the door were accosted by an authorized elegantly-dressed lady holding a velvet bag asking for more alms, we involuntarily recalled that scene with the money-changers in the Jewish tabernacle, when he, who scourged them from his Father's house, seemed to have no precedence that they would again prey on humanity in his own name. Ah, if Jesus himself had entered this modern temple, whip in hand, arraigning those who made it a den of thieves, how quickly would he have been hustled out by those gorgeous bumbles who acted as constables of the sanctuary! And had he come in to this multitude imprecating Pharisees with their broad phylacteries and bordered garments, would not those gilt-robed priests quickly have delivered him up for his insanity to be sorely afflicted, and should his words take effect as in the days of yore, even to be crucified afresh? For such Christianity as this is indeed like unto whited sepulchres, appearing beautiful without, but within are full of extortion and excess,—a Christianity which has simply become a Church, without a Christ.

MRS. SARAH B. STEBBINS

PHILADELPHIA.

SOCIAL SCIENCE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The people all the world over are suffering, and are calling for some remedy for their ills. Social questions, the relations of capital and labor, are up for consideration, and are pressing for a solution as never before. Until we learn to do justice to man, we can never relate ourselves justly to God. The love of God is a mockery of words, unless based on love of man. Free religion presupposes free man; and to be free in deed as well as in thought, freedom must be secured by a social organism in accordance with the laws of Nature, or, if you prefer, the will of God.

It seems to me, therefore, that the investigation of social science is peculiarly appropriate to the INDEX, and fully justifies the publication of thoughtful articles on the subject.

But what shall be said of one who, after being corrected more than once, repeats the misrepresentation that Fourier was a communist? Fourier was NOT a communist in any of the manifold meanings of that word, on which Mr. Kelsey caroms with such prodigious power and startling suddenness.

Charles Fourier had seen too much of the French Revolution, and suffered from it too much personally to have the least faith in its methods, or in any violent re-organization of society. He proposed free and voluntary association, and that alone, under an organization based on the laws governing human relations.

Fourier does not claim to have invented a scheme; he set before himself the task of discovering the laws of society, by studying the nature of the individual man, and ascertaining the laws governing him. He claims to have discovered those laws, and starting from that basis to have arrived at a knowledge of the laws of human society.

Whoever would really know anything of social science must follow on the same track; and he may be sure that he will find work enough to do, with all the aid he will derive from Fourier, who, I may say, also, by no means neglected the study of history, although he was clear-sighted enough to see that the study of past errors alone can never reveal the truth.

If Mr. Kelsey thinks the present writer does not know Fourier, let him quote one line from that Social Master's writings which preaches or teaches communism.

A socialist is not necessarily a communist; and in one of "A. W. K.'s" numerous uses of the word, a communist is not necessarily a socialist.

I do not seek controversy, but I do want to urge upon all thinkers who wish to help their fellow-men the study of social science; and I do think writers should know at least the alphabet of it before undertaking to enlighten others.

We do not need any more misinformation or fog. F. S. C.

HOW TO MEET THE REPROACH.

THE INDEX aims to be the exponent of the highest-thought liberalism; we believe it is as fine and high-toned as it aims to be, and we are proud of it. We have the use of those high thoughts, and can skim the cream, and live off its rich and delicious fruits! Among the cream I skim is the hint given as about the moral scum of society, brought upon us by extending our platform wide enough to include all classes of liberals. We take in many who are charged (truly or falsely) with free-love, obscenity, and immorality; and many such things are charged against liberals as a class, because our common platform includes all who choose to stand upon it.

So I agree with THE INDEX that we as liberals must individually live down those false charges. Liberals are more free from obscenity than the Bible and Bible worshippers; but the latter think (or seem to think) that it is just to charge us with immorality, while the Church is teeming with the immoralities of clergymen and laymen. Now we should all unite, and show our true character and position, and prove by our walk and our talk and conduct in life that we are opposed to all kinds of wickedness.

I think that many well-meaning men and women would be with us, were it not for this unjust odium cast on us by the Church people; and we have no way of successfully reaching them. We strive to get them to take and read our papers and books; but, alas! they are so bound by early education that they can hardly help themselves.

DAVID WRIGHT.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

A NEW SOCIETY.

MARSHFIELD, Mo., March 30, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—The liberals and freethinkers of Springfield, Mo., met at the Opera House on the 24 instant, and organized an association which they designated "The Springfield Liberal League," the following persons being chosen as officers for the ensuing year: D. M. Fox, President; William Naegler, Vice-President; John H. Koch, Recording Secretary pro tem.; Mrs. J. A. H. Colby, Corresponding Secretary; William Massey, Treasurer. Executive Committee: Mrs. Nettie Pease Fox, J. F. Underwood, R. M. S. Cooper.

After the organization was completed, twenty-four names were enrolled as members, the number at the present time consisting of about fifty, with a steadily increasing number, and fair prospects for the future.

J. A. H. COLBY, Corresponding Secretary.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to the patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 50 insertions, 6c per line.	For 51 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.
For 100 to 200 insertions, 4c per line.	For 201 to 300 insertions, 3c per line.	For 301 to 400 insertions, 2c per line.	For 401 to 500 insertions, 1c per line.

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 50 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1873.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STUBBS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
G. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or $5 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loe, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kaub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1866 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution", by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath", by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education", by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tarrytown, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 25 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOCK (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOCK (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shaw-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUBRECHT (GREGORY). On the Heights. With Map; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	8.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	8.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	1.50
The Rising Faith.....	2.25
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Jew's Revolt.....	2.25
The Jew's Revolt.....	2.25
The Jew's Revolt.....	2.25
BUCHANAN'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 1 vol.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thomas: The Foot Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHERRY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Chess Games. A new Series of Games for Families, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Chess, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Chess, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	1.50
Common-Sense in Religion.....	1.50
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Onlihood of the World.....	.75
CORNE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	5.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
COWLEY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.25
COBBELLATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.50
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Huxley, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.50
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE E.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanea. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	2.40
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.80
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.40
Journal of Researches.....	2.80
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	5.40
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.80
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS (CHARLES). History of England.....	1.50
DUBOIS (JULIA). Philosophy and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 8 vols., each.....	1.00
Compensating.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Scenes.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	3.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	5.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Edward Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. B.) Elements of Life.....	2.50
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.50
Creed of Christendom.....	1.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMILTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.50
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	5.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.50
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.50
The English Note-Books.....	2.50
The American Note-Books.....	2.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.50
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone, an Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Sabbath Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 1 vol., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Reform.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELWORTH'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mithras of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELWORTH'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel- lings.....	1.75
Studies for Books.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERBOLL'S (BOB. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.50
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. 2. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Joseph P. Cooke, Jr.....	3.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, consisting of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Picnic Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M. A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERS (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEURY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGG'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.50
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	6.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.25
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.25
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. U.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	1.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	3.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MULLER (HAI, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	1.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature. Biography and Autobiography.....	2.50
These vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swinging Round the Circle.....	1.50
Elkroes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Blasphemy, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Heard in Partner.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	1.50

PROCTER (RICHARD A.) Other Works. The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Heard in Partner.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROBERTS (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By J. D. Hooker, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By J. D. Hooker, F.R.S.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., F.G.S., F.G.S., F.G.S.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 3 vols.....	3.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SEILER'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.....	6.00
The Principles of Psychology. 3 vols.....	6.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III. Each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Typpan.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Path and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Chaucer-Poems. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Madam Trelawney.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon. Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Deval, &c. 4. Poor George, Sketches, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shesha.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
Walden, or the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 1 vol.....	2.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	2.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings of the Faraday Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYAGE (REV. CHARLES) The King and the Stone. Vols I and V, each.....	2.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Seamstresses.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIFFLES (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	4.50
Character and Characteristic Maps.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.50
Panacea. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIEN'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

221 Washington St., Boston.

GIRLS—6 nice perforated mottoes for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

A week in your own town. Terms and $5 per day at home. Samples worth $1.00. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1.00. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

Any worker can make $11 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address THOMAS & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE.
Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.
THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of fifteen shillings. For Half Year, eight shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

NEW BOOKS TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Bookshelves and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 25 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BERKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. E. G. Ward, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred B. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tallemaache, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER.

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.00 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies, and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.50, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN.

at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent.
O. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,

PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 431 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
R. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait.

Heliotype Copy
by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x12 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion.

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1874.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

No. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 18 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by V. E. Abbot, James Parton, E. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 28, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.00.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 16, 1878.

WHOLE No. 488.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N.B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

THE Advertiser asks, in connection with the essay which we reprint this week from the North American Review: "Has Mr. Emerson Changed his Base?" To which we can only answer that nobody can possibly think so who ever understood Mr. Emerson's former "base." The question is absurd.

PROFESSOR FELIX ADLER delivered his second anniversary address at Standard Hall, New York City, last Sunday. He is soon to deliver a series of lectures on Free Religion at San Francisco, which will prevent his attendance at the May meeting of the Free Religious Association in this city.

IN CONNECTION with our editorial of this week, notice this item from the Boston Daily Advertiser of April 29: "Ipse—Miss Addie Griffin, for several years teacher in the Manning School, has resigned; and seven pupils in the same school have been expelled for immoral conduct, as the result of the investigations of the school board into the circulation of vile literature among the scholars."

A NEW Liberal League has been organized at Carbondale, Kansas, in affiliation with the National League. The officers have not yet been reported. This makes the fortieth on the list of chartered Leagues, though there are many others which have as yet failed to enroll themselves in the national movement. It is hoped that they will all qualify themselves in season for representation at the next Annual Congress, which ought to have a strong body of delegates.

SENATOR HOAR said in the United States Senate that an association of the Baptist Church in Washington Territory petitioned to Congress for what they call "relief"—said relief, forsooth, consisting in getting special privileges for a vessel which they send to convey their teachers and preachers among the inlets and waters of Puget Sound! We are glad to say that this ridiculous request, that Congress should help build up the Baptist sect met with the rejection it deserved.

IS IT POSSIBLE that the Roman Catholic authorities have learned so much wisdom as to sanction the arrangement here described? "The Catholic schools in St. Louis, which have hitherto accommodated fifteen thousand pupils, are to be closed and the pupils placed in the public schools. This is the result of mutual arrangement between the Public School Department and the Catholic authorities. The Department dispenses with reading the Bible and morning services, and also eliminates objectionable selections from the readers. All sects agree to relegate religious teaching and training to the home circle, the Sunday-school, and the church."

THE NEW ORLEANS Picayune of April 22 contained an item of news which, we confess, surprises us: "The Hindu organization of Brahma Somaj, founded by Rammohun Roy, and for the last twenty years under the leadership of Keshub Chunder Sen, has been pronounced in its belief in the unity of God and the rejection of polygamy. Its members have recently been greatly shocked by its leader consenting to a marriage between his daughter, who is not yet fourteen, with the Maharajah of Ouch Behar, Assam, who is less than sixteen, and moreover is of a polygamist family. Four prominent Babus of the Somaj have addressed to their chief a protest."

IT IS REPORTED that "Gov. Irwin of California does not believe in hanging on Good Friday. He reprimanded John Runk, a murderer, sentenced to be hanged on that day, giving as a reason 'a respect for the religious sentiments of a very large number of citizens, that a revered religious holiday should not be profaned by fixing upon it as a day for the infliction of capital punishment.'" Yet Good Friday became a "revered religious holiday" precisely because it commemorates the "infliction of capital punishment!"

ment"! If that Friday was "Good" for one execution, why not for another? How does it "profane" the day to keep it sacred to its original uses? But it is a mistake to ask superstition for its reasons; it has none.

THE Phare de la Loire, a daily journal published at Nantes, in its issue of February 10 (for a copy of which we are indebted to the kindness of some French subscriber) had a very interesting article on Pius Ninth by A. S. Morin. The writer indulges in some damaging reminiscences of this much-lauded pontiff's career, particularly of his flight to Gaeta, his appeal to French arms to recover his temporal power, his tyrannical conduct in the famous Mortara case, his seizure of the whole power of the Church by his manipulations of the Vatican Council, his endless whining over his pretended "captivity" in his own palace, his warfare on all liberty, progress, and modern civilization, etc. Will Leo XIII. do better?

THE FREE MASONS of England, at the last meeting of their Grand Lodge, voted to disfellowship all Masons who do not admit that "belief in the Grand Architect of the Universe is an essential landmark of the order." This is in open antagonism to the Grand Orient of France, which voted to allow perfect liberty of conscience. Who cannot see that Free Masonry is dashing itself to pieces on the rock of creeds? Whatever is discarded, the world will never again content itself without liberty. All such proceedings as the above make ten atheists where one was found before. The belief in God must reconcile itself with freedom and reason, or it is lost. The French Masons are far wiser than the English, and in the end will prove to be far more friendly to rational, scientific theism.

SAYS THE Reformer and Jewish Times: "The Christian Statesman professes to believe that to reject the belief in miracles is 'to drift toward infidelity.' What does the Statesman understand 'infidelity' to mean? To be a good Christian it is necessary to believe everything one is told to believe; and not to do this is 'infidelity.' To be a good Jew one is not required to believe in anything except in God and Morality. Judaism is a religion of deeds, Christianity a moribund system of creeds." But Judaism also, it seems, "requires" its own theistic "creed," and many modern thinkers (of whom we are not one) think that this creed likewise is "moribund." Why should not Judaism advance to the broader ground of perfect liberty of thought so ably advocated by the Reformer's neighbor, Professor Adler? We look with more hope to such societies as Mr. Frothingham's and Professor Adler's than to all the churches and synagogues together.

THE Catholic Review strikes home in the closing sentence of this paragraph: "Mr. Robert Ingersoll made one very sound remark in the midst of his blasphemous tirade on Sunday: 'If people really believed their religion, I should not be allowed to speak tonight on this platform. It is from the coldness and infidelity of the churches that I get my right to speak; and I am willing to give them credit for it.' To do them justice, we do not doubt that the arms of many an upright old-fashioned Protestant ache to get hold of Col. Bob, and teach him by the lesson of solitary confinement that even enforced silence is golden in the case of asses whose braying disturbs the public peace. If the blasphemy which their children and their neighbors so eagerly flock to hear, and which the daily papers find it paying business to report, disgusts and irritates them, they will perhaps understand how it happens that the keener faith and more reverential feelings of a Catholic people occasionally find in breaking the bones of the Evangelical infidels who go among them to defame the Mother of God and to rail against His Holy Church."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Ipsington, Ind.
HON. ELIJAH WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. O. S. FROTHINGHAM.	New York.
MR. WM. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE.	Providence, R. I.
MR. M. J. SAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
MR. B. F. FELSETHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
MR. W. H. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN.	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEAYER.	Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT.	Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. R. F. UNDERWOOD.	Thorndike, Mass.
MR. ROBERT COLLIER.	Peoria, Ill.
MR. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City.
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN.	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	3 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT.	W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN A. HENNS, Monticello.
California.	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.	D. W. T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GULLE, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. CLARK, Milledale.
Louisiana.	EMERSON ESTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.	W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.	KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Minnesota.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.	R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.	H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt.
Pennsylvania.	G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	E. H. PRITCH, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Harbottle.
Vermont.	R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.	D. F. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Idaho.	W. FERGUSON, Pocatello.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde. Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Plisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.	JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie E. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.	MISHKOOT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch. Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.	STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to Chas. Hays, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grunlike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.	PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright. Issued to Horace Seayer, J. P. Mendum, Eliza Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson. Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. E. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.	NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse. Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.	HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker. Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.	NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunle. Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheppard, and others.
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunson. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.	NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson. Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Irving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post. Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.	TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop. Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.	CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler. Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.	JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike. Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead. Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.	FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard. Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.	MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron. Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberlander, and others.	ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster. Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.	CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M. D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.	CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.] Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sent, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sent, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.	PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.	XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—[Officers not yet reported.] Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauter, T. C. Leland, J. Desaur, F. Desaur, Mrs. M. E. Wendt, G. Fraunstein, M. D., E. Lebon, and others.	OLATHIE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin. Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
CARROLLDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.] Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Altchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Altchison, H. Kelly, and others.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

The Sovereignty of Ethics.

BY RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

Since the discovery of Oersted that galvanism and electricity and magnetism are only forms of one and the same force, and convertible each into the other, we have continually suggested to us a larger generalization: that each of the great departments of Nature—chemistry, vegetation, the animal life—exhibits the same laws on a different plane; that the intellectual and moral worlds are analogous to the material. There is a kind of latent omniscience not only in every man, but in every particle. That convertibility we so admire in plants and animal structures, whereby the repairs and the ulterior uses are subserved, when one part is wounded or deficient, by another; this self-help and self-creation proceed from the same original power which works remotely in grandest and meanest structures by the same design,—works in a lobster or a mite-worm as a wise man would if imprisoned in that poor form. 'Tis the effort of God, of the Supreme Intellect, in the extreme frontier of his universe.

As this unity exists in the organization of insect, beast, and bird, still ascending to man, and from lower type of man to the highest yet attained, so it does not less declare itself in the spirit or intelligence of the brute. In ignorant ages it was common to vaunt the human superiority by underrating the instinct of other animals; but a better discernment finds that the difference is only of less and more. Experiment shows that the bird and the dog reason as the hunter does; that all the animals show the same good sense in their humble walk that the man who is their enemy or friend does; and, if it be in smaller measure, yet it is not diminished, as his often is, by freak and folly. St. Pierre says of the animals, that a moral sentiment seems to have determined their physical organization.

I see the unity of thought and of morals running through all animated Nature; there is no difference of quality, but only of more and less. The animal who is wholly kept down in Nature has no anxieties. By yielding, as he must do, to it, he is enlarged and reaches his highest point. The poor grub in the hole of a tree, by yielding itself to Nature, goes blameless through its low part, and is rewarded at last, casts its filthy hull, expands into a beautiful form with rainbow wings, and makes a part of the summer day. The Greeks call it Psyche, a manifest emblem of the soul. The man down in Nature occupies himself in guarding, in feeding, in warming, and multiplying his body; and, as long as he knows no more, we justify him; but presently a mystic change is wrought, a new perception opens, and he is made a citizen of the world of souls: he feels what is called duty; he is aware that he owes a higher allegiance to do and live as a good member of this universe. In the measure in which he has this sense he is a man, rises to the universal life. The high intellect is absolutely at one with moral nature. A thought is imbosomed in a sentiment, and the attempt to detach and blazon the thought is like a show of cut-flowers. The moral is the measure of health, and in the voice of genius I hear invariably the moral tone, even when it is disowned in words—health, melody, and a wider horizon belong to moral sensibility. The finer the sense of justice, the better poet. The believer says to the sceptic:—

"One avenue was shaded from thine eyes
Through which I wandered to eternal truth."

Humility is the avenue. To be sure, we exaggerate when we represent these two elements as disunited: every man shares them both; but it is true that men generally are marked by a decided predominance of one or of the other element.

In youth and in age we are moralists; and in mature life the moral element steadily rises in the regard of all reasonable men.

'Tis a sort of proverbial dying speech of scholars, at least it is attributed to many, that which Anthony

Wood reports of Nathaniel Carpenter, an Oxford Fellow. "It did repent him," he said, "that he had formerly so much courted the maid instead of the mistress" (meaning philosophy and mathematics) "to the neglect of divinity." This, in the language of our time, would be ethics.

And when I say that the world is made up of moral forces, these are not separate. All forces are found in Nature united with that which they move: heat is not separate, light is not massed aloof, nor electricity, nor gravity, but they are always in combination. And so moral powers: they are thirsts for action, and, the more you accumulate, the more they mould and form.

'Tis in the stomach of plants that development begins, and ends in the circles of the universe. 'Tis a long scale from the gorilla to the gentleman,—from the gorilla to Plato, Newton, Shakespeare,—to the sanctities of religion, the refinements of legislation, the summits of science, art, and poetry. The beginnings are slow and infirm, but 'tis an always-accelerated march. The geologic world is chronicled by the growing ripeness of the strata from lower to higher, as it becomes the abode of more highly-organized plants and animals. The civil history of men might be traced by the successive mellorations as marked in higher moral generalizations—virtue meaning physical courage, then chastity and temperance, then justice and love—bargains of kings with peoples of certain rights to certain classes,—then of rights to masses,—then at last came the day when, as the historians rightly tell, the nerves of the world were electrified by the proclamation that all men are born free and equal.

Every truth leads in another. The bud extrudes the old leaf, and every truth brings that which will supplant it. In the court of law the judge sits over the culprit; but in the court of life in the same hour the judge also stands as culprit before a true tribunal. Every judge is a culprit, every law an abuse. Montaigne kills off bigots, as courage kills worms; but there is a higher mouse there sitting where he durst not soar, of eye so keen that it can report of a realm in which all the wit and learning of the Frenchman is no more than the cunning of a fox.

It is the same fact existing as sentiment and as will in the mind, which works in Nature as irresistible law, exerting influence over nations, intelligent beings, or down in the kingdoms of brute or of chemical atoms. Nature is a tropical swamp in sunshine, on whose purlieus we hear the song of summer birds, and see prismatic dew-drops; but her interiors are terrific,—full of hydrae and crocodiles. In the preadmitte she bred valor only; by-and-by she gets on to man, and adds tenderness, and thus raises virtue piecemeal.

When we trace from the beginning, that ferocity has uses; only so are the conditions of the then world met, and these monsters are the scavengers, executioners, diggers, pioneers, and fertilizers, destroying what is more destructive than they, and making better life possible. We see the steady aim of benefit in view from the first. Melloration is the law. The cruellest foe is a masked benefactor. The wars, which make history so dreary, have served the cause of truth and virtue. There is always an instinctive sense of right, an obscure idea, which animates either party, and which in long periods vindicates itself at last. Thus a sublime confidence is fed at the bottom of the heart that, in spite of appearances, in spite of malignity and blind self-interest, living for the moment, an eternal, beneficent necessity is always bringing things right; and, though we should fold our arms—which we cannot do, for our duty requires us to be the very hands of this guiding sentiment, and work in the present moment,—the evils we suffer will at last end themselves through the incessant opposition of Nature to everything hurtful.

The excellence of men consists in the completeness with which the lower system is taken up into the higher,—a process of much time and delicacy, but in which no point of the lower should be left untranslated; so that the warfare of beasts should be renewed in a finer field, for more excellent victories. Savage war gives place to that of Turenne and Wellington, which has limitations and a code. This war again gives place to the finer quarrel of property, where the victory is wealth and the defeat poverty.

The inevitabilities are always sapping every seeming prosperity built on a wrong. No matter how you seem to fatten on a crime, that can never be good for the bee which is bad for the swarm. See how these things look in the page of history. Nations come and go, cities rise and fall, all the instincts of man, good and bad, work; and every wish, appetite, and passion rushes into act and embodies itself in usages, protects itself with laws. Some of them are useful and universally acceptable; hinder none, help all, and these are honored and perpetuated. Others are noxious. Community of property is tried, as when a Tartar horde or an Indian tribe roam over a vast tract for pasturage or hunting; but it is found at last that some establishment of property, allowing each, on some distinct terms, to fence and cultivate a piece of land, is best for all.

Nature is not so helpless but it can rid itself at last of every crime. An eastern poet, in describing the golden age, said that God had made justice so dear to the heart of Nature that, if any injustice lurked anywhere under the sky, the blue vault would shrivel to a snake-skin and cast it out by spasms. But the spasms of Nature are years and centuries, and it will tax the faith of man to wait so long.

"For my part," said Napoleon, "it is not the mystery of the incarnation which I discover in religion, but the mystery of social order, which associated with heaven that idea of equality which prevents the rich from destroying the poor."

Shall I say, then, it were truer to see necessity calm, beautiful, passionless, without a smile, covered with ensigns of woe, stretching her dark warp across the universe? These threads are Nature's pernicious elements, her deluges, miasma, disease, poison; her curdling cold, her hideous reptiles, and worse men, cannibals, and the depravities of civilization; the secrets of the prisons of tyranny, the slave and his master, the proud man's scorn, the orphan's tears, the vices of men, lust, cruelty, and pitiless avarice. These make the gloomy warp of ages. Humanity sits at the dread loom and throws the shuttle and fills it with joyful rainbows, until the sable ground is flowered all over with a woof of human industry and wisdom, virtuous examples, symbols of useful and generous arts, with beauty and pure love, courage, and the victories of the just and wise over malice and wrong.

Man is always throwing his praise or blame on events, and does not see that he only is real, and the world his mirror and echo. He imputes the stroke to fortune, which in reality himself strikes. The student discovers one day that he lives in enchantment: the house, the works, the persons, the days, the weathers—all that he calls Nature, all that he calls institutions, when once his mind is active, are visions merely,—wonderful allegories, significant pictures of the laws of the mind; and through this enchanted gallery he is led by unseen guides to read and learn the laws of heaven. This discovery may come early—sometimes in the nursery, to a rare child; later in the school, but oftener when the mind is more mature; and to multitudes of men wanting in mental activity it never comes—any more than poetry or art. But it ought to come; it belongs to the human intellect, and is an insight which we cannot spare.

The idea of right exists in the human mind, and lays itself out in the equilibrium of Nature, in the equalities and periods of our system, in the level of seas, in the action and reaction of forces. Nothing is allowed to exceed or absorb the rest; if it do, it is disease, and is quickly destroyed. It was an early discovery of the mind—this beneficent rule. Strength enters just as much as the moral element prevails. The strength of the animal to eat and to be luxurious and to usurp is rudeness and imbecility. The law is: To each shall be rendered his own. As thou sowest, thou shalt reap. Smite, and thou shalt smart. Serve, and thou shalt be served. If you love and serve men, you cannot, by any hiding or stratagem, escape the remuneration. Secret retributions are always restoring the level, when disturbed, of the Divine justice. It is impossible to tilt the beam. All the tyrants and proprietors and monopolists of the world in vain set their shoulders to heave the bar. Settles forevermore the ponderous equator to its line, and man and mote and star and sun must range with it, or be pulverized by the recoil.

It is a doctrine of unspeakable comfort. He that plants his foot here passes at once out of the kingdom of illusions. Others may well suffer in the hideous picture of crime with which earth is filled and the life of society threatened; but the habit of respecting that great order which certainly contains and will dispose of our little system will take all fear from the heart. It did itself create and distribute all that is created and distributed; and, trusting to its power, we cease to care for what it will certainly order well. To good men, as we call good men, this doctrine of trust is an unsounded secret. They use the word, they have accepted the notion of a mechanical supervision of human life, by which that certain wonderful being whom they call God does take up their affairs where their intelligence leaves them, and somehow knits and coordinates the issues of them in all that is beyond the reach of private faculty. They do not see that He, that It, is there, next and within; the thought of the thought; the affair of affairs; that he is existence; and take him from them and they would not be. They do not see that particulars are sacred to him, as well as the scope and outline; that these passages of daily life are his work; that in the moment when they despair from interference, these particulars take sweetness and grandeur, and become the language of mighty principles.

A man should be a guest in his own house, and a guest in his own thought. He is there to speak for truth; but who is he? Some clod the truth has snatched from the ground, and with fire has fashioned to a momentary man. Without the truth, he is a clod again. Let him find his superiority in not wishing superiority; find the riches of love which possesses that which it adores; the riches of poverty; the height of lowliness; the immensity of to-day; and, in the passing hour, the age of ages. Wondrous state of man! never so happy as when he has lost all private interests and regards, and exists only in obedience and love of the Author.

The fiery soul said: "Let me be a blot on this fair world, the obscurest, the loneliest sufferer, with one proviso—that I know it is his agency. I will love him, though he shed frost and darkness on every way of mine." The emphasis of that blessed doctrine lay in lowliness. The new saint gloried in infirmities. Who or what was he? His rise and his recovery were vicarious. He has fallen in another; he rises in another.

We perish, and perish gladly, if the law remains. I hope it is conceivable that a man may go to ruin gladly, if he see that thereby no shade falls on that he loves and adores. We need not always be stipulating for our clean shirt and roast joint per diem. We do not believe the loss in astronomy and vegetation because we are writhing and roaring in our beds with rheumatism. Cripples and invalids, we doubt not there are bounding fawns in the forest, and lilies with graceful, springing stem; so neither do we doubt or fail to love the eternal law, of which we are such shabby practisers. Truth gathers itself spotless and unhurt after all our surrenders and concealments and partisanship,—never hurt by the treachery or ruin of its best defenders, whether Luther, or William Penn, or St. Paul. We answer, when they tell us of the bad behavior of Luther or Paul: "Well, what if he did? Who was more pained than Luther or Paul?" We attach ourselves violently to our teachers and historical personalities, and think the foundation shaken if any fault is shown in their record. But how is the truth hurt by their falling from it? The law of gravity is not hurt by every accident, though our leg be broken. No more is the law of justice by our departure from it.

We are to know that we are never without a pilot. When we know not how to steer, and dare not hoist a sail, we can drift. The current knows the way, though we do not. When the stars and sun appear; when we have conversed with navigators who know the coast, we may begin to put out an oar and trim a sail. The ship of heaven guides itself, and will not accept a wooden rudder.

Have you said to yourself ever: "I abdicate all choice; I see it is not for me to interfere. I see that I have been one of the crowd; that I have been a pitiful person, because I have wished to be my own master, and to dress and order my whole way and system of living. I thought I managed it very well, I see that my neighbors think so. I have heard prayers. I have prayed even; but I have never until now dreamed that this undertaking the entire management of my own affairs was not commendable. I have never seen, until now, that it dwarfed me. I have not discovered, until this blessed ray flashed just now through my soul, that there dwelt any power in Nature that would relieve me of my load. But now I see."

What is this intoxicating sentiment that allies this scrap of dust to the whole of Nature and the whole of Fate—that makes this doll a dweller in ages, mock at time, able to spurn all outward advantages, peer and master of the elements? I am taught by it that what touches any thread in the vast web of being touches me. I am representative of the whole; and the good of the whole, or what I call the right, makes me invulnerable.

How came this creation so magically woven that nothing can do me mischief but myself—that an inviolable fence surrounds my being which screens me from all harm that I will to resist? If I will stand upright, the creation cannot bend me. But if I violate myself, if I commit a crime, the lightning loiters by the speed of retribution, and every act is not hereafter but instantaneously rewarded according to its quality. Virtue is the adopting of this dictate of the universal mind by the individual will. Character is the habit of this obedience, and religion is the accompanying emotion, the emotion of reverence which the presence of the universal mind ever excites in the individual.

We go to famous books for our examples of character, just as we send to England for shrubs, which grow as well in our own door-yards and cow-pastures. Life is always rich, and spontaneous graces and forces elevate it in every domestic circle, which are overlooked while we are reading something less excellent in old authors. From the obscurity and casualty of those which I know, I infer the obscurity and casualty of the like balm and consolation and immortality in a thousand homes which I do not know, all round the world. And I see not why to these simple instincts, simple yet grand, all the heights and transcendences of virtue and of enthusiasm are not open. There is power enough in them to move the world; and it is not any sterility or defect in ethics, but our negligence of these fine monitors, of these world-embracing sentiments, that makes religion cold and life low.

While the immense energy of the sentiment of duty and the awe of the supernatural exert incomparable influence on the mind, yet it is often perverted, and the tradition received with awe, but without correspondent action of the receiver. Then you find so many men infatuated on that topic! Wise on all other, they lose their head the moment they talk of religion. It is the sturdiest prejudice in the public mind that religion is something by itself; a department distinct from all other experiences, and to which the tests and judgment men are ready enough to show on other things do not apply. You may sometimes talk with the gravest and best citizen, and the moment the topic of religion is broached, he runs into a childish superstition. His face looks infatuated, and his conversation is. When I talked with an ardent missionary, and pointed out to him that his creed found no support in my experience, he replied, "It is not so in your experience, but is so in the other world." I answer: Other world! there is no other world. God is one and omnipresent; here or nowhere is the whole fact. The one miracle which God works evermore is in Nature, and imparting himself to the mind. When we ask simply, "What is true in thought? what is just in action?" it is the yielding of the private heart to the Divine mind; and all personal preferences, and all requiring of wonders, are profane.

The word miracle, as it is used, only indicates the ignorance of the devotee, staring with wonder to see water turned into wine, and heedless of the stupendous fact of his own personality. Here he stands, a lonely thought harmoniously organized into correspondence with the universe of mind and matter. What narrative of wonders coming down from a thousand years ought to charm his attention like this? Certainly it is human to value a general consent, a fraternity of believers, a crowded church; but as the sentiment purifies and rises, it leaves crowds. It makes churches of two, churches of one. A fatal disservice does this Swedenborg or other who offers to do my thinking for me. It seems as if, when the Spirit of God speaks so plainly to each soul, it were an implety to be listening to one or another saint. Jesus was better than others, because he refused to listen to others, and listened at home.

You are really interested in your thought. You have meditated in silent wonder on your existence in this world. You have perceived in the first fact of your conscious life here a miracle so astounding—a miracle comprehending all the universe of miracles to which your intelligent life gives you access,—as to exhaust wonder, and leave you no need of hunting here or there for any particular exhibitions of power. Then up comes a man with a text of 1 John v., 7, or a knotty sentence from St. Paul, which he considers as the axe at the root of your tree. You cannot bring yourself to care for it. You say: "Cut away; my tree is Yggdrasil—the tree of life." He interrupts for the moment your peaceful trust in the Divine Providence. Let him know by your security that your conviction is clear and sufficient, and if he were Paul himself, you also are here, and with your Creator. We all give way to superstitions. The house in which we were born is not quite mere timber and stone; is still haunted by parents and progenitors. The creeds into which we were initiated in childhood and youth no longer hold their old place in the minds of thoughtful men; but they are not nothing to us, and we hate to have them treated with contempt. There is so much that we do not know, that we give to these suggestions the benefit of the doubt.

It is a necessity of the human mind that he who looks at one object should look away from all other objects. He may throw himself upon some sharp statement of one fact, some verbal creed, with such concentration as to hide the universe from him: but the stars roll above; the sun warms him. With patience and fidelity to truth he may work his way through, if only by coming against somebody who believes more fables than he does; and, in trying to dispel the illusions of his neighbor, he opens his own eyes.

In the Christianity of this country there is wide difference of opinion in regard to inspiration, prophecy, miracles, the future state of the soul; every variety of opinion, and rapid revolution in opinions, in the last half-century. It is simply impossible to read the old history of the first century as it was read in the ninth; to do so, you must abolish in your mind the lessons of all the centuries from the ninth to the nineteenth.

Shall I make the mistake of baptizing the daylight and time and space by the name of John or Joshua, in whose tent I chance to behold daylight and space and time? What anthropomorphisms we are in this, that we cannot let moral distinctions be, but must mould them into human shape! "Mere morality" means—not put into a personal master of morals. Our religion is geographical, belongs to our time and place; respects and mythologizes some one time and place and person and people. So it is occasional. It visits us only on some exceptional and ceremonial occasion: on a wedding or a baptism, on a sick-bed, or at a funeral, or perhaps on a sublime national victory or a peace. But that, be sure, is not the religion of the universal unsleeping providence which lurks in trifles, in still, small voices, in the secrets of the heart, and our closest thoughts, as efficiently as in our proclamations and successes.

Far be it from me to underrate the men or the churches that have fixed the hearts of men, and organized their devout impulses or oracles into good institutions. The Church of Rome had its saints, and inspired the conscience of Europe—St. Augustine and Thomas à Kempis and Fénelon; the piety of the English Church in Cranmer and Herbert and Taylor; the Reformed Church, Scougal; the mystics, Behmen and Swedenborg; the Quakers, Fox and James Naylor. I confess our later generation appears ungirt, frivolous, compared with the religions of the last or Calvinistic age. There was in the last century a serious habitual reference to the spiritual world, running through diaries, letters, and conversation,—yes, and into wills and legal instruments also, compared with which our liberation looks a little foppish and dapper.

The religion of seventy years ago was an iron belt to the mind, giving it concentration and force. A rude people were kept respectable by the determination of thought on the eternal world. Now men fall abroad—want polarity—suffer in character and intellect. A sleep creeps over the great functions of man. Enthusiasm goes out. In its stead a low prudence seeks to hold society stanch; but its arms are too short; cordage and machinery never supply the place of life.

Luther would cut his hand off sooner than write theses against the Pope, if he suspected that he was bringing on with all his might the pale negations of Boston Unitarianism. I will not now go into the metaphysics of that reaction by which in history a period of belief is followed by an age of criticism, in which wit takes the place of faith in the leading spirits, and an excessive respect for forms out of which the heart has departed becomes most obvious in the least religious minds. I will not now explore the causes of the result, but the fact must be conceded as of frequent recurrence, and never more evident than in our American church. To a self-denying, ardent church, delighting in rites and ordinances, has succeeded a cold, intellectual race, who analyze the prayer and psalm of their forefathers, and the more intellectual reject every yoke of authority and custom with a petulance unprecedented. It is a sort of mark of probity and sincerity to declare how little you believe, while the mass of the community indolently follow the old forms with childish scrupulousity, and we have punctuality for faith, and good taste for character.

But I hope the defect of faith with us is only apparent. We shall find that freedom has its own guards; and, as soon as in the vulgar it runs to license, sets all reasonable men on exploring those guards. I do not think the summit of this age truly reached or expressed unless it attain the height which religion and philosophy reached in any former age. If I miss the inspiration of the saints of Calvinism, or of Platonism, or Buddhism, our times are not up to theirs, or, more truly, have not yet their own legitimate force.

Worship is the regard for what is above us. Men are respectable only as they respect. We delight in children because of that religious eye which belongs to them; because of their reverence for their seniors, and for their objects of belief. The poor Irish laborer one sees with respect, because he believes in something, in his church, and in his employers. Superstitious persons we see with respect, because their whole existence is not bounded by their hats and their shoes; but they walk attended by pictures of the imagination, to which they pay homage. You cannot impoverish man by taking away these objects above him without ruin. It is very sad to see men who think their goodness made of themselves; it is very grateful to see those who hold an opinion the reverse of this. The old poet Daniel said:—

"Unless above himself he can Erect himself, how poor a thing is man!"

All ages of belief have been great; all of unbelief have been mean. The Orientals believe in Fate. That which shall befall them is written on the iron leaf; they will not turn on their heel to avoid famine, plague, or the sword of the enemy. That is great, and gives a great air to the people. We in America are charged with a great deficiency in worship; that reverence does not belong to our character; that our institutions, our politics, and our trade have fostered a self-reliance which is small, illiputian, full of fuss and bustle; we look at and will bear nothing above us in the state, and do exceedingly applaud and admire ourselves, and believe in our senses and understandings, while our imagination and our moral sentiment are desolated. In religion, too, we want objects above; we are fast losing, or have already lost, our old reverence; new views of inspiration, of miracles, of the saints, have supplanted the old opinions, and it is vain to bring them again. Revolutions never go backward, and in all churches a certain decay of ancient piety is lamented, and all threatens to lapse into apathy and indifference. It becomes us to consider whether we cannot have a real faith and real objects in lieu of these false ones. The human mind, when it is trusted, is never false to itself. If there be sincerity and good meaning—if there be really in us the wish to seek for our superiors, for that which is lawfully above us, we shall not long look in vain.

Meantime there is great centrality, a centripetence equal to the centrifugence. The mystic or theist is never scared by any startling materialism. He knows the laws of gravitation and of repulsion are deaf to French talkers, be they never so witty. If theology shows that opinions are fast changing, it is not so with the convictions of men with regard to conduct. These remain. The most daring heroism, the most accomplished culture, or rapt holiness, never exhausted the claim of these lowly duties,—never penetrated to their origin, or was able to look behind their source. We cannot disenchant, we cannot impoverish ourselves by obedience; but by humility we rise, by obedience we command, by poverty we are rich, by dying we live.

We are thrown back on rectitude forever and ever, only rectitude—to mend one; that is all we can do. But that the zealot stigmatizes as a sterile chimney-corner philosophy. Now, the first position I make is, that natural religion supplies still all the facts which are disguised under the dogma of popular creeds. The progress of religion is steadily to its identity with morals.

How is the new generation to be edified? How should it not? The life of those once omnipotent traditions was really not in the legend, but in the moral sentiment and the metaphysical fact which the legends enclosed,—and these survive. A new Socrates, or Zeno, or Swedenborg, or Pascal, or a new crop of geniuses like those of the Elizabethan age, may be born in this age, and, with happy heart and a bias for theism, bring asceticism, duty, and magnanimity into vogue again.

It is true that Stoicism, always attractive to the intellectual and cultivated, has now no temples, no academy, no commanding Zeno or Antoninus. It accuses us that it has none: that pure ethics is not now formulated and concreted into a cultus, a fraternity with assemblings and holy-days, with song and book, with brick and stone. Why have not those who believe in it and love it left all for this, and dedicated themselves to write out its scientific scriptures to become its Vulgate for millions? I answer for one that the inspirations we catch of this law are not continuous and technical, but joyful sparkles, and are recorded for their beauty, for the delight they give, not for their obligation; and that is their priceless good to men, that they charm and uplift, not that they are imposed.

It has not yet its first hymn. But, that every line and word may be coals of true fire, ages must roll ere these casual wide-falling cinders can be gathered into broad and steady altar-flame.

It does not yet appear what forms the religious feeling will take. It prepares to rise out of all forms to an absolute justice and healthy perception. Here is now a new feeling of humanity infused into public action. Here is contribution of money on a more extended and systematic scale than ever before to repair public disasters at a distance, and of political support to oppressed parties. Then there are the new conventions of social science, before which the questions of the rights of women, the laws of trade, the treatment of crime, regulation of labor—if these are tokens of the steady currents of thought and will in these directions,—one might well anticipate a new nation.

I know how delicate this principle is,—how difficult of adaptation to practical and social arrangements. It cannot be profaned; it cannot be forced; to draw it out of its natural current is to lose at once all its power. Such experiments as we recall are those in which some sect or dogma made the tie, and that was an artificial element, which chilled and checked the Union. But is it quite impossible to believe that men should be drawn to each other by the simple respect which each man feels for another in whom he discovers absolute honesty; the respect he feels for one who thinks life is quite too coarse and frivolous, and that he should like to lift it a little, should like to be the friend of some man's virtue; for another who, underneath his compliances with artificial society, would dearly like to serve somebody,—to test his own reality by making himself useful and indispensable?

Man does not live by bread alone, but by faith, by admiration, by sympathy. 'Tis very shallow to say that cotton, or iron, or silver and gold, are kings of the world; there are rulers that will at any moment make these forgotten. Fear will. Love will. Character will. Men live by their credence. Governments stand by it—by the faith that the people share,—whether it comes from the religion in which they were bred, or from an original conscience in themselves, which the popular religion echoes. If government could only stand by force, if the instinct of the people was to resist the government, it is plain the government must be two to one, in order to be secure, and then it would not be safe from desperate individuals. But no; the old commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," holds down New York and London and Paris, and not a police or horse-guard.

The credence of men it is that moulds them, and creates at will one or another surface. The mind as it opens transfers very fast its choice from the circumstance to the cause; from courtesy to love, from inventions to science, from London or Washington law, or public opinion, to the self-revealing idea; from all that talent executes to the sentiment that fills the heart and dictates the future of nations.

The commanding fact which I never do not see is the sufficiency of the moral sentiment. We buttress it up, in shallow hours or ages, with legends, traditions, and forms, each good for the one moment in which it was a happy type or symbol of the Power; but the Power sends in the next moment a new lesson, which we lose while our eyes are reverted and striving to perpetuate the old.

America shall introduce a pure religion. Ethics are thought not to satisfy affection. But all the religion we have is the ethics of one or another holy person; as soon as character appears, be sure love will, and veneration, and anecdotes, and fables about him, and delight of good men and women in him! And what deeper of grandeur and beauty are known to us in ethical truth! What divination or insight belongs to it! For innocence is a wonderful electrolyte for purging the eyes to search the nature of those souls that pass before it. What armor it is to protect the good from outward or inward harm, and with what power it converts evil accidents into benefits; the power of its countenance; the power of its presence! To it alone comes true friendship; to it comes grandeur of situation and poetic perception, enriching all it deals with.

Once men thought Spirit divine, and Matter diabolic: one Ormuzd, the other Ahriman. Now science and philosophy recognize the parallelism, the approximation, the unity of the two: how each reflects the other, as face answers to face in a glass; nay, how the laws of both are one, or how one is the realization. We are learning not to fear truth.

The man of this age must be matriculated in the university of sciences and tendencies flowing from all past periods. He must not be one who can be surprised and shipwrecked by every bold or subtle word which malignant and acute men may utter in his hearing, but should be taught all scepticisms and unbeliefs, and made the destroyer of all card-houses and paper walls, and the slayer of all opinions, by being put face to face from his infancy with reality.

A man who has accustomed himself to look at all his circumstances as very mutable, to carry his possessions, his relations to persons, and even his opinions, in his hand, and in all these to pierce to the principle and moral law, and everywhere to find that, has put himself out of the reach of all scepticism; and it seems as if whatever is most affecting and sublime in our intercourse, in our happiness, and in our losses, tended steadily to uplift us to a life so extraordinary, and, one might say, superhuman.—North American Review for May-June, 1878.

DR. KOHLER AND PROF. ADLER.

The Sinai Literary Association lately appointed a committee to correspond with Prof. Felix Adler, of New York, for the purpose of seeing if the famous liberal could make it convenient to lecture before the Association at an early day. At a regular meeting of the society held in the lecture-room of the temple of Sinai Congregation last evening, the committee reported that Prof. Adler would be in Chicago on the 25th, 26th, and 27th of this month; and that he had consented to lecture for the Association Tuesday evening, the 26th, at Standard Hall. The committee also presented, as a part of its report, the following protest from Dr. K. Kohler, minister of Sinai Congregation:—

"To my great surprise, I hear that in the Sinai Literary Association a motion is on foot to invite Prof. Felix Adler, of New York, to deliver a lecture before the members, he being expected to come here next week. Of what benefit to a society of Jewish young people the lecture of a man can be who has deserted the Jewish flag, and openly professes his disbelief in God and immortality, I really fail to see, unless the eradication of the Jewish faith is the object contemplated. But, I suppose, very few of your members, if any, know anything about the young professor, who merely by his fine oratory, combined with great arrogance, created for a while some sensation in New York. At any rate, I shall not allow my temple to be disgraced by a lecture to be delivered within its walls by one who blasphemes God and Judaism.

Yours, very truly,

"DR. K. KOHLER."

The strong language of the protest called for some remarks from the Association, and one gentleman, who is a great admirer of Prof. Adler, combated the assertions made in the communication, expressing his surprise that Dr. Kohler should have written so caustic a letter, and denying in toto the charge that Prof. Adler had "deserted the Jewish flag," or that he had "blasphemed God and Judaism." On the contrary, the learned professor was engaged in developing the system, working in the same path as Dr. Kohler himself. As to Prof. Adler's talents, his power, the morality of his teachings, there was only one voice, and that entirely of approbation and admiration. The gentleman also stated that Drs. Felsenthal and Adler of this city had spoken of Prof. Felix Adler in the highest terms, so that the weight of testimony was altogether in his favor. Prof. Adler, it was true, did not build strictly on theological ideas, while Dr. Kohler did; but for all that he believed the Association should not lose the opportunity to hear so distinguished and able a man, notwithstanding Dr. Kohler's emphatic protest.

There was one dissenting voice. It came from a young man who was apparently a strong Orthodox believer, and who went on to state that Dr. Kohler was a member of the Association, and that his opinion was entitled to great consideration. At any rate, no hasty action should be taken on so important a question.

Another young gentleman offered the practical suggestion that Dr. Kohler was only one member of the Association, and that his opinion was entitled to just as much weight as the individual opinion of any other member.

This rather quieted the dissenting voice, and the committee's report was adopted.

In a subsequent letter to the Sinai Literary Association, the Rev. Dr. Kohler writes:—

"Having just read your proceedings of last night, as published in this morning's issue of the Chicago Tribune, in regard to an intended lecture of Prof. Felix Adler, of New York, I feel bound to correct several mistakes made in the discussion concerning myself.

"1st. In sending my communication to you, I did not address you as an individual member of your Society, but as your teacher and spiritual guide, or, if you please, as your honorary member; and I need not say to you that by a single word of mine the precincts of my temple can be shut to your meetings in spite of your God-fearing attorney.

"2d. Before writing my protest against the contemplated lecture of Prof. F. Adler in my temple, I was informed by your adviser, Mr. Julius Rosenthal, that Prof. Adler was simply expected to pass through our city on his way to Milwaukee, where he had been invited to lecture. Of an intention to invite him to lecture in Standard Hall here, Mr. Rosenthal was too cautious to say a word to me; nor did the members of your Association seem to have been aware of it before last night's consultation on the subject.

"3d. I emphatically protest against the insinuation made at the meeting last night, that my friends and colleagues, Drs. Felsenthal and L. Adler, of this city, approve the teachings of Felix Adler. No rabbi in or outside of America dares consider himself a Jewish minister while approving the ideas and expressions with which the Standard Hall lecturer in New York most irreverently and insultingly assailed the Jewish religion, and which are now, in a milder form, set forth in his work Creed and Deed. There is, without reserve, the belief in God and immortality discarded, and 'the Eagle of Liberty' (suggesting, no doubt, Prof. F. Adler himself) proclaimed as the moral governor of human society 'in place of the great King of the world.'

"Certainly, the young professor and his anything but original book, concocted from the works of Lubbock, Tyler, and Otto Caspari, who was wisely left unmentioned, and from works of the Kuenen school, with several really original blunders interspersed, would hardly have created such a sensation in Jewish circles, were he not the son of the venerable Dr. S. Adler, and the pupil of the late Dr. Geiger, misleading thereby, and by fine oratory, many an advocate of Jewish reform. I myself have been frequently interrogated by Christian and Jewish friends of mine, whether my own radical views, already expressed before Kuenen in a work of mine quoted by the famous Dutch scholar, about the origin of the Jewish religion, and the composition of the Bible, would lead me into the same path of unbelief. My answer simply is: I, with all theistic thinkers of the age, hold the history of human culture and progress in religion, morals, art, and science to be the revelation of the divine in man, above whom, in sublime heights, God will ever stand as his holy ideal of perfection and source of inspiration. Felix Adler, with all his infidel, on the contrary, declares this divine ideal of perfection and fountain-head of inspiration to be a mere dream. The sum and some of moral perfection is utilitarian morality and socialistic equality, or, consists, as the author of Creed and Deed poorly defines his New Ideal, in 'greater simplicity in manners, greater purity in the passions, and greater charity.' This is his summum bonum, or highest goodness!

"Whether this doctrine is broader, more sound and liberal than mine, I leave to others to decide. That they are anything but beneficial to Jewish (or Christian) young men, no man of religious principles can deny. Regretting that my weekly lectures before your Association have not fallen on a more fertile soil, I remain yours,

DR. K. KOHLER."

—Chicago Daily Tribune.

KOHLER AND ADLER.

[On the foregoing letters the New York Reformer and Jewish Times had no comments to make but the following.—Ed.]

The action of the Rev. Dr. Kohler, of Chicago, in refusing to allow Professor Felix Adler to lecture in the Temple Sinai, has created considerable sensation in the West, and has been variously commented upon. In his letter to the Sinai Literary Association, by whose invitation Professor Adler was to lecture, Dr. Kohler spoke of that gentleman as one who "has deserted the Jewish flag and openly professes his disbelief in God and immortality," and said: "I shall not allow my temple to be disgraced by a lecture to be delivered within its walls by one who blasphemes God and Judaism." This is strong language, but evidently as sincere as it is strong.

From Dr. Kohler's view of Professor Adler's opinions and teachings, he was certainly justified in refusing to allow him to lecture in the temple. Most assuredly, one who "blasphemes God and Judaism" has no business in a Jewish house of worship; and, no doubt, Dr. Kohler is satisfied that Professor Adler does blaspheme God and Judaism. Dr. Kohler deserves great credit, at least, for the bold stand he has taken in the matter, and for the promptness with which he has asserted what he considered his rights and performed what he esteemed his duty.

It is not a common thing to find a minister with the courage of his opinions. Our clergymen are often over-timid, and trot all round a danger instead of grappling with it boldly as Dr. Kohler has done. We believe he is the only Jewish minister who has come out over his own name, and charged Professor Adler with being "a blasphemer of God and Judaism." There is no denying that Dr. Kohler has acted the part of a man who has the courage to think for himself, and the courage to speak his thoughts when occasion requires. In this respect we think he may serve as an example to some of his brother-ministers both here and elsewhere.

A PROPOSAL:

WANTED—A CHANCE TO WORK.

STRAWBERRY POINT, IOWA, May 1, 1878.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir and Brother,—It is my earnest and intense desire to aid as much as possible in the promotion of the vital principles and aims of the National Liberal League; but as I have not the advantages of a national reputation, opportunities of speaking upon the League ideas and of organizing local Leagues disclose themselves slowly. The open doors are few and far between. But my heart, hunger and thirst to help forward the movement; and, in order to secure opportunities to lecture upon the League principles and to organize Leagues, I have concluded to make the following proposal, which you are at liberty to make public:—

I am willing to go anywhere within reachable distance from this place, and deliver one lecture upon "Liberal Demands and Duties," and also assist in the organization of a League, on payment of my travelling expenses from this place and return and five dollars in addition.

Or, I am willing to deliver three consecutive lectures, besides taking measures towards the formation of a League, on payment of my actual expenses and ten dollars in addition. I would speak upon any three of the five following subjects, all connected directly with the Liberal League work:—

1. Liberal Demands and Duties.
2. Universal Education.
3. Woman's Right to the Elective Franchise.
4. Freedom and Fellowship.
5. Relations between Religion and the Liberal League Movement.

This offer stands good until the first of October, and may perhaps be renewed at that time. The only qualification is, that the lectures must be given on week-day evenings, as my Sundays will all be occupied with other work.

Believe me, if it were possible, I would lecture on mere payment of expenses, or would even pay my own expenses; but I have a family to support, and must consider my duties to them. However, the above terms seem to me to be reasonable. As you have no personal acquaintance with me, perhaps you would like to make some inquiries in regard to my character and culture, as well as my liberalism and my abilities as a speaker. I have no hesitation whatever in referring you to the following persons, although I have not obtained their formal permission to use their names as references in this letter:—

1. H. L. Green, Salamanca, N. Y.
2. Rev. A. A. Livermore, Meadville, Pa.
3. Rev. J. S. Thomson, Bloomington, Ill.
4. Mrs. Clara Neymann, 97 Malden Lane, New York.
5. Joseph York, Meadville, Pa.

It has been whispered in one Liberal paper—not THE INDEX—that, because I have taken an eclectic course at Meadville Theological School, and because I have been working to some extent with the Unitarians, I am not an honest and genuine and consistent Liberal. The insinuation is as groundless as it is absurd and mean. True, I am not a Liberal in the sense of being a ranting iconoclast; nor in the sense of being a Materialist or a Spiritualist; nor even in the sense of being an anti-Christian, as your conscience compels you to be. But I do stand squarely upon the Free Religious platform, according to my own understanding of its meaning. I do believe in perfect and absolute freedom of thought; I do believe in the Liberal League principles with all my heart and soul and mind and might. Moreover, as all those who know me could tell, I have never concealed one iota of my sentiments, have never been that most detestable and dangerous of wild beasts, a hypocrite, but have made considerable sacrifices on behalf of my independent and pronounced position.

You are at liberty to make whatever use you deem best of this letter, and the offer which it contains. Even should you consign both to the oblivion of the waste-basket, I will not become offended or "stop my paper"; but I would feel grateful if you could make the aforesaid offer public through the columns of THE INDEX, and in whatever other way might be practicable.

At all events, I remain, fraternally and earnestly yours,

S. W. SAMPLE.

[It seems that the best way to help this earnest young man in his object, with which we need not say how much we sympathize, is to print his letter just as it is. And we solicit attention to it from all friends of the Liberal League in his neighborhood, hoping that they will not leave unutilized Mr. Sample's zeal and ability in this cause. Our readers are not ignorant of him, but will remember the admiration expressed for his lectures at the convention in Randolph, N. Y., not long since. It is disheartening to know, as we do, that enthusiasm for the great ideas of the Liberal League movement must so often burn itself out without effect, simply because the Directors of the National Liberal League need thousands of dollars where they receive only dollars. But the movement grows steadily, if slowly; and its ultimate success cannot be doubted at last. Let our Iowa friends give Mr. Sample a fair trial.—Ed.]

Poetry.

LINES.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

There are goodly germs within us,—
Germs with richest promise rife,
Could some genial spirit wean us
From the chill of selfish life.

Fairest flowers need kindest tending,
Cherished 'neath a gentle hand;
With a sweet harmonious blending
Will each latent bud expand.

But how, in such a tangled garden
As this work-day world of ours,
Can to full fruition harden
The heart's most precious flowers?

Science works; but love's unheeded—
Love, that all things vivifies;
So our garden, all unseeded,
Blossoms to no paradise.

We need a better social union,
Mind and heart, a perfect whole,
Working out the world's communion,
Speeding toward the wished-for goal.

Then like perfumed flowers, sending
Balmy odors through the air,
Would our lives, to goodness tending,
Scatter blessings everywhere.

A. O.

BROOKLYN.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

I DO NOT KNOW.

I do not know that wrongs are righted
After these frail bodies die;
I do not know that wisdom lighted
Lives a life beyond the sky;
I only hope these things are so,
But that they are, I do not know.

I do not know there is a Heaven,
Nor even that a God there be;
I do not know that, sin-forgiven,
My soul shall live eternally;
I only hope these things are so,
But that they are, I do not know.

J. ALBERT WILSON.

ALBANY, N. Y.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 11.

J. J. Hoopes, $3.40; Gustav A. Shane, M.D., $1; Mrs. A. B. Blair, $1.10; Wm. J. Worden, $6; O. P. Whitcomb, $3.20; C. S. Palmer, $3.20; D. P. Wilcox, $3.30; R. J. Turnbull, $3.20; Wm. H. Dyke, $5; J. K. Wildman, $3; A. & J. Tronstine, $6; A. W. Johnston, 80 cents; Free Religious Association, $150.00; A. W. Kelsey, 50 cents; F. E. Abbot, $200.00; Charles Eilershaw, $3.70; J. A. J. Wilcox, Treas., $55.50; Dr. L. P. Babb, 50 cents; John W. Turner, $3; Dr. E. H. Price, $2; Miss S. M. Nowell, $3.20; N. D. Watkins, $3.30; I. P. Greenleaf, $1.50; J. A. Stevens, $3.30; Magnus Pfaum, $3.20; Robert Williamson, $3.20; W. M. Lockwood, $13.57; M. Clancy, $12.94.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 16, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBON, Editor.
OTATUUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at the office of the Association, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 1, 1878, at 2½ P.M., for the hearing of the annual reports, the election of a Board of Directors for the ensuing year, and the transaction of any other business that may be brought before the meeting.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, May 30, at 7.45 P.M., session for business in Horticultural Hall; election of officers; reading of reports; and general consideration of the practical work of the Association.

Friday, May 31, at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject: "The Religion of Humanity, and how it may be Organized"; essayist, T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of the Society of Humanity, New York. Afternoon subject: "The Religion of Supernaturalism, and how it is being Disorganized"; essayist, Mr. Wm. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, Mass. Further announcement as to speakers will be made hereafter.

On Friday evening there will be a social gathering in Horticultural Hall.

WM. J. POTTER,
Secretary.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LIBERAL LEAGUE. ONE WAY TO DO IT.

Reader, do you desire to organize a Liberal League in your town? If so, this is a good way to do it: Draw up a paper in the following form, and present it to all the liberals in your vicinity:—

"We, the undersigned, are in favor of organizing a Local Liberal League in the town of _____, and agree to meet for that purpose at the house of _____ on Saturday evening next. We each agree to pay the sum set opposite our respective names towards the ten dollars required to procure a charter from the National Liberal League."

Names.	Residence.	Amount.
When you have procured ten names and ten dollars, you are ready for organization. Of course, the more names the better. I shall be pleased to furnish form of Constitution when required. Reader, will you attend to this work immediately, before it passes from your mind?	H. L. GREEN,
Chair. Ex. Com. N. L. L.

SALAMANCA, N.Y., March 15, 1878.

MR. UNDERWOOD lectures at Duluth, Minn., May 17 to 20; at St. Charles, May 25 and 26; at Nora Springs, Iowa, May 28 to June 2.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Friends of Human Progress will be held at Waterloo, N.Y., June 1 and 2. Professor J. E. Oliver, Mr. C. D. B. Mills, Mr. H. L. Green, and others, are expected to address the meeting.

MR. W. S. BELL, who proposes soon to start for the West on a lecturing tour, is to have a "benefit" at Paine Hall next Sunday, at which his friends will hear one of his good lectures, and express their kind feelings in such manner as seems to them best. We wish to all concerned a pleasant and mutually profitable occasion.

COLONEL INGERSOLL AND THE PETITION.

Rev. Richard Cecil, an eminent theological writer of London in the latter half of the last century, declared that, "If one moral and upright man should deny Christianity, he would do the faith of England more harm than all the sneers of Voltaire or all the sentimentalism of Rousseau."

It is the well-founded dread of finding the moral sense of mankind arrayed against their religion that makes so many Christian clergymen unwilling to acknowledge real moral excellence in those whom they are pleased to denominate "infidels." They are discovering with alarm that the world's faith in Christian dogmas is rapidly decaying; they are coming to perceive that the strongest bulwark of the Christian Church is the yet undecayed conviction of the majority that, in some way or other, the Church is absolutely essential to the maintenance of social order and public morality. The instinct of self-preservation makes them cling to this conviction as the sheet-anchor of salvation for instituted Christianity; and they are right. Once satisfy the public mind, always slow to move in untried directions, that society will incur no moral loss by the dissolution of the great theological and institutional system of Christianity, but will find its permanent moral interests far better subserved by rational than by ecclesiastical morality, and the one chief obstacle to the triumph of enlightened views of religion will have disappeared forever. It is dread of some vague and undefined peril to morality that shuts the minds of average men and women to all the light of the best religious thought of the century. Common-sense teaches them that the mighty forces which hold society together and prevent it from becoming a horrible pandemonium of wild and ferocious passions are all moral forces at bottom; and they are not to be blamed if, ignorant that these forces are independent of Christianity, they shrink back aghast from the prospect of plunging with their families, their fortunes, and their futures into the gulf of moral anarchy.

These fears, however irrational, are powerful and easily played upon; and the Church well understands how to turn them to her own account. Assuming to be the sole creator and guardian of morality, she shrewdly denies to all outside her pale the possession of true moral principle or character: she infers immorality from mere unbelief of her own doctrines, and insists that, however upright and virtuous an "infidel" may be outwardly, he cannot be inwardly anything but corrupt and untrustworthy. Cecil, therefore, might have spared himself all anxiety: Christianity will never admit that any one who denies her claims can possibly be a "moral and upright man."

It is in this evident determination to uphold Christianity and Christian institutions as the sole source of genuine morality that we find the root of the persistent attacks by clergymen on Voltaire, Paine, Ingersoll, and all other eminent "infidels." The Church cannot afford to leave these open deniers of her "revelations" in the undisturbed and unchallenged possession of reputations as really good men. Utterly regardless of the facts, she persists in blackening their names, not so much from motives of malignity as of self-interest—partly to destroy their influence, and partly to deter others from emulating it. She cannot possibly do otherwise. To admit that those who are not Christians can really be as good as those who are, inwardly as well as outwardly, would be fatal to her own claim of being the sole source of genuine morality. She must either deny the genuine goodness of all outside her own fold, or else acknowledge herself not necessary to the world's salvation from sin. What wonder that she chooses the former alternative?

This state of things creates special difficulties and dangers in the path of all liberals who become in any degree publicly identified with the cause of liberal principles and opinions. They are exposed to attacks from which no innocence can wholly shield them. They need to be not only innocent, but also bold, wise, and circumspect. They cannot afford to make grave mistakes. If they do, they are certain to be misrepresented in the worst possible manner by ecclesiastical critics, all for the "glory of God." Especially if a charge of hostility to public morality can be plausibly brought against them, they cannot escape it, no matter how grossly false and unjust it may be. The effect of such a charge is to excite the unreasoning fears of the community for the safety of its own highest interests, and to arouse its indignation against all speakers or writers who are thus implicated; nor is it much to be wondered at if, in default of sound arguments to uphold the tottering cause of Orthodoxy, unscrupulous Orthodox advocates eagerly resort to this far easier method of drowning truths they are unable to refute. They well understand the force of Cecil's warning, and are resolved, if possible, to permit no one who "denies Christianity" to pass for a "moral and upright man."

These reflections are naturally suggested by the insinuations which have been already (and will continue to be) thrown out against Col. R. G. Ingersoll, on account of his connection with a recent petition to Congress.

On this subject the Christian Union not long since published the following editorial article:—

The daily papers state that "Bob" Ingersoll has presented to the United States Senate a petition for the repeal of the United States statutes relative to the transmission of immoral literature through the mail, etc. It is further stated that this petition has from fifty thousand to seventy thousand signatures. If these are of the same kind as one which emanated from the office of the Truth Seeker, to publishers, booksellers, editors, etc., and which now lies before us, it will be safe for the United States Senators to investigate somewhat carefully the nature of these signatures before they attach any weight to them. Of the sixteen names signed to this petition, fifteen thousand copies of which have been sent out, seven have since declared that the use of their names was entirely unauthorized, and have stigmatized the signatures as forgeries; and of the rest, three have been arrested, and one convicted for violation of the law.

"Liberty of speech" is always a good phrase to conjure by; but liberty of speech is not in the least involved by the laws against which "Bob" Ingersoll and his seventy thousand pseudo-disciples have set themselves in array. These laws provide (1) that no officer or employé of the United States shall aid or abet the publication or importation of obscene publications and articles; (2) that such publication, or sale in the District of Columbia, or any of the territories of the United States, is a crime, punishable with fine and imprisonment; (3) that such articles and publications shall not be imported, and if imported shall be seized and forfeited; (4) that they shall not be carried through the mails. The right of the United States to punish any act tending to obscenity and immorality in the territories of the United States cannot be questioned, for the territories are within the national jurisdiction; and the law itself is, in principle, precisely like that which has been maintained in England for years, by a statute borrowed from the common law which has been in existence from time immemorial; and it has been, in turn, adopted as the model of legislation by many States in their acts prohibiting and punishing the same crime within the bounds of the State. The right of Congress to prohibit the importation of any article dangerous to the public weal has never, we think, before been questioned. Its authority to exclude an article which tends to the demoralization of society and destruction of morals is just as clear as its right to prohibit the importation of tainted meat, and garments saturated with the yellow-fever or the small-pox. The right to prohibit its own officers and agents from aiding and abetting recognized crime surely cannot be doubted. The only ground really on which this petition presents even the semblance of a reason is in its assumption that the mails ought to be free from all interference, and that the object of the law is to enforce or favor particular religious, moral, or medical opinions, or schools of thought or practice. In fact, the law is very carefully worded; there is nothing in it to justify any interference with any publication whatever, simply because of religious opinions advanced or denied. There is nothing to prevent the freest circulation through the mails of "Bob" Ingersoll's lectures, or Tom Paine's books. The claim never has been made that the mails should be free from all investigation until it was made by Mr. Ingersoll and his disciples in the interest of indecency and immorality. On the contrary, from the foundation of our government to the present time, the United States authorities have constantly inspected the mails and refused to take prohibited articles, glass, weapons, powder, lottery tickets, and, for that matter, even the harmless supplement of a weekly religious newspaper. On what conceivable ground can the inventors, manufacturers, and publishers of a worse than Parisian literature and art demand for their articles an exemption which no newspaper editor demands for his sheet?

It is not possible in a public article to disclose either the enormity or the extent of the evil against which Mr. Comstock has conducted so courageous and so successful a campaign. But we venture to assure Senators and Representatives (though we do not believe they need any assurance) that any attempt to impair the efficiency of the present law will meet with the severest reprobation from thousands of Christian parents who are silent now, not because they feel so little, but because they feel so deeply and so strongly.

Three weeks ago, Rev. Mr. Eldridge, of East Weymouth, was quoted in these columns as having referred to the same subject in the following manner:—

"If there is a work of hell carried on on earth, it is the dissemination of obscene literature among the young. Comstock, the Christian man who has waged war on this crime, declares that years past tons of the vilest matter have annually been sent to tens of thousands of children in our schools, to defile their imaginations, inflame their passions, and initiate these little ones in a course of vice. Just when Comstock had his hand ready to throttle this gigantic iniquity, a bill [petition] is handed in to Congress to protect it, and on the list the name of Robert Ingersoll stands first. 'By their fruits ye shall know them,' saith the Scriptures; and now look upon these flowers of infidelity, and tell me what it is worth?"

The Indianapolis News joined in the hue-and-cry as follows:—

"It is a fitting ending for Bob Ingersoll, from the political orator who commanded the respectful attention of a continent, to the champion of obscene literature. There seems to be that in a lack of faith which consumes and embitters and degrades. It was a narrow escape the government made in conferring on Ingersoll an office of honor. The greatest mercy that can be extended him is the mercy of silence."

It would be useless to multiply these illustrations of the manner in which this distinguished free-thinker, whose personal character is declared by all who know him to be singularly pure and high, has been exposed to the grossest insinuations because, in a moment of heedlessness and good nature, he permitted himself to be made use of to further a petition with the main object of which he has no sympathy whatever, and of which he seems to have been in utter ignorance at the very time when he lent to it his name. That this is true, Colonel Ingersoll himself is witness, as shown by this letter:—

WASHINGTON, March 18, 1878.

TO THE EDITORS OF THE BOSTON JOURNAL:—

My attention has been called to the following article that recently appeared in your paper:—

"Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll and others feel aggrieved because Congress in 1873 enacted a law for the suppression of obscene literature, and, believing it an infringement of the rights of certain citizens and an effort to muzzle the press and conscience, petition for its repeal. When a man's conscience permits him to spread broadcast obscene literature, it is time that conscience was muzzled. The law is a terror only to evil doers."

No one wishes the repeal of any law for the suppression of obscene literature. For my part I wish all such laws rigidly enforced. The only objection that I have to the law of 1873 is, that it has been construed to include books and pamphlets written against the religion of the day, although containing nothing that can be called obscene or impure. Certain religious fanatics, taking advantage of the word "immoral" in the law, have claimed that all writings against what they are pleased to call Orthodox religion are immoral, and such books have been seized and their authors arrested. To this, and this only, I object.

Your article does me great injustice, and I ask that you will have the kindness to publish this note.

From the bottom of my heart I despise the publishers of obscene literature. Below them there is no depth of filth. And I also despise those who, under the pretence of suppressing obscene literature, endeavor to prevent honest and pure men from writing and publishing honest and pure thoughts.

Yours truly, R. G. INGERSOLL.

The petition referred to explicitly asked that the law of 1873 "may be repealed"—and only as a secondary object, in case this cannot be secured, that the law may be "materially modified." The total repeal of all United States law on the subject of obscene literature was the object sought by this petition, as is sufficiently shown by the declaration of E. H. Heywood, who said in the Princeton (Mass.) Word for January, 1878:—

"Petitions to Congress for the repeal of Comstock's law, drafted and printed by D. M. Bennett, will be sent to any address from this office. . . . Since there is no half-way house between Comstock and Liberty, we demand the immediate and unconditional REPEAL of all Federal and State laws to force love or purity. CIRCULATE THE PETITIONS!!"

The italics and capitals are given above as used by Mr. Heywood himself, who was active in obtaining signatures and certainly understood what he was about.

Yet the letter of Colonel Ingersoll to the Boston Journal shows that he was quite ignorant of what he was doing when he signed or presented that petition. He says explicitly that "no one wishes the repeal of any law for the suppression of obscene literature"; that for his own part he "wishes all such laws rigidly enforced." Nothing could be clearer than that Colonel Ingersoll carelessly and good-naturedly allowed himself to be made use of by persons whose real objects he did not understand, and who have involved him in difficulties from which it will be very hard to extricate himself. The reader has already seen what slanderous insinuations have been uttered against him on this account, and will also see, from the letter above quoted, what gross injustice they do him. Colonel Ingersoll does not even go so far as we have gone in the matter; he only demands freedom for publications that "contain nothing that can be called obscene or impure," whereas we have demanded equal freedom for orthodox and heterodox publications, if they contain only such incidental impurities as the Bible itself contains. Let it be distinctly and universally understood that Colonel Ingersoll was ignorant of the real character of the petition he signed,—that he is avowedly and publicly opposed to the main object it seeks,—and that it is a gross libel on his good name to quote him as intentionally in favor of the repeal of the law of 1873. He is as strongly in favor of the enforcement of that law as the editors of the Christian Union, the Indianapolis News, and the Boston Journal, provided only the law is not perverted to become an instrument for the suppression or restriction of religious liberty. To prevent this perversion, however, the law ought to be radically modified. This is the ground we have taken from the beginning; and all sober-minded liberals will sooner or later take it too, for the simple reason that the priceless principles of a free press and free mails neither require nor permit any other ground.

THE "INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSONS."

It was Lord Brougham, we believe, who maintained that a child acquires more ideas during the first seven years of its life than in all that follow. It is certain that our early years are the most impressionable ones. The mind is then "wax to receive and marble to retain." It is full of inquisitive interest. A fresh surprise and exhilarating pleasure are derived from even the most simple and insignificant things. The child takes for granted whatever is told it. It is almost impossible for it to conceive of falsehood and error. The inculcations received sink deep, and cannot be easily eradicated, if they do not very considerably influence and mould all after mental habits and thinking.

It is reported that a Roman Catholic priest, in view of this, remarked that, if he could have control of the mind of a child, he did not care who had it afterwards. The Christian sects indicate a growing appreciation of the importance of this period. The Sunday-school is comparatively a modern institution. Starting as a purely secular one, it has been becoming more and more a means for indoctrinating children and young persons in particular religious systems. This tendency was never more manifest than at present. There is a great effort being made just now to render the theological teaching of the Sunday-school more thorough, effectual, and specific. It is plain that the Church is fully aware that the growing intelligence of the time is leaving the creeds behind it; and therefore, in order to requite itself for the loss, and preserve its own power, it is necessary to retain a strong hold upon the minds of the children, and plant in them as deeply as possible its cherished doctrines.

But this aim is subject to much uncertainty and many difficulties, if left to the unprescribed and ordinary course of the Sunday-school. There is danger that the importance of keeping it directly in view may be lost by the indulgence of a too unrestricted freedom. Accordingly, the expedient has of late been resorted to of a series of uniform lessons, prepared by a committee of the clergy, or theologians, known as the "International Sunday-school Lessons" for general drill and adoption. These appear to be meeting with the favor of the Orthodox churches, and are rapidly superseding the modes of instruction hitherto in use. Through them much greater and more definite concentration is attained. Of course the dictation of these lessons is intrusted only to those whose orthodoxy in essential particulars is free of suspicion. Thus, while they are discreetly made to assume a somewhat popular character and modern adaptation, they are designed throughout to operate simply and solely as conservators of the old theological notions, to foster an irrational attachment to the Bible and the Orthodox interpretation of it.

This is an exceedingly ingenious and plausible device for securing a unity of faith (the Roman Catholic ideal) in Protestantism, whose boast has been diversity of belief, the right of private judgment, individual liberty. The strenuous and determined purpose thus evinced as animating the Orthodox church, to make the Sunday-school the great agency for prolonging the dominion of the creeds, received a fresh confirmation at the recent Sunday-school Convention at Atlanta, Georgia. We refer to the seven years' course of instruction in orthodoxy and the Bible which this convention decided upon, and provided to be put into practical operation.

Of course if the term of life, or the period of its most rapid mental acquisition, could be extended to three or four times its present duration, or if there were no other systems of religion in the world worthy of attention than the Christian, and no knowledge of any great interests but theological ones, this project might pass without protest or dissent. But when we understand that childhood and life are limited, and that there are many other religions which are scarcely less deserving of acquaintance and study than the Christian, in order to rightly apprehend and estimate the latter,—that the field of knowledge ever broadens and grows from more to more,—we see what a waste of human energies is thus proposed, what injustice and outrage is perpetrated upon the inexperienced and confiding mind of childhood by these schemes of lingering religious fanaticism, even among the most advanced schools of nineteenth century Christianity.

There was a time, not very distant from our own age, when it was conceived that the Hebrew language was the parent of all others,—that Adam and Eve talked Hebrew in Paradise. The history of philology shows to what inextricable and hopeless confusion and error this conception led. It was subsequently discovered that the Hebrew was but one outgrowth of a great stock—the Semitic branch of languages. Similarly, to be an intelligent student of the Bible and Christianity, it is necessary that we should know their sources, to be able to trace the history of their development; for there is abundant proof to show that, like every great work of literature and every religion, they were gradually developed from literatures and religions which had preceded them, reaching back in a line which ends only with the first dawning of man's intelligence upon this planet.

But this, as it is very easy to be seen, is not the plan of the present Orthodox Sunday-school. In fact, as the International Lessons and the seven years' course referred to show, it is a very different one from this. But such contracted, treadmill training is sure ultimately to provoke a revolt in an age when enlightening influences are as powerful as pervading as at present, and accelerate the extinction of the very system and ideas which it is intended to serve. Intellectual progress, freethought, and inquiry are the rallying cries of to-day; and all attempts to trammel the human mind, to limit its vision or prescribe its thinking, even in religion, which has always been most tolerant of such usurpation and interference, is sure to defeat its ends. Not backward to Roman Catholic principles, but forward to the fundamental ones of Protestantism and Rationalism, is the movement which is steadily overriding all opposition and reluctance to fall in with it. D. H. C.

TIMELY PROTEST AGAINST THE "BIBLE AMENDMENT."

A telegraphic despatch to the New York Tribune is as follows:—

WASHINGTON, May 3.—The Order of the American Union, a secret anti-Catholic society, closed a three days' session in this city this afternoon. The meetings have been secret, and the managers have not been disposed to give much information in regard to their proceedings. It is learned, however, that a formal address to the American people will be issued by the president of the order, Mr. Cowles, editor of the Cleveland Leader, and that the society will give its support in the fall Congressional campaign to that party which shall accord to its principles the most hearty acceptance. These principles are the adoption of a Constitutional amendment covering substantially the ground proposed by Senators Edmunds and Blaine. They desire that such an amendment shall provide that no portion of the public moneys shall ever be devoted to sectarian purposes; that sectarian schools and institutions shall never be aided by the proceeds of taxation, and that church property shall be subjected to taxes like other property.

The secret organization above referred to has, we believe, declared itself explicitly and emphatically in favor of the Bible in the schools; and, although it is here reported as in favor of church taxation, we do not believe it would enforce this principle impartially as between Catholics and Protestants. Be that as it may, the Bible Amendment of Senator Edmunds, which will probably be held in reserve by the Senate Judiciary Committee till towards the close of the present session of Congress, and then rushed through (if possible) without sufficient deliberation, protects both church exemption and Bible reading in the schools, and will undoubtedly be supported, not only by the "Order of the American Union," but by a vast majority of the Republican party. The golden opportunity for exposing to the people the real consequences of this Bible Amendment is slipping away unimproved by the liberals of the country, since most native Americans fatally underrate the strength of the forces at work to Christianise the Constitution. All the more gratefully, therefore, do we hail the appended protest of four liberal German societies of Newark, N. J., against the passage of the Bible Amendment. It was originally adopted at Paine Hall, in this city, and was published in THE INDEX of February 28, 1878; but we give it below in full, in order to refresh the minds of our readers as to the momentous issues depending on the action of Congress with reference to this masked attack on the secularity of the Constitution:—

Resolved, That we solemnly protest against the passage of the joint resolution, now pending in the United States Senate, which recommends for adoption by the several States a Sixteenth Amendment to the Constitution; that we cordially approve so much of the first section as forbids all sectarian appropriations, whether by national, State, or municipal authority; but that we protest against the concluding sentence of the first section, which declares that—"This article shall not be construed to prohibit the reading of the Bible in any school or institution, and it shall not have the effect to impair the rights of property already vested."

Resolved, That the effect of this proviso would be substantially to declare that the Bible is not a sectarian book,—that as the "Inspired Word of God" it has a divine "right" to be read in the public schools, and is a part of the fundamental law of the land,—and that churches and church property have a "right" to be exempted from taxation, and thereby to tax every citizen for the propagation of the Christian religion.

Resolved, That these declarations, if made overtly or covertly by the Constitution, would make Christianity the ESTABLISHED RELIGION of the United States, the Orthodox Protestant churches the ESTABLISHED CHURCH, and the Bible a binding and supreme AUTHORITY in the courts; that the Church and the State would be thereby united, and the secular character of our Republican Government destroyed; and that we protest against this revolutionary subversion of our liberties in the name of public justice and the eternal rights of man.

THE INDEPENDENT TURNER SOCIETY:

Karl Knapp, Pres.

Louis Lather, Sec'y.

NEWARK LIBERAL SOCIETY:

F. J. Kieb, Pres.

F. B. Parson, Sec'y.

DEUTSCHER FORTBILDUNGS VEREIN:

Friedrich Neulen, Pres.

Julius Merz, Sec'y.

THE SOCIAL TURNER SOCIETY:

William Schlatter, Pres.

Bernh. Löwe, Sec'y.

NEWARK, N. J., April 24, 1878.

Communications.

MR. POTTER'S DISCOURSE.

THE INDEX of the 18th of April contains, as its leading paper, Mr. Potter's address delivered at Horticultural Hall in Boston on "Christianity and Modern Civilization," in which he aims to show that what is called modern civilization is not the legitimate offspring of Christianity, as the Church so constantly assumes, but that it is the production of other and more powerful causes. Mr. Potter is an able man; and Mr. Abbot, who has no superior in this age as a fair and logical thinker, gives the address his most unstinted praise. But to me the wonder was, in reading it, that in tracing our modern civilization to its true and natural causes, Mr. Potter never once mentions, nor even remotely alludes to, the name of Lord Bacon, and the influence of the inductive philosophy which he established in his Novum Organum, in 1620. With all due deference to Mr. Abbot's opinions of the completeness of the address as a discussion of the topic, it seems to me that discoursing upon the origin of modern civilization without taking into account the services of Lord Bacon, is like attempting to perform the play of Hamlet with the part of Hamlet omitted. Of course there would be a straining after causes, and a disposition to give more potency to one than it deserves, and a general nebulousness, which, I think, are discernible in Mr. Potter's lecture.

The grand characteristic of modern civilization which distinguishes it from all the forms that had preceded it is the interest it took in the secular welfare of the masses of mankind. The old philosophy scorned humanity as such, and utterly refused to lower its dignity by putting its science to a practical use. In Greece and Rome, there were colossal minds which made great advances in science. The schoolmen of the Middle Ages were perfect giants in mental force and acumen. But these arduous laborers in the fields of the old philosophy accomplished nothing valuable to mankind at large, because they aimed at an object higher than this world, and therefore unattainable. They had sciences; but they were so lost in the contemplation of those objects to be perceived by the pure intellect alone, that they scorned to make a practical application of it to the betterment of even their own worldly condition, much less of the condition of the masses of the people. The writings of the old philosophy, and especially those of the schoolmen, prove their authors to have been mighty men; but they remind one of the blowing off of steam from a hundred locomotive engines, which, from some accident on the road, are congregated at a certain place waiting till the track be cleared. The steam, as it escapes from the boilers to keep them from bursting, exhibits a tremendous amount of energy, makes a great noise, and attracts much attention; but it is entirely wasted, accomplishing nothing towards the valuable purposes for which railroads and locomotives were made. But when Bacon appeared with his philosophy of fruit and progress, he introduced a new era, and the whole scene changed. He first put the railway track in order, and then sent off the various trains of passengers and freight to the places of their destination, thus making the steam power serve a useful end.

We cannot even comprehend what modern civilization consists in, unless we constantly bear in mind the fact that the whole object of the ancient learning was simply to glorify the intellect of the chosen few who had time to devote themselves to it, and to find sublime happiness in such intellectual pursuits. Gunpowder and printing were both invented in the Middle Ages, but so scornfully did the learning of that day regard the idea of utilizing knowledge that the names of the inventors are lost. While there were men of genius and learning who cornucopied across the dark and cloudy heavens of those medieval times, leaving a track of light which is still visible, the masses of mankind were ignorant, degraded, and unhappy. They were of no more account than the brutes. By their hard labor they created the wealth which the favored few enjoyed. They were soldiers in the armies of the king, and firm believers in the superstitions of the Church. For generations after the invention of printing the art was used mainly, if not exclusively, in the interests of the priesthood, the government, and the old philosophy. None of the millions of the common people owned a book, for they could not read. The "benefit of clergy"—a phrase which figures so in the laws of England—was a commutation of the punishment of death by burning in the hand, in consideration of the fact that the accused could read. When the criminal stood before the court, a book was placed in his hands; and, if he could spell out a few sentences, the officer cried out, "Legit ut Clericus!"—he reads like a clergyman; and he availed himself of the exemption from punishment accorded to the clergy as a class. This wide-spread ignorance would have been the condition of society to this day, had the old, useless, heartless, barren philosophy been perpetuated in England; for it found its chief vocation, after gratifying its own selfish vanity, in playing into the hands of kings and priests, by scorning and brutalizing the masses, thus making them the willing subject, and dupes of both respectively.

But when Bacon appeared upon the stage of human affairs as an actor, he proposed to substitute for the old philosophy a new system, which was the very opposite to it, both in its aims and methods. The multiplying of human enjoyments; the mitigating of human sufferings; the relieving of the burdens and inconveniences of human life; the giving to mankind new inventions whereby their worldly condition could be ameliorated; to enlighten the common mind, and make every man's dwelling the home of happiness,—this, as Macaulay observes, was the object of all Bacon's speculations in philosophy, in legislation, in politics, and morals. Fruit, by which he meant the improvement and happiness of all the ranks and conditions of life; and progress, which made one attainment in the arts and sciences only the stepping-stone of another and greater,—these were the characteristics of the Baconian philosophy. Hence there has been more advance made in promoting the welfare of the masses of mankind since Lord Bacon's advent than had been made before since the creation of the world, or would have been made under the old system for a million of years to come. No sooner was the Baconian philosophy understood and accepted by the people of Europe, no sooner were fruit and progress recognized as the sole test of philosophical and scientific truth, than the march of improvement began which has overtaken our age and startled us with the grandeur of its achievements. All the departments of knowledge and inquiry felt the genial influence of the new and true philosophy, and began a career of invention and discovery which in our day has almost revolutionized society both in form and substance. Steam-power, for the propelling of machinery, and for the use of commerce in ocean navigation; the utilization of that terrible force of nature called electricity, in telegraphs under the sea and over the land; labor-saving machines for agricultural purposes, relieving the slow and heavy drudgery of farm life; photography, which gives the common people pictures of their children far away, and keeps the chain of family love and friendship bright; the newspaper and magazine, which gratify the taste for knowledge awakened in the common schools; the railway-car, which democratizes the people, and gives the advantages of travel to all promiscuously; the telephone, which enables a man to converse audibly with his friend a hundred miles away,—these are a few samples of the beneficent effects produced by the coming of Lord Bacon, the displacement of the old, and the establishment of the new, common-sense philosophy. And they are only the harbingers of still greater blessings in the future; for the most comforting fact I know of to a well-wisher of his race is that heavenly science, which has done all this to ameliorate the conditions of humanity, is only in its infancy. Her birth into the world was delayed a thousand years by that enemy of God and man, the Church; and when the fulness of time had come, and the event could no longer be postponed, and she was born, the same enemy, unable to strangle her in the cradle, kept her in swaddling bands so that she has only begun to fulfil her beneficent mission to our poor priest-ridden race, in making it intelligent and happy.

Every man who visited the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia must have been struck with this peculiarity in the English and American departments, that they bore the impress of Bacon's philosophy—fruit and progress. Italy, France, and other nations excelled the United States and England far away in printing, sculpture, and the adornments of life; but in the arts which go to equalize the condition of mankind, and make them comfortable; in the utilitarian arts, which constitute the essence of our modern civilization, England and the United States were ahead of all the rest. Painting, sculpture, oratory, and poetry were carried to the highest pitch of perfection in ages and countries when the king was an absolute despot, the priesthood a mere hand-maid to his power, and the masses of the people as degraded, ignorant, and miserable as the brutes of the field. But when railroads are built, and locomotives whistle, and all the machinery of our modern civilization is in action, the masses cannot stagnate in ignorance and poverty as they did in the times of the old philosophy. Shakespeare was contemporary with Bacon; and what tongue can tell the benign and civilizing influence of his dramatic works in forming the taste and increasing the happiness of those who can appreciate his writings? And if Bacon himself were the real author of the works imputed to Shakespeare, as an increasing number of scholars believe, then all will agree with Mr. Buckle that "he was the greatest of all the sons of men." But whether or not he was the author of these wonderful works of genius, we know that he established the system of the experimental philosophy, and set in operation those causes which have made England and the United States what those nations are. We know, and mourn over, the wretchedness which still afflicts the masses in these two countries, in defiance of the beneficent aims and influence of Bacon's philosophy. It is, however, the legacy of past generations. But still, there is more intelligence, more thrift and happiness, among the English-speaking people than there is elsewhere on the face of the whole earth.

Now, if these things be so, it is both wonderful and unpardonable in a man so intelligent as Mr. Potter to give even a bird's-eye view of modern civilization without mentioning the name of the man to whom the world is more indebted for its wealth and happiness and refinement than all the rest of the men who had lived before him. Bacon saw and predicted all the improvement in the condition of mankind which has come to pass. Nay more. His eagle eye looked further into the vista of the future than the nineteenth century, and saw improvement in the lot of man which we do not even dream of. And when his political enemies triumphed in his fall from power, he found satisfaction in the thought that foreign nations, the next ages, would do justice to his claims. It is for us, his grateful beneficiaries, to assign him his place in history as the greatest benefactor of his race.

A. B. BRADFORD.

ENON VALLEY, Pa., April 26, 1878.

[Without inquiring here whether Bacon's individual influence has been overrated or not, we ought to point out that Mr. Potter was not mentioning names at all, but traced great tendencies and general causes, leaving details out of the account. This was unavoidable. To have dwelt on Bacon without dwelling on numerous other great men would have been injustice to the latter. The only "nebulousness" of Mr. Potter's paper was that inseparable from any general treatment of so large a theme.—ED.]

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XXV.

Truth I have previously defined as through-th; that which goes through, or attains to its end; which does not fail or fall through into fallacy, or come short. This is, however, a very general definition, its antithet (its opposite or contrasted exhibit) being fallacy or failure (to go through to perfection). There are, it must now be observed, other and more special definitions of truth, according to the point of view from which we are considering it, and which are indispensable to a complete understanding of the subject.

Of these special definitions of truth there are, especially, three; which may be discriminated as naturalistic, scientific, and artistic, respectively. The first and simplest of these is this: Truth is conformity to an ideal standard of perfection (or, in the phrase of the general definition, that which goes through and attains to such proposed conformity). In the simple matter of "telling the truth," the ideal standard of perfection is the actual fact, to which the words of the recital must conform in order to be the truth. This is what the common mass of mankind have in mind, chiefly, when they speak of truth; and it is this therefore which may be designated as the simple or naturalistic, but still specific idea.

There is, however, with the highly intelligent classes, and especially with idealistic philosophical thinkers, another conception of truth (telic, or teleological, and) modelled after the doctrine of Plato on the subject, which may be defined as follows: Truth is the ultimate, complete, or artistic conformity of the actual (which, naturalistically, or in any lower grade than this ultimate, is imperfect, and hence untrue) to the perfect ideal, or ideal model or pattern, proposed as the goal of any evolution, or career of exertion or achievement. It is in this sense that Hegel uses the term truth; and this may be called the artistic special definition, to which I thus pass over, leaving the intermediate scientific definition for subsequent and more elaborate consideration. This artistic conception of truth partakes of the practical, inasmuch as it looks more especially to an operation, a process, or to the per-currence of a career; and to performance, or an arrival at the end of the career; whence it is called telic or teleological. It is also necessarily of a synthetic or complicated character, as it takes into account conformity with the ideal in the infinity of ultimate particulars. Truth of this kind thus becomes identified with the ideal, to which it has, as it were, returned after an estrangement; and its antithet (or that with which it is contrasted) is therefore the actual (naturalistically conceived of, or as lower down in its career than its ultimate complete return to, and reconciliation with the ideal; and as such the imperfect.

Neither of these special definitions of truth covers, or really touches at all, the proper scientism of the subject, as a universal conception of: that in respect to which the true is contrasted with the real (and incidentally with the good), as in the tabular exhibit at the end of the last article. The truth in this sense, may be defined as: The standard and instrument of the rigorous exactification of each individual instance of relation among the mass of particulars analytically discriminated within the reality, or subject-matter, or stuff to be regulated, in order to conduct, the more surely, to the ulterior synthetic perfection (or artistic truth); this standard and instrument itself prepared, by means of a prior process of test, to intervene as the permeative exactifying element, or the truth, of the career now in question.

This definition is confessedly very complicated; and I should be glad to be helped to make it less so, if that is practicable. It is also subject to apparently damaging criticism from the very first. The truth, it will be said, is a matter of relation; how, then, can a standard and an instrument stand in loco veritatis? It may be a measure of truth; but can it be the truth itself? The radical importance of the subject, and the conviction that in the sense I mean I am quite right, embolden me, nevertheless, to insist, and to trust to the following explanations to make myself better understood. The analogues of truth in this sense are the units of measure, upon which every scientific procedure rests, as the pound-weight, the foot, the foot-pound, the ohm, etc.; and, among concrete objects, the foot-rule, the square, the thermometer (meters of all kinds), the compass, etc. These are the standards and instruments of all scientific, exactifying, or truth-giving processes, in that more rigorous sense in which science insists on the truth in each minute analytical instance, as securing the larger and complex synthetic truth, with more certainty. By a slight figure of speech, merely, they may then be said to embody in themselves truth in this peculiar and analytically elemental sense—what may be called truth in the least form and yet as elemental,—truth as the source, fountain-head, and absolute principle of all truth.

But why resort to this figure of speech? Why speak of the carpenter's square as the truth of carpentry; of the compass as the truth of navigation? etc. For two reasons. The first is this: In the definition above, these standards of precision are described rightly as having been themselves subjected to test. They are measures, because they have been themselves measured in a prior process not now under consideration. They are themselves, therefore, embodied types of the artistic truth attained to in that prior process (of test); and brought now into a new process which they are to govern by virtue of the truth so embodied in them, they are in an almost literal sense the truth of this new process, certainly the true, or that factor which is true, as contrasted with the crude reality to which they are now to be united and applied. The second reason why this figure of speech is adopted, or, rather, as the case will now appear, why this radical working of scientific analogy is recognized and insisted on is, that in the abstract sphere of pure analytical thought, that which answers to these standard units of measurement in the concrete is those least elements of mentation from which all mentation is compounded, and of which, again, in the ideal constitution of things, the minima or least elements of substance and form are the analogues. In these two spheres of being, therefore, the subjective sphere of thought and the objective general sphere of being (metaphysical), what appeared in the tangible concrete as exactifying instruments, a species of concrete things, reappears, analogically, as elemental entity and relation, each at once a measure and a constituent. In other words, the truth as a relation, and the measure of truth here become blended, or so far identified as to be no longer distinguishable from each other, and to be only distinguishable from the reality which they concern; and the primal discrimination of all discriminations (whatever it shall prove to be, as it shall be further precisized) thus becomes the organon of thought and being, and the canon of criticism upon all our subsequent thinking. It is this, therefore, which is the truth of universal things as scientifically defined; or, THE TRUE AS CONTRASTED WITH THE REAL.

In this sense the rigorous, rectangular outline-drawing of any piece of work, of a piece of landscape-gardening, for instance, is the true (or truth) of the work; the materials wrought in, in this case the crude earth or wild natural landscape, are the real (or reality, or reality); and, in fine, the finished harmony which results from the combination and blending of the real and the true is the beautiful, of this (or any) particular subject of consideration.

So, by a cruder or more concrete analogy, the severe, formative, and regulative skeleton is the truth (the ideal or form-giving factor) of the human or animal body, and the soft concave flesh, capable of being wrought into form, as a material, is the real, or reality, (the substantive factor); and the finished harmony from the perfect union of flesh and bone, with its appropriate integuments, is the beautiful, of the body.

So geometry at large is the true or truth of universal structure; the concrete objects of Nature, which are, or are to be, geometrically disposed of or arranged, are the real, reality, or reality; and the perfect and harmonious structure, in its complete finish and imposing effect, is the beautiful.

So the intellect is the true or truth of the mind; that is to say, the faculty which cognizes truth (and fallacy), and is, as such, embodied truth itself, or the representative of truth, as it also is, the formative (ideal) and regulative factor of mind; sentiment (sensation, sense, sensitivity, etc.) is the real or reality of mind,—furnishing the substantial materials to be regulated; and will or desire, the faculty of choice or preference, is the beautiful or the art-realm of mentality.

So the laws of the land are (or should be) the true or truth of society; the personnel, the muster of its individualities, its real or reality; and the modelic structure and functioning of society its beautiful (aspect or feature).

So form is everywhere the true, substance the real, and harmonious structure and function the beautiful.

So, in fine, science—as the laws of being, discovered, expounded, formulated, and regulative—is the true, or the truth-like factor of universal being; Nature, with her Bacchanalian license and freedom, is the real, the substance, or material, the stuff-like, or to-be-regulated factor; and, to complete the scale, art is the beautiful—as the compromise or reconciliation, the blended and final harmony of the real and the true.

Naturalism, scientism, and artism, or the spirit of nature, unrestrained exuberance of freedom; the spirit of science, regulation, exactitude, precision, and rigor; and the spirit of art, ultimate reconciliation and harmony of opposites, are thus completely identified with the real, the true, and the beautiful.

Naturalism, scientism, and artism are the technical names for these aspects of being considered as operative or presiding principles.

Naturalism, scientism, and artism are the technical names of the ideal domains or dominions of being, over which, or within which, naturalism, scientism, and artism preside.

Again, and more interiorly, in respect to the great dominant features of society, religion (religious unity, unism, allied with sentiment) is the real or reality factor of society; intelligence, science, philosophy, learning, (politic, or the science of government included) is the true (the regulative factor); and business rightly conducted, a truly regulated social activity, a perfect social construction, functioning in harmony, is the beautiful,—the artistic factor of the social organism.

Within the governmental range of the social organism, hierarchical aristocracy (the inequality-idea) is the naturalism (the real); democracy or equality of rights (the equality-idea) is the scientism (the true); and pantarchism, a word devised to mean the ultimate and artistic reconciliation of aristocratic inequality (in the sense of genuine superiorities) with democratic equality (in essential rights), is the artism (or the beautiful) in this sphere of the application of these three ideological aspects,—the real (including the good), the true, and the beautiful.

In the natural order of arrangement, the real—the naturalism—is first mentioned, and the true (the scientism) subsequently. In the logical order, the arrangement is reversed, and scientism takes the lead. It was by an adoption of the logical order that I have first disposed of the classifications of the sciences,—scientism; and that I shall now proceed to the consideration of the underlying religious unity of mankind.

In fine, UNISM, DUISM, and TRINISM, repeating, more elementarily and radically, naturalism, scientism, and artism, are the threefold discrimination of all discriminations above alluded to; and, hence, the ORGANON OF THOUGHT AND BEING; and the CANON OF CRITICISM upon all future thinking.

MONEY AND VALUE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I believe that Gen. Warner would no more advocate what he deemed to be dishonest than would THE INDEX; but old superstitions die hard, whether the question be of religion or of finance. He says, "It has been estimated that from seventy to eighty per cent. of the entire value of silver, and nearly as large a per cent. of the value of gold, is due exclusively to their use as money. It has been 'estimated' that our globe rests on the back of an elephant, that again on a tortoise; and one notion is as accurate as the other.

Gold and silver are used as real money (thing-money, Latin, res, thing), because they have value; they do not have value because they are used as money. There is no aberration of the human mind on the money question which cannot produce authority to sustain it; but the question is not what Ricardo said of old, but what Reason says to-day. Any one who will read the history of money from the earliest times to the present, lately published by the well-known statistician, Henry V. Poor, will be able to distinguish between the vagaries and speculations of the schoolmen and the facts of science.

The first question for those who agree with Gen. Warner to settle is, does the value of anything depend upon laws of Congress; or does it exist in the nature of things, according to universal laws? I affirm that the exchangeable value of any and every article which is useful to, and desired by mankind, which is freely produced and easily distributed, is determined solely by the cost of production.

I think no one capable of understanding this proposition can deny it.

The exchangeable value of a gold or silver dollar is precisely the value of the material of which it is made, and can never be permanently changed except by changing the cost of producing the gold or silver. Temporary fluctuations in the value of gold and silver money may be made by legislation which should attempt to control or oppose natural laws, by making an artificial scarcity or over-supply, or by debasing coin; but as business is now done, commerce being approximately free between all parts of the world, no legislation can effect any lasting change, or do more than cause inconvenience of greater or less duration, and a more or less serious loss to the people.

The cases which Gen. Warner supposes are so entirely out of the question practically as to need no reply; unwise as our legislators are, and questionable as their political integrity is, they have never contemplated the absurdity of limiting the coinage of money, or of preventing the use of paper representative money or currency.

What is it that has caused the civilized commercial world to use the precious metals, especially gold, as a standard of value? A belief at first, perhaps instinctive, confirmed by experience and observation, that the cost of producing these metals is more uniform than that of any other article or thing which could be used also as money. In other words, as it is labor in the last analysis that is exchanged in all buying and selling, that article which represents most certainly a definite amount of labor is the best standard of value, until we can refer our measure to labor itself. Gen. Warner asks, "Does the demonetization of one metal increase the value of the other as a standard?" I say, certainly not; since its value depends solely on the labor cost of the metal, and nothing can affect that value except a change in the cost of production. "Demonetization" is a misleading word, because it implies more than the facts warrant. The law of 1873 did not deprive silver of its character as money; it did not take away the legal tender quality from the old silver dollar already coined; it simply recognized the fact that gold had become our standard, and devalued silver dollars for that purpose. So long as silver is desired by the commercial world, and by the people for use as money, and so far as the people will use it, no laws of Congress can demonetize it. Congress may order the mints to buy and coin silver, but it cannot be forced into circulation by law; the people in this country will use as much silver as is required for small change, and no more. Banks may accumulate it as a reserve; government may receive it for duties, and pay it out for expenses; but it will not circulate if the people prefer something else. It will in time drive gold out of the country, and become the sole standard, just as gold, when cheaper than silver, became the sole standard, practically, unless there should be such a change in the relative cost of producing gold and silver that gold should cost less or silver more than it now does. The Bank of France owns a large amount of silver, but the people prefer the notes of the bank; and there are only about 480,000,000 in circulation according to a recent statement, although the Bank has tried to withdraw its notes and substitute silver.

A yardstick which should vary in length, according to the greater or less number of yardsticks used, would be no greater absurdity as a standard of length than a standard of value which should vary according to the number of the standard units in use. A single yardstick in Washington might serve as a standard to measure all yardsticks by; and similarly a single gold dollar might be used as a standard for all dollars and to measure all other goods by.

It is true that a gold dollar is not an absolutely correct standard; neither perhaps is a yard the best unit for long measure; but both are as accurate as the nature of the case admits, both are relatively correct, which is the only correctness possible.

No doubt there are many persons now holding evidences of the indebtedness of government to them who will receive a very large return for what they lent to the country in its hour of need; and it is hard for the people to have to pay this large sum. But the war finances were not wisely administered, and we are now paying the penalty. We might have paid the expenses of the war as we went along, as well as to half-pay them; but we chose to lay the burden on the future, and we are suffering the consequences. We have been in a high fever with an inflated currency and industry stimulated to the point of the greatest production with the least labor, and we are experiencing the reaction. We are convalescing slowly; and some of us, forgetting the fever, are attributing our weakness to the returning health. Had we any right to expect to go through all we have done, and not suffer the consequences?

There is just as much wealth in the country as ever,—yes, more; but we are getting to estimate it by its real and not by its inflated value. A good deal of it is changing hands, too, and it is getting more evenly distributed.

It is not competent for Congress to help us out of our difficulties, except by letting the whole matter of finance severely alone, confirming the action of government to stamping on coins their weight and fineness. We must continue to use as heretofore bank-notes for our currency; and I know of no reason why the amount of bank-notes which the people may use should be limited by Congress any more than the number of loaves of bread, or the amount of cloth they should use.

Provided the bank-note circulation is a representative one, representing truly the property to be exchanged, there is no good reason why we should not have as much of that sort of money as we have of goods, if we want it.

But from a government issue of inconvertible paper, made legal-tender, and representing the credit of the country, or the power of taxation, or from notes of hand, representing debts of the government, made legal-tender, good Lord deliver us!

Let us have free banking, with only such restrictions as might equitably be applied to any business, with no monopoly, government, or individual, and the finances of the country will regulate themselves according to inherent laws, which may be discovered, but cannot be made at Washington or elsewhere.

F. S. C.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 15 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 16 " 25 " 8 " " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " " "
 " 52 " 46 " 5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STANNARD.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Toms-
 cy, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUDUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Barleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. F. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Leasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of Important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION. PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS KILLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Toms-
 cy, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. L. SUDUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AVERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTON (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-2. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	5.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	5.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Haeckel, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Etched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	3.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.50
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' CHILD'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts and Memories.....	5.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelton.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Poets. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints. Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 1 vol.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	5.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
FARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and M.DCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (ALFRED A.) Other Works than Ours: the Planning of Works completed under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Position, and Physical Conditions, with many Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLEN (E.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	2.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Hailour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., Geologic cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Station; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	3.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	3.00
Philosophy of Style.....	1.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Room-Tale. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmund, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAYER'S (MRS. OLLIE) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.25
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	6.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Air.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	3.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.25
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WHISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pantries. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDITIONAL

THE INDEX

331 Washington St., Boston.

GOLF—A nice performed motions for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $6 guide free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUB & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE.

Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doeringer & Co., 55 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Bookellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK. A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Boden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on five issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred B. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Trollope, Prof. Clifford, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year. Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Solomon Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to getter up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and read-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employes are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager. General Passenger Agent. C. B. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE, PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skilfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 461 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878. ... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ... E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10 1/2 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN, President of the Society, No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, R. H. RANNEY, F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XIV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a handsome ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 23, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 439.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

RESOLUTION

ADOPTED BY THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, AT PHILADELPHIA, JULY 3, 1876.

Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management.

GLIMPSES.

MOODY the revivalist has been pointedly challenged, as will be seen elsewhere, to prove a story he is fond of telling about a converted Infidel Club in Scotland. Thus far he has not, in the slang of the prize-ring, "come to time."

COL. INGERSOLL lectured in Music Hall, Boston, last Sunday, to an audience of two or three thousand people. It was a furious cannonade along the whole line, but the effect has not yet been reported. It is safe to predict that this is not the last word on the subject.

A NEW Liberal League, auxiliary to the National League, has been organized at Newark, N.J. The officers are—President, F. J. Kleb; Secretary, F. B. Parse; Treasurer, A. Trier. President Kleb's name was attached to the resolutions against the Bible Amendment, published last week.

ANOTHER Liberal League, formed some months ago, has voted to take out a charter under the National Liberal League, at St. Louis, Mo. The officers are—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary and Treasurer, Thomas J. Stanton; Executive Committee, Thomas Curtis, Joseph Clarke, and James B. Smith. Col. R. Peterson, editor of the Common Sense, made a capital speech before this League not long since, showing a very clear comprehension of the movement.

MR. EMERSON'S essay, republished last week in these columns, offended the denominational consciousness by alluding to the "pale negations of Boston Unitarianism." This is said to be "unjust." We do not think so. Catholicism affirms; Free Religion affirms; but between these clear extremes we find only affirmations that contradict each other, and negations that do not dare to negate without reservations. If that does not make them "pale," what would?

THE OFFICERS of the Third Liberal League of New York City were elected May 14, as follows: President, Cortland Palmer; Vice-President, Arnold Tanzer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.; Treasurer, F. W. Christern; Councillors, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Ingersoll Lockwood, Theron C. Leland, and Charles Ellershaw. This is an excellent list, and makes us hope much of the new League. We quote elsewhere the Herald's report of Mr. Frothingham's address. Addresses not reported were made by Mrs. Neymann, Dr. Foote, Mr. Tanzer, and others.

AN ILLINOIS correspondent encloses an extract from the Chicago Journal of April 9, in which the following statistics are presented on the alleged authority of Prof. A. J. Schem:—

Total population of the earth.....1,396,842,000
Under Christian Governments.....685,459,411
Under non-Christian Governments.....711,382,589
These figures have been "cooked" by somebody. Prof. Schem gave the figures as follows, in his Statistics of the World for 1875 (we quote directly from this work):—

Statistics of Christianity (January, 1875).
	Total Pop.	Rom. Cath.	Protest.	East'n Ch's.
America.....	84,500,000	47,300,000	30,000,000
Europe.....	301,600,000	147,300,000	71,800,000	63,250,000
Asia.....	796,000,000	4,700,000	1,800,000	8,500,000
Africa.....	203,300,000	1,100,000	1,200,000	2,200,000
Australia and Polynesia	4,400,000	400,000	1,500,000
	1,392,000,000	201,200,000	106,300,000	81,050,000

The total of Christianity is here given as 388,550,000; and the missionaries must have been extraordinarily active to have made 206,900,411 converts in three years! Prof. Schem's figures as quoted above are substantially corroborated by Johnson's New Cyclopædia. Probably, however, the Chicago Journal includes all the inhabitants of India and other heathen countries as "under Christian governments"—a cunning perversion of the truth which verges on a "pious fraud."

THE REV. MR. JASPER is still bent on revolutionizing astronomy, and upsetting the solar system as conceived by that infidel science: "The sable sun-mover appeared upon the lecture platform in Washington, last Monday evening. He confessed at the outset that he 'didn't know nothin' about outsiders; and dealt only with God's word which was writ by holy men inspired by the Spirit of God, moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and authorized by God's authority to light a lamp for the feet and prepare a guide for the path.' He was not a grammarian, and had 'never been to school in his life, except seven months' thumbing of a New York spelling-book, but had been directed to studying the Bible, and had asked God to lighten him.' He then described his conversion, his entrance into the ministry, and the manner in which he was brought into this argument about the sun. Then the Rev. Jasper preached his Richmond sermon with considerable unction. At the close, he made this appeal to the grammarians: 'What is the meaning of the word "arise"? Don't it mean something that goes up stairs, or gets up and moves about? If I haven't proved that the sun do move, then my name ain't Jasper! Don't take my word for it; take God's. He says so. Will you make God a liar? But they say the earth moves, that the earth turns over. Pshaw! Why, don't you see if it did, all the water would fall out of the rivers, and we all be drowned? Drowned! I tell you. And if the earth turned over, all the houses would tumble down, and the territories turn over, and you and I would be standing on our heads half the time! It's nonsense! But don't believe that the earth turns over; for you know you can't stand on your head all night.'"

THE GALLIPOLI correspondent of the London Times thus describes a distinguished "howling dervish": "Rich in shrines and monastic institutions, Gallipoli has been from the early days of the Ottoman rule in Europe a stronghold of the faith. It shelters three sects of dervishes; the Beys, the largest landed proprietors, are mostly affiliated to one or other of the orders; wealth and influence belong here to Islam, and the rule of the high priest of the howlers overrides that of the appointed governor. An able, enterprising, intriguing, money-getting fellow is this distinguished dervish, though you would hardly think it to see him with bowing head and eyes cast down, pale and ascetic of aspect, in green pelisse and turband calpack, slowly pacing the streets on high-bred horse, with an attendant holding either stirrup. Still less would you think it if you saw him in mosque on Tuesday or Friday, howling like a maniac till he foams at the mouth and drops exhausted. And yet this Hussam Effendi is a keen man of business, manages vast estates with great ability, and conducts extensive commercial operations in timber and agricultural produce with success, lends money to small farmers, has a large share in a steam flour mill and biscuit factory, and is one of the largest contractors for army and navy supplies. It is impossible to believe that one of such practical mind as Hussam Effendi should have faith in the value, theologically speaking, of his grotesque and painful ritual; but he owes much of his influence to his reputation for holiness; which, won by constant and efficient howling, is as substantial an item of his large stock in trade as the engine in the biscuit factory. Hussam Effendi's steadfastness to the rule of his order is thus by no means irreconcilable with his keen pursuit of this world's goods. Howling pays in one fashion, biscuit-baking in another; while by the judicious blending of mysticism with commerce the operator comes to occupy a sort of neutral ground on which he can serve indifferently both God and Mammon." These closing remarks remind us confusedly of defaulting treasurers and eminent church-members; it seems as if Turkey and the United States were more alike than our Christian conceit would like to admit.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.	FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.	HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y. HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass. HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo. HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill. HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind. HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass. MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York MR. WM. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass. MR. R. F. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass. MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass. MR. F. SCHUEMANN-POTT, San Francisco, Cal. HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I. REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass. RABBI B. FELSETHAL, Chicago, Ill. REV. W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis. MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Florence, Mass. MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich. MR. KARL HEINZEN, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston. MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston. RABBI ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati. MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York. MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York. MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thomaston, Mass. REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill. COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill. DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y. HON. R. S. MCCORMICK, Franklin, Pa. ELDER F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y. MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City. MRS. ELIZABETH STANTON, Amherst, N. Y. MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.	W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.	MISS JANE P. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.	J. A. J. WILCOX, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.	F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN, J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN, D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.	Alabama, J. H. HALLEY, Selma. Arkansas, JOHN A. HENS, Monticello. California, J. L. HATCH, San Francisco. Colorado, DAVID T. BEALS, Granada. Connecticut, GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport. Delaware, JOSEPH D. GORLE, Greenville. Florida, T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise. Georgia, DR. A. A. BELL, Madison. Illinois, DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg. Indiana, N. D. WATKINS, Xenia. Iowa, J. C. MICHEMER, Adet. Kansas, JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott. Kentucky, S. B. CLARK, Wilcoxville. Louisiana, EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans. Maine, DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor. Maryland, S. RUSSELL, New Market. Massachusetts, W. H. BAYARD, Boston. Michigan, KARL SCHUMMEYER, Detroit. Minnesota, J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis. Missouri, R. PETERSON, St. Louis. Nebraska, W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln. Nevada, V. G. BARRETT, White Rock. New Hampshire, WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester. New Jersey, FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic. New York, H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca. North Carolina, J. W. THORNE, Warren. Ohio, E. D. STARK, Cleveland. Oregon, SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin. Pennsylvania, G. W. BALDWIN, Leesville. Rhode Island, GEORGE LEWIS, Providence. South Carolina, P. W. FULLER, Columbia. Tennessee, DR. E. H. PEICE, Chattanooga. Texas, DR. H. J. RUSSELL, Hartsville. Virginia, R. L. HAUGHTON, Northampton. West Virginia, L. SPAULDING, Norfolk. Wisconsin, ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee. Wyoming, D. P. WILCOX, Yankton. District of Columbia, W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington. Utah, W. FERGUSON, Provo City. Wyoming, NORMAN S. PORTER.
-----------------------------	---

Finance Committee.	D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass. MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, Worcester, Acme, Boston. HARLAN P. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.
---------------------------	--

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde. Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Pfisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.	JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.	PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.	MISHOOTE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch. Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.	CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.	STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.	DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.	PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright. Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.	PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson. Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.	BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.	NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
---	---	--	--	---	--	--	---	--	---	--

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Koras, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.	TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.	HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker. Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.	CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.	NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie. Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermonce, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.	ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunning. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.	NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson. Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.	ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post. Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.	TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop. Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.	NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.	CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler. Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.	MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.	JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike. Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.	MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead. Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.	FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.	WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard. Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Mudd, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.	MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.	MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron. Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.	ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.	BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster. Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.	CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.	WATSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.	CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.	ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.] Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Senft, M. Sehn, C. B. Hoffman, T. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Senft, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.	PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.	LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.	XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."	NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr. Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauenstein, M.D., E. Lehouf, and others.	OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin. Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.	CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.] Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Kelly, and others.	ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.	NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parse. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
---	--	---	---	---	---	---	--	---	--	--	--	--	--	---	---	---	--	--	---	---	---	---	---	--	---	--	--	---	---	---	--

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

Growth of Religion.

Yesterday, Prof. F. Max Müller, M.A., commenced a course of seven lectures, delivered at the request of the Hibbert trustees, in the Chapter House, Westminster Abbey, on the "Origin and Growth of Religion as Illustrated by the Religions of India." The lecture was originally arranged to be delivered at five o'clock in the afternoon; but so large was the number of applications for tickets of admission that an alteration had to be made, and Prof. Max Müller read the lecture twice, once in the morning and then again in the afternoon, on both occasions the Chapter House being crowded. The first lecture dealt with the perception of the Infinite.

Prof. Max Müller commenced by asking how was it that we had a religion? This was a question which had not been asked for the first time in these latter days, but it was, nevertheless, a question which sounded startling even to ears that had been hardened by the din of many battles fought for the conquest of truth. Sensation, perception, imagination, reasoning—everything, in fact, which existed in our own consciousness—had had to defend the right and reason of its existence; but the question why we believed, why we were, or imagined we were, conscious of things which we could neither perceive with our senses, nor conceive with our reason, had seldom received, even from the greatest philosophers, that attention which it seemed so fully to deserve. What could be less satisfactory than the manner in which this problem had been lately pushed into the foreground of public controversy?

Strauss, in many respects a most acute reasoner, put before them in his last work, The Old and New Faith, the question, "Have we still any religion?" To a challenge put in this form, the only answer that could be given would be an appeal to statistics; and here there they would soon be told that out of a hundred thousand people there was hardly one who professed to be without religion. If another answer was wanted, the question ought to have been put in a different form; and Strauss ought before all things to have told them clearly what he himself understood by religion. He ought to have defined religion both in its psychological and historical development. But what did he do instead? He simply took the old definition which Schleiermacher gave of religion; viz., that it consisted in a feeling of absolute dependence; and he supplemented it by a definition of Feuerbach's, that the essence of all religion is covetousness, which manifested itself in prayer, sacrifice, and faith. He then concluded, because there was less of prayer, crossing, and attending mass in our days than in the Middle Ages, that therefore there was but little left of real piety and religion. But where had Strauss or anybody else proved that true religion manifested itself in prayer, crossing, and attending mass only, and that all who did not pray, or cross themselves, or attend mass had no longer any religion at all, and no belief in God? Strauss himself was so completely in the dark as to the true essence of religion, that when, at the end of the second chapter of his book, he asked himself whether he had still a religion, he could only answer, "Yes or no, according as you understand it."

Now this was the very point which ought to have been determined first; namely, what they ought to understand by religion. Religion was not a new invention. It was, if not as old as the world, at least as old as the world we knew. The oldest literary documents are almost everywhere religious; and, whether they descended to the lowest roots of their own intellectual growth, or ascended to the loftiest heights of modern speculation, everywhere they found religion was a power which confused and conquered even those who thought they had conquered it. Such a power did not escape the keen-eyed philosophers of ancient Greece. They to whom the world of thought seemed to have been as serene and transparent as the air which revealed the sea, the shore, and the sky of Athens, were startled at a very early time by the presence of religion, as by the appearance of a phantom which they could not explain. Here was the beginning of the science of religion, which was not, as had often been said, a science of to-day or of yesterday. In a certain sense the science of religion was as little a modern invention as religion itself. Wherever there was human life there was religion; and wherever there was religion the question where it came from could not long be suppressed.

With regard to religion, it was, no doubt, extremely difficult to give a definition. The word rose to the surface thousands of years ago; it was retained, while what was meant by it went on changing from century to century; and it was now often applied to the very opposite of what it was originally intended to signify. It was useless with words of this kind to appeal to their etymological meaning. It must be clear that, when they had to use words which had had a long history of their own, they could neither use them in their primitive etymological meaning, nor could they use them at one and the same time in all the senses through which they had passed. It was utterly useless to say, for instance, that religion meant this, and did not mean that; that it meant faith, or worship, or morality, or ecstatic vision, and that it did not mean fear, or hope, or surmise, or reverence of the gods. Religion might mean all this—perhaps at one time or other the name was used in every one of these meanings; but who had a right to say that religion should at present or in future have one of these meanings and one only? Kant might be perfectly right in saying that religion ought to be morality; and Fichte, Kant's immediate successor, might be perfectly right in saying that it ought to be knowledge; but he protested against either the one or the other being taken as a satisfactory definition of what is or was universally meant by the word religion.

There was another view according to which religion consisted in the worship of divine beings, and it had been held by many writers to be impossible that a religion should exist without some outward forms, without what was called a cultus. A religious reformer had a perfect right to say so; but the historian of religion could easily point out that religions had existed and do exist still without any signs of external worship. They would see that each definition of religion, as soon as it was started, seemed at once to provoke another, which met it by a flat denial. There seemed to be almost as many definitions of religion as there were religions in the world, and there was almost the same hostility between those who maintained these different definitions as there was between the believers in different religions. What then was to be done? Was it really impossible to give a definition of religion that should be applicable to all that had ever been called religion or by some similar name? He believed it was; and in 1878 he tried to define the subjective side of religion, or what was commonly called faith, by saying, "Religion is a mental faculty which, independent of, nay, in spite of sense and reason, enables man to apprehend the Infinite under different names and under varying disguises. Without that faculty no religion, not even the lowest worship of idols and fetiches, would be possible; and if we will but listen attentively, we can hear in all religions a groaning of the spirit, a struggle to conceive the inconceivable, to utter the unutterable, a longing after the Infinite, a love of God." He fully admitted the force of many objections which had been raised against that definition, but he still thought that the kernel of it was sound. He should not call it now an exhaustive definition, but it supplied such characteristics as would enable them to distinguish between religious consciousness on one side, and sensuous and rational knowledge on the other.

But there was a large class, not only of philosophers by profession, but of independent thinkers, in all classes of society, who looked upon any attempt at defining religion as perfectly useless, who would not listen even to a discussion whether one religion was false or another true, but who simply denied the possibility of any religion whatsoever, on the ground that men could not comprehend what was infinite; while all religions, however they might differ on other points, agreed in this: that their objects transcended, either partially or entirely, the apprehensive and comprehensive powers of our consciousness. This was the ground on which what was now called positive philosophy took its stand as denying the possibility of religion, and challenging all who admit any source of knowledge, except sense and reason, to produce their credentials.

This was not a new challenge, nor was the ground on which the battle had to be fought new. It was the old battle-field, measured out long ago by Kant, only that the one opening which was still left in his time; viz., the absolute certainty of moral truth, and through it the certainty of the existence of a God, was now closed up. There was no escape in that direction. The battle between those who believed in something which transcended our senses and our reason, who claimed for man the possession of a faculty or potential energy for apprehending the Infinite, and those who denied it on purely psychological grounds, must end in the victory of one and the surrender of the other party. Let it be granted that all our knowledge began with the senses, and that out of that material, supplied by the senses, reason built up its marvellous structure; and, let it be likewise admitted that, as all the materials which reason used for that purpose were finite, reason, if kept within proper bounds, could never supply them with a conception of the Infinite.

The first question, however, he asked was, Were all the materials which the senses supplied finite, and finite only? He agreed with his adversaries that, if the Infinite had not from the very first been present in our sensuous perceptions, such a word as Infinite would convey no meaning; it would be a sound, and nothing else. But for that very reason he felt it incumbent upon him to show the presentiment of the Infinite rested on the sentiment of the finite, and had its real roots in the real, though not yet fully-apprehended, presence of the Infinite in all our sensuous perceptions of the finite. What he held was, that with every finite perception there was a concomitant perception, or if that word should seem too strong, a concomitant sentiment or presentiment of the Infinite, that from the very first act of touch, or hearing, or sight, we were brought in contact not only with the visible, but also at the same time with an invisible universe. They had been told again and again a finite mind could not grasp the Infinite, and that, therefore, they ought to take their Bible and Prayer-book and rest here and be thankful. This would, indeed, be taking a despairing view both of ourselves and of our Bible and Prayer-book.

They would find that from the first dawn of history, and from the first dawn of their own individual consciousness, they had always been face to face with the Infinite. There might be much error in all the names that man had given to the Infinite, but even the history of error was full of useful lessons. After they had seen how it was possible for man to gain a presentiment of something beyond the finite they should watch him looking for the Infinite in mountains, trees, and rivers, in the storm and lightning, in the moon and the sun, in the sky and what was beyond the sky, trying name after name to comprehend it, calling it Thunderer, Bringer of Light, Wielder of the Thunderbolt, Giver of the Rain, Bestower of Food and Life, and after a time speaking of it as Maker, Ruler, and Preserver, King and Father, Lord of Lords, God of Gods, Cause of Causes, the Eternal, the Unknown, the Unknowable. —London Daily Telegraph, April 26, 1878.

WOOLSEY'S POLITICAL SCIENCE.*

Dr. Woolsey's book—our notice of which has been too long delayed—is divided into two parts; the speculative, and the historical or descriptive, or, as he himself calls it, the practical. The two parts are not distinctly separated, however, as a good deal of speculation, and not unnecessarily or improperly, runs through the description. The work taken altogether is a very important contribution to the literature of the subject,—indeed, the most important American contribution to it since Calhoun's. That American contributions to this literature have not been more numerous and weighty, considering the extent to which politics has for the last century occupied the national mind, has often been mentioned as fair matter for surprise; but the truth is that the national mind is not fonder of speculation in politics than in other fields, and did most of its speculation once for a long time when the Government was founded. The supreme wisdom and absolute power of the numerical majority were adopted at a very early period in the national history as the key to all political problems, and the only sure foundation for government; and American political development has consisted, until the close of the late war, almost wholly in the embodiment of this idea in legislation. It is only within the last ten or fifteen years that there have been any signs of a desire to revise the propositions with which the Democratic party took possession of the government, or to doubt their complete working efficacy. So that a book like Dr. Woolsey's is probably sure of more attention to-day than it would have secured at any time within the present century.

The portion of the work which we have called the speculative portion, and which is not confined to any material division of it, but has to be gathered from the author's comments on nearly every page, impresses us, however, as less clear and instructive than the historical and descriptive portion, which we shall notice hereafter. This defect is, it seems to us, due to his failure to decide fully and firmly at the outset on which of two theories he would treat the fundamental points of the rights of individuals and the nature and origin of the state. One of these theories considers man as a social animal endowed, it matters not why or by whom, with certain moral and mental faculties, and defines his rights in society as the necessary facilities for the free exercise of these faculties within the limits prescribed by the free exercise by his neighbors of their faculties. The same theory regards the State as an organization created by the social instinct of man for the supply of these necessary facilities for the free exercise of his faculties, or rather for his protection while exercising them. This theory, however, does not take notice of his origin or destiny, or make the State anything more than an association of men for certain mundane ends,—a highly respectable association, it is true, from its permanence and its power, and the great volume of sympathy and pride of which it becomes, if we may use the term, the reservoir. This theory, too, decides whether a man is worthily playing his part as a citizen by the extent of his contributions to what his fellows regard as their welfare, and judges the success of the State by the degree in which it encourages or aids him in making these contributions.

Dr. Woolsey, indeed, in one place (Vol. I., p. 213 et seq.) describes the State very much in these terms: "The State is, in truth, a large association stretching over a vast territory, acting by itself and empowering others to act, leaving individuals in their freedom, but providing for the numerous wants of a whole community. The interests of men demand unity of law and one power everywhere, in order that life may be on one undisturbed plan, so that a usurper who would introduce it where it was not, would be submitted to in his lifetime and venerated afterwards." He then goes on to show that "humanity expresses itself in the State," which intensifies sympathy with suffering, and uses the powers of all to supply wants which only a part may ever feel.

The other theory considers man as not only a social, but a religious, animal, and his citizenship here as largely a sort of preparation for a better city which is to come in another life, and involving duties and responsibilities other than those which connect him with the political organization to which he belongs. It considers the State, too, as something more than an association of men; or, to use Dr. Woolsey's words, declares that it is "not the sum of its members, but something more, and is so for all time." Its right of punishment and administering justice does not rest on contract or "any such flimsy foundation." "Society, in short, has more wisdom and might than the sum of its members," and this wisdom and might come "from the State's being in the natural order of things God's method of helping men towards a perfect life" (Vol. I., p. 195). Elsewhere, in elucidation of the same view, he lays it down that the only solid foundation for the State's primitive power is that "in punishing an evil-doer the State renders him his deserts." "In other words, the State has the same power and right to punish which God has; it is, in fact, as St. Paul calls it, a minister of God to execute wrath upon him that doeth wrong" (Vol. I., p. 354). Of course this makes the State not only "something more than the sum of its members," but vastly more. It makes it really, to use the old English phrase, a "most dread sovereign," armed not only with great power, but with immeasurable wisdom and authority,—in short, something awful, sacred, and mystic.

Now, the writer who holds one of these theories of man and of the State, cannot use the same political tests and standards as a writer who holds the other. They do not weigh the merits of a citizen or the efficiency of a government in the same way; a man may seem to one a good citizen, who to the other will seem a very indifferent citizen, while a State which one will think a perfect organization, might to the other wear the appearance of an inquisitorial pretender. Dr. Woolsey very frankly states his own position in his introduction:—

"Some things must be assumed in an essay like this. We assume the personality and responsibility of man as a free moral being. We assume also a moral order of the world, not founded on utilities that are in such a sense discoverable by man that he could construct a system of laws for human actions on them, however the divine Author of the world may have arranged it on such a plan. We discard the greatest-happiness theory as of no use, nay, as harmful in the department of politics, and believe that in human relations there must be a distinction drawn between benevolence and justice. At the same time we admit that happiness is an end which the individual and the State may rightfully aim at, and an important one, although subordinate to the rights and the ends contained in the perfection of human nature" (Vol. I., p. 1-2).

The italics in the above are ours. It means—if we interpret it aright—that a body of men, however high their social and mental culture, could not construct a just State, either by the aid of political experience or by an examination of their own needs; that even if they so far succeeded as to provide themselves with what are considered the ordinary sources of political happiness, such as security, liberty, industrial prosperity, intellectual activity, opportunities of education and social advancement for all, the State might still be a failure, because it might still fail to provide for "the perfection of human nature."

This repudiation of the utilitarian test is so complete that De Maistre could hardly have made it more so. We were not prepared after reading it, for the constant resort which Dr. Woolsey makes to this same test through the remainder of the work. He bases a man's claim to jurial rights upon his "needs." Property is justified by the usefulness "to the life, growth, health, and existence of the human race" of the products of the industry which property stimulates or keeps alive. Contract is to be cherished because "it is essential to the development and advance of human society." In his chapter on "The Sphere and Ends of the State," our author claims theoretically the widest possible sphere of activity and interference for the State; but in discussing the "Limits to State Power," he applies the utilitarian test unsparingly, and for purposes of practice decides that the State is bound to provide courts of the Anglo-Saxon type for the administration of justice; that justice ought to be cheap; that prescription ought to give a good title; that the right of petition ought not to be restricted; that speech on the platform and in the press ought to be free; that taxation ought not to be laid without the consent of the taxpayer through his representatives; that there ought to be no special exemptions from public burdens; and so on; justifying himself in every case by the fact that these restrictions are called for by the convenience or feelings of the citizen. He condemns socialism in like manner, by showing how it would result in actual working. He even goes so far to concede that the State "may, without going out of its permitted path, not only protect religion in other ways, but may also support an Established Church." "At the same time," he adds, again applying the utilitarian test even to this, "I believe that as a practical question, for the present, in some societies, and for the future, probably, in all, men will come to the opinion that the institutions of religion can be best sustained by combinations of private persons." But why should an institution which stands in the place of God, and which is armed with the awful power of punishing men according to their deserts without regard to the visible effects of the punishment, and which is charged with the preparation of man for perfection, abdicate the function, from this point of view of overwhelming importance, of taking charge of the religious training of the citizen? Suppose "combinations of private persons" neglect the institutions of religion, and the State takes no responsibility in the matter; is it a just and true State? And, finally, why is "the opinion of men" on such a matter of any importance?

* Political Science; or, the State, Theoretically and Practically Considered. By Theodore D. Woolsey, late President of Yale College. 2 vols. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. 1878.

Dr. Woolsey nowhere points out where the final source of authority in a State in which the greatest-happiness principle is "of no use," or is only a subordinate consideration, is to be lodged. We have looked in vain through the work for even a hint of the place in which the statesmen or people should look for the oracle which is to tell them whether their institutions do or do not make for human perfection, and do or do not carry out God's ends in the creation of human society; and yet, if popular contentment and prosperity count for nothing, or but little, nothing is more necessary to good government than the existence and accessibility of some infallible source of light.

There is, however, nothing new in Dr. Woolsey's definition of a State. It is, in truth, that which has prevailed throughout the world down to our own day. Take a conspicuous example in modern times of the working of his theory,—the France of Louis XIV. We do not by any means wish to make this theory responsible for the enormities of that monarch, because we grant that cruelty and intolerance are not the necessary accompaniments of the theory. But that monarch had, nevertheless, a political ideal which, taken in its best aspect, we find it difficult to distinguish from Dr. Woolsey's; that is, he held that the end of the State was the working out of God's purposes, in the production of human perfection; and he held that the happiness or contentment of his subjects was a subordinate consideration. He sought, therefore, as part of the proper discharge of this great function, and sought it with sincerity, to establish in his dominions complete unity of belief regarding the fundamental problems of human existence; and in order to produce this he inflicted punishment, in loco Dei, according to his notion of the deserts of the criminal, and without any reference to the effect of it on the popular mind, on public tranquillity, or on the national industry. The French Protestants emigrated by the hundred thousand, and whole provinces were desolated by military execution, and France was rapidly prostrated before her enemies; but the king's intentions being good, and the bulk of the people supporting him, on what theory but the utilitarian one can we condemn his course? "My people are not happy," he might say; "but what difference does that make? The chief end of government is not happiness." The fact is that, seductive as Dr. Woolsey's theory of the State is, and elevating as the contemplation of it is to many minds, it contains the fatal spring from which many of the greatest and most wide-spread of human woes have flowed. The authority of the State has, after all, to be exercised by a small body of commonplace mortals, for whom it is useless to claim God's wisdom in inflicting punishment any more than his power in shaping human destiny; and, however august their mission may be, they need to be saved from themselves by the constant reminder that their work will be judged now and here, and by purely mundane considerations.—New York Nation, May 2.

THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS.

If I were to have but one book about the Bible in my bookcase, and could choose that book, of those I know it would probably be the one whose first volume is just published by Roberts Brothers, of Boston, under the title of Bible for Learners. Two volumes—over five hundred and fifty pages in each—for the Old Testament (the second to be ready in May), and a third, still larger, for the New, make up the work; but the last volume must wait awhile—we hope not long—on the translator's health. The price is $2.00 a volume. Vol. II will contain a carefully made index to the Old Testament part, for the lack of which the English edition sadly suffers.

"The Bible as History and Literature," would better tell what it really is. It is the Bible treated not as "Holy Scriptures," but as the thousand-years-long literature of a religious nation; a literature beginning in an embryonic stage of myth and legend, and spanning the nation's growth from the time when it worshipped a fiery power with human sacrifices, to the time when it worshipped a Father-in-Heaven with self-sacrifice and righteousness; a noble literature, embracing science, history, laws, biography, fiction, drama, maxims, war-songs, love-songs, hymns. It is written—this new book—by men whose Bible reverence does not depend on finding a "revelation," nor end on finding a "legend"; but by scholars who know enough to call the revelation legend, and enough more to read out history and spiritual vision from the legend. Their point of view is always that of the science of religions. For instance: the Chaldean "Flood," the Persian "Eden," the Northman "Sagas," our Indian Hlawatha-stories, are made to illustrate Genesis. There is no dodging in their criticism, and yet they say truly, "Our greatest care has been to make these narratives speak to the heart and conscience."

To read these volumes, therefore, is to learn better what the Bible is, and what is in the Bible, than from reading the Bible itself. For here we have the gist of every narrative translated, and many of the more important passages literally,—each passage set in its chronological place, and made to contribute its fact or idea to the history of Israel's development, and each book accounting for itself in the order of its appearance. The Levitical part of "Moses' Law," e.g., was written probably eight hundred years after Moses, and it appears eight hundred years after Moses in our history; the psalm which probably illustrates an eighth century wedding is given in an eighth century chapter; and that which illustrates the captive's return from Babylon, is given in the chapter on the return; and so on. The "Prophets," so dim in the English translation that even patient readers weary, have voices full of meaning as we listen to each in his own day and generation, proclaiming Jehovah's wrath upon idolatries that we have been watching with him, and casting fearful glances at a foe that we already knew was threatening the land just then. Imagine six heroic pamphlets from John Robinson, Cotton Mather, Jonathan Edwards, Dr. Channing, Theodore Parker, and Frank Abbot, tagged to each other in juxtaposition six centuries hence as "Prophets." What blind reading they would make till each was located in its own spot of the forgotten history! Then each would light its spot, and the spot it. Even so it is with the surviving pamphlets of the Hebrew literature; and our Dutch authors have done this "locating" and "lighting" for us.

And they have done it so admirably that their work is at once Bible-translation, commentary, and dictionary,—all in the form of a "Hebrew History and Literature." No doubt it holds mistakes, for there are "more truths yet to break forth out of the Bible" as more light breaks in upon it; but it is careful, thorough work. Many of the chapters are so easy, popular, dramatic even, in style as to interest children; yet they hold the results of the best liberal scholarship of the day, and the "learners," for whom they are written, may well include most of the men who talk from pulpits. In a word, by all kinds of Bible students—the minister who would fain lead his people to openly say "Bad!" of things bad, "False!" of things false, wherever they be found, and "True, Good, Beautiful!" of things that are so, wherever they be found; the mother wishing to give her child a common-sense reverence, instead of a common-sense irreverence, for the quaintly grand old Book; the Sunday-School teacher who wants fresh lessons for her class of twelve years old or twenty; the anxious reader who wonders if she must give up her dear traditional beliefs, and hopes for something at least as noble in their place,—by all such readers this book should be bought and read, and owned and lent.

We thank the Dutch authors, Oort and Hooykaas, the English translator, Wicksteed, who has done his part so well that one forgets it is a translation, and the American publisher, for giving it to us. One thing only is wanting: a promise to translate and publish the supplementary volume (already out in Dutch) that covers the gap in time between the Old Testament and the New.

I have written with only Dr. Oort's Old Testament volume in mind,—all that I have read. The New Testament part is prepared by the other author, Dr. Hooykaas, but in connection with his friend, and in the same spirit and knowledge. Will not some one who has read it make that the subject of a separate notice for the Pamphlet Mission?—W. C. Gannett, in the Pamphlet Mission, May 1.

EMERSON'S LECTURE.

Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson lectured in the Old South last evening upon "Temperance," as he chose to name his subject. But his use of the word was so wide that it included all the forms of moderation in which a wise man possesses himself; and the line of thought followed by the lecturer related especially to self-control in the use of language. He was an advocate of the positive degree, a decided opponent of the superlative. Conforming to the request made at the opening of the lecture, a formal report is withheld. The lecture began soon after eight o'clock, and continued for three-quarters of an hour. Mr. Emerson was accorded the closest attention, and his manner of delivery was an excellent illustration of his teaching. It was the living presentation of his doctrine, sentence by sentence.

At the outset of the lecture he stated the wide application of the word "temperance" to the conservation of all the energies of body, mind, and soul. Moderation in meats and drinks is a narrow meaning. People of extremes came next in order for notice; and those who go through life tearing, exclaiming, swearing, and convulsed were made to appear pitifully ridiculous in their littleness. No doubt every one present—for no children were there, and the good die young—felt more or less guilty under Mr. Emerson's analysis of the common human weakness of exaggeration. Certainly the characters are not infrequent who cry persecution when their opinions are controverted, and reckon themselves with Saint Barnabas, who was sawn in two. Nor is it to be supposed that all of Mr. Emerson's admirers are free from the use of the superlative in grammar which, in its several degrees of odiousness, met his unqualified censure last evening. An expression worth remembering is that "superlatives are diminutives and weaken. The positive is the sinew of speech; the superlative the fat."

The common tendency of people to exaggerate whatever is terrible and shocking was pithily favored with Mr. Emerson's attention. He thinks there cannot anything happen so tragical that we will not contrive to make the story worse by our exaggerations as we repeat it. Such untruths, too, as "The best I ever saw," "I never heard anything like it," Mr. Emerson would like to see gazetted. The current expressions for fear, suffering, and horror, also, such as "My hair stood on end," "My knees smote together," are untrue and excessive. Thousands live and die who never had a single experience of hunger, who were never thirsty and never terrified. This rhetorical terror comes only in dreams or nightmares.

The sufficient objection to this unmeasured speech is that it is a lie. Mr. Emerson then passed on to an analysis of the mental characteristics of these people who tell such remarkable lies and fall so utterly in self-control. We are, he said (no personalities are intended here), garrulous and demonstrative,—a kind of creatures who cannot live without expression for all our sense and nonsense. The lecturer passed naturally from this point to notice the power of expression, and the interesting opinion was given that though the man with greatest power of expression—Shakespeare—has by common consent been awarded the highest place in renown, if the opinion of the poets were asked their verdict would probably be different. If the power be given to display, there is all the less left for use and creation. Starting on a new line by the striking illustration that a face enlarged by a concave mirror loses its expression, Mr. Emerson set forth the loss of power which comes from exaggerating facts, which would be strong and expressive if restrained within the limits of exact truth. Nature's uniformity and lack of excess were made to furnish other good illustrations of the same truth. No one ever saw a winged dragon, a flying man, or a talking fish. Nature is always serious. She never jests with us. Life cannot be carried on except by fidelity and sober earnestness.

A just comparison was made next in the lecture between the Oriental and Occidental minds. The Western is mathematical and values exactness. It likes literal statements. It does not love the superlative, but the positive degree. But the Eastern mind is just the reverse; it delights in sweeping assertions and bold extravagance of language. These two characteristics have exerted an important and healthful influence upon each other. In the latter part of his lecture, the worth of plain statements and the habits of the common people to reduce their expressions to the simplest form were presented with a clearness which was itself a proof of the superior power of the moderate use of words. The office of the Eastern and Western habits of thought to serve as correctives of each other, and the beauty and strength each may give to the other, again took Mr. Emerson's attention; and with that theme the lecture closed.

It was an entertaining paper, and in its full form will doubtless receive the attention its sound sense deserves.—Advertiser, April 25.

BECKWITH VS. MOODY.

DID MOODY CONVERT THE INFIDEL CLUB IN EDINBURGH?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW HAVEN UNION:—

The subject-matter of the following letter sufficiently vindicates, if it does not demand, its publication. It was mailed to Mr. Moody on Thursday, April 25, but he, being out of town, probably did not receive it until Saturday, the 27th. In the interest of honesty the public are entitled to an ingenious explanation of the facts dwelt upon in the letter; and the only object of the writer was to elicit such an explanation. That so reasonable, natural, and honest a course as to state the facts has not been accorded from Mr. Moody is a circumstance that cannot tend to add to the credibility of his story in the minds of the public; and the writer appeals to the press to give to the people the charge against the Evangelist's truth and veracity, which he seems not disposed effectually to deny.

G. B.
NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 25, 1878.

TO D. L. MOODY, EVANGELIST, NEW HAVEN, CONN.:

Brother,—Allusion is made by Paul, in either a figurative or a sarcastic sense, to the truth abounding through his lie; and in the same connection he says that himself and others of his faith were slanderously reported to have done evil that good might come.

One of the most common passages in the experience of an aggressive reformer (and all effective reforms must be aggressive) is an animadversion upon his motives and methods, which involves the imputation that he is pursuing a selfish object and is forwarding it by sinister agencies.

The treatment of Evangelists is not an exception to this rule. Paul enjoyed its application to him, and those who succeeded him have had a good share of its benefits, even down to our contemporaries, and the time of Mr. Moody's advent to this city of the Pilgrim Fathers.

To give a case in point: I have lately been told by a gentleman of this city that Mr. Moody, in his public ministrations, related at two different places, the last of which was New Haven, in the hearing of my informant, an incident substantially as follows:—

"On one occasion of his preaching in Edinburgh, Scotland, there was in the audience a man who had been pointed out to Mr. Moody as the president of an infidel club in that city. The preacher directed his discourse pointedly toward that infidel; and, after the meeting, sought an interview and had a conference with him. The Evangelist at that time made no impression. A few weeks after, when Mr. Moody had departed from Edinburgh, and was preaching in another part of Scotland, he learned that the effect of his labor with the infidel leader was the conversion of him and seventeen of his associates in the club, being its entire membership, which broke up the club."

Such are the details which Mr. Moody is said (I have never heard them) to have stated repeatedly in his preaching. Now, my informant tells me that persons acquainted in Edinburgh declare this story of the conversion of that club to be without a shadow of truth, a sheer fabrication, and its falsity has been established by documents and affidavits which can be produced.

The gentleman who told me is a man of inflexible integrity, and a much respected citizen here. His name and address are at your service if you wish me to give them. He stated the case publicly, and said any one was at liberty to use his name as authority for the facts. I have written this at his suggestion and request, we being familiar acquaintances.

Now, although we are enjoined not to let our good be evil spoken of, yet we cannot always prevent its being done. Men will criticise our best and purest actions, sometimes unfairly, and even mendaciously. Paul took occasion to repel as a slander the report that he did evil that good might come; and it seems to me that when a man who goes before the community as the representative of the most solemn and vital interests that concern mankind is charged with duplicity and falsehood, if he is not amenable to such censure, it is gravely incumbent on him, upon a suitable occasion, to declare his innocence.

All of us who have tried to serve our fellows have felt the sting of false judgment upon our motives. While such judgment is limited to speculative interpretations of the principle upon which we act, with no facts to sustain any reproachful allegations, they may be passed by as idle talk, or simply discovered, when it is convenient and wise to do so. But when a grave charge of the character that I have stated is made against one in your position, and that charge is backed up by affidavits and documents procured by great exertion and with adequate inquiry, and circulated freely and fearlessly in the very presence of him against whom they are uttered, one of his first duties, if he is innocent of them, is to take an early occasion to declare their falsehood.

You, brother, are in a most favorable situation for giving to this community the facts upon this matter in a way that will be conclusive to their minds and enable them better to estimate you as a divine messenger to them than they otherwise could do. At the same time this can be done in a manner so incidental as not to give you the appearance of special pleading for your own justification. You enjoy with the people here a prestige which ought not to rest on any basis short of the highest merit; and neither you nor the community whose confidence you so largely enjoy can afford to allow the foundation of your popularity to be shaken and your usefulness impaired by an impeachment of your veracity. This impeachment is made by intelligent and honest men who profess to have the means of establishing their declarations by competent proof. A course of reticence on your part cannot fail to be construed as a tacit admission of its justness; and trusting that whether it is or is not well founded, you will here and early confront your accusers, and let the real facts be known, I am very respectfully, your available coadjutor for the elevation of humanity by processes founded in reason, and furthered in truth,

GEORGE BECKWITH.

—New Haven Union, May 3.

THE RIGHTS OF THE CLERGY.

A REMARKABLE CASE IN MARLBOROUGH.—A CATHOLIC PRIEST NOT LEGALLY SUSTAINED IN EJECUTING A THIRD PARTY WHILE ADMINISTERING THE SACRAMENT TO A PAUPER.

A case of much interest has recently been decided by the Supreme Court relating to the right of a Roman Catholic priest to exclude from the room the wife of the keeper of an almshouse while the priest was administering a sacrament of the Church to a sick person. The suit was brought by Rebecca Cooper against Peter McKenna and others, in the Superior Court for Middlesex County. It was an action of tort for an assault and battery, and the defence was a general denial of liability. At the trial of the cause there was evidence tending to show that the assault and battery, if committed at all, was committed in an effort to remove the plaintiff from a room in the almshouse, of which the plaintiff's husband was keeper and of which she was in charge at the time, in Marlborough, where the defendant, McKenna, a Catholic priest and a resident of Marlborough, was endeavoring to administer the sacrament to a sick woman named Hogan, who was a Catholic and believed such sacrament essential to her, and was an inmate of the house and had requested him to administer it, and which administering required entire secrecy between McKenna and the sick person; that the plaintiff had refused to leave the room after being requested to retire, and that only a sufficient and proper amount of force was used to compel her to leave.

The defendants asked the Court to instruct the jury as follows: "If the jury are satisfied that the defendant McKenna went to the almshouse at Hogan's request to administer to her the sacraments of her Church, and violated no rule of the house, either written or otherwise, and did not interfere with the proper discipline of the house in obtaining access to her, then, if the sacrament of penance to be administered, as understood by McKenna and Hogan, required secrecy between the parties, and if the plaintiff persistently remained in the room after being requested to retire, and for the purpose of interfering, then a sufficient and proper amount of force might be used to remove the plaintiff from the rooms where the sick person was while the sacrament was being administered." The court refused to instruct the jury as requested; for the reason, among others, that no justification had been set up in the defendants' answers. A verdict was rendered for the plaintiff, and the defendants alleged exceptions.

The Supreme Court has now overruled the exceptions taken by the defendant, holding that under an answer making a general denial of the plaintiff's declaration, the justification set up by the defendants was inadmissible. But the court also found, independently of any question of pleading, the supposed justification insufficient. The opinion is by Judge Ames, and upon this part of the case the court says: "It appears from the bill of exceptions that the plaintiff's husband was the keeper of the almshouse, and that she was in charge of it at the time of the difficulty. She was rightfully in the room at the time it happened and the defendant was a mere visitor. Whether it would have been reasonable and proper, under the circumstances, for the plaintiff to have left the room on being requested, is a question which is not for us to decide, and upon which we need express no opinion. There was nothing, however, in the priestly character of the defendant, or in the offices of religion which he was about to perform, that gave him the control of the room, or any legal authority to exclude or remove from it by force any person lawfully there. The case presented to us raises no question except as to the strict legal rights of the parties; and we are bound to say that the facts relied upon by the defendant in justification of his conduct do not as a matter of law furnish any defence." G. A. Somerby appeared for the plaintiff, and T. H. Sweetser for the defendant.—Boston Advertiser, May 8.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH FREEMASONRY.

At the last meeting of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons of England, the following action was taken with reference to the recent action of the Grand Orient of France in dropping the requirement of a belief in the existence of God: The pro-grand master, the Earl of Carnarvon, who on rising was received with warm cheers, said that it was then his duty to call attention to a report of a committee appointed "to inquire into the circumstances relative to the elimination of the name of the Great Architect of the Universe from its ritual by the Grand Orient of France." The committee, the noble earl said, had agreed unanimously to a report; but before he stated its effect he requested the grand secretary to read the old and the new regulations of the Grand Orient of France. The grand secretary then read the old regulations of the Grand Orient, which declared that the "principles of the order are the existence of a God, the immortality of the soul, and human solidarity"; and that it excluded no person on account of his belief (the same in effect as the general principles of the order universally). In the altered regulations, the words regarding the existence of God and the immortality of the soul were eliminated, and there were substituted the words "absolute freedom of conscience."

The pro-grand master then proceeded to state that the committee, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, proposed four resolutions,—one, that the Grand Lodge should state that it viewed with profound regret the step which had been taken by the Grand Orient of France in thus removing from its regulations the foundation of the craft upon the existence of God and the immortality of the soul,—a removal opposed to all principles of the craft, as was seen in the history and traditions of Freemasonry from the earliest times. The second resolution proposed was to the effect that the English Grand Lodge, while anxious in the most fraternal spirit to greet brethren from foreign lodges initiated in lodges where the free and genuine principles were adopted, could not admit those initiated in lodges which denied or ignored the belief in the existence of God. It would therefore be necessary to state, the report proceeded to say in a third resolution, that no brother from a lodge could be admitted unless his certificate showed that he had been initiated in a lodge where this landmark of the order was observed, or unless he should be vouched for as one so initiated; and he also admitted that this belief in the Great Architect of the universe was an essential landmark of the order.

The chairman of the committee, after speaking at some length in support of the resolutions, said that general lodges looked to the English Grand Lodge, as to the central parliament of Freemasonry, for guidance, and the committee considered it should not flinch from the duty of prescribing and specifying the practical mode in which effect should be given to its views. The resolutions were then put to the meeting, and carried unanimously. The next important business was the election of a grand master for the year, and upon the motion of two brethren from below the dais, as representing the working lodges, the Prince of Wales was re-elected with unanimity and amid loud cheers, and proclaimed in due form by Brother Thomas Fenn with all the titles of the grand master. The Grand Lodge then closed in due form.—Boston Advertiser, April 29.

THE COMMUNISM THAT IS DANGEROUS.

The country is informed that there are eight thousand Communists from foreign countries in Chicago, two thousand of whom are armed and are acquiring military discipline. This is not a very pleasing piece of intelligence for the mass of the people who believe in law and order and who have heard of the terrors of the French Commune. Nevertheless, upon more mature reflection, there is little to cause alarm in the announcement, supposing it to be true. The mass of the people of this country believe in law and order, and not only yield willing obedience to recognized authority, but will promptly support that authority. The body politic is not yet sufficiently poisoned with the heresies of the Commune to extend any favor or support to an organization called into existence to oppose the laws of the land and defy constituted authority. Movements like that in Chicago can be strangled by the iron grip of authority. The exiles of the French Commune who recently celebrated "Good Friday" in New York by a banquet at which the most disgusting obscenities and shocking blasphemies were uttered, will render their creed so forbidding that no decent person can listen to it.

Communism may be said to be the creed of spoliation. Under the guise of the proclamation of equal rights for all men, it proposes to equitably divide among the masses the accumulations of the industrious and the fortunate. It is, therefore, but another name for robbery. Whatever partakes of the nature of spoliation, or taking the property of one class of citizens to enrich another, is in the nature of communism.

The communism which is dangerous is the tendency in the cities of this country to ring-rule, by which a few hundreds are enriched at the expense of the many. Under the Tweed régime New York city furnished an illustration of our point on a magnificent scale. In most cities in the country there has been more or less of it. The mass of ignorant and vicious voters which crowd into large cities, vote solidly with the ring-masters. For so doing they receive their reward by being allowed to break the laws with impunity. Scores share the plunder derived from thousands as taxes, and these scores organize and vote the vicious masses. This is a form of communism which is dangerous.

In this country the right to vote is of great value,—so valuable and so necessary to the security and well-being of communities and States that it should be most zealously guarded. Law-makers should spare no efforts to hedge about the right of suffrage with every possible safeguard. When it becomes of no account, when people get to saying "it is no use to vote, and 'there will never again be a fair election,'" there is real cause for alarm. The ballot in the hands of the man entitled to it is protection, and, in a certain sense, property. When, by the commission of frauds upon the ballot either by the voting of those who are not entitled to the privilege or by repeating and ballot-box stuffing, the votes of those entitled to suffrage are rendered nugatory, and the voice of the majority stifled, communism practically controls affairs. When, by the connivance of elections officers, those entitled to vote are defrauded by false counting and returns, communism is already seated in the place of authority, and, by depriving those entitled to the ballot of its count and voice, robs the many in the interest of the few. There is already an alarming danger. In some States of the Union there are cities where it is asserted by those who know that there has not been an honest election in many years.

Another exhibition of the spirit of communism is found in the growing tendency of States and cities to repudiate their just obligations to creditors. It is none the less plundering because there is no law to enforce such contracts, and the influence is none the less pernicious because the fraud is perpetrated by law-makers. Indeed, it gives an air of respectability to robbery.

These are a few of the communistic tendencies which are dangerous, and which should be checked and remedied.—Boston Journal, April 27.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

UNDER THE TREES.

BY KATHLEEN WRIGHT.

Light dancing leaves of the tall swaying tree-tops!
Beautiful children of sunshine and joy!
Rocking secure on the heavenly breezes,
High above earth and all earthly alloy.
Whom do they beckon, the free dancing leaflets?
What do the breezes say? Listen and hark!
Lofty green trees in the sunshine are calling—
Calling the seed hid away in the dark.
Higher! rise higher!
Thou too art our kindred;
Dark night is over, and day is begun.
Lift thy head!
Leave thy bed!
Leave thy dark cavern!
Come, little sister, come forth to the sun.

Wonderful life of the green swaying tree-tops!
High above sorrow and high above care.
Spirits invisible! Voices celestial!
Floating serene through the blue sunny air.
What are they seeking, those fingers of sunshine?
What do those voices say? Listen and hark!
Cast thine eyes upward; 'tis thee they are calling—
Calling the soul hid away in the dark.
Higher! rise higher!
Thou too art our kindred;
Dark night is over, and day is begun.
Sleep no more!
Weep no more!
Leave thy dark cavern!
Rise, little sister, come forth to the sun.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 18.

S. O. Mason, $3.20; Aug. Brentano, $7.15; William Alexander, $1.10; A. Delahaye, $8.14; Louis Ash, $3; New England News Co., $16.14; Gen. A. J. Warner, $1; John Ahrens, $3.20; M. H. Conaway, $4; Bela Gardner, $3.20; J. H. W. Toohy, $1.70; Maggie Dickey, $3.20; Jerry Brookaway, $2.50; F. A. Green, $13.20; W. F. Mitchell, 10 cents; Pennsylvania E. R., $65; Wm. E. Darling, $5; Mrs. M. S. Wetmore, $3.20; S. R. Mumford, $3.20; Henry Powers, $2.40; B. B. Hill, 75 cents; O. H. Vinton, $1.00; Mrs. A. C. Spooner, $1.00; F. O. Dorr, $3.20; Jno. S. Cox, $3.20; Frank B. Sibley, $3.20; J. T. Clarkson, $1.14.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 23, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 33 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIEUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLA, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELANT, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at the office of the Association, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 1, 1878, at 2½ P.M., for the hearing of the annual reports, the election of a Board of Directors for the ensuing year, and the transaction of any other business that may be brought before the meeting.

ONE OF THE grounds on which Robert Manners, of London, rests his claim to the estate of his uncle, the late Dr. James Rush, of Philadelphia, is that under the latter's will "works must be admitted to the library which inculcate rebellion, treason, atheism, deism, materialism, or which uphold polygamy and socialism, and the library would become a fountain for the corruption of pure religion, sound morals, and good order." How grateful to this pious heir ought society to be, in view of his disinterested zeal for the public morals!

THE NEW YORK Herald of May 16 contained this interesting report:—

The Third Auxiliary League of New York, being an offshoot of the National Liberal League, was organized last night in Standard Hall, Sixth Avenue. The following officers were elected: Mr. Cortland Palmer, President; A. Tanzer, Vice-President; W. H. Christern, Treasurer; E. B. Foote, Jr., Secretary; the four councillors chosen being Mrs. Clara Neymann, Messrs. I. Lockwood, T. C. Leland, and C. Ellershaw. Addresses were made by Mr. O. B. Frothingham, Mr. C. Palmer, and Mrs. Clara Neymann. In his remarks Mr. Frothingham said that the reason why the interest in the movement was not more general was that the great bulk of the people did not well understand its purpose. A great many people stayed away because they believed it was of a political partisan nature, and designed to effect radical changes in the country's institutions. He believed that the Orthodox community would be zealous in repelling a movement advocating innovations in the public institutions; but this was, he contended, not a radical but a conservative movement. It was the purpose of the National Liberal League to make the people think, and to call attention to the outrageous injustice inflicted on society through the connection of Church and State. The essential duty of the League was to consummate the separation of Church and State. The government of the country started out with that idea, and all those departures from that idea witnessed to-day are innovations. The speaker read a report from the Catholic Union, which he characterized as a sensible, temperate document. It represented the many disadvantages which Roman Catholics labor under in this country, through want of recognition by their Protestant brethren, who, for the most part, run the government. It appeared that in the United States army that there were thirty post chaplains and four regimental chaplains. The percentage of Catholics in the army would entitle that denomination to twenty-three out of the thirty-four official clergymen; but the fact was that they were only allowed one. In the navy there were, he added, twenty-four chaplains, not one of whom is a Catholic, although the vast majority of American seamen profess the Catholic faith. This Catholic report was a practical advocacy of the abolition of the position of chaplain in the army and navy, seeing that that denomination could not obtain its share of representatives in office. Mr. Frothingham also claimed that Indian delegations at Washington asking for Catholic priests could not get them; and that the Protestant report of the Indian mission plainly pointed to the fact, as he alleged, that Catholics were not fairly treated, and that only separation of Church and State could mend matters. He wanted complete secular equality, and the only way to stop the quarrels and rivalries among the sects would be by the measure now advocated. This movement was not a radical one in any sense; it was, on the contrary, a conservative one, that concerns every man. After finishing his remarks, which were full of apt and scholarly illustrations, Mr. Frothingham was the recipient of much applause from the audience.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, May 30, at 7.45 P.M., session for business in Horticultural Hall; election of officers; reading of reports; and general consideration of the practical work of the Association.

Friday, May 31, at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject: "The Religion of Humanity, and how it may be Organized"; essayist, T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of the Society of Humanity, New York. Afternoon subject: "The Religion of Supernaturalism, and how it is being Disorganized"; essayist, Mr. Wm. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, Mass. Among the speakers expected are O. B. Frothingham, President of the Association, Mr. M. Ellinger, editor of the Jewish Times, Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith and Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York, Rev. S. R. Calthrop, of Syracuse, and Miss Anna M. Garlin, of Providence. Mrs. Smith will give a poem, at the Friday morning session, on "Soul Questionings." Miss Garlin will speak at the business session, Thursday evening, on the "Practical Work of Free Religion."

On Friday evening there will be a social gathering in Horticultural Hall.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

CULTURE.

It is very difficult, perhaps impossible, to define "culture." The word suggests very different thoughts to different minds.

Mallock's just published New Republic is largely occupied with conversations on culture by an imaginary company of English people of fashion, gathered together for a Sunday at a charming seaside villa. To be sure, they came to no agreement; their notions are extremely heterogeneous and incoherent; but they nearly all agree that, if they could only discover exactly what it is, culture is a very nice thing to have, and a respectable substitute for religion.

On the other hand, two liberal journals of this country week before last happened to contain articles which treated culture as a very dubious advantage,—as, in fact, rather tending to effeminacy, daintiness, exclusiveness, and aristocracy, than to the hardy virtues befitting genuine liberals and democrats. Without exactly saying so, the writers seemed to intimate that it is not to be eagerly sought for as a great and positive good, but rather to be eyed suspiciously and treated as possibly a disguised foe to the people.

Now there is something in each of these attitudes towards culture which has a foundation in truth. In the absence of any precise definition of what culture really is, let us sketch in a general way what the word stands for in our own thought, and why we look in vain for a complete exhibition of it in the classes which tacitly assume to possess a monopoly of the article.

Taken etymologically, culture means simply cultivation, applied to human nature; and it expresses the result of such cultivation. It should properly, we conceive, denote development, evolution, ripening of humanity itself, in all its manifold powers and capacities, and should thus be equivalent to religion, or the "universal, integral, and continuous education" of man into his highest ideal possibilities. Culture can mean no less than this, the moment one begins to reflect upon it. Indeed, turning to Principal Shalrp's beautiful little book on Culture and Religion in some of their Relations, we find that we can heartily adopt his description, which is almost verbally the same as that which we have just given: "Culture proposes as its end the carrying of men's nature to its highest perfection, the developing to the full all the capacities of our humanity."

This, however, is culture considered in its general aspect; and it represents an ideal so profound and comprehensive that we scan history and experience in vain to discover a full embodiment of it in a living character. Culture as we all know it is always partial; and this fact ought to humble the conceit of those who are so self-complacent as to imagine themselves "the cultured" par excellence. Whoever has attained exceptional development in any one line ought, from the inexorable laws of human limitation, to suspect, nay, to know that he has conspicuously failed to become developed in other lines. No man ever "swells to the full circle of the infinite"—unless he is crazy, dreaming, or drunk!

Take, for example, those whom the favoritism of fortune has reared under circumstances so propitious as to make them the shining lights of "society." Manners, address, taste, refinement, polish,—all the thousand and one graces which are possible in the highest degree only to him who from childhood has breathed the atmosphere of cultivated society,—these are all desirable and beautiful in their place, as the mere adjuncts and adornments of higher things; but, if these be all, what a poverty-stricken wretch it is! They are gilding, not gold; and he who has only this society-culture is one of the most uncultured of mortals.

So of all others who are cultured only in single directions. The most favored are shut down to one of two alternatives: either to be highly cultured in one or a few things and deficient to a marked degree in all others, or else to be symmetrically cultured in many things, but in nothing much. The "Admirable Crichtons" are little better than myths, at least in these days. The practical limitations of culture force themselves so powerfully on the attention of all who can conceive the unattainable universality of culture in the abstract, that modesty has become inseparable from even the most moderate degree of it in the estimation of all sensible judges. The fop, the egotist, the supercilious coxcomb who fancies that his veins are filled with the ichor of the gods and who holds his nose at the approach of the common people,—these are the vulgarest of vulgarians. The true democrat, who is not ashamed of his own humanity or of owning sympathetic admiration of human excellence of any and every kind, no matter how plain its garb or how homely its surroundings, constantly feels his own inferiority of culture on this or that point in the presence of other persons.

There is no finer proof of the best culture than a genuine deference paid to man as man, which yet knows how to protect itself against intrusion or presumption by a triple wall of self-respect. The highest culture is culture of the highest. He who knows not what that highest is betrays how utterly unkempt, unwashed, and uncivilized he has come to man's estate. To have no sense of real values, to take pyrites for nuggets, to despise the superlative intellectual and moral interests of life for the sake of that external tinsel which dazzles the multitude as glass beads dazzle the savage,—this is to be uncultured indeed; yet it is a want of culture which, singularly enough, is most common among the so-called cultured classes. It is these who so frequently adopt the motto of nil admirari, and who are ashamed of all enthusiasm for causes or principles. Undue absorption in the superficialities, the adornments and pleasures and elegancies of life, tends not only to withdraw just so much vital energy from life's graver objects, but also to warp and stunt the higher nature, and to dull the perception of what constitutes culture itself in its larger aspects. The classes which honestly imagine themselves to be the best representatives of American culture manifest a one-sidedness and pettiness of conception which betrays the poverty of their ideal of it, and condemns them as really uncultured, after all. They are too frivolous to be deeply in earnest about anything; they recoil from enthusiasm as inherently vulgar, no matter how grand its exciting cause; they are full of interest in the fine arts, but take no interest in that finest art of all—the art of human life. The passion for truth, the ambition of grand character, the lofty devotion of self to the common weal, the capability of rising above the small concerns of a merely individual existence to the lofty plane of self-dedication to the universal,—these are things quite left out of their notion of culture; but the omission is fatal.

The use of culture is to produce large and rounded natures—men and women in whom shall be found conjoined the maximum of strength and the maximum of beauty,—men and women who shall be living revelations of the grandeur of our essential humanity. Ancient Greece produced the finest types of physical culture, and has left imperishable records of it in the Apollo and the Venus; it is the possibility of America to produce the finest types of intellectual and moral culture, and she will remain unworthy of her magnificent opportunity until she burns with the desire to seize it. But first of all she must exalt her ideal of culture to the demands of the time; she must not be content with dilettantism or a really vulgar shallow conception. The so-called uncultured classes have a truer perception of what constitutes culture, after all, than those classes which pique themselves on its possession; the latter neglect the sinew and bone of our humanity in order to clothe it with elegant costume, while the former value bone and sinew above dress. In this the common people are right. If one must choose between substantial strength and external polish, give us that rather than this. But we are shut down to no such perplexity. Radicalism is nothing if it be not the demand for culture, in all its length and breadth and depth; and he who sneers at it in any aspect, whether in outward or inward things, proves himself a renegade to radicalism. "Cultivate manhood and womanhood"—that is the fundamental law of all radicalism which is not a sham; and too much culture is an impossibility, provided it sin not by disproportion. Above all else, keep clearly in view the sovereign claim of the intellectual and moral; if these are worthily cultured, all else shall be added to them. But let us beware of despising culture in the smallest matters, lest we fall below the wisdom of the old Roman poet, who held up the ideal of the true gentleman as the homo factus ad unguem—the "man finished even to the finger-nail." Jealousy of culture, as if it were hostile to "democracy" or "liberalism," is going over to the enemy; it betrays the contemptible spirit which would level down rather than level up; it belongs only to those whose radicalism is not a clearly conceived great principle, but only a mean spite against superior attainment. No one of us is sufficiently cultured,—least of all he who thinks himself most so; let us indulge in no heart-burnings or jealousies, but join our efforts to secure the utmost possible culture for each and all.

MR. HEYWOOD'S QUESTIONS.

The following note from Mr. Heywood was received last week:—

OFFICE OF THE WORD,
PRINCETON, Mass., May 16, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As opposed to persons who signed the Bennett petition, but who still favor some law to suppress obscene literature, your points in to-day's issue seem well taken. But I am interested to ask what kind of laws to restrict the liberty of the press on this matter you favor; why freedom of conscience in Socialism, the right of private judgment in morality, should not be respected as in purely religious questions; and on what grounds government can judiciously undertake to regulate the opinions of one class of citizens in deference to the prejudices and customs of other classes of society? Your views on these points will greatly interest all schools of reformers.

E. H. HEYWOOD.

It is an inscrutable mystery why these questions should be put to us. To imagine for an instant that they are put for the purpose of obtaining information as to our views, after the tediously explicit and repeated statements we have made on the subject, would be so cruelly disrespectful to Mr. Heywood that we dismiss that supposition precipitately. We therefore "give up the conundrum," and will simply answer the questions themselves tersely and directly.

1. We favor both National and State laws making it a criminal offence to print, sell, circulate, or mail any publications which are addressed, not to the intellects, but to the mere passions of the young and inexperienced, and of which the main and manifest intent is to foster vice for the sake of profit to the publishers or advertisers. We favor no other laws restricting the "liberty of the press."

2. We hold that "freedom of conscience in Socialism" should be absolutely inviolate, so long as it does not lead to overt anti-social acts; that is, crimes against the rights of others. We hold that the "right of private judgment in morality" should be equally inviolate, so long as it does not lead to the same crimes. And we demand "freedom of conscience" and the "right of private judgment" to no greater extent in religion.

3. We hold that government can neither "judiciously" nor justly "undertake to regulate the opinions" of any citizen or any class of citizens whatever, in deference to anything or anybody on the earth or in the heavens, any further than to require all children to be properly instructed in that positive knowledge without which they cannot discharge their public duties, or defend their private rights, as citizens of a democratic republic.

We have answered Mr. Heywood's three questions pointedly, precisely, and unequivocally; and we have a right to expect that he will henceforth cease to misrepresent us by attributing to us opinions on this subject directly opposed to those which we have again and again declared. From the time this issue was first raised, we have taken invariably the same ground: namely, that such publications as those for which Charles Bradlaugh, Mrs. Besant, D. M. Bennett, and E. H. Heywood have been prosecuted, are not of a character to be justly interfered with by the law. The only practical difference between Mr. Heywood's ground and ours is as to the right of society to suppress the foul stuff which is wilfully intended to corrupt and ruin innocent children. Let it be distinctly understood that we favor, and that Mr. Heywood opposes, such laws as shall protect children from these infamous attacks on their health, happiness, and character. That is the only practical difference on this subject between us. If he is restive under this statement of the difference, let him find another if he can, and he shall be heard. But we must request not to be compelled to say the same things over and over again by his utter and inexcusable inattention to opinions which he nevertheless undertakes to blame.

THE F. R. A. FESTIVAL.

The following circular has been issued, and will receive, we trust, attention and response from our readers:—

The Free Religious Association

Invite their friends to unite with them in a SOCIAL DONATION FESTIVAL to take place in Horticultural Hall, Boston, on Friday evening, May 31, 1878.

The objects of our yearly festival are to strengthen the Association by binding closer the ties of sympathy between all those who accept the principle of religious freedom, to promote that "fellowship in the spirit" which is one of the objects named in our Constitution, to increase our membership, and replenish our treasury. All persons, therefore, of every name, sect, or party, who sympathize with the spirit of the Free Religious Association, are invited to renew with us the pleasant time we have had at previous gatherings.

This invitation, shown at the door, will be a sufficient pass to the festival; and those desiring invitations for themselves or their friends can obtain them by application to any of the Committee.

Membership-subscriptions and donations will be received at tables arranged for the purpose in the Hall. We would remind friends that the year's work of the Association depends very largely on these contributions received at the festival, and would beg those who cannot give us their presence, to send their donations by letter to the Treasurer, Richard P. Halliwell, 139 Federal Street, Boston.

HELEN M. IRESON,	JOHN C. HAYNES,
EDNAH D. CHENEY,	W. C. GANNETT,
MRS. S. E. SEWALL,	MRS. M. V. DUDLEY,
MRS. H. C. MOORE,	MRS. J. T. SARGENT,
MRS. K. G. WELLS,	T. W. HIGGINSON,
MISS M. OSBORN,	C. K. WHIPPLE,

RICHARD P. HALLIWELL,
Committee on the Festival.

The Annual Meeting of the Association begins on Thursday evening, May 30, at 7.45, in Horticultural Hall,—a business session, to which all interested are welcomed. On Friday morning at 10.30, and afternoon at 3, in Beethoven Hall (Washington Street, opposite the Globe Theatre), are held the two sessions for public addresses. In the evening, at the Horticultural Hall again, this festival, at 7.30.

N.B.—No refreshments for sale at festival this year.

THE PARISIAN COMMUNE.

De Beaumont-Vassy, in his History of the Commune of Paris in 1871, has proven that the Commune was an offshoot of the "International Society of Workingmen," and its chief aims were to trample upon capitalists and the employers of labor, and to exalt the workmen into the place of their masters. During the siege of Paris by the Prussians, the populace of the city had been armed almost en masse; and when after five months of great privation the siege of Paris terminated, the horrors of foreign invasion were succeeded by even more terrible domestic dissensions. No sooner had the triumphal progress of the German army through the streets of Paris been affected, than the capital was found to be in the hands of an insurgent people. De Beaumont-Vassy says, "A portion of the National Guard, the most dangerous and the most redoubtable, the same that during the siege had not hesitated even in presence of the foreign foe, under his eyes and under his shells, to seek to overthrow by the strong hand the government of national defence,—this malicious and restless portion of the citizen-militia had not returned their arms, and when summoned to surrender them had replied by a formal refusal to the injunctions of the authorities."

The entire disorganization of labor consequent upon the siege, the prolonged sufferings and privations of the people, and the disorder inseparable from the condition of the beleaguered city, had completely demoralized the population of Paris, as is well shown in the graphic description of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton in the concluding and unfinished chapters of The Parisians. Paris, at every epoch in its history has possessed more than its proportion—as compared with other great European capitals, London, Berlin, Vienna, Rome, or St. Petersburg—of the dangerous elements of society. Victor Hugo's works abundantly testify to this fact,—notably, Notre Dame de Paris and Les Misérables. But after the declaration of the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Jules

Favre, in his circular to the representatives of France in other nations, "We will not cede either an inch of territory or a stone of our fortresses," so quickly succeeded by the treaty negotiated under the leadership of the veteran Thiers, by which Alsace and Lorraine, Metz and Strasbourg were ceded to Germany, in addition to the immense indemnity to be paid in coin or its equivalent, the prolonged occupation of the soil of France by the conquerors, and—the crowning dishonor of all—the entry of the German army into Paris, merely to assert their supremacy and insult the vanquished,—it was little wonder that all respect for constituted authorities had vanished. During the last heroic struggles preceding the capitulation, the Communists and "Red Republicans" had been busy—not in assisting the provisional government in its extremity like true patriots and honest citizens, but in fomenting all manner of discontents, and in effecting a thorough organization of their tumultuary forces. Committees of vigilance and revolutionary clubs, modelled after those of 1793, had been in session; violent and unprincipled harangues had been delivered; and, so soon as the raising of the siege somewhat relaxed the authority of the civil and military officials, the Communists proceeded to the execution of the purpose they had conceived. Their designs were favored by the political discontents of the moment. They could declaim against the surrender of Paris to the enemy; the shameful peace, and the royalist assembly which frowned upon republican deputies; and had just resolved to sit at Versailles instead of Paris. At the last elections, called to ratify the conditions of peace, as stipulated by the Germans in the preliminary negotiations at Versailles, the Bonapartists who had commenced the war, had not dared to brave the popular wrath by presenting themselves as candidates. The Republicans had fallen into disfavor, because under the leadership of Leon Gambetta they had persisted in prolonging the war to the bitter end, long after there was any reasonable hope of success. Hence the "Legitimists," or adherents of the Bourbons, for the first time in many years, found themselves in a majority in the assembly, which became, in consequence, obnoxious to the radical republican element which has preponderated in Paris for the past century.

Communitic workingmen were the leaders of this movement, intent upon carrying out their principles of social revolution. Many of the most active of their leaders were foreigners. Prince Bismarck estimated (in a speech before the German Parliament, delivered on the 2d of May, 1871) that amongst them were not less than eight thousand English, Irish, Belgians, and Italians. De Beaumont-Vassy says, "Quels étaient ces hommes? c'est que chacun se demandait; comme les 'hommes noirs' du poète Béranger, ces hommes rouges sortaient de dessous terre."—(Hist. de la Commune.) From the first they held possession of Belleville, La Villette, and Montmartre; they had upwards of four hundred cannon in their hands, and were supported by not less than one hundred thousand of the National Guard. Parley with them was vainly attempted, and an effort on the part of the government to recover possession of the artillery miscarried. Some of the troops ordered to march upon the positions held by the insurgents refused to obey, and joined the insurrection. So crippled was the strength of the authorities that they even went so far as to recognize the insurgent leaders as legal belligerents. But all attempts at conciliation were fruitless; and the time was worse than wasted, for the insurrection gathered force by the delay, while the weakness of the constituted national authority only became more and more apparent. The Communists captured two generals—Clément Thomas and General Lecompte,—and they were shot to death by a file of the national guard. On the 18th of March, 1871, less than three weeks after the preliminaries of peace had been signed between France and Prussia, all Paris was in the hands of a howling mob of men proclaiming the social regeneration of mankind, and illustrating it by an entire subversion of order, decency, justice, and morality! From the Hôtel de Ville a "central committee" proclaimed the immediate election of a "Commune" for the better government of Paris, which was to become the archetype for the rest of France. Of the officials of the new Commune elected, De Beaumont-Vassy remarks: "Ces hommes, parmi lesquels on retrouvait presque tous les membres du comité central, étaient d'anciens ouvriers, ou des orateurs de clubs, ou d'anciens journalistes et gens de lettres de second ordre." Meantime, the authorities at Versailles were preparing to reduce the insurgent city. But the regular army of France had been nearly annihilated in the recent war: a very large proportion captured at Sedan and elsewhere had not yet been released from their imprisonment in Germany; while Prussia was insisting upon an immediate reduction of the military force still remaining at the service of the State. Hence the progress of the siege was painfully slow; but it was thus of great benefit to civilized society at large by giving to the newly-established and organized "Commune" the opportunity of revealing its real principles, the character of its administration, the nature of its supporters, and its general motives, objects, and ideas.

Its scheme of government contemplated the extension of independent Communes throughout all France; while, according to a proclamation dated on the 19th of April, 1871, the unity of the State was to be maintained by a voluntary association of Communes. Nor were these Communes to be simple municipalities. They were expressly designed to carry out the principles of socialism, necessitating the confiscation of all personal property, the community of goods, and the organization of labor. The Communists actually wished to divide their fair country into no less than thirty-seven thousand petty sovereign States under the name of "Communes." In every one the property of the rich was to be appropriated for the use of the community: in each and all, the individual citizen was to be required to merge his personality, his family, his own and his children's future in the government of the State! Frenchmen would thus have exchanged their country for their Commune. The intellect, the arts, the industry of France would then have been degraded to the mere function of providing subsistence for the entire community. Her high civilization would, of necessity, have been followed by another age of darkness and of slavery; and, as M. Franck observes in his Communisme jugé par l'histoire, "It would abolish property, it would suppress civil as well as political liberty, it would do away with the family. One can even say that it would suppress human nature, and, in consequence, the moral conscience of mankind, in order to place in its stead the omnipotence, the collective, and necessarily irresponsible, tyranny of the State!" And again, "The State would be the sole and absolute master of men and of their affairs, of their goods, and of their persons. We should be in full communism, and yet communism could only establish and perpetuate itself under the reign of despotism. . . . It would remain the only contractor and the only capitalist; the State would be everything, and the individual would be nothing,—these are the distinguishing marks of communism."

Immediately after the election and organization of the new Commune it began to issue decrees and proclamations like any established government. Its leaders advocated the suppression of religious worship. At first there were no signs of a ferocious spirit, and the guillotine was publicly burned "in the cause of humanity." To meet their immediate exigencies the Commune exacted loans from the Bank of France, and from other administrative departments, and also appropriated all the receipts of the octroi. Their confederates and followers were among the poor; their enemies were the rich and the bourgeoisie; and, to gratify one of these classes at the expense of the other, they decreed that the rents of all lodgers, between October and April, should be remitted. The sale of all articles deposited at the mont-de-piété was also suspended. They declared their enmity to the memory of the great Napoleon by the wanton destruction of his celebrated column in the Place Vendôme, as a "monument of barbarism, and a symbol of brute-force and false glory." (See Journal Officiel of 12th of April, 1871.) As the siege advanced, a spirit of fury and vengeance took possession of the combatants on either side. The Commune denounced their opponents as the "banditti of Versailles"; and the Marquis de Gallifet in an order of the day retaliated in these words: "War has been declared by the banditti of Paris; yesterday and the day before and to-day they have assassinated my soldiers. It is henceforth a war without truce or pity that I wage against those assassins." From this time the insurgents were treated as rebels; and Duvall, one of their generals, having been taken prisoner, was shot, whereupon the Commune threatened the most terrible reprisals. They decreed formally, that for every Communist prisoner executed by the orders of the Versailles government, three "hostages" should be put to death. They accordingly proceeded to arrest the Archbishop of Paris, his two grand vicars, several priests, and many other innocent persons, whom they threw into prison as "hostages." They demolished the residence of Thiers, and "confiscated" his large library and valuable works of art; they plundered the churches; and, still later, finding the government forces gradually gaining upon them, they resolved upon a desperate vengeance. No longer able to defend beautiful Paris, they determined to destroy it! The word was given, and the Tuileries, the Palais Royal, the Hôtel de Ville, the Ministry of Finance, the Hôtel de la Quai d'Orsay, the Palace of the Legion of Honor, and other public buildings and private houses were soon in flames. The unoffending Dominicans at Arceuil were massacred. The venerable Archbishop and other hostages were hastily brought before a court-martial and shot. Numbers of priests, gendarmes, and other obnoxious persons, were seized and slaughtered. Ruffians were let loose with orders to feed the raging conflagration with petroleum. According to De Beaumont-Vassay, "there were found upon the confederates slain behind the barricades, and there were discovered among the perquisitions made after the downfall of the Commune, many orders as formal as laconic, which can leave no doubt as to the terrible intentions of the men at the Hôtel de Ville, relative to the destruction by fire of the unfortunate city, which they had condemned in advance, in case of defeat, to a complete annihilation."

During their brief reign the Communists had done their worst. It was now their turn to suffer the vengeance of their conquerors. It has ever been the unhappy destiny of France that her political conflicts have been sooner or later discredited and stained by reprisals as bloody as the proscriptions of Sulla or Marius; and this—the latest of a long series—was as cruel and merciless as any in her dreadful annals. Nearly ten thousand of the Communists are said to have lost their lives, among whom were numbers of wretched women, accused of incendiarism. Overpowered by the troops from Versailles, they were shot down without trial and without mercy, while the prisons were filled to their utmost capacity. Thus terminated the two months and a half term of power of the Parisian Commune. A. W. K.

Communications.

NOAH WEBSTER ON THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.

WEST MERIDEN, Conn., May 12, 1878.

MR. ABBOT:—

We had a Liberal League meeting Thursday evening last, at which twenty-five persons were present, notwithstanding bad weather. Dr. Davis read an essay, from which I send you some extracts made by himself. The testimony of Dr. Noah Webster against the practice of Bible-reading in the schools, given entire in the essay, was new to me, and I think may interest the readers of THE INDEX. The early indoctrination at school of children in "original sin" seems also worthy of note.

Several persons who came as inquirers expressed sympathy with "church taxation," "exclusion of Bible from schools," and reform of the Sunday laws.

Dr. Davis gave some valuable statistics on church taxation. Mr. Dayton made excellent remarks on the proper attitude of the mind for the reception of truth, on individuality, and on "definition of Christianity." The Vice-President (acting as President) spoke on "Consistency." One gentleman present expressed dissent from the League on question of church taxation, but was evidently willing to hear all sides. Mr. Sawyer sought to accord others all the privileges he claimed for himself. Mr. Frankowski spoke on the Sunday laws, and mentioned wherein he thought they interfered with his freedom.

The Secretary read the letter of Prof. F. A. Walker, of Yale, on "Bible in Schools." A poem read by Mr. Roys sounded the call to "Courage," and with a few remarks from others who had previously spoken, the meeting was adjourned.

Col. Ingersoll is to lecture here to-morrow night on "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child."

I clip a few paragraphs from one of our dailies, from which you will observe that the League is not altogether unnoticed.

Cordially yours, E. J. LEONARD.

Extracts from Dr. Davis' Essay.

The plan of colonizing New England resulted as much from the commercial ideas and adventurous spirit of the age as from religious impulses. The only freedom they conceived was freedom to defy the laws of the State in bulk, and to enforce their own will on their fellow-subjects. The clergy tampered with the affairs of State, and until a late day always influentially. Liberty of conscience and the theory of human rights existed only in name. Shown at their best, the colonial laws were tyrannical, based on no sound views of human nature or Christianity. (The subjects of church taxation, the Bible in the public schools, and what are known as the Sunday laws, were here briefly referred to by Dr. Davis.) The New England Primer, the first school-book, was not only an abridged catechism, but imbued the very letters with its doctrines, teaching original sin with the letter A:—

"In Adam's Fall,
We sinned all."

In 1790, Noah Webster published a volume of essays, in which he took into consideration the subject of the Bible in schools. "There is one general practice in schools which I censure with diffidence, not because I doubt the propriety of the censure, but because it is opposed to deep-rooted prejudices; this practice is the use of the Bible as a school-book. There are two reasons why this practice has so generally prevailed; the first is, that the families in the country are not generally supplied with any other book. The second, an opinion that the reading of the Scriptures will impress upon the minds of youth the important truths of religion and morality. The first may be easily removed, and the purpose of the last is counteracted by the practice itself. If people design the doctrines of the Bible as a system of religion, ought they to appropriate the book to purposes foreign to this design? Will not a familiarity, contracted by a careless, disrespectful reading of the sacred volume, weaken the influence of its precepts upon the heart?"

The efforts of the Catholics in 1840 to obtain a restoration of the ancient subsidy to their Church was referred to, and the reform in the whole system of public schools which ensued. The subjects of church taxation and the Sunday question were explained, and the idea refuted that the State was a moral as well as a physical agent; that it had in any sense a conscience; or that it was to be guided in determining the duties and relations of men, by having any reference to those truths and those obligations that concern the spiritual and moral health.

WHAT HARM?

Sometimes, when expressing sorrow or surprise at the Moody revival, and deploring the fact that such revivals are possible in an age of progress like this, I have been asked by even liberal thinkers, "Why do you deplore this revival? And what harm is there in it? Even you must confess that there is some evident good in it, since many persons of bad character have been turned, through its influence, from the error of their ways. Here a drunkard has been reformed, and there a thief has restored his ill-gotten gains; another man formerly very cruel to his family and neglectful of their needs, converted by Moody, has experienced an entire change, and is now very kind to them, and has gone to work in a manly way to care for and provide for them. Now when we see palpable good like that come out of what you term a delusion, it seems to me a delusion worth continuing in, since it adds to the aggregate of happiness in the world. Why, one person made happier or better in this sad, hard world is worth all this effort, and makes me for one content to put up with delusions if they work such good."

Thus my friend talks; and by the time he has finished has convinced himself, at least, that he is right in going with the crowd and giving countenance to these meetings, however much he hears at them from which he inwardly dissents.

But he has not convinced me, and this is why I wish to explain more in detail than he would care to listen to, and to a larger audience, the reason why I am sincerely grieved that these revival meetings are so largely attended and make so many converts. It is not Christians only, but liberals as well, who agree with Joseph Cook in his declaration regarding Mr. Moody's work in Boston, that—"Provided his devout effort is blessed of God as it has been; provided he is endowed from on high with the capacity to reach, through his tenderness of heart, through his marvelous, practical sagacity, and through the activity that almost made him an invalid here in Boston, working until midnight, and carrying his labor through with a zeal that no man could understand who did not help him in it; provided he continues labor of that sort, I, for one, shall consider it an honor to Boston if she can help him a little, and not criticize him at all."

Such declarations, when they come, as they often do, from those who have no belief in the dogmas he teaches, sound very generous; but it is nevertheless a very superficial generosity, an unthinking liberality of view. If the apparent moral result of these revivals were the outcome of real truth, there would be no need of criticizing them; for it is not the resultant morality we find fault with, but the false and mercenary methods by which those results seem to be attained.

Moody stands on a very low intellectual plane. By the admirers of his method this is considered one of his chief merits, on the ground that he can thus more readily reach the understanding of the masses his teachings are designed to reach. But we are living in an age when nearly everything needs to be subjected to the critical analysis of science; otherwise it cannot be made of use in that higher life which science is leading us toward.

Moody's belief is that of implicit reliance on the literal teachings of the Bible. It is the old theology which the progress of the age has outgrown,—a phase of religion which we thought dead, and which we were about to bury, dragged forth from its coffin and galvanized into new life by the wonderful force of this one man's vitalizing power of earnestness. The man himself belongs to a past age; and this dead religion with all its falsehoods and misconceptions is just suited to his personal, moral, and intellectual needs. He is a religious Rip Van Winkle, who in his long sleep lost no portion of his vital energy; whose sleep, though far too long, was one of refreshing and recuperative repose. And so, waking up, he finds the world with new ideas, new hopes, new thoughts, a new religion; and his mistake consists in his inability to conceive how he, in the full vigor of earnest manhood, can be out of joint with the times and behind the age. Hence, with a simplicity that is sublime in its pure earnestness, he imagines that it is the age itself that is all wrong, and, with a faith in himself that is inspiring, he has gone to work with a will and is using his Herculean strength to some purpose to pull back the age into accord with himself, and therefore, he thinks, with God; for the God he worships is as far behind the age as he is himself—a manlike God, with strong human passions and human desires; a jealous, angry, ambitious, and domineering God, who finds his contest with Satan a long and wearying one, though on the whole he rather enjoys the excitement of his alternate victories and defeats.

The one great harm that Moody is doing consists in the fact that those who become his converts and accept his views must necessarily be disbelievers in the scientific progression of to-day. They are bound to shut their eyes and close their ears to all that denotes advance in useful knowledge. The human understanding, the world's great grain-field, from which it has been such weary work to eradicate the weeds of superstition, ignorance, and bigotry, but a field that had begun to look flourishing and ready to yield a noble harvest, has suddenly been resown broadcast with the seeds of error; and there is now the gloomy prospect that much of our toilsome work will have to be gone over with again. The Moody revival has been a grand retrogressive movement. Men, women, and children again believe that the world was created from nothing and in six days; that God is anthropomorphic, and that he can be induced by the logic and representations of his creatures to interfere personally in their affairs to their advantage, and that he is constantly engaged through their solicitation in trying to straighten out the blunders he has made in this terribly muddled and misgoverned world; that he allowed himself to be born of one of his creatures, in order to cheat the devil out of a few of the others; that we are degenerating instead of advancing; that Satan is the supreme power on earth, and all the other heterogeneous concomitants of an obsolete and barbarous religion. The converts made at these revivals, with their children, will be sure to shut their eyes for years to come to all scientific truth which may seem to contradict the Bible. This is one of the evils of this Moody revivalism which, because it has resulted in a spasmodic effort at a superficial morality, has been acquiesced in and praised by those who ought to have looked deeper and known better. Our daily papers, too, with all their professions of higher wisdom than the people they pretend to lead, have helped this thing on by their pandering record and attitude of respectful belief and attention. In truth, the man's deadly earnestness is a wonderful and sublime sight in these days of lukewarmness, and that it is which has won the respect of those even who are clear-eyed enough to see the dreadful harm he is doing; and what is needed in order to undo his retrograde work is an earnestness and strength of purpose as genuine and strong to push forward into the light and truth as his has been to pull back into the darkness of unfounded beliefs.

And what, when critically examined, does the vaunted morality of the Moody revival amount to? A radical change of character into sweetness, forbearance, breadth of charity for the weaknesses of others? Into deeper insight into the needs and desires of their fellowmen? Into larger care and more self-denying love for others? Alas, no! there is no such fundamental change discoverable in the new converts,—only an external obedience to certain stereotyped moral codes, a more faithful attendance at church, a fiercer bigotry, a vain-glorious and obtrusive humility, a giving up of various simple but prohibited pleasures, such as dancing, theatre-going and the like. A morality which bears about the same relation to true and steadfast morality of life as the temporary application of something cold to a burned finger bears to the radical and methodical cure of that burn by healing applications. The cold application is effectual for the moment, but it does not cure, while it is liable to retard the healing process. So, while the revival lasts, the morality holds good; but, when that is over, the morality that is not built on something higher and better than excitement and impulse is sure to give way to the real nature underneath; and there is danger also that this temporary spasm of morality may make harder the work of future and thorough reform.

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

THE FREE-MASON ORBED.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Mr. Spaulding, in his communication to THE INDEX of April 18, thinks "E. W." judges Masonry too harshly, and that he does not understand its tenets. I think "E. W." was right in his criticism; but I have several other objections to the order, the chief of which is its opposition to freedom of conscience. Though the secrets of Masonry are of no consequence to any one except themselves, though most of its tenets are good, its teachings beneficial, and its charities considerable, still a large part of its energies are expended in promulgating its useless secrets and ceremonies, and the fundamental principles of benevolence, equality, and brotherly love are, to a large extent, lost sight of, and the ceremonies are regarded as the object of the organization.

Masonry is essentially a Christian institution, and in proof of this assertion I will give a few extracts from the writings of some of its prominent members and exponents.

The Grand Master of California, in his address to the Grand Lodge in 1876, says of Masonry: "In its very nature it is essentially in harmony with the declarations of natural and revealed religion."

The Grand Master of Kansas, in his address in 1875, says: "Among all the ideals of a sovereign of the Universe, the Hebrew Deity alone stands the test of intelligence. That God who has been worshipped since he first revealed himself to man six thousand years ago, is the God, in fact, of Masonry, and has been ever since its history can be traced."

The Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Oregon, in his address delivered in 1875, says: "The candidate for Masonry, before he can pass the outer door of a lodge-room, must declare his belief in the existence of a Supreme Ruler of the Universe. In every lodge an altar is erected to the true and living God. The Holy Bible crowns the altar, and is indispensable in every lodge-room. From the time the candidate for Masonry crosses the threshold of a lodge, through all the degrees of Masonry, by all its symbols, and in all its lectures, he is taught to believe in the God of the Bible. The leading idea of speculative Masonry is the search for truth—not truth in the common acceptance of the term, but the higher idea of truth which pervades the whole Masonic system—the knowledge of God."

Charles Sackreuter, of the Committee on Correspondence of the Grand Lodge of New York, commenting on the action of the French Grand Orient in declaring in favor of liberty of conscience, says: "This, of course, is not such action as would justify any one in saying that French Masonry had become atheistic; but it does demonstrate that in a French lodge an atheist can be initiated, which they justify under the plea of perfect liberty of conscience. Masonry proper limits this liberty, and it does so on the ground that to one who has no belief in God conscience is an idle term. The conclusion is inevitable that the Grand Orient of France is not a Masonic organization; and the sooner Masons everywhere disentangle themselves from its alliance, the better it will be for them and for the institution."

The Order of Knights Templar was founded as a religious order, and the Christian principles pervade the Commandery to a greater extent than they do the lodge.

WM. H. EASTMAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 1.

COMMUNISM.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I shall not ask for space to make a long reply to the article of Mr. Maverick, but I want briefly to notice a few of his assertions. He quotes the French minister, Dufaure, as stating that the International was "a standing menace." No doubt that it was—to tyranny. The very fact that every tyrant in Europe has attempted to suppress it by force is proof that it is the friend of the people. Mr. Maverick has much to tell of what its enemies say about it; but this is a very cheap kind of argument, and does not prove anything against the socialistic organization.

Talk about demagogues controlling the Labor Party! If there are any worse demagogues in that party than in the dominant parties, its members are indeed to be pitied. Mr. Maverick indulges in some sarcastic remarks concerning the supposed ignorance of the Communist in reference to Bible myths; but it is the gentleman himself who betrays the most utter ignorance concerning the contents of that ink-and-paper fetich. The gentleman before accusing the Socialist of ignorance of the Bible, should have known that the early Christians were Communists,—held all things in common. But he saw here a good opportunity to appeal to the prejudices of his readers, and he could not let it pass.

The Socialistic Labor Party has never had a fair representation at the hands of the popular press, no more than has had religious Liberalism. Take the Chicago papers for instance; the Times, Journal, Tribune, Inter-Ocean, all indulge in the most downright lying conceivables. They do not state correctly one single principle or object of the Socialists. It is a great wonder that the New York Tribune published the Newark Platform as given in the article under consideration. I would say to any reader of THE INDEX who desires to know the truth concerning the new party, let him send to John McIntosh, Cincinnati, Ohio, and get a copy of the National Socialist, which will put him in the way of the truth concerning this matter. Do not be alarmed at "Communism." It is working for humanity. Examine its principles before you condemn them, and do not take the say-so of any other man; and, above all, put no trust in the representations of such papers as the Chicago Journal. Simply make yourself acquainted with the principles of either the Socialist or Greenback parties, and you will have done all that is necessary to satisfy yourself that the representations of the Journal and kindred papers concerning these organizations are utterly unreliable and worthless. I do not say that I endorse all that the Socialist Party puts forth, but its leading principles are undoubtedly correct. We must not cling blindly to the past. It has valuable lessons for us, but that is all. Justice for all.

E. C. WALKER,

FLORENCE, Iowa.

SECULAR GEOGRAPHIES.

A few years since it would have been difficult to have found in any of our common schools a geography free from religious teaching. It is very common for publishers to work in theology with geography. I am glad to be able to mention exceptions to this rule.

There is now in use in many schools, and constantly being introduced into more, a series of geographies called the "Eclectic," published by Messrs. Van Antwerp, Bragg & Co. This series is in three books, Nos. 1, 2, and 3. Let us look, for example, at No. 2, which is the main book for common schools. It treats the subject of geography quite fully, and evidently with the intention of teaching the facts of the science, leaving theological dogmas and Sunday-school literature to be obtained elsewhere. For instance, in defining civilized nations it says: "Civilized nations are actively engaged in agriculture, manufacturing, and commerce. Law and order are maintained by them. Life and property are protected. They have books and schools, and cultivate the arts and sciences." Here, if the publishers had wished, was a convenient place to put in the churches and ministers along with the schools as a part of civilization.

There is one short chapter on Religions, mentioning the different classes of religions. I quote:—"The religions in which the different nations of the world believe are divided into two classes."

"Those of the first class teach the existence of one God; those of the second class teach that there are many gods."

"The three religions of the first class are, the Christian, the Jewish, and the Mohammedan."

"Christians believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and the Savior of mankind."

"The Jews believe in one God, but reject Jesus Christ, and believe that the Savior is yet to come."

"The Mohammedan religion was founded by Mohammed. He taught that Moses and Christ were true prophets, but that he himself was the greatest of all prophets."

"Those religions which teach that there are many gods are called Pagan religions. They are very numerous, and differ much from each other."

Here we find an entire absence of sectarian theology. The publication of books of this kind, teaching science instead of faith, facts and not fiction, is one of the encouraging signs of the times.

CYRUS.

MAPLE RAPIDS, Mich., May, A. R. 102.

THE CHELSEA LIBERAL LEAGUE.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The working members of this branch of the National Liberal League met at the home of H. D. Casey, 10 Central Avenue, Chelsea, on the 7th instant, and reflected D. G. Crandon, President, J. H. W. Toohey, Secretary, A. V. Lincoln, Treasurer, together with the other officers now serving for the ensuing year. J. A. J. Wilcox was the essayist of the evening, who entertained the company with a clearly-conceived and a convincingly-expressed essay on the growth and limitation of religion as an educator.

An appreciative and thoughtful discussion followed, developing the generally entertained conviction that the secular side of the Liberal League had not been and was not made as prominent as the necessities of the issue with customary legislation required. This brought up the question of ways and means, and the generally expressed conclusion that the meetings of local Liberal Leagues should be more frequent and more public, as the popularization of the secular policy was necessary to the building up of a radical conscience party, and the total separation of Church and State.

It was also agreed that a public hall should be in the service of the League next season, the better to multiply effort and concentrate the needed activities for the education of the many.

J. H. W. TOOHEY, Sec'y.

CHELSEA, Mass.

A CORRECTION.

MY DEAR INDEX:—

I once made a resolution that I never, never, would write for print unless I could myself read the proof. But, alas! my good resolution went where so many others have gone, and your devil makes me say that silver can only be circulated in France to the extent of 430,000,000 (what?) when I wrote, $30,000,000.

I appear also to wish to confirm the government to stamping the coin, when what I desire is to confine them to stamping the true weight and fineness. When they undertake by putting on their stamp to make nine-tenths equal the whole, I object.

I had it also in mind to state, but did not, that the Bank of England is required to buy all the gold bullion offered at the rate of 32 1/2 lrs. 9d. the standard ounce, payable in its own notes, which notes it is required to redeem in gold on demand. This is equivalent to free coinage at a fixed rate, but subject to no delay.

F. S. C.

BOSTON, May 17, 1878.

"A CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION."

EDITOR INDEX:—

The other day the Republican State Convention of Pennsylvania nominated for Governor Gen. Henry M. Hoyt. This gentleman after his nomination made a speech to the convention in which he is reported as saying: "All the tendencies of Republican principles are towards a Christian civilization." If those are the views of Gen. Hoyt, I conclude the friends of the Liberal League movement in Pennsylvania will not be inclined to vote for him.

H. L. GREEN.

[Not if he proposes to carry out these "tendencies" by Christian legislation. Otherwise we suppose the friends of the Liberal League will not care a button what he thinks on the subject.—ED.]

A WORTHY LADY of this city, a church-member in good standing, has a son, a seafaring man, whose organ of veneration is not so strongly developed. The other day she asked him for fifty cents, to buy herself a pair of rubbers, which he declined to furnish, as he had to purchase a barrel of flour and other articles, at the same time advising her to pray to the Lord for the money. It so happened that she had to overhaul his wardrobe for making repairs, and, in ripping open an old vest, she found between the lining and the outside two pieces of scrip of twenty-five cents each. With this she was enabled to purchase her rubbers. This is regarded as a striking instance of the efficacy of—ripping up old clothes.—Bath Commercial.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 " " "	For 26 to 51 " " "	For 52 " " "
13 " 25 " "	8 " " "	5 " " "	5 " " "
26 " 51 " "	8 " " "	5 " " "	5 " " "
52 " " "	8 " " "	5 " " "	5 " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:—

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.50 for one year, including postage, or 40 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Bowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is especially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAOON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALFRED). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	3.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.50
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.50
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Etched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	1.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENÉ). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	1.25
DICKENS' CHILD'S History of England.....	1.50
DURRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same, Library Edition. 2 vols.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Time and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Time and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	1.50
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Letters of George Eliot. Translated from the German of Adolf Stieler. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Original History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.50
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Part I. Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	1.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.50
Ore of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	3.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.50
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mentions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.00
V. The Study of Zoology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Mandale, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versifications, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	5.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Miss Frothingham.....	1.00
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Year's Daughter.....	1.50
MAHN (HUBERT). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1830 to 1848.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.00
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	1.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	3.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	1.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Carols—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Pages on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 21 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.25
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.00
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMER:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	5.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Edition.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	3.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.00
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Taine.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	2.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. No. 66, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. EMMA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.00
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Redant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Seaweed.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.25
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

221 Washington St., Boston.

GIRLS—5 nice perforated mottoes for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUB & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE. Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doeringer & Co., 58 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one paying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Clifford, Lionel A. Tollenache, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. E. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE, PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—
Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x3 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPITOME OF THE Positive Philosophy and Religion.

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to
HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)
VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.
REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cts. Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.25.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!
CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—
LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MAY 30, 1878.

WHOLE No. 440.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,
ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

THIS is the beautiful sentence which Col. Ingersoll puts on the title-page of his new book, The Ghosts: "The idea of immortality, that like a sea has ebb and flowed in the human heart, with its countless waves of hope and fear, beating against the shores and rocks of time and fate, was not born of any book, nor of any creed, nor of any religion. It was born of human affection, and it will continue to ebb and flow beneath the mists and clouds of doubt and darkness as long as love kisses the lips of death."

HERE is a story none the less spicy for being at the same time new and true. A business man in a Western city, who was prominent in church circles, but had recently failed and paid only fifteen cents on a dollar, got into a religious discussion with a keen radical, whose religion consists pretty much in doing his duty like a man. Horrified by the audacious heresies he heard, the church-member exclaimed: "Why, if I believed as you do, I should be afraid to live!" "Well," was the quick retort, "if I've got to go to hell, I'll go on a hundred cents!" That was a gag; the discussion dropped.

THE ALBANY Express of May 17 closed an editorial on "The Progress of Infidelity" with this sentence, which has no little significance as coming from a leading secular journal, and as showing what little confidence liberals should feel in the fallacy that the influence of the secular press is a sufficient substitute for vigorous organization in their own behalf: "It is not improbable that both Catholicism and Protestantism are declining in this country, and that that monster infidelity is making rapid headway. That is the danger. Much better that the two lams unite and crush the infidelistic spirit abroad, than quarrel over the question of the superior strength of each other."

MR. J. MOELLER wrote to Mr. Green from Buffalo, N. Y., May 18: "Our League is doing splendidly. Our last meeting was attended by at least four hundred. All the leading scientists in the city have joined us. Last Sunday evening Professor A. R. Grote lectured; to-morrow Professor Poole, the astronomer, will address us; and the week after Professor Duschak. We are going to publish every Sunday lecture in pamphlet form, and sell them at five cents apiece for the benefit of the society. I am happy to assure you that our movement has proved a complete success. Have sent for charter." The application for a charter has not been received at present writing.

COL. INGERSOLL must give a broad meaning to the word "religious" in this passage, if he would reach all editors guilty of the pretty things he describes: "Nothing can exceed the mendacity of the religious press. I have had some little experience with political editors, and am forced to say, that until I read the religious papers, I did not know what malicious and slimy falsehoods could be constructed from ordinary words. The ingenuity with which the real and apparent meaning can be tortured out of language is simply amazing. The average religious editor is intolerant and insolent; he knows nothing of affairs; he has the envy of failure, the malice of impotence, and always accounts for the brave and generous actions of unbelievers by low, base, and unworthy motives."

THE LONDON Times writes very sensibly about American "Communism": "If, as we will not anticipate, the United States is destined to go through a serious crisis of this kind, we shall doubtless hear again, as we used to hear fifteen years ago, a good deal about the evil effects of democratic institutions. If, however, it is the weakness of institutions like those of America to give tolerant encouragement to all sorts of experiments in social and political organization, it is their strength to be able to survive them, to profit by their success, and to be little the worse for their failure. The fabric of American society is so strong that it can sustain with little or no injury shocks which would be fatal to more effete constitutions. In the United States the freedom of discussion is a safety valve through which a great deal of superfluous political steam escapes. The Americans have political sagacity enough to distinguish sharply between intemperate or even revolutionary speech and rebellious action. We do not doubt, if they have to deal with any dangerous form of Communism, they will deal with it effectively. The social fabric of the United States is as capable of successfully resisting such an attack as that of any State in the world."

A PARIS despatch of May 22 says: "Public interest is now occupied with the centenary of the death of Voltaire, who died May 30, 1778. The movement originated with a number of republican senators, deputies, town councillors, journalists, and savants, who held a meeting and appointed a committee to carry out the scheme. The committee as now organized consists of Victor Hugo and four other senators, four deputies, two municipal councillors, two members of the Institute (Legouvé and Renan), and several artists, journalists, and men of letters. The committee has decided to publish an epitome of Voltaire's moral, social, and political opinions, in a cheap volume of one thousand pages, for general circulation, and has asked republicans to receive subscriptions to meet the expenses of the celebration. The Catholic dignitaries are attacking the proposed celebration violently. Cardinal Guibert, Archbishop of Paris, has issued a pastoral denouncing it. Bishop Dupanloup has published a pamphlet against the celebration and Voltaire. He also, yesterday, in the Senate, asked M. Dufaure, President of the Council and Minister of Justice, whether the government would prevent the fête and prosecute the publishers of the book containing irreligious selections from Voltaire's works. M. Dufaure said that the celebration was a private affair. The government had no right to interfere. It reprobated the publication of some passages, but could not prosecute writings which had been published a million times, and had been many years in general circulation."

THE LONDON Financial Opinion states the issue between England and Russia thus: "Russia claims to act uncontrolled, outside European law. The Continental Powers have hitherto said practically: 'If you will, you will.' England, having maintained a silence the length of which will probably remain a historical phenomenon, has said at the eleventh hour: 'No. Under no circumstances can Russia be allowed to establish the right to set aside a solemn European compact, at her own instance and by her own will. If nobody else will resist her, I will. If Russia goes forward, she will do so at her peril. Nor will I submit to the mediation of any other power.'" The establishment and recognition of a "European law," however informal or imperfect, is a manifest advance toward that "Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World," of which Tennyson sang in "Locksley Hall," and which is one of the noblest dreams of the nineteenth century. To be sure, it has been as yet only vaguely foreshadowed; yet every assertion of the right of "Europe" to act collectively on questions which touch her collective interests, while respecting the rights of "local self-government," ought to find a response in every American heart. So far as England represents this principle, she represents civilization as against barbarism; and to this extent we sympathize with her unreservedly as opposed to Russia, who seems to represent little except her own or Slavic ambition. Turkey has been indeed brutal and cruel beyond forgiveness in her treatment of Christians; but what shall be said of the mercy, justice, or freedom of the Russian government? Let Vera Sassulitch answer.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
MR. O. B. PROTHINGHAM, New York
MR. W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUEMANN-POTTER, San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
HARRIET F. FENNER, Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill.
MR. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MOOREHEAD, Lebanon, N. H.
MR. J. W. EVANS, Lebanon, N. H.
MR. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON, Tenafly, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Lottsburg, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN,
J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN,
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOWLT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. C. MICHELS, Adel.
Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. E. CLARK, Louisville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL SCHUEMANN, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. B. BARRETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....R. E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL GALT, Astoria.
Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....J. P. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT D. P. WILCOX, Janesville.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Wyoming.....W. FERGUSON, Prvo City.
Norman S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, 137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Pfisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, B. A. Nance, C. M. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MICHIGAN, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claassen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. O. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundtke, J. Harrison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochhead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elzur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, E. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnard; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.

Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, E. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie.

Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Herma, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheppard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.

Issued to Benj. Greagg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.

Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbuitz, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.

Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.

Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.

Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransack, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stra, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.

Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrells, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Seuff, M. Seuff, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Seuff, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.

Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauenstein, M.D., E. Lehouf, and others.

OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.

Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.

CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Rely, and others.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parse.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

The Teachings of Free Religion.

BY L. K. WASHBURN, OF REVERE, MASS.

I believe in the principles of Free Religion, and therefore I preach them. Did I believe the doctrines of Christianity, I should preach them; but I do not. I love liberty and truth more than a priest and a church; and I strike Christianity to defend truth and liberty. A church is a house of superstition, and I have no reverence for it. A priest is a soul-master, and I have no respect for his office. I recognize the object of religious teaching to make men and women better,—not to make them Christian. I do not pretend to know all about the here or the hereafter; I cannot accept what is contrary to my reason and understanding. I blame no man for his faith or want of faith; nor do I praise a man for his belief or unbelief. No one can see the universe as I see it,—neither do I wish to have any one see it thus; but I want the privilege of saying what I see, without being called an infidel or blasphemer by some one who gets a different view of what surrounds us. I am willing to be fair to others; but I am not willing to be misrepresented. Is it a crime to be a Free Religionist, or for a Free Religionist to preach his faith? When I hear a man say that the Free Religionists deny all that is good, I want that man to back up his speech with facts, or else back down, and confess that he has not told the truth.

I advocate the principles of Free Religion, and do so because I consider that such principles better represent the truth of things than do the doctrines of Christianity. I claim that Free Religion is founded upon what we know of Nature. We have neither dogmas of affirmation nor dogmas of denial. There are certain opinions which we assert; but Free Religion does not forbid searching after more truth. Do we deny what is good when we deny total depravity, the wrath of God, the infallibility of a book whose pages are tracked from the first leaf to the last with error and imperfection? Do we give up what is good when we give up the privilege of hearing these false doctrines preached; when we give up a God who is unworthy of worship, a Savior who is powerless to save, a guide which guides us wrong? I am somewhat familiar with the literature of Free Religion, and I know of no line of it that can be charged with inculcating immorality. I have read some of the utterances of the preachers of Free Religion, and I have not seen a word that could be called immoral. No ear ever heard from my lips a discourse that would lower man as a man. I have never advised men and women to forsake right doing, or give up what is true. I do not say that I have not denied that Christianity was true as a system of religion. I do not say that I have not denied that Jesus was God; that the Bible was the word of God; that the heaven-and-hell scheme of the Christian theology was the plan of God. I have denied these things; but I think that I have given good reasons for so doing.

We have given up believing what is false and absurd; given up the superstitious notions of the hereafter; given up fear of God; given up Christianity; and we feel better for doing so. Faith follows knowledge; and Religion, while she abuses Science for prying into the universe, has always founded her church on what science has discovered. It was not many centuries ago that men believed that the sun was lighted every morning and blown out every night. When Science found out that the earth revolved on its axis, Religion changed her faith to fit the fact. The texts of the pulpit are only the opinions of men. The difference between Christianity and Free Religion is, that Christianity has faith in miracles, witchcraft, and the Bible, while Free Religion has faith in natural law, science, and truth. Because the Church's theology is vanishing before the teaching of Free Religion, they who are helping drive falsehood from off the earth are said to be attacking what is good.

Never did mankind look Creation in the face with more serious gaze, or meet the future with more earnest attitude. This may be called the century of questions,—the age of inquiry. Men are not, in search of law, looking into the universe to escape their fate, but to know what it is. We have come to prize knowledge, and are getting to put a true value upon facts. The attitude of the Church towards what is new is that of fear; but let us not be afraid to "entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." The world is not pledged to the past. We violate no obligation when we refuse to credit the account of Creation ascribed to Moses; and we are not irreverent when we say to Paul's assertion, that "it is a shame for women to speak in the church,"—we do not believe it! It is the privilege of a man to-day to say what he likes; but it is also the privilege of a man to believe what he likes. The chain of priestly authority is broken, and man has found freedom for the mind. It is this freedom which we are to protect; and we say, "Hands off," to every attempt of ecclesiastical power to get control of human affairs. The soul of man will not be confined in a creed-box in this age. It can take no ready-made belief for its faith. We have reached an era of spiritual progress where independence is the highest religious posture. We have attained a height of spiritual desire where more light and truth is the only prayer of the soul. The religious endeavor to-day is not to get a correct translation of some ancient text of scripture, but to find the hidden meanings in the things around us. We have begun to give up teaching people to believe, and have commenced to teach them to think. There is fear of falsehood to-day, not of truth. Deception hurts mankind, not frankness; not the facts of Nature which the scientist gives us, but the lies of theology which the priest tells us.

We cannot have the Christian's experience. The conditions which produced Christianity have passed forever. Another religious growth is upon us. We must have a religion that is an outcome of our life. This is an age when men are free: it is an age when they should be true. The goddess of liberty should be married to the god of truth; and from the union would come a character and life such as never yet walked the earth. The time has not come and never will come when we can defy Nature. There is no worthy destiny for man contained in wrong-doing. We must not lose faith in right and justice. When the world strikes against morality, it commits suicide. We need nothing more to-day than reinforcement of moral conviction. There are too many men who will cheat and steal. A loose notion of things runs through society. One would almost think that God had repealed the moral law, and commanded men to do all manner of evil.

This is the foremost century since the morning stars sang together, and civilization is a cleaner and purer idea than ever it was in the history of the human race. We have advantages such as no generation before us could boast, and have won glories that shine not upon the brow of any other age; yet their lustre is dimmed by vices that are a shame to man in a state of barbarism,—but in this day have no shadow of excuse for existence. One of the greatest of human virtues is that which puts up with the vices of men. I acknowledge the greatness of this nineteenth century: I would not take one word of praise from its eulogy; but I will not apologize for its faults. We should seek their cause and their cure; not try to hide them. I believe one reason why there is so much immorality is because Christian ministers have made it a higher virtue to believe the dogmas of the Church than to keep the commandments. Had morality been preached for the last eighteen centuries with as much zeal and interest as Christianity has been preached, I do not believe that a single immoral person would be found in Christendom. There is no injury being done to-day by the advocacy of any socialistic theory, by the promulgation of any political principle,—however much it may be antagonistic to the recognized ideas of society and government,—that is tantamount to the injury which results from preaching the doctrines of Christianity. A false theory may be corrected or disproved; but a falsehood stamped with the names of God and truth, and baptized holy, is an evil not to be corrected: it is to be destroyed.

Wherever the cross is erected, it is erected over the grave of liberty. The cross does not belong to the religion of this age. Let us take down this emblem of death from our churches, and put in its stead the emblem of life. We have reached the point in religious development where the soul sits in judgment upon what the minister says. Instead of the crudelity that formerly swallowed every pulpit utterance as the bread of eternal life, we have common-sense for an audience. There is agitation in the churches. This is the John the Baptist that goes before the oncoming truth. Where discussion is allowed, progress is born. But the period of growth is also one of danger. Changes disturb the order of things; but this fate is the fate of further advancement. We are warned that society is dissolving; that the good influences of the world are being subverted; but the warning comes from a false reading of the signs of the times. When the order is passed that a certain street shall be widened, the buildings on either side have to be torn down or moved back, and the work necessary to the accomplishment of the object seems like destruction; but when the buildings are all restored, or replaced with new and better ones, and the old, narrow street has grown broad and commodious, we wonder why so good a work was not undertaken before. We are at work to-day widening the old, narrow, Orthodox road to heaven; and the tearing down of the old dogmas, and the moving back of old notions, seem to threaten the destruction of religion; but, when we have finished carting off the remains of Orthodoxy, and replaced Calvinistic architecture with Free Religious designs, and put down the smooth pavement of our modern ideas, Christianity will exclaim with pious satisfaction, "It is the Lord: let him do what seemeth to him good."

It is asserted that Free Religion takes away man's reliance on God; that it teaches that it is no use to trust God, since he has thrown man on his own resources. But what is meant by trust in God? Free Religion bids man rely on the virtues; to trust right-doing, and to have faith in Nature: but it does not say to man, "If you have faith in God he will feed and clothe you; if you trust in God he will pay your bills; if you rely on God he will carry you through all kinds of wrong without a spot or blemish on your heart or soul."

It is also said that Free Religion does not teach prayer. But what is meant by prayer? Free Religion encourages aspiration for the higher and purer which dwell above us; encourages all good desires, and tells man to seek only what will make him better; but it does not tell man that he can build a house and get money to pay for it by praying on the corner of the street; that he can get his daily bread by asking for it on his knees; or that praying will do the work of hands or brain. Free Religion teaches earnest seeking and sincere desire of all that is good, but not that prayer will take the place of effort. When man is working with all his might, to stop to pray would be waste of time.

It is charged that Free Religion is opposed to devotion. But what is meant by devotion? Free Religion teaches natural piety; obedience of natural laws; love of man and reverence of God: but it does not advise man to shout his piety in public places; to advertise it in loud amens or sepulchral groans; or to profess it in offensive ways. Free Religion does not tell man to thrust his religious views into every hour and upon every one he meets. The worst nuisance in the world is a pious nuisance; and the person who is always talking his religion usually has no time to practise it.

When the flower's heart blossoms in beauty, it reveals its natural loveliness. There is something sweetly beautiful in such a thought. Nature does not put on anything. Nature's expression is evolution, not ornamentation. So our religion should reveal itself naturally, not in manufactured forms. The rustling ceremonies of the Church have a sound of dead leaves. There is somewhat stiff and dry in the formality of Christian worship. A good, healthy outburst of natural feeling would snap the forms of Christianity asunder. Having more of God makes one more of a man, more of a woman,—not a monk or a nun, not a howling dervish or a pious suppliant.

It is also said that Free Religion degrades Christianity to the level of Paganism, and puts Jesus with Socrates, Antoninus, and Mohammed. Free Religion denies the divine origin of Christianity, but acknowledges whatever is good in it. It looks upon Jesus as a great and good man, and places him with other great and good men. Where else should it place him? The idea that our existence here or hereafter depends upon what Jesus said or suffered is absurd. Free Religion does not teach a Christ or a Savior, and does not use these words. While the power of man to help and save himself needs new emphasis, and while the principle of salvation needs to be recognized in our religious teachings, I cannot say that we should use the word Christ to express it. We ought to use only words of true meaning. I consider every use of the word Christ in this age absurd and out of place. Our civilization does not look backward nor forward to a Christ, and the word should be dropped from our speech. Let us no longer chase shadows. The search for the holy grail is not only an immortal quest, but also a profitless one. The importance of what Jesus said and did is exaggerated. Does no divinity shine through human history but where the name of the Nazarene illumines it? Is there no place holy to our thoughts, sacred to our affections, but that far-away land of Palestine? Have we shed tears upon no spot of earth that hallow it to our memory? Must we go back eighteen centuries to find a heart that we can trust, a soul that we can reverence? Can we not believe in any man but Jesus? Faith in any one will help us.

The light which guides us through life is not a star, but a galaxy: not the ray from one bright point, but the enlightenment of the whole heavens. God to-day is not the name of a king of Israel, but the name of a greatness which we do not comprehend. We have given Jesus the proportions of Divinity; but there is not room enough on the earth for Deity. Our theology has been a Christology; but we must find greater evidences of Divinity than the gospels contain. Jesus might have fed a multitude and not have exhausted his charity; but such capacity does not measure the Infinite Love which gives life to a universe of existence. Jesus might have spoken encouragement to Mary Magdalene, and shown to her poor, erring heart a better and a purer way; but such words could not call into being the vast bodies which move in paths of light through the unsounded depths above us, or the sweet-eyed blossoms that in spring-time come out of the earth to add their miracle of loveliness to the wonders of God. To man, wherever he is, who lives for his race, whose breast beats with the pulse of human kindness, whose hands bring happiness to the world, I bare my head in reverence; but to the power that gave birth to that man, to the love that planted kindness in his heart, and put the gift of charity in his hand, do I alone bow my head in worship. I would cast no reflection upon the splendid inheritance in the New Testament; but I regard its importance as literary and not sacred,—as showing what man can do, and not what God can do. I cannot be blind to the truth that there is pure moral teaching in the gospels; neither can I be blind to the fact that there is just as pure moral teaching in other books. I cannot deny the beauty of the character of Jesus; nor can I deny the beautiful character of Socrates. I admire much in the letters of Paul; but I also admire the discourses of Epictetus. I read Seneca's Happy Life, and I wonder that one man should write what all men try to write; but shall I say that what Matthew and John and Paul have written is divine, and that what Plato and Seneca and Epictetus have written, which is just as pure and just as good, is human? Shall I say of Socrates he was man, and of Jesus he was God?

Let men cease to preach the deity of Jesus. This falsehood has rung in the ears of the world until they are deaf to the sound of truth. We must use different words to conjure with. Truth, right, and justice; love, mercy, and charity,—not Christ Church, and cross; not creed, ceremony, and custom,—are the magic words of faith to-day! The helmet of our salvation has the strength of righteousness and the beauty of truth. We ask, first, From what are we to be saved? and then go to work to save ourselves. The hereafter of the Here is the sequence of our lives only wherein our thoughts and feelings influence our actions. I do not believe that "heaven" and "hell" are words that stand for solutions of the destinies of man in the future. They represent the conditions of human love and hate wherever humanity may be. I cannot bring myself to think that God has a private apartment anywhere in the universe, with "No admittance unless you are a Christian" written on the door. I had rather believe that the universe is framed upon larger principles; and that Deity nowhere excludes man from His presence on account of the theological faith which he has been taught.

Free Religion has not tried to throw discredit upon the word "Christian." It has endeavored to show its true size and true meaning. When we try to make the word "Christian" cover all humanity, we see how small and insignificant it is. It will not reach half around the globe. Not one-third part of mankind find shelter beneath its wings.

Free Religion is the religion of humanity, not of divinity. It was born of human wants and needs. It is the hand of man stretched out from the heart of man. It is pitying poverty enough to relieve it, loving truth enough to speak it, honoring man enough to help him. Free Religion gives up soul-saving hereafter for MAN-MAKING here.

SPREAD-EAGLE PHILOSOPHY.

Mr. Joseph Cook, "the Chalmers of America, is a large man, tall and brawny." "His features are strongly marked, and his massive head is adorned with a bountiful covering of sandy hair." In these words a correspondent of the Scotman describes Mr. Cook, a lecturer who is the bulwark of the orthodoxy of Boston, Mass. It seems to be admitted that we cannot appreciate Americans of genius, unless we know how they appear to the people privileged to behold them in the flesh. An admirer reviewed Mr. Walt Whitman as he was bathing some years ago; and a description of Mr. Whitman's frame was the not inappropriate introduction to a book in which that poet spoke freely enough of his own limbs. As the picture of Mr. Cook's brawniness and sandy hair is served up in company with the Glasgow edition of his Biology (David Bryce & Son), it is plain that the Glasgow editor, a Free Kirk minister, expects the public to take a personal interest in a gentleman who has "prepared for his public ministry by a severe course of self-culture, both in America and Europe."

To understand Mr. Cook and his lectures, which we consider a very queer contribution to modern thought, it is necessary to explain how they came to be delivered. Professor Huxley lectured in the United States not long ago; and, if we are not mistaken, some other "advanced thinkers" have planted the standard of speculation, to adopt a phrase of Mr. Hannibal Chollop's, in the remotest gardens of that country. We do not know exactly what these lecturers said; but they seem to have spoken about protoplasm, the origin of life on the planet, and other matters of an interest that cannot be said to be urgent. The "small philosophers," as Mr. Cook cruelly calls them, thought otherwise; and many thinkers feared that, unlike the dying pauper of the story, they would soon "have no hell to go to." To stem this current of opinion, Mr. Cook was set up by a committee of ministers to deliver addresses, in which he was to bring a Roland for every one of Mr. Huxley's Oliver, a fresh German professor to meet Haeckel, and a new and tremendous "sociologist" to tackle Mr. Herbert Spencer, "whose star," says Mr. Cook, "is now touching the Western pines."

The conferences of the Boston Monday lecturer have been printed, and are now before us. In several ways they are rather instructive. They show one what the metaphysics of Massachusetts are like, and the kind of style and of argument that pleases a serious American audience. The topics are not much to our taste, and we do not intend to say much about them. The lecturer is concerned with the origin and aim of life, as life appears when it is looked at through a microscope. "Where did it begin, where is it going?" Mr. Cook asks; old questions enough, and not much elucidated by ingenious arrangements of lenses and ground glass. A German philosopher says, "In a rapidly-cooling planet, who knows what might happen?" just as Miss Braddon makes one of her characters declare that "anything might happen under the Plantagenets." Mr. Cook does not think that the origin of life could have happened under such circumstances, because, if we understand him, even in a rapidly-cooling planet it was rather too hot. No germs could have stood the weather. Then there are arguments about the size of a monkey's brain, and of a savage's; and why, it is asked, has a savage so big a brain, as he is not so very much more clever than an ape, and does not give his mind much exercise? Perhaps, however, the savage, an astronomer in his way, and a bit of a metaphysician after his kind, uses his intellect more than Caucasian and cultivated persons suppose. These questions need not delay us here. It is more important to live well, and even to write and speak with good taste and in a sensible way, than to guess at what occurs in planets which have begun to cool down. Whether our nerves have loops at the ends of them or not—on which seems to hang human destiny—it is as well not to foam at the mouth. Fustian is fustian, loops or no loops; and we intend to show the fustian that Mr. Cook supplies to a Boston audience,—an audience which, he says, "will not be cheated."

Mr. Cook throws off with a determined attack on Bathybius, which he calls "an amazingly strategic and haughtily trumpeted substance." The word "strategic" is as dear to Mr. Cook as the Cyclopes were to an American poet who made them rhyme to spades and glades, and, pleased with the sound, wove it into his song, regardless of sense. Bathybius, says the "cultured" Cook, comes "from two Greek words, meaning deep and sea." We would like Mr. Cook to tell us which part of the term means sea. Is it possible that he, who is always referring to Aristotle, does not know more Greek than his countryman, who explained the etymology of hippopotamus—"It comes from two Greek words, hippos, a river, and potamos, a horse"? Alas, this "very Hercules," as the Scotman's correspondent calls him, who "has suddenly risen before an admiring nation to do battle for what he believes to be the truth" is smitten with a pebble from the brook before he has joined battle. He derives Bathylbus from two Greek words meaning deep and sea, in his very first page. He falls; and his brazen armor rings round him in his fall,—his spear, of the dimensions of a weaver's beam, flying from his grasp. He should consult his Webster, if he has not a Liddell and Scott, before he ventures on Greek. To return to poor Bathylbus; he is not only amazingly strategic and haughtily trumpeted, "but he is also the presumably triumphant keystone" of Mr. Huxley's doctrine. In the next page he is "a bridge between the inorganic and the organic." In about a dozen lines he is a "watchword," and in the same sentence "a victorious weapon"; while, in September, 1876, Bathylbus was publicly interred, and he is now taking "his place with other ghosts." One does not know where to have Mr. Cook. How can a haughtily-trumpeted keystone be publicly interred? How can a strategic bridge be a watchword, or a victorious weapon become a ghost? Mr. Cook raises too many questions, philological and logical, in his first three pages. How can we expect to reach the loops at the end of the nerves, and the skull of the cave-man at Mentone and the tower of St. Mark, and all the other arguments in Mr. Cook's collection, if he is to delay us with these inscrutable mysteries? Probably the eager minds of the Boston Christian Young Men overleaped these obstacles, as our own youth clear hurdles. "Whole armadas of materialistic fleets," says the inspired lecturer, "have been wrecked on the hungry tusks of self-contradiction." Why self-contradiction, also spoken of as a reef, should have hungry tusks, we do not know; but the enemy of Bathylbus himself seems scarcely to escape the ravenous tusks.

Not satisfied with a display, however brilliant, of acquaintance with the language of Hellas, Mr. Cook, in his second lecture, kindly adds something to what we know of Socrates: "It was in the endeavor to satisfy a distinctively theological thirst that he smote the rocks at the foot of the Acropolis, and caused to gush forth there these crystalline head-springs of the scientific method. Unless we think boldly—north, south, east, and west, and syllogistically, and on our knees, we do not think at all. A Greek teacher of morals first taught us to think in this manner." Mr. Cook has sources of information which we know nothing of; but we hardly think he can be right in saying that Socrates taught him to think in this manner. More probably the devout though benighted Mohican of his native prairies taught him to think in the manner expressed in this burning period. He wants to say that Agassiz held some view with which Professor Dana agrees; and this is how he says it.

"He bent that colossal bow, and it dropped out of his dying hand. On the English-speaking globe, now that Lyell has gone hence, there is no man but Dana that can take up that bow and bend it. But what does Dana say? Go to Agassiz's grave; take with you these yet moist sheets of the last number of the American Journal of Science and Arts; read over Agassiz's tomb the latest utterance of the highest and gravest authority in American geological science, and you may bring solace to a hovering, mighty spirit for an unfinished task."

If some Boston Christian young man did not take a moist copy of the American Journal of Science and Arts and read it over Agassiz's tomb, Boston Christian young men must be very hard-hearted. Who would not take a little trouble to solace a hovering spirit? Still if Mr. Cook was in earnest, his orthodoxy has a wondrous heathenish air; and if the remark was only his fun, his fun is not in the best taste. It seems that Professor Dana (p. 54), "over Agassiz's grave, joins hands with Agassiz in the Unseen Holy." Here is spread-eagle philosophy indeed; and very edifying Mr. Cook's lectures must be to young men with a sense of humor or a sense of reverence. "I do not know where in America there is another weekly audience with as many brains in it," says the lecturer; and we wonder what sort of trash he would pour out before an audience which he held in less respect.

A number of these addresses have "preludes on current events." An audience with ever so many brains cannot always be tackling Bathylbus, or following Mr. Cook through what he calls "the famous labyrinth of Minotaurus." He therefore began by talking about the observance of Sunday, or about the election of Mr. Hayes, or about "the custom of the dogs of Venice to symbolize the marriage of their city to the sea," or about any other nonsense that chanced to come uppermost in the Bathylbus or deep sea of his brain. Thence he would diverge to Hermann Lotze, the new philosopher whose "star is in the ascendant," while Mr. Spencer's, as we have seen, is casting a mild lustre on the Western pines. The lecturer revels in the Christian names of his authorities. Herr Lotze would be nothing if he were not Hermann, just as the Telegraph, while Mr. Gladstone was in office, always worshipped him as William Ewart. Herr Lotze's philosophy, we are informed, "is the most brilliant, the most audacious, the most abreast of the time, of all the philosophies of the globe." The most abreast of the time—these words sum up the popular conception of philosophy. Who is the very newest man, people ask, what is the "last novelty" in opinion? That is the faith to run after, just as the last hideous color is the most fashionable. People seem to think that Herr Lotze, or Herr Haeckel, or Mr. Huxley, has found something out, that proves or disproves the mysterious and eternal questions. If we have loops at the end of our nerves, all is well; there is a God and a future life. If the horse is descended from a pony no bigger than a fox—let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die! The last speaker is sure to know best; the most recent work on the microscope contains the secret of the universe. It is with pasteboard artillery, despite its thundering noise, that our lecturer bombards castles of Giant Doubting, themselves built of pasteboard. He quotes what we presume was an absurd and vulgar hoax—a letter which Mr. Carlyle was said to have written about Mr. Darwin—as if it were gospel, or as if it were an argument. He tells long stories about Daniel Webster's deathbed, and about Rufus Choate. He calls a copy of the New York Tribune "the last white-and-mottled bird that flew to us out of the tall Tribune tower." He declares that when he "lifts his gaze to the very uppermost pinnacles of the mount of established truth, he finds standing there, not Haeckel nor Spencer, but Helmholtz," and other gentlemen, and they "are all on their knees"; though it must be as hard for a professor to stand on his knees on a pinnacle as to go off the stage kneeling, in the way proposed in the Critic. Then this country is made the butt of his eloquence: "Am I to stand here in Boston and be told that there is no authority in philosophy beyond the Thames? Is the outlook of this cultured audience, in heaven's name, to be limited by the North Sea? The English we revere; but Professor Gray says that there is something in their temperament that leads to materialism. England, green England! Sour, sad, stout skies, with azure tender as heaven, omnipresent, but not often visible behind the clouds; sour, sad, stout people, with azure tender as heaven, and omnipresent, but not often visible behind the vapors. Such is England, such the English."

"Boston, since 1852, has been wringing her hands in secret," Mr. Cook says; and she may well wring them in public, while the ghost of Charles Baudelaire rejoices, if this tustian is the end of her "culture."—London Saturday Review.

THE STORY OF A HEROIC LIFE.

The story of the life of Gen. Bartlett, as told by Gen. Palfrey in his just published Memoir, reveals a character so noble and a career so inspiring that it can scarcely be otherwise than profitable, in an age which is greatly given to talking of its own degeneracy, to pause for a moment to consider them. The outline of the story is doubtless already familiar to many. A student in the Junior Class at Harvard when the war broke out; speedily enlisting, after a conflict with his previous Southern sympathies; appointed Captain before the start; distinguishing himself for gallantry at Ball's Bluff; losing a leg at Yorktown; returning home to recruit, only to go back with crutches, at the head of a regiment; leading his men at Port Hudson, the only mounted man in an assaulting column of three thousand; stricken, by two bullets, and recovering only after long weeks of sickness; leading the desperate charge at Petersburg, at the head of his brigade; wounded and a prisoner, after a terrible hand-to-hand fight, without support and against dreadful odds; suffering in rebel prisons at Danville and Richmond; released and partially recovered, only to again hurry to the front,—these are the principal incidents in a military career which was begun at the age of twenty-one and closed at the age of twenty-five with the rank of a Major-General and the pride of a grateful State as its rewards. The war was a time of testing and sifting. It revealed incompetence and faithlessness where we least expected them. It gave occasion for much money-getting, for much selfishness, for much cowardice. There were generals, whose military training should have made them efficient, who were wanting in time of crisis. There were generals, whose responsibility should have made them humbled and prudent, who were helped on their horses by their orderlies, and sacrificed their men with a recklessness born of intoxication. But with all this sifting and testing, there now and then came to the front a man who seemed to have been made for the occasion, and whose capacity enlarged as the emergency became more critical. Such a man was Gen. Bartlett. Had the war not come he might have lived the ordinary life of a student and professional man, distinguished by the domestic virtues, by much manliness and courtliness, but with no hint of the sterner stuff within him. The war disclosed him as he was,—a later Bayard, without fear, without reproach; a very knight in courage and purity and endurance.

We have said that the incidents enumerated above make up the outline of the story. But with what infinite gallantry and patience and kindness, with how many proofs of unfaltering devotion and noble manhood is the outline filled in. When he lost his leg at Yorktown only six lines in his journal tell the whole story: "While I was visiting the pickets, watching the enemy with a glass, a sharp-shooter hit me in the knee with a minie ball, shattering the bone down to my ankle. Dr. Hayward amputated it four inches above the knee, and I started for Baltimore in the same afternoon." That is all. And again, a year later, after being borne in an ambulance, with a shattered wrist, from the gallant charge at Port Hudson, the entry in his journal is simply this: "The ride reminded me of mine from Yorktown to Shipping Point a year before. It was about nine miles, a rough road." And again, in the trenches before Petersburg, waiting for the orders to assault, we find him writing in his journal: "Shells this afternoon come fearfully close. Orders to be ready to move at a moment's notice. . . . God spare me for Agassiz's sake and for dear mother's sake! I fear it will break their hearts if I am killed here." So always the record runs. Patient, prayerful, cool and fearless in action, grateful when dangers were passed without injury, and when wounds came grateful that they were no worse; in his letters home, always tranquil and uncomplaining, scrupulously keeping to himself his worst sufferings, and writing down only the brightest and most hopeful things. His career after the war closed was scarcely less noble. He bore his honors modestly; was always surprised and abashed by compliments; and entered with all the ardor of a nature unrestrained by physical infirmities into the pursuits of peace. He refused positions the most influential and lucrative; turned a deaf ear to politicians; and when, once and again, he was called upon for public utterances, he spoke with a soldierly magnanimity words of cordial good-will which were caught up all over the land. When, at last, business reverses were added to steadily increasing physical weakness, and anxiety for his family intensified the grief he felt at the anticipation of parting from them, his worn spirit still showed the same strength and patience, the same gentleness and trustfulness as before, and his last words were words of assurance and hopefulness. We repeat what we said at the outset, that it is worth while to pause for a moment to contemplate such a character and career. Gen. Palfrey, in his unpretending, but profoundly interesting Memoir, has shown us a life worthy of all the praise we can give it,—and, what is better, worthy of being studied and imitated as an example of Christian and chivalrous manhood.—Boston Journal.

HOW THE SILVER DOLLAR BECAME A NATIONAL CREED.

As a matter of history, it is well to put on record in these columns the following letter of Director Linderman, approved by Secretary Sherman, and published by the New York Tribune of March 2:—

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28, 1878.

Sir,—If the bill to authorize the coinage of a standard silver dollar, which has lately passed both Houses of Congress, and is now awaiting Executive action, should become a law, it is expedient that the mint should be placed in a position to execute with promptitude the requirements of the act so far as coinage is concerned. In order that there may be as little delay as possible in commencing the coinage of the new dollar, it is necessary that a full supply of dies should be prepared in anticipation of the bill becoming a law. I therefore transmit herewith a specimen or experimental piece of new design that I have caused to be prepared, and which I have the honor to request may be approved and adopted.

The act authorizing the coinage of a standard silver dollar provides that there shall be on the silver dollar the devices and superscriptions provided by the act of January 18, 1837, Section 13 of which reads as follows: "That upon the coins struck at the mint there shall be the following devices and legends. Upon one side of each of said coins there shall be an inscription emblematic of liberty, with an inscription of the word 'Liberty' and the year of the coinage; and upon the reverse of each of the gold and silver coins there shall be the figure or representation of an eagle, with the inscription, United States of America, and a designation of the value of the coin." Section 18, of the Coinage Act of 1873, further provides that there shall be upon the coins the inscription, "E Pluribus Unum," and that the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may also cause the motto, "In God we Trust," to be inscribed upon such coins as shall admit of such motto.

In accordance with the provisions of these laws, I have selected the accompanying piece from various designs which have been prepared at the mint. The obverse of the coin bears a free cut head of Liberty crowned with Phrygian cap, decorated with wheat and cotton, the staples of the country; the legend "E Pluribus Unum"; thirteen stars; and the year of coinage. On the reverse, surrounded by an olive wreath, is an eagle with outspreading wings, bearing in his talons a branch of olive and a bundle of arrows, emblems of peace and war; the inscriptions, "U. S. of America" and "one dollar"; and the motto, "In God we Trust." This specimen, while it possesses all the requirements of law in device and superscription, has been selected not only for the beauty of its design, but also for the exceptionally low relief of the devices, insuring protection from abrasion, and enabling them to be brought up in striking a minimum pressure. Very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN, Director.

To the Hon. John Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury.

DISTRUST OF PRIESTLY INFLUENCE IN EUROPE.

It is a matter of notoriety that an aider and abettor of clerical pretensions is regarded in France as an enemy of France and of Frenchmen; in Germany as an enemy of Germany and of Germans; in Austria as an enemy of Austria and Hungary, of both Austrians and Magyars; and in Italy as an enemy of Italy and the Italians. He is so regarded, not by a few wild and revolutionary enthusiasts who have cast away all the beliefs of their childhood and all bonds connecting them with the past, but by a great and increasing majority of sober and conscientious men of all creeds and persuasions, who are filled with a love for their country, and whose hopes and aims for the future are animated and guided by the examples of those who have gone before them, and by a sense of the continuity of national life. The profound conviction and determination of the people in all these countries, that the clergy must be restricted to a purely ceremonial province, and must not be allowed to interfere, as clergy, in public affairs—this conviction and determination, I say, are not the effect of a rejection of the Catholic dogmas. About the dogmas they do not know; they were taught them in childhood, and have not inquired into them since, and therefore they are not competent witnesses to the truth of them. But about the priesthood they do know, by daily and hourly experience, and to its character they are competent witnesses. No man can express his convictions more seriously them by setting upon them in a great and solemn matter of national importance. In all these countries the conviction of the serious and sober majority of the people is embodied, and is being daily embodied, in special legislation, openly and avowedly intended to guard against clerical aggression. The more closely the legislatures of these countries reflect the popular will, the more clear and pronounced does this tendency become. It may be thwarted or evaded for the moment by constitutional devices and parliamentary tricks, but sooner or later the nation will be thoroughly represented in all of them; and, as to what is then to be expected, let the panic of the clerical parties make answer. This is a state of opinion and of feeling which we in our own country find it hard to understand, although it is one of the most persistent characteristics of our nation in past times. We have spoken so plainly and struck so hard in the past, that we seem to have won the right to let this matter alone. We think our enemies are dead, and we forget that our neighbor's enemies are plainly alive; and then we wonder that he does not sit down, and be quieted as we are. We are not much accustomed to be afraid, and we never know when we are beaten. But these who are nearer the danger feel a very real and, it seems to me, well-grounded fear. The whole structure of modern society, the fruit of long and painful efforts, the hopes of further improvement, the triumphs of justice, of freedom, and of light, the heads of humanity which bring different nations together—all these they see to be menaced with a great and real and even pressing danger. For myself, I confess that I cannot help feeling as they feel. It seems to me quite possible that the moral and intellectual culture of Europe, the light and the right, what makes life worth having and men worthy to have it, may be clean swept away by a revival of superstition. We are, perhaps, ourselves not free from such a domestic danger; but no one can doubt that the danger would speedily arise if all Europe at our side should become again barbaric, not with the weakness and docility of a barbarism which has never known better, but with the strength of a past civilization perverted to the service of the evil. Those who know best, then, about the Catholic priesthood at present regard it as a standing menace to the State and to the moral fabric of society.—Professor Clifford in the Fortnightly Review.

MR. RUSKIN ON DRAINAGE AND PRAYER.

In the current number of Fora Clavigera, Mr. Ruskin comments upon George Dawson's belief that, if the drainage is bad, and the water foul, praying will never save a town from typhoid. This is a truth so self-evident that one would think no person of intelligence could doubt it. Yet Mr. Ruskin, keen and astute as he is, writes as follows: "No matter how bad the drainage of the town, how foul the water, 'He shall deliver thee from the noisome pestilence; and though a thousand fall at thy right hand, it shall not come nigh thee.' This, as a Christian, I am bound to believe; this, speaking as a Christian, I am bound to proclaim, whatever the consequence may be to the town, or the opinion of me be formed by the Common Council. As a Christian, I believe prayer to be in the last sense sufficient for the salvation of the town, and drainage, in the last sense, insufficient for its salvation; not that you will find me unconcerned about drainage. But if, of the two, I must choose between drains and prayer, why, 'look you,'—whatever you may think of my wild and whirling words, I will go pray."

It is, to some extent, reassuring to know that Mr. Ruskin is not unconcerned about drainage; but what can be said of his preference for prayer, if it came to a choice between that and drainage? A well-drained town of Athelst, with pure air and pure water, would as surely be free from typhoid as a badly-drained town of Christians, with impure air and impure water would be subject to it. The world, by its common-sense, is convinced of this, and it very wisely acts upon its conviction. Even Mr. Ruskin, we suspect, would not like to risk his life in a badly-drained city, notwithstanding that the only sounds heard in it were those of prayer and praise. He would feel much more secure from typhoid in a place where drainage was attended to, even though a "Divine Providence" was never supplicated to interfere with natural laws. We know that the preservation of health depends upon an attention to the laws of health; and that, where this attention is not given, a thousand prayers will be ineffective against the consequences of the neglect. Therefore, we say, of the two, give us good drains and pure water, and never mind the prayers. "If the natural philosopher judiciously compounds his chemicals, he obtains a true result, whether he believes that the elements he experiments upon are self-existent or created. The arithmetician whose divisor and dividend are both correct is in a fair way of obtaining an exact quotient, although the calculator disbelieves all the Thirty-nine Articles. If a mechanic's institution is built after the working rules of Cubitt or Peto, it will stand as firmly as a church built by Pugin. The Crystal Palace, erected after the manner of Fox and Henderson, will not fall, though it be opened on a Sunday. The principles of science are independent of every theological creed. The laws of Nature are not suspended by collects or conventicles; the same sun shines equally on the Theist and the Athelst." (Mr. G. J. Holyoake's Trial of Theism).

With all his reliance on prayer, Mr. Ruskin, it may be conjectured, would not be averse to praying after the fashion of the kirk minister, who, when the harvest approached, used to exclaim in his pulpit: "O Lord, gie us name of your measin', tantin', tearin' winds, but a thunderin', dunnerin', dryin' wind." The faith which could suggest such a request is charming in its simplicity; but, unfortunately, there is not very much to be said for the minister's good sense. Mr. Ruskin may think it wise and useful to pray for the preservation of health under impossible conditions. Other people will prefer to direct their first and chief attention to making their material surroundings favorable to safety. In this matter, as may be seen, it would be safer to follow George Dawson than Mr. Ruskin; and we say this out of no disrespect of the latter, because whatever his theological opinions may be, we all admire his genius, his earnestness, and his thorough goodness of heart.—Francis Neale, in London Secular Review, March 16.

COMTE'S SYSTEM.

ITS SIMILARITY TO THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The only organized cultus without a God, at present before us, is that of Comte. This in all its parts—its high priesthood, its hierarchy, its sacraments, its calendar, its hagiology, its literary canon, its ritualism, and, we may add, in its fundamentally intolerant and inquisitorial character—is an obvious production of the Church of Rome, with Humanity in place of God, great men in place of the saints, the Founder of Comtism in place of the Founder of Christianity, and even a sort of substitute for the Virgin in the shape of womanhood typified by Clotilde de Vaux. There is only just the amount of difference which would be necessary to escape from servile imitation. We have ourselves witnessed a case of alternation between the two systems which testified to the closeness of their affinity. The Catholic Church has acted on the imagination of Comte at least as powerfully as Sparta acted on that of Plato. Nor is Comtism any more than Plato's "Republic" and other Utopias, exempt from the infirmity of claiming finality for a flight of the individual imagination. It would shut up mankind forever in a stereotyped organization which is the vision of a particular thinker. In this respect it seems to us to be at a disadvantage compared with Christianity, which, as presented in the Gospels, does not pretend to organize mankind ecclesiastically or politically, but simply supplies a new type of character and a new motive power, leaving government, ritual, and organization of every kind to determine themselves from age to age. Comte's prohibition of inquiry into the composition of the stars, which his priesthood, had it been installed in power, would perhaps have converted into a compulsory article of faith, is only a specimen of his general tendency (the common tendency, as we have said, of all Utopias) to impose on human progress the limits of his own mind. Let his hierarchy become masters of the world, and the effect would probably be like that produced by the ascendancy of a hierarchy (enlightened no doubt for its time) in Egypt, a brief start forward, followed by consecrated immobility forever.

Larvillière Lepaux, the member of the French Directory, invented a new religion of Theophilanthropy, which seems in fact to have been an organized Rousseauism. He wished to impose it on France, but finding that, in spite of his passionate endeavors, he made but little progress, he sought the advice of Talleyrand. "I am not surprised," said Talleyrand, "at the difficulty you experience. It is no easy matter to introduce a new religion. But I will tell you what I recommend you to do. I recommend you to be crucified and to rise again on the third day." We cannot say whether Larvillière made any proselytes; but if he did, their number cannot have been much smaller than the reputed number of the religious disciples of Comte. As a philosophy, Comtism has found its place and exercised its share of influence among the philosophes of the time; but as a religious system it appears to make little way. It is the invention of a man, not the spontaneous expression of the beliefs and feelings of mankind. Any one with a tolerably lively imagination might produce a rival system with as little practical effect. Roman Catholicism was at all events a growth, not an invention.—Macmillan's Magazine.

JUDAS ISCARIOT DEFENDED.

The Tribune of last Friday devoted considerable space to an editorial denunciation of Judas Iscariot for having betrayed Jesus; and declared that, while even Satan has his apologists "from this man humanity has turned away without a word." The Tribune lays special stress upon the fact that Iscariot was a Hebrew, and says "for his sake his whole nation has been accused for generations." But the Tribune should remember that Jesus was also a Hebrew; and if the Hebrew nation has been held accused for Iscariot's sake, why should it not be held blessed for the sake of Christ? Judas Iscariot was no more a typical Hebrew than Jesus was.

This endless abuse of Judas Iscariot is unfair and unreasonable. It is true that Judas was a bigoted slave-man, but in this respect he was no worse than Jones of Nevada, or Bland. It is true that he sold himself for the ridiculously small price of thirty pieces of silver, which were probably worth one hundred cents on the dollar; but in this respect he was not worse than some stock-jobbing swindlers who cheat their confiding clients for the sake of gain in gold and stocks. If Judas Iscariot sold himself below the market price, it must be confessed that this is an accusation that will not hold good of his brethren as a rule, nor at all of the present followers of Christ.

We think Judas Iscariot ought to have a hearing. General Fitz John Porter and ex-Surgeon-General Hammond are to be given a chance to clear themselves; history has purified the memory of Bloody Mary of England; and even the murderous Henry the Eighth is held up as a model husband with only a little falling in the way of an over-fundness for change. Why should Judas Iscariot be left out in the cold? Was he quite so very great? Certainly not; for if he had not betrayed Jesus and Jesus had not died on the cross, what would the Christian world have done for a Savior, and who would bear their sins? If the Christian belief in Christ as the redeemer of mankind be correct, Judas Iscariot waits to our mind, an instrument in the hands of Providence; and, as the cause of Christ's martyrdom on the cross, second only to Christ himself in his services to mankind.—Reformer and Jewish Times, April 26.

Whither.

[For THE INDEX.]

WHITHER?

I.

Whither, oh my brother, whither,
Sailing o'er life's solemn sea,—
Whither lies the land-locked haven
Where our destined port may be?

Sail we to the purple island,
Where the blast forever dwell,—
Where are golden amaranths growing,
Lotus bloom, and asphodel?

In that fair and wondrous city,
Where are streets of purest gold,
Gates of pearl and walls of jasper,
Shall we our beloved behold?

Or to darkness are we going?
Is this life our all of day?
Do we say farewell forever,
When we lay our dead away?

Long the world hath dreamed and wondered
Where our unknown home may lie;
Down the ages, longing, yearning,
Listen to its bitter cry!

II.

Nay, my brother, never tidings
Float across the misty track,—
Day by day ships outward going;
But no message cometh back.

Sage and priest and saint have questioned
What may lie the other side,
And their hopes and fancies blending,
Thought a voice divine replied!

But, by all the deeds of beauty
Done by hero knights of old,
By the grand and noble living,
Which we every day behold;

By the deathless love which weldeth
Hearts as one forevermore;
By the tireless soul's exultant
Search for Truth from Nature's store—

Wrangling secret after secret
From the earth and sea and air;
Binding Nature's myriad forces
For our use as on we fare;

Even by the dreams we've cherished
Thro' the ages, seeking light;
By the fond thoughts of remembrance
For those passing out of sight:

Courage, brother, onward faring;
Tho' we blindly, sadly grope,
"Peering" through the darkness dimly,
If we know not, we may hope!

Bravely sail, our port unknowning;
Keep our lives sweet, pure, and true;
Then, whatever the future holdeth,
We have done all we could do!

Higher life of growth unceasing?
Death the open'd "pearly gate"?
Fairer land than faith hath pictured?
We can only hope and wait!

M. E. S.

ONEIDA, N. Y.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 25.

Henry Bolton, $2; Abbie J. Spanning, $2; Dr. Robert Ormesen, $13.25; W. O. Mack, $5.25; George Allen, $1.25; Rose Smith, 10 cents; T. B. Skinner, 10 cents; C. R. Woodward, $2; Mrs. H. C. Shepard, $1; Mrs. E. Grinnell, 20 cents; J. E. Connor, $5; George Lee, $3.10; G. G. Williams, $3.07; Cash, "anonymous," $5; E. A. Sawtelle, $3.50; Franklin King, $7.33; Cash, $2; Lizzie Richards, $1; J. B. Boyden, $3.50; Jacob Elms, $3.20; J. L. Whiting, $2.70; Cash, $2.50; George Henshaw, $13; D. B. Harris, $2.25; J. H. W. Toohy, $1.70; D. F. Bruner, $6.50; M. M. Waterman, $3.50; David Ferguson, $5; American News Co., $5.00; A. B. Chase, $20; Jefferson Church, $10; W. H. Boughton, $3.25; Dr. T. W. Johnston, $2.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the event.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MAY 30, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 331 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE: No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBOT, Editor.
GUTHRIE BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLVOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURER, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Seventh Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Index Association will be held at the office of the Association, Toledo, Ohio, on Saturday, June 1, 1878, at 2½ P.M., for the hearing of the annual reports, the election of a Board of Directors for the ensuing year, and the transaction of any other business that may be brought before the meeting.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The eleventh annual meeting of the Free Religious Association is to be held in Boston as follows:—

Thursday evening, May 30, at 7.45 P.M., session for business in Horticultural Hall; election of officers; reading of reports; and general consideration of the practical work of the Association.

Friday, May 31, at 10.30 A.M. and 3 P.M., sessions in Beethoven Hall for essays and addresses. Morning subject: "The Religion of Humanity, and how it may be Organized"; essayist, T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of the Society of Humanity, New York. Afternoon subject: "The Religion of Supernaturalism, and how it is being Disorganized"; essayist, Mr. Wm. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, Mass. Among the speakers expected are O. B. Frothingham, President of the Association, Mr. M. Ellinger, editor of the Jewish Times, Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith and Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York, Rev. S. R. Calthrop, of Syracuse, and Miss Anna M. Garlin, of Providence. Mrs. Smith will give a poem, at the Friday morning session, on "Soul Questionings." Miss Garlin will speak at the business session, Thursday evening, on the "Practical Work of Free Religion."

On Friday evening there will be a social gathering in Horticultural Hall.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

MR. TOOHEY lectures next Sunday evening at Paine Hall on "The Necessity of the Liberal League Movement."

THE ILLINOIS STATE Executive Committee of the National Liberal League has been duly constituted as follows: Dr. A. G. Humphrey, Chairman, Galesburg; James M. Pratt, Pratt; Dr. Horace Newell, Campbell Hill; Isaac Payden, Woodhull; John R. Smith, Galesburg.

IN THE SPRINGFIELD Republican of May 3, Mr. Emerson's essay on "The Sovereignty of Ethics" was quoted by the writer of "Our Boston Literary Correspondence" as having alluded to "the pale negations of Boston Trinitarianism." The essay itself said—"the pale negations of Boston Unitarianism"! Such a misquotation as that had a purpose. What was it?

IN CONSEQUENCE of our being obliged to attend the meeting of stockholders of THE INDEX Association at Toledo, we shall be unable to be present at the meeting of the Free Religious Association in Boston this week. But we are sure the meeting will be as enjoyable and inspiring as ever, and, regretting our absence on our own account alone, we venture to offer our most cordial and respectful greetings to all the friends to be assembled at the convention.

A MEETING of St. Louis "Socialists" was held in that city at National Hall, May 16. The chairman read that portion of the platform which demands "the distribution pro rata of all the property of the country," etc. But the chief speaker, Mr. Haller, of Cincinnati, discouraged the use of violence in carrying out this programme, although he hoped to see a "free country in which there should be no capitalists."

COLONEL INGERSOLL AND THE VAMPIRES OF THE PRESS.

It would be useless to make any reply to the five columns of unscrupulous and abusive misstatement with which the New York Truth Seeker tried in its last issue to cover up the fact that Colonel Ingersoll opposes the repeal of the law of 1873 against obscene literature, but favors its modification. So far as we are personally concerned, we shall spend no time in combating the labors of this journal to prejudice its readers against us. Its object is too transparent—to divert attention from the fatal blunder which it has made, and which it now seeks to hide by irrelevant, bitter, and mendacious personal abuse. Those of its readers who see THE INDEX will not be deceived by all this; those who do not see it are beyond the reach of any reply in these columns. But public interests of a high order require that the position of Colonel Ingersoll with respect to that law should not be misrepresented. His personal reputation is at stake; here in the bud are scandalous stories about him which the clergy in the future will use precisely as they now use equally false stories about Voltaire and Paine, for the purpose of destroying the influence of his ability and courage in attacking old superstitions. We shall do what we can to prevent his being popularly confounded with the apologists and defenders of obscene literature, both out of regard to his personal reputation and even more out of regard for the interests of American Liberalism.

There is a great question to be settled by the liberals of this country, whose importance demands that we should speak promptly, clearly, and unflinchingly, no matter what clamor is raised against us by those who have good cause to dread a right settlement of that question. The necessity of our speaking on this most distasteful subject is all the greater because the duty of helping to create a wise and enlightened public opinion concerning it seems to us sadly neglected by many liberals whose public utterances would have the most weight and are now most urgently needed. No matter who speaks or is silent,—no matter who is pleased or displeased,—no matter who seconds or who opposes our endeavor to put Liberalism in a strong, high, dignified and defensible position before the people of this country,—no matter who may strive to drag it down to such a low level that it shall become a stench in the nostrils of all decent men and women,—our duty is all the same, and shall be discharged.

All that the Church wants in order to seize entire control of political affairs in this country is a chance to convince the vast body of neutral or indifferent persons that Liberalism aims to demoralize the community,—that it either seeks or tends to break down the safeguards of public decency, order, and morality. The moral interests of society, entrenched in the hearts of the great bulk of the population, will crush to powder any man, however distinguished, or any movement, however right in itself, which shall oppose or be generally imagined to oppose the safety of these paramount interests. To permit such a supposition to gain the ascendancy in the public mind is to throw all political power into the hands of the Church; and the Church will use it again as she has always used political power in the past. No community in the world will long permit the exercise of a liberty which is practically abused to its own serious detriment; a great reaction will set in at last, and conservatism will for the time being triumph totally over radicalism. History is full of such defeats, due to the insanity or folly of radicals themselves. The greatest danger of Liberalism to-day is in the low purposes of some of its popular exponents.

Now the great Church party are watching silently, but with keen and intense interest, to see what record the Liberal party are going to make for themselves on this question of the circulation of obscene literature. When the record is fairly made up, its effects will begin to be felt—no doubt about that! If the Liberals, as a body, prove themselves to be sober, self-controlled, able to discriminate between the uses and the abuses of liberty, friendly to the maintenance of all liberty which shall respect equally the rights of individuals and of society at large, and opposed to the selfish schemes of all who would undermine society and violate private rights in liberty's blasphemed name, then their cause is fated to grow and prosper, and the Church will be powerless to prevent it. But if they prove themselves to be capable of being misguided by reckless leaders or duped by designing ones into the position of attacking or impugning society's right to maintain the necessary conditions of its own welfare and existence, then their cause is, at least for the time, irrecoverably lost.

We say without hesitation that Liberalism could have practically no worse enemy than he who, purposely or without purpose, should actually place it before the public in the light of a defender of obscene literature; for he would have done all that is possible to show that Liberalism itself is the enemy of society, and that the Church is indeed what it claims to be, the true conservator of civilization and public morality.

It is for these reasons that the petition with which Colonel Ingersoll's name has been associated assumes importance. If this petition had simply asked that the law of 1873 should be so modified and so strictly guarded as to render it impossible to prosecute free-thought under pretence of prosecuting obscenity, all liberals could and would have heartily joined in the request; for this would be exactly right in itself and could not have been misrepresented by the Church party as an attack on public morality, except on the absurd ground that free-thought is necessarily immoral.

But that is not what the petition asks for. It asks that the law of 1873 may be totally repealed, without in the least recognizing the fact that the law is aimed at a real evil against which society has an indefensible right to protect itself by statute; it only asks for a modification of the law as a secondary object—as an incomplete and unsatisfactory reform, a little better than nothing. It thus represents the liberals as wholly indifferent to the real evil—as totally insensible to the enormity of the crime of attempting to corrupt the minds of the rising generation by filthy literature whose only object is to foster destroying vice.

Now we have sufficient confidence in the good sense and good purposes of the liberals, as a class, to believe that they would, if the issue were not designedly obscured, instantly discern the world-wide difference between these two positions, and instantly choose the only tenable one of the two. It is as absurd as it is false and malevolent to impugn our motives in seeking to make this vitally important difference clearly understood. The utter insincerity of the Truth Seeker's opposition is proved by the extreme care taken by it to keep the difference itself completely out of sight, and to raise all sorts of ridiculous and personal side-issues which have nothing to do with the main question. We refuse to be drawn into any such side-issues. Such tactics may succeed for a time; they will fall ignominiously in the end.

The point we make is that LIBERALISM CANNOT AFFORD TO TAKE UP AN UTTERLY INDEFENSIBLE POSITION,—to identify itself with the vendors of that vile and filthy literature which makes no appeal whatever to the thinking faculties, but only seeks to propagate secret vice for the sake of profit to the publishers. Those who refuse to recognize the chasm that divides freedom of thought from freedom of vice, who busy themselves in throwing dust into the eyes of the public on a question that touches its highest interests, and who insult the intellects of the liberals by assuming that they will not at last discover who are their real friends and who are their real betrayers, may have their day; but it will be short. The attempt to dragoon all liberals into the defence of those who publish obscene literature, and to hold the former responsible for the unspeakable offences of the latter under penalty of being slandered as "champions of Comstock," is folly amounting to suicide, and will produce a reaction of a very vigorous character. The truth will out at last. No self-respecting man will have anything to do with a movement which, through the incompetency of its guides or the secret manipulations of those who may seek to make it a shield for nefarious practices, publicly makes common cause with the vampires of the press. All the real tendencies of Liberalism set in the direction of larger truth and higher morality; no man can reverse them. The right of society to protect itself in all possible ways against all real crimes, including this hideous crime of social fountain-poisoning, is part and parcel of Liberalism; poisoners, their accomplices, and their apologists have neither part nor lot in it. The persistent aim of THE INDEX in this whole matter has been to put and keep the cause of Liberalism on high and noble ground which it can defend to the last, nor will it be deterred from the prosecution of this aim, although misunderstanding, misrepresentation, and calumny should be poured forth by floods. In the long run it will command the approval it deserves. If not, so much the worse for those who do not know enough to approve what is just, true, and right. We have learned how to stand alone in this great cause.

Now it is reason for great satisfaction, on the part of all who appreciate the critical character of this issue between the true and false positions of Liberalism, to know that Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, the most eloquent and conspicuous liberal of the country, and the only one whose public work and influence at all compare with those of such advocates on the other side as Dwight L. Moody, has unequivocally declared himself in favor of the modification, and against the repeal, of the law of 1873. He sees clearly that whoever demands the unconditional repeal of that law, without at the same time demanding with equal energy the enactment of such a law as shall suppress really obscene literature and yet not interfere in the slightest with literature of any other class, puts himself before the public, in spite of himself, in the attitude of one who really favors obscene literature. He may not intend to do so, but he does so. His intentions count for nothing; his act speaks for itself. No doubt, the vast majority of those who signed the petition for the repeal of the law were quite unconscious that this was the logical meaning of their act—the meaning which the public will surely see in it.

The man who shoots at a burglar in the dark, and kills his own child, cannot change the effect of his shot by disavowing the intention of killing him; neither can those who signed that petition change the effect of their act. The only thing they can do is to disavow any bad intention of the act, as done under a misapprehension. We have raised no question of their intentions, as the Truth Seeker calumniously pretends; we question the motives neither of writers nor of signers. But we persist in pointing out the character of the petition itself, as a terrible and fatal blunder for the liberal cause; for the act of demanding the unconditional repeal of the law of 1873 must and will, in spite of all protests and explanations, put the signers in the attitude of seeking to protect really obscene literature. It will be fortunate for all who would be aghast at the thought of taking this public attitude to bring themselves speedily, however reluctantly, to look at their position in the stern light of truth.

Now the letter of Colonel Ingersoll to the Boston Journal, which we republished a fortnight ago (and which the Truth Seeker did not, does not, and will not dare to print), showed conclusively the ground he takes on this subject. It is the same ground taken by THE INDEX—for modification, but against repeal.

The fact has been trumpeted all over the country that Colonel Ingersoll headed the petition for the repeal of the law; and in our article of May 16, defending him from the charge of favoring the publication of obscene literature because he had done so, we quoted his letter to the Journal in order to show the position he really takes. Without saying one word about this letter, the Truth Seeker tries to convince its readers, contrary to the truth, that Colonel Ingersoll really favors the repeal of that law! It says:—

"Mr. Abbot makes a pitiful exhibit of himself by endeavoring to show that Colonel Ingersoll is so weak or careless, or so much of a fool, as not to know what kind of paper he is signing. In so many words, he says: 'Colonel Ingersoll was quite ignorant of what he was doing when he signed or presented that petition.' And, again: 'Let it be distinctly and universally understood that Colonel Ingersoll was ignorant of the real character of the petition he signed—that he is avowedly and publicly opposed to the main object it seeks,—and that it is a gross libel on his good name to quote him as intentionally in favor of the repeal of the law of 1873.' Is it possible that Colonel Ingersoll is so much of a ninny as that, and that nobody has been able to discover the fact but the editor of THE INDEX? It strikes us that the discoverer of the ninnyism is by far the greater ninny of the two."

And this was all written by the editor of the Truth Seeker with the evident intent to persuade his readers that Colonel Ingersoll is really in favor of the repeal of the law, while at that very time a letter lay before his eyes in which Colonel Ingersoll himself says: "No one wishes the repeal of any law for the suppression of obscene literature. For my part, I wish all such laws rigidly enforced!" Not one word of that letter is quoted; not the least reference is made to it; not a hint is given that any such letter exists. That is a specimen of the honesty with which the Truth Seeker treats THE INDEX and discusses this whole subject.

Now this and far worse treatment of THE INDEX it has continued for months; and we leave it to cure its own slanderous effects by its own grossness. But it is of no little consequence that the liberal public should understand that Robert G. Ingersoll is not such a "ninny" as to try to defend the utterly indefensible position taken in that petition. Instead of being offended or displeased with our attempt to drive away the Orthodox harpies which were greedily settling upon his reputation in consequence of his reported connection with that petition, he at once sent us this genial little note, which we do not think he will at all object to our using in this connection:—

[BOSTON,] May 18, '78.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.:

My Dear Friend,—Thank you for your splendid article in this week's issue in my defence.

I will be here at the Parker House, Sunday morning, at 10. I want to see you. Leave word where I can see you, or come and see me.

Yours truly, R. G. INGERSOLL.

This kind invitation we accepted, and spent a couple of hours most pleasantly and enjoyably with him and some other callers. He voluntarily explained his connection with the petition, saying that he had never read, or seen, or signed it! He was requested by certain parties, not mentioned by name, to help them "modify" [that was the word used by Colonel Ingersoll] the law of 1873, and that he cheerfully consented; and he added, with chivalrous generosity, that he had no idea of "going back" on the parties who put his name to the petition, which very likely he might have signed at the time if it had been presented. He evidently wished to avoid casting any reproach on those who had thus used his name, and we certainly intend to cast none; but the fact remains that Colonel Ingersoll had never seen or read the petition down to May 19, nor personally affixed his name to it at all. This fact honorably and abundantly explains why his letter to the Boston Journal, which expresses his deliberate opinion on this subject, does not agree with the petition itself. Instead of being a "ninny," or worse, he is a clear-headed, right-minded man, who means to stand by the great principle of "universal mental liberty" to the uttermost, and is not so confused as to imagine he cannot do this without advocating the universal liberty of nastiness. In this respect, all liberals of like character will sooner or later take their place by his side. We repeat that it is a libel on Colonel Ingersoll's good name to say that he is intentionally in favor of the total repeal of the law against obscene literature, which he yet hopes so to "modify" as to make it impossible to use it for the persecution of freethinkers. And to this we heartily say amen, rejoicing that Robert G. Ingersoll knows how to defend to the uttermost "liberty for man, woman, and child," yet without in the least allying himself with the vendors of obscenity, the vampires of the press.

A NEEDED TRACT.

In THE INDEX of April 25, there are two valuable papers which the National Liberal League ought to put into cheap pamphlet form for extensive distribution. I refer to Madison's "Protest against State Christianity" and Jefferson's "Religious Freedom Act." The American people need to be educated on this matter of religious freedom, in the views of the fathers of our republic. Of course all people who are well acquainted with the early history of our country, and with the opinions of the leading men of the epoch, know very well, not only that the government of the United States was founded on the broadest principles with respect to religious liberty, but that this was the direct result of the large and free views concerning religion which were held by those who had most to do with the framing and adoption of the federal Constitution. But great numbers of United States citizens are very ignorant on this point, and need enlightenment. From the fact that our country was largely settled by religious emigrants, and from the further fact that the Christian religion has had here a special success and prosperity, not a few people among us assume that the government was framed so as to give direct and express encouragement to Christianity, and are surprised to learn that the federal Constitution is strictly secular, and that the government was intended to favor the Christian religion no more than any other. For such persons, these papers by Madison and Jefferson would have great value.

Madison's paper is especially weighty, both from its nature and the cautious, judicial character of the man. It was written expressly to oppose a bill in the Virginia Legislature "for establishing a provision for teachers of the Christian religion." And without any circumlocution, he takes the ground that, so far as the government is concerned, Christianity is only one of a number of sects, all equal before the law. He says: "Who does not see that the same authority which can establish Christianity in exclusion of all other sects,—that the same authority which can force a citizen to contribute three-pence only of his property for the support of any one establishment, may force him to conform to any other establishment, in all cases whatsoever?"

The truth is that those who are working for the amendment of the federal Constitution so as to make it distinctly recognize the supremacy of the Christian religion are, in this matter, the innovators, not only in letter but in spirit and argument. For once, the liberals who oppose this "Amendment" are the conservatives. They stand by the old landmarks of the republic, and have the "authorities" on their side. And for this reason it would be well to print and circulate as far as possible these opinions of the fathers, who are lifted above the partisan questions of our own time: not, however, for authority's sake, but for exhibiting the solid reasons which they themselves gave—reasons having their source in truth and justice,—for the broad foundations on which they built the government.

—W. J. F.

[The work of publishing in cheap form the literature of the State Secularization movement is exceedingly important, and belongs especially to the National Liberal League. Obligated, however, to make provision beforehand for the expenses of the Annual Congress and other indispensable means of promoting the organization of Local Leagues, the Directors have not as yet been able to publish all that is desirable. The advertisement on our last page shows that there are three publications already for sale which are very valuable for active workers in the movement. Just as soon as the generosity of the public permits, a series of Liberal League Documents will be initiated, embracing Madison's "Protest against State Christianity," Jefferson's "Religious Freedom Act," Col. Johnson's "Sunday Mail Report," Gen. Walker's "Bible in Schools" letter, Hon. Ellsbur Wright's "Republican Taxation," Mr. Potter's "Christianity and Modern Civilization," and other such papers. Will not the funds be furnished?—ED.]

"TWO SETS OF PRECEDENTS."

In connection with the foregoing article, it will be interesting to read the following extract from the Philadelphia Christian Statesman of April 25, and particularly the remarks of Rev. Mr. Stevenson, its editor:—

Is this a Christian Government?

The New York Pastors' Association, embracing pastors of the Presbyterian, United and Reformed Presbyterian, and Reformed churches, discussed on last Monday morning the question, "Is this a Christian Government?"

The Rev. Mr. Smith, chaplain of Randall's Island, opened the discussion, calling attention to the Tripartite Treaty which affirmed that "the government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion, and has in itself no character of enmity to the laws of religion of Mussulmans." He read also the "Demands of Liberalism," to illustrate the forces which are working to rob our government of all Christian character, and of the blessings connected with it.

The Rev. T. P. Stevenson, of Philadelphia, being present, and being invited to address the meeting, pointed out briefly the falsity and danger inherent in the secular theory of government. With reference to the American government, it was shown that two opposing forces have been at work in our national life, and two sets of precedents have been established. It is still an open question which of these shall finally become predominant. On the one hand, there is a very precious and important body of facts which arise from the presence and influence of Christianity in our civil affairs. The preponderance of Christian elements in our population, the unmistakably Christian character of the earliest civil governments in America, the existing Christian features of the government, such as prayers in legislative assemblies, the Bible in the schools, etc., were referred to. On the other hand, the avowed and implacable hostility of a vast mass of our citizens to national Christianity, the fact that Christian men, ignoring the moral and religious aspects of public questions, are divided on other issues, the manifest absence of a national purpose to obey God and honor his Son, Jesus Christ, the election in great numbers of avowedly irreligious and openly immoral men to civil office, the absence of any provisions in favor of national Christianity from the nation's fundamental law, and the evident drift of the government and the nation away from the principles and usages of our fathers, were referred to as painful and significant facts, which forbid an unqualified affirmative answer to the question. The Christian features of the government before enumerated were seen to be largely of an external character, while these indications of an unchristian national spirit are connected with the innermost life and being of the nation. The influence of a Constitution, silent where it ought to have spoken, was briefly shown, and the necessity for its amendment.

Arrangements were made for the further discussion of the subject at a future meeting.

We believe that the existence of a great unsettled issue between the two forces here pertinently pointed out, with their "two sets of precedents," cannot be too soon recognized or too thoughtfully pondered. The National Liberal League ought to be supported with enthusiasm, with generosity, with combined individual energies, and with the powerful co-operation of hundreds and thousands of Local Auxiliary Leagues, as the great educator of the American people in the most important principle of their national life—the Total Separation of Church and State. This principle is the practical application of Free Religion to politics; and the United States Constitution, which is the political Bible of Free Religion, shows that the national government was founded on the principle which underlies our "set of precedents," not that of the Christian Statesman. But who is unable to discern here a new "irrepressible conflict" whose final issue is still hidden behind the impenetrable veil of the future? Now is the time to work, not to indulge in pleasing dreams; and work means—the National Liberal League.

Communications.

THE MONGOLIAN PROBLEM.

The Mongolian problem is again upon the tapis. This question has been sometimes treated in THE INDEX as though it were mainly a religious question. In justice to the unjust, and to give the devil his due, it is not a religious, but a social question. When the Celestial sails to our shores, verily he comes to eat up the land,—not to settle nor to trade. He brings his very food and raiment with him, but he brings no women. In America he has no domestic life. He simply grubs together what he can, and then departs. If he dies, he will not even leave his carcass to manure our soil. That, too, goes back to the land of the rising sun. I said, he brings no women. He does not, but yet women come—all immoral, and all diseased. When President Lincoln was down with fever and ague he said, in his dry way,—"Tell all the office-hunters to come and see me: I've got something now that I can give to all of them!" Well, the Chinese women are similarly rich, and many a boy of Frisco has got a handsome present from them. When venereal disease was first imported into Europe from the islands off South America by the comrades of Columbus, the holy father took it. Decidedly he was spotless of course. 'Twas in the air. That was the explanation. Well, 'tis in the air of San Francisco just at present; and the sooner it gets out of it the better. Surely the Californian proletariat is not wrong in saying that in all these doings of the Chinese there is no element of healthy citizenship.

Both by temperament and on principle a conservative, and, above all, averse to violence on the double ground of its cost and its impotency, an incendiary programme is surely not attractive to my eye; but yet some two or three clauses of the new proletarian platform quoted in Mr. Maverick's letter to the New York Tribune do strike me as more just than will be commonly allowed,—especially the objection to Chinese labor, and the insistence on the legal working day. I am well aware that absolute principles and abstract rights are upon both these issues upon the side of capital, but I have no faith in either one or the other. On the contrary, I know (if I know anything) that they must fly like chaff before the wind whenever the necessity arises. Salus Reipublice est suprema lex. Whoever will fix the foundations of the earth so that they shall not be moved, let this man adopt rigid principles; but they are not for such modest people as are obliged to bend to circumstance. The plea for the Mongolian is, that he can do more work on a given quantum of meat than the Caucasian. Suppose so. Why, at this rate, the horse or mule is a vastly worthier creature than any sort of man! The objection to the Mongolian is this. The land is too full; and, this being so, it is not endurable that the worse should be suffered to crowd out the better. That America will maintain many millions more inhabitants when its resources are developed is what no one doubts; but that requires time.

In regard to the remuneration of labor, Mill favors piece-work, because it proportions pay to industry. Of course it does this, but it has another effect as well. It enables the superior to crowd out the inferior. What every one seems in equity entitled to is an average share of the raw material of production, or else an equivalent therefor; and a fixed short day, although a clumsy and inadequate expedient, has yet more tendency to secure this than either piece-work or nonregulated hours. On every account employers will always study to reduce the number of their employees to the lowest point; but the more they succeed in this the more hands must be left out in the cold. It is not the same thing to the community that A works fourteen hours (as he will if you will let him) and B turns tramp or thief, as that A and B work seven hours apiece. That we should bear each others' burdens is the injunction of Saint Paul, but not to press so much; at least the strong ought not to deprive the weak of the very means of living by depriving them of the very means of laboring, yet that must always be the effect of competition.

For nearly three-quarters of a century, say from 1778, the year of Voltaire's death, till 1851, the date of the most infamous event in history, Napoleon's coup d'état, the tranquillity of European society was disturbed or threatened by a number of visionaries and projectors,—Godwin, Mary Wollstonecraft, Condorcet, St. Just, Babeuf, St. Simon, Fourier, Proudhon, Louis Blanc, who proposed to inaugurate utopia immediately. Every one nowadays understands the futility of such inordinate ambitions. But since then there hath arisen a school of theorists, with

H. Spencer at their head, whose doctrine is, that society is a growth, and, apparently, that all we have got to do is to put our hands in our breeches pockets and grow; and I was quite sorry to hear Mr. Frothingham preaching this gospel of imbecility in the Masonic Hall last Sunday. Certainly society is in some sense a growth, and true it is that we can only effectuate so much and no more; but yet each step in human progress hath been won by the efforts of energetic men; and if we trust in either Providence or Nature, or for any reason neglect the moral of that wise saw that God helps those who help themselves, we shall be unworthy of our fathers. Mr. Frothingham thinks that the cry of the workmen is for fancy cakes rather than for bread. If fancy cakes means the elegancies of life, I know not why the workmen should not cry for them and get them too, or get them without crying. If the number of mankind were judiciously limited, and if labor were equitably distributed, and superfluous labor avoided, and, perhaps, mere emasculating luxuries dispensed with, every civilized man should be able to enjoy culture, wealth, and leisure. But there is neither prospect nor possibility of our attaining this blessed condition by means of sudden violence.

One more word in conclusion. What makes a man a dangerous citizen is the combination of an empty stomach and an empty head. As a guardian of order, the schoolmaster is both cheaper and more effective, besides being many times more ornamental, than the policeman. CHARLES ELLERSHAW.
NEW YORK CITY.

EXTRACTS AND COMMENTS.

DEAR INDEX:—

A late number of the Christian Register contains the following among its "Brevities":—

"A correspondent of the Commonwealth says, 'There is not a particle of difference in theological belief between Ingersoll and the radical of culture and refinement, only each has a different way of stating his belief.' As if Ingersoll were the apostle of some sort of 'belief'! If the radical of culture and refinement doesn't believe anything, what occasion has he to say anything?"

I am no apologist for the iconoclastic method and spirit of Colonel Ingersoll. He is certainly a "Negationist" in the sense of being one who lays excessive stress and emphasis upon what he does not believe. He surely lives more in the dense atmosphere of denial and disbelief than in the clear air of the "everlasting yea." But, after all, the above-quoted criticism is so severely unjust as to call for vigorous and earnest protest, although the noble and large-hearted editor of the Register no doubt intended no injustice. It is most certainly not true that Ingersoll does not believe anything, or is not the apostle of any sort of belief whatever. He has repeatedly affirmed his belief in (1) intellectual freedom and (2) character,—to mention no other items. Do those things count for nothing at all? What grander or broader affirmations does the Christian Register believe in than freedom and character? Is it honorable or religious to sling carelessly around such large and loose assertions in regard to that honest and upright man, whatever his "persuasion," with whose opinion and methods of working ours do not agree? Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto Ingersoll the things that are Ingersoll's. Unto every man his due.

Turn about. Colonel Ingersoll has recently said: "I have no respect for any human being who teaches the infamous dogma of hell. I have no respect for any man who preaches it. I have no respect for any man who will pollute the imagination of childhood with that infamous lie. I have no respect for the man who will add to the sorrows of this world with that frightful dogma. I have no respect for the man who endeavors to put that infinite cloud, that infinite shadow, over the heart of humanity."

Is it not about time that both Free-thinkers and Orthodox learn to distinguish between false doctrines and the people who believe and teach them? For "the infamous dogma of hell," I have no respect whatever; I will assail it in all honorable ways; but for scores and hundreds of sincere people who believe and preach that dogma, I have profound respect. For my part, I have respect for all honest people, whether believers in and teachers of eternal punishment or not. None but hypocrites are outside the proper boundaries of respect.

Our Pamphlet Mission is doing grand work on behalf of freedom and fellowship; but some of us think that it would accomplish broader and grander work if it were to open its doors wide enough to admit to its columns some representative Materialist like B. F. Underwood, and some representative Spiritualist, like G. B. Stebbins. Perhaps nothing better has appeared within its pages than the following words of wisdom from the pen of W. C. Gannett:—

"A new type of man is wanted in religion,—a man wholly free in thought and honest in word, but wholly reverent in feeling and broad in sympathies. He is coming; he is making,—but making as they make costly furniture, in pieces. The freedom and honesty are being made in one shop, the breadth and reverence in another. The Orthodox shop appropriates some of the Heretic shop's freedom, and the Heretic borrows some of the Orthodox shop's reverence; the Methodist shop offers feeling, and the Episcopal shop produces good taste; the Unitarian shop furnishes breadth and common sense, and the Swedenborgian shop its sense of mystic and poetic meanings; the Calvinist contributes his sense of God as moral law, and the Universalist his sense of God as love; and the Radical his trust in reason, his hearty welcome to new thought and his blunt honesty. And thus the type of religious man improves as a hundred years go by. It takes the round generation, and more than one generation, to make the several parts of a costly new man and get him finally put together." Are not these words worthy of our perusal? S. W. SAMPLE.

STRAWBERRY POINT, IOWA.

SHALL LIBERALS BE RETICENT?

EDITOR INDEX:—

It might be conjectured that Mr. Neville's serious apprehension that liberals may too freely obtrude their opinions upon the attention of those who are of another faith, may be rather sentimental and plausible than practically useful. He seems to regard the votaries of religion as very sensitive with respect to it, and accordingly to treat religion as being a delicate subject of discussion, as well as a thing in itself consoling, and desirable, which liberals themselves can well afford to do without, but the enjoyment of which they ought not to grudge to those who are less enlightened. It may be justly claimed that the placing of religion upon its true and rational foundation is one of the very things which liberals as such are intent on. Conscientious zeal put forth for such a purpose ought surely to be executed if not commended. Before religion can be placed upon the right of foundation, the false foundation must be removed, to give place for the right one. Not everything which has been called religion deserves to be named with honor. If the question is asked, "What is religion?" the answer may be made that, in its highest sense, it is an abiding and practical sense of moral responsibility to all embracing law which is eternal and unchangeable. He who has that abiding and practical sense of moral responsibility is religious, whether he be theist or atheist. But even the theist has this virtue of religion in a degree which is inferior just in proportion as the God he worships is supposed, through whimsical favoritism, to let him off from such responsibility. The quality of the God he worships has much to do with that of the religion he entertains. It depends upon the quality of religion, whether it is calculated to make people better or worse.

It may well be doubted whether it is altogether modest to affect to shrink from expression of opinions really entertained on the ground that, the great multitude of mankind are so deficient in moral perception that they are quite incompetent rightly to understand and apply the truth; or so unjust and wilful as to be incapable of welcoming with gratitude the new view of things, which disturbs unreasonable prejudice, or whether such indulgence is any more reasonable than it is modest, when it is considered that people are not hurt by what they are not competent to appreciate and will not receive.

It is not at all to the purpose to say that, because they derive consolation from their religion, they ought to be left in the dark in it, any more than that the man who finds (or imagines he finds) delight in the excitement of strong drink should be encouraged in making excessive, and therefore bad use of whiskey. Here the question arises, whether they are any the better for the consolation. The godly people who cruelly persecuted one another for slight differences of opinion, in imitation of their grim God dealing with sinners so-called, were none the better for the ill-founded assurance which could give to the detestable invasion of another's right, a softer or more specious name. The malefactor, when about to receive the punishment denounced upon his crime, is none the better for entertaining and expressing triumphant joy in the prospect of rising from the scaffold to the arms of Jesus; and that perhaps without compunction of conscience for the wrong he has done, or any solicitude ever entertained as to the possibility of partial separation. Yet such behavior is not to be wondered at; for he who is mean enough deliberately to rob a fellow-man of life would in most cases be short-sighted enough to accept a theory of salvation so contemptible. If people are the worse instead of being the better for the consolation which comes of their religion, then their religion is demoralizing; and the sooner they throw it off for a salutary philosophy that shall reach beyond it, the better.

A thing to be desired is a religion which shall set forth and encourage love of virtue for its own sake, rather than a system of bugabooism like that by which injudicious nurses are wont to frighten unruly children into quietness and obedience,—a sorry artifice, which takes advantage of ignorance, and stifles conscience. The virtue which inspires existence must spring from normal action of the human faculties, not from vain and gloomy dreams of distorted imagination. These can only perpetuate the ignorance and the barbarism which gave them birth. Let those who are so inclined maintain institutions devoted to such things; but if municipal corporations had souls as well as bodies, our individual States might disgrace themselves by legislative aid and favor given at other people's expense.

It is as easy to neglect the active duties of the hour as it is to censure zeal not looked upon by all alike as temperate. There is not wanting ample occasion for well-directed activity. The agitation which is salutary is not likely to be in sweet accord with mischievous prejudice. Although the despotism of superstition, forced to yield somewhat to the march of improvement, has lost its ferocity, its arrogant and shameless spirit of pretension still subsists.

Forbearance in the way of argument is ungracious where sublimed charity is in hardest blows. The peace and harmony which are most desirable are not to be secured by extreme caution habitually exercised as to the temper in which truth when pre-claimed is likely to be received; nor is that the way to do honor to those who differ from us. Honestly to state real convictions, and energetically to remonstrate against injustice, can give offence only to those who imagine they have an interest in maintaining that which in theory is erroneous, or which in purpose is wicked, and will not bear the light. Therefore to give credit for excessive tenderness in these respects is indirectly to impute dishonesty.

While liberals in the interest of republican liberty remonstrate against the wrong which clothes itself with the form of law, let them not forget that the padlock which dogmatic theology fixes on the mind of man obstructs the development of virtue, and is quite incompatible with religion in its highest form.

C. C.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., April 4, 1878.

THE THIRD LEAGUE OF NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, May 18, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

The second meeting of the Third New York Auxiliary Liberal League took place Wednesday evening, the 15th instant, at the Harvard rooms, 42d Street and 6th Avenue. Our temporary Secretary, Mr. E. B. Foote, Jr., had taken special pains to interest known liberals for this meeting. Few, however, appeared, and the small, cosy hall was not quite filled. A compensation for the lack of numbers was received by the quality, earnestness, and cheerfulness of those present.

Mr. O. B. Frothingham's genial presence gave a great charm to our proceedings, and cheered those who attended. One liberal movement helps to carry on another, and tends to the fulfilment of those ideas which are so ably represented by our liberal preachers (or teachers, as we should call them) in our city. We are much indebted to Mr. Frothingham, and hope that other liberal teachers will give us their support in the future.

After Mr. A. Tanzer had kindly taken the chair, Mr. E. B. Foote, Jr., gave his view as to the direction and manner in which our organization might do its work most effectively, so as to gain the ear of those who are not yet acquainted with the League movement. His remarks were precise, to the point, and met with much approval.

Mr. Frothingham then gave a short explanation of the movement, and pointed out that it must gain, if rightly understood, the indorsement and support of a great number of Orthodox people who hold to the principle of separation between Church and State as earnestly as the radicals do. To arouse these people, to educate and instruct them upon these matters, was the important thing to do. The Demands of the National Liberal League derive their character from, and are founded on, the Constitution of our country. And though radicals have to take the initiative steps, the Orthodox and conservative will soon learn that it is a question of theirs, as well as of the liberals.

Mr. Cortlandt Palmer, a thorough gentleman, a warm friend and supporter of liberal movements, devoted to humanitarian principles, was then installed as President. His remarks when taking the chair were genial, hopeful, and convinced the members that they had chosen well, and that the Third New York Auxiliary Liberal League had every cause to look hopefully towards the future. Our officers and meet of the members will enter into this movement with a spirit worthy of such a noble and high object. May our bright hopes be realized.

Yours truly, OLARA NEYMANN.

THE LIBERAL LEAGUE CAUSE IN TEXAS.

A WORD TO EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE-MEN.

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is very evident that the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League made a good selection when they appointed Dr. L. J. Russell to represent the State of Texas on the Executive Committee. Please publish the following letter from the Doctor:—

HARRISVILLE, Bell Co., Texas, May 14, 1878.

MR. H. L. GREEN:

Dear Sir,—I have placed the names of John H. Copeland, San Antonio (editor of the Evening Courier), and Dr. C. R. Nutt, Houston, on my committee, and have written to friends in Northern Texas for two other names. I wish to have my committee from different sections of the State, to enable us better to arrange and execute our work. As soon as we are fully organized, I want to call a convention of the Liberals of the State at some convenient point, and go to work, each and all of us, in dead earnest.

Mr. Copeland is a young man of superior intelligence, and an active, energetic worker. Dr. Nutt is an old and tried veteran in the cause, and, with two such others as I hope to get, we need have no fear of failure.

I find the whole country full of Liberals, especially our larger cities; and I am going to do my utmost to have leagues organized in Austin, Waco, Galveston, Sherman, and other places. What we most need at present in Texas is a good home Liberal newspaper. The Denison News is the nearest a Liberal paper of any we have in Texas, since Common Sense was burned out.

At the next meeting of our association, I will take steps to procure a charter from the National Liberal League.

Fraternally, L. J. RUSSELL.

There are a few States where the Executive Committee-man is doing apparently nothing for the league movement. Probably, in these exceptional cases, it is from want of sympathy with the movement, or the preoccupation of the committee-man; but it is so necessary that each member of the Committee be a devoted, earnest worker, that I must respectfully request those who are unable to act to give place to others who will press the movement forward in the way that Dr. Russell and many others are doing.

H. L. GREEN,

Chairman Ex. Com. N. L. L.

THE COMMUNE, COMMUNISM, Etc.

MR. EDITOR:—

Assumption, definition, and proof are supposed to be the factors in a sound logic. Whately says the ambiguity of language is an incurable evil, and therefore leaves us to guess at whatever two writers mean in using the same words, as according to his logic they never mean the same thing.

"A. K. W." on one side, and others in opposition, are or have been discussing communism, the commune, communities cooperative and international associations and social science; in which on the one side they are all represented to be the same, or very nearly the same thing, and on the other side to be very different from each other.

Now as one of the readers of THE INDEX I wish these contending correspondents would each give his definition of the terms commune, communism, and the other terms by which the same thing or something else similar but not just like them are, or seem to be, meant, in order that I and some other readers may understand the writers, and in order that they may understand each other, which they seem hardly to do.

That there is some value in the subject and a good deal of need of reform in the matters upon which they treat, there can be no doubt. I fully agree with your correspondent "F. S. C.," where he says, "Free religion presupposes free man: and to be free in deed as well as in thought, freedom must be secured by a social organization in accordance with the laws of Nature. It seems to me, therefore, that the investigation of social science is peculiarly appropriate to THE INDEX, and fully justifies the publication of thoughtful articles upon the subject."

But "F. S. C." says that Charles Fourier "was not a communist in any of the manifold meanings of that word." I always thought he was, but of course that was because I did not and do not now know what the "manifold meanings of that word" are; and this inquiry is to obtain some light.

When I fully understand a subject, I then know whether to accept or reject it; but the light hitherto reflected from both advocates and antagonists, on this subject in THE INDEX, leaves me in darkness and doubt. Gentlemen, please define. D. S. G.

UPPER GLOUCESTER, Me., May 17, 1878.

CATHOLICISM IN ST. LOUIS.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 14, 1878.

I was recently reading Edward King's article, entitled "Some Notes on Missouri; the Heart of the Republic,"—in the "Great South" series, published in Scribner's Magazine, July, 1874. He speaks as follows of the strength and vitality of Catholicism in the great city of St. Louis:—

"The Catholic population within the archdiocese of St. Louis is certainly very large, probably numbering two hundred thousand persons; and from this population at least twenty-five thousand children are furnished to the one hundred parish schools attached to the various churches in the diocese. None of these schools receive any aid from the common school fund, and the pupils are in every way removed from the influence of secular education, and made a class by themselves. The city public schools are utterly secular in their teaching; but, notwithstanding that fact, the priesthood makes constant and successful efforts to keep Catholic children from them, and wherever a new public school building is erected, Holy Church speedily buys ground, and sets up an institution of her own.

"The Catholics have eight or nine out of the twenty-four members of the school board, and of course have much to say.

"It is estimated that they now own more than four million dollars' worth of church and school property in Missouri; and in their various colleges, convents, seminaries, and academies in St. Louis, and the other large cities of the State, they have at least fifteen hundred students.

"They have kept well abreast of the tide of secular education, and bid it open defiance on all occasions; while the sceptical and easy-going German laughs at their zealotry, and the American closes his eyes to their growing power. Vast as is the growth of colleges and schools of various other denominations, such as the Baptist, the Methodist, and the Methodist-Episcopal Church South, the Catholics keep even with them all.

"Ever since old Gribault, the first pastor in St. Louis, led his little flock of five hundred Frenchmen to the altar, Mother Church has been bold, dominant, defiant, in the young capital of the West."

And this, dear INDEX, recollect, is Catholicism as it exists in our most liberal, sceptical city.

Yours respectfully,
CHARLES M. CUTLER.

A WORD FOR "DIGNITY."

LESLIE, Mich., May 4, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—I see in your issue of May 2, 1878, a communication from H. Clay Neville in regard to the "Need of Dignity in the Advocacy of Liberalism." Now I am fully aware that there are many papers that indulge too much in making absurd attacks on Orthodoxy, and in trying to show it up in its worst light. I think this shows a lack of the presence of a great amount of natural religion, which all must possess to be pure and right. I have been to church frequently, and heard the minister say the infidel plan tore down all hope and offered nothing in its stead, took away all barriers of morality, virtue, and happiness, and left them wholly unprovided for, to fight the tiger as best they could. It occurred to me that a religion which includes nothing but truth, reason, and an observance of the laws of Nature, could successfully satisfy and at last bring man to the harbor in safety. I regret very much that very many disbelievers in Orthodoxy should show such disregard to the true natural religion as they do. The church-members are looking with jealous eyes, and will judge us by our fruits. So it must be that one who has the veil wholly removed from his eyes must see the necessity of living and doing right, knowing that by so doing he will add to his own happiness.

Now I know of many liberals in this section that take delight in making sport of some of the ridiculous ideas in the Bible, and persist in it. For my part I have long ago turned from it, and want to hear nothing more of it, but look for something better.

We must look to ourselves and govern our own passions (which I am sorry so many liberals neglect), before we can justly advocate freethought and religion in its purity. This only (when carried to the height of the true liberal idea) can do away with the necessity of great temperance revivals, prisons, jails. It will close up saloons, gambling halls, and all places of vice, and at last we shall find that we are monarchs of ourselves, and happy.

Respectfully, J. W. BURCHARD.

DAN WINTERS.

It seems blind absurdity to attempt an explanation of human nature on the theory of evolution. The theory utterly fails to even hint the facts with which we are confronted, when we begin to study the moral side of human life. The law of the survival of the fittest might have produced excellent teeth and claws, but it could never have evolved the human heart. What is there in this harsh, selfish struggle for physical mastery in the lower orders of life to suggest any such development as we find in man? What conceivable relation is there between those spiritual wonders that ennoble humanity, and the cold, brutal selfishness that must have necessarily characterized life, had no law but the survival of the stronger operated in the evolution of our race?

To apply this theory of the origin of man, and make it seem for a moment plausible, we must shut our eyes against the perception of every trait of character that renders human nature so peculiarly noble and lovely. Whence all this richness of moral grandeur, this undying devotion to the good, this self-sacrificing generosity, if man has been evolved from unconscious life-germs by a cold, blind law of material struggle, with no soul for its origin or goal? Whence this noble protest against the right of might, if this selfish conflict called the "struggle of existence" is man's Creator?

This theory of man's origin is becoming popular on account of the materialistic tendency of modern thought, and is fast supplanting the old ideas derived from traditional superstition; but it must forever be rejected by those who discern the spiritual mysteries of human life; for these it can no more explain than matter can comprehend mind. We may not be able to give any reasonable solution of the problem of life; we may be forced to discard the theological doctrine of creation; but still, in the presence of the mysteries that encompass us, many of us must wait in silent wonder for some better philosophy than the theory of evolution, as it has so far been explained.

I had intended to say something of the moral effect of the acceptance of this theory of life, but must defer this till some future time.

OZARK, Mo.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

"STOP WORKING AND BELIEVE."

EDITOR INDEX:—

Next to the doctrine taught by the churches that a life of wickedness may be cancelled by an instantaneous act of "repentance and faith," that which denies to men any goodness, or any power of elevating themselves without this faith in Jesus, seems to me most unnatural and unhealthy.

Here is a passage taken verbatim from a sermon of Dr. Talmage, preached two or three years since, and repeated within a few months. It deserves credit for the frankness with which these doctrines are presented, if for no other virtue:—

"There are men in this house who have tried for ten years to become Christians. They believe all I say in regard to a future world and of religion. With it, heaven; without it, hell! They do everything but trust in Christ. They make sixty strokes a minute; they bend forward with all earnestness; they lie back till the muscles are distended; yet they have not made an inch in ten years toward heaven. That is not the way to go to work. You are lost, as sure as you sit there, if you depend on yourself. The wind is against you. The tide is against you. Not so helpless a traveller girded by twenty miles of prairie on fire! But, glory to God, the very moment you believe, I will proclaim pardon,—quick, full, grand, infinite. You are as safe as if you had been lying in heaven twenty years. Though your sin be black, be inexcusable, be outrageous, only stop working and believe, and you are as safe as the highest archangel in the court of heaven."

Can anything be better fitted to confuse the moral sense and debilitate the moral nature, than such teaching as this?

HELEN B. BOSTWICK.
PHILADELPHIA.

A WELL-KNOWN Oxford man, head-master of a prosperous grammar-school, was once detected by an old pupil skating on a Sunday afternoon. "I think, doctor," was the not unnatural observation, "you once flogged me for boating on a Sunday." "Yes, my dear boy," was the reply; "and I did quite right. If a man really likes boating, one day to him is the same as another. Skating is entirely different. It may freeze hard on the Saturday night, and then thaw again before daybreak on Monday morning."

GIRLS—3 nice perforated mottoes for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TAUN & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE.

Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address O. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S

LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doeringer & Co., 56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,

55 BEEKMAN STREET,

NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Boden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-

CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from London. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Talmage, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir David Wedderburn, G. H. Lewes,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROBE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to getter up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE

INDEX for

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $5.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG

LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-

TION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,

PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLANNON, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM I

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-

TION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BELIEF AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 30, 1875.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 60 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FAITHFULNESS AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

WASHINGTON ILLUS-

TRATED.

The subscriber is prepared to engage for the next lecture season (or for the summer, at the places of popular resort), for the delivery of his lectures on "Washington and its Institutions." These lectures are brilliantly illustrated by a very large number of Stereoscopic Views of public buildings, works of art, etc. They have won enthusiastic encomiums from their audiences and the press. For circulars, giving full information, address Rev. FREDERIC MINCKLEY, Dorchester Station, Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. ABBOT, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NON-JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 6, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 441.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution; including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD, will lecture at Jacksonville, Ill., June 7, 8, and 9.

THE ATTEMPTED assassination of the Emperor of Germany by Hödel is said to have given a serious check to Socialism in that country. Violence would do the same thing here. To attempt revolution by force in a country where the people have all power is not only a crime, but a blunder.

THE Directors of the American College and Education Society, on April 10, appointed a committee to inform their beneficiaries that this society will pay none of their funds to any young student who has "adopted" or is "inclined to adopt" any opinions inconsistent with belief in the "old" doctrines of the "atonement, endless future punishment," etc. Consistent, if not liberal.

THE ACTIVITY of Orthodoxy in propagating itself ought to set intelligent liberals at work with their brains first, and with their purses and hands next. This is what the Sunday School Union reported as its work for the year ending April 1: New schools organized, one thousand one hundred and thirty-eight, with five thousand two hundred and twenty-seven teachers and forty-one thousand seven hundred and seven scholars; schools visited and aided, three thousand one hundred and eight, having fifteen thousand two hundred and seventy-five teachers and one hundred and forty-one thousand two hundred and twenty scholars; Bibles distributed; two thousand five hundred and seventy-one; Testaments, six thousand two hundred and eleven; families visited, thirteen thousand; sermons and addresses delivered, four thousand seven hundred and ninety-seven.

ACCORDING to the New York Tribune, there is a Socialist society in Syracuse which is composed almost entirely of members of Trades-Unions. It was formed a year ago by an agent who acted under instructions "from the headquarters of the national order." The members are mainly Germans and Frenchmen. The presiding officer is Anton Amon, a carpenter. He states that the organization is opposed to monopolies and capitalists; and its fundamental principle is this: The laboring man is justified in resorting to any lawful extremity to obtain his rights from corporations, monopolies, and employers generally. When asked if there is any prospect of a general railroad strike this summer, he admits that he has received advices which lead him to expect such a demonstration late in June. If a strike occurs, the members of his society will be in duty bound, he says, to extend to the insurgents against capital all the aid in their power.

"INEXORABLY JUST"! This is the London World's idea of "inexorable justice": "The late Lord Leitrim was a man of strong likes and dislikes, and one of his chief antipathies was a horror of goats. An old woman, one of his tenants, had a favorite goat, which he espied one day and made her bring up to him by the side of the road. Without a word of warning he took out his knife and cut its throat. The woman, as far as she dared, reproached him with his ruthless act, whereupon he gave her a £20 note, saying, 'Take this to buy a cow with.' It was characteristic of the man; hard, unyielding, easily moved to anger, but as swift to make amends, and always inexorably just." As if the insolent tyrant had a particle of right to slaughter the goat, or as if capricious charity could atone for infamous cruelty and injustice! If the assassins of Lord Leitrim had only hastened to send £20 to his heirs, would the World have applauded them as "inexorably just"?

THIS is the year 1878, yet the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle published this dispatch from Indianapolis, dated March 8: "A startling event that occurred on Wednesday night last, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Leiter's Ford, is regarded by many people in Indiana as a direct interposition of Divine Providence for the punishment of the scoffer. A revival had been in progress in the church for two weeks. Elias Bidingier, a married man about twenty-five years of age, and Robert King had been disturbing the meeting by making sport of those who led the services. On Wednesday night about seventy-five persons were present. During the exercises Bidingier and King began to create a disturbance. Mr. Jones, the minister, went to expostulate with them, laid his hand upon Bidingier's shoulder and urged him to change his way of life. Bidingier replied with an oath that he would never change his ways. A few moments afterward, while Michael Shadle, a member of the congregation, was leading in prayer, lightning flashed into the church, extinguished all the lights, killed Bidingier and prostrated King upon the floor. King, as soon as he returned to consciousness, called upon the spectators to pray for him, and declared himself converted. The occurrence resulted in swelling greatly the ranks of sinners seeking salvation in that church."

REV. HENRY GERSONI, D.D., a well-known Jewish rabbi whom we had the pleasure of meeting at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, recently published in the American Israelite this paragraph, which ought to send a blush to the cheeks of the Chicago city government: "The old synagogues of great European cities, with their barred windows and citadel form of structure, are always of unpleasant recollection for me. I hate to be reminded of our old historical troubles, of the prejudices of the Christians, the mobbing of synagogues, the massacres. But the other day I was forcibly reminded of the same by a standing remembrance in the city of Chicago. I have seen a beautiful Jewish temple, erected in one of the most fashionable thoroughfares, every window and pane of glass of which was protected by wire grating. I inquired into the cause of this precaution, and was informed that a set of loose fellows living in the neighborhood of that shrine had made it a practice to break the windows, to spoil the pavement, and fling stones into the temple every time the congregation was at devotion. The congregation had applied to the police and even to the mayor of the city, but all to no purpose. They had spent several hundred dollars in repairing the windows, but the stones came flying, and again destroyed them. At last the bars had to be resorted to. Now such a barred synagogue in the centre of a large city in this country is indeed a standing contradiction to your vaunted enlightenment, liberality, and 'Christian' civilization. Neither the police with its 'secret service' nor the mayor with all his power could protect a Jewish house of worship against the damages of a handful of 'Christian' loafers. Whether they could not or would not is the question. Such outcroppings of the poisonous old growth is sufficient to destroy all hope and comfort by which the much-praised liberal institutions are apt to rock us into forgetfulness of our origin. The politicians create liberal laws in so far as their ends are served, and the masses throw stones in spite of them. The politicians may yet insert a god or a Christ or an Olympus or a devil in the Constitution before we know anything about it, if their purposes (of acquiring power and stealing money) will be favored by it; and by 'true Christian liberty' to destroy Jewish synagogues, to desecrate Jewish graves, to compel Jews to observe the first instead of the seventh day as the Sabbath, the 'true Christian civilization' will show itself in all its glory. Chicago professes to be the 'Queen City of the West.' Your communities in which the desecration of Jewish graveyards took place are 'respectable' communities; your ruling judges are ruling judges as the spirit of their religious profession teaches them, as the pure Christian blood in their veins prompts them to be."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.	FRANCIS E. ABBOT.	Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT.	Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL.	Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.	St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH.	Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN.	Ireington, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT.	Boston, Mass.
MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.	New York
MR. W. J. POTTER.	New Bedford, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLLOWELL.	Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON.	Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT.	San Francisco, Cal.
MR. ABRAHAM AYNE.	Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. NAVAGE.	Boston, Mass.
HABBI B. FELSETHAL.	Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. B. SPENCER.	Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL.	Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH.	Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN.	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER.	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE.	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. J. M. CONNETT.	Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER.	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD.	Thorndike, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLYER.	Chicago, Ill.
COV. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.	Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN.	Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK.	Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS.	Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON.	New York City
MRS. AMY POST.	Rochester, N. Y.
MISS ELIZABETH CADDY STANTON.	Tenafly, N. Y.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY.	Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.	W. H. HAMLEN.	231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.	MISS JANE P. TITCOMB.	142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.	J. A. J. WILCOX.	8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT.	W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX.	H. L. GREEN.
Executive Committee.

Alabama.	J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.	JOHN AHERNS, Monticello.
California.	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.	DAVID T. BRALL, Granada.
Connecticut.	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.	JOSEPH D. GORR, Greenville.
Florida.	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.	N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.	J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
Kansas.	JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.	S. B. CLARK, Maysville.
Louisiana.	EMERSON SEELYE, New Orleans.
Maine.	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Massachusetts.	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Michigan.	W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Minnesota.	KARL SCHMEMMANS, Detroit.
Missouri.	J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Montana.	R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska.	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada.	W. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.	H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio.	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.	SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.	G. W. BALDWIN, Lewisville.
Rhode Island.	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.	F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas.	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.	E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Dakota.	D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
District of Columbia.	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman.	Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS.	137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE.	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde. Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Pfisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MISHICOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch. Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Fred. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clausen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. O. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. Henson, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright. Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson. Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.

Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie.

Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheppard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunson.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.

Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.

Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.

Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, E. F. Smith, Julius Rotholz, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. O. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.

Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.

Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.

Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. R. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Hansch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, E. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberlander, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.

Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrells, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.] Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sent, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sent, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Frote, Jr.

Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauenstein, M.D., E. Lebon, and others.

OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.

Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.

CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.] Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Reilly, and others.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parze.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed, which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Wisdom a Loving Spirit.

A DISCOURSE.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

One of the most interesting books in the Old Testament is the Book of Wisdom. It is not printed in the editions of the American Bible Society, not being part of the "canon," as it is called, but is found in the Bibles that come from the Oxford press, under sanction of the English Church. The spirit of the book is not pure Jewish, but is Jewish mingled with Greek. It belongs to the period when Greek speculation, which was rife at the city of Alexandria, in Egypt, invaded the dominion of Hebrew faith; for the Jews were numerous in Alexandria, and carried their faith with them wherever they went. They were intellectual, too, and zealous; their system offered material for thought on the greatest problems of life and mind, and tempted endeavors to engraft on it other systems. The writings produced under the inspiration of this combination were philosophical rather than dogmatic, and intellectual rather than sentimental. The moral tone was earnest to enthusiasm; but it was created by elevation of thought, rather than by depth of feeling. In some respects, the doctrines inculcated closely resemble those taught in the name of science in these modern days, only the temper of them is more impassioned. In the book we are considering, the chief word is Wisdom. To wisdom are ascribed all the attributes that are commonly imputed to faith. It is described as "the worker of all things," "an understanding, spirit, holy, simple, manifold, subtle, active, clear, pure, kind to man, steadfast, sure, free from care, omnipotent, omniscient, the breath of the power of God, a pure influence flowing from the glory of the Almighty, the brightness of the everlasting light, the unstained mirror of the power of God, and the image of his goodness. Being but one, she can do all things; remaining in herself, she maketh all things new; and in all ages, entering into holy souls, she makes them friends of God and prophets." "The true beginning of her is the desire for knowledge; and the care of knowledge is love; and love is the keeping of her laws; and the keeping of her laws is the assurance of incorruption; and incorruption bringeth us near to God."

The essence of wisdom is defined as "the fear of the Lord"; in other words, as an awful regard for the established laws of the world. We should describe it in modern speech as regard for the laws of Nature, devout recognition of the conditions of life. Wisdom is what, in our phraseology, might be called an entire obedience to the known constitution of things.

Wisdom, by this definition, is a practical thing, not speculative, though resting, as all practical things must, on a basis of thought. Wisdom is "the knowledge how to live." It is not learning. The man of learning may be a simpleton, so far as the conduct of affairs is concerned. The learned Neander, when his friends, in order to save him the fatigue and exposure of a long walk from his house to his lecture-room found a house in the neighborhood of the university from which a straight, short path led to the college buildings, continued to traverse the long, roundabout way he was used to, not having discovered the advantage of the short cut. Wisdom is not intellectual talent or brilliancy, for these often lead off into eccentric tracks, where the plain high-road of conduct is lost. Wisdom is not genius, or knowledge, or skill in any special art, or familiarity with any particular science. It is simply the insight into practical arrangements which results in conduct. It is "knowledge of the world." All wisdom is knowledge of the world. But knowledge of the world owes its quality and value to the conception of the world whereto the knowledge pertains. The small world implies the small wisdom, the large world the large wisdom. The wisdom that consists in conformity with the ways of the world, as it is commonly understood, is well named "common-sense." The wisdom that consists in conformity with the ways of the world, as it is comprehended by profound and capacious minds, is uncommon-sense. As is the world, such is knowledge of the world; such is wisdom.

We may suppose a narrow, limited, cramped world, a world of daily care and business, with no upward look towards things ideal, with no backward look into the past, with no extensive outlook towards the future; a world of merely private responsibilities and personal relations, with no generous recognition of human duties or of social claims; wherein men are regarded as individuals convenient for purposes of external intercourse in the way of business or entertainment, creatures to be taken advantage of or enjoyed as the case may demand, but not fellow-beings to be aided or blessed or approached in close sympathy; a world in which eating and drinking, dress and amusement, are the chief interests,—God being a phrase in the prayer-book, and immortality an article of the creed; a world wherein existence may be likened to a game of billiards or a turn at skating, the higher aims and purposes of life being not so much repelled as disregarded. Such a conception of the world is by no means uncommon; it is probably the usual conception, it is probably the habitual conception, the working conception of nearly all men; it is only in choice hours that any save the few have a better. The wisdom that meets all its conditions is neither deep nor beautiful. It consists in knowing how to shuffle, deal, and play the cards; in keeping ourselves comfortable while others suffer, happy while others are miserable, full while others are empty, safe while others are ruined; it is a knowledge of the arts and devices, the policies and tricks, by which men succeed, the weaknesses and vices, the vanities and follies, which can be taken advantage of to further one's own schemes. To buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest; to be on good terms with the controllers of public opinion and the patrons of influence; to be cautious and complaisant; to vote on the winning side and belong to the dominant party; to join the fashionable church, profess the popular creed, echo the prevailing opinions of men and things, glide skillfully through the mazes of controversy, giving no offence to either party in the dispute, is a first principle in this philosophy of common-sense. It is wisdom, but wisdom of the serpent kind.

A different conception of the world implies a different kind of wisdom. Let us assume a view of life in accordance with which man is a rational, social, accountable being, with indefinite possibilities of growth in intelligence and character; with wishes, hopes, expectations, thoughts, transcending the hour; with powers of usefulness, capacities for happiness and unhappiness; with sentiments of right and wrong, a sense of duty, feelings of sympathy, notions of obligation, consciousness of will, respect for truth, recognition of virtue, some sort of conviction that existence has a purpose beyond mere enjoyment; a world of mental and moral activity, in short, wherein each is called on to do something for himself and others. Such a conception is not fantastical. Few entertain it all the time, but few are wholly unvisited by glimpses of it. Observing people, intelligent people, in proportion as they are intelligent and observing, confess the reasonableness of it. It is simply the rational view of the world. Assume it, and a new conception of wisdom as the practical conduct of life is at once and almost by instinct formed. According to this theory, wisdom consists in truthfulness, sincerity, earnestness, and generosity. The noble conduct is the sensible; the best life is the most prudent; sympathy is a wholesome self-love; humanity a sure guarantee of joy. Into such wisdom, faith, hope, and charity enter as component elements; an honest confidence in the moral constitution of the social world, and an honest reliance on the moral forces of human nature; trust in the better feelings of the heart, the worthier promptings of the conscience, the intuitions of the unsophisticated mind; a disposition to take men and women at their best; belief that from the nature of things knowledge must be more profitable than ignorance, truth more enriching than error, honesty more remunerative than knavery, sincerity more binding than insincerity, honor more ingratiating than dishonor. The practical infidelity of the voluptuary, the hypocrite, the flatterer, the indolent self-seeker, will be repudiated as matter of course. The wise man after this type will look beyond to-day to to-morrow, will be sure that after to-morrow will come many days, that clouds will clear away, obstacles disappear, crooked things become straight; that the wise way will prove the safe way, that the foolish way will lead to confusion. He will count on long reaches of time, and will plant for generations of men. He will be cordial, kind, considerate, patient, self-forgetting, making allowance for human infirmities, and bearing with human follies. He will pity human defects, correct human errors, pardon human sins, having in view rather some great good to be achieved than some small profit to be gained.

This is wisdom,—neither more nor less than a careful regard for the practical workings of experience. The aim of it is to satisfy the conditions of personal and social well-being. So long as this is held in view and made paramount, there need be no fear of unhealthy enthusiasm or fanaticism. The spirit of speculation is kept constantly in the distance; no more "views" are allowed to dim the vision or hamper the will. The conduct of life is all in all.

Such is wisdom; a thing that supposes no theory of the universe, no theology, no philosophy of any school; it simply subordinates theory to practice, and holds men steadily to concrete aims. The higher wisdom that has been described is that commended in the book I have been speaking of. This is the wisdom that is called a loving spirit. It is the aim of what we called science to throw light on the working laws of the world. It is knowledge as distinct from sentiment or conjecture. Its purpose is to teach men how to live. Physical science concerns itself with the forces and combinations of forces by which living beings are produced. Sanitary science is concerned with the material laws and conditions of life by conformity with which individuals, families, communities, larger and smaller, may be preserved in normal condition, their lives prolonged, their vigor sustained, their animal spirits raised, their human powers exalted and made fit for their work. Social science is concerned with the conditions of health and wealth in society at large, discovering and enforcing the laws by which poverty, crime, demoralization of every kind, may be prevented, and the course of the race towards its social destination be hastened. In every department its purpose is the same: practical, not speculative. Science seems unfriendly to theology and philosophy, because it confines itself to these practical ends, disregarding the systems that contain ideas merely, without regard to their bearing on the conduct of life. It is hostile to such systems in proportion as they discourage the interest in practical things, or mislead men in regard to them, teaching notions concerning practical things that are bewildering and harmful. Much of what is called theology and philosophy does this. It either diverts the mind from the vital concerns of immediate interest to mankind, teaching creeds instead of wisdom, or it inculcates practices that are injurious to the daily welfare of men; as, for instance, encouraging the notion that people should live for another life and not for this; that they should cultivate the "spiritual" at the expense of the "material"; that they should disregard the simple conditions of terrestrial welfare; that they should give aims profusely in obedience to a Scripture text, unmindful of the changed requirements of modern life. Science respects wisdom, pure and simple. Theology respects tradition. Philosophy respects "principles."

Science draws lessons from organized Nature. Mr. Mill has arraigned Nature for cruelty; declares that it reveals neither wisdom nor goodness; that as far as it teaches any lessons they are lessons of recklessness, heartlessness, and inhumanity, which could not be imitated by rational beings without bringing them to a lower level than that of wild beasts, and could not be adopted as regulative principles of society without reducing society to barbarism. But Mr. Mill is speaking of incomplete Nature, of Nature as unmodified by man; of Nature, unorganized and undeveloped. He advises the study of Nature; he insists that all knowledge and improvement depend on the wise use of natural agencies; he maintains that rational obedience to the laws of Nature insures the well-being of the human race. In his view science points towards wisdom; it is the method of wisdom, because it leads to that complete understanding of the laws of the world which results in noble conduct.

That wisdom thus apprehended is a loving spirit is what many will doubt; yet it is, we are confident, what many will come more and more to believe. As wisdom justifies itself this will more clearly appear, and that it will justify itself cannot be doubted. In its very first manifestation the loving spirit of it is disclosed. It has a cold aspect, bright but un sympathetic; it is without a motion; its keen, comprehending eye is unmoistened by tears; it contemplates the melancholy condition of men without compassion; it passes from one end to another, mightily surveying all things, but it never turns aside to rectify a wrong; it indulges no fancies, jumps at no conclusions, listens to no complaint; yet in its train endless benefit accumulates. She seems cruel, but is kind. Already she furnishes us with illustrations which fill our souls with hope. The many contrivances she has invented, simply in the course of her explorations among the mechanical laws, contrivances with which we are all familiar, have multiplied comfort a thousand-fold, and abolished misery from vast areas of human existence. The inventors were not, we may allow, specially humane men; they had no specially humane intentions; they simply pursued their investigations, interested and absorbed by the task of making new combinations and proving new powers. They probably forgot everything in their occupation, not caring much whether their discovery resulted in the substantial benefit of their fellow-men or not. But the benefit resulted. Not immediately; at first, the benefit did not come. The most obvious effect was disastrous and cruel. The cotton-gin, the sewing-machine, created alarm among the people who had depended on their manual labor for a livelihood, and now saw their means of support taken away from them by these inhuman contrivances. They resented the intrusion; they cursed the inventor; they would not believe that he was a servant of the good God who had thus substituted steel fingers for fingers of flesh, and leathern bands for muscles and nerves. Rather it was an emissary of Satan, who envied them the small satisfactions of their lot, and dispossessed them of the humble proceeds of their toil. Riots, frequent and violent, greeted each fresh demonstration of the power of obedience to natural law. The machines were in some instances broken in pieces; the lives of the inventors were endangered. But the love showed itself at last; showed itself in unexpected ways, in all ways, material, personal, social, moral. The necessities of daily life were multiplied and cheapened, the drudgery of toil was lessened, new occupations were opened, more hands were needed, wages were increased, homes were made more comfortable, desires were augmented, wants became eager, poverty became less desperate, pauperism laid by some of its most heart-rending features; the least observance of this new "fear of the Lord" showed a disposition to revive the earth. Still we complain, and we ever shall complain until the obedience becomes perfect, and perfect wisdom shall beget perfect love. Indeed, people complain more in proportion as they have something to enjoy, for the contrast is then greater between their condition and their desire; desire, being once awakened, will not rest till it is completely satisfied. There is more complaint among laboring people now than there was in times of greater misery: for in those times it was idle to wish; the very power of wishing was paralyzed; misery was voiceless; sorrow was dumb. The narrow lot was accepted without remonstrance, as the appointment of heaven. Even resentment and hatred were unaroused. There are those who doubt whether this form of wisdom, which consists in calling in natural forces to perform the tasks once committed to human hands, is productive of kindness, whether wisdom thus far has been parent of love. They are of opinion that its material advantages have been purchased at the expense of personal happiness and social order. Yet the tollers themselves, if consulted, would refuse to go back, if they could, to the days when love shone on them, now and then, in the form of charity from their superiors; when their wretched hovels were gladdened occasionally by the visit of a sister of charity or a kindly priest. The changes for the better that knowledge of the physical conditions of life has introduced among the working classes, have raised them to a position of privilege and command which they will never abdicate. It has clothed them with human attributes, the capacity for suffering, the capacity also for hope and endeavor. It has made them a power, opened for them a future, given them a taste of the bounty of life's feast; and these are satisfactions not to be lightly estimated. The spirit that loves them as human beings, making them capable of joy and of sorrow, of good and of evil, of aspiration and discouragement, of the soul's tormenting hunger and thirst, demonstrates towards them a love as compared with which what has always passed for love, the love of pity, the love of beneficence, almost deserves the name of coldness and hate. The wisdom that raises them in the scale of human beings is a loving spirit; if the expression of the love be imperfect, it is because the revelation of wisdom is imperfect.

Among the painful occurrences of this hard winter, there was one recently that called forth discussion on this very point. A poor woman sat begging, with her infant, on the cold street. The passers streamed by, a crowd of hurrying men and women. Her appeal was neglected; her hunger was unaided; from cold and starvation her child died. The heart of human pity received a stab. "Were there none in that living mass of men and women who passed her as she sat there, an unfortunate, sickly creature, to give a thought to her need, to drop a penny into her lap? Were all priests and levites? Were none Samaritans? Is this the fruit of Christian charity in a rich city, where millions are spent in building churches and maintaining ministers of the gospel of Jesus?" The rebuke was sharply administered, and in many quarters keenly felt. But remonstrance was met by remonstrance, rebuke by rebuke. The retort was flung back by one whose life is literally devoted to the task of applying the method of wisdom to the manifold woes of society. This patient hard-worker, who knew by personal observation and study how unhelpful and unloving the impulsive charity of sympathy is, and who was daily giving a vigorous mind's strength to the task of substituting wisdom for compassion, repelled the insinuation that heartlessness alone was the cause of the child's death on the street. Heartlessness there was, truly, but whence the heartlessness? Whence, but from the neglect to study the actual causes of poverty, the natural conditions of health and wealth? So habitual is this neglect even in modern communities, so hopeless the apathy it engenders, that even the consciousness of it, the outspoken belief of it, fails to stir the mind to investigation, or the will to endeavor. Kind-hearted, compassionate, humane people pass the beggar in the street, unmoved by the most unmistakable signs of want. They reason thus: "The woman is in all probability an impostor; she has gone out, or been sent out, by a lazy husband, to play on the sympathies of kind people, and to pilfer in the name of charity. The child in her arms is not her own, but borrowed to add pathos to her appeal. If we give her anything, ever so little, others will do the same, actuated by the same impulse; if many do, as many will, the woman will obtain more by a day of beggary than industry will earn by a day of labor; mendicancy will become a profitable profession; honest industry will be disheartened; the poor will lose their self-respect, their pride, their vigor of purpose, their love of independence; pauperism will be encouraged, and with pauperism will come depravity, sensuality, filth, disease, theft, the perishing and the dangerous class that is the plague and terror of the European world."

This is the voice of wisdom, earnest, almost impassioned, pleading for knowledge against sentiment, for facts against feeling, for the wisdom that is loving against the love that is unwise. The voice of wisdom, it may be admitted, is not always so earnest. There is a wisdom, a lower wisdom because conformed to a less worthy conception of the world of society, a wisdom that takes the name of "common-sense," which speaks in a less impassioned tone. "Let Nature's laws work without human interference," it says. "Let the weak perish; let the sickly die; let those who cannot earn bread go without it; let Nature drive in the goat, swing her pitiless scourge, employ all her ministers, fever, hunger, cold, to start humanity from its deadly apathy; shut the hand; close the heart; do not interpose between the natural forces that discipline mankind and the discipline that is intended. The survival of the fittest is the decree. Such as obstinately refuse to qualify themselves for the struggle, or cannot maintain it, must go to the wall."

But this is to do precisely what Mr. Mill holds to be preposterously inhuman and irrational; namely, to imitate Nature. That such imitation would result in kindness of any degree or sort must be questioned. The non-survival of the fittest, the survival of the cold-hearted, the calculating, the brutal, the extinction of the finer qualities that beautify human nature, the predominance of the coarser qualities that assimilate human nature to the bestial, would probably be the outcome of that experiment. The truer wisdom mingles thought and endeavor with patient study; is never weary of seeking knowledge and making experiment in science; it has the welfare of humanity in view all the time, and labors to increase it by more and more sagacious adaptation of means to ends. While it feels and confesses that "the beginning of wisdom is discipline," discipline that is very severe, the continuance of wisdom will be prudence, and the end of wisdom will be love; and the discipline can be made to result in love, wherever wisdom will be earnest. At first, "she will lead him in crooked ways, and torment him with her discipline, and bring fear and dread upon him, until she may trust his soul; then will she return straightway to him and comfort him, and show him her secrets."

Wisdom, it has been said, is a practical spirit. It is prudent; it considers ways and means; it consults policies and expediences; it seeks definite ends. Instead of assuming causes and coming down to effects, it mounts from effects to causes. This spirit has not been in good repute among religious people, who have preferred to begin with general principles, ab-

abstract ideas, broad sentiments, absolute axioms, and compel circumstances to yield to their sway. They have repelled and almost resented the maxims of prudence. To consult expediency has been stigmatized as the base error of low minds that had no appreciation of moral laws. With them the soul is an oracle, the heart is prophet and seer. The proverb "honesty is the best policy" is found fault with on the ground that honesty and policy should not be confounded together, honesty being a principle and expediency being a device, principle and policy standing at opposite poles. Some have spoken as if it was a misfortune that honesty should be the best policy; as if the temptation to be politic endangered the character of the honesty. To recommend the right way as being the safe way is, in such judgment, to compromise the right way by encouraging people to pursue only the safe way. It has been maintained that the practice of honesty, on the ground that it was the best policy, was no pursuit of honesty at all. Would the advocate of this proposition maintain that if honesty proved to be the worst policy, it ought nevertheless to be pursued? under all circumstances? in spite of consequences? "Let justice be done, though the heavens fall!" But how do we know that what we call justice is justice, except by the fact that it prevents the heavens from falling? If the enactment of justice pulled down the heavens, that would be a brilliant refutation of justice.

"Thou dost preserve the stars from wrong,
And the most ancient heavens by Thee are fresh and strong."

is the declaration of the poet Wordsworth. The study of "the most ancient heavens" has revealed the omnipotence of simple justice,—the beautiful order that results from obedience to established law. There was a time when it was doubted whether wisdom did uphold the firmaments, and all manner of accessory forces were called in to support the framework of things. Each star was supposed to be animated by an intelligent being who guided its course. The constellations were supposed to be arranged and impelled by the sound of music. The apparatus was taken away, the supports were removed, the spirits were banished; nothing but pure law was left. But then, for the first time, the majesty and glory were disclosed, and the grand conception of symmetry burst upon the intelligence of mankind. Had the heavens fallen the idea of law would have been defeated.

The better way, therefore, is to proceed from wisdom to love; to study conditions and thus arrive at principles. How many problems would not this method solve! How much bewilderment and controversy arise from pursuing the opposite method, assuming principles and enforcing them over circumstances! starting with love and acting as if love must of necessity be wise! The habit of reformers is to lay down, and try to enforce, an abstract sentiment. They assume love as an imperative necessity, a principle that is a law to itself, and then demand that the arrangements of life shall fall in with its requirements. Sometimes it is the instinctive love which attracts the sexes for which this absolute prerogative is claimed. Sometimes it is the compassionate feeling of the heart for human infirmity. Sometimes it is the impersonal love of humanity that goes by the name of justice. In each and every case the abstract sentiment is made primary and actual arrangements are judged.

The method leads to inextricable complications, from which it indicates no issue. An honest beginning at the other end would probably reach the desired result much sooner and more satisfactorily. Suppose, for example, that in the discussion of the agitated question of the marriage laws, instead of beginning with the principle that the feeling of love must have all its rights; that feeling must never be balked or put aside; that the satisfaction of desire must be primary; that laws must be altered so as to accommodate the moods of instinct, and social arrangements be newly shaped with a view to the complete indulgence of emotion,—suppose that, instead of this, the principle were adopted of making existence as happy as circumstances allow, taking people as they are, estimating temperaments and dispositions at their just value, combining conditions and bringing the greatest amount of happiness out of given arrangements, trying, in a word, to make things work as well as circumstances permit, is it not likely that the sum of happiness would be much greater, the peace more assured, the content more profound? Is it not likely that each character would be more harmoniously unfolded? that each would justify itself more completely? And is it not likely that many a question would be answered that now is asked clamorously and in vain? The romantic demands of sentiment cannot be satisfied, but the sober demands of wisdom may be; and in the course of their satisfaction, the reasonable requirements of feeling will be met.

It is a natural belief that women will sooner attain their rule, and consequently their happy condition in modern society, by studying the actual state of society itself, and adjusting themselves as well as they may to it, thus by degrees accommodating themselves to altered circumstances, working their way to the places they are competent to fill, conforming to present exigencies, improving open occasions, seizing offered opportunities, and welcoming conceded privileges, than by making a sweeping demand on some absolute ground, taking up a lofty position, laying down a theory of human nature, and insisting on its adoption by society at whatever cost to instituted customs. The practical spirit which studies expediences will untie knots which the theoretical spirit can only cut; will propitiate instead of exasperating, persuade instead of irritating, and win where conquest cannot be attempted. The object being to adjust women fairly to an altered condition of society, it is desirable that this should be effected in the way of gradual accommodation rather than in the way of sudden revolution.

But it must not be forgotten, and that it may not be forgotten it must be iterated and reiterated, that wisdom is not cold, critical, arrogant; that it is not stiff, set, conservative; that, on the contrary, it is eager, laborious, impatient, hopeful, ever on the lookout for new knowledge, ever ready to seize new opportunities, full of sunlight. Its task is to examine, explore, amend. If its expectations are moderate, its purpose may be strong. If it promises little, it strives for much. It does not serve by standing and waiting; it stands and waits only when necessary. Whenever it sees an opening it starts to its feet and moves on. Richard Wagner, the composer, argues that the doctrine of pessimism is better calculated to make people happy than the doctrine of optimism, because the optimist, expecting to find things much better than they are, is exposed to continual disappointment, while the pessimist, expecting to find things as bad as they can be, may be delighted at some unanticipated pleasure. So in this old controversy between love and wisdom, love, glowing and enthusiastic, easily falls into complaint and bitterness because things do not work according to its desire, while wisdom thankfully accepts the smallest advantage, and through some crevice of circumstance gazes into an ocean of good.

NATHAN THE WISE.

(RESUME OF A DISCOURSE DELIVERED BY MR. MORGUE D. CONWAY.)

Among unbelievers, through the Christian ages preceding the Reformation, the heaviest suffering fell upon the Jews. It is, alas! an unhappy chapter in their own history, that two centuries ago the Jews excommunicated the very man who brought about the first faint turn of the tide in their favor. That man was Spinoza, whose intellectual power and moral grandeur were the means of opening the eyes of everybody in Europe who had eyes, to the monstrous falsity which the Christian war against thought had bequeathed. Even after the Reformation had thundered forth, as from another Sinai, the right of private judgment, it was still possible to banish the best man in Europe, because he exercised private judgment. Even the so-called Paganism of Germany had a higher standard of moral courage than these pious people demanded. Men like Bruno, Servetus, and Spinoza rescued the fair reason of man from its prison; while the demons of dogma hunted and yelled behind, to change them into dark, dogmatic pebbles like themselves. The first man who started out from the Christian side to discover where the true religion lay was Lessing, and the first work which impressed that discovery on the German people was his drama of "Nathan the Wise." In this great poem the scene is Jerusalem, at the time of the Sultan Saladin and the Knights Templars. The Sultan spares the life of a certain Templar, because of his resemblance to a brother who had disappeared some years before. The pardoned Templar then saves the life of a Jewess from the flames, at the risk of his own, this Jewess being the supposed daughter, though real foster-daughter, of Nathan, the most wealthy and distinguished Jew in Jerusalem. These three became, by personal situation, most near and dear to each other. The Christian patriarch at Jerusalem was plotting to burn Nathan for bringing up a Christian maiden as a Jewess; but she turns out to be the niece, and her rescuer, the Templar, to be the nephew, of Saladin, children of his brother who had disappeared.

The gem of this drama is an epilogue addressed by Nathan to Saladin. The Sultan is in sore need of money, and turns to this wealthy Jew. He had heard Nathan spoken of as wise, but did not know him personally. He sends for the Jew, and, before demanding the money, desires to amuse himself a little by fencing with him. He wishes to know from Nathan what dispensation, faith, or law seemed best. Nathan asks leave to tell a tale, as follows:—

"In olden time, there lived an Eastern chief, who owned a ring of priceless worth from one he dearly loved. The stone, an opal, flashed the broken light in a hundred lovely hues upon the eye, and had the miraculous power to make him loved of God and man who, strong in this assurance, wore the ring. What wonder, therefore, that this Eastern lord never let the treasure from his hand, and made such disposition as to secure it as an heirloom in his house forever, that his heir might bequeath it in turn to the one he most loved; and, more, that the possessor of the ring, without regard to claims of prior birth, in right of ownership alone, should rule as lord of all? So came the ring from sire to son, until at length it fell to one, the father of three living, all beautiful alike, and all by him cherished with like regard. Thus, then, each one appeared in his eyes dearest and best; each, in a word, seemed worthiest of the ring, and he, with pious weakness, promised each that he should have it. Time ran on and on, till the old man, knowing his end drew near, began to feel the pain of this position. It grieved him sorely that he must needs defeat the hopes of two among his sons, each one of whom he knew relied on him. What could be done? How escape from this dilemma? He summoned, privately, a jeweller, of whom he orders two more opal rings, after the pattern of the one he wore. The artist triumphs; the ring is produced. The father cannot tell which of the three is his. Content, resigned, he calls his sons to his bedside, and gives to each his blessing and a ring, and soon thereafter dies. You mark me, Sultan?"

"I mark you well, but pray end your tale."

"It is already at an end," said Nathan; "for all that follows may be readily divined. The father dead, each son displays his ring, and would assert his place as lord of all. Discussion follows dispute, in vain; the true ring cannot now be known,—as little known as among ourselves this day is the true religion."

"But the ring?" cries the Sultan. "Falter not with me in this. Methought the three great dispensations were verily distinct from one another, even to the meat, the drink, and the garb of those professing them."

"Not distinct," says Nathan, "as to the grounds on which they rest in common. The sons could come to no agreement; each swore in turn, before the judge, that he had his ring from the hands of his dear father."

"And how true was this?"

"Thus spoke the judge: 'As ye do not, cannot, produce the father, I dismiss the suit. What! think you I am here to unravel riddles? or shall we stay till the true ring appears? But hold! The true ring has the power, it is said, to make its owner loved of God and man. This must decide. The counterfeits, you will own, have no such virtue. So, then, as ye stand, which of the three loves two of you the most? What! silent all? Each loves himself alone, and ye are doubtless all alike deceived. The rings ye wear must needs be counterfeits; the magic ring was lost, it seems, and, to conceal the loss, your loving father had these ye wear made like it.'"

"Excellent," cried Saladin. "Proceed, I pray."

"The judge went on to say: 'If ye seek judgment, I counsel give; but would ye rather be advised, I would say, Attend well that the matter stand. If from the father each had a ring, let each believe his own to be the true one. It is possible your father willed to end this sovereignty of one among his sons. To me, it would plainly seem he had loved you all alike. Let each resolve to show the world that, in the ring he wears, he holds the prize, his virtues being shown to man in acts of meekness and mercy, to God, in thoughts of love and heartfelt trust. And when a thousand years are passed away, and children's children, wearing the ring, come anew before the judgment seat, one wiser than myself might then sit here and make the award.'"

Saladin, overcome, bids Nathan leave his presence, but remain his friend; and the Jew has almost to beg on his knees that the Sultan will take the money he meant to demand. The money is finally restored untouched.

The three brothers came before the judge, remembering only the magical side of their ring, forgetting its virtue of winning love to God and man. Three such rings were the Sultan, Nathan, and the Templar. Suddenly they become involved in a purely human emergency, in a situation whose issue is life or death to those they love. They have only to stand to their creed, and all that is done. But sect sacrificed, manhood rises up; sect down, charity stands out. The long-forgotten virtue of the ring, love, now comes forth from where it has been hidden amid passion and strife. Each finds that his first step towards true manliness is away from his sect and creed. If you go with these three men, why not with the whole world? As these three men stand in the drama, hovering between the fancied supernatural authority of the rings, on one side, and the only real value, love and justice, on the other, so stands all the world. Mankind suffers under the delusion that there is something nobler than the heart's nobility; something truer than truth; something wiser than wisdom in the magic of their creed or name. Each claims to have received the genuine words of God. They imagine to this some potency so high that to its value reason may well be sacrificed, justice may be overthrown, and human love scorned. That side of their ring which they call religion is no religion at all; it is only the tradition of very ignorant people, the survival of certain primitive speculations of science about this world and man's nature, too antiquated to be supported by reason and common sense, and found untrue and false every day, from the fact that they no longer agree with the virtues which first consecrated them. Why, the religion of Christ—that gentle Sermon on the Mount—now means anger, dispute, controversy between brothers, sneers at reason, discouragement of thought, and the desire to suppress science,—that is what it means.

Dr. Andrew Wood, of Edinburgh, in the preface to his translation, says: "Even the Christians may learn a lesson from Nathan." Even the Christians! What! Then is there virtue implied in being Christian? What is there in religion, since Jesus fell asleep, beyond what Nathan lived in thought, word, and deed? Does the sun shine more brightly on Christians than on others? Does it make wisdom more wise to call it Christian? Yet is this translator of a work he cannot comprehend, right? Christians may learn from Nathan how useless are their magic and occult charms, or the ritual of their rings. They may learn how true wisdom and high rectitude ignore the baptismal font. Many religions have been tried; how they have failed is written over the earth in human blood and ashes.

One religion now remains to be tried, the religion of simple humanity—a religion of the noblest virtues conceivable in human character,—which shall teach men to bind up the wounds of humanity. And only when men learn that an honest, frank denial is holier than a cowardly acceptance; only when it is felt that any God worthy the name of a God would prefer Atheism to mean, servile Orthodoxy; only then shall we have reached the threshold of that larger temple, where the sorceries of fear are unknown, where the spells of a name are broken, and where man, from gathering ages of superstition, shall see his world saved at last by humanity's grand success. —London Secular Review, March 30.

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

A recent biographer of Robert G. Ingersoll says that he is the son of a Congregational minister, that he was born in Dresden, a small town in northern New York, and is forty-three years old. He was baptized, when he was three years old, in a theatre in New York city. His father was then preaching in the city, and in this theatre, his church having been destroyed by the great fire. His father, it seems, inclined towards liberalism, and the strifes and the annoyances he was subjected to from the narrow belief of his flock early embittered the precocious youth, and filled him with the utmost hatred of the gloomy spirit of Calvinism. The father died in 1839; but when Robert uttered that famous lecture on "Heretics and Heresies," and in which occurs that graphic picture of John Calvin, he said, when he returned to his home, "Father, I've paid back another of the insults they heaped upon you." He received only a common school education. When Robert was ten they came West. Robert was a precocious boy. He was a great reader, and his favorite author was Robert Burns. He had committed the works of that poet to memory, and it is probable that it was from this fountain that he first imbibed that glowing, fiery hate for tyranny and contempt for sham of every sort, that form such an effective part of his character. When Robert was still under age he had studied law, and been admitted to the bar. In 1860 Robert was nominated for Congress against William Kellogg. He conducted his part of the campaign as if it were a huge frolic, and yet on the stump he displayed qualities that astonished alike his friends and enemies. He tore Judge Kellogg's arguments in pieces, worried him in every debate, out-talked and out-argued him. Running on the Democratic ticket, he went far beyond his opponent in denouncing slavery, and solemnly avowed that, rather than interfere between any human being in his efforts to secure his liberty, "I would be condemned to be chained in the lowest depths of hell." Bob was beaten, and it was the last time he ever ran for an office.

In 1862 he went to war as colonel of the 11th Illinois Cavalry. In 1866 he was appointed Attorney-General of the State by Governor Oglesby. In 1868 he was spoken of for Governor. Since then he has been engaged in the practice of his profession, in which he has been extraordinarily successful, until the Cincinnati Convention drew him out. In 1862 he married Miss Eva Parker, the daughter of a farmer of Groveland, Tazewell County, Ill., a rare woman in any age. An affectionate, tender, true-hearted, and loving woman, she transformed the reckless, careless, heedless genius into a great-souled, strong-brained, versatile, and pure-minded man. Two daughters are the result of this union. Few households equal this in strong, but tender, affection, manifested simply and naturally, without affectation and without concealment.

When he goes on any long journey his family always accompany him. Together they went to Europe; together they made the campaign in Maine and New York. Nor is here the masculine intellect that partakes of all his triumphs, and drives him forward because she is ambitious. Dress and society and place and position are things she cares as little for as he. In intellect she doesn't strive to be his peer; but in womanly qualities, in devotion to him, in wifely regard, in the domestic virtues, she surpasses most women as much as he, in masculine strength and vigor, surpasses most men; and he repays this affection with a constancy, a care and attention, a delicate deference to her wishes, and a loyal devotion to her that reveals the ideal lover of the romantic school. There is, however, in all this, no sentimentality and no gush.—New York Tribune.

SCHOOLS FOR CITIZENSHIP.

Speaking the other day of primary meetings it was remarked, incidentally, that under our present city charters, general meetings of citizens for the consideration of the important interests of the community had gone out of fashion. Under the old city charter of Boston, Section 80, such general meetings of citizens were provided for, and were formerly held. The custom ought to be revived. There are many subjects on which the citizens could obtain information and exert influence not available in any other way. Let it once be understood that one evening in a month will be regularly given to this object,—say the first Monday of the month. Let a convenient hall be secured, the largest that can be had in the ward, and its use for this purpose, on the appointed day in every month, from October to May, be made certain. Let the warden of the ward, or, in his absence, some gentleman well known, be appointed to preside. Announce that the first meeting will be devoted to some subject or subjects of social order still before the community for decision.

It is desirable, of course, to avoid the mere speculation of a debating society. But it is better to run into theory sometimes, than to know nothing of practice. Let such questions as the education of craftsmen, the taxing of the people for the higher schools, the taxation of churches, the prohibitory system, be discussed on both sides by competent men. Let such national questions as that on which all public business has been arrested at Washington, the conditions of public faith, the currency, the tariff, the Alabama award offers, be discussed. Let the questions not far in the future, such as the Chinese emigration, the rights of such associations as the Jesuit body, the question whether Congress or the local authorities shall count votes, the rights of small States and large States, be discussed before such assemblies. It would be convenient at first to lay down a few rules of procedure, a fifteen-minute rule, for instance. But the meeting would soon make its own rules, judging by its own experience from its own convenience.

In a single winter of such discussion almost all the voters of that ward would obtain more real information on the subjects at issue than any but a very few obtain now. They would come to know their public men; and they would soon see who had axes to grind, and who were caring for the State when the time came for party meetings and the preparation of tickets. After a year or two of such experience, tickets would not be made up in a mass from names that nobody ever heard of. The persons who had most favorably impressed the audiences would be, on the whole, the persons most prominent in nominations; and, when the time came for voting, the voters would know who and what they were voting for.

There is no danger but that the meetings will be large. Those who attend them will take care that they are interesting; for they will pass by the subjects which are not made attractive, to take up those which are. The forms which discussion would naturally take would be those of resolutions. Suppose the programme of an evening were:—

"Resolved, That the members of this ward in the next legislature should support a reduction of taxes on savings-banks."

"Resolved, That the next city government should set on foot some system for training in the mechanic arts."

"Resolved, That the State legislature should discourage the accumulation of large property by religious corporations."

Suppose the discussion on one of these dragged. The assembly would table it or postpone it to a fixed time, in order to come at some subject more interesting. And the men who wanted to maintain a particular cause would take care to be on hand.

The great mass of the people has not too many occasions for meeting of an evening,—has not enough which are at once entertaining and instructive. The lyceum long since ceased to instruct, and, except in rare instances, has ceased to entertain. But a vigorous discussion of living themes, by capable men, will always be attractive.—Boston Advertiser, May 16.

MASSACHUSETTS CHILDREN'S PROTECTIVE SOCIETY.

President, William Gaston.
Vice-Presidents, Josiah Quincy, Quincy; Martin Britmer, Boston; Samuel E. Sewall, Boston; Henry W. Longfellow, Cambridge; James Russell Lowell, Cambridge; James Freeman Clarke, Boston; John D. Long, Hingham; Mary Hemenway, Boston; Mrs. P. S. Canfield, Worcester; George F. Hoar, Worcester; Henry K. Oliver, Salem.

Secretary, Loring Moody.
Treasurer, Frederick S. Cabot.
Special Agent, Francis Hinckley.

Directors, William Gaston, Nathan Appleton, Daniel Needham, Fenno Tudor, A. A. Miner, E. S. Converse, Lyman Hollingsworth, F. S. Cabot, Francis Hinckley, F. J. Greene, Loring Moody.

This Society having been duly incorporated under the laws of this Commonwealth is now actively at work. But it is without pecuniary means. And those to whom it appeals for sympathy, cooperation, and support should know to the fullest extent, what are its aims and modes of operation.

Its aims are briefly stated in the "purpose" set forth in its constituent articles of agreement, as follows:—"To secure all needful legislation, and to enforce all laws of the State, for the protection of children from abuse, cruelty, and deprivation of their rights to education, and the means of fitting them to discharge their duties in life with the best advantage to themselves and the public, we, the undersigned, hereby form ourselves into a corporation to be known by the name of the 'Massachusetts Children's Protective Society.'"

Its modes of procedure will be more fully developed by the individual cases as they arise; and the citation of a few such cases as may demand our assistance will enable the public to judge of the need of such active, helpful interference as we propose to extend; and also whether it will not be cheaper and wiser for the State to take charge of these children, and educate them for good citizens, than under any plea to suffer them to drift into evil ways, and at length be compelled to maintain them, and a warfare against them, as criminals and peace-breakers.

Although fuller details of these cases are in our possession, they are here condensed to very brief statements.

A small girl was seen standing barefooted on the snowy sidewalk in mid-winter, holding out her hand and begging. Unable longer to endure the cold, she ran into the house to warm her feet. From the opposite side of the street a woman was seen through the window to take down a rattle and drive her out again to resume her begging.

Small boys are frequently found begging in railway-cars, for money for older people to get drunk on, and often whipped when their beggings are unsuccessful.

Mr. Chase Cole found bright little boy with nothing to sleep under but old bag; father drunk; mother dying on a wretched bed, beseeching Mr. Cole to take the child away from father who beats him without mercy.

We have been called upon to protect a girl whose head was scarred, her arm broken, her back scalded with hot water by her father.

Another little girl, whose mother is dead, deserted by her father, kicked from the street down the basement stairs, confined naked in attic, beaten with a leather strap by woman having control of her.

A blind, sick baby, nine months old, hungry, moaning in a starch-box; deserted by father; mother without work, and unable to procure it food or clothing.

Little children of tender years dragged about by organ-grinders, to perform instead of monkeys.

Unreared-for children in a state of partial nudity sleeping in entry-ways, or wherever night might overtake them.

Man in Malden whipped his ten-year-old boy on his naked back with horse-rein, with buckle on the end; selectmen and others who examined his back "never saw such a sight; back cut up, skin peeled and torn."

Agent found family of eight persons living by the begging of the children, who could not attend school. Three of the boys had slept all winter in an old barn, on a bed of dirty straw, the doors and windows of which were gone, their only covering being ragged pants and coats; boys acquiring habits of theft in their efforts to provide for the family.

Another family of thirteen persons living in house of one room. Children ranging from one to twenty-seven years of age. Never known to go to school. Daughter with three illegitimate children. All profane, intemperate, beastly, and given to every vice. Eighteen-year-old boy said he only wanted a plenty of rum and tobacco, and he could be happy.

These cases, from a much larger number which have come under our notice, will illustrate the need of associated efforts to protect children, not only from cruelty and abuse, but to save many from the high-road to vice, crime, and ruin.

We shall follow these children to their homes, search out their conditions, and afford such relief as each case may require.

To do this, we need money to maintain an office, carry complaints before the courts, support active agents, afford temporary relief in distressing cases, pay printers, and all expenses necessary to the prosecution of our humane work.

Life members pay fifty dollars; annual members, five dollars; patrons, one dollar and under five dollars.

Your cooperation and support are cordially solicited.

Donations and subscriptions may be sent to Frederick S. Cabot, Treasurer, Rialto Building, 131 Devonshire Street, this city, or paid directly to the agent on application.

F. J. GREENE,
F. HINCKLEY,
F. S. CABOT,
LORING MOODY,
Executive Committee.

N. B.—The Society has established an office in Room 7, No. 8 Hamilton Place, where all persons having knowledge of cases of cruelty or abuse of children are requested to report them for investigation. Boston, 1878.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

TRUTH.

The wind may moan, the sky may cloud,
The storm may rage, destroying all;
The heart may shrink, in death be bowed,
Or human souls by tyrants cowed,
Yet dwell I far above the fall!

The war may rage, and nations send
Their shafts of hate in noble forms,
The city burn, and races bend
Whereat the conquering swords descend,
Yet I am safe above their storms!

The priest may pray, the zealot burn
His brother at the driven flame,
And noble souls in dungeons yearn
For light that's never to return,
Yet live I on a deathless aim!

The poor may starve, the merchant wrong
His fellows through the speeding time,
And wealth unjustly aid the strong,
Oppression hold its sway and long,
Yet I know not the sad-wrought crime!

The slave may labor 'neath the sun
And misery feel in every vein,
The sea of famine fierce o'er-run
Where once its fury has begun,
Yet I feel not the gnawing pain!

O man! know me a spirit free!
In vain your crimes and wrongs and hates,
I dwell on high o'er land and sea,
I dwell in realms wherein for thee
Are woven the eternal Fates!

HORACE L. TRAUDEL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N. B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 1.

M. G. Kimball, $3; E. C. Wilcox, 10 cents; A. J. Gron, $1.75; E. W. Meddagh, $103.50; Alben Andrew, $4.75; F. H. Lotthrop, 50 cents; Sarah Fagh, $5; H. E. Howe, $3.25; E. B. Wolcott, $3.25; H. Schoepky, $2; Free Religious Association, $3; Edgar St. Clair, 50 cents; C. M. Cuyler, 25 cents; J. B. Wolcott, $3.30; Dr. J. Harmon, $5; J. A. Simon, $5; Thomas Tasker, 10 cents; J. J. Barker, $6.75; John Dodge, $3; D. B. Beechard, $3.25; E. C. Westlake, $3; Abel Fletcher, 80 cents; A. D. Dickinson, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 6, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON Office, No. 35 MONROE STREET; J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB HENYON (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KEISLEY, Editorial Contributors.

"WE ARE informed," said the New York Independent of April 25, "that an Oberlin freshman has been expelled for writing two essays of an atheistical tendency." There is a specimen of college freedom, as enjoyed in this country. Probably this audacious freshman would not have been expelled, if he had written essays of a Christian tendency; yet one course is no worse than the other. How hard it is for the world to learn the simple lesson of the gospel according to Nature, that thought has a right to be free!

CHURCH PROPERTY is subject to taxation in the District of Columbia, as it ought to be everywhere. On May 8, in the Senate, Mr. Edmunds introduced a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the commissioners of the District of Columbia for a detailed statement of the church property in default for taxes, under the act of June, 1874; what legal steps, if any, have been taken to enforce the collection of such taxes; and if no such steps had been taken, why not. So it seems that the District churches have been defying the tax-gatherers and defrauding the revenue.

OBJECTING to the suggestion that the abolition of Sabbatarian laws will not interfere in the least with the preservation of Sunday as a legal holiday and day of rest, the Christian Statesman says: "The belief that God our Maker has reserved one day in seven from secular uses, and requires it to be observed religiously, furnishes an adequate logical basis for legislation in regard to the Sabbath. If that ground be abandoned, none remains on which the institution can stand for a moment. The American people must choose between the total loss of the Sabbath as a day of general rest, and its maintenance on the only ground on which it can be vindicated." Well, it is precisely that Divinely ordained "Sabbath" that the American people are making up their minds it will be a gain to lose. But they will maintain Sunday as a day of rest, if they want one; and if they do not want one, we do not see why it should worry the Statesman. There is no danger that churches will ever fall to be protected in their worship; but there is great danger that they will not always be allowed to prescribe what everybody else shall do or not do on that day.

REV. JOHN SNYDER, a Unitarian pastor of St. Louis, wrote as follows to Col. Ingersoll under date of April 30: "The liberty I take in writing is based upon a hasty introduction, in St. Louis, which you, doubtless, have forgotten. I want to give you a little piece of information which you may desire to use in connection with your criticism of Mr. Wendling's lecture. Mr. Wendling was invited to St. Louis by a public call, inserted in the daily press, which was signed by some prominent gentlemen of this city. He came, and, in the course of his review of your infidelity and its social, political, and moral consequences, particularly emphasized the effect such teachings would have upon the mercantile honor and property interests of society. A few days afterward I discovered that the name of a very prominent and respectable Unitarian gentleman attached to the call was deliberately forged for that purpose! He had not even seen the call previous to publication. I do not say Mr. Wendling knew of this piece of Jesuitism. I believe, really, that he was ignorant of it. It must have been done by the Y. M. C. A. managers of the affair, who, for the glory of God and the discomfiture of his enemies, did not scruple to do a deed which gets less respectable people into the penitentiary. You are at liberty to make what use of this communication you please."

A "TRIBUNAL OF SCIENCE."

Edward W. Cox, Esq., Sergeant-at-Law and President of the Psychological Society of Great Britain, published at London in 1876 a very ingenious volume called The Mechanism of Man, in which he advanced various theories respecting man's spiritual nature and destiny. We have no intention of discussing these, but only of calling attention to the following interesting suggestion:—

"I may, perhaps, be permitted to throw out a suggestion which has occurred to me when painfully reminded of the disregard of the rules of evidence that prevails in scientific debate. Would it not be possible to apply to scientific inquiries the same system of trial which is found to be so efficient a means of ascertaining truth in disputes referred to law? Would it be altogether visionary to propose the establishment of a society, to be formed for the express purpose of trying by a Tribunal of Science disputed scientific facts, pursuing precisely the same procedure as is so successfully employed in determining other disputed facts? A judge, a jury, advocates on both sides, witnesses pro and con, examined and cross-examined, speeches to the jury, a summing-up by the judge, and a verdict,—the same rules of evidence to be observed as in a law-court. The uses of such a tribunal would be manifest. It would not lack work. A new discovery in science—a new and important fact—is asserted and contested. Either party to the controversy may challenge the other to investigation by this Tribunal of Science. If the subject should be deemed by the council of the society sufficiently important to deserve inquiry, a trial would be awarded. The hearing would be of itself an invaluable teaching to the whole scientific world; it would deeply interest the outside public, and the verdict would extinguish controversies upon which much thought, time, ink, and paper might otherwise be wasted.

"The scheme is not in itself impracticable. Its benefits, if it could be accomplished, are not doubtful. I submit it to the consideration of other minds by whom, if this mere hint of it be approved, the scheme might possibly be matured hereafter."

We are frank to say that we consider this suggestion as one of the most fruitful that has come under our notice for a long time. Not that the precedents and rules of a law-court would be found wholly applicable to strictly scientific controversies, or that the principles of evidence adapted to the sifting of human testimony could be adequate to the settlement of disputes respecting natural phenomena; that is a supposition not to be entertained. But, establishing such regulations as to the constitution and methods of the proposed "Tribunal of Science" as would be required by the nature of the case (and what they should finally be could scarcely be determined except by an experimental trial of the plan), the world at large might find many advantages in the adoption of Sergeant Cox's idea. It would certainly tend to the suppression of quacks and pretenders who now flourish like green bay-trees. Put the "Keeley Motor," for instance, on its trial; that would have saved credulous capitalists some of the cash they are reported to have sunk in ridiculous experiments. Anybody who had a maggot in his brain, and was likely to become a public sponge, could be summoned to show good cause why he should not be laughed out of court. Various uses can be imagined to which the "Tribunal of Science" might be put, and which might give it a practical utility of considerable scope. Especially for the determination of the rights of discoverers and for the authoritative decision between conflicting claims to the glory of great discoveries, such a tribunal might prove exceedingly useful. The "trial by newspaper," and the equally resultless trial by pamphlet, might be superseded by the sober, dispassionate, carefully conducted investigation of competent judges, and genius might receive even in its lifetime some of the reward which is now too often stolen by noisy pretence. Poor Dr. Charles T. Jackson, who discovered the blessed usefulness of sulphuric ether in producing anaesthesia, might not now be languishing in an insane asylum.

But above all, the "Tribunal of Science," if so constituted as to command public confidence by its competency and impartiality, would illustrate in a most forcible manner the fact that there is a universal reason of mankind higher than the supposed sufficiency of "private judgment." Radicals, in particular, are prone to forget that individualism is a smaller word than universalism. They are apt to set at defiance the changeless laws of thought in the conceit of private illumination. They have not always learned that thought not according to law is ineffective as a discoverer of truth, and that all men are amenable to a higher authority than their own "insight." The truth which is for all men must appeal to the reason of all; and reason is the least personal part of us. Victor Cousin taught a great doctrine when he proclaimed the "impersonality of reason." If the radicals of our day were to comprehend that they cannot without absurdity throw themselves back on the inalienable right of "thinking as they please," and were docile enough to learn that the laws of logic are too strong for any man's whim, wilfulness, or egotism, they would less frequently expose the right of "freethought" to public contempt. Thought may be as "free" as air; but, if it be not also disciplined thought, thought dominated by severe regard for facts and the immutable relations of facts, it is as worthless as it is free. The existence of a universally respected "Tribunal of Science" would accustom men to the conception that thought is subject to law, and is valueless if lawless. It could never degenerate into another Papacy, resting on the authority of dogma, but would create gradually in all minds reverence for the eternal authority of truth, as objective to the individual and resting on that universal consciousness of the race which eliminates the vagaries of individuals. Every man remains a petty creature until he becomes aware of the universality of all that is best in his own nature. The tendency to foster this element of moral greatness, and to make the private soul conscious of the august character of that vast Whole in which it forms a tiny part, would be the very best contribution which the "Tribunal of Science" could render to the education of mankind.

CHRISTIANITY AND COMMUNISM.

General Butler presented the following extraordinary petition in the House of Representatives, May 20:—

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

In the name of the "National Workingmen's Greenback party" we would respectfully present you this memorial. The Son of God, when on earth, expressly declared that it was easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven; and believing that our Savior, possessing Divine wisdom, knew that such were the corrupt influences surrounding the possessors of wealth as to make them unworthy to associate with the virtuous and good of earth, and in the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, he clearly presents to our minds the fact that they can never aspire to the joys of the Celestial City, and as most of our Savior's teachings were in condemnation of the corrupt practice of a class of vile, hypocritical men who, claiming to be God's chosen people, for a pretence made long prayers, that they might be heard of men, and who thanked God that they were not as other men are, proving conclusively that such men must be the most corrupt of earth, and as the history of the past has taught us that corrupt rulers have relied on large standing armies to perpetuate their power and subvert the rights and liberties of the people, we would therefore respectfully petition your honorable bodies to reduce our army to the least possible number. And as an order we swear eternal fidelity to the republic and death to the usurper. Respectfully submitted by unanimous consent.

MOSES H. GALE, President.

Who is the "usurper"? President Hayes? Capitalists as a class? Or who?

Such a document as the above shows that it is not "French and German infidelity" which chiefly fosters communistic violence and civil commotion, but that Christian fanaticism is at least equally dangerous to the public peace. Since the army is to be disbanded as a preliminary step before the "National Workingmen's Greenback Party" proceeds to bring "death to the usurper," it is evident that they intend to take the law into their own hands. The truth is that Christianity lends itself as easily to revolutionary violence as any other form of "Communism"; for in its origin it taught the community of property, as the New Testament itself shows; and, as the above shows, it offers the testimony of the "Son of God" against the possessors of "capital."

The only permanent corrective of the extravagances and excesses of the communistic spirit, whether in its Christian or any other form, is the development of that strong sense of individuality and individual rights which had its origin, not at all in Christianity, but in the Teutonic love of personal liberty which lies at the foundation of all Anglo-Saxon civilization. To develop this passion for personal independence and individual rights in due harmony with the softening, refining, and ennobling consciousness of the solidarity of man—this is the aim of Free Religion, which, far more than Christianity, is destined to inspire and guide the civilization of the future.

THE RELATION OF BAACON TO MODERN SCIENCE AND CIVILIZATION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—It would seem to be a work of kindness to transcribe, for the benefit of Rev. A. B. Bradford, who apparently thinks that modern science and civilization owe their birth to Lord Bacon, the following passage from Prof. Huxley's recent article on "William Harvey." (Vide Fortnightly Review, February, 1878.)

"It is, I believe, a cherished belief of Englishmen, that Francis Bacon, Viscount St. Albans, and sometime Lord Chancellor of England, invented that 'Inductive Philosophy' of which they speak with almost as much respect as they do of Church and State; and that, if it had not been for this 'Baconian Induction,' science would never have extricated itself from the miserable condition in which it was left by a set of hair-splitting folk known as the ancient Greek philosophers. To be accused of departing from the canons of the Baconian philosophy is almost as bad as to be charged with forgetting your aspirates; it is understood as a polite way of saying that you are an entirely absurd speculator.

"Now the Novum Organon was published in 1620, while Harvey began to teach the doctrine of the circulation in his public lectures in 1619. Acquaintance with the Baconian Induction, therefore, could not have had much to do with Harvey's investigations. The Exercitatio, however, was not published till 1638. Do we find in it any trace of the influence of the Novum Organon? Absolutely none. So far from indulging in the short-sighted and profoundly unscientific depreciation of the ancients in which Bacon indulges, Harvey invariably speaks of them with that respect which the faithful and intelligent study of the fragments of their labors that remain to us must inspire in every one who is practically acquainted with the difficulties with which they had to contend, and which they so often mastered. And as to method, Harvey's method is the method of Galen, the method of Realdo Columbus, the method of Galileo, the method of every genuine worker in science, either in the past or in the present. On the other hand, judged strictly by the standard of his own time, Bacon's ignorance of the progress which science had up to that time made is only to be equalled by his insolence towards men in comparison with whom he was the merest sciolist. Even when he has some hearsay knowledge of what has been done, his want of acquaintance with the facts, and his abnormal deficiency in what I may call the scientific sense, prevent him from divining its importance. Bacon could see nothing remarkable in the chief contributions to science of Copernicus, or of Kepler, or of Galileo. Gilbert, his fellow-countryman, is the subject of a eulogy, while Galen is bespattered with a shower of impertinences which reach their climax in the epithets 'puppy' and 'plague.'

"I venture to think that if Francis Bacon, instead of spending his time in fabricating fine phrases about the advancement of learning, in order to play, with due pomp, the part which he assigned to himself of 'trumpeter' of science, had put himself under Harvey's instruction, and had applied his quick wit to discover and methodize the logical process which underlay the work of that consummate investigator, he would have employed his time to better purpose; and at any rate would not have deserved the sharp, but just, judgment which follows: 'That his (Bacon's) method is impracticable cannot, I think, be denied, if we reflect, not only that it has never produced any result, but also that the process by which scientific truths have been established cannot be so presented as even to appear to be in accordance with it.' I quote from one of Mr. Ellis's contributions to the great work of Bacon's most learned, competent, and impartial biographer, Mr. Spedding.

"In the latter half of the sixteenth, and the beginning of the seventeenth, century, the future of physical science was safe enough in the hands of Gilbert, Galileo, Harvey, Descartes, and the noble army of investigators who flocked to their standard, and followed up the advance of their leaders. I do not believe that their wonderfully rapid progress would have been one whit retarded if the Novum Organon had never seen the light; while if Harvey's little Exercitatio had been lost, physiology would have stood still until another Harvey was born into the world."

The italics in the above extract are mine. Now the question is whether Macaulay, from whom Mr. Bradford seems to have borrowed his estimate of Bacon or Prof. Huxley, is the better fitted to judge of the degree of service rendered by Bacon to the cause of science. It so happens that Macaulay's essay on Bacon is perhaps the one out of all his essays that has been convicted of the most glaring insufficiency. For example, the late Sir George C. Lewis, probably the most learned statesman of modern times, writes thus in a private letter: "I have read Macaulay's article on Lord Bacon in the Edinburgh Review. It is written in his usual sparkling, lively, antithetical style, and the historical part of it is interesting and amusing. His remarks on the ancient philosophy are, for the most part, shallow and ignorant in the extreme; his objections to the utility of logic are the stale commonplaces which all enemies of accurate knowledge and the eulogists of common-sense, practical men, etc., have been always putting forth. There is generally throughout the article a want of soundness and coherency, and a puerile and almost girlish affectation of tinsel ornament which, coming from a man of nearly forty, convince me that Macaulay will never be anything more than a rhetorician." In the light of this judgment compare what Prof. Huxley has said above with the following definition by Macaulay of Bacon's position. "There (namely, in the first book of the Novum Organon) we see the great law-giver looking round from his lonely elevation on an infinite expanse; behind him a wilderness of dreary sands and bitter waters, in which successive nations have sojourned, always moving yet never advancing, reaping no harvest and building no abiding city; before him a goodly land, a land of promise, a land flowing with milk and honey." According to Prof. Huxley, instead of occupying a "lonely elevation," he did not occupy as high an elevation, in point either of scientific knowledge or of scientific method, as several of his contemporaries, who were engaged in doing what he was only somewhat loosely speculating about,—that is to say, pushing forward the boundaries of physical science, and affording to the world signal examples of rigorous scientific induction.

In the present day there is generally a good deal to be said upon every question, and Mr. Bradford will find it to his advantage not to trust unreservedly to the authority of any man who undertakes to discuss so many subjects, and pronounce so many dogmatic judgments, as the late Lord Macaulay. If I had to choose, I should say that a little "nebulosity," in connection with real depth and force of thought, was preferable to a simplicity purchased at the expense of ignoring or discarding all that does not at once fit in with one's favorite theories. "Fruit and Progress" are well; but there is such a thing as clutching fruit before it is ripe, and making progress into untenable positions, or hopeless, blind alleys, where all progress comes to an end; and, unless I am mistaken, a considerable class of liberals to-day fall into both errors, and so fall of the influence they ought to exert in the world. Mr. Potter, whom Mr. Bradford criticizes, belongs to the higher class of thoughtful students, men of a well-grounded faith, but who have read and reflected too much to launch into the sweeping affirmations which come so readily to less cultivated minds. If men of this stamp produce less striking effects than the bold, popular orator or the trenchant controversialist, this at least may be said for them: that the work they do is well done, that the influence they once acquire is never lost, and above all that, for everything they destroy, they give something better, which is more than can be said of some who are very potent in denial, and very absolute in all their opinions.

Yours very faithfully,

WM. D. LESUEUR.

OTTAWA, Canada, May 21, 1878.

AGE OF THE IDEA OF HELL.—In the first place it is necessary to rise above that narrowness of view which regards the doctrine of hell as especially a Christian doctrine, or as the monopoly of any particular religion. On the contrary, it is as ancient and universal as the systems of religious faith that have overspread the world. The oldest religions of which we have any knowledge—Hindoo, Egyptian, and the various Oriental systems of worship,—all affirm the doctrine of a future life, with accompanying hells for the torture of condemned souls. We certainly cannot assume that all these systems are true, and of divine origin; but if not, then the question forces itself upon us; how they came by this belief. The old, historic religious systems involved advanced and complicated creeds and rituals; and if they were not real divine revelations in this elaborated shape, we are compelled to regard them as having had a natural development out of lower and cruder forms of superstition. To explain these religions—as to explain the earliest political institutions—we must go behind them. There is a prehistoric, rudimentary theology of the primitive man, the quality of which has to be deduced from his low, infantine condition of mind, interpreted by what we observe among the inferior types of mankind at the present time.—Prof. Youmans, in Popular Science Monthly for March.

Communications.

PROF. CLARK TO PROF. PIERCE.

CINCINNATI, May 19, 1878.

PROF. BENJ. PIERCE:

Sir,—I was present at the opening exercises of the Congress, in company with many socialists of the city, and was pleased with the promise given that the question, which we deem the most important one of the times, shall be fully discussed in the light of science.

At that part of your address, where allusion was made to the labor question, my comrades thought that you betrayed a lack of information on certain points, which unfitted you to discuss intelligently and profitably that theme.

By their request I give you a few items, which may guide you in future research, hoping you will excuse the liberty taken.

A trade union is a combination of working-men, of any trade, their purpose being to maintain wages at a living rate, and to protect its members against reductions brought on by the competition of bosses. Sometimes they extend to members aid in cases of sickness or death.

When the unions of different countries unite, they become Internationals.

Though continually in this country and in Europe revolutionary purposes are ascribed to them, their purpose is neither political nor social. They simply band together to prevent that competition in the labor market which enables bosses to cheapen the price of that commodity. Such combinations are surely as legitimate as those of merchants, or manufacturers, or railroad corporations, who thus band together to prevent a lowering of the cost of the commodity in which they deal.

Their mode of enforcing their demands is by strikes; and since these strikes so often result in collisions between the authorities and the strikers, upon their shoulders must be laid part of the blame, if there be blame, of the labor riots which disturbed the peace of the country last summer, and which are the standing scarecrow of the press.

I say part of the blame, because I believe the chief blame rests with the railroad managers, who first built more roads than the trade and travel of the country demand, then wasted the already scanty wages fund in senseless and ruinous competition, and finally sought to make up losses by reducing the pay of their working-men to the starvation point.

It is strange that, though trades unions have existed in this country for more than a generation, and though labor riots are far from being new things, that the writers for the press almost uniformly charge the labor disturbances to the discussions of the Socialistic Labor Party, so recently organized; though its members proclaim their purpose of depending upon argument and the ballot for success, and likewise regard strikes as the most costly and injurious form of labor agitation that can be adopted.

The Communists of this country are found mostly in Shaker villages,—at Onelda, Icaria, and other places of the same sort. They are peaceful in their modes and motives. They seek no general division of property, believing mankind not prepared for it, and desiring only to gather a favored few into their unitary homes.

No man of intelligence will accuse them of revolutionary purposes, unless it be the itemizers for the press; and of them we know that sensation and not truth is the main object of pursuit. Of Communists of the Parisian stripe there are none except a few refugees. There is no necessity for them. The French Communists struggled for local government in cities. In America, we have that already. The purpose of the American Communist is purely social, and has no political bearing whatever.

The Socialistic Labor Party of the United States is an organization which deprecates the constant strife between capital and labor; which believes as firmly as if all its members had been educated at Harvard that there is no natural strife between them; which believes that they are allies, father and son, if you please; with this reservation, however: that labor is the father.

They recognize the fact, however, that there is an actual conflict between those great forces; that there is war when there should be peace. They deplore the increasing poverty, so manifest in the civilized world; view with alarm the heaped up and increasing wealth of individuals and corporations; and with greater alarm, the want, the ignorance, the immorality, which this state of things breeds on the one hand, and the arrogance and almost unlimited social and political influence which it produces on the other.

They are charged with revolutionary purposes; but they recognize the fact that our government is already changed, that the oligarchy of Southern masters has joined hands with an oligarchy of capitalists in the North. This combination settled the question of the disputed presidency. This combination now talks under its breath of a dictatorship, with General Grant at its head. Through its agents it is filling the papers with false reports of Communistic armings, and of Communistic conspiracies, the purpose being to reconcile the people of the United States to the crime which they propose to perpetrate when the American Bonaparte shall see his way clear to his Second of December.

That this purpose exists, and has made its existence known, is shown by the fact that the iron-hearted chancellor of the German Empire has dared to include the United States in his programme for crushing liberty of speech on the labor question.

The Socialistic Labor Party believes that the political condition of the people in the middle ages is paralleled by their industrial condition in this.

Then the humble citizen dwelt in the shadow of the castle of some great baron, who exacted obedience in all things, and gave in return such protection and such privileges as he saw fit.

In the fierce and frequent conflicts which were the normal result of such a state of society, the vassal shared the ruin of his lord, though that ruin was brought about by no fault of his own. A man who refused to live in such vassalage had but two ways to escape: he might become an outlaw, and practise on a small scale the violence which his master practised on a larger; or he might shave his head and become a monk.

There was no effectual remedy for this condition of affairs until the State arose, and through its representative, the king, subdued these haughty barons, and compelled them to respect the rights of their fellow-subjects.

To-day, the lords of capital, singly and in corporations, control the industrial world as absolutely as their predecessors controlled the political world. They grasp the means of labor, land, and machinery, and the armies of labor come and go at their bidding. In their sharp conflicts they waste vast wealth; and when periodic ruin overshadows the marts of the land, the working-man shares in the ruin he had no hand in producing; and dismay, suffering, and gaunt hunger invade a hundred thousand homes.

There is no escape from this vassalage to capital, save in pauperism or crime. A man may give up the struggle and sink into a tramp; or he may enroll himself in the ranks of crime, and curse society with the energy and ingenuity which should have been its blessing.

In consequence of this industrial serfdom, irremediable poverty has come upon thousands. The possession of wife and child, the enjoyment of the elevating influences that cluster around home, are daily becoming unattainable to more thousands.

All over the country we are breeding a mass of corrupt men, whose influence pervades every walk of American life. They swarm around our ballot-boxes, and render our elections, not farces, as they are sometimes called, but infamous frauds. Money to buy these wretches, is a legitimate item of election expenses; and men whose gorge does not rise at contact with them, who can manipulate them, are in great demand as managers of elections. We reward these managers with minor offices; and they, knowing that the great politicians are dependent upon them, deride our efforts at official reform, and make our civil service stink in the nostrils of all decent men. We call in vain upon the better classes to unite against these vandals within the walls. They, like the ass in the fable, are indifferent who is master, so long as they must bear the unavoidable burden.

Upon the eradication of this mass of corruption depends the welfare of American society. Schools cannot cure the evil, for these creatures will not attend schools, nor will they permit the enactment and enforcement of laws requiring compulsory education. To be frank, to educate them, is to increase their power and our danger. Soup-houses, reformatories, prisons, only make them worse.

A few months since, the papers of the country contained many items concerning an unfortunate girl, the inmate of a county poorhouse, who avenged her neglected childhood by becoming the ancestress of a progeny which was, for generations, a burden upon the community in which they lived, as paupers or criminals.

This affords a hint of the way out of our danger. Since debasing influences, mental, moral, and physical, may train a man to crime, so elevating influences may train him to virtue.

The very poor, from whose ranks the criminal classes are in so large a degree recruited, must be surrounded by elevating, humanizing influences. A home must be made possible to every man. Antennal conditions must be improved. God's creatures must be permitted free access to his air, his water, his earth. Monopolies of land and of machinery must be checked, and eventually abolished, and every man who can work have the opportunity afforded him.

As when, freed from the anarchical rule of the barons, men established governments which guard securely their social and political rights,—so if the sway of the lords of capital be broken, they will organize themselves into industrial guilds, competition, which is the death and not the life of trade, will cease. Poverty will be banished, vice reduced to a minimum, and many an idea, now relegated to the realms of Utopia, will be realized on this fair earth of ours.

The Socialistic Labor Party as a remedy for this actual antagonism between labor and capital, for this hinting at despotism, for this increasing poverty, for this dangerous mass of corruption, invokes the aid of the State, of the government founded by the people and for the people.

It alone is competent to deal with the mighty interests involved,—to repress equally the anarchy threatened by revolting labor, and the despotism of greedy capital. It alone can establish the firm peace which results from the enforcement of justice.

Concluding, let me assure you, sir, that all the men who join in the discussions of the working-men are not of "malicious disposition." If you should emerge from the calm, scholastic cloister in which you dwell and mingle with them, you would find their intellects as keen, their motives as pure, their philanthropy as broad, their patriotism as deep, as that of many who have been more fortunate in winning your favorable regard.

I am, sir, respectfully yours,

PETER H. CLARK.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

No. XXVI.

Science is dualism (separative, dispersive) and religion is unism. The logical order (of investigating subjects) begins with dualism and proceeds to unism—inverting the natural order; and this is the reason, as shown at the close of the preceding article, why I have chosen to dispose, in the first instance, of the various classifications of the sciences, reducing them to unity, before entering upon the consideration of the domain of religion.

In other words, science is, in predominance, analytical or distributive, and only in a secondary sense synthetical; while religion is primarily (in predominance) unitive, and only in a secondary sense (in subdominance) dispersive (tending to break up into sects, etc.).

In one word, RELIGION IS THE SENTIMENTAL, THE SPECULATIVE, AND THE SOCIAL DRIFT AND TENDENCY TOWARD UNITY. This is its highest scientific definition. It is primarily, therefore, sentimental; secondarily, dogmatic; and ultimately, social; its dogma playing the quasi-scientific rôle of science within the dominantly unscientific and mainly experiential scope of religion as such. It is, nevertheless, religious dogma or creed, and the underlying common origin of, and essential unity in, it, in the midst of all its seeming manifoldness and variety, which I am now about to consider.

It might almost be said that the fundamental article of the creed of the Reconciliative Church of the Future will be that: There has ever been, and is, and especially that in the future there will be, one only religion, in and for the whole world; and that consequently the seemingly various religions, which have succeeded, or coexisted and replaced or conflicted with, each other, were branches merely of the one underlying and all-embracing religious movement of the world, their conflicts being the necessary or (in religious phrase) the providential differentiations incident to the immense religious evolution in question.

The NEW THEOLOGY, therefore, holds and teaches that the various grand religions of the world, as, for example, Brahmanism, Buddhism, Taoism (or Confucianism), Sintoism, Egyptianism, Olympianism, Judaism, Mohammedanism, Christianity, Spiritism or Spiritualism, Free Religion, and Positivism, are merely larger sects within the pale of the Universal Church; and that such sects or segments of the Church Universal, whether large or small, are merely in the nature of the different classes in a great school-house, all undergoing education in their various degrees. This idea is the basis of their universal reconciliation and future cooperation, in the place of mutual depreciation, prejudice, and persecution, as in the past; for nothing can be more unphilosophical and barbarous, not to say irreligious, than for the several classes of the same school to oppose, persecute, and rend each other.

It is true, however, that the later religions are, in an important sense, the older religions—in that sense in which we are older people than our grandfathers, having our experience added to theirs,—that is to say, they are the higher classes in the great religious school-house of the world; and for us, as Christians, or other advanced holders of later creeds, to sneer at or malign those farther back, or for those who think themselves more advanced than Christians to do so with respect to Christians, is something analogous with the habit of hazing in our colleges and universities, a remnant of barbarism, a custom "more honored in the breach than in the observance."

The Universal Church which shall embrace, reunite or reconcile and coördinate, all these branches of the great religious experience and education of mankind may properly receive and bear the name of the Church of the Grand Reconciliation; or as an alternate name, it might be called the True, but better, ex gratia modestia, the New Catholic Church; and this in turn is, in conception, the religious branch or department of the pantarchal régime, or universal government, or culminative administration, of the totality of collective, that is to say of societary, human affairs. A convenient popular name for the communicants of this new church would be: The Reconciliationists.

The chief factor of religion is not, as I have said, the dogma or doctrine, which is of the intellect, and may be varied in its form of presentation, according to the capacities and grade of advancement of each class; it is, on the other hand, that sentimental bond of unity which binds heart to heart fraternally and in the worship of THE MOST HIGH, and which prompts to mutual acts of kindness and love. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep one's self unspotted from the world."* It is by no means to be inferred, however, that the dogma of religion is therefore unimportant, but that, being the intellectual or rational element of religion, it is more amenable to the scientific method, and more susceptible of graduation to the capacity and state of the catechumen.

INTEGRALISM is the name of the new philosophy, coupled with universoology, which covers the whole ground of Nature, Science, and Art. ART is the effort, through labor, to realize our ideals. RELIGION, in its social aspect, is the result of the reflex action of our highest ideals on our conduct, by stimulating the earnestness of our efforts to realize or to attain to them, exciting especially the unifying sentiment, or the sentiment of the unity of mankind. As a cultus, it is the worship of the most high; meaning, thereby, not necessarily a personal God, an ideal heaven in another world, or any special definite form of conception, but simply that which is the highest, whatsoever it be, to which each individual mind has attained, as an ideal. The woman who casts her infant into the river, or the fire, or the devouring jaws of an idol; the scientist who labors, from the love of truth, to discover new truth; or the atheist who devotes his life to blasting what he believes to be the deleterious delusions of the Christian or any other faith, is as truly religious in his devotion to what he conceives to be the truth as the most devoted Christian. The truth of opinion is another matter, and belongs to the region of inquiry and instruction,—to science rather than religion. It is a perversion of the meaning of religion to make it consist mainly of dogmas, which must, of necessity, undergo change from age to age, with the mere increase of intelligence. It should be the first object of the New Catholic Church to educe, distinctly, and definitely fix this fundamental conception of religion, as the common elementary ground of unity for all sects and special religions, in the higher religious life, and in the higher organization of the religious development of the future, in harmony with Nature, science, and art. The edifice to arise on such a foundation will be rightly entitled to be called THE GRAND RECONCILIATION,—"the final restitution of all things."

It is the mistake of the Church, at this day, to continue to teach dogma as if it were assured knowledge; and the mistake of science to attack dogma as if it were essentially erroneous. Dogma, held as hypothesis, reinforced merely by faith, but held subject to revision and improvement with advancing knowledge, is perfectly legitimate, even from the scientific point of view, and so soon as it ceases to pretend to be anything more will be accepted and cultured by science. Faith is not knowledge, and should not be claimed as such. The very word, "I believe," confesses that "I do not know."

The Scripture phrase, "Now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face," is as applicable to the unfolding future higher knowledge of this world as to the other life believed in by Christians.

The recognition of the consecration and devotion of the whole being to the worship of the most high, or of whatsoever highest ideal, as the essential basis of religion, is, at the same time, the basis of a true and universal religious fellowship, now, perhaps, for the first time distinctly propounded and scientifically defined. Upon this ground, and upon no other, the universal religious reconciliation of mankind becomes possible,—the cooperative unity of all, in a higher and broader sense than that in which the Christian world is now beginning to aspire after a renewed unity; as, by the discovery of universoology, a similar reconciliation of all intellectual conceptions is effected; and as, by pantarchism, the practical orchestration of all human affairs will be accomplished. The measuring reed, the cubic structure of the New Jerusalem, and the governing force of the mystic or sacred numbers, as revealed to the interior vision of St. John, are realized in the exactifications of universal science. The New Catholic Church is, therefore, THE CHURCH OF THE GRAND INTEGRAL AND FINAL RECONCILIATION.

To belong to the New Catholic Church involves little or nothing of ceremony, and does not necessarily demand separation from any other religious or secular body, any more than to be a citizen of the United States precludes citizenship of the individual States of the Union. It is socially and religiously as the United States are politically, and as the pantarchy will be, for all nationalities, se pluribus unum. Within its pale, the other religions and sects of the world are regarded as lower and higher classes engaged in conducting the religious education and training of mankind.

The old religious strongholds will not be subdued by simply denouncing them, in the spirit of a negative infidelity. They will be, easily and even gladly and gratefully, overcome and absorbed, or annexed, by being transcended in their own sphere.

The essential unity of religious dogma is now to be searched for, first, in the past history of doctrine. The idea of essential unities of human affairs in the past, where we are accustomed to see only diversity, is beginning to be familiarized. August Fick, the distinguished German philologist, has published a work entitled The Early-Time Speech-Unity of Hindu-Germanic Europe (Die ehemalige Sprachinheit der Indogermanen Europas). We need a similar treatment of the early-time religious unity of the world; and it is my purpose to give here a radical inception to that kind of elaboration, sufficiently distinct from anything touching on this subject in the labors of others to dispense me from the necessity of specifically naming them.

The foundation conception of theology, that from which the very idea of a religious system of ideas flows, concerns the existence and attributes of a Supreme Being; and modern research is every day more clearly demonstrating that in every nation of the past in which such conception was at all developed, the Supreme Being or the Most High has been conceived of, and held to be, either absolutely one, or relatively one,—as two or three in one, and so recombined in some sort of higher unity or godhead. The Chinese, the Hindu, the Greek, the Jew, the Christian, and the Mohammedan agree in this, and this alone would constitute them, at bottom, members of the same Universal Church.

The idea or conception of the one God is, radically, that of some primal, central, and single source or fountain-head of thought and being, such as human reflection cannot do otherwise than recur to, whenever the attempt is made to account for the nature of things. Hence, as religion, sentimentally considered, resolves itself into the one word, unity—sentimental unity being also love,—so, dogmatically, or on the intellectual side, the religious schematismus of thought also resolves itself into the idea of unity. The whole fundamental conception of religion has relation, therefore, to oneness, and, by analogy, to the arithmetical unit, or one; and again, to the geometrical point, centre, and origin (as, on the other hand, thought relates primarily to division or discrimination, and hence to the number two, and geometrically to the limit, or line. Hence it is that religion is unisual, and thought, knowing, and science dualism).

Max Müller in his recent treatment of the subject of religion recurs to and reaffirms his former definition of its subjective element as "a mental faculty which independent of, nay, in spite of, sense and reason enables man to apprehend the Infinite, under different names and under varying disguises." He adds: "If we but listen attentively, we can hear, in all religions, a groaning of the spirit, a struggle to conceive the inconceivable, to utter the unutterable, a longing after the Infinite, a love of God."

Upon a close scrutiny, this will prove to be only another method of saying the major part of what I have just said. The Infinite identifies itself with unity thus: Infinity is the removal, the thinking away, of limits or bounds. The substance which remains, as the unlimited, then flows together, as one; as undistinguished mass; so that substance, apart from limits (Spinoza) and unity are virtually the same idea. There is this difference however. It is impossible to succeed, absolutely, in the effort to think away all limits. The last and least, but persistent, relic of limitation, in the mental struggle to be rid of it altogether, is this notion of unity, or rather of unisualism. This vanishing point of limit, which still refuses wholly to vanish, identifies itself, therefore, with the substantive mass of unlimitedness around it; and so with the Infinite; and, most naturally, as its centre. It is the intellectual residuum within the Infinite, while Infinity as such pertains to the feeling,—and they two together—Infinity and its centring unity—are the kernel of religion.

With the God-idea thus defined as essential unity, the conflict between theism, pantheism, and atheism virtually ceases, and pletism and rationalism are reconciled; that is to say, there is found in this ultimate analysis a legitimate place for each. As feeling predominates pletism results; as intellect predominates rationalism results; and rationally, if the single unity of the total infinite is conceived of as one-centered, we have monotheism; if the centre is posited many-where or everywhere; for which there are rational considerations; we have polytheism and pantheism, and if the Infinite seems to exclude the idea of centre, we have atheism. These last three phases of conception are simply so many natural outcomes of the wavering intellectual effort to comprehend that which to the intellect is incomprehensible; for, to cognize (to think or know intellectually) is to posit limits; and at this point the intellect is endeavoring to limit away all limits. That which must have something to stand on is endeavoring to stand upon nothing, and in its failure to do so, it may fall upon either side,—except that in theism, the toppling intellect resorts to, and steadies itself by, feeling. In that case, the result is religious faith, which expresses itself in the credo, and is quasi-intellectual.

MORAL THOUGHTFULNESS.

A plain word in season is sometimes the wholesomest of tonics. Thus an obstructive conservative will often say, with a wonderful deal of complacency, that he does not pretend to be any wiser than his neighbors. But why will he not speak his real thought more correctly? Why will he not say that he prides himself on being as great a fool as his neighbors? That is what he really means, for folly is only relative, and in a community of quite wise people the wisest among us would be thought a fool. We ought to keep an ideal standard of conduct continually in view. This will spurn our self-conceit. No matter. It is this realization of the absoluteness of duty which imparts to a man that moral thoughtfulness which bishop Butler and Dr. Arnold have so justly extolled. A little more of that quality, however, will have converted those two men to infidelity, for it was nothing but a defect thereof which led them to shrink or slur over arguments which they could not fairly meet. But then we must use a little tenderness for the Almighty's feelings, lest, by sad chance, "God's truth" should prove to be a lie.

When the seeker after wisdom, Faust-like, throws down his book and pen, and asks, What am I? what do I know? what is the good of it? that is the supreme tragedy. Yet we rise from the study with our souls exalted and our nerves fresh braced, not wishing to live in a fool's paradise,—no, not even though there be no other paradise attainable. Carlyle says of Hume that he did not so much morally live as critically examine. There are indeed two enthusiasms,—of life and of knowledge. And this is one guise of the everlasting contradiction and strict necessity of the totally impossible, which, like the beam of light through the kaleidoscope, assumes an hundred hues, yet is in all the same. This is the problem of problems unsolved. Every one has solved it, but only by a bastard compromise. It may seem more necessary to live than to know; but yet may we not say of the seeker after wisdom that he hath chosen that good part which should not be taken from him? "Strike, but teach me!" exclaimed the Athenian of old; and this is the only decent instance of humility. Besides, when all is said, what is the worth of life except to know and to contemplate? It is only this which exalts men above the brutes. It is culture which constitutes the whole of the difference between R. W. Emerson and psalm-singing Senky. More science does not suffice for an enlarged knowledge. It is necessary to combine, like Emerson, the qualities of poet and philosopher. So long as men are what they are and live as they live, surely moral elevation is even more a desideratum than any species of material increase. Religion forbids grossness, but culture prevents it. Mark well the difference. The Christian devotee must forego his vicious pleasures, or else say his prayers and wash in the blood of the lamb. After all, we who love wisdom are like the pious, with a difference. We both have our enthusiasms. Theirs is for what they please to call the truth; ours is for truth; and where truth leads, though into the jaws of death and hell, there will we follow it.

NEW YORK CITY. CHARLES ELLERSHAW.

SPIRITUALIST RESOLUTIONS.

CHICAGO, May 24, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I herewith enclose you a copy of some resolutions and "hints" which have been almost unanimously adopted by the Spiritualists of Chicago.

A goodly proportion of the prominent Spiritualists were either personally present or represented by others. It is safe to say these resolutions and "hints" express the sentiments of the larger class of enlightened and progressive minds among our more advanced Spiritualists and thinkers. Agreeably with the resolutions I enclose you a copy for publication.

Fraternally yours, D. P. KAYNER, Sec'y.

Resolutions.

At a meeting of Spiritualists held in the parlors of the Third Unitarian Church, Wednesday evening, May 22, the following resolutions with regard to mediums in general, were adopted with but a single dissenting vote:—

WHEREAS, A respectful request has been made to Bastian and Taylor by a large number of those interested in the investigation of spirit phenomena that, in view of the many recent exposures of professed mediums, and of the doubts and disbeliefs excited in the public mind as to the genuineness of any form materializations, and in justice to themselves as professional mediums, and to the cause they profess to regard, they would give a series of test sances, that their exhibitions might be observed under conditions affording accuracy of observation, and which reasonable request Messrs. Bastian and Taylor have refused to grant; and

WHEREAS, Truth always should seek and submit to the most thorough and searching investigation; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in our opinion, their refusal to satisfy the just demands of the Spiritualists of Chicago, is presumptive evidence of practices upon their part, which will not bear investigation.

Resolved, That we will not give countenance, encouragement, or support to Bastian and Taylor, until they give evidence of the validity of their claim, as they have been requested to do; and we recommend to all Spiritualists throughout the United States that they discontinue them, lest the large and deserving class who follow the vocation of mediumship and the cause shall suffer from their final exposure which is sure to follow.

Resolved, That the daily papers of this city and the publications devoted to Spiritualism throughout the United States be requested to publish these resolutions.

A. B. TUTTLE, Chairman.

D. P. KAYNER, Sec'y.

Resolved, That we fully approve of the following suggestions, and recommend that all mediums who ask indorsement of Spiritualists be required to assent and conform thereto.

Physical Phenomena.

Hints to Investigators and Mediums.

1. A genuine, honest, and intelligent medium will, in his own interests, desire that the tests of the phenomena shall be so stringent as to preclude suspicion or doubt. He will wish to have such conditions as no mere impostor can submit to.

2. The minute a medium begins to show irritation at the reasonable and respectful exactions of investigators, he shows, unless he can give fair reasons to the contrary, that he is not cooperating with the truthseekers, and becomes justly an object of distrust. Suspect that medium.

3. Phenomena occurring in the dark should always be accepted with caution. But there are conditions which even darkness does not vitiate; for instance, where the medium comes unattended, and while his hands and feet are held, musical instruments are intelligently played on and independent hands are felt. But the hands and feet should be grasped before the room is darkened; and if released for a single moment, on any plea whatever, the light should be struck and the conditions again resumed in the light. Never trust to the sense of feeling alone in such cases.

4. To establish extraordinary facts, the proofs must be extraordinary, and this the medium, unless he is either a simpleton or an impostor, will admit and act up to.

5. A medium known to be unscrupulous, mendacious, or tricky, should be trusted only where the phenomenon is of such a character that it would be unreasonable even for the most unbending sceptic to deny its occurrence. For instance, if the investigator is allowed to take his own locked slate, untouched by the medium, and to hold it out in his presence, in broad daylight, and if under these conditions there is produced a written message, indicating clairvoyance, the test is irresistibly strong. This has been repeatedly done.

6. Our duty where mediums, however genuine, have been detected in fraud, is to put the public on its guard against them. The penalty which impostors must pay is to have it known generally that they have cheated once, and are likely to cheat again; and the safest way is to avoid such mediums altogether.

7. Conditions, however, ought to be so stringent that nothing is left to depend on the assumed good character or respectability of the medium. The phenomena are of a scientific character, and as such cannot be established as authentic by mere opinion, but only by actual knowledge. Faith cannot become a factor in the problem.

8. Where a medium has been repeatedly tested by all the investigators present, of course there can be a relaxation of stringent conditions for familiar phenomena, but not for any new ones.

9. It is hard to state generally the absolute test conditions for all cases. We have given two examples for particular phenomena. Investigators must exercise their reason in fixing absolute conditions.

10. Where several investigators are present, it often happens that the responsibility of scrutinizing closely is so divided that no one person gives to the medium's movements all the attention required. Each thinks that his neighbor will make up for his own deficiencies, and that in the aggregate there will be certainty. This is a delusive supposition; and so the most successful results (as in the case of the slate-writing phenomenon) are often obtained where only one investigator is present with the medium.

11. Investigators who are jointly investigating should consult together in advance of the sitting, and each take his particular share in the general scrutiny. Until a medium is thoroughly tested, take nothing for granted. Trust not to smooth words or fair looks. Some of the deepest villains have the art of appearing frank, open-hearted, and guileless. Impose such conditions that it shall matter not to you whether the medium is honest or dishonest.

12. When you have had one successful sance, before publishing it to the world as conclusive, try another, and still another, varying the conditions if possible, but not making them less stringent.

13. Distrust the medium who would have you think that he must have his own particular room, because of its "magnetism," for his manifestations. The genuine medium will almost always let you choose your own place for a sitting, provided there are no obvious objections to it. Investigators should carry with them the most harmonious personal conditions possible, and approach the presence of the medium with a feeling of kindly interest. Absolute test conditions may be imposed upon mediums for physical manifestations without subjecting such mediums to physical injury, pain, or discomfort.

14. Cut out these hints, submit them to the medium, and learn from him or her what objections, if any, he or she may have to any part of them. Give not too much credence to excuses for modifying strict conditions.

THE END OF POLEMICS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

An eminent divine, writing some time since in the Independent, thus forecasts a good time coming "when the Church will be one organic, visible body, with an organization growing naturally out of the one distinctive doctrine of Christ crucified,—which involves on one side self-abandonment and Christ-accepted, and on the other God pardoning sin and bestowing his Holy Spirit. And here," he adds with charming naïveté, "will be the end of polemics!"

H. B. B.

A RATIONAL CHURCH NEEDED.

As it is not the mission of the Liberal League to teach morality nor to cultivate the spiritual and æsthetic sentiments in human nature, I believe that a Liberal Church, based on rational and moral principles, would meet a very vital want of liberalism. Of course there are many liberals who would scent the priestly spirit in any attempt to organize a church inside of liberalism, and many of them could not be benefited by such an institution; but there is certainly material among freethinkers for an organization designed to promote a higher degree of moral culture than that contemplated by the Liberal League.

Impossible as it would be to organize any large class of liberals on any common basis of speculative belief, there is certainly sufficient unanimity of opinion among the independent thinkers of the country on the principles of morality and practical righteousness for some institution which would serve to strengthen and utilize the moral and spiritual energies of our natures more than can be done in our present disorganized state. One of the great defects of liberalism, as it appears to me, is its lack of moral earnestness. It needs consecration to the moral ideals of life,—a stronger devotion to the mission it has but as yet partially espoused. It is certainly time for liberalism to begin to manifest some positive, constructive faith. It has remained in a crude, puerile state of negation long enough. If it has anything more than disbelief to propagate, it is time the world knew it. It has intellect sufficient to accomplish much, if it had a corresponding amount of soul.

Because every liberal could not join such an organization as the one suggested here is no reason why the thousands who feel the need of more religious sympathy and association than they now enjoy should remain in their present unorganized state. Liberals have a broader mission than that of securing the Demands of Liberalism, just and necessary as these may be. I do not seek to disparage the cause and labors of the Liberal League; but I believe we need something more than this organization. We need an organization that will by the cooperation and sympathy it furnishes strengthen our moral impulses, and elevate our ideals of life and all of its sublime obligations. Call this religious culture or anything else you please, but give me the thing itself, and I am satisfied. Discard the names, religion, and Church, if they are odious; but let us have some organization that will cultivate those sentiments of human nature that have even been too beautiful and pure, too refined and aspiring, to be fitly designated by any symbol of thought known to the language of man.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 50 insertions, 6c per line.	For 51 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.
13	25	51	100

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STRENNIS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,

No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1878, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 10 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains various reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—"as Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilcox and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of Important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly JournalDEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.Y.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Heavenly Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBAUGH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Midwinters.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT of the English Constitution.....	1.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	1.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	2.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUSCHWITZ'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 3 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.20
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	1.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	1.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONROUE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Thomson, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Haeckel, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Thomson, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	1.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DIERING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Name. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 1 vol.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Process Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Sahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBAACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Comic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Hermann and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition, with Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	1.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Old-Fashioned Days.....	2.00
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journeys.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V. J.) Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of Humboldt from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Questions on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.80
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeelings.....	1.75
Studies for Solitude.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses from a Fairy. A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Zoology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.50
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by R. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS O.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	1.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	4.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 3 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 1 vol.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 3 vols.....	4.00
Process Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	4.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1833 to 1883.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.35
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 1 vol., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	3.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JUAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the San Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MURLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Tradition, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Excesses from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Unity: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.25
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	8.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I and M.DCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotter Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hogged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.50
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTER (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: The Possibility of Worlds other than the Earth. The Light of Recent Science on the Light of Recent Science.....	2.00
Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.75
Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Seasons, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, &c.....	1.50
The Expansion of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (E.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 35 vols.....	11.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Humani- tial to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	2.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science. Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.50
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.00
The Last Days of Pompeii. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.00
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 8 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Remond, and Lovell the Whigover.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diaries, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Book, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Daily Diary, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humorous, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Un- printed Pieces.....	1.50
THAYER'S (MRS. CHIL) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	4.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Life and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lectures in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TITLES (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (K. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D.) A Summer in Locke Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTEE'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	1.50
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

GIRLS—5 nice perforated notions for fancy work 10 cts. J. W. RUSSELL, Newton, Mass.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $4 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINEW & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUM & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTREPRISE.

Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doeringer & Co., 66 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. E. Gladstone, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, nest, $1.35.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Muxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Clifford, Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn.

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year. Published every month by the ROBE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,
Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin Wednesday, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $2.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE
AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employes are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager. General Passenger Agent. C. B. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,
PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!
AN EPITOME OF THE
Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 5th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.
WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. BARNES,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.00.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

WASHINGTON ILLUSTRATED.

The subscriber is prepared to engage for the next lecture season (or for the summer, at the place of popular resort), for the delivery of his lectures on "Washington and its Institutions." These lectures are brilliantly illustrated by a very large number of Stereoscopic Views of public buildings, works of art, etc. They have won enthusiastic encomiums from their audiences and the press. For circulars, giving full information, address Rev. FREDERIC MINCKLEY, Dorchester Station, Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. ABBOT, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.00.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.00.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!
CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 13, 1878.

WHOLE No. 442.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

