2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS B. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

THE LATE REVIVAL in Richmond, Virginia, seriously interfered with the attendance of the negro children at the public schools.

THE NEW HAVEN public schools, not including the High School, have 68.33 per cent. of foreign parentage among the children that attend them.

THE NEW YORK ASSEMBLY recently voted $50,000 to the Catholic Protector, on the plea that it was not a "sectarian institution." This plea should be classed among the shams which are also shames.

THE Army and Navy Journal "advocates the abolition of chaplaincies. All religious services in the army should be voluntary, and it claims that missionaries are plenty enough to perform such services."

THE INDIANA State Executive Committee of the National Liberal League has been duly constituted as follows: Dr. N. D. Watkins, chairman, Xenia; Dr. J. R. Monroe, Seymour; Col. W. B. Erskine, Madison; Dr. Kersey Graves, Richmond; B. F. Hayden, Colfax.

ONE DOES NOT like to hear such things as these of a religious body which has itself suffered so much persecution: "It is rumored in London that an order has been issued to all the synagogues to publicly curse Hannah de Rothschild for having married the Christian, Lord Roseberry; and the faithful are also ordered to spit on the ground when her name is mentioned."

WE TAKE considerable interest in the conflict going on among the Free Masons over the question of religious liberty. The Washington Post of May 9 stated that—"The Grand Lodge of Masons of the District of Columbia held an administrative session last night and passed a resolution condemning the action of the Grand Lodge of France, which has eliminated a belief in God from its constitution, as a requisite for membership."

THE SCHOOL LAW of California, in violation of the Constitution of that State, practically excludes all "Mongolian children" from the benefits of the public schools. A petition of thirteen hundred Chinamen not long since requested the Legislature to allow them (equally with Africans and Indians) separate schools, urging that the Chinese of San Francisco, in the year 1876-7, contributed $42,000 towards the school fund. What monstrous injustice to render such a petition necessary! And it was refused!

IT IS SAID: "The Roman Catholics are complaining, with self-evident justice on their side, that there is only one chaplain of their faith in the United States army, and not one in the navy, although about half of the soldiers and a large majority of the seamen are said to be Catholics by profession." We beg pardon for differing, but there is no "self-evident justice" but abolishing chaplains everywhere, and ceasing to tax the people for the support of priests, whether Catholic or Protestant. These are "hard times," and the people can afford to economize in chaplains.

A PITTSBURG "Communist" writes to the Leader that the workmen are preparing to rectify some of the "cursed evils" of the power of capital over them. They stand ready "to cope with capital through the clash of arms, the moment they are ready for the bloody work." In order that the editor may not be "floundering in the dark and theorizing any longer upon a practical question," he proclaims that the aims and purposes of the labor organizations are simply to gain justice and right,—"peacefully if we can, forcibly if we must." "A short season longer we will appeal to the reason of those who seek to make us slaves; but if the inhuman desire of capitalists to add to their wealth by further oppression of labor continues, then force shall assert what reason and persuasion failed to bring about. This is all there is of it, and this is all there will be of it."

MR. FROTHINGHAM'S voluntary retirement from the Presidency of the Free Religious Association, after a faithful and honorable service of eleven years in that capacity, from the Association's birth, cannot be suffered to pass without at least a few words here in grateful recognition of what he has done for the society which he helped to found. As a presiding officer at its conventions, he has won the highest esteem and the affectionate regard of his fellow-workers, and commanded the admiration of his audiences by his ability, eloquence, and unfailing courtesy and fairness. We cannot say good-by to him as the President of the Association without a pang of deep regret, scarcely relieved by the knowledge that he will still continue to act in a new capacity with his old associates for the furtherance of the same principles which they have so long served shoulder to shoulder. It has been a most honorable record, now most honorably and unselfishly closed; and his comrades in the good cause of "Freedom and Fellowship in Religion" will always cherish its memory as one of the things of which they will always be proud. At the same time, we would extend a hand of most cordial greeting to the new President, Professor Adler, and assure him of our heartiest welcome to his new position. He has already won golden opinions on every hand by his character, ability, and quiet but deep enthusiasm for the cause of humanity. His election was made with the unanimous approval of the members, and we hope his term will be as long and distinguished as that of his predecessor. Better than that we do not know how to wish him.

IT WILL NOT be improper, we trust, to quote these two passages from private letters of Mr. O. B. Frothingham and Mr. C. D. B. Mills, considering the weight of their names and the need of forming an enlightened public opinion on the point touched upon. Mr. Frothingham writes: "I want you to feel that I am heartily with you in regard to the wisdom of modifying, and the unwisdom of repealing, the law against obscene literature. The distinction between free-thinking and free-living is one that by all means must be drawn, and this crisis offers precisely the opportunity needed for emphasis. I have indeed grave doubts as to the policy and principle of tampering with the mails. The evil, it seems to me, may be checked at the termini where it occurs. This, however, is a matter of detail, and does not affect the substantial merits of the case we make. Ingersoll is a tower of strength on your side." With regard to "tampering with the mails," the decision of the Supreme Court, quoted in our leader of this week, shows that this is not permitted by the law, even as it is. Mr. Mills writes: "I have wanted for some time to write to you and assure you that your word with regard to the obscene literature agitation is cordially and emphatically approved by friends that I know in this section. That word is brave, is manly, is fitting, is eminently timely. There can be no effective stand made except on the ground you have assumed. Our greatest dangers in all this warfare, as I fear, come from the professed liberals themselves, from inside rather than outside the fort. We must make it to appear that we stand unequivocally for right, for justice, for public as also for private purity, for the vital interests in the moralities of human society, and never by possibility allow ourselves to be identified or implicated with those who seek to undermine and destroy, to debauch the public mind and morals, or we shall be overwhelmed as we deserve with utter defeat." These gentlemen belong to the class whom the Truth Seeker stigmatizes as "the miserable few who howl for culture and heightened decency." Let the public judge who is in the right.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.	Francis E. Abbot , Boston, Mass.
Vice-Presidents.
Hon. E. P. Hurlbut	Albany, N. Y.
Hon. Samuel E. Sewall	Boston, Mass.
Hon. Nathaniel Holmes	St. Louis, Mo.
Hon. Henry Booth	Chicago, Ill.
Hon. George W. Julian	Irvington, Ind.
Hon. Eliza Wright	Boston, Mass.
Mr. O. B. Frothingham	New York, N. Y.
Mr. W. M. J. Potter	New Bedford, Mass.
Mr. P. P. Hallowell	Boston, Mass.
Mr. James Parton	Newburyport, Mass.
Mr. F. Schuenemann-Pott	San Francisco, Cal.
Hon. Abraham Payne	Providence, R. I.
Rev. M. J. Savage	Boston, Mass.
Rev. B. F. Elsenthal	Chicago, Ill.
Rev. W. H. Spencer	Sparks, Wis.
Mr. Samuel L. Hill	Florence, Mass.
Mr. E. W. Meddagh	Detroit, Mich.
Mr. Karl Heinzen	Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
Mr. Horace Seaver	Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
Mr. Isaac M. Wise	Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
Mr. D. M. Bennett	Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
Mr. Moritz Ellinger	Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
Mr. B. F. Underwood	Thorndike, Mass.
Rev. Robert Collyer	Chicago, Ill.
Col. Robert G. Ingersoll	Peoria, Ill.
Dr. T. L. Brown	Birmingham, N. Y.
Hon. E. S. McKim	Franklin, Pa.
Elmer P. W. Evans	Lebanon, N. Y.
Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson	New York City.
Mrs. Amy Post	Rochester, N. Y.
Mrs. Elizabeth Oady Stanton	Tenafly, N. J.
Mrs. Lillie Holley	Louisburg, Va.

Secretary.	W. H. Hamlen , 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.
Assistant Secretary.	Miss Jane F. Titcomb , 142 Chandler St., Boston.
Treasurer.	J. A. J. Wilcox , 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.
Board of Directors.
F. E. Abbot	W. H. Hamlen.
J. A. J. Wilcox	H. L. Green.
D. G. Crandon

Executive Committee.
Alabama	J. H. Halley, Selma.
Arkansas	JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California	J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado	DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut	GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware	JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
Florida	T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia	DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois	DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana	N. D. WATKINS, Lima.
Iowa	J. C. MICHELS, Adel.
Kansas	JOHN FARMER, Fort Scott.
Kentucky	S. B. CLARK, Wiltonville.
Louisiana	EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine	DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland	J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts	W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan	KARL SCHENKMAN, Detroit.
Minnesota	J. B. BASSITT, Minneapolis.
Missouri	S. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Nebraska	W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nevada	V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire	WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey	FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York	H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina	J. W. THORNE, Warren.
Ohio	E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon	SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt.
Pennsylvania	G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island	GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina	P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee	DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas	DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont	E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia	L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia	DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin	ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
District of Columbia	W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Wyoming	W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
	NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. Crandon, Chairman	Chelsea, Mass.
Mrs. Sarah B. Otis	171 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE	231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LANCASHIRE, ENGLAND. —President, Rev. W. E. Copeand; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeld.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeld, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeand, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS. —President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Heckman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA. —President, Carrie B. Kilgus; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN. —President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Ferd. Halberg, Ernst Clausen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHESAIRE, MASSACHUSETTS. —President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. M. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA. —(Officers not reported.)
Issued to Chas. Hays, G. O. Hyatt, F. O. Lawrence, A. T. Hudac, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grunlike, J. H. Wilson, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO. —President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
FALMOUTH, BOSTON. —President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Eliza Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK. —President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. O. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. O. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS. —President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO. —President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korn, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA. —President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
Hudson, Michigan. —President, Dr. Levi R. Peterson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi R. Peterson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, H. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK. —President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT. —President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie.
Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheppard, and others.
St. Joseph, Missouri. —President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunzing.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK. —President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erring, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK. —President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK. —President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Cool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK. —President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
CLEVELAND, OHIO. —President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN. —President, Robert O. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK. —President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA. —President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
FLORENCE, IOWA. —President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT. —President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Boys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO. —President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN. —President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heisman, F. Bensch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
ALBANY, NEW YORK. —President, Thomas J. Hennessy; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BAY CITY, MICHIGAN. —President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Eileworth, M. E. Root, and others.
CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS. —President, Horace Newell, M. D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
WAUSAU, WISCONSIN. —President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville). —President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
ENTERPRISE, KANSAS. —(Officers not yet reported.)
Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sent, M. Sann, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sent, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Ely, J. F. Buhner, and others.
PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY. —President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
LINCOLN, PENNSYLVANIA. —President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Lincoln Liberal League.
KEOKUK, IOWA. —President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
NEW YORK, NEW YORK. —President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauenstein, M. D., E. Lebowitz, and others.
OLATHE, KANSAS. —President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
CARBONDALE, KANSAS. —(Officers not yet reported.)
Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Atchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Atchison, H. Reilly, and others.
St. Louis, Missouri. —President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY. —President, F. J. Kiehl; Secretary, F. B. Parso.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Freedom in Religion.

An Exposition of the Principles of the Free Religious Association.

A LECTURE DELIVERED AT THE CHURCH OF THE MESSIAH, ST. LOUIS, MAY 19, 1878.

BY HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES.

The following able and interesting lecture was delivered at the Church of the Messiah, on Sunday last, by Hon. Nathaniel Holmes, formerly Judge of the Supreme Court of Missouri:—

My Friends,—I have no commission to speak in the name of the Free Religious Association. I presume it was because my views were believed to be in accord with the objects and aims of the Association that I was selected for a Western Vice-President, and that I now have the honor of addressing you here. Indeed, it has been with much hesitation that I have ventured to appear in this place and to speak on a topic which would seem to belong rather to the higher spheres of the reverend clergy than to those lower realms of law and philosophy in which my studies have been groping. But,—freedom in religion! Perhaps a layman may be heard to speak his word for that. You have recently heard the Catholic, the Protestant, and the Jew; next, surely, must come the Gentile. When such high and delicate matters can be discussed (as they have been) with ability and candor (if I may not say, also, with brotherly kindness), we may certainly congratulate ourselves that we live in an age of general knowledge and liberal culture, and under a constitution of government which secures to all alike freedom of thought and action, freedom of conscience and of speech, and freedom in religion.

The constitution of the Free Religious Association declares its object to be "to promote the practical interests of pure religion, to increase fellowship in the spirit, and to encourage the scientific study of man's religious nature and history."

These are high and important objects; you must not expect me to attempt an adequate exposition of them. I may say that, as it appears to me, this Association comprises among its members some of the best scholars, thinkers, writers, and divines of this country or of this century. Such names as Frothingham, Emerson, Weiss, Potter, Abbot, Channing, Samuel Johnson, Bartol, and Alger are a guarantee in themselves of the learning, sincerity, earnestness, and wisdom of the undertaking. In the sphere of religious thought and of the culture of humanity I regard it as the foremost movement of our age. It may be said to represent the advance-guard of the entire intellectual, moral, and spiritual progress of our time. It signals the transition which is going on all around us and in spite of ourselves, silently, but inevitably, from old to new beliefs, from the dead things of the past to the living future. It rises above Bibles, creeds, liturgies, to those clear truths of Nature, of mind and soul, both divine and human, which are or may become credible to all men. It takes its stand upon that high platform of enlightened reason and faith in Nature and in man, as well as in God and religion, where the learned Hindu, the pious Mussulman, the Jew and the Christian, the Chinese Confucian and the thoughtful Buddhist, the theist and the atheist, may join hands in good-fellowship, and each convert the other to his own doctrine, in good humor, and without the least difficulty, because each and all can and must, at last, believe in the same universal truth and reality. To the orthodox Brahmin, who takes the Vedas to be the actual word of God, and the only criterion of truth or religion; to the orthodox Jew, who does the same thing with the Old Testament; to the orthodox Christian, who does the like with both the Old and the New Testaments; to the orthodox Moslem, who does the same with the Koran; or if there be any other inveterately orthodox Scripture, free religion appeals alike to all, in a spirit of kindly sympathy, to reform a belief which, in either case, is so equally groundless and so unreasonable, and which constitutes, to this day, the chief barrier to friendly intercommunion among the most cultivated peoples of the earth; which hinders the diffusion of knowledge, obstructs the progress of science, hampers education, retards the advance of civilization and the arts among the nations, keeps whole races in the bonds of ignorance and superstition, begets violent hatreds and devastating wars, disturbs the harmony or limits the freedom of social intercourse everywhere, and renders anything like a truly religious brotherhood among men next to impossible, and which, finally, is mere matter of blind opinion, that now does, if it has not always done, more harm than good to man and the true culture of his religious nature. Free religion would persuade all to listen, and without jealousy or fear, to real truth, to the results of science, of speculative philosophy, of critical research. It is not alarmed, though evolution be carried from animals to men, and even to the sidereal spheres; though philosophy unfold its profoundest theory of the conscious One, or of the unconscious All; no, not even though all biblical cosmogonies, all miraculous revelations and inspirations, and all the infallibilities erected thereon, should be tumbled from their antique foundations. In short, it is the outcome, culmination, and flowering of that Puritan liberty of conscience and belief which had its birth scarcely three centuries ago, when the people of Holland cut their dikes and allowed their cities to be swallowed up in the sea, rather than submit their souls to mental and spiritual slavery.

I believe it does not seek to abolish the sects or the churches, but rather to aid and advance them in that process of refinement and thought which, under the light of increasing knowledge, is steadily going forward within every church and sect, in spite of itself, in spite of creeds, the beliefs of ancient sages, theoretic dogmas of school divinity, or the formalities of worship. It knows that in every and all progress there must be a van- and rear-guard, as well as a main body; all cannot march in front. But there is, always and everywhere, that lofty line on which "honor travels in a strait so narrow,

Where one but goes abreast."

The world has many peoples. In every people there are many societies, churches, communities, and families. The leader must needs fly at the head of his harrow. There are many flocks and many leaders. The foremost, everywhere, must bear aloft the torch which is to light the way for all the rest. There can be no danger from too much light. It is only half-knowledge that makes men mad.

We have looked to Christianity for moral guidance and spiritual light. The friends of freedom in religion are by no means hostile to the truly moral and spiritual welfare of mankind, nor, indeed, to Christianity in so far as it ministers real instruction, true guidance, and beneficent relief to struggling humanity. Correctly understood, such seems to be their own great purpose. That main body of truth and wisdom, and the religious reverence, and the graceful solemnities which the Christian teaching has gathered up and absorbed into itself, and inculcated and molded into form, along the line of eighteen centuries of human progress, and which constitute its essence and real worth, they do not oppose. They would distinguish the virtual substance from unessential forms and pernicious adjuncts, truth from error, fact from myth, vital morality from blind opinion, an intelligible theory of Providence and fate, of man and Nature, from the narrow dogmas of an obsolete theology; and, finally, religion itself, pure, universal, free religion, from mere sectarian bigotry and superstition. They would unloose all spiritual bonds. They do not hesitate to recognize the patent and undeniable fact, that historical criticism and modern research have utterly undermined and overthrown, for every enlightened and free people, the miraculous authority of all biblical revelations, and rendered incredible henceforth the pretended infallibility of the Old Testament or the New, of the Christ, the Church, or the Pope. To the greater knowledge and deeper insight of the nineteenth century into the physical, intellectual, moral, and spiritual laws of the universe, and into the history of religions and of the human race, it matters not at all, in their view, whether theoretic divinity came from the Jews, the Neoplatonists, or the Fathers of the Church; whether the doctrine of the Trinity, of the last judgment, of future rewards and punishments, and eternal damnation, came from Paul, or from the Egyptians, or from Plato (in whose writings something like it may be found); whether the idea of the Christ came from the Jewish expectation of a Messiah or from the man Jesus; whether the morality of Christ's teaching was original with himself or was derived from the Essenes, the Stoics, the Buddha, or the Chinese classics; nor, indeed, whether that high religious fervor which bore Jesus of Nazareth to the cross on Calvary were a natural-human or a supernatural-divine inspiration; for the same religious power of the soul may now, as ever before, inspire living men to good deeds and a better life, and even drive the best of men to the taking up of some cross, likewise, following him.

Ah! but, just here, what about the future life, the promise of immortality, if you sweep away the divine authority? Yes,—

"To die—to sleep;
To sleep! perchance to dream; ay, there's the rub;
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause."

Christ, as it is said, spake as one having authority. What authority? Miracles, some say; but, alas! the miracles have all faded away into myths, and ceased to be credible to the enlightened mind. What could he know about it more than we do, more than Cicero, more than Plato, five hundred years before, or Proclus, five hundred years after? It was not a new idea with him. The belief was entertained by many pious philosophers before his birth. If we imagine the voice of God was more powerfully heard in his soul than in that of other men, yet it must have been heard in the same way. There never was any other possible way. So it was heard in Moses, in Socrates, in Plotinus, in Swedenborg; so in Boehmen, in Bunyan, in Wesley, in William Penn. More direct announcement, any special authority, is neither conceivable nor credible. The Scripture itself gives no definite or intelligible information concerning it, but leaves it in all the vagueness of an oriental dream. How should God himself know, in advance, what he would finally do with any created soul? With the strongest Christian faith, it is but a hope, at best. It can be nothing more. Emerson (a Vice-President of the Free Religious Association) tells us the best proof of it he can find is the feeling and desire to have it; but he adds, what we most need is not eternal duration, but more depth. The young child said: "To live forever! how tired I should be!" Here is the thought of Homer's Achilles, in the youth of Greece: When Ulysses visited the prophet "Tiresias old" in Hades, he met there the shade of Achilles, and said to him: "In life the Argives honored thee like a god, and now again in thy greatness thou rulest the dead here where thou art." He straightway made answer: "Console me not in death, noble Ulysses! Would rather that I were a bondsman of the globe, the servant of a master, of some poor man, whose living were but scanty, than thus to be the king of all the nations of the dead."

There are, there always were, and perhaps always will be, many and different opinions about it. Plato argued rather for the immortality of the universal soul than for the eternal continuance of finite souls, though, in parables, he hinted at that. The philosophy of Aristotle explicitly denied the immortality of the finite soul (Grote's Aristot., II., 232). The Nirvana of the Buddhists was a resolution into the Eternal One and Same,—the being freed from all finite limitation, a deliverance from fate. This, of course, in a rigid, metaphysical analysis, would be equivalent to the annihilation of the finite existence as such; but in the practical belief of the Buddhists, it is most probably some vague, uncritical notion of immortality, or a termination of the transmigrations of the soul in an eternal state of pure contemplation. The philosophy of Hegel seems to maintain that the divine soul, creating Nature, returns through the order of natural limitation to freedom again as self-moving soul in man; and that human souls may fly off, as it were (like bubbles blown into the air), into the blank void, to lead an independent self-existence, dwelling in eternity. One of Jean Paul Richter's disputants believed in an eternal ascent, but in no created culmination. The Neoplatonists held that the creative intelligence let itself downward (as it were) through a sort of hierarchical ideal architectonic of lesser intelligences, superior and inferior gods, angels, spirits, souls of men and of animals, even into the fixed order of material Nature; that the body lives in the soul, not the soul in the body; and that human souls may rise again to any sphere of the heavenly intelligences. This is about the most rational theory for the immortality of the soul that I know of. Swedenborg seems to have been much taken with it, and tried hard to introduce it into the Scriptures, or, at least, to find it embodied in them. But here comes another, a new-fangled evolutionary theory, proceeding, not from above downwards, but from the dark abyss upwards—gravity, falling atoms, protoplasm, animalcules, insects, mollusks, vertebrates, monkeys, men,—and believes that the body is the soul, and that when it dies it descends again to carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, gravity. I do not find many friends of free religion advocating this theory. The scientific evolution, rightly understood, may be true enough as far as it goes, but it may turn out that the entire universe is an evolution of mind and soul into a creation.

No argument can reach beyond a certain degree of probability. Dr. Dewey's splendid discussion of the problem of human life and destiny, grounded in part on the continuous moral discipline of this earthly life—not to be so abruptly cut off—amounts to little more. The earnest Mr. Abbot of THE INDEX can give no reason for the hope he cherishes which he would himself think ought to satisfy another mind. Dr. Sonnenschein thinks the belief is "a necessary sequence of a belief in the eternal God of life"; but admits that the Jew does not adopt it "with an implicit faith," knowing he may be mistaken in details; but that the "mysteries are for the Eternal, our God."

On any theory, what matters it? Are not life, law, order, duty, the true, the good, the beautiful and divine, here, exactly as much as they possibly can be anywhere? These things have something perennial and eternal in their own nature. They are indeed relative also, and admit of all degrees of their contraries. They descend from the highest, or (if you please) they ascend by degrees ever upward from the darkest depths to the height of that absolute One that dwells in eternity, that is the highest good in the whole, and is the life and the light of all that lives and of all that is. No imaginable other world can exist, as good as this or better than this, where is not some like infinite order of differences and degrees, in the whole constitution of things, as we find here; where is not both providence and fate in all that is created. Who could bear an eternal monotony of one and the same? Is not one life enough? And should we not rather be thankful for that than waste our energies crying for more? Or, if there is to be another world for us, can any mortal expect to fare the worse for having made the best use of this one? I believe not. Says Goethe:—

"Life's no resting, but a doing;
Let thy life be deed on deed."

Says Shakespeare:—

"Joy's soul lies in the doing."

So far as I know, the friends of freedom in religion do not lose themselves in mystical contemplations of immaterial, empty spirit, or other visionary phantasms that can have no real existence, either in the universe or outside of it. They rather aspire to a knowledge of that essential and real spirit that works in and through the universe. Nor do they merely wander in metaphysical abstractions, but rather look to the practical uses of life, the real interests of men and women, the integrity of the family, the welfare of society, the good of the State. They regard rights and duties. They value industries, economy, and property as the source of all prosperity and the means of higher culture. They do not despise wealth, if it be honestly acquired and wisely employed. They seek to better the conditions of common life, and to raise the tone of higher life. They would lend a really helping hand to the poor, the oppressed, the down-trodden of all the earth. They would send forth at least an encouraging voice to all those peoples to whom liberty of conscience, thought, and speech is as yet unknown. They would advance the whole nature and state of man here upon the green earth; they do not waste themselves in idle dreams about that "undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveller returns." They are willing to listen to all speculations, all voices and signs, theories and facts. They would suppress no truth. They are equally ready to scale the loftiest ideas of Plato, to sound the deepest categories of Aristotle or of Kant, to explore the Neoplatonic hypostases of the good, the Intelligence, the soul and Nature, the divine substance of Spinoza, or the thinking essence of Berkeley, the mounds of Leibnitz, the atoms of Dalton, the matter and force, and the new-fangled energy (kinetic and potential), and the interstellar ether of the latest scientists. They will even look into the Darwinian evolution, the physiological psychology of Lewes, the Spencerian sociology, and all the other ologies and isms, even to atheism. I presume they would not shut their ears even to Matthew Arnold's obtuse metaphysic of being, nor utterly scorn his rare and thin definition of God as the sum total that makes for righteousness. Mill's heavy logic of materialism might prove indigestible to them; but even the atheists, who believe that matter always was and ever will be, that there is no providence but necessity and pessimism, and that gravity is the first and last power and cause in the universe, are not excluded from humane consideration; for even in them there is some underlying religion of law, order, and duty, truth and right, honesty and honor, wisdom and humanity, founded, at least, in the eternal nature, necessity, and fitness of things, which ever remain what they are, by whatever names called, however vaguely conceived, or madly unheeded. For free religion would leave all perfectly free to pursue "the order, operation, and mind of Nature [as Lord Bacon said], from the meanest mechanical practice up to the highest immortality, if that be possible."

But there are some things, I think, which even free religion cannot wisely undertake to do, namely, in short, to unmake the order and constitution of things which God and Nature have ordained and established, at least for the present geological period and for this epoch in the history of human development. It cannot abolish the distinctions of race, color, age, or sex. It cannot, at least not in a hurry, raise semi-civilized to civilized nations, much less barbarous and savage peoples. The blessings of free government, of full liberty, are not yet possible for them. We hear much about the animal being the man in the making. There is a glimmer of sentimentality in it, and perhaps some science, but very little practical sense. Much is said of the rights and grievances of women. There may be some little sense here, but I fear not very much. Rights and duties are correlative, and both together are relative to their place in the order and constitution of things. Nature must have some on the middle platform to lift the child up to the man. There must be a head of the family, as well as a head of the State. Civil rights are such as the civil laws create and define, and are not necessarily natural rights at all. They are indeed founded in Nature, but also in politic wisdom in reference to individual, social, and public good. There cannot be two masters at once, though there may be wisdom in counsel; a house divided against itself must fall. Said a great Lord Chancellor, The Duke is the strength, the Duchess the ornament, of the house. With us the man at twenty-one, now (or shortly to become) the head of a family, is the constituent element in the political government, and represents the family therein. This is the fundamental idea and principle. The rule, not the exception, should prevail.

The Constitution of the United States prohibits Congress from making any law for "an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." "The object was," says Mr. Justice Story, "to cut off forever any pretence of any alliance between Church and State in the national government." But this prohibition does not extend to the several States. "The rights of conscience," he observes, "are indeed beyond the reach of any human power." Commenting on the Constitution, forty-five years ago, he added these remarkable words: "It yet remains a problem to be solved in human affairs whether any free government can be permanent where the public worship of God and the subject of religion constitute no part of the policy or duty of the State in any assignable shape. The future experience of Christendom, and chiefly of the American States, must settle this problem, as yet new in the history of the world."

The celebrated William von Humboldt lays down the principle "that all which concerns religion lies beyond the sphere of the State's activity," and should be "left to the free judgment of the communities, without any special supervision on the part of the State."

This is the sound doctrine; it is the true result of any proper metaphysic of ethics and law. Religion, morality, science, as such, do not come within the proper realm of civil government; they belong to the vast realm of philosophy in general. Matters so comprehensive and deep cannot be embraced, or but partially, within the domain of the positive law. They are a part of that liberty which the government itself is ordained to establish and secure. It is only by securing this liberty that a free government makes religion, morality, science, philosophy, learning, and wisdom possible for a free people. A people that is not capable of this liberty is not capable of free government at all.

The youthful nations of antiquity had not realized the distinction between civil law and the moral and divine law. With the Hindu, the Egyptian, the Hebrew, these matters were all blended into one hierarchical system. Neither Greece nor Rome had reached this important distinction. The constitution of Solon made a beginning toward it; the Roman jurisprudence made some advance; but still the Pontifex Maximus was a part of the law. Christianity was merely substituted in place of the old religion, and was mixed up with it in the constitution of the Roman State. The laws of Manu, the Hebrew Bible, the codes of Justinian, alike begin with a fantastic and visionary theory of the creation of the world, and they all alike incorporated existing religions and superstitions into the body of the law. Hardly any State in Europe, unless it be Switzerland, has got clear of this confusion, down to this day. It was reserved to the glory and honor of the Constitution of the United States, after many ages of painful experience, to mark this grand distinction, and for the first time in the history of nations to establish complete civil liberty, which means nothing less than freedom of thought and action, of conscience and of speech, of opinion and worship, of life, person, property, and the pursuit of happiness,—liberty protected by law, not license and impunity.

This old mistake, of confounding law and religion, still survives, not only in foreign nations, but among some of us; for even here, in free America, there are some who would put God, even Christ (if not the Pope), into the Constitution. They do not themselves know what they mean by it. You might as well put the wide universe into a nutshell! Free religion would by all means keep out of the Constitution and laws; it holds itself to be a part of that liberty which the government was instituted to guard and protect, not to control and suppress. It would preserve the Constitution upon its purely secular basis. It would establish no religion; it would secure equal liberty to all religions. It insists that the national government shall act in conformity with its principle and theory, and expend no public money for religious purposes.

In colonial and puritan times, by a sort of atavism in the science of government, there was some reversion towards the ancient hierarchical politics. This spurious political religion was not entirely weeded out of the State Constitutions. Traces of it still remain in the laws of some States, more especially in the shape of Sunday laws for enforcing a religious Sabbath, and against what is called blasphemy, laws for reading the Bible in the common schools, and for exemption of church property from taxation; as if it were still necessary that religion should be enforced by law.

Now Sunday has come to be, practically, and for the most part legally, what it should be,—a civil institution, founded in the needs of human nature and the good of society and the State, in which all are alike concerned; a secular day of rest and recreation, as well as for religious worship for such as choose to use their liberty in that way; and therein the rights and liberties of all should be equally protected by law from invasion or disturbance. Such was the Sunday of the common law, from midnight to midnight. The Lord's Day, as one of the dicta fasti, having its origin in the Christian Church, was only the solar day, from morning light to sunset; and even that, says Lord Coke, was upheld by the courts on civil reasons, as good for rest and relaxation, as well as for divine service. Such is the Sunday of this State. Such, I imagine, would be the Sunday of free religion everywhere.

In some States, however, statutes, partaking of the spirit of the age in which they were made, have been chiefly instrumental in introducing the tenets and faiths of Christian belief into the law. The dicta of judges have even said that Christianity was a part of the common law; meaning, probably (if they understood themselves), in the same sense that reason, justice, right, honesty, are a part of the common law. If it were ever true in any sectarian or superstitious sense, it was that part of both the law and the Christianity which has been for some centuries, and is now, rapidly becoming obsolete. Free religion would have such laws repealed.

Another trouble is the Bible in the common schools. We have, happily, got rid of that in Missouri, I believe; but some older States are still lagging behind. Now, the common schools are a civil institution, created by law and supported by general taxation; it is an essential part of republican government. Its object is to secure to all children of this republic the means of that knowledge, intelligence, and virtue without which no free republic can stand. This is the ground and reason of its being made a part of the law of the land. No friend of freedom can or will dispute it; no enemy, no foreign power, will be heard to deny it. For two centuries it has been growing into the statute and common law of these States, and into the hearts of the people. The Bible has crept into the common schools much in the same way that the "Lord's Day" got into the Sunday laws, as it were adventitiously. It is not wanted there as a school-book, but for sectarian religious purposes only.

With some, the real motive may be to impress the rising generation with that strong delusion, that the Bible is the literal word of God, or with that other delusion, that the only religion in the world is the Catholic religion. These vague notions are the chief source of all the pernicious orthodoxies, and of all the disputes about religion in the schools. These mischievous ends are contradictory to the ground and principle of the system. They are inconsistent with the common liberty. They are contrary to the only ground and principle on which taxation for educational purposes can stand and be justified. Leave it out, and all just ground of complaint would be gone. I hear of no complaint in this State on that score. Free religion would accomplish the same result everywhere.

Exemption of church property from taxation is another grievance with some. The only ground I see on which such exemption can plausibly be justified is, that such encouragement of moral and religious culture in churches, synagogues, mosques, temples, or whatever else may fall within the exemption, may rest, like the common school system, on the principle and reason that the moral and religious instruction of the people is necessary for the stability of free republican institutions. All these matters belong to the municipal jurisdiction of the several States in their sovereign capacity; the national government has nothing at all to do with it. Should the people see fit to amend the Federal Constitution, and lay a prohibition on the States, in this particular, they have the power to do so; as to the wisdom of such a measure, I have nothing now to say. I don't know that the Free Religious Association has expressed itself on this matter. If the churches are on the whole an effective means of intellectual and moral, as well as spiritual, culture, and perform an educational function that is serviceable, not to say indispensable, for the State, it matters but little, in reference to this question, if religion, or even if some erroneous or superstitious doctrines, be also taught therein; for I am of the old Scotchman's opinion, that if there be must be churches we must even take such as there be, until we can have better. It is enough that the State has nothing to do with man's relation to his Maker, and the Church nothing to do with the citizen's relations to the State. And the intermeddling of any church as such, with matters of law and government, may justly be regarded as a sheer usurpation of both function and authority.

At last the question must come home to every person. What is your theory of this universe, and of life and destiny in it? Every one must and will have his own theory, whether he knows it or not, and will, in the main, govern his life accordingly. It may be any phase of the biblical theory; a theistical or an atheistical theory; a sensational or an idealistic theory; a materialistic, unconscious, machine theory, or a conscious, spiritualistic, and more or less comprehensive philosophical theory; or it may be merely a bread-and-butter or a whiskey-drinking theory. Nevertheless, in the case of all, the dread responsibility continues. The solution of the great problems of life is difficult enough for any and all. It is but natural that man should look in various ways for a guiding light. Some take the Old Testament, some the New, some the Koran, many the other sacred books of the world; some look to science or philosophy, and religion itself; some see the world in the aspect of a knowing providence, some in the aspect of an unknowing pessimism; and some give up the problem in despair, or, like the animals, never think of it at all. No wonder, then, some infallible authority should be grasped at. Is the infallibility of the Pope, or the Church, any more or less absurd than the infallibility of the Bible? of Jesus than of Plato? Reason, historical criticism, ecclesiastical history, science, philosophy, all oblige us to answer, Not one whit. All these books and teachers contain many good things and some bad, much truth and much error, and some little revelation to man. But the greater revelation ever is, and must be, through the entire volume of creation, the book of God's works, that lies ever open before us,—the one most infallible authority of all, perhaps, if only it could be read and interpreted aright. Who shall undertake to read it all, or to interpret, finally, for any but himself? Those ancient worthies had read but a small part of it; the popes seem not to have read much more of it. If Plato or Aristotle, Kant or Hegel, Goethe, Carlyle, or Emerson, Büchner, Darwin, or Tyndall have read a great deal more of it, still much remains to be read and understood before we can hope for a complete revelation and an infallible guide. How else was it ever possible for a genuine revelation of the whole truth, of Nature, or of the divine providence in the world, to be made to man? Compared with our present lights, all the knowledge those venerable sages of the ancient days possessed was as a rush-light to the full blaze of the sun. To set up the Bible and what they said and believed two thousand or three thousand years ago, against our clearer science and vastly greater knowledge and wisdom, can be no less absurd than the Pope's infallible fulminations against all modern progress and the free culture of humanity, or than a Papal Bull against the comet,—a degree of presumption, bordering on the ludicrous, that has but one parallel and but one other example that I can name on the face of the earth, and that is in the perpetual succession and supreme spiritual and political dominion of the Grand Lama of Tibet.

It is inevitable that as scientific knowledge and more critical thought reach the general and common mind, these old beliefs, authorities, and reverences are completely upset. Many jump to the conclusion that there is, then, no real basis for religion or morality, and they plunge off into sheer materialism, or into utter hopelessness, perhaps into wild license or into blank despair. No faiths remain; all rule, all guidance, all difference between vice and virtue seem to be gone. Now (as I believe), it is the main idea and central purpose of this whole liberal movement to teach some new and living truth that may take the place of the superannuated incredibilities and out-dying falsehoods; something that may be credible and good for all persons:—

"What may be sworn by, both divine and human, Seal what I end withal."

If geology demonstrates that the book of Genesis does not truly describe the manner or order in which the world was created, does it, therefore, follow that it was not created at all? By no means. In what way, then, was it created? If plants, animals, and men were not created in the scriptural manner, does it follow that they merely grew and were not created at all? I think not. If evolution were in some part the manner of it, then, what was the whole manner, cause, and law of it? If a change of specific form comes about under the rule of the survival of the fittest and other conditions, still, what makes it come about in that way, or under any conditions whatever, and what makes the conditions and the way? If the first animal life appeared in protoplasm, then whence came the protoplasm and the life? If a piece of living protoplasm were segregated into an absolute void by itself, would it continue to live of its own mere motion? Has it a potency of life in itself alone? Prof. Tyndall, I presume, does not believe that. Certainly I shall not believe it until experiment has demonstrated the fact. If the fly-catching leaf is merely physiological and mechanical in its mode of operation, and really has no soul of its own, though it can digest flies and may exhibit something analogous to sleep or to a habit of memory, is that all? What carries on the whole plant and the flies? Mr. Darwin has not had time to inquire; has not yet found out, and, perhaps, does not know. Does it follow, therefore, that nobody does or can know? I think not. Prof. Tyndall traces a snow-flake from the Alps back through the clouds to the ocean, and sees no God, anthropomorphic or other, no mind, no thought, in it anywhere. What sort of God, or mind, he was looking for he does not tell us; perhaps he did not know. Does it follow, therefore, that there was none at all? What power was it that was carrying on the ocean, the cloud, the snow-flake, the Alps, and Dr. Tyndall himself? and under what laws and in what manner? The spectroscopists tell us of that enormous ball of fire, the sun, and of its prodigious expenditure of heat. Whence comes the heat? Heat is motion of matter, it is said. Then, whence both matter and motion? They have not time to inquire; it belongs to the unknowable, perhaps. Mr. Croil, however, thinks he knows, and tells us that two such solid bodies moving in space at a planetary velocity, and coming into collision, would be instantly converted into one fiery sun. Very like; but whence the two bodies and their velocities? He does not stop to tell us. Matter and gravity, perhaps; but whence and what are they? Some physicists resolve all matter into molecules, and guess that these are composed of atoms. But whence the atoms they do not pretend to know, or even guess, and remit them, perhaps, to the unknowable. Others, indeed, conceive the atoms (metaphysically, for the senses cannot verify the fact) as little whirling eddies in the interstellar ether, deriving their forms from their motions, like Saturn's rings, and rather think the ether itself comes from some still more ethereal essence and power. Who knows to the contrary? Prof. Harkness tells us that the star Groombridge is moving directly across our visible world of stars into space beyond at such an enormous velocity that not all the attraction of all the stars can avail to change its course; and he supposes (on the Newtonian theory) that it will keep straight on forever. But what if it should arrive at the outermost limit of the ether out of the whirling motions of which its atoms and itself are made up in the ether itself? Then, I suppose, all its motions would suddenly cease, and the star would vanish, whilst like a lost wave of light, into the absolute infinity of nothingness beyond,—and there an end forever of the star, the ether, and all the ether that was before, still remaining!

According to the Neoplatonists (as I would now interpret them in brief), a total one real essence, in a state of eternal activity, or (what is the same thing) moving itself (other than which is only the boundless nothing of oblivion), is a necessary truth and fact, and to be accepted as a first and last fact; and, being active under principles and laws (also necessary truths) constitutive of universal intelligence, is soul-creating Nature, wielding the laws of intelligence into a process of thought and creation, in a certain free, artistic manner, as "a proceeding intellect," eternally creating and destroying particular things, as such (after the manner of evolution and extinction, if you like); itself, however, dwelling in eternity, without beginning, end, or middle, inexhaustible, "the ineffable fountain" (as Plotinus called it); yet the whole given creation, from top to bottom, from beginning to end, from the highest freedom to the last degree of fixity, even to the final terminus of the process, necessarily bound in the links and degrees of that adamant chain of necessity and law by means of which the order of Nature is established and the work of creation carried on; and which is thus both providence and fate in all that is created. With them it was a knowing process, for knowing was nothing else but that, divine or human. It was a conscious process, for consciousness was nothing else but the fact of knowing, divine or human. It was a process of will, for will was nothing else but that, in God, or in us; but with the important distinction, that we only share and partake of the essential life and intelligence partially, being bounded off into the particular souls and bodies that we are; as when a net is let down into the sea the water is in the net and the net is in the water partially, not wholly—the whole net, indeed, is in the sea, but not in all the sea,—so man is in the creation, and the creation is in man, not wholly, but partially only. We are still capable, perhaps, of passing over by the bridge of that very intelligence (which, though in us but partially, is, nevertheless, in itself, its laws, and principles, always and eternally one and the same) to a knowledge of the universality and reality of essential life and intelligence; and by means of a thorough scientific experience of all Nature (if science should ever get so far) we may have the evidence of all external phenomena in confirmation of our internal knowledge, and thus, in thought, at least, pass from the natural to the supernatural side. At least, to some such conclusion as this, as it appears to me at present, all our science and philosophy are now tending, and have been tending, from Parmenides or Aristotle to the present hour.

These necessary truths, laws, principles, facts (whichever you please to call them), seem to underlie all our sciences, mathematics, and theories of matter and mind. There would seem to be no other ground of knowledge, of philosophy, science, religion, or experience either. To deny these truths is to abnegate all rationality, all possibility of knowledge, truth, or wisdom, and to reduce ourselves to the level of soulless material things. Even these are thoroughly bound up in the general laws of Nature, and so, in some small measure and degree, participate in the universal reason. It is only on the higher plane of organization that Nature rises again to the height of self-moving soul in animals and men, who share the essential life and intelligence in a larger measure and a higher degree—in nearly all degrees from instinct to the largest minds,—but still partially only, not wholly.

Said Aristotle: "The action of intelligence is life. God is this action; and this action hinges on itself, and his life is perfect and eternal. So that we say, God is living soul, perfect and eternal. Life and duration, eternal and continuous, belong to God, and it is God."

What the poet Æschylus said is not much different:—

"Zeus is the air, Zeus earth, and Zeus wide heaven; yes, Zeus is all things, and the power above them."

Pantheism! cry some. Well,—if any prefer to call it by that name. But what if it is pantheism? If material essence and real spirit are, at last, one and the same, and are the power that creates and governs the world—are even "great creating Nature" (as Shakespeare called it),—what matters it, what difference does it make? except that all visionary and uncritical notions about immaterial, unessential, empty spirit must be remitted to that limbo of oblivion where all fantastic dreams and illusions have to go.

And the dreadful pessimism of evil and fate! Is there, then, no escape from that? Only, it would seem, by rising to that height and power of mind and soul that may dominate, endure, and control it. We must mount the laws of Nature, of reason, of prudence and virtue, of moral justice and right, with such religious faith as we can have, and ride them through this world with what safety we may. Said the poet Fletcher:—

"Man is his own star, and the soul that can Render an honest and a perfect man
Commands all light, all influence, all fate;
Nothing to him falls early or too late;
Our acts our angels are, or good or ill,
Our fatal shadows that walk by us still."

Fixity is fatal only while it is fixed. No fixity of things in Nature is unalterable; no equilibrium of stationary balance in bodies remains forever permanent. Everything is in movement, however slow or rapid. The universe is alive with movement. It appears to be, in fact (as Plato said), motion and standing all in one, or (as Aristotle said) motion in the immovable. Nobody or thing could possibly exist and be what it is without having precisely the limitation in time and space which it has, giving its form and place. This is a part of that fundamental necessity and truth that underlies and pervades the universe of mind and matter. In this sphere of temporary fixity and ever-changing permanency, in this moving world of phenomena and facts, the mere naturalist finds the field of his labors and the materialist the scope of his philosophy. He is dealing with material facts and natural laws only. He reports what he can discover and know; he is merely silent about what he has not discovered. His strict scientific methods are good enough for his purposes, nay, doubtless, the best; but he who would successfully investigate and interpret all Nature, and rise to any rational comprehension of all her facts, laws, and ways, even to the universal essence and intelligence itself, creating Nature, must carry the torch of metaphysics in his hand to illuminate his mind.

In this nethermost region of the adamantine chain is room enough for the properties of bodies; for the play of blind mechanical forces; for all sequence of secondary instrumentation; for what is chance, accident, and fate for us; for evolution and extinction; for the convertibility of forces and the conservation of energy; for atoms, gravity, momentum, heat, light, elasticity, electricity, etheriality—even to the eternal Vis Viva, or "the bright effluence of bright essence increase,"—and room enough, certainly, for the whole dismal science of blind mechanism, unconscious pessimism, physiological brain theories of mind, utility theories of morals, greatest-happiness theories of life, and Spencerian sociologies,—theories useful enough in their place and way, and better, certainly, than visionary biblical dreams or Papal infallibilities, but not rising to the height of any comprehensive and satisfactory theory of either God, Man, or Nature.

Even in the fixed order of Nature, where (according to physical theories) the atoms are so infinitesimally small and far apart, and are in themselves, perhaps, but mere motions of an invisible, insensible ether, who can say that the free, conscious power and providence are entirely excluded from direct action on any part of Nature, or to what extent, law and necessity notwithstanding, it may control or influence the entire order of things and events? It seems absurd to imagine providence in a stone; true, science may make even that rationally conceivable, if only it be conceived in the right way.

We hear a great deal about the unknowable. There are even some philosophies of the unknowable, and perhaps some unknowable philosophies. Men are apt to think that what they do not know nobody else knows; that what they cannot discover is undiscoverable; that what is unknown to them is unknown to all. Materialistic sciences, positive philosophies, and some theories deal largely in the unknowable. What their narrower methods cannot discover, they are prone (rather dogmatically) to pronounce not only unknown but unknowable. Improve the methods, then. For my part, I do not admit that anything that really is is unknowable. Certainly, if the universe itself be a knowing process, then nothing contained in it can be unknowable; and there can be nothing outside of it but the mere leity (so to speak) of that boundless shadow and absolute void of oblivion into which all forgotten things go; and even that is knowable for what it is; viz., nothing. He who knows all that is surely knows enough; what need to know more? If mortal man cannot rise to a perfect knowledge of all that is, even to that height where being and knowing is all one, does it, therefore, follow that the all, even God, is unknowable? I think not. Who shall set bounds to the knowable, now or hereafter?—Globe Democrat.

PRACTICAL DREAMING.

If the Society for Ethical Culture, founded by Prof. Felix Adler, has had no other result, it has certainly demonstrated that an association may be held together for purely humanitarian effort, and that men may make a religion of moral progress, altogether independent of creeds and dogmas,—indeed, independent of theological speculation. The membership of the society has long since ceased to be exclusively Jewish, although in its origin it was rather representative of a liberal Jewish movement, and now numbers from seven to eight hundred persons of all races and nationalities, the Hebrew possibly dominating a little in point of numerical superiority. Indeed, Dr. Adler, like most of the original members of the association, formerly belonged to a wing of Jewish thinkers designating themselves as the Reformed Judaists; a denomination that had its origin in Germany, and may be considered as the Hebrew correlative of the great German rationalizing movement, of which the late D. F. Strauss was one of the ablest representatives. Moses Mendelssohn, a German Jew of considerable literary celebrity, was the founder of the movement, and is regarded by our ethical-cultists, if such a term be admissible, as a kind of Moses of the nineteenth century. The Jews, according to Adler's view of the case, have ceased to be a national unit, and will hereafter exist as a confederation of religious societies. Of course, the real test of permanence in such a movement must be its value in the resolution of the moral and social problems of human life in the nineteenth century; a century that one sometimes suspects of making problems for no other purpose than to resolve them, as some reasoners raise objections to their own views just to show their cleverness in replying to imaginary disputants. Now, as measured by the preceding standard of permanence, what has the Society for Ethical Culture accomplished? It has established a free kindergarten school at the National Assembly Rooms in West Forty-fourth Street, for the benefit of the poor, which has now about seventy pupils, between three and six years of age; it has founded a lyceum for workmen, which has now about eighty members, and holds fortnightly meetings in the hall of the Bond Street Savings Bank; it has placed a well selected library of six hundred volumes at the disposal of workmen who may wish to inform themselves upon the great issues now agitating the world. It proposes by-and-by to establish an institute for the workmen, differing from the Cooper Union in being under the control and administration of the class it is intended to benefit. But this last project is still in the dream-land of the by-and-by,—an unfulfilled figment of Prof. Adler's active brain; and what wondrous cities and institutions, what unfulfilled designs, what Eden pictures of the ideal life, the man of reveries carries within his brain no anatomist can find out; though some clever physiologist has aptly observed of Mr. Longfellow that every cell in his brain is a potential germ that may at any moment bud and blossom into a poem. Again, a kindergarten, a lyceum, and a library are things that can be accomplished without societies for ethical culture,—by orthodox philanthropy, for instance. Evidently, some mission more deeply penetrative than this must be predicated of a movement claiming to expunge supernatural religion from the needs of man, and to substitute a moral training for it. The deepest problems of human life are not met by a method that takes no cognizance of the realities that lie folded within the term humanity, as though man were pursued by a psychic spectre of himself, by his own image reflected in the overlasting. From a purely negative point of view, the poet is correct when he says or sings:—

"Ah, life, unto myself I say,
A dream by night, a dream by day,
And just as actual doth seem
The sleeping as the waking dream."

In other terms, no negative method can discriminate between the sleeping and the waking dream of this enigma named life, and that only can take deep hold on the imagination which establishes some theorem of such discrimination. Mr. Herbert Spencer has struck the deepest note of human existence here; the unknowable may be inconceivable, but it is, nevertheless, true and real; not only that, but a potential element in life. It is at this juncture that positivism becomes negativism, and that all scientific theories of psychology utterly break down. Can Prof. Adler give his followers the interpretation to this dream?—N. Y. Library Table.

MRS. THOMPSON.

Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, of New York, is a lady of fortune, and is a "cheerful giver." She is distinguished for sowing by the side of all waters. Her charities have been scattered broadcast, from the "Free College for Women" in Boston, endowed by her, to Longmont, a little town she founded at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. Some seven years since, Mrs. Thompson caused a public hall to be erected at Longmont, the first building put up in that region. One wanted it for a hotel, others for a school-house, and many of the people thought it must be used for a church. Mrs. Thompson decided that it must be used for a house of work, until they were able to build a house for such purpose. She put up a fine bell, and raised the American flag. There were not ten families within twenty-five miles; yet they all came to the dedication, when one part of the building was set apart for washing clothes and bath-rooms, Mrs. Thompson insisting that cleanliness was next to godliness. The main part of the edifice was to be used for a school-house, town-hall, church, or any other good or educational purpose. She enjoined upon the settlers to abstain from profane swearing, the drinking of intoxicating liquors, gambling, scandal, or gossip in the premises.

Four years after, she returned to find a pleasant, flourishing town with about one thousand inhabitants, two school-houses, a hotel, bank, one newspaper, a number of shops of various kinds, but not a single place where liquor was sold within twenty miles. The settlers all respected her wishes, as she had done so much for them, and became a law unto themselves. Mrs. Thompson has the highest regard for the faith of others, and is even charitable toward those who have no charity. The great desire of her heart at the present is, that the rising generation shall be taught to become useful, practical citizens. Every person, male and female, she insists should be taught, at the public expense, some useful trade or occupation. Mrs. Thompson has given for charitable purposes some $500,000 within the last ten years, and devotes annually all her large income to various charitable purposes. She is willing to assist anywhere in establishing institutes whose object shall be to teach youth to work, or how to help themselves. She says she always has the best of help, as she always helps herself.—Boston Advertiser.

DEBASEMENT OF COIN IN ENGLAND.—The coinage of England, although it has suffered less than that of any of the older countries, has still undergone great debasement, which has begotten misery and trouble enough to make her experience of great value. At the time of the Norman Conquest the silver or money pound weighed twelve ounces, the system of coinage being the same as that of Charlemagne, and it was continued untouched until the year 1300, when the standard was tampered with by Edward I. By increasing the number of shillings made from a pound, he set a pernicious example which was followed only too well, so that in the reign of Queen Elizabeth fifty-eight shillings instead of twenty shillings were coined out of the pound weight of silver. Up to the reign of Henry VIII., although the weight was decreased, the sterling fineness of coins was not debased; but that eminent head of the Church, after dissipating the immense wealth which he received from his father, resorted to the most disgraceful means to supply his riot and extravagance. He so adulterated and degraded the silver coinage that the pound sterling contained but four ounces of silver, £2 8s. of it being equivalent to the pound sterling of five hundred years before. Under the reigns of his children—Edward VI., Mary, and Elizabeth—the fineness of the coin was gradually restored, and its degradation arrested, so that it was the boast of Elizabeth that she "had conquered now that monster which so long and devoured her people." The coinage of England has had nothing further to endure at the hands of her princes.—E. R. Leland, in Popular Science Monthly for March.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

IN THE CRUCIBLE.

SUGGESTED BY THE TRANSIT OF MERCURY.

O thou that sittest near the throne,
How is thy glory vanished now!
The haughty radiance that shone
Upon thy far imperial brow!

Is this the star whose presence bright,
Too royal for familiar gaze,
Masked its proud smile in morning light,
Or gleamed through veil of sunset haze?

Here art thou captive, doomed to tread
Yon fateful furnace all aglow!
Mortal may haste (thy scorn is fled)
To view thee where thou liest low.

Religion hath her system vast
Of spheres revolving, great and small;
And each would be a sun, and cast
Its primal lustre over all.

Yet should our eyes presume to scan—
Presume to probe the ray it bears,—
'Neath sheen of truth 'twould hide from man
The false and borrowed light it wears.

But sometimes one is snared within
The disc of science self-illumed;
And sorely tested it hath been,— Perchance its brilliancy consumed.

Flung in that crucible of light,
Shall faith of ours the flame endure,
Or lie, like thee, a spot of night
Upon that breast of glory pure?

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 8.

Henrietta Hyde, $3.20; W. C. Head, 10 cents; L. P. Habb, $1.00; Benj. Cobb, Jr., $4.40; J. C. Merrill, $3.20; J. H. W. Tooby, 25 cents; F. S. Cabot, $3.20; Chas. Nichols, $1.00; Rev. F. Hinkley, $1.00; F. Fradley, $1.25; J. T. Merrey, $5.00; W. A. Abbot, $3.00; J. W. Roberts, $3.00; Lyman Reed, 50 cents; J. E. Oliver, $10.00; Joseph Knight, $3.20; John Stinson, $3.20; G. H. Foster, 84 cents; B. D. Bardwell, $1.20; Jas. N. Clark, $5.00; S. R. Wells & Co., $2.25; E. C. Thaxter, $1.00; Jno. J. Kerr, 80 cents; R. G. Fell, $5.00.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 13, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. Tolmo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 8, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. M. D. OCKENY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH QADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELLEY, Editorial Contributors.

THE SEVENTH ANNUAL Meeting of The Index Association was held at Toledo, Ohio, June 1. The old Board of Directors was reelected for the ensuing year, as follows: W. J. Potter, A. E. Macomber, E. W. Meddagh, G. W. Park, H. K. Oliver, Jr., C. E. Pratt, J. A. J. Wilcox, E. Wright, and F. E. Abbot.

MR. H. L. GREEN sends this note of the late meeting of the Friends of Progress at Waterloo, N.Y.: "This, the thirtieth annual meeting, was attended by some two thousand persons, and was addressed by Prof. Oliver, of Cornell University, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. Joselyn Gage, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Mrs. Somerby, T. C. Leland, W. S. Bell, Charles Ellis, H. L. Green, and others. The subjects discussed were 'The Relation of Science to Religion,' 'Evolution,' 'Capital and Labor,' 'The Liberal League Movement,' 'The Currency Question,' 'The Rights of Woman,' and 'Church and State.' Nearly all the speakers urged the organization of Local Liberal Leagues. Prof. Oliver's very able address on the 'Relation of Science to Religion,' I am pleased to learn, is to appear in THE INDEX."

THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL Meeting of the Free Religious Association was held in this city, on May 30 and 31. At the business meeting of Thursday evening, officers for the ensuing year were elected, with some changes in the former list. Mr. Frothingham declined reelection as President, and Professor Felix Adler was elected in his stead; but Mr. Frothingham's name was placed in the list of Vice-Presidents, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Robert Dale Owen. Mr. John Weiss and Mr. C. K. Whipple declined to serve another year as Directors, and their places were filled by Miss Rebecca Buffum and Mr. John L. Stoddard. On the following day, addresses were made by Mr. Frothingham, Mr. G. W. Curtis, Mr. T. B. Wakeman, Mrs. E. O. Smith (who read a poem), Mrs. Clara Neymann, and Mr. M. Ellinger. The usual social festival in the evening closed the proceedings of the day.

A MEETING of "Communists," composed of "work ingmen who had seen service as soldiers," was held at Turner Hall, St. Louis, May 16, at which Ferdinand Amrein, the presiding officer, "stated that the purpose of those who had called the old soldiers together was to take steps toward the formation of military organization, to be composed exclusively of workingmen, and to serve the purposes of workingmen. . . . It was evident that the workingmen must rely entirely upon themselves for friendship and protection, and a recognition of this fact had led to a call for the present meeting. It was designed, he said, to form complete military organizations, cavalry, artillery, and infantry, and in order to secure the greatest degree of effectiveness in the shortest time, it had been deemed best to invite only veteran soldiers—men who had seen service in either Europe or America—to become members of the companies which were to form a nucleus, as it were. With a few companies of such men the workingmen would be prepared to oppose force to force, and resist any encroachment that the militia or police may in future make upon their rights. He therefore requested all veterans present to step forward and sign a roll of membership, stating in what branch of the service he had had experience." In half an hour two hundred and fifty veterans had signed the roll of membership.

THE TWO SIDES OF THE SHIELD.

Civilized society has two great and supreme interests, INDIVIDUAL LIBERTY and PUBLIC MORALITY: individual liberty, or the right of the individual to think, to speak, and to act without interference from any quarter, so long as he bears his just share of the public burdens and refrains from violating the equal rights of any other individual—public morality, or the right of society to perpetuate itself by exacting from all its members practical respect for these natural limitations of individual freedom. Society can only exist by maintaining a proper balance between these centrifugal and centripetal forces of Liberty and Law—the latter word being taken in its broadest sense as inclusive of the unwritten law of public opinion and public conscience. If society fails to show itself equally enlightened in both of these directions, then greater or less disaster inevitably overtakes it.

There happens just now to be a law upon the statute book which creates a grave issue between these two supreme interests, although neither of them is safe except through the harmonious maintenance of both. We refer to the "obscene literature" law of 1873. A meeting of the "Society for the Suppression of Vice" was held at Park Street Church, in this city, on May 28, at which we were present for a portion only of the time; but we heard and saw enough to bring forcibly to our mind the old legend of the two knights, fighting over the question whether a certain shield was made of gold or silver, and being too angry to observe that the shield had one side of silver and the other of gold.

On the one hand, the Christian party are so eager to defend the interests of public morality that they are showing themselves quite indifferent to the equal interests of individual liberty. They have got a law enacted for the suppression of a real crime against society, which is just as properly made subject to legal penalty as any other crime. But, instead of defining this crime precisely and fully, and throwing the protection of this precise definition about all persons accused of committing it, they have left the law so loosely worded that an over-zealous and fanatical agent, clothed with powers which ought to be greatly restricted and intrusted only to the most judicious hands, has applied it to doubtful cases, and apparently used it for the purpose of attacking particular religious opinions which he does not like. This agent, Anthony Comstock, has justly rendered himself obnoxious by the means he confessedly uses, and by the sectarian animosity he has shown in selecting the wrong persons in some cases for prosecution. The danger to freedom of thought and of the press as the law now stands, the tyrannical and persecuting spirit evident in some of Comstock's suits, the infamous means avowedly employed by him in getting evidence, etc., all combine to render it plain that a radical reform of the law is imperatively needed. The following accurate report to the New York Evening Post of a passage which we witnessed at the Park Street meeting is sufficient proof of the vile means used by Comstock in procuring convictions—means which are justifiable by no sophistry and for no object:—

Resolutions were then read which proposed the organization of the "New England Society for the Suppression of Vice." When the vote was to be taken upon their adoption, a muscular-looking clergyman arose and expressed his desire to ask Mr. Comstock three questions. Mr. Comstock consented. "Did you ever use decoy letters or false signatures?" "Did you ever sign a woman's name when writing a letter?" "Did you ever try to make a person sell you forbidden wares, and then, when you had succeeded, use the evidence thus obtained to convict him?" After an explanation in each case, which was vociferously applauded by the audience, Mr. Comstock answered each question in the affirmative. Meanwhile an attempt was making to suppress the questioner. He would not be suppressed, however. "I am a Congregational minister," he screamed, "my name is Jones (laughter)—Jesse H. Jones,—and I have as much right to be here and to be heard as anybody." When Mr. Comstock had answered the last question, Mr. Jones shouted at the top of his voice: "Then I say that Mr. Comstock has done what would be pronounced disgraceful in a policeman in any court in Boston."

At the same time, it is impossible for any just or clear mind not to recognize the fact that the primary object of the Christian party, in getting this law passed, was to subvert the cause of public morality by putting an effectual stop to a real and heinous crime against society. Why should not liberals be ashamed to be unjust even to their religious opponents? The trouble with the Christian party in this matter is not that they place too high a value upon public morality, but that they place too little value on the liberty of individual thought and speech. They see only one side of the shield.

On the other hand, those who understandingly signed the petition against the law of 1873 (and we suspect that very few of the signers even now really understand the position in which it is placing them, though against their will, before the country) manifest a one-sidedness equally deplorable in its consequences. They exhibit an indifference to the cause of public morality every whit as reprehensible as the indifference to liberty exhibited by the Christian party. Flippant denials of the existence of the evil in question will avail nothing; the evidence is too strong to be pook-pooed away; and it reveals a miserable partisanship of which liberals should be ashamed to pretend that Anthony Comstock has willfully invented all the facts on which the United States courts have convicted one hundred and seventy-four vendors of vile literature. Mistakes have doubtless been made in this matter, as with regard to all other crimes. Human judgment is fallible, and it would be wonderful if no mistake had ever been made. The records of the courts are open; let them be scrutinized in the most jealous manner, and the mistakes exposed. But it will be necessary to include a large proportion of the secular journals of the country in the conspiracy against innocence, if the courts and Comstock are held to have engaged in one in this matter. Take, for example, this extract from the Newark Register:—

Anthony Comstock has been unearthing a villainous business in connection with the introduction of obscene literature in the public schools of Brooklyn. Whatever may be said of Comstock's tactics, the fact remains that he does bring to light evils which shock the moral sensibilities of the nation. In this last move of his he has shown that young girls from twelve to sixteen years of age, attending the schools of Brooklyn, have been reached by the vendors of vile literature and obscene pictures, and that many of the brightest and richest children of the schools have been supplied with these demoralizing goods. Parents who never dreamed that their children ever had an impure thought have awoke to the painful consciousness that their little ones have been eagerly reading and feasting upon the vile narratives and disgusting pictures with which the country is flooded. . . . Parents must jealously watch what their children read. . . . It would do no harm for parents to examine occasionally the effects of their children, which they have stowed away among their treasures. It was by doing this that these Brooklyn parents came to the knowledge that their children were the subjects that were being corrupted by the distribution of these pictures, etc. Investigation soon gave Comstock evidence enough to prove that this evil was not confined to a few humble homes here and there, but that it was wide-spread, taking in its compass the children of wealth. The men or women, whoever they may be, engaging in this terrible traffic, are fiends, and worthy of the severest penalties which outraged law and decency can effect.

It must be possible to reach this evil without having recourse to the use of decoy letters and other infamous means which Comstock has systematically and confessedly employed; it must be possible to prove such offences as the above, and ferret out the offenders, without establishing a system of espionage disgraceful to any free country. But, simply because the agent has made himself a common detective and stooped to practices which the regular police would scorn to be guilty of, to deny the existence of the evil and the right of society to treat it like other crimes is surely to show as little regard for public morality as the Christian party show for individual liberty. Honest zeal for morality leads some Christians into reprehensible disregard for liberty; honest zeal for liberty leads some liberals into reprehensible disregard for morality. In either case only one side of the shield is looked at, while truth and justice alike demand that both sides be fully recognized.

Now, in this lamentably muddled state of affairs, the practical advantage remains wholly with the Christian party, and the liberals are shoved to the wall. The petition for the repeal of the law of 1873 (we have repeatedly explained that it asks for repeal first, and for modification only as a secondary object in case repeal is denied, and the pretence that it asks for the latter primarily is so transparently an afterthought as to be scouted contemptuously by the Christian party) has been, contrary to all attempts to make the fact appear otherwise, unanimously reported against by the House Committee to which it was referred; at least, Comstock declared before the Park Street meeting that it was a unanimous report, and he would not dare to make public a statement so easily refuted, if the fact were otherwise. The Congressional Record for June 1 thus reported the action of the Committee and the House of Representatives:—

Mailing Alleged Obscene Literature, etc.
Mr. Bicknell, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, reported back adversely the petition of Robert G. Ingersoll and others for the repeal or amendment of Sections 1785, 2491, 3878, 3893, and 5389 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to sending through the mails of the United States certain alleged indecent, obscene, and immoral matters, or of supposed immoral tendency; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

Mr. Bicknell moved to reconsider the vote just taken, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The Boston Advertiser of June 8 gave the exact words of the Committee's report as follows:—

Mr. Bicknell, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, submitted the following report: "The Committee on the Revision of the Laws, to whom was referred the petition of Robert G. Ingersoll and others, praying for the repeal or modification of Sections 1785, 3878, 3893, 5389, and 2491 of the Revised Statutes, have had the same under consideration, and have heard the petitioners at length. In the opinion of your committee, the post-office was not established to carry instruments of vice or obscene writings, indecent pictures or lewd books. Your committee believe that the statutes in question do not violate the Constitution of the United States, and ought not to be changed; they recommend, therefore, that the prayer of the said petition be denied."

As we feared, therefore, and as we warned the liberal public when the petition was started, the result of it has been to strengthen the existing law and to give Comstock a new lease of power, notwithstanding the dangerous perversion of which this law has been proved to be capable. Every attempt to repeal that law will have the same effect; and every such attempt greatly lessens the probability of getting it so modified as to be inapplicable to such cases as those of D. M. Bennett and E. H. Heywood. These men do not belong to the class of vendors of obscene literature, properly so called—that is, literature mainly and manifestly devoted to the propagation of vice. It cannot be truthfully said that they have not overstepped the boundaries of decency or that they have not thereby tempted prosecution; but neither can this be said of the Bible, or of a large proportion of the classical literature of the world. We insist that one impartial rule ought to be applied to all such doubtful cases: either to prosecute all alike, or to let all go alike free. But the practical effect of the petition has been to disgust Congress by its apparent insensibility to the heinous evil at which the law was really aimed, and therefore to leave all such publishers as Bennett and Heywood (who have a perfect right to advocate publicly any opinions they think true and who should have exercised this right without any defiant disregard of public decency) exposed still to the danger of being legally included in that class of vendors of obscene literature from which they are very far removed.

From this danger and injustice we have strenuously endeavored to shield these men to the small extent of our power; but they have foolishly resented the endeavor because we have at the same time expressed our frank and independent opinion of the unwisdom of the petition they favored. It was sheer madness to make common cause with the vendors of really obscene literature, to refuse to make obvious and all-important discriminations, to denounce all statutory restrictions on obscene literature in the name of freedom of the press, and to attack their real friends as if these were allies of Comstock in the effort to crush them! We will stand by any man in the exercise of freedom of thought and the decent public utterances of it, ay, to the uttermost; but if we are expected also to stand by those who do not think at all, but aim only to pollute and destroy the young, then we say shortly, emphatically, and sternly—No. With such as these we will have nothing in common. And when this inflexible resolve brings upon us, as it did last week in the Truth Seeker, column after column of misrepresentation and calumny and sly anger, we shall heed it no more than the pattering of last year's rain. When a journal sinks so low as to decide "the miserable few who howl about culture and high-toned decency," it forfeits all claim to the consideration of those who respect themselves.

One thing remains to be said. The law of 1873 is continually declared to be "unconstitutional," in defiance of the fact. This point has just been decided afresh by the Supreme Court of the United States, without a dissenting opinion. A dispatch from Washington to the New York Tribune of June 4, to which we invite the closest attention, was as follows:

WASHINGTON, June 3.—The full opinion in the original case of A. Orlando Jackson, on petition to the Supreme Court of the United States for writs of habeas corpus and certiorari, has been filed by Justice Field, the other justices concurring. The petitioner was indicted in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, for knowingly and unlawfully depositing, on the 23d of February, 1877, in that district, in the mail of the United States, to be conveyed in it, a circular concerning a lottery offering prizes, enclosed in an envelope addressed to one J. Ketcham, at Gloversville, N.Y. He was subsequently tried, convicted, and sentenced to pay a fine of $100, with the costs of the prosecution, and to be committed to the county jail until the fine and costs were paid. Upon his commitment, which followed, he presented to this court a petition alleging that he was imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by the Marshal of the Southern District of New York under the conviction; that such conviction was illegal, and that the illegality consisted in this: that the court had no jurisdiction to punish him for the acts charged in the indictment; that the act under which the indictment was drawn was unconstitutional and void; and that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in committing him until the fine was paid. He therefore prayed for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Marshal to bring him before the court, and a writ of certiorari to be directed to the Clerk of the Circuit Court to send up the record of his conviction, that this court might inquire into the cause and legality of his imprisonment.

The writs were denied by the court, on the ground that his imprisonment is legal. The decision is very elaborate, and reviews at length the legislation in relation to the mails affecting the case. Following are the points decided:—

First—The power vested in Congress to establish "post-roads and post-offices" embraces the regulation of the entire postal system of the country. Under it Congress may designate what shall be carried in the mails, and what shall be excluded.

Second—In the enforcement of regulations excluding matter from the mails a distinction is to be made between different kinds of mail-matter; between what is intended to be kept free from inspection, such as letters and sealed packages subject to letter postage, and what is open to inspection, such as newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, and other printed matter, purposely left in a condition to be examined.

Third—Letters and sealed packages subject to letter postage in the mails can only be opened and examined under like warrant, issued upon similar oath or affirmation, particularly describing the thing to be seized, as is required when papers are subjected to search in one's own household. The constitutional guarantee of the right of the people to be secure in their papers against unreasonable searches and seizures extends to their papers thus closed against inspection, wherever they may be.

Fourth—Regulations against transportation in the mails of printed matter which is open to examination cannot be enforced so as to interfere in any manner with the freedom of the press. Liberty of circulating is essential to that freedom. When, therefore, printed matter is excluded from the mail, its transportation in any other way cannot be forbidden by Congress.

Fifth—Regulations excluding matter from the mails may be enforced through the courts, upon competent evidence of their violation obtained in other ways than by the unlawful inspection of letters and sealed packages; and with respect to objectionable printed matter, open to examination, they may in some cases also be enforced by the direct action of the officers of the postal service upon their own inspection, as where the object is exposed and shows unmistakably that it is prohibited, as in the case of an obscene picture or print.

Sixth—When a person is convicted of an offence, and sentenced to pay a fine, it is within the discretion of the court to order his imprisonment until the fine is paid.

The hopelessness of any further attempts to secure the total repeal of the law of 1873 must be now apparent to all who are not deaf to every suggestion of common-sense. That law is based upon a correct apprehension of the requirements of public morality and the public welfare. But at the same time the law is so vaguely worded as to render it possible to persecute free thought under pretence that it is "immoral." All liberals who are sufficiently intelligent and sober-minded to see both sides of the shield would certainly favor an attempt to secure such modifications of the law as shall guard against any further abuses of it, and prevent any further violation of individual liberty of thought and speech. The chance of success in any such attempt as this has been seriously lessened, at least for the time being, by the ill-considered petition already presented to Congress; but when the liberal party shall prove by its action that it is equally alive to the interests of public morality and of individual liberty, they will certainly carry their point in the end. We hope yet to see some movement initiated which shall command the support of all liberals without exception by fully and fairly recognizing both sides of the shield.

A CORRECTION BY COL. INGERSOLL.

We are glad to publish this note from Colonel Ingersoll, which we found awaiting us on our return from Toledo:—

WASHINGTON, D.C., May 31, 1878.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—I read your article in your last issue about the petition to have the law relating to obscene literature repealed or modified. You have made a mistake. I did not say that I never signed the petition. I said that I did not remember of signing it. I did say that I never read it. As a matter of fact, I do not believe I did sign it, but am not sure.

I am going to file an argument with the committee asking for an amendment.

I agree with you. We want all nastiness suppressed forever; but we also want the mails open to all decent people.

Your always,

R. G. INGERSOLL.

It is by all means best to be accurate, and we are pleased to have our slight misunderstanding of Colonel Ingersoll's words rectified, though we are sorry to have misunderstood him even in a trifling particular. The essential facts of his position are exactly as we stated them; and this is put beyond a doubt by the above welcome letter.

In our turn we desire to correct a misrepresentation of what we said at the same interview. It has been stated in print that we "requested the Colonel to abstain from advocating the cause of the petition," and knowledge of the fact is pretended to have been derived from "a mutual friend who conversed with the Colonel subsequent to the Abbot interview, and to whom the Colonel made the statement." We utterly disbelieve that Colonel Ingersoll made any such statement. If he did, he misunderstood us. We simply inquired if there were no way to rectify the blunder that had been made in asking at all for the repeal of the law, instead of asking solely for such a radical modification of it as should prevent any further abuse of it by Comstock to purposes of sectarian persecution.

To this Colonel Ingersoll replied that he intended to make a personal effort in that direction; we forget his exact language, but think he used some such expression as is contained in the above letter about "filing an argument with the committee asking for an amendment"—by which he may mean either an amendment of the law or an amendment of the petition. We thereupon expressed our gratification; but we made no "request" whatever. If he files his argument, it will be the result of his own unprompted good sense, and not of any impertinent "request" of ours.

THE WATERLOO MEETING.

The meeting of the Friends of Human Progress, just closed at Waterloo, was one of the largest, and, I think, best, ever held by these Friends. It is, as you know, as an institution, one of the oldest, or rather, I presume, quite the oldest, of any of the kind in our country. The gathering this year was the thirtieth annual meeting. It has from the beginning been on a very catholic, liberal basis, and latterly especially has sedulously sought to plant on the basis of broadest universal religion.

The attendance throughout was large—there were four sessions, lasting two days,—and the earnest, intent look of the multitude assembled, many of them subject to great discomfort and fatigue, the unwearied, careful, eager attention, told of the deep interest that the themes of life are at this hour creating in the public mind. On Sunday the congregation overflowed the house—a plain Quaker structure capable perhaps of seating four or five hundred people,—and filled the yard, so that it became necessary to provide for another audience also, a "church outside the door,"—outside, but in spirit, in fellowship, in this case, inside as well.

The discussions were varied and animated, and the speaking, almost without exception, good. I presume the readers of THE INDEX may have from another pen some account of the meeting in its main features, and I have no need here therefore to go into any particular description.

But I must say that we were very especially indebted to two friends that were this year with us,—Prof. Oliver (Professor of Mathematics in Cornell University, one, I hear, of the few eminent mathematicians of America, and a very earnest liberal indeed), and Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York City. The address of Prof. Oliver will, I trust, be written out in full and forwarded to THE INDEX. It was a delight to see one so thoughtful, so cultured, so wise as he, standing on this platform and speaking from the riches of his mind upon those vitally important themes this meeting was gathered to consider. Such educators and scholars, scholars that are withal and first of all men, lovers of human kind, and deeply interested in whatever pertains to man's welfare and full redemption, we greatly need in meetings like this, and I hope we shall have their presence and assistance there more and more.

Of Mrs. Neymann I have occasion only to say that she charmed and delighted the house, and seems the right one in the right place on the lecture platform. With her ardor of enthusiasm, her magnetism, her sweetness and earnestness of spirit, her singleness of devotion, and her discerning apprehension of the needs of the hour, she is, I think, qualified to do effective service in our country in the cause of religious emancipation.

Some one has said, I do not now distinctly remember who—perhaps it was Patrick Henry when the American Revolution was breaking upon the horizon, and the hour was hesitant, was critical,—“The cause will raise up armies for us.” To-day the cause of spiritual liberty is raising up champions, defenders, eloquent, powerful pleaders, new men and women of whose existence among us none of us had had the slightest apprehension hitherto, and we should be quick to see and warmly welcome them to the work they were ordained to do.

I should like to speak of others that added greatly to the interest of the meeting, but the narrow limits forbid. Altogether it was an excellent gathering, one to incite, to refresh, and inspire. I hope others of like kind will follow. We need them all through the land, to instruct, to stir and arouse the public mind; need through them for ourselves the arming, the resolution for work they are adapted to impart.

C. D. B. M.

JUNE 5.

RE-DEFINITIONS.

For the third time in less than six months the writer defines communism in THE INDEX as being, according to Worcester, “community of property.” The commune is the direct, legitimate, and inevitable result of the dissemination of communistic principles: that is to say, it is practical communism in contradistinction to the theoretical and visionary communism taught by the socialistic writers from Fourier down to “F. S. C.” The Internationale is the parent of modern communism. The cooperative communities formed by the Shakers and other peaceable citizens comprise so inconsiderable a proportion of the whole body of modern communism as to be more fitly designated as peculiar forms of religious organizations, having little or nothing political in their nature. No individualist objects to these cooperative communities (formed as they are under the impetus to a reaction from the super-selfishness characterizing our modern civilization), so long as they confine their efforts to increase their numbers to moral suasion and rational argument. The communism, however, that is rampant in Europe and America to-day proposes no compromise or middle ground to its antagonists. As Mr. Maverick has well shown, it proposes either to rule or ruin; and its natural outcome is illustrated in the Commune of Paris in 1871. Nor can any writer who denounces the accumulation of property by individuals as injustice to the proletarians deny his responsibility in precipitating anarchy upon society, by asserting that he favors only peaceable methods of attaining the ends proposed. Ordinary human nature, having been educated down to the belief that it is imposed upon by the capitalistic class, that laws are made only for the benefit of the lawyers, and at the expense of the laborers, it is plain will not be contented to remain quiescent under such assumed outrages. But it is susceptible of mathematical demonstration that not more than one man in four or five can be deluded in this manner; and it has been conceded by leading socialists in Europe that they can never hope to secure a majority by peaceable methods of procedure. Hence it is seen to be essential to their success to inaugurate a reign of terror, hoping thus to coerce the majority into an acceptance of their illogical, unpatriotic, and unnatural social theories.

The minority, being once convinced both of their impotence as missionaries to convert humanity to their creed, and also of the justice of their cause, gravitate inevitably toward revolutionary conspiracies, which take different shapes in different places, but aim everywhere alike at the very life of the body-politic.

The talk of “marrying communism to individualism” is as idle as to speak of wedding darkness to light, positive to negative, earth to air, or fire to water!

That individuals exist in communities no more indicates a tendency to a mutual ownership of previously acquired personal possessions than to argue, because trees grow side by side in a forest, that each helps to nourish the others. That tree that is girdled by the axe of the squatter realizes little benefit from the close proximity of its untouched neighbor; and, as Herbert Spencer and John Stuart Mill and Adam

Smith and Malthus have all united in asserting, “individualism” is the price paid by humanity, under the law of the survival of the fittest, in order to achieve a constant progression toward improvement of the race of mankind. Only by restricting the number of births, and adopting the beneficent plans urged by Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant, can any approach be made to the ends desired by the socialists.

A. W. K.

Communications.

PRINCIPLES, METHODS, MEN: OR, THE SCIENTIFIC FORMULA OF ORDERLY SOCIAL PROGRESS.

BY JOHN ORVIS.

What is the issue out of the labyrinth of the vices and miseries of our existing civilization? Has the clew been grasped by our modern agitators, in their partial schemes and fragmentary efforts? In negro emancipation? In the crusade of the good templars against rum and tobacco? the anti-war cry of the peace societies? the eight-hour law agitation of the trades-unions? In the anti-Christian fermentation of the freereligionists and infidels, as we know it has not been by partisan politicians in their vulgar clutch for office, notwithstanding the air rings with “Reform,” from shouting thieves on all sides.

Is the woman suffrage movement and the clamor for woman's rights the clew? Perhaps it comes more nearly to it than any other of the merely fragmentary efforts of the hour, because it lies nearest the social focus, which woman preeminently represents, and because it leads directly to a consideration of woman, her function, relations, and duties, as a constituent force in society, and, consequently, the position which in virtue of these is rightly hers. But the movement in itself is fragmentary, and as such, like all others of its class, is useful chiefly for agitation, as showing the need of a higher civilization; but it lacks the remedial, constructive, and harmonizing power of the unitary idea, which demands an integral righteousness, and insures the individual and collective well-being, by uniting and reconciling in the structure of society itself the interests and pursuits of all its members.

It is not negroes' rights nor woman's rights that we really and instinctively seek; but it is the reign of love and justice among all human beings, in the universal relations of society, in their special as in their general, in their minuter as in their larger, aspects and bearings.

The intuitions lay hold on that world of ideal beauty, and struggle to lift the plodding understanding up to a conception of the methods of its realization. They fail in the effort, because in our daily practical life ideality and spirituality are ignored. Divorced from the intuitions, the intellect, instead of being the inspired and heroic worker of altogether noble and beneficent ends, becomes the stolid surfer of mammon, or the crafty plotter of intrigues, or the vulgar slyster of thieves and robbers whose real characters are disguised by some conventional euphemism.

As a consequence, the best we have as yet been able to do has been to get here and there a mind to see that these fragmentary reforms, which like bubbles come to the surface, burst, and disappear, are not the reforms which even their own advocates seek to effect, but, rightly read, are the manifold confessions to the need and to the demand for one thorough, comprehensive reform, which shall be nothing less than the transformation of society as a whole into the organic form of justice and truth.

With the vast majority there is not a distinct recognition of what is wanted, but only that something is wanted. It is only they who have grasped a knowledge of that great law of being which ordains that function shall determine organization, and that organization shall determine limit, and fix the nature, character, and form of manifestation or use, and that this law applies as truly to social structure and social organization, and is as true in the spiritual as in the material order of the universe, who see with a vision so clear that no doubt or uncertainty can cloud it, that the only issue out of the crimes of a competitive social order, or which can secure the individual and collective welfare, is through the reconstruction of society upon the basis of general cooperation and unity of interests.

A conception of that law and its required methods must be deeply planted, not only in the religious and spiritual sentiments, but in the understanding of the people, before much can be done in constructive reform. The clew which is to lead us out of the existing social discords will conduct us to a higher civilization. The new social state will be the child of the new Church, the CHURCH OF PRINCIPLES, supplanting a church of dogmas and ritualism.

The intelligent student of social evolution will be struck with the fact that each great epoch in history has been inspired and dominated by a peculiar religious faith which has given to that epoch “its very form and pressure.” Just in the degree that the religion of any age has been broad, free, intelligent, and humane have the social and political systems, under it secured liberty and equality for the people, and equity in social administration.

But there is a science of society, as there is a religion of humanity; and these must work together in any successful scheme of social regeneration. As over the entrance to the grove where Plato taught was inscribed this injunction: “Let no one enter here who is ignorant of geometry,” so over the threshold of reform should be written this injunction: “Let no one enter this field who is ignorant of social science.”

As the ancient Greeks thought no one fitted for the study of philosophy who had not been trained in mathematics, so now it may with equal force be claimed that no one is qualified to lead in society reform who is unacquainted with the true social laws. It was held that the mathematics, by their severe demand upon abstract thought, not only gave the student the highest mental discipline, but also furnished the correct method in all rational inquiry. A few simple axioms, which the reason accepts intuitively, have given us the key to a knowledge of the form, weight, measure, distance, relations, and motions of atoms, worlds, and systems, and guided to a comprehension of the laws and order of the material universe. And though it may not be claimed that mathematics can be applied to a determination of the principles of social ethics and the true form of social relations, it is affirmed that there is a science of society based on axioms as self-evident as those of mathematics; and, rightly applied, they will conduct us to a demonstration of the laws, order, and form of a true harmonic society as unerringly as the latter have revealed to us the harmonies of the material universe. So that it is possible to formulate the order of social movement, or the method of social evolution.

It is in the divine economy that man shall cooperate, through intelligence and the moral sense, with the Supreme Intelligence and Beneficence in the accomplishment of his own destiny, by discovering and applying the science which is to evolve that destiny. Man comes to his good no more than his evil fortune “by a divine thrusting on.” His destiny will be what he, as a collective force, shall make it. It is a vast problem which he himself is to solve, working from the known to the unknown. Social science is the focalization of all the sciences, and is fundamentally the science of equity. It has its axioms not less than the mathematics, and these have their basis in the moral sense, as those of mathematics have theirs in the understanding or reason. The commandment to love truth, justice, and equity supremely and to love one's neighbor as one's self, whether written on tables of stone, amid the thunders of Sinai, or uttered on the sacred mount of Jerusalem, or written in the moral constitution, are axioms of social science which no amount of reasoning can make clearer to the understanding or moral sense than by their simple affirmation. They are injunctions of the soul itself, and constitute the absolute basis of all solid social science.

All efforts, therefore, to cure our social ills, or to promote human advancement, which do not start with the purpose of organizing the social system upon these fundamental bases, not loosely and theoretically, but practically and in solid fact, will end in disappointment and misery; and they who engage in them will find that they but box the compass of a vicious circle, without making any progress. They only change the type or form of evil, but do not root it out by substituting a positive good in its place; and until the latter is done, no advance can be made.

ELAM'S ATTACK ON “EVOLUTION.”

DEAR INDEX:—

The Popular Science Monthly (supplement for May) contains an essay by Dr. Charles Elam, republished from the Nineteenth Century, entitled “Man and Science: a Reply,” in which the writer, with much brusqueness of expression, assails the theory of evolution and its most distinguished advocates. He, in effect, stigmatizes those gentlemen as mountebanks and charlatans, and their theory as a transparent humbug. He says: “It” (the evolution hypothesis) “is unutterably disgusting and humiliating, profoundly and irredeemably unscientific, founded in false data, false conceptions, and false reasoning.”

Nevertheless, the theory so indignantly and so contemptuously repudiated by him is accepted by many, probably by a large majority, of the best intellects of the age, as resting upon a foundation of such strong probability as closely to approximate demonstration. Of this portion of the Doctor's essay, however, all I propose to say is, that his furious onslaught will probably be about as effective in destroying the Darwinian theory as Professor Jasper's attack upon Copernicus has been in upsetting that celebrated astronomer's theory of the solar system. My attention was more particularly drawn to that part of the essay which is a criticism of Professor Tyndall's Birmingham address, entitled “Science and the Soul”; and it is upon that that I have a word to say. It will be recollected that in that address, the professor treats, at considerable length, the doctrine of necessity as opposed to free-will, maintaining the former with much boldness and ability. Dr. Elam, however, disposes of the professor's arguments in the same curt and flippant manner that he does of the arguments used by the evolutionists to sustain their theory. Having quoted a pregnant sentence from the address, he replies to it in the following dogmatic strain: “Many thanks for the information, but I know by daily and hourly experience that of several courses left open to me I can select one and reject the others, and I offer to submit this faculty to any test that you can suggest.” Now, I do not decomplex question of man's free agency, in all its sign to enter upon an elaborate discussion of the length and breadth and depth; but there is that contained in the foregoing extract which is so at variance with my own “daily and hourly experience,” that I feel justified in attempting to show its incorrectness. I will premise by saying, that unless I misapprehend Professor Tyndall's position, it is this: that we invariably act in obedience to the preponderant motive; that we possess the faculty which enables us to balance motives, but not the power to create them; that motives have their origin in “organism and environment,” and exist independently of the will. This view I will endeavor to illustrate, by relating, briefly, a suppositive experience; one that, certainly, cannot be regarded as exceptional.

I will suppose that I am a bachelor, that I am possessed of an ample fortune, that I have exuberant health, that I am fond of all manner of rational amusements, that I have neither wife, child, parents, brother, nor sister, nor, indeed, any one dependent upon me for support, and that, so far as external signs indicate, I am as completely a free agent as can be imagined. I will further suppose that I arrived in Boston the day before yesterday, after an absence of twenty years, and that I took rooms at the Revere House with the intention of remaining there for a couple of months, where I hoped to enjoy, without let or hindrance, my own free-will. But "The best laid plans o' mice and men

Gang aft agley,"

as will appear in the sequel.

I arose from my bed yesterday morning at seven o'clock, took a bath, ate my breakfast, returned to my room, and sat down to read the morning paper. In looking over the amusement column, my eyes rested upon the announcement that Patti would appear in Norma, that evening, at the Globe Theatre, for the last time prior to her departure for Europe. Now, being an ardent lover of music, especially operatic music, and having, also, a strong desire to hear the celebrated cantatrice in a favorite rôle, I was, naturally enough, elated at the prospect before me of a delightful evening's entertainment. My mind was quickly made up; I would go to the box-office at once, and procure a ticket for the evening. Congratulating myself upon my rare good fortune, I was about to lay down my paper, when I chanced to cast my eyes upon the following: "Professor Tyndall will deliver the last of the course of his highly interesting and instructive lectures, at Music Hall, this evening, commencing at eight o'clock; subject: Spontaneous Generation. This will be the professor's last lecture in the United States, as he intends taking passage for Liverpool in the steamer that leaves for that port to-morrow at twelve M." Now, strong as was my desire to hear Patti sing, equally so, at least, was it to hear the professor talk. Upon placing the conflicting motives in my mental balances, I discovered that the latter was the weightier. So, giving up all thought of the opera, I, very decidedly, determined to attend the lecture. At the proper hour I put on my hat, took up my cane, and started for Music Hall. I had not gone far, however, when, by mere accident, I met a gentleman and his wife—old and very particular friends of mine—whom I had not seen for twenty years, and who had come a long journey, from a neighboring State, purposely to hear the famous Patti sing. They urged me, with great fervency, to forego my previous determination, and to accompany them to the theatre, saying that they had a private box with a spare seat for me, that they were to leave for home on an early morning train, that they were very desirous to have a talk with me, and that they would feel themselves greatly obliged if I would accede to their request. Here, then, had arisen an unlooked-for additional motive to attend the opera,—weighty enough to turn the scale in that direction. So, in company with my friends, I directed my footsteps towards the Globe. Just as we came in sight of the entrance to the theatre, my lady-friend had the misfortune to slip upon the pavement, and severely sprain an ankle, which necessitated the abandonment of our plan, and the return of my friends to their hotel. Relieved from the weight of the additional motive, the prior one reasserted itself, and I again found myself gravitating towards Music Hall. I had not quite reached there, however, before I encountered several fire-companies rushing through the streets in the direction of my hotel. As they passed, I heard some one cry out: "the Revere House is on fire!" Remembering that I had left in my room a valise containing sundry valuable papers, I was seized with an irresistible impulse to make an effort to save them. In obedience to that impulse I started in the direction of the conflagration. Arrived at the Revere, I found the firemen engaged in removing the baggage to a neighboring warehouse. There I had the good fortune, after a prolonged search, to find my own; but it was now too late for either the opera or the lecture, and all my nicely arranged plans for the evening had been frustrated.

Here, then, had been performed, or attempted, a series of acts which were the natural sequence of sundry motives having their origin independently of my will, and over which I had no control. Now I respectfully ask, Did I, or did I not, in the foregoing hypothetical case, act, throughout, from necessity, and in obedience to an authority independent of, and superior to, my own free-will? If answered in the negative, I shall demand proof; and unless it can be shown that the power to weigh motives—which man undoubtedly possesses—constitutes him a free agent, and that he does not habitually act in obedience to the preponderant one, then I shall insist that the necessarians have the best of the argument. The doctrine is, however, repugnant to many secular minds, because its tendency is to abate man's inordinate self-conceit; and to all Orthodox believers, because it strikes a blow at the dogma of Adam's fall; but if it be contended that its tendency is to moral delinquency, my answer is: Not at all: we should still be subject to the same inexorable laws of heredity and environment, that we should continue to act, then as now, in obedience to the weightier motive, and that, instead of exerting a baneful influence upon society, its general acceptance could not fail to have the opposite effect, since it would teach humility and the necessity of cultivating, with greater assiduity, that now shamefully neglected, but transcendent, virtue,—CHARITY. DANIEL CONT.

Woburn, June, 1878.

WHAT IS THE NEBULA?

TROIS ESTATE, TRINIDAD, British West Indies, }
9th of April, 1878. }

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

In return for the pleasure which your paper, presented by a friend, has given me, I will send you this article.

Cromwell F. Varley sent some time ago a paper styled "Scientific Prophecies" to the London Times, in which he took objections to that part of Professor Huxley's address to the British Association in Liverpool in which he said: "And if it were given me to look beyond the abyss of geologically-recorded time to the still more remote period when the earth was passing through physical and chemical conditions, which it can no more see again," etc., etc.

After a mathematical demonstration of the fact that "the collision of matter in motion generates heat," he says (article 4): "As there is a process of retardation in space, all the planets must as a remote period fall into the sun, and the suns in their turn fall into each other, each time augmenting their heat-giving power, as their mutual masses increase." "The result will be, that ultimately the heat from collision will be so tremendous as to redistill matter over space, when 'creation' will recommence." Allow me now to add my speculation.

1. Astronomy shows, with the aid of the present telescopes, that the number of visible stars exceeds twenty millions. [Sir William Herschel and Struve.]
2. Light requires thousands of years to reach this globe from many of these far distant cosmical bodies. [Bessel. The distance which light traverses in a year is not more appreciable to us than the distance which it traverses in ten years. Therefore any endeavor must fail to convey to the mind any idea of a magnitude exceeding those that are accessible on the earth.]
3. Millions of years are as nothing compared to the idea of ETERNITY, as no possible number could express endless duration.
4. Spectroscopic astronomy shows that all suns and planets have come from the hot gaseous form, yielding up their heat by radiation into space. [Cromwell F. Varley.]
5. The collision of matter in motion generates heat.
6. Chemistry shows the indestructibility of matter, and the adaptability or fitness of things.
7. The laws of Nature have no exceptions. [Faraday.]
8. Geology shows that the forms of organisms rise to higher perfection in every subsequent geological formation or period.
9. The highest idea is the idea of a personal, self-conscious, eternal God, the almighty creator of the universe.

To follow up and harmonize these data the power of imagination must come to the aid of science. The danger here is certainly that imagination may lead to error and dogmatism, but so long as these high subjects are only approached with awe and reverence, the seeker after truth will meet with beautiful and grand results.

The solar system is not in the centre of the universe; hence, even if telescopes reached perfection, millions of stars could not be seen from this globe, nor could space be penetrated to a boundary. Time has been defined as a succession of motions. As it is impossible that motion should cease in the universe,—that the forces of gravity and attraction which are inherent in all matter should be annihilated,—that indestructible matter should be destroyed,—endless duration is demonstrated.

If all cosmic bodies have come from the hot gaseous form (article 4), the nebula contains the Urstoff of all suns and planets.

"Even granting the nebula and its potential life, the question 'Whence came they?' would still remain to baffle and bewilder us." [Tyndall.]

But why should it bewilder us, if the "Whence came they?" cannot be demonstrated by science? Philosophy (in the German sense) may help to lift the veil. J. H. Fichte, in his Idee der Personlichkeit und der individuellen Fortdauer, speaks of God as the eternal, self-conscious Creator and Director of the universe, whose visible creation is the garment with which he covers his unfathomable glory, and not as the unconscious first cause from which all things emanate by self-made laws.

Might not, then, the nebula be the BREATH OF GOD ALMIGHTY? When unable to explain a thing, the answer both of the ignorant and the philosopher is, that it is the nature of the thing. [Faraday.]

Tolstoe does not deny a continuation of creation, nor prove the necessity of a universal caldron in which all suns and planets have to fall to redistill matter over space in a gaseous form, "when creation will recommence." [Cromwell F. Varley.]

"Mann durchstodert die klein und grosse Welt,
Um es am Ende geben zu lassen
Wie's Gott gefällt." [Goethe.]

Yours very truly,

CONRAD F. STOLLMAYER.

DEFINITIONS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I second "D. S. G.'s" motion in favor of definitions, and only regret that he did not give us a definition of communism, and of the teachings of Fourier, which would have explained his thought that Fourier was a communist. The only conceivable way by which Fourier can be proved to be a communist is this: "A communist is a socialist; Fourier was a socialist; therefore Fourier was a communist."

It seems to me that the best way is for the communists to define communism so that its opponents may not waste their strength on a man of straw, as "A. W. K." appears to do. There is certainly no definition of it except that which would make it coequal and coextensive with socialism, which would justify any one in thinking Fourier to be a communist. I am constrained to think that those who fancy that great INTEGRALIST to have been a communist do not understand what he taught.

He believed in individualism as well as in communism, in egoism as well as in altruism; he regarded communism when put for social science as partial, fragmentary, simplistic, and hence as false. He recognized all the faculties of man as alike good, and as equally entitled to their full, free, and complete development in a harmonious society, whose very harmony would come from the orchestration of all these affections, or passions of the soul, as he called them. He would ignore or suppress none, but integrate all.

"I do not propose," he says, in a hundred places, "any plan or system of my own; I give the system of Nature; that is, the natural order of human society, based on the laws of universal order and harmony. If my plan is defective or false in details or as a whole, let those interested in the welfare of mankind correct it by studying Nature's laws, and deducing therefrom the true plan of social organization."

There is but one way in which the laws governing social organization can be discovered, and that is by studying the laws which govern in the human mind, or as Fourier calls it, the analysis of the passions of the soul.

If communism shows us how to give complete and harmonious development to all the passions or faculties, or affections of man, then it is true social science; if not, not. The object of social science is to point out the conditions under which we can fulfill our destiny and make ourselves perfect men, in a threefold unity of man with God, man with man, and man with his planet.

Is not this worth working for, and is anything less than this worthy? F. S. C.

COMMENTS ON THE QUESTION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As between yourself and Mr. Heywood on the subject of obscene publications, it seems to me that common-sense decides in your favor. I will assume that Mr. Heywood has children,—girls and boys, say from eight to fourteen years of age. Would he object to some plan or contrivance—if nothing more feasible, such, for instance, as shutting his children in a dark closet—whereby an attempt on the part of amicest to put before them obscene pictures or filthy reading could be in his absence thwarted? If yes, then he concedes the point at issue. He is in favor of a law to prevent the circulation of obscene publications, and, if such a law is now in existence, he is himself opposed to its repeal. On the other hand, if Mr. Heywood is willing that his children may have free access to literary filth, then he is consistently in favor of the repeal of laws against its circulation. If Christian bigotry has succeeded in so wording these laws that the officers thereof are obliged to prosecute "heresy" also, let them be modified; but, heaven knows, free-thought is carrying as heavy a load of undeserved obloquy as it can stagger under, without inviting the other kind.

CAMDEN, N. J., June 4, 1878.

DEAR SIR:—

I have been reading with much regret the controversy now being carried on between yourself and Bennett, and that rather crusty interloper, Theron C. Leland. I am with you in your view of the petition matter, and am extremely glad that Ingersoll, with his usual wisdom, has taken the right side. I think it ill-becomes Mr. Bennett to act in so questionable a manner. Instead of consistently and openly writing on the petition affair, I see that in his last issue he tries to chastise you in an editorial on "Culture," and falls woefully. It is ridiculous to bring in such side issues. His ridiculing your "culture" does not disprove the wisdom of what you say in your "obscenity law" comments. However, I think Mr. Bennett will cool down into his usual common-sense mood ere long, and perhaps recant his vilifications,—though I would not ask that he retract his original advocacy of the repeal movement, which I oppose without disparaging those who favor it.

Wishing you success in every way in behalf of THE INDEX, I am, as ever, very sincerely yours,

HORACE L. TRAUBEL.

LINCOLN, Neb., June 4, 1878.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq.:

Dear Sir,—I have read and re-read your article on Colonel Ingersoll in THE INDEX of the 30th of May, and I sincerely thank you for your grand defense and unanswerable arguments in favor of a pure and lofty liberal sentiment in our country. To win in this great struggle, we must not permit all liberals to be led into the support of lax morals, or low sensuality in any form. There is no affinity between lofty liberal opinions and loose morals; but there is a class of loose liberal papers, speakers, and writers doing the cause of liberty great injury by putting arguments and illustrations into the mouths of our inveterate Orthodox enemies, who richly enlarge all facts at their command. Your position is the only true one for our ultimate success; and success we should not have, if it brings a pollution of public and private morals.

Let me again thank you for your good work in this matter, and I am confident you will be fully supported by every thoughtful and considerate liberal, on the merits of this fortunate controversy.

Very truly yours, L. W. BILLINGSLEY.

EVERY RELIGION in this world is the work of man. Every one! Every book has been written by man. Men existed before the books. If books had existed before men, I might admit there was such a thing as a sacred volume.—Ingersoll.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to the patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 51 insertions, 6c per line.	For 52 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.
For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 51 insertions, 6c per line.	For 52 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1873.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STODDARD.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 10 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wason, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Prices (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity, as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wason.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion": Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition: New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON, Tena-ly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTON (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Treasury.....	1.25
The World-Printer.....	5.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURCKHARDT'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 2 vols. London, 1871-4. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Family.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Baby Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONSIEUR D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDS BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Emerson, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 1 vol.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourses on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 4 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	1.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FRUEBAUGH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	2.00
GRÖTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	1.50
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Seaboard Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Originism on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel- igs.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	5.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.00
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERKE (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	1.50
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	4.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 1 vol.....	2.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWIS (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What's Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Year's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1836 to 1848.....	2.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 1 vol. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.50
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.50
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	2.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Exiles from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 1 vol.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	5.00
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.40
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.90
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolly Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds established under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	2.25
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Eclipses, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	4.00
The Expansion of Heaven.....	1.50
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Beams.....	2.50
SOHLENN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S. Flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 20 vols.....	12.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.00
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	2.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.00
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
Pecksniff.....	1.50
Roundabout and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon. Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.50
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.50
3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.50
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.50
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TILLY (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific Families.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	.50
Addresses before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYAGE (REV. CHARLES.) The Bible and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	5.75
Vols III, IV, and VI., each.....	5.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Banisterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WHISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Panthea. A Volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUB & Co., Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE.
Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doerflinger & Co., 55 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and E. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.
Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from London. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Tollenache, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, Sir David Wedderburn, G. H. Lewes,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Office of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. B. HALDEMAN, General Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE, PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—
Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM! AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positives Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN, President of the Society, No. 141 6th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. R. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

WASHINGTON ILLUSTRATED.

The subscriber is prepared to engage for the next lecture season (or for the summer, at the places of popular resort), for the delivery of his lectures on "Washington and its Institutions." These lectures are brilliantly illustrated by a very large number of Stereoscopic Views of public buildings, works of art, etc. They have won enthusiastic encomiums from their audiences and the press. For circulars, giving full information, address Rev. FREDERIC HINCKLEY, Dorchester Station, Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 20, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 443.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,
ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be conscientiously, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

MASSACHUSETTS has passed a law against pool-selling which will make mischief at church fairs.

THE SECOND RADICAL CLUB of Boston had a picnic at Waltham last Sunday, and voted to dissolve. But they will probably reorganize under another name in the autumn.

THREE NEW LIBERAL LEAGUES are added this week to the list of those chartered by the National League. There are now forty-five chartered Leagues, entitled to send two hundred and twenty-five delegates to the Annual Congress.

A NEW LIBERAL LEAGUE has been organized at Cortland Village, New York. The Constitution and full lists of members and officers have not yet been received, but the President is Hon. Stephen Brewer, and the Secretary is Frank Goodyear, M.D.

A NEW LIBERAL LEAGUE was organized at Moberly, Missouri, on June 2, after a lecture by Mr. W. F. Jamieson, of Chicago. The roll of membership includes twenty-five names, and the officers elected are as follows: President, Stephen Coddling Mason; Vice-President, H. A. Hagen; Secretary, Charles Knight; Treasurer, D. A. Pease.

THE ASSOCIATION OF FREE-THINKERS of Bell County, Texas, which was organized on September 12, 1875, and which published its Constitution in Col. Peterson's lively Common Sense (afterwards removed to St. Louis), voted on May 26 to declare itself a Local Auxiliary Liberal League, and take out a charter accordingly. It has a list of thirty-two members, with officers as follows: President, Dr. L. J. Russell (whose cruel scourging by a party of religious miscreants on the night of October 6, 1877, was fittingly referred to at the time in these columns); Vice-Presidents, John Marshall and J. V. Bell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley; and Treasurer, M. B. McAfee. Dr. Russell is also chairman of the Texas State Executive Committee of the National Liberal League, and a gentleman whose high personal character renders the outrage to which he was subjected by ruffianly church-members an indelible disgrace to the community in which he resides.

THE BOSTON Commonwealth says: "Rev. Photius Fiske, of this city, has generously offered to erect a granite monument over the remains of Capt. Jonathan Walker, at Muskegon, Michigan. He will give it a suitable inscription, and place on the shaft a fac simile of the 'branded hand.' The work will be done in Boston, and the monument forwarded to Muskegon. Excellent photographs of Capt. Walker, at fifty cents each, can be had of his widow, Mrs. Walker, post-office box 396, Muskegon, Mich., the sale of which will contribute to her support. All anti-slavery people should desire to possess a likeness of this hero, one of the noblest that the cause ever reared in the old Bay State." Mr. Fiske is himself one of the few "original abolitionists" whose abolitionism does not date since the period when abolition became successful; and there is a poetic propriety in his erecting this monument to one of the truest heroes of that great movement.

THESE TRUE remarks are from the Boston Sunday Herald, of June 10: "It is a common belief that a republican form of government offers a safeguard against religious persecutions; but the experience of the Republic of Ecuador shows that this opinion is unfounded, and that a bigoted majority can sometimes be as tyrannical as any of the kingly despots of whom we read in history. This South American State has recently passed an amendment to its constitution prohibiting, under severe penalties, any religious discussion. (In other words, there is but one form of religious belief which the State will sanction, or even tolerate, and to question this in any way is made, not only a moral, but a civil, offence. This shows how much more necessary it is, in order to secure personal freedom, to have liberal opinions rather than a liberal code of government. Laws of this character, which are passed with popular approval in a misnamed republic, could not be made, much more enforced, in countries like Germany and Austria, where the chief rulers are emperors. The danger attendant upon the introduction of religious questions into political affairs is, that no sect is non-ambitious, and, as the colonial records of this State give proof, a denomination which possesses civil power is exceedingly apt to use it for the purpose of crushing out its rivals."

SAID the New York Tribune, of June 14: "The French Academy acted with a nice sense of discrimination yesterday when it elected the historian, Henri Martin, to the seat rendered vacant by the death of ex-President Thiers. As M. Martin has attained an advanced age, and received the triennial prize of twenty thousand francs from the Institute, in 1866, for his History of France, he had a strong claim to succeed the historian of the Consulate and Empire. The eulogy which he will be expected to deliver on the career of his predecessor will be looked for with interest. His American admirers would have wished M. Taine better success, but as he received fifteen of the thirty-three votes cast, he retires without discredit, with fair prospects of being chosen in the place of some member whose literary career corresponds with his own. The choice of M. Renan to succeed the late M. Bernard is in harmony with the non-sectarian spirit of the time, and will recall the election of M. Littré, in 1871, which incited Bishop Dupanloup to tender his resignation. By a singular coincidence the rival candidate was Senator Wallon, a devout student of the Scriptures, who was one of the ablest combatants in the controversy to which La Vie de Jésus gave rise."

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT is dead,—the eldest and greatest of the triumvirate of American poetry, Bryant, Longfellow, and Lowell,—the "patriarch of American literature," as Dr. Bellows aptly characterized him in the funeral address. Less popular as a poet than either of his renowned compeers, there is in his verse and in his character a Doric grandeur, a lofty simplicity, an austere and inaccessible majesty to which there is no fitting parallel in outward things save the Sphinx in the lonely Egyptian desert. There are those—they are perhaps not many—who owe to his influence the same debt which they owe to the massive man of the early Roman republic, and have been educated by it to appreciate the rare and superb masculinity of a spirit which, though superficially affected by the Christianity of his day, is yet, in the grandest sense of the word, pagan to the core. Angur well of the youth who is fascinated by the moral strength that is the life of Bryant's finest pieces. It is impossible for one who comprehends it to imagine Bryant on his knees; his only prayer is the soliloquy of the erect and unbending soul, exalted and inspired by the love of Nature and communing with the universe, as it were, on equal terms. There is something surpassingly sublime in the dignity, the self-poise, the formidable and invincible self-possession with which this severe man sustains his own manhood even in the felt presence of the Moral Infinite. Modest as all great souls are modest, he yet never forgets what is due from the whole moral universe to unsullied rectitude and self-conscious integrity; he is constitutionally incapable of grovelling, and knows nothing of a religion which is oblivious of self-respect. Here lies the innermost secret of Bryant's genius on its moral side; and no young mind can come into close and sympathetic contact with it and not be borne upwards on its strong pinions into the atmosphere of a higher life. And Bryant is dead? Nay, perish the thought! He lives, and will live, while human souls can thrill to his grand and simple strains.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE. OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....St. Louis, Mo.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Ipswich, Mass.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....New York
MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. W. M. J. POTTER,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. E. P. HALLOWELL,.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON,.....San Francisco, Cal.
MR. F. SCHUBERT,.....Providence, R. I.
HON. ABRAHAM L. PATTEN,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. J. J. SAVAGE,.....Chicago, Ill.
MR. B. F. FELSETHAL,.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. W. H. SPENCER,.....Florence, Mass.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HOBACRE SMAY,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
MR. ISAAC WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
MR. ROBERT OOLVER,.....Chicago, Ill.
MR. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
MR. B. S. MOOREHEAD,.....Franklin, Pa.
MR. F. W. EVANS,.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MR. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
MR. AMY POST,.....Rockford, Ill.
MR. ELIZABETH OGDY STANTON,.....Trenton, N. J.
MR. HALLIE HOLLEY,.....Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
Miss JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN ARTHUR, Monticello.
California.....L. HATON, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BRALL, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULD, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. C. MOOREHEAD, Adair.
Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Hintonville.
Louisiana.....JAMES B. BERRY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....KARL SCHUBERT, Detroit.
Michigan.....B. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Minnesota.....B. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Mississippi.....W. E. COFFLAND, Lincoln.
Missouri.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
Montana.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
Nebraska.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
Nevada.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
New Hampshire.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
New Jersey.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
New Mexico.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lincolnville.
New York.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
North Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
North Dakota.....E. E. PRIDE, Chaska.
Ohio.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Oregon.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Pennsylvania.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
Rhode Island.....DR. A. M. DENT, Waton.
South Carolina.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
South Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
Tennessee.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Texas.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Virginia.....NORMAN S. FORTER.
Washington.....

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeldt.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Chine, A. S. von Mansfeldt, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrook, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
CHESAPEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. O. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudec, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grunlike, J. H. rison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elmer Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. E. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, E. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korna, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
HUBBARD, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Pearson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi R. Pearson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie.
Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Sheppard, and others.
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, F. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Bruning.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Irving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron B. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. B. B. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Huchins, and others.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. E. Garrells, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. E. Swartzcope.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, E. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sent, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sent, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orris.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
KEOTA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauter, T. C. Leland, J. Desaur, F. Desaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Fraunstein, M.D., E. Lebonouf, and others.
OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Wilson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Kelly, and others.
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parse.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."

CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.

MOBERLY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

[For THE INDEX.]

The Genesis of the God-Idea.

A STUDY.

BY LEWIS G. JAMES, OF NEW YORK.

THE PRINCIPLES OF SOCIOLOGY. By Herbert Spencer. STUDIES IN THE PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION AND HISTORY. By A. M. Fairbairn.

THE ANCIENT CITY. By Fustel de Coulanges.

THE CHILDHOOD OF RELIGION. By Edward Clodd, F.R.S.E.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL. By J. Knappert, Pastor at Leiden.

BLENDING LIGHTS: OR, THE RELATIONS OF NATURAL SCIENCE, ARCHEOLOGY AND HISTORY TO THE BIBLE. By Rev. Wm. Fraser, LL.D.

"An honest God is the noblest work of man."

This text of Col. Ingersoll is capable of a two-fold interpretation. Considered as the smart saying of one who disbelieves in the existence of any Deity, it seems flippant and irreverent. Considered as a recognition of growth and development in the ideas which men have held concerning the character and attributes of God, it suggests a profound truth. The finite ever fails to comprehend the infinite. Imperfect language is impotent to express the qualities of infinite perfection. Each individual mind is the measure of its own comprehension of Deity, and its definition of God can possess no attributes loftier than those which inhere in its own nature. Hence, as the race has advanced out of primitive barbarism toward higher and higher civilization, man's conception of God has correspondingly undergone development and change. From this undeniable fact, materialists have been led to the inference that the

Deity is wholly a subjective creation,—a creature of human imaginings, having no objective reality, no actual existence. It is important at the outset, therefore, carefully to discriminate between the actual being of God, and the ideas which men have held concerning him. From the theistic stand-point, God is conceived as an Infinite, Self-existent, All-powerful, and All-wise Being, "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." The God-Idea, however, has had a beginning, and has been subject to various changes from age to age, in which may be traced a law of growth and development corresponding with the progressive civilization of the race.

To the question How did the conception of a Deity first enter the mind of man? various answers have been presented, and various theories suggested. The common orthodox view, that this belief is the result of miraculous, divine inspiration, meets with a serious difficulty, even with believers in the inspiration of the Bible, in the unquestionable fact that the God-Idea was in existence before any portion of the Hebrew Scriptures was written, and has been found among many peoples and various religions wholly independent of Hebrew or Christian influence. Accordingly, the ablest orthodox writers have relinquished this solution of the question, and suggested other theories founded on natural religion, instead of revelation. Philosophers, too, have not been idle. Materialists and sceptics, as we have remarked, have referred the origin of religion and the conception of Deity wholly to human imaginings, deeming them the invention of priests or poets or earthly rulers, who desired to make use of the superstitions of the masses to insure their submission to their arbitrary dictates. A certain appearance of rationality has been given to this sceptical theory by the fact that early governments were universally theocratic; the Church and State were one, making common cause to repress all growing democratic tendencies. The Epicureans, accepting this hypothesis, held that the gods were created by superstitious fears. Comte, who attempted to found an elaborate ecclesiasticism on the basis of atheistic negation, asserts it as a law that "the theological, or fictitious, is the first stage of our knowledge,—the necessary starting-point of the human mind."

Hume, another eminent writer of the sceptical school, attempted to prove that the belief in gods was derived from ignorance and fear, which led men to personify the unknown causes of natural phenomena, the accidents and eccentricities of Nature; and deemed that monotheism, or the belief in only one supreme Deity, grew out of the gradual concentration of flattery, offerings and sacrifices on one of these personifications.* Dupuis held that all religions had their origin in the worship of Nature, pure and simple, and declared, in harmony with Col. Ingersoll, that "the gods are the children of men."

Modern philosophers, like Spencer, Darwin, and Sir John Lubbock, who belong neither to the theological nor the atheistic schools, accepting the belief that primitive man was a rude being, but little higher than the animal, and that civilization is the product of a gradual evolution from his primitive condition, hold that he was originally destitute of any conception of religion or a Divine Being, and suggest various theories to account for the origin of these conceptions in the human mind. Of these, the most elaborate and consistent is that of Mr. Herbert Spencer.† This deems the idea of the gods to have originated in ancestor-worship, which was a product of primitive funeral rites and ceremonies. These rites grew out of the belief that the spirits of the dead were still existent, would sometime reanimate the physical body, and needed food, clothing, weapons, and various offerings for their comfort and sustenance. The phenomena of sleep, dreams, fainting, catalepsy, and trances are suggested, to aid in accounting for this primitive belief in the existence of the individual after death. Subsequently, the notion is supposed to have arisen that if the various rites and sacrifices were neglected, the departed spirit would become an evil demon, working injury to human beings, or would itself suffer torment for the neglect. Hence the idea of propitiation entered largely into the rites of the primitive religions, and fear or terror was a prominent motive for religious observances.

*Natural History of Religions, §51-viii.

†The Principles of Sociology,—Spencer.

It is the object of this paper to consider some of the objections which have been raised against what may be termed the rationalistic view of the genesis of the God-Idea; to correct, if possible, certain misconceptions of the objectors concerning the nature of the rational theory, and to endeavor to harmonize certain views which are apparently antagonistic, but which rest in reality upon a common ground of fact.

Mr. Fairbairn, in his very interesting Studies in the Philosophy of Religion and History, objects to the propositions of Mr. Spencer, and others who have propounded similar views concerning the origin of religions, that they derive religion, and the conception of the gods, from the lower faculties; that they base them upon false and delusive imaginings, which have no objective reality, and that the early religions thus evolved must, therefore, have been injurious to man. Their imaginary terrors must have been fatal to his moral nature, tending to throw him back into animalism. "How, then," he says, "could the admitted virtues of religion be evolved from this barbarous faith? Ex nihilo nihil fit. The highest moral qualities do not come from the lowest." This theory, he says, leaves man's faculty or tendency to believe in invisible things still unexplained.

"Our theorists assume," he says, "that the aboriginal state of our cultured peoples was similar to that of the lowest living savages. But surely the difference in their conditions, the one savage, the other civilized, hardly warrants such an assumption,—implies, rather, original differences, physical and mental, fatal to it. Then they assume a theory of development that has not a single historical instance to verify it. Examples are wanting of peoples who have grown, without foreign influence, from atheism into fetishism, and from it, through the intermediate stages, into monotheism." "Spontaneous generation is as little an established fact in mental as in physical science, and its truth need not be assumed until it is proved."

He calls attention, also, to the unquestionable fact that the various polytheistic systems of religion were so developed as to indicate ages of growth out of simpler conditions, and that the Indo-European nations all tended to an extravagant polytheism. These facts he presents as arguments against the hypothesis that monotheism was a development out of preëxisting polytheistic systems, instead of the reverse. He admits, however, that "the religions of the world, with one exception (the Hebrew), were polytheistic in their earliest historical form." With the results of the ablest biblical criticism of modern times at hand,† supported by consistent inferences from the text of the Old Testament, which prove, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the Hebrew religion, like all others, originated in fetishism, and advanced through the polytheistic stage, by a process of gradual and perfectly natural development, toward monotheism, which was not reached even by its most enlightened prophets and exponents until about the eighth century B.C., we shall not be able to allow him his single exception. Accepting, then, his admission as the statement of a universal fact, that all the religions of the world were polytheistic in their earliest historical form, together with the unquestioned evidence of history that monotheism has gradually grown out of these polytheistic systems, the argument thus far seems to be wholly in favor of the rationalistic view; and it certainly devolves upon the objectors to this view to show by evidence, which must admittedly be other than historical, that these polytheistic systems were themselves evolved out of a preëxisting, prehistorical monotheism.

The first argument in favor of this view is based upon the admitted growth and development of the polytheistic systems. But this fact is fully accounted for by the rationalistic theory, without presupposing a primitive monotheism. The first religion was that of the family altar. Its gods were the spirits of deceased ancestors, or the sacred fire, or fetiches which these ancestral divinities were supposed to have animated. The family gods were originally few in number; but the family worship was confined strictly to the gods of its own altar. Each family worshipped its own gods, but admitted the existence, none the less, of the deities of other families. As the family grew into the gens, and thence into the tribe, and finally into the nation, society became more complex, and the number of gods to whom individual homage was rendered thus gradually increased. The development of polytheism, therefore, was simply illustrative of that universal principle of evolution which educes the heterogeneous from the homogeneous, the complex from the simple.

Underlying the popular development of polytheism, however, among the Indo-European nations, as the mind of man grew in capacity and thoughtfulness, arose certain philosophical systems, which discussed theological subjects from the stand-point of intellect rather than emotion, and which ultimately arrived at an intellectual monotheism. Plato had developed this conception in Greece, anterior to the Christian era, and in India the loftier minds had substituted Brahm, the universal essence, for Brahma, the personal creator and factor of the Hindu Trimurti. Yet in both these countries the polytheistic systems still maintained their position as the popular religion. In Persia, the great religious teacher, Zoroaster, twelve hundred years before Christ, had proclaimed a pure monotheism, by enthroning Zêrâna-Akerâna as the infinite creator of the dualistic deities Ahura-Mazda and Ahriman. In Egypt Aten was announced as the only infinite and omnipotent deity. The Hebrews, as a nation, probably accepted monotheism earlier than any other people; but the monolatry of the period from the time of Moses to that of the eighth-century prophets should by no means be confounded with the pure monotheism which the Hebrews attained, as a people, only after a long struggle with the polytheistic idea.

The argument based upon the supposition of a primitive revelation, though suggested by Rev. Wm. Fraser,* of Scotland, and other writers, has absolutely no evidence in its support. It is admitted that the Hebrews had no written revelation previous to the time of Moses, and the investigations of Kuenen and the ablest critics of the present day show conclusively that very little of the Scripture testimony was recorded for many centuries after his time. Mr. Fairbairn admits that "a primitive revelation were a mere assumption, incapable of proof, capable of most positive disproof." "The theory that would derive man's religion from revelation," he says, "is as bad as that which would derive it from dis-tempered dreams."

Having admitted the impotence of history to deal with this question or rather, as we have seen, that the argument of history, which traces all religions back to polytheism, is wholly favorable to the rationalistic theory, his only remaining resource is the argument based on philology and ethnology. And here, for obvious reasons, he confines himself wholly to the Indo-European nations, with their richly-developed polytheistic systems. Comparing the Greek word Zeus, the Latin Ju in Jupiter, the Gothic Tius, the Scandinavian Tyr, and the old German Ziu or Zio, he finds them all identical with the parent Sanskrit word Dyaus; that, in common with this word, they constituted or entered into the composition of the names of their chief gods; and infers that the word, in its primitive form, was the name of a deity, and that the name of the deity it denoted was acknowledged by the whole Indo-European family. Thus far the inference is natural and probably correct.

When we examine the meaning of this word Dyaus, however, we find that, together with the Sanskrit deva, it came from a root meaning "bright, or shining," which suggests an origin in the beliefs of Sabaism; from which also are traceable all those Semitic deities into which the root El enters, including the Hebrew Elohim and El Shaddai. Now the early systems of Sabaism were all polytheistic, and developed, as Mr. Herbert Spencer so clearly shows, out of the preëxisting ancestor-worship of more primitive times. There is absolutely no evidence that Dyaus-pitâr was the earliest deity of the Aryans, or that he was their sole deity. His prototypes, Jupiter, Zeus, Tius, were, in their respective nations, only one of many gods, achieving preëminence and supremacy over the others only as the religion reached a higher phase of development than the equality of the earlier polytheisms. Reasoning from analogy, and from all we can learn by means of historical, ethnological, and philological investigations, we can only conclude that Dyaus-pitâr, like the Greek Jupiter and the Hebrew Yahveh, gradually reached the position of chief deity, or natural god, through a process of natural development out of the preëxisting polytheistic system. The argument based upon philology and ethnology, therefore, seems to support, rather than weaken, the rationalistic theory.

Mr. Fairbairn attempts to strengthen this philological argument by another, based upon derivatives from the Sanskrit root deva. From this he derives the Zend daeva, the Greek θεός, the Latin Deus, the Lithuanian dévas, the Old Prussian deiva-s, and the Old Irish día,—words which are interpreted to mean God in general, as distinguished from particular gods, or particular names for deities. He argues that as Dyaus and deva were from the same root, the primitive Indo-European mind conceived them as ultimately identical; the personal deity Dyaus-pitâr as identical with deva, God in general, "just as the Hebrew identified, in his ultimate thinking, Yahveh and Elohim." Here, to say nothing of the probability suggested by the greater similarity of the words that θεός and Deus are derived rather from Dyaus than from deva, his illustration is fatally weak. Kuenen shows that Yahveh and Elohim were, in all probability, originally the designations of separate deities in the primitive polytheism out of which the Hebrew religion grew. The name Elohim is itself plural, meaning "the gods" rather than one particular god; which fact is rendered more significant by the use of its singular, Eloh, once in the Hebrew Scriptures. The composition of the Pentateuch renders it evident that the ultimate identification of Yahveh and Elohim was deliberately planned and aided by the later writer, who uses the terms interchangeably, whereas the earlier manuscripts had kept them distinct. To base an argument for primitive monotheism on a comparison of this kind is manifestly absurd.

The idea of a Heaven-Father, or Sky-Father, presented by Dyaus-pitâr and its Indo-European derivatives, suggests both sun-worship and ancestor-worship, and thus furnishes added confirmation of the rationalistic hypothesis of the genesis of the God-Idea.

Another objection to the rationalistic theory suggested by Mr. Fairbairn is that it conceives theism to be a development out of atheism. The religious condition of primitive man which preceded ancestor-worship cannot, however, properly be termed atheism. Atheism is the conscious rejection of the God-Idea. But an idea which has not been presented to the mind certainly cannot be said to be rejected. So far from rejecting the God-Idea, man made haste to accept it as soon as offered; at first crudely and imperfectly, of course, according to his undeveloped capacities; but more and more clearly and intelligently as he pushed forward toward the stature of perfect manhood. The process of development, as far as we are able to trace it, is precisely what it should be, to harmonize with the rational conception of the origin and growth of man.

This leads us naturally to the consideration of the kindred objection, that the rationalistic hypothesis derives religion from man's lower faculties,—from fear, and distorted imagination, and dreams. Let us see if this is a correct statement of the theory. Mr. Fairbairn supposes the primitive monotheistic idea to have originated coordinately with mind. "Mind conscious of self," he says, "was mind conscious of obligation. The idea of God was thus given in the same act as the idea of self." This argument, however, proves too much; for many animals undoubtedly have a consciousness of self-existence, which ought, on Mr. Fairbairn's supposition, to prove them to be good theists. The point, however, where man became religious was precisely the point which raised him above the mere animal. Let us see what are the leading characteristics of this stage of his evolution.

Ancestor-worship, as we have seen, originated in the rites and gifts which were intended to give comfort and sustenance to the spirits of the dead. These customs arose under the primitive family relation, when the family was the social unit, and finally grew into the religion of the family altar. The constitution of the family was the first step which man took out of brutishness,—his first self-recognition of his obligations as a social being. Out of the mutual helpfulness and mutual dependence of this family relation grew a higher form of affection than had previously existed. Man's habits, heretofore wholly predatory and selfish, now became to some degree social. Here, then, arose the social instinct and the first promptings of unselfish super-animal affection. Out of this affection grew the earliest belief that the dead were not annihilated,—that the soul lived and would again inhabit the body. The earliest funeral ceremonies and rites of ancestor-worship were acts of affection, and not of fear. The idea of the existence of the wandering demon or ghost, separate from the body, and purposing evil, was of later origin, and of secondary importance.

What, then, becomes of this final objection to the rationalistic conception of the genesis of the God-Idea? Instead of originating in the lower faculties, it is seen to have been born of the noblest and most unselfish impulses of which primitive man was capable. Worship grew out of love, not fear. Out of love, also, grew the recognition of obligation to others, ultimating in conscience, or the moral sense. Both came from the development of the associative faculties, are coordinately with the earliest evolution of the social life of man. Religion and morality are thus traced back to a common ancestry. Both were born of the first promptings of unselfish human love. They were united in their very natures from the beginning. So let them live forever. What God has joined together let no theologian dare put asunder! Let us hear no more slurs upon "mere morality." It bears the same divine sanction as religion, and an infinitely greater sanction than any system of theology. Theology is the expression of man's puny thoughts about the Infinite One, whose majesty is unsearchable, and who cannot be caught in a definition, or confined by any formula of words. Morality is obedience to God's perfect will, in the relation between man and man. It is the high privilege of rational religion to proclaim forever the marriage of morality and religion, to join in a perfect and indissoluble union the two equally divine principles of love to God and love to man.

But Mr. Fairbairn asserts that there is no historical instance of a people rising from fetishism to monotheism without contact with other nations. A similar argument is presented by Dr. Fraser, under the evident impression that it is fatal to the theory of evolution. Parallel propositions might be stated with equal force and truth. There is no instance where man ever rose out of the animal stage, until he became associated with his kind in the family relation. There is no instance where he has risen above the conception of arbitrary government and primitive religion involved in tribal and nomadic relations, until contact with other tribes and greater permanence of habitation have developed the conditions suitable to the establishment of the city and the State. All that these propositions really assert is one of the essential conditions of the evolution theory: that a fixed environment secures permanence in type,—the repetition of the same phase of development, either in physical organisms, or in the mental life of man; while a changing and expanding environment induces growth and development,—the modification and improvement of the existing type, or the genesis of a new and better one.

The working of this law is everywhere observable in the growth of religions, as well in the Hebrew as in other forms. The contact with Babylon and Persia during the captivity planted in the Hebrew mind the seeds of a vital belief in immortality,—a conscious existence beyond the grave. Dr. Howard Crosby, in a recent lecture, suggests as a reason why Cyrus permitted the return of the Jews, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem, the bond of sympathy between the two monotheisms,—the Hebrew and Zoroastrian systems. There is certainly probability in this supposition; and it lends added force to the conception of a vital contact of the two religions, the result of which is so apparent in the subsequent development of the Hebrew theology.

Studies in the Philosophy of Religion and History*, p. 20.

†History of the Religion of Israel.—Kuenen. The Religion of Israel, by J. Knappert.

Blending Lights*, by Rev. Wm. Fraser, LL.D.

Three centuries of contact with Greek influence, subsequent to the conquest of Palestine by Alexander the Great, prepared the way for the teaching of Jesus, which substituted a Heavenly Father for the jealous and awful Yahveh. The conception of God as Father, as presented in Dyads-pitdr, Zeus-pater, Jupiter, and the Altvater of the Norse mythology, is peculiarly a product of Aryan thought, and only entered the semitic theologies after contact with the Indo-European races.

So also, after the birth of Christianity, it was vitalized and spiritualized by contact with the Platonic philosophy, especially as presented in the writings of Philo, the Alexandrian Jew.

Schelling and Hegel were philosophically and actually correct in tracing the origin of religion and government, the genesis of the God-Idea and the foundation of the state, to one and the same source. Both grew out of the primitive social life of man. In their conception they were one. Government was theocracy; religion was arbitrary in form and irrational in many of its beliefs. In the light of the evolution-philosophy, it is, however, wholly illogical to insist that therefore the State should still remain subject to the Church that government should forever retain its theocratic form. Through the working of the principle of differentiation, the steady tendency of healthy and natural growth has been to separate the functions of religion and government, and permit each to develop naturally in its appropriate sphere. To labor for the reversal of this tendency would be as futile and unnatural as to attempt to restore the full-fledged bird to the egg from whence it came, or to replace the mighty oak in the shell of the acorn. False and fatal indeed to the welfare and happiness of man is that purblind conservatism that fails to see that through all the operations of Nature and life

... "one increasing purpose runs;
And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

It was not our purpose, however, in this paper to trace the growth of the God-Idea, or to discuss its relation to human government. We have sought merely to consider its source, and the conditions of its origin, and to examine certain objections which have been raised to the rational conception involved in the theory of evolution. We have stated these objections fairly, in the language of one of their ablest advocates. We have endeavored to show that they arose in part from a misconception, or rather from an imperfect conception of the grounds of the evolution-hypothesis of the genesis of the God-Idea, and that the facts upon which the objections were based, so far from presenting difficulties in the way of the acceptance of the rational theory, offer, on the contrary, strong evidence in its favor. We have endeavored to supply the "missing link" which accounts for the earliest belief in invisible beings, and, if correct, we have discovered it in the natural promptings of human love.

Tracing the origin of religion and the recognition of a Divine Being back thus to the noblest and most unselfish emotion of which the human heart is capable, we see why religion, in spite of its many errors, absurdities, and mistakes, has always, on the whole, tended to elevate man, to render him more unselfish, more courageous to meet the inevitable conflicts of life, more hopeful and patient. Its rational foundation is thus seen to be not ephemeral, but enduring, based upon the most powerful impulse in the soul of man. We may confidently hope, therefore, that it will steadily outgrow its superstitions and imperfections, under the expanded environment of a wider intelligence, a deeper sincerity, and a purer reason.

And so, born of love into the life of man, its impulse shall always induce him to seek the correspondence of this love in the infinite life in which he lives and moves and has his being. Immortal in its essence, it shall be a light unto his path in all the future ages, when the recollection of the petty contests of the theologians shall have perished from the memory of man.

THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The Free Religious Association began its eleventh annual meeting last night at Horticultural Hall, with the Rev. O. B. Frothingham in the chair. The meeting was called to order about eight o'clock, and the report of the secretary, Mr. W. J. Potter, was first listened to. In addition to his report of the last meeting, May 31 and June 1, 1877, he read from the report of the treasurer, showing that the receipts for that year were $2342.42. His report was accepted, and the report of the treasurer, Mr. R. P. Hallowell, was next called for. In order not to take up time he read only a statement of the condition of the treasury, showing that the receipts for the year have been $1515.89, and the disbursements $1746.97, leaving a balance of $231.08 due the treasury.

The report of the nominating committee was then read. The chairman, Mr. C. D. B. Mills, was obliged to be absent, and had written a brief report. The committee had been compelled to omit the name of one in the nomination for president whom they had been privileged to nominate on former occasions. They had been unable to induce the Rev. O. B. Frothingham to change his decision to resign, and were, therefore, under the necessity of seeking a new name. They had selected the name of Professor Felix Adler, of New York, who is a well-known advocate of free religion. The association had suffered a loss in the death of Robert Dale Owen, one of the vice-presidents, and, with the kind consent of the retiring president, Mr. Frothingham had been selected to fill the vacancy. The Rev. John Wesley and Mr. C. K. Whipple have resigned from the board of directors, and Miss Rebecca Buffin, of Lynn, and Mr. John L. Stoddard were nominated for the vacancy.

The Rev. O. B. Frothingham then made a brief address explaining his motives for resigning. He was sure that the motive was not in the least personal. The duties were not arduous, and he had taken great pleasure in presiding. His object in retiring arose from his regard for the association. He had been president from the formation of the society. His residence being in New York it was impossible for him to meet the directors as he would like to, and there were considerations relative to his living at a distance from the scene of action which seemed to make it impossible for him to continue in office. He tried to resign a year ago, and had now determined to, in order to force a new departure. He spoke of Mr. Adler as precisely the person for the office. Mr. Adler is not a materialist, said he, as has been falsely attributed to him, nor in any sense an atheist. As for himself, he intended to be not a nominal, but a working, vice-president.

The report of the executive committee was then read by Mr. Potter. It gave a brief review of the year's work, stating that the committee had felt, more than ever, the need of assistance from the treasury, and had been obliged to abstain from any publications except the regular report. Numbers of the reports back to 1872 were on hand, and will be for sale at the meeting to-day.

In the meantime the balloting had been going on. The result of the election was announced, stating that all the nominees as given above had been elected. In speaking of the election of Mr. Adler, Mr. Frothingham said that two objections to the association had been removed by this choice. First, that the association was composed of cast-off Unitarians, which objection the association had disposed of by electing a Jew. And second, that it was not in the least practical, not aiming at anything, never had done anything, and never would. Mr. Adler, said he, means business, and has the direct practical instinct of his people, which makes it imperative for him to do something. He spoke in the highest terms of Mr. Adler, and his sentiments were warmly applauded.

It was then announced that Miss Anna C. Garlin, who had been announced to be present to speak on the practical work of the association, was ill, and could not be present. Mr. C. E. Pratt moved that the report of the nominating committee be spread upon the report of the meeting, as the sense of the meeting in relation to the resignation of Mr. Frothingham. The meeting was then open for general discussion.—Advertiser, May 31.

THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

The Free Religious Association continued its meetings yesterday in Beethoven Hall. Mr. O. B. Frothingham presided, in the absence of Mr. Felix Adler, and in an opening address he answered those who claimed the association had done its work and might as well disband. He acknowledged that the speculative idea of the association had been pretty thoroughly made known, but as Christianity was not merely superficial after an existence of nearly two thousand years, there was sub-soil work to be done. It was necessary to go to the roots of things, and radicals meant to do so without tearing up the roots. The association had an idea upon which it sought to build, and all who build upon an idea are conservatives. The speaker said that it was only an accident which placed the association in the hands of the radical wing of the radically independent body; but the time would come when those ladies and gentlemen would quietly step aside to make room for those who now regard themselves as conservatives. There is one phase of growth which the association has not yet reached, and that is the phase of institutions; and until free religion has found its way into institutions, will the full force and pregnancy of the idea become known,—until children are born into it, until it writes school-books and prescribes courses of study. In view of this work a president has been elected who is trying the experiment, among others, of training boys and girls in free religion; and the discussions of the day will be in the direction of organization.

Mr. George William Curtis, one of the vice-presidents, was then introduced. He spoke as follows: I have at this time no speech to make, but I could not be in the city, knowing that the association was to hold its convention, without showing myself upon this platform, to thank you for the honor which you have constantly conferred upon me in placing my name among your vice-presidents. In accordance with the remarks which Mr. Frothingham has already made, I do not of necessity accept this hour as a sign of community of faith, but of spirit. It does not mean necessarily that we think alike, but that we think honestly; and honest thinking is as hard a task as a man or woman in this country is like to set himself. [Applause.] The tendency of society is naturally to conformity. Intellectual independence in religion, in politics, in any branch of human thought or interest, leads to unconformity. Consequently reformers are simply those who do not conform. Undoubtedly the aspects of reform are often distasteful or often unreasonable; are often even repulsive even to men and women of education, of refinement, of high and cultivated taste. And yet except for that spirit of intellectual independence which it is the central principle of this society to promote and encourage, Quakers would to-day be hung on Boston Common, and the man who should question the right of the State to hang them would be driven from the State in exile. Now the principle of conformity to-day expresses itself in a different form from the halter or the axe. Conformity to-day denounces the reformer as an atheist, as an infidel, as a heretic. You will grant surely, ladies and gentlemen, that this is a much less offensive form of opposition than the latter one. It partakes rather of the method of the man who not liking the looks of his antagonist's fists contented himself with making faces at his sisters; and I think you will also agree that this principle has made immense progress; for surely it is much better to be called an infidel and atheist and heretic by men who in their hearts still approve and respect you, than it is to be hung upon Boston Common by those who sincerely believe that you are a limb of Satan. And the same thing is equally true of the sphere of politics. The tendency in political life in this country is equally to a rigorous conformity. Party despotism wields a scourge of scorpions, and the man who ventures in the least to differ from the dictum of his party may take his choice between being denounced as a traitor or derided as a sore-head. Hence you see whence springs the difficulty of which I spoke,—of honest thinking. It is that all the great prizes in life, the great prizes which society holds out to allure the ambition of youth, are mainly given to conformity and are withheld from dissent; and consequently every young man is under the strongest temptation either to think as other men think, or else to conceal his thought. The intellectual demoralization is sure, and it is evident. This was seen forty years ago by one of the most illustrious men that this country has borne, and who stands among the list of our vice-presidents. In his Phi Beta address to the young men at Cambridge, which first revealed to his generation the presence of a great reforming genius, that man said these words: "Gentlemen, when you shall say, as others do, I must renounce—I am sorry for it—the promise of my youth, I must let learning and romantic expectation go till a more convenient season, then dies the man in you, then perish the buds of art and poetry and science, as they have died already in a thousand thousand men. The hour of that choice is the crisis of your history; see to it that you hold yourselves fast by the intellect." He spoke these words; he is now an old man; he has kept his faith with himself; he has kept his faith with the promise of his youth; he is to-day a leader in the army of liberation and humanity. No man in his life, in his character, in his career, more fully embodies the spirit which it is the principle of this society to cultivate and in the constellation of American greatness there is no name that shines with a sorer and purer and more permanent lustre than that of our vice-president, Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Mr. F. B. Wakeman, of the Society of Humanity, New York, addressed the association on "The Religion of Humanity, and How it May be Organized." He appealed for active efforts for the permanent establishment of institutions representing the idea of the association.

Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith, of New York, read a poem on "Soul Questionings," and Miss Anna M. Garlin, of Providence, having delivered an address on the practical work of free religion, the association adjourned to three o'clock.

The afternoon session was called to order by Mr. Frothingham, who made a brief address. The old system of ecclesiastical dogma and the old creeds were passing away. The people did not believe in them, and those who did believed in them sentimentally and not vitally. He referred to the articles published in the North American Review recently, written by the leaders of the various sects and denominations to which, except by the Roman Catholic writer, the old doctrine of perdition was given up. Decay had set in, and the free religious party began, not by destroying anything, but by taking the public sentiment as it now really existed. The time was coming when foundations would have to be solid. The members gave the old system credit for all it had done for the world in preserving education and the spirit of reverence; indeed, they probably did it more than justice in this regard. In closing, he presented Mr. William H. Spencer, of Haverhill, who read an essay on "The Religion of Supernaturalism and Why and How it Should be Disorganized."

Whatever the process, he said, by which ancient men came to regard supernatural as the abode of the supernatural, they did come so to regard it. They worshipped mystery with fear and trembling, and did not look for God in the natural but in the supernatural; they did not see him in light but in darkness. The power of God, mysterious and in mystery, was the tap-root of the rude and even of the higher religions, from which even modern Christianity drew a large part of its life-juices. God was only to be seen by the eye of faith, and in the darkness of mystery lay a Bible more or less inspired, a heaven more or less beautiful and happy, and a hell more or less horrible and painful. The first evil in Christian supernaturalism was that it necessarily antagonized the spirit of science; the second was that it tended to beget a tamper and type of mind unfavorable to perfect intellectual honesty and manly integrity. Christianity was to be honored for its charity and what it had done for the relief of suffering and misery in the world. Charity made a sweet nature, but it must be supplemented by other virtues to make a strong and well-rounded character. The crowning virtue of integrity must be put in as one of the corner pillars of individual character and of the republic too, or both would topple over in ruin. Whatever was due to Christianity as an exemplar of the charitable virtues, she could claim little for the manly virtues; she must hang her head for shame at the mention of fairness, and justice, and intellectual honesty. The speaker referred to the persecutions of the early Church, and then to the petty persecutions of liberals now by the modern Church. People concealed and perverted the truth and the Bible to sustain their religion. He combated the idea that the Bible was a winnowed book, and quoted from a divine engaged in the revision of the Bible some years ago, to the effect that they had to give it up, because they were afraid if they began to winnow the Bible of evil and changed it any, the people would lose faith in all of it. The speaker believed the frauds in religion were some blood-relation to frauds in trade; that bankruptcy of religious sincerity was in partnership with bankruptcy of business honesty. What church did he belong to, of what Sunday-school was he superintendent, were pertinent questions when a man cheated his creditors out of a hundred thousand. When a man was insincere in his creed, he was a man of flabby morals. Sincerity in religion, or sincerity without it if not with it, was what we wanted, and we could never have it till we got rid of this supernaturalism that could only defend itself at the sacrifice of truth. The only way this could be done was by confronting error with truth. Truth was the general, and men must be her soldiers; she was dumb, men must speak for her. The spirit of the age was powerful only because it was incarnate in an army of men who were willing to struggle for it; and in order to disorganize superstition, liberal thinkers and men who loved truth must think, speak, and toll for it. Speaking generally, science was the face that was destroying superstition. The man of the nineteenth century was a sort of universal Yankee. He eclipsed the miracles of old by performing new miracles more wonderful, and all in the name of law. He recognized the supernatural as only an upper story of the natural; but there were no vacant rooms; they were all occupied by law. The essence of religion, the speaker said, was the worship of the ideal; the fiction in religion was the embodying that ideal in some personage who lived years ago. The religion of liberal thought was engraved on the heart of mankind, rested on no history, and was everlasting. The essay of Mr. Spencer was received with much applause, and it was a very eloquent and forcible paper.

Mrs. Clara Neymann, of New York, was the next speaker. She rejoiced in every liberal convention and gathering, because it showed the world that liberals were no longer in the background, but were up and doing. She mentioned as reasons why more women were not connected with the free religious movement, that in the past their education, especially in the classics, which broadened the range of thought, had been neglected; that they had received much recognition in the Church; that the most intelligent women were engaged in another direction in obtaining the political and other rights of the sex. In this connection, she remarked that independence and freedom in religion and independent citizenship for women were intimately related to each other. Another reason why more women were not connected with the movement was because they were afraid of injuring their own peculiar cause. Mrs. Neymann then spoke for this peculiar cause, making a forcible woman suffrage address. She afterwards spoke strongly for a greater morality, a larger spirit of self-sacrifice, and a profounder recognition of the rights of others in the world. The old creed had been, love of God and obedience to his will; the new one was, love to man and obedience to the laws of Nature. A deep, reverent love of man for humanity must take the place of the love and reverence which had been given to God in the past. The esteem and honor in which his name had been held must be given to man, and the sacrifices of the future laid down on the altar of humanity. The speaker entered into a long and intricate argument to show that man was indebted to humanity and his fellow-men for the best things he had, and that his success depended largely on the assistance and cooperation of others. He could never pay back to humanity but a very slight portion of that which he had received. Life for others, therefore, was a constant duty, the consequence of the fact that he lived by others.

Mr. M. Ellinger, editor of the Jewish Times of New York, followed Mrs. Neymann, speaking for the religion of humanity. He showed how religious opinion and organizations had always been changing, and that the work of organization and disorganization had continually been going on. He hoped the time would come, and he thought it would, when the race would have a religion under which all could live in peace. Such a religion could only be built upon one foundation, that of the broadest toleration, and this was the work of the Free Religious Association.

The members of the association, following their annual custom, closed the formal meetings with a social subscription-festival at Horticultural Hall last evening. The floor was cleared of everything except a row of chairs around the hall and another through the centre, so that ample space was left for the promenade. Little desks, with labels signifying the willingness of the ladies who presided at them to receive subscriptions and donations, were scattered about, but sociability and pleasant conversation prevailed everywhere.—Advertiser, June 1.

THE REUNION OF CHRISTENDOM.

A large meeting of clergy and laity was held at Oxford last week for the purpose of securing the co-operation of Roman Catholic prelates and priests, as well as members of the Established Church, in promoting the unity of Christendom. The bishop of Bombay presided, and on the platform there were several Roman Catholic priests. Resolutions were passed declaring that the advance of the infidel movement throughout Europe, and the actual threatened dissolution of the relations of Church and State, constitute a fresh call on all sincere believers to pray and labor earnestly for the reunion of Christians in one faith and one fold; that the accession of Leo XIII., and the reawakening life of Eastern Christianity afford at the present moment special ground for renewed energy and hope; and that the ultimate aim and solution of the Oxford movement of 1833 must be sought in the restoration of the corporate union of Christendom.—London Graphic, of May 25.

Concerning the above meeting, the Graphic has a leader, as follows, under the title 'A New Eirenicon': "The possibility of war abroad and the existence of industrial troubles at home have so occupied men's minds lately that a meeting, held last week at Oxford, for the promotion of the reunion of Christendom, has probably attracted less attention than the intrinsic importance of the movement deserves. The aim of the conveners of the meeting appears to be the union of the Church of England with the Church of Rome on terms of mutual independence; and two reasons are alleged for bringing forward the proposition at the present time; namely, the advance of anti-Christian opinions throughout Europe,—a fact which, as one of the speakers observed, should cause Christians to sink their own differences; and, secondly, the accession of a Pope who is generally supposed to hold less uncompromising views than his predecessor. The movement may fairly be styled an important one, when we remember that a large number of the clergy of the Church of England do more or less closely approximate to the Roman Church in the doctrines which they hold, and, what is more, that they are applauded and upheld by a considerable portion of the laity, especially among the young people. It is a fact—which may be distasteful, but which is not the less a fact—that among church people, especially of the upper and middle classes everywhere, the parents are evangelical or moderately 'high' in their creed; the children are frequently either sceptical or ritualistic. Some people may go so far as to say that they are both, and that a creed which lulls the conscience with forms and ceremonies is quite compatible with practical unbelief. Be that as it may, these young people will, a score of years hence, be the guiding spirits of England, and it is worth considering what the prevailing religion of England will then be. Certain minds are led by ritualism inevitably into Romanism; others, holding apparently precisely the same views, appear able to remain conscientiously in their native church. Which influence will chiefly prevail in the coming generation? For ourselves, we are inclined to think that the English laity, although willing to accept at the hands of their clergy a good deal of doctrine highly-flavored with Romanism, will not very readily swallow the Pope and all the other consequences of submission to that spiritual potentate. If in the proposed Eirenicon, as was hinted by a Roman Catholic speaker at the meeting, the Roman Church is only prepared to give way on such comparatively minor points as the recognition of Anglican orders, and the celibacy of the clergy, she will probably have to content herself for a good many years to come with a few stray converts per annum, most of whom will be clergymen. If, on the other hand, she adopts a bolder course, and says to her Anglican sister, 'Retain your present belief, manage your own affairs, only come back into the family, she may in the end achieve a very important victory. But in order to do this she must abandon that which, to Protestants generally, is her most objectionable characteristic; namely, her pretensions to infallibility; she will have to admit that other people may possibly be in the right as well as herself."

AN HISTORICAL LESSON ON LIBERTY.

The Corporation and Test Acts were passed in the reign of Charles II., rendering it obligatory that every person holding any public office or trust, whether civil or military, should receive the sacrament in church, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation. Thus more than two hundred years ago religious profession was ordered to be tested as a condition of employment in any public capacity, and other grievous provisions were included in these Acts. Against their unhonored memory radicals nowadays cry out so lustily that it becomes needful to remind the public that the Protestant Dissenters supported the passing of the Acts, in the hope of resisting Popery, of whose advancement they were sorely afraid. They were willing themselves to bear the infliction of the Acts for a while, if only the dreaded Romish rival might be kept in check. The Acts, however, pressed harder upon the clergy than upon the Non-conformists, as is ably shown in a leading article in the English Independent—a radical dissenting organ,—which points out that reception of the sacrament being an indispensable preliminary to taking any public office, it was impossible to leave to the clergy the responsibility and power of refusing to administer the sacrament to persons whom they might not consider fit to receive it, or else the clergy would have had control over every appointment, and would thus practically have ruled the nation. It was therefore made obligatory upon the clergy to administer to every one who desired to qualify for office, no matter how bad his character might be. If a clergyman dared to refuse he did so at his peril, and would at once be confronted with the threat, "You won't give me the sacrament, Mr. Reverend, won't you? Very well; we'll see who will win at that game. We'll have you in Banco Regis in no time, and I'll have good round damages out of you. You have spoilt my preferment and lost me my place, and you shall pay for it. I'll let fly my little Per Quods at you, and we shall soon see who'll smart for the costs." The case of the clergy was so hopeless that such a threat was not often necessary. But the scandal of the thing pressed much more heavily upon them than upon the Non-conformists. Irreligious persons about to qualify would loiter in the neighboring public-house till they saw the bulk of the congregation coming away from service at the close of the sermon; then they crossed over the road and went into church, when the clerk would "bid" them in such fashion as this: "Those who want to be qualified will please to step up this way"; and then the Holy Communion was administered. Such is the picture which the Independent draws. In vain did the clergy appeal for reform. The grievance continued unredressed for a century and a half.—Birmingham Gazette, England.

THE CHURCHES need all the money they can get; and, if matters keep on as they have been going lately, they will soon need more than they can get. Complaints of a decline in church revenues steadily increase. Few rents are, of course, the main financial reliance in all the churches, and these have declined all around. In many of the costly up town churches, which carry heavy loads of debt, and support expensive choirs, the revenues from pew rents are not more than two-thirds what they were a few years ago. The pastors keep telling the people that the church should be supported, no matter what else is neglected; that the debt they owe to God should be paid before any other; notwithstanding frequent appeals of this kind, the receipts still fall off. Many pew-holders allow their rent to fall in arrears, and many others give up their pews altogether. One church that formerly gathered in $30,000 a year now finds it difficult to collect $15,000. Another that was in receipt of $40,000 now considers itself lucky if it gets $25,000. Hundreds of steady church-going families find it absolutely necessary to cut down expenses in church as well as out of it, and have been forced to give up costly pews, and hire cheaper ones instead. In many cases, where pews have been rented by women, they have been entirely given up. It is much harder for a woman to come down in the world than it is for a man; and, in most cases, a woman who has occupied a high-priced pew would rather leave the church altogether than change to a low-priced one. The tremendous decline that has taken place in Plymouth Church rentals (from $70,000 in 1875 to $37,000 in 1878) illustrates, though in an exaggerated degree, the falling off in all church revenues. Many ministers are at their wits' end for means to meet demands of one sort or another; and it does not seem at all unlikely that bankruptcy will be the ultimate resort in more churches than one.—Hartford Times.

Poetry.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY TO THE LORD CHANCELLOR, 1819.

[Republished in consequence of the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, 1878.]

I curse thee by a parent's outraged love,
By hopes long cherished and too lately lost,
By gentle feelings thou couldst never prove,
By griefs which thy stern nature never crost;

By those infantine smiles of happy light
Which were a fire within a stranger's hearth,
Quenched, even when kindled, in untimely night,
Hiding the promise of a lovely birth;

By those unpractised accents of young speech
Which he who is a father thought to frame
To gentlest lore, such as the wisest teach;
Thou strike the lyre of mind! Oh, grief and shame!

By all the happy see in children's growth,
That undeveloped flower of budding years,
Sweetness and sadness interwoven both,
Source of the sweetest hopes and saddest fears;

By all the days, under a hireling's care,
Of dull constraint and bitter heaviness,—
Oh, wretched ye, if ever any were
Sadder than orphans, yet not fatherless!

By the false cant which on their innocent lips
Must hang like poison on an opening bloom,
By the dark creeds which cover with eclipse
Their pathway from the cradle to the tomb;

By thy most impious Hell, and all its terrors,
By all the grief, the madness, and the guilt
Of thine impostures, which must be their errors,
That sand on which thy crumbling power is built;

By thy most killing sneer, and by thy smile,
By all the acts and snares of thy black den,
And—for thou canst not out-weep the crocodile
By thy false tears—those millstones braining men;

By all the hate which checks a father's love,
By all the scorn which kills a father's care,
By those most impious hands that dared remove
Nature's high bounds, by thee, and by despair;

Yes, the despair which bids a father groan,
And cry, My children are no longer mine;
The blood within those veins may be mine own,
But, Tyrant, their polluted souls are thine.

I curse thee, though I hate thee not: O slave!
If thou couldst quench the earth-consuming hell
Of which thou art a demon, on thy grave
This curse should be a blessing. Fare thee well.

—National Reformer.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 15.

Chas. Storrs, $5; New England News Co., $10.74; V. B. Martin, $3.24; Wm. T. Menefee, $6; I. A. Scott, $1; M. A. Shepard, $2; W. E. Coleman, $1.60; Emerson Bentley, $3.50; J. Burnham, $10; Aug. Brentano, 1 cent; American News Co., $10.05; A. E. A., $100; T. B. Gunn, $6.7; E. L. Winham, $2.50; J. H. Deering, $3.20; Mrs. L. Grant, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 20, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUVER, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

WE ARE GLAD to learn that Mr. Horace Seaver, the veteran editor of the Investigator, is to receive a "testimonial benefit" under the auspices of the Palm Hall League, Tuesday evening, June 25. There will be a dramatic and musical entertainment, followed by speeches from Messrs. Seaver, Underwood, and Marshall, and dancing. Tickets to be obtained at the Hall, at Ditson's, and at this office.

MR. CHARLES C. BURLIGH, one of the ablest and purest of the original Abolitionists, and for many years resident speaker of the Free Congregational Society of Florence, Massachusetts, was injured by a railway accident on June 3, which resulted in his death on the 14th. The funeral took place at Florence last Sunday. He commanded the deep personal respect of all who knew him by the beauty and simplicity of his character, no less than by the force of his intellect and the long, self-sacrificing devotion of all its powers to the cause of the slave. The world is made poorer by his death; but his memory will abide in many hearts as a constant stimulus to all that is good and true. One such life as his is a sufficient answer to the charge that liberalism leads to immorality; for he was a radical in religion whose name, wherever he was known, was a synonyme for moral spotlessness. The New York Tribune gives the following particulars of his career: "The death is announced of Mr. Charles C. Burligh, the eminent anti-slavery advocate. The event occurred at Florence, Mass., on the 14th inst. On the 3d inst. he was struck by a locomotive which was passing him, and received injuries which have proved fatal. He was born at Plainfield, Conn., on the 10th of November, 1810. His father, Rinaldo Burligh, was distinguished as principal of the Plainfield Academy. Two other sons of his, William Henry and George S., were poets of some celebrity. Charles made such early progress that he was ready for college before he was twelve years old; at fourteen, he was teacher of a public school; at twenty-one, he was admitted to the bar of Windham County, Conn. But he soon became interested in the anti-slavery movement. His first work was to edit an abolition newspaper called The Unionist, edited by his brother William and published by Miss Crandall, who it will be remembered was indicted for setting up a colored school in Connecticut. He was one of the speakers in Pennsylvania Hall in Philadelphia when that edifice was burned by the mob in 1838. Mr. Burligh bore his full share of the odium which was visited upon the early abolitionists. When Mr. Garrison was assailed by rioters in Boston, Mr. Burligh's presence of mind did good service. He it was who closed the door of the office in the face of the crowd, and confronting the assailants gave Mr. Garrison time to escape. A kindly message from his old leader cheered his last hours. He was among the earliest and most active supporters of what are usually called the 'Rights of Women,' and also of religious liberalism. For fifteen years he was 'resident speaker' of the Free Congregational Society in Florence, Mass. For one year he preached to a similar society in Bloomington, Ill. In his later years, he spoke frequently in behalf of the cause of temperance. He was a man of vigorous intellect, and of strong convictions of duty; and his ability as a close reasoner was of the first order. The old American Anti-Slavery Society had no more useful member. He published several works, and among them, Thoughts on the Death Penalty (1845), and a tract on the Sabbath, enforcing strong anti-Sabbatarian views. Mr. Burligh married Gertrude Kimber, of Kimberton, Penn. She died at Florence, Mass., in 1869, at the age of fifty-four years, deeply regretted by a large circle of friends, to whom her loveliness of character had greatly endeared her."

CHRISTIAN KIDNAPPING.

Mr. Moncre D. Conway wrote last month as follows to the Cincinnati Commercial:—

There is one more turn to be given to the screw which is being brought to bear against the free-thinkers. The husband of Mrs. Besant, a clergyman of the English Church, when he drove her from home because of her heresies, signed an agreement by which she was granted the charge of her little daughter Mabel,—a beautiful child. He now prosecutes his wife, to take from her this child, because she is an atheist, opposed to Christianity, and joint publisher of the Fruits of Philosophy. This trial comes on next Saturday. The situation is strange, wonderful. The Judge, whose decision will be absolute, is Sir George Jessel, a Jew. This Jew will sit, in a Christian land, as arbiter between a clergyman and the wife from whom he has separated. The mother will plead for her child; the Christian will try and deprive her of it; the Israelitish Judge will listen and decide on the Sabbath day (Saturday). Of this trial I shall have something to say when I next write, as I shall be present in the court.

We have not seen Mr. Conway's account of the trial. But it resulted in Mrs. Besant's being deprived of the custody of her child by order of the Court, on the grounds alleged by the father; and this decree seems to be unjust, cruel, and oppressive to a degree which ought to have been impossible in the nineteenth century. There are special features in the case which must arouse the indignation of all fair minds against the plaintiff and the Judge.

On the plaintiff's part, Mr. Bardswell (we quote from the National Reformer's "Special Trial Number," which, however, does not contain all of the proceedings) said to the Court:—

Your lordship is quite aware of this, that until the year 1878 it was quite impossible that a father could give up the legal custody of his infant children; such was held to be an obligation of parental duty by the state of the law, and until that year it could not have been done according to law. No doubt, however, by the Act of 36 and 37 Vic., cap. 12, the law was altered in that respect, by which it was enacted that no agreement in a deed of separation between a father and mother of an infant or infants should be held to be invalid by reason of the father having given up to the mother the custody of an infant or infants. But in that Act there is an important proviso which I, as representing the child Mabel Emily Besant, to-day must draw your lordship's attention to. The words of the proviso in the Act are: "That no Court shall enforce any such agreement, if the Court shall be of opinion that it would not be for the benefit of the infant or infants to give effect thereto." I say, my lord, emphatically, on the part of that child, that it cannot be for her benefit that her custody should remain with Mrs. Besant. Putting apart for the time all questions with reference to those works which, unhappily, have obtained such great notoriety, and putting it simply as a question between the father or mother having the custody of the child, I say, speaking to your lordship as a father, it cannot be said that it would be better for the benefit of this child that she should, during her tender years, be associated with Mrs. Besant.

Against this pleading, Mrs. Besant, who conducted her own case (and did it with marked ability), contended:—

The Rev. Frank Besant is entirely, by the deed he signed in October, 1873, cut off from all right to take part in this matter at all, whether as petitioner or as next friend. Now, words cannot be stronger than the words in the deed in which the father resigns all right of control over the child. It says: "The said Annie Besant should have the sole charge and custody of the said Mabel Emily Besant, free from interference or interruption on the part of the said Frank Besant, or any person deriving or claiming authority from him." It was contended by the learned counsel who leads in this case that the State gives the right and the duty to the father to overlook the religious education of the child, and that the father cannot, by any possibility, by his own act, divest himself of that control. I would submit to your lordship that the Act 36 and 37 Vic., cap. 12, distinctly says that a deed shall not be held invalid because the deed provides that the father shall give up the custody of the child. That clearly does away with the whole of the cases which before that statute might have been held to have had weight with your lordship, because the "custody and control" must clearly apply to the whole care and education of the child; and where the father has given up the control by his own voluntary act, and where the statute has legalized such action on the part of the father, I do not doubt, with all submission, that your lordship will fairly think that Mr. Besant has shut himself out from all right to come to this court, and ask the Court to enable him to break his word.

HIS LORDSHIP.—There you see, Mrs. Besant, you are again in a legal difficulty; you do not know I have already decided that very point the other way not very long ago, and no counsel could argue such a point.

MRS. BESANT.—In which case, —re Talbot and Shrewsbury, my lord?

HIS LORDSHIP.—No.

MRS. BESANT.—In the case of re Carnegie? That case is not yet reported; but if I was informed correctly, my lord, in that case your lordship founded your decision distinctly on the ground of immoral conduct on the part of the mother.

HIS LORDSHIP.—I decided that the father had not by the separation-deed, in which he allowed the mother the custody of the child, deprived himself of the right to come to this court and reclaim the custody of the child. I decided that the Act of Parliament must be read as it is written, and not that any gloss should be put upon it. The words of the Act are simply these: That the agreement shall not make the separation-deed invalid; it does not make the agreement valid; and it goes on to say that "No Court shall enforce any such agreement, if the Court shall be of opinion that it would not be for the benefit of the infant or infants to give effect thereto." That agreement relates only to the custody or control of the mother; and all the Act says is, that the insertion of such a clause in the deed shall not make the separation-deed invalid. It does not at all make that clause valid, unless the Court shall think fit.

MRS. BESANT.—I shall not further argue that point, my lord.

HIS LORDSHIP.—Then I want to explain to you what the whole question turns upon. The agreement by the father to give up the control and custody of his child was, until the 24th April, 1873, illegal. He could not do it at all. By no contract whatever could he deprive himself of the custody of his children. This Act was then passed, and by it an exception was made in the favor of the mother to a very limited extent, and all the exception is this: It, first of all, says that no agreement contained in any separation-deed entered into between a father and mother shall be held to be invalid by reason only of its providing that the father of such infant, or infants, shall give up the custody or control to the mother. That gets rid of the illegality of the agreement; but it does not make it valid, because it goes on to say, "provided always that no Court shall enforce any such agreement, if the Court shall be of opinion that it will not be for the benefit of the infant, or infants, to give effect thereto." This is a prohibition to the Court to enforce the agreement; in other words, the Court is not to interfere with the father's legal rights, unless it is of opinion that it shall be for the benefit of the infant that it should do so. That is how the law stands. Then, even if I doubted it, I should give effect to the father's right. It is not, you see, a question of depriving a father of his rights, but as to enforcing them.

MRS. BESANT.—Quite so; and I would urge upon your lordship that I do not really stand in the position of a mother as against a father, for, as I am aware, a married woman has practically no rights in this country; but, rather, as the guardian appointed by the father of his own free-will, and valuable consideration on my part having been given for that.

HIS LORDSHIP.—I take it that I have nothing to do with that; I have only to say that I am prohibited by law from interference with the father's agreement to give up the custody of the infant, unless I am of opinion that it would be for the benefit of the infant to give effect thereto. Therefore, you will have to satisfy me that it is for the benefit of the infant to give effect to the father's agreement.

MRS. BESANT.—I will endeavor to do so, my lord. Then I will not press the point which I intended to raise, that it would have a bad effect on public morals if your lordship decides that a father who simply desires to get rid of his wife has only to bribe her by giving up her children to her, to get indemnified for all responsibility with regard to her maintenance, and may then come to this court—while he keeps the whole of the valuable consideration, the indemnity against all liability for maintenance,—and then he is to be permitted to come here and take from the woman that for the sake of which she consented to the deed of separation.

HIS LORDSHIP.—I take it that this is wholly immaterial. All that the statute requires is that the infant's benefit is to be regarded and nothing else.

MRS. BESANT.—Then, my lord, I will remind your lordship that the conduct of the father, however bad, has been held not to be sufficient ground for the interference of this Court. Your lordship will remember the case of Flynn, reported in 12 Jurist, where it was held, under very extreme circumstances, that the Court would not interfere to deprive him of his parental rights, although such deprivation would be of advantage to the infant.

HIS LORDSHIP.—That is quite a different case.

MRS. BESANT.—Yes, he was only notoriously profligate and drunken, not irreligious. But I will submit to your lordship that there is no case for the removal of the child merely on the ground of speculative opinions, and your lordship is really asked to do that for which there is no precedent on the law books.

HIS LORDSHIP.—I agree, so far. I do not know that this Court has ever taken away the custody of a child from its father, or lawful guardian, merely on the ground that the father or guardian entertained speculative opinions.

MRS. BESANT.—Quite so, my lord; that is all I desire to put; I will not press the point further.

The essential facts appear to be:—

1. That the father, the Rev. Frank Besant, gave his wife a deed of separation, dated October 25, 1873, by which "it was provided, inter alia, that, except during one month in every year, the said Annie Besant should have the sole custody and control of the said Mabel Emily Besant so long as she should continue an infant, free from interference or interruption on the part of the said Frank Besant, or any person deriving or claiming authority from him, and also that the said Annie Besant should have the said Arthur Digby Besant to reside with her one month in every year"; and that, in accordance with the natural equity of the case, the father was to have the custody of the boy, and the mother that of the girl, —these two children being the only issue of the marriage.

2. That the father, disregarding wholly this sacred agreement in the deed of separation, in consideration of which the mother had relinquished her legal claim for alimony, has now broken his own word, and legally, but unjustly, wrested from the poor, helpless mother the only one of her children left to her, while he seizes both for himself.

3. That the Rev. Frank Besant has thereby proved himself so mean, treacherous, and cruel, that no word in the English language can more fittingly describe his character than the word sneak; and that he has earned the hearty reprobation of every man who has soul enough to detest tyranny, fraud, and treason to all that is manly.

4. That Sir George Jessel, the Judge, admitting that no child had ever been taken away from its father by his court on account of the father's speculative opinions, proceeded to take away from a mother on that account the child expressly guaranteed to her by the father in the deed of separation; and that this flagrant and disgraceful partiality, whatever may be his pretence of regard for the "benefit of the infant," should brand him as an unjust judge in the estimation of all right-minded persons.

It is impossible that Mrs. Besant should fail to receive the deep sympathy of American liberals in this her hour of maternal sorrow, aggravated and embittered as it is by a burning sense of wrong. She has proved herself faithful to her own convictions of right and truth to a degree involving courage and self-sacrifice of which few indeed are capable. Who shall say that martyrdom is unknown in our age, when such a grief as this, far sharper and more terrible than the momentary pangs of death, is thrust into a mother's bleeding heart, for no better reason than that she has obeyed her conscience to the bitter end? When such crimes as these are committed in the name of God, is it any wonder that his name becomes to multitudes an object of hatred or contempt? Our readers well know that scientific theism is the goal at which our own thought persistently arrives; but such an infamy as this almost makes us long to be an atheist. Tyranny is hideous enough at all times; but when it puts on the cloak of religion, what demon was ever yet so black or horrid? Let us all hope that English law will at last, on appeal to some higher court, clear itself by a reversal of judgment from the disgrace which Sir George Jessel has brought upon it. But the last word on this subject should be Mrs. Besant's own:—

Sir George Jessel is a Jew; he thinks that a parent should be deprived of a child if he or she withhold from it religious training. Two hundred years ago, Sir George Jessel's children might have been taken from him because he did not bring them up as Christians; Sir George Jessel and his race have been relieved from disabilities, and he now joins the persecuting majority, and deals out to the atheist the same measure dealt to his forefathers by the Christians. The Master of the Rolls pretended that by depriving me of my child he was inflicting no punishment on me. If the Master of the Rolls have any children, he must be as hard-hearted in the home as he is on the bench, if he would not feel that any penalty was inflicted on him if his little ones were torn from him and handed over to a Christian priest, who would teach them to despise him as a Jew and hate him as a denier of Christ. Even now Jews are under many social disabilities; and even when richly gilt, Christian society looks upon them with thinly-concealed dislike. The old, wicked prejudice still survives against them, and it is with shame and with disgust that liberals see a Jew trying to curry favor with Christian society by reviving the obsolete penalties once inflicted on his own people.

Of one thing Sir George Jessel and his Christian friends may be sure, that neither prosecution nor penalty will prevent me from teaching both atheism and Malthusianism to all who will listen to me; and since Christianity is still so bigoted as to take the child from the mother because of a difference of creed, I will strain every nerve to convert the men and women around me, and more especially the young, to a creed more worthy of humanity.

Sir George Jessel pretended to have the child's interests at heart; in reality he utterly ignored them. I offered to settle £110 a year on the child if she was placed in the charge of some trustworthy and respectable person; but the Master did not even notice the offer. He takes away the child from plenty and comfort, and throws her into comparative poverty; he takes her away from most tender and watchful care, and places her under the guardianship of a man so reckless of her health that he chose the moment of her serious illness to ask for her removal; he takes her away from cultured and thoughtful society to place her among half-educated farmers. Nay, he goes further: Dr. Drysdale's affidavit stated that it was absolutely necessary at present that she should have her mother's care; and Sir George Jessel disregards this, and, in her still weak state, drags her from her home and from all she cares for, and throws her into the hands of strangers. If any serious results follow, Sir George Jessel will be morally, though not legally, responsible for them. In her new home she can have no gentle, womanly attendance. No Christian lady of high character will risk the misconception to which she would be exposed by living alone at Sibsey Vicarage with a young clergyman who is neither a bachelor nor a widower; the child will be condemned either to solitary neglect at home or to the cold strictness of a boarding-school. She is bright, gay, intelligent, merry, now. What will she be at a year's end? My worst wish for Sir George Jessel is that the measure he has meted out to me may, before he dies, be measured out to him or his.

THE WATKINS CONVENTION.

We are requested to publish the following announcement:—

The Freethinkers' Convention.

The committee having the matter in charge have decided to invite the following named as the speakers for the Freethinkers' Convention to be held in Watkins, August 22, 23, 24, and 25:—

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Washington, D.C.; Rev. Robert Collyer, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Tenafly, N.J.; Rev. O. B. Frothingham, New York; Hon. Geo. W. Julian, Indiana; Prof. J. E. Oliver, Cornell University; Acting President, Prof. Russel, Cornell University; Prof. F. Adler, New York; Rev. M. J. Savage, Boston; Hon. E. P. Hurlbut, Albany, N.Y.; Mr. James Parton, Newburyport, Mass.; Prof. Youmans, editor Popular Science Monthly; Horace Seaver, editor Boston Investigator; Francis E. Abbot, editor INDEX, Boston; D. M. Bennett, editor Truth Seeker, New York; Rabbi Isaac M. Wise, editor Israelite, Ohio; Moritz Ellinger, editor Jewish Times, New York; Karl Heinzen, editor Der Pioneer, Boston; Luther Colby, editor Banner of Light, Boston; Col. John C. Bundy, editor Religio-Philosophical Journal, Chicago; Hon. Elizer Wright, Boston; B. F. Underwood, Boston; Elder F. W. Evans, Mount Lebanon, N.Y.; Hon. Martin Peabody, New Jersey; Rev. S. R. Calthrop, Syracuse; Rev. E. W. Mundy, Syracuse; Prof. C. D. B. Mills, Syracuse; Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, Elmira; Prof. William Denton, Boston; Mrs. Clara Neymann, New York; Parker Pillsbury, Concord, N.H.; Mrs. Matilda Joselyn Gage, President National Woman's Equal Rights Association; Prof. T. C. Leland, New York; Rev. J. W. Chadwick, Brooklyn; Rev. William J. Potter, New Bedford, Mass.; Rev. William S. Bell, New Bedford, Mass.; Mrs. Lucy A. Coleman, Syracuse, N.Y.; Prof. A. L. Rawson, New York; Charles Ellis, Boston; Giles B. Stebbins, Detroit, Mich.; Rev. C. W. Wendte, Cincinnati, O.; Rev. T. J. Sunderland, Chicago, Ill.; Rev. Wm. Ellery Copeland, Lincoln, Neb.; Rev. Wm. C. Gannett, St. Paul, Minn.; Rev. A. Freeman Bailey, Indianapolis, Ind.; Hon. L. W. Billingsly, Lincoln, Neb.; E. C. Walker, Florence, Iowa; Rev. J. M. Barnes, Lafayette, Va.; Miss Elmina Drake Slenker, Snowville, Va.; Prof. A. B. Brown, Worcester, Mass.; L. J. Russell, M.D., Harrisville, Texas; Hon. R. S. McCormick, Franklin, Pa.; Prof. J. H. W. Toohy, Chelsea, Mass.; H. L. Green, Salamanca, N.Y.; Mrs. E. L. Watson, Titusville, Pa.; Rev. S. W. Sample, Strawberry Point, Iowa; S. O. Kellogg, Berlin Heights, Ohio; T. L. Brown, M.D., Binghamton, N.Y.; R. Peterson, editor Common Sense, St. Louis, Mo.; Rev. J. H. Harter, Auburn; Rev. W. H. Spencer, Wisconsin; W. F. Jamieson, Chicago; Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Boston; Hon. Fred. Douglass, Washington, D.C.; P. V. Naaby (Locke), Toledo, Ohio; Andrew Jackson Davis, New York; Rev. A. B. Bradford, Penn.; Hon. Abraham Payne, Providence, R.I.

There will also be many speakers invited who are not named above. The Freethought County Committees of each county of the State will be requested to provide tents to accommodate the people from their respective counties. H. L. Green, Sec'y.

SALAMANCA, N.Y., June 4, 1878.

WHEN WE BEGIN to use a telephone for the first time, there is a sense of oddity, almost of foolishness, in the experiment. The dignity of talking consists in having a listener, and there seems a kind of absurdity in addressing a piece of iron; but we must raise our respect for the metal, for it is anything but deaf. The diaphragm of the telephone, the thin iron plate, is as sensitive as the living tympanum to all the delicate refinements of sound. Nor does it depend upon the thickness of the metallic sheet, for a piece of thick boiler-plate will take up and transmit the motions of the air-particles in all the grades of their subtlety. And not only will it do the same thing as the tympanum, but it will do vastly more: the grooves, dead metal proves, in fact, to be a hundred times more alive than the living mechanism of speech and audition. This is no exaggeration. In quickness, in accuracy, and even in grasp, there is a perfection of sensitive capacity in the metal; with which the organic instrument cannot compare. We speak of the proverbial "quickness of thought"; but the telephone thinks quicker than the nervous mechanism. Let a word be pronounced for a person to repeat, and the telephone will hear and speak it a hundred miles away in a tenth part of the time that the listener would need to utter it. Give a man a series of half-a-dozen notes to repeat, and he cannot do it accurately to save his life; but the iron plate takes them up, transmits them to another plate hundreds of miles off, which sings them forth instantaneously with absolute precision. The human machine can hear, and reproduce, in its poor way, only a single series of notes, while the iron ear of the telephone will take up whole chords and strains of music, and, sending them by lightning through the wire, its iron tongue will emit them in perfect relations of harmony.—Prof. Youmans, in Popular Science Monthly for March.

Communications.

"THE MONGOLIAN PROBLEM."

Like Mr. Charles Ellershaw, I agree in conclusions on the Mongolian problem with the proletarian party without agreeing with it in method when that method is violence; and even as to argument I agree with it less completely than Mr. Ellershaw does. This proletarian argument he presents with great force (INDEX, May 30), and his own additions to it are well worth our most serious attention. Certainly human progress is not a natural evolution that we may fatalistically take for granted, and placidly contemplate with our hands in our pockets. Mankind and individual nations have repeatedly given instances of arrested progress and periods of retrogression toward a worse state; and mankind, as well as the particular nation whose destinies are specially entrusted to us by the fact of our being its citizens, will continue to go forward or retrograde, not fatedly, but according as every one of us leaves his hand in his pocket or puts it to the wheel. It is not even sufficient to put one's hand to the wheel; it is necessary to do it skillfully.

Of the arguments presented by Charles Ellershaw against Mongolian immigration there are two whose cogency, in the rapid brilliancy of his dialectic march, is made to appear to us as accumulative; whereas on calmer reflection we find it to be deductive. The first argument is derived from the fact that the Mongolian, in coming to our shores, brings with him women, at least to become wives, so as to give the promise of the Mongolian immigration becoming, as the English, German, Scandinavian, and Irish, a permanent element of the population of this country. The second argument is that the Mongolian race is a sinful, diseased one, so that its mere physical mixture would be a contamination to the American people, not to speak of the worse contamination to our national morals, if the intercourse between the two peoples ever became really social, argument first having shown that it does not. That it does not, far from being a different count against this immigration scheme, is really its redeeming feature, our protection against its greatest danger. In order to make the counts derived from these two sources equal one plus one instead of one minus one, it would be necessary to show, not that the Mongolians bring with them no wives and become no permanent part of the population, as, owing to temporary causes, has been hitherto the case, but that there is the most appalling certainty that if this immigration scheme is allowed to go on a little more, Mongolians will indeed soon adopt the practice of coming to this country as permanent immigrants with women and families and all, and that in such overwhelming numbers as to not only apophyllize but utterly mongrelize the American nation.

I know that this mongrel question does not yet strike the majority of intelligent and liberal-minded Americans as a very relevant one. The men and women who were the leaders of the progressive thought of this country during the ever-memorable struggle for the abolition of slavery are not all dead yet. A part of that glorious constellation has already followed its great day's twilight beyond the western horizon; the others are yet above for a while, and we admire the brilliancy of their parting smile on the land where their work is done. It is natural and it is just, that so long as these stars remain in our firmament we should see things partly by their light, and their light is that of a time when the advocacy of the most just cause made it necessary to minimize the importance of questions of race. A man, whether white or black, yellow or red, or even blue or green, if any such existed, was a man for all that; and a man certainly he is, for it is not I, a Christian bishop, who am going to inscribe myself against this sublime doctrine of the universal fraternity of mankind. The first Christian ever baptized outside of the Jewish nucleus was an Ethiopian, a negro, the standard-bearer of all of us gentiles. In the philosophic baptism, at the mystic eucharist, there is no distinction of Jew or Gentile, of Caucasian, African, Mongolian, or red Indian, but we are there one body in Christ, on a footing of the most perfect equality. But if it belongs to the Church, at her point of view and for the purposes which she is appointed to fulfil, to ignore the distinction of races as she ignores the distinctions of rank and wealth, she does not thereby imply that all such things should be absolutely ignored by statesmen, whose sphere is a different one, a sphere in which she claims no jurisdiction.

It belongs to statesmen to make laws providing that not only work but even skill shall be encouraged by material rewards. It belongs to statesmen to make laws to the general effect of restricting the reproduction of the insane, and of persons affected with contagious and hereditary diseases. It belongs to statesmen—and we are all statesmen in a republic—to make both laws and treaties securing the immigration into our country, not of any population that may choose to come, or that a private speculator may choose to invite, but only of a population whose blending with the people of the country may lead to harmonious and advantageous social, industrial, and political relations in the present, with the promise of such an offering as will constitute an intelligent, virtuous, successful, powerful, healthy, and beautiful nation in the future.

I believe too much stress is laid on the Mongolian's alleged heathen depravity. I profess myself a Christian, but do not wish to have anything to do with fanatics. The Buddhist creed, is next to the Christian, the most sublime one which was ever professed by any large portion of humanity. The vices of such Mongolians as come to our shores are sufficiently explained by the fact that they come as celibate workers, without family life and without any prospect of it so long as they remain here. All agglomerations of unmarried pubes—armies, navies, convents, colleges—are by the nature of things hotbeds of sodomy and every other impurity, which does not prevent the victims of those errors, when at last they have a chance of settling down into a regular married life, from becoming decent members of society. Even the results of syphilis, I believe, may be obliterated from the general average by some cure or kill process. Such would doubtless be the case with Mongolians, should they ever settle in this country with the complete elements of family life. Of the equality of the Mongolians to ourselves in intelligence, and of their great readiness to adopt any improvement in civilization for which they are not physically unfitted, there is not the slightest doubt.

This adaptability is fully shown by what is truly alleged of the position already taken by the Mongolians as successful competitors to American workmen on American ground and on the basis of American methods of industry, an evil the nature of which is not yet really understood by the proletarian party nor by Mr. Ellershaw himself. What if the Mongolian, having come to this country without a cent, returns to Asia a few years after with a bundle made heavier by a few hundred silver dollars? The assertion that he has made this country poorer by that amount is refuted by the other assertion made in the same breath, that he works for lower wages than any American would accept for the same work. If he works twenty per cent. more than he is paid for, each hundred dollars he carries away has been purchased by him at the cost of a hundred and twenty dollars' worth in property which his labor has created, and which he leaves in this country to be divided between the American people according to the laws, contracts, and methods of business that Americans arrange among themselves. If this division of the plunder is not equitable, if a few Americans alone get the whole profit of it and more too, and go to spend it in Paris, London, and Florence, leaving the working Americans poorer than if there had been no Mongolians to plunder, this is a question between Americans and Americans, not between Americans and Mongolians. So far as this point is concerned, the transmigration question, on which Congress ought to be memorialized, is not that of Celestials to the United States, but that of Americans to Paris.

Let us say it squarely, The Mongolian question, divested from all the elements which sophistry and false arithmetic, inspired too often by animosities of a low order, have added to it, reduces itself to a question of race, and ought as such to be considered by the American people calmly, as a farmer calmly considers the question with what stock to stock his farm. Some one said he would rather be Herod's pig than Herod's son, but the American people will certainly not pay less regard to the human stock which is to people their country than a decent farmer pays to the selection of the stock on his farm. Before, however, we examine which human stock we would rather have, let us ask ourselves, is the question practical?

Will the Mongolian immigration really come in such numbers as to supplant the present population of the United States? It will, as every immigration from a poorer into a richer country will do in time, unless stopped by law or treaty or unless the supply fails. The reason is simple. Immigrants are poor and come to this country in a helpless condition. They need immediate employment and purchase it by working at lower wages than the natives, as we have already seen is the case with the Mongolians. Employers will therefore prefer the immigrants to the natives, who will have themselves to emigrate to another State or to another planet. To remove, however, what is accidental in this result, let us suppose that the natives are not so foolish as to leave to a few employers the whole profit of the plunder of the helpless immigrants, but will by law secure that that plunder shall be pretty fairly divided between all the natives, as the profit of the plunder of the negroes was under certain tariff laws pretty fairly divided between North and South: will that stop the immigration? On the contrary, the immigration will take colossal proportions never thought of before, the whole native population being now interested in encouraging it. Interested, I mean, in a mere hand-to-mouth point of view, irrespective of those far-sighted and higher considerations which ought to govern a nation's policy. The native population, having an unlimited supply of cheap servants, will lose working habits. It is a law of human affairs that whenever a class or a family ceases to be able to do its own work and requires servants, that class or family is doomed to extinction. It will never learn to work again, and so long as it can live on the labor of others, it may exist; but when the cycles of time will, as they certainly will, bring in an order of things in which that family or class is thrown upon its own exertions, it must perish. The descendants of the present Irish, German, Scandinavian, and Nova-Scotian servants will possess the fair mansions and the broad acres of their present masters; but this process of substitution will be imperceptible,—so imperceptible that we do not see it, though it is actually going on, because those European immigrants are of the same race as their masters. Whether their children or the children of their masters inhabit the country and own the estates, the aspect of things would not be materially changed; and even now you might in many instances, without any injury to aesthetics, place the servant on the sofa and the mistress in the kitchen. The case would be entirely different were the Mongolians or any other non-Caucasic race ever allowed to supplant the white population of this country. Besides, Caucasian immigration will soon have reached its natural limit, the approximate equalization of the means of comforts between the workmen of this country and those of Europe. But then the countless millions of wretched Mongolians will continue to pour in.

The Mongolian problem is now, therefore, narrowed within the following terms: This is our country, the country which we love and for which we endeavor to prepare a glorious future by adorning it with the beauties of liberty, virtue, wealth, science, art, political order, and social life. Shall our country after us be the home of a race Caucasian, that is, fair, tall, strong, symmetric, and which it would take only a moderate process of elimination to bring to that absolute ideal beauty of form which many of its individuals realize and which no individual outside of it will ever approach? Or shall our country be the home of a race small in stature, weak of muscle, incapable of standing in battle for our institutions, against any foreign army of full-sized Caucasians or negroes, and by its outward form alien to the arts which, since the days of Greece, have been and will forever be the inspiration of even the morals of that type of civilization which alone can be the highest? Think of our divine statuary, of our marvellous paintings, of our poetry, our opera, the brilliancy of our social life. Then think of the opera, of the ballroom, without the idealizing presence of Caucasian beauty! We have seen at Philadelphia the Mongolian substitutes for the Melian Venus and the Belvedere Apollo. Think of an Iliad with a Chinese Thetis or a Japanese Athenal Argyropeza Thetis, Iris, Athene, Here, Zeus, are not the peristyles of our capitol those of your temples? Do you flee from us? Save us, save our land; or if not even the gods can save a nation bent on suicide, come, Sleep and Death, carry me away from the sight of my United States with a Mongolian population.

JULIUS FERRETTE.

BISHOP FERRETTE'S METRIC SYSTEM.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Allow me to thank Bishop Ferrette for his undeservedly generous treatment, in THE INDEX of May 9, of my article on the Metric Reform and of its author. While, however, his courtesy is very charming, his arguments are hardly satisfactory. In his reply to my criticisms, he has given, in detail, the table which he proposes in place of the Metric System. The ratio, it will be seen, is uniformly decimal, while a slight connection with our old measures is secured by making the foot the basis of the system, and retaining the name "ounce" for the unit of weight. Of course, the retention of the foot would be a convenience for those countries which already use that denomination; but as it is hoped to make the system universal, this feature can hardly be regarded as of any general value. As to facility of reduction, a small slip of paper which any one can carry in his vest pocket will contain all the figures needed for readily changing the old English into metric denominations, and vice versa. Bishop Ferrette still insists that his system retains the ounce, in fact, as well as in name, and that that denomination of our avoirdupois table represents accurately the weight of one "millicube" of water. Now my authority for denying this assertion may be "erroneous and antiquated," but I am unable to find anything more reliable or recent which refutes the denial. As a result of an examination ordered by the United States Senate in 1830, it was ascertained that the measures in use in the various custom-houses were badly discordant. The treasury department assumed the right to correct the evil, and, accordingly, under the auspices of Secretary McLane, uniform weights and measures were constructed and sent to the various custom-houses as authentic standards. Congress sanctioned this action, by joint resolution, June 14, 1836. The gallon adopted at this time was to contain 231 cubic inches, or 58,372.1754 grains of distilled water at the temperature of maximum density, and at thirty inches of the barometer; the bushel was to contain 3150.42 cubic inches, or 543,391.89 grains of water, under the same conditions. From either of these sets of figures, the weight of a cubic foot of water is determined to be 436,654.19 grains, or 998.0667 avoirdupois ounces. I have been able to learn of no governmental action which has modified this authorized relation. If the English gallon is taken as the standard (and in an "Anglo-American" system the precedence would properly be given to the mother country), the variation becomes still greater. A computation similar to those previously described, based on data furnished by the latest English statutes, determines the cubic foot of water to weigh only a small fraction over nine hundred and ninety-seven ounces. Clearly, the statement that a cubic foot of water weighs a thousand ounces is a loose assertion, whether obtained from "common arithmetics" or from a "minority report of a Congressional Commission."

Mr. Ferrette's statement with reference to the difficulties attending the mechanical manipulation of a liquid, in its cubic measurement, is a sufficient explanation of whatever slight discrepancies may exist between the actual French kilogram and more recent theoretical determinations. As the original experiments were made with the utmost care, and by thoroughly competent men, it may safely be concluded that they came about as near attaining absolute accuracy as is within the limits of human possibilities.

I have no criticisms to offer as to Mr. Ferrette's suggested method of "settling this metric question satisfactorily." His hearty hopefulness with reference to the realization of his benevolent plans is always inspiring. For myself, however, I must confess that I am not so sanguine as to anticipate that the proposed trinkets would ever rise much above the grade of watch-charms, or, possibly, an honorable position in some future antiquarian's collection.

HENRY DOTY MAXSON.

MILTON, Wis., June, 1878.

FOR DIGNITY IN DISCUSSION STILL.

OZARK, Mo., May 21, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

My short article on the need of high-tone and dignity in the discussion of the issues between liberalism and Christianity, published a short time ago in THE INDEX, has called forth some harsh censure from a few indignant liberals. I have no relish for personal controversy, and shall not measure lances with my critics, some of whom have shown themselves masters in the use of a certain style of rhetoric which I do not wish to cultivate.

But the principle for which I contended I still maintain with no abatement of earnestness. A reasonable regard for the sanctity of truth demands that the great issues of modern thought be discussed in a spirit of honor and magnanimity commensurate with the dignity and importance of the subjects involved. The genius of true liberalism demands that this magnificent arena of intellectual contest shall not be defiled by any resort to the arts of the demagogue, but that the spirit of the highest polemic honor shall rule in a discussion involving the profoundest ideas and hopes of mankind. There is no reason why liberals to-day should imitate the style of discussion employed by the pioneers of free-thought. Our situation is very different from theirs. We live in an age of religious liberty and culture far superior to theirs. They could only defy the universal spirit of religious intolerance and tyranny that everywhere sought to crush the child of liberty. They had not the material for building up a new faith founded in the reason and universal sympathies of mankind that abounds to-day. They did their work according to the force of their surroundings, and the means they employed may have been the best they could command. But liberals have to-day a different mission from that of Paine and Voltaire. They have the grander work of building the temple of a new religion, instead of merely destroying the decaying shrine of an old one. The self-respect of liberals who have faith in their ideas, the respect due an honest opponent, and more than all the great interests of the world that are involved in this imposing conflict of thought, should give this discussion a tone of immaculate purity and a spirit of uncompromising honor.

I may have been unjustly severe in condemning the style of discussion to which I object, but it is unfair in those whom I have offended to hold THE INDEX responsible for the sentiments of a single correspondent. THE INDEX has never, so far as I know, represented any liberal as being "low and vulgar," and fairness demands that those who speak of it should distinguish what is published in the editorial columns from the writings of its correspondents.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

"A RATIONAL CHURCH NEEDED."

EDITOR INDEX:—

Under the above heading, Mr. H. C. Neville remarks: "As it is not the mission of the Liberal League to teach morality nor to cultivate the spiritual and æsthetic sentiments in human nature," etc. To me, this is a most extraordinary statement. "It is not the mission of the Liberal League to teach morality!" Mr. Neville, what is the foundation of all morality? Is it not justice between man and man? And what is justice but another name for truth? When we know what man's proper relations are in respect to his fellow-man, both as an individual and as that aggregate of individuals known as society, then we have truth; and when we make this truth an active, living force in government and society, we have established justice.

Now, this is the special work of the Liberal League; and if we will but do our best to make its principles triumphant in our land, we shall have done the greatest work that we possibly could do for morality. We must labor to establish justice, for justice is, so to speak, the executive arm of truth. Until we can make people apprehend the simple principles of justice, it is so much wasted breath to talk of "spiritual sentiments."

Mr. Neville speaks of "a higher degree of moral culture than that contemplated by the Liberal League." I insist that there is no higher degree of moral culture attainable than that whose germ lies hidden in the rough shell of justice, ready to burst into beautiful and robust life, whenever that justice shall have been planted in the rich soil of humanity.

Every reform which speaks for justice is a Church of Moral Culture; and none other can be abiding. Let us bear onward the banner of every reform—religious, political, industrial, and social,—having in our hearts the unfaltering assurance, that when we shall have established justice in every department of human life we shall be blessed with the purest, the highest, and the noblest morality which man can ever know,—a morality far surpassing the wildest dream of the theorist who vainly imagines that there is something better than justice, and so wastes his time and energies in fruitless "aspirations," neglecting humanity's work at hand.

Let justice ever be your aim,
Your motive, and your guiding star,
Whatever your nation or name,
Whatever your work or your faith.
Trust in Justice; it will guide you,
It will guard you, in life's hard fight;
It ever will carry you through,
And make you lover of man and maid.

E. C. WALKER.

FLORENCE, IOWA.

SLANDERING THE UNIVERSE.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Col. Ingersoll's assertion, that he has no respect for the man who teaches, or who preaches, the infamous dogma of hell, has led to some criticism. What moral right has any man to impute to any authoritative administration of the law of the universe a systematic malignity in action and purpose which is infinitely more detestable than any conceivable human meanness?—a malignity of which no evidence exists, or is possible? And with what grace can any human being of ordinary intelligence commit the subservience of admitting to be true the impious imputation conveyed by such a dogma? To ascribe unworthy motives to a human being, without substantial basis of fact to justify it, may be a malicious libel which the law will punish. To ascribe to the divine administration, to which all are supposed to stand responsible, a course of action which implies steadfast and infinite malignity of purpose, and thus in theory to extinguish all possibility as well of normal and rational piety as of generous human sympathy, is, in the eye of conscience, no less wicked.

Col. Ingersoll's leniency of disposition is such that in manifesting very decided condemnation of the act, he stops short of very decided reprobation of the actor, merely saying he has no respect for him.

It is a virtue to love truth as being such and honestly to seek after it, and when it is found to proclaim it; but if that is a virtue, then it is a vice, through compliance with fashion or otherwise, deliberately to proclaim as true what is evidently most false and impious. Respect is merited by virtue only. Positive vice deserves reprobation.

A wide distinction of course is to be observed between the tacit and thoughtless assent to such a dogma, as prescribed by some supposed authority, and the deliberate and theoretic avowal and promulgation of it. The one may be entitled to the charity which is due to thoughtlessness and misplaced confidence; but unsophisticated common-sense teaches that the other involves a stretch of presumption which must be set down to the account either of downright demoralization, or of a solemn renouncement of all manly sense of individual moral responsibility for the right use of reason, more widely mischievous, and therefore worse, than that.

C. C.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., June 4, 1878.

INVESTIGATING SPIRITUALISM.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The resolutions and suggestions published in THE INDEX of the 8th instant, at the request of Mr. D. P. Kayner, secretary of the meeting of Spiritualists lately held in Chicago, have struck me very forcibly. These Spiritualists evidently firmly believe that there are persons, "mediums," through whom certain remarkable phenomena take place. Considering the evident honesty of the authors of the resolutions, it has occurred to me that they would be willing to assist honest inquirers into the truth of Spiritualism. Will Mr. Kayner, through your columns, be kind enough to name a person in Boston who possesses the powers referred to; or will he name some one who will come to Boston, if invited, with the understanding that he or she is to submit to tests as suggested in the "Hints to Investigators and Mediums"?

I suggest that you, Mr. Abbot, be one of the investigators. I do this because I believe that you will be just and fair to the "medium" at the same time that you are rigid in the application of the tests. I will suggest, also, that you name other investigators to be associated with yourself.

I think there need be no great haste made in applying the tests, since so many persons are about leaving for the country; but, in order that the matter may be under consideration, perhaps Mr. Kayner will name the "medium" at once, or very shortly.

O.

BOSTON, June 11, 1878.

[We strongly second the above request, excepting only that portion relating to our own participation, since we distrust our qualifications for such a task. But we certainly desire to see a really scientific study of the "phenomena" of Spiritualism by competent persons, and consider the above proposal a most excellent one. Is there any "medium" in Boston who will accept the conditions named in Mr. Kayner's communication? If so, many will be interested to learn his or her name.—ED.]

POMP.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As there is so much that is vile laid to the charge of the Socialistic Labor Party, when there does anything come from that source which even you can approve, I presume that you would be glad to lay it before your readers. Thinking that such is the case, I respectfully ask you to give place to the following from the National Socialist of June 1:—

"CLEVELAND'S EVENT: Splendors of the Sherman-Cameron Nuptials.—Silks, feathers, gilt, tinsel, trumpery, broidery, insanities! Out upon the abominations! Blending with the ottrund tones of the priest and the musical cadences of the epithalamium, were heard low moans of famine, and curses, not loud but deep, of hungry loungers attracted by the gay cortege. Cleveland's evil, it might more properly be called. Let people shake the head ominously at all such doings. There is everything to dread in spectacles of this sort. They are nothing less than barbarisms; displays of wretched vulgarity to impress the poor with the wide difference between the ruled and the ruler, the capitalist and the laborer. There is nothing that tends more to shock people into submission than grandeur. It is one of the secrets of royalty to impress the popular mind with magnificent sights, exhibiting themselves on state occasions with pomp and show of power,—grand coaches with liveried servants, mounted guards, and glittering lines of bayonets. Learn to despise all shows, all brilliant displays of power not publicly sanctioned by the people, and participated in as their own. Above all, spurn all individual costly shows. There is a tendency inherited from scores of feudal centuries to bow servilely to appearances. Let us resist that tendency."

Good, and amen! There has been enough of this kind of nonsense. No more omissions, at the expense of the people, of the visiting princelings of other lands! Cast your votes for those officials who maintain habits of republican simplicity in their official life. This love of ostentatious display is the root of much of the public corruption of the day.

E. C. WALKER.

ABSORPTION IN THE WHOLE.

BOSTON, March 26, 1878.

MR. EDITOR:—

People who are anxious, restless about their future existence remind me of our fears when reading some novel, that it "won't turn out well"; some one will die, or some one will be left unhappy. Yet authors do so leave their heroes sometimes; and shall we expect the God of the universe to cater to our interest in certain actors on life's stage? Shall we call it unfair or hard-hearted, if God does not take us to a home of just our own making? We want to see a pretty, a romantic ending to our lives. We want to be made happy by a re-union with all loved and injured ones. We would close the last chapter of life with each hero well assured of a future opportunity to receive and deal out justice where injustice has been done. I fear we are not fully aware that this existence is a part of eternity; that this is our primary-school where many hard tasks are to be learned.

We regret the lost opportunities of doing good to parents and friends now gone, while we speak the hasty word, neglect the duty, or remain unappreciative of the blessings surrounding us. Rest assured the past is dead, and we can only make reparation by taking the lesson to heart, and dealing with the present. We are not to be indulged by being granted a day of reconciliation when it is already too late! This is no child's play. Through our errors and failures we are to be made perfect.

We harp on the word "compensation." We cry for things we have a fancy for, like babes, little knowing that, if what we so grasp for as the height of our soul's longing were given us, we should but stint ourselves of the joys an all-gracious Creator has in store.

Is it so, that we would choose a continuation of our own petty individual selves, who can only love, rather than really become love and all the virtues themselves? We would not be forever worked upon! Do we not feel ourselves too cramped to give and receive all the love we are capable of? It seems to me that our soul's confinement within this physical form is not the whole reason.

It is because our souls now are individual, and so incomplete, that we cannot pass the bounds of certain heights to which we sometimes rise.

We must, in the course of life, attain individuality that we may lose it.

This life of ours, and of all things, is undying; we would put off the personal, the individual, that we may become one with the whole.

SM.

CHARLES ELLIS.

MR. ABBOT:—

I am desirous of making up a lecture route in New York State among the Liberal Leagues and other liberal societies, and will esteem it as a favor if you will allow me to make such an announcement through THE INDEX.

I look upon the Liberal League as the most practical movement before the unchurched people of the country, and shall take pleasure in encouraging that work wherever I can.

I have a large list of prepared lectures, the result of many years' labor, but will select only a few, and these with a view to their bearing upon questions that are exciting unusual interest among the people.

They are as follows:—

1. The Need of Better Religion: Organization the Duty of Liberals.
2. Faith and Scepticism.
3. The Origin and End of "Hell."
4. The Orthodox "Heaven" a Failure.
5. The Vicarious Atonement a Premium on Crime.
6. Nature and the Nation: Government without Gods.

Address CHARLES ELLIS,
No. 8 Portland Street, Boston, Mass.

Mr. H. L. Green, Chairman Ex. Com. N. L. L., and Cor. Sec. F. A., of Western New York, writes: "I had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Charles Ellis at the meeting of the 'Friends of Progress,' at Waterloo, June 2, and was much pleased with his speech; and I take pleasure in recommending him to liberal societies as one who is prepared to advance the liberal cause. I wish he might be constantly kept in the lecture-field."

[Believing Mr. Ellis to be a forcible and interesting lecturer, we wish to further his efforts on behalf of the Liberal League movement, and hope he will secure numerous engagements. Friends of this movement in New York State will please take notice of the above announcement.—ED.]

GLEAMS.

"The government has purchased a little more than five hundred and twenty-five tons of silver since the passage of the remonetization act, and silver has fallen in price about one penny per ounce. Of course this lessens the intrinsic value of the silver dollar of four hundred and twelve grains about two cents."

The above statement shows that the actual and prospective purchases of silver for coinage have not raised the market-price of silver bullion, as measured by gold. The reason is not far to seek. It is because the price of silver is influenced mainly by the demand for it, to be used in the arts.

The average price of all articles of merchandise is determined by their cost, the fluctuations depending on the greater or less steadiness of the demand.

The reason that gold is a better standard or measure of value than silver is because there is no product of human labor for which the demand is so constant and unvarying. Why this is so, it would take too long to tell; but that it is so, and for reasons that exist in the constitution of man and the nature of things, is unquestionable. But this universal desire for gold is for the METAL, and not for the coin because it is used as money. It is used as money because of this desire.

F. S. C.

THE BIBLE AND CONSCIENCE.

ED. INDEX:—

Never have I quite agreed with the fourth of the "Demands of Liberalism"; but I am less agreed with the usual replies. Here is a "settler," which I find going the rounds of the church papers: "Because there may be some individuals who object to having the Bible read in the schools does not prove that their consciences alone are to be respected."

Now, mark that conscience is to be respected, but not the consciences of some people "alone." It is only the qualificative "alone" that saves the sentence from utter condemnation. Read it thus: "Because there may be some individuals who wish to have the Bible read in the schools does not prove that their consciences alone are to be respected"; and you have an argument as strong as the other. Both statements are fallacious. "Conscience" must be left out of the debate. Every man's conscience should be respected, and respected "alone," as well as when in company. But conscience has nothing to do with the Bible in the schools. "As a book of religious worship"—especially in our common and uncommonly absurd English version—keep it out. "As a text-book," in the original tongues, let us have the Bible in the schools—in our highest schools "alone."

I. J. STINE.

APRIL 15, 1878.

COMMUNISM.

Every Communist, whatever other views he holds, must believe in a community of property, more or less modified. But Nature is never one-sided, and in practice community of property, pure and simple, is impossible. What a man personally uses he must own; and, in fact, a man cannot strictly be said to own anything but what he uses. The amount that a man may use varies very much with the man, some using and needing much more than others.

The Familistere founded by Godin at Guise was built and owned by one man, who is capitalist and manager of the whole concern.

The Oneida Community holds its property in common, but that practically amounts to the man or men who manage and direct the affairs owning the property as fully as M. Godin owns his.

So with the Shaker Communities the property is practically owned by the ruling authorities or leaders, the individuals having only what they use, and little or no more control over the remainder than if it were owned by a benevolent and beneficent capitalist.

F. S. C.

SENTIMENTALISM.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Rev. Dr. Brooks, in a New Haven lecture upon "The Preacher's Relation to our Times," uses these words: "Another tendency of the times is to sentimentalism. A hard theology is bad, but a soft theology is worse. Our hymns have too little thought, and so have our prayers. Sentimentalism goes with scepticism, as chills and fever go together." Is this true? Is there a more common complaint against scepticism in these times than that it lacks sentiment, flouts "emotion," does not cultivate the feelings, relies upon reason rather than faith? Is Mr. Moody sceptical? Do Sankey's hymns contain more thought than those sung by Unitarians? Which theology is the softer, O. B. Frothingham's or Henry Ward Beecher's?

H. L. B. B.

PHILADELPHIA.

IN THE CATHEDRAL of Chichester are entombed the Dukes of Richmond. On the marble tablet is a Latin inscription ending with the words, Domus Ultima, the last home, last house; whereupon this epigram:—

Did he who thus inscribed the wall,
Not read or not believe St. Paul?
Who says there is, where'er it stands,
Another house not made with hands.
Or must we gather from these words,
That house is not a house of lords?

JUDGE WESTBROOK, in charging a grand jury in Utica, N.Y., not long since, remarked, "No matter whether lotteries are at a church fair or festival, whether at a charitable fair or festival, they are forbidden by the law, and are misdemeanors."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 to 25 "	9 "
" 26 to 51 "	8 "
" 52 to 100 "	7 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 26, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best source of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.25 for one year, including postage, or 80 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian."—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion": Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1875 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mrs. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, coarseness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.
PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $3 free. Address STIMSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $11 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TAUS & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE.
Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address O. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doerflinger & Co., 55 Onalida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
16 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues of the day with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Clifford, Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE
AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 208 and 206 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,
PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
...THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPILOGUE OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positives Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. BANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: I. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

WASHINGTON ILLUSTRATED.

The subscriber is prepared to engage for the next lecture season (or for the summer, at the places of popular resort), for the delivery of his lectures on "Washington and its Institutions." These lectures are brilliantly illustrated by a very large number of Stereoscopic Views of public buildings, works of art, etc. They have won enthusiastic encomiums from their audiences and the press. For circulars, giving full information, address Rev. FREDERIC HINCKLEY, Dorchester Station, Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. ABBOT, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 14 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.25.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,

231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

O B G A N I Z E !

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JUNE 27, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 444.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights; to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

4. The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

MISS ANNA C. BRACKETT has most keenly and sensibly criticised the Stewart-Hilton absurdity in the Springfield Republican.

THE RECEIPTS of the Catholic Society for the Propagation of the Faith for the last year were 6,142,926 francs.

A NEW LIBERAL LEAGUE has been organized at Malden, Massachusetts, with officers as follows: President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Vice-President, A. A. Knights; Secretary, Francis Hinckley; Treasurer, D. B. Morey.

MR. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Albion, N.Y., June 27 and 28; at Elmira, N.Y., June 30. We are glad to see that he has been elected one of the Vice-Presidents of the National Secular Society of Great Britain, at the meeting of June 9 in Sheffield.

MR. E. H. HEYWOOD, whose case has been decided just as we are going to press, has been sentenced to a fine of one hundred dollars and two years imprisonment in Dedham Jail. We can now only record the fact, but shall have something to say next week on this great wrong.

PROF. SWING thus sets His Lectureship, like the little McStinger after his maternal spanking, on a paving-stone to cool: "His mind is more that of a fanatic than that of a philosopher. He is enamored with the scientific style, but labors under the disadvantage of not knowing what that style is in its purity. Much of Mr. Cook's scientific method is only a method of language, a certain gravity of dress, as though a small boy were wearing the wig and gown of an English justice."

HENRY WARD BEECHER read "Thanatopsis" at Plymouth Church, June 16, and said: "A sweeter pagan song was never sung. Let me supplement it now with a Christian chant." Thereupon he read Watts' hymn, "Unvell thy bosom, faithful tomb." After this, he said: "Watts is better than Bryant. Listen now to the Sacred Word in contrast with this pagan song." Mr. Beecher is correct in calling Bryant's great poem "pagan"; and that is why it will live forever. For "paganism" is simply humanity unspelled by Christianity.

THIS IS the lame moral lagging at the end of a recent letter of Rev. J. L. Atkinson to the Independent, dated at Kobe, Japan: "This people has yet to learn that enlightenment that is not Christianized is not a safe enlightenment, either for an individual or for a nation. . . . To the words 'enlightenment,' 'liberty,' 'reformation,' 'progress,' the Japanese need to add the qualifying, vivifying word Christian. Then under the power of 'Christian enlightenment,' 'Christian liberty,' 'Christian reformation,' 'Christian progress,' Japan will move on and up, and attain the height of its ambition."

A LITTLE GIRL of our acquaintance, six years old, came back to her home from play a few days since, screaming at the top of a very vigorous voice and holding both hands tightly to her mouth. The father rushed out to the relief of the little sufferer, and found that a tooth, loose for several days, had at last fallen out of its own accord; and the frightened cherub evidently imagined that she was all coming to pieces. "Never mind," said the paternal comforter, soothingly, "I lost all mine once, but new ones will come. All your other teeth must come out too." "No, they won't," sobbed the bereaved little one; "I won't let them." "But, my dear, how can you help it?" "I'll hold them in tight." "But that will not keep them in." "Yes, it will; my teeth are not so strong as my hands." And she lifted up her voice afresh at the recollection of her own remissness in not applying her manual strength to the retention of her first lost pearl.

THE LONDON Secular Review announces that Colonel Ingersoll will visit England this summer. It adds: "It appears that the Colonel has no crotchets anent the 'social question.' He maintains that marriage is the only sacred institution upon earth; sacred, because it is the corner-stone of the domestic life upon which all the domestic and social virtues are superimposed. With absolute marital equality for women, and with equality of rights for children, 'the democracy of the fireside' is the fountain from which will be obtained the materials necessary to establish and guarantee the future democracy of the world. As an orator, Ingersoll is unexcelled. By turns witty, pathetic, and emotional, he is also a perfect master of the English language, and holds his hearers enthralled by his marvellous eloquence. We are sure that this gifted man will receive a cordial welcome in this country, and we believe that his appearance in our midst cannot fail to expedite the progress of mental emancipation, and to give increased momentum to departing superstition. We advise the Christian Evidence Society to elect a champion to confront this Apostle of Liberty."

THE Banner of Light quotes this strikingly telling passage from "a recent sermon by a distinguished Orthodox divine"—whose name ought not to be hidden under a bushel: "We are afraid of Ingersoll and his infidelity, and well we may be. We are in no condition to meet the enemy. He is sapping the foundations of our faith, and I say boldly, with a sense of the weight of responsibility resting on me, if Christianity does not influence the life of Christians more than it now does in this country, there is little to choose between them. While leaders of the churches are bankrupt, while honest men by the thousands have their hard earnings taken from them either by recklessness, extravagance, or premeditated soundbrellism, while widows and orphans are robbed of their little all, and are suffering for the bare necessities of life, and crying to God in their distress for help, and the men who do these things not only belong to the Church and go unrebuked, but in very many cases are leaders of it,—I say as a minister of the Gospel, if there is not enough of the spirit of Christ in the Church to stop these outrages, these abominations, the Church is not worth saving."

MISS ELIZABETH P. PEABODY writes thus to the Christian Register: "A friend has just sent me a photograph of Mr. Morse's bust of Dr. Channing. It has filled me with delight and wonder, for I think Mr. Morse could hardly have personally known Dr. Channing; yet it is the only attempt at portraiture of the beloved and revered original that has given the sweetness and dignity of his beautiful mouth, that feature which is always the true and living expression of the character. Mr. Morse has evidently made good use of Gambardella's portrait, which gave the primitive formation, the perfect anatomy, as in all the portraits that he made; but only the genius that must have fed on Dr. Channing's own soul-utterances could have made such use of it. For the first time since his death I seem to have seen him! I should think that every friend of his who could command the money to pay for it would order a marble copy. I am confident if one copy could get to England that many of his ardent admirers there, and friends who owe to him the highest spiritual influence upon their lives, would want copies enough to employ Mr. Morse for years. He is truly to be congratulated on his success." And our good friend, the editor, Rev. Charles G. Ames, adds this note: "When Rev. Dr. Bellows first saw a photograph of Mr. Morse's bust of Channing, of which Miss Peabody writes, he broke out in an exclamation of admiring surprise; and after closer inspection gave his opinion that, while the work of the artist did not wholly satisfy his sense of proportion and dimension, he had nevertheless caught and fixed a certain subtle spiritual expression and quality which better represents Dr. Channing himself than any picture of him ever made."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SWALL, Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. E. PROTHINGHAM, New York, N. Y.
 MR. W. M. J. POTTER, New York, N. Y.
 MR. H. T. HALLLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON, New York, N. Y.
 MR. F. SCHUECKMANN-POTT, San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
 HARRI B. FELSENFELT, Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER, Springfield, Mass.
 MR. NAHUEL L. HILL, Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDARD, Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZEL, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. MORRIS REAVER, Editor of the "Inquirer," Boston.
 HARRI ISAAC WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGGER, Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. H. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill.
 DR. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN, Birmingham, Ala.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK, Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. J.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE F. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ANDERSON, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BILL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHELER, Adair.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Hillsboro.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. BAYWARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHNEIDERMAN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COVELL, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. HARRIS, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL GOULT, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chicago, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, 137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARRI B. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the
 National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, B. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie E. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MISHICOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
 CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. M. W. Toobey.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hulse, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundtke, J. H. rison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lockhead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingorsoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Meudum, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. F. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urblino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritz, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss V. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
 Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Ginta, A. E. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
 TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnedall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
 HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedal, Miss C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, K. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
 CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
 NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunle.
 Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
 ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunning.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
 ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
 TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
 CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. R. Ambler.
 MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
 JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
 Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhuitz, A. O. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
 Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
 FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
 WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
 Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roy, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Grawford, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
 MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
 MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
 Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. R. Byron, F. Heinemann, F. Ransoh, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kollinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
 ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
 Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
 CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
 WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, B. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
 CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
 ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sentf, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sentf, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
 PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
 XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
 Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Desseur, F. Desseur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Fraustein, M. D., E. Leboeuf, and others.
 OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
 Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
 CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. E. Heberling, A. Cart, S. Altchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Altchison, H. Reilly, and others.
 ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parke.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.

HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."

CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.

MOORELY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.

MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinkley.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

William Cullen Bryant.

AN ILLNESS OF ONLY FOURTEEN DAYS.

THE END VERY PEACEFUL AND QUIET—CAUSE OF THE ATTACK—A FATAL RESULT FEARED ALMOST FROM THE FIRST—UNIVERSAL REGRET EXPRESSED OVER THE EVENT—THE FUNERAL—MR. BRYANT'S CAREER.

William Cullen Bryant died at half-past five o'clock yesterday morning [June 12], at his residence in this city. He passed away as in sleep, surrounded by those members of his family who are in the city, and two or three intimate friends. His illness of fourteen days dates from a fall which caused concussion of the brain. He fell in a swoon, induced by exposure to the sun and over-exertion in delivering an address at the unveiling of the bust of Mazzini, in Central Park. He was conscious only during a short period of his illness, which his physicians believed would terminate fatally, almost from the first. The news of his death was received with universal expressions of regret. The funeral services will take place on Friday [June 14], at ten A.M., in Dr. Bellows's church, and the remains will then be taken to Roslyn, Long Island.

MR. BRYANT'S LAST HOURS.

LIFE EBBING SLOWLY AND QUIETLY—THE DEATH SCENE—HISTORY OF HIS ILLNESS—STATEMENT OF HIS PHYSICIAN.

Mr. Bryant's last moments were as peaceful and full of repose as the thoughts on death that form so memorable a part of his verse. Twenty-four hours before, his physicians saw signs of approaching death, but life ebbed so slowly and quietly that it was thought he might live far into the forenoon. Dr. Henry D. Paine paid his last visit just before midnight, leaving Mr. Bryant in a comatose state, without pain or fever. His pulse was regular, but very weak, and after that hour no attempt was made to give him nourishment, owing to the extreme difficulty with which he swallowed anything. There were at his bedside his daughter, Miss Julia Bryant, his other daughter, Mrs. Parke Godwin, being absent with her husband in Europe; his granddaughter, Miss Godwin; his niece, Miss Fairchild; John A. Graham, an old and intimate friend; and Frederick N. Goddard. Death was expected at any moment during the last three hours. After four o'clock he sank into a slumber that closely resembled death, and remained in that state for more than an hour. The final change was so peaceful that the silent watchers were not sure that his life had passed away until thirty-five minutes after five o'clock.

Word was sent to Dr. John F. Gray, Mr. Bryant's senior physician, and dispatches were sent to Mr. Bryant's brother, John Howard Bryant, of Princeton, Ill., who, however, was somewhat expected by a morning train. The circumstances of the death scene were sent by cable to Mr. and Mrs. Parke Godwin, who are now in Europe.

Mr. Bryant's remains were placed in the library adjoining the room in which he died. During the day ex-Governor Samuel J. Tilden, General James G. Wilson and a few intimate friends of the family called at the house to express their sympathy.

CIRCUMSTANCES OF MR. BRYANT'S ILLNESS.

Mr. Bryant had filled the place of honor on several public occasions during the past winter and spring. He had been long an ardent admirer of the life and works of the Italian patriot Mazzini, and accepted readily the invitation to participate prominently in the exercises of unveiling the Mazzini bust, in Central Park, on May 29. On that day, after eating a very light luncheon, he proceeded to the Park. The sun shone brightly, and the weather was uncommonly sultry for the season. When he stepped forward on the exposed platform to deliver his address, a friend insisted on protecting his uncovered head from the sun's rays with an umbrella, which was held over him. Mr. Bryant spoke with unusual earnestness and feeling, and, on reaching his peroration, stepped from under the umbrella and, facing the statue, threw all the force at his command into his closing words. He sat down nervous and perceptibly exhausted.

When the ceremonies were over, however, Mr. Bryant said that he was not fatigued, and accepted an invitation to dine with General James G. Wilson, whose residence was half a mile to the east of the place of the exercises. Mr. Bryant was fond of walking, and they went to the house on foot. He set out in a very cheerful mood, with one hand on the arm of his host and the other clasping the hand of General Wilson's little daughter. He was talking with the little girl about the birds flying about them, and asked her if she had ever heard of some lines to the bobolink. She answered yes, and that she also knew who the poet was who wrote them. Whereupon Mr. Bryant, much amused, said he thought he would write out the lines for her sometime.

Mr. Bryant went up the steps of General Wilson's residence and stood leaning against the outer door-post, while his host stepped inside the vestibule to open the inner door. General Wilson had scarcely turned his head before he heard a sound, and, looking back, he saw that Mr. Bryant was falling, as if he had taken a step into the vestibule, lost his balance and fallen directly backward, his head striking the platform step.

A gentleman, who was passing in the street, and the servants helped to carry Mr. Bryant into the parlor, where he lay for several minutes insensible. When he had recovered sufficiently to sit up, a glass of iced-sherry, which he drank, seemed to strengthen him. He put his hand to his head, moaning, "My head! my head! I don't feel well." Mr. Bryant declined every offer of assistance and seemed only to think of getting home, and desired to go in a horse-car rather than in a carriage. General Wilson took him to Seventeenth Street in a Madison Avenue car, and from there in a carriage to his house, No. 24 West Sixteenth Street. On his way down Mr. Bryant talked brokenly and sometimes wandered in thought. He did not recognize his street or home, but, as if mechanically, drew out his latch-key and opened the door himself, the servant answering the bell tardily. When the dining-room was reached, he asked General Wilson if he would like to see Miss Fairchild, his niece, and sent the servant to call her. General Wilson explained the matter to Miss Fairchild in the parlor, and she asked Mr. Bryant if Dr. Gray should be summoned. He expressed a doubt whether the doctor, who had almost given up his practice, would answer the call. He told Miss Fairchild that he was a very sick man, and on being removed to the library up stairs gave an order to the servant, and then fell into an unconscious state, which lasted until noon of the following day.

STATEMENT OF HIS PHYSICIAN.

Dr. John F. Gray, who is seventy-four years of age, being Mr. Bryant's junior by ten years, has been the post's family physician for nearly forty years. In conversation yesterday, he said that Mr. Bryant's fall caused concussion of the brain, and that he had at no time expected the recovery of his patient. The injuries were such that a younger and a stronger man could scarcely have survived them. As the spot where Mr. Bryant's head struck was lower than his feet, his head must have fallen a distance of six feet, and with great force, his head being proportionally so much larger and heavier than his body. The swoon preceding the fall was caused by a diminution or interruption of the action of the heart or of the respiratory organs. This was probably accompanied with temporary loss of sensation and other faculties.

"I sent for Dr. Carnochan, the surgeon," Dr. Gray continued. "He could find no injury to the skull, and therefore thought there was a chance of recovery. Mr. Bryant, during the first few days would get up and walk about the library or sit in his favorite chair. He would occasionally say something about diet and air. When his daughter arrived from Atlantic City, where she had been for her health, she thought her father recognized her. It is uncertain how far he recognized her or any of his friends. The family were hopeful and made the most out of every sign of consciousness or recognition.

"On the eighth day after the fall, hemorrhage took place in the brain, resulting in paralysis, technically called hemiplegia, and extending down the right side of the body. After this he was most of the time comatose. He ceased to recognize his friends in any way, and lay much of the time asleep. He was unable to speak, and when he attempted to swallow, his food lodged in his larynx and choked him. He was greatly troubled with phlegm, and could not clear his throat. There was only that one attack of hemorrhage of the brain, and that was due to what is called traumatic inflammation. After the fourteenth day he died.

"He was a man who made little demonstration of affection or emotion, but he had a profoundly sympathetic feeling for the life and mission of Mazzini, and on the day when he delivered the address he exhibited considerable emotion. That and the walk afterward certainly exhausted him, and led to the swoon. He overtaxed his strength during the winter, in attending evening entertainments and in public speaking. He had few intimate acquaintances, and was so extremely modest in expressing approbation or liking that one could scarcely tell the extent of his friendly feeling. Though I had attended him for many years, and often visited him at Roslyn, and also at his old homestead in Massachusetts, I never noticed an expression of more than ordinary friendship till I was prostrated by sickness. He made an impression ordinarily of coldness, but his poems show that he had plenty of feeling, and great sympathy for mankind.

"Once when at Roslyn we visited the grave of his wife in the village cemetery, and we saw the place by her side reserved for him. He frequently requested that his funeral should be simple and without ostentation. He has had fulfilled his wish to die in June.

"Mr. Bryant owed his long life to an exceedingly tenacious and tough constitution and very prudent living. I always found him an early riser. Although he was slight of body and limb, he seemed to me unconscious of fatigue, and he would walk many a stronger man off his legs. He did not walk rapidly, but seemed as wiry as an Indian. One day we were walking across the fields at Roslyn. Mr. Bryant was then in his seventy-fourth year, and astonished me by jumping up and catching the limb of a tree, and swinging himself by one arm."

TOKENS OF RESPECT.

The news of Mr. Bryant's death caused universal sorrow. The information rapidly spread from the newspaper offices, where bulletins were posted early in the forenoon. Mayor Ely caused the flags to be raised at half-mast on the City Hall and on the plaza in Union Square. Flags were displayed at half-mast on many of the hotels and large business buildings. The office of the Evening Post was draped in black, and in the editorial rooms the doors leading into Mr. Bryant's room were closed and draped. At Union Square many flags were lowered, out of respect to Mr. Bryant's memory. On the club-house of the Century Club, in Fifteenth Street, of which Mr. Bryant was one of the founders, the flag was at half-mast. Madison Square was late in hearing of Mr. Bryant's death, but before five o'clock flags were at half-mast on the Fifth Avenue Hotel and the Brunswick. Mr. Bryant's portrait, draped, and occasionally trimmed with flowers, was seen in several show-windows on Broadway.

At the meeting of the Ladies' Art Association the president, Mrs. Henry Peters Grey, announced, with expressions of regret, the death of Mr. Bryant, who acted on the reception committee at the first reception given to the Association at the residence of the late Wm. T. Blodgett.

THE FUNERAL.

Arrangements for the funeral were made during the afternoon. The services will be held at ten o'clock on Friday morning, in All Souls' Church, at Twentieth Street and Fourth Avenue. The Rev. Dr. Bellows will conduct the services, and deliver a brief address. In accordance with Mr. Bryant's expressed wish, the funeral will be as simple and unostentatious as it is possible to make it. Friends are requested not to send flowers, and there will be no pall-bearers. After the services at the church, the remains will be taken privately to Roslyn, Long Island, for interment.

CAREER OF THE POET-JOURNALIST.

Mr. Bryant was born Nov. 3, 1794, at Cummington, in Hampshire County, Massachusetts. It is a place well suited to be the early home of a poet of Nature,—a secluded and romantic spot on a forest elevation above the Connecticut River. It is marked in summer by the luxuriance of its foliage, and by the pronounced contrasts of its mountain wildness with the grace and beauty of its meadow valley. In the winter the place is exposed to the severest storms, and enormous snow-drifts often remind one of Whittier's phrase,—“a universe of sky and snow.” In this home the poet passed his first sixteen years. His mother was a descendant of John Alden, the famous lieutenant of Miles Standish, and was a woman of great force of character. His father, Peter Bryant, was the grandson of Stephen Bryant, who came to this country from England in the Mayflower. Peter Bryant was a distinguished local physician, of rare learning and accomplishments, who had travelled much and was fond of literature. He early turned his attention to the education of his children, and always took a deep interest in their intellectual and moral training. William was especially encouraged in his studies of Latin and Greek, and the father's pride was soon awakened by the appearance of several metrical translations from the Latin poets, which were published in a newspaper at Northampton. Original lines were also published. He was then only ten years of age. Rarely does history furnish a parallel with this extraordinary precocity. Pope when twelve years old wrote the “Ode to Solitude”; the boy Chatterton when of the same age wrote the “Hymn for Christmas Day”; Tasso at nine wrote lines for his mother, which have been praised; Henry Kirke White published a volume at nineteen. Bryant before he was thirteen wrote “The Embargo,” and “The Spanish Revolution.” The former was a political satire brought out by the heated discussion concerning the policy of Jefferson in laying an embargo on the shipping in American ports, to counterbalance Napoleon's Berlin and Milan decrees. Many of Jefferson's political opponents lived in Western Massachusetts. “The Embargo” was published in Boston, and in the following year a second edition was issued, and it was necessary in the preface to certify to its authorship. The title-page of the first edition was as follows: “The Embargo; or, Sketches of the Times. A Satire. By a youth of thirteen. Boston: Printed for the purchasers, 1808.” Mr. Jefferson was addressed in the following lines:—

And thou, the scorn of every patriot name,
Thy country's ruin and her council's shame!
Poor servile thing! derision of the brave!
Who erst from Tarleton fled to Carter's cave;
Thou who, when menaced by perfidious Gaul,
Didst prostrate to her whaler's minion fall,
And when our cash her empty bags supply'd
Didst meanly strive the foul disgrace to hide,—
Go, wretch, resign the presidential chair,
Disclose thy secret measures, foul or fair,
Go, search with curious eyes for horned frogs,
Mid the wild wastes of Louisiana bogs;
Or, where Ohio rolls his turbid stream,
Dig for huge bones, thy glory and thy shame.
Go, scan, Philosopher, thy * * * charms,
And sink supinely in her sable arms.
But quit to abler hands the helm of state,
Nor image ruin on thy country's fate.

Mr. Bryant entered Williams College in 1810, but did not complete his college course. After two years' study he took an honorable dismissal, and entered upon the study of law. He began his practice in 1815, at Plainfield, but soon after removed to Great Barrington, where he rapidly rose to high rank in the local courts. He was a lawyer ten years, but a poet as well. “Thanatopsis” was written about the time he began his legal studies, and when he was only eighteen years of age. Its publication was delayed until 1816, when it appeared in the North American, which was more a magazine than a review, and had not assumed the last part of its present name. The North American was edited by Richard H. Dana, between whom and Mr. Bryant an intimate friendship existed for more than half a century. He was greatly impressed with the poem, and was at first unwilling to believe there was any one living in America who could have written it. One day he was told that the author was a member of the Massachusetts Senate, and immediately he walked from Cambridge to the State House in Boston, and had the man pointed out. But he was so well satisfied from the Senator's business-like appearance that he could not have written the poem that he returned home without seeking an introduction. The name of the real author was at last discovered; a correspondence ensued, and a warm personal friendship soon began between the two poets. “Thanatopsis” has been called “one of the most precious gems of didactic verse in the whole compass of English poetry.” There are few people in this country who have not read it; almost every school reader contains it; few students, even in the common schools, finish their studies without knowing it by heart. “Christopher North,” one of the most critical men of his time, said in Blackwood that it was “alone sufficient to establish the author's claims to the honors of genius.” While living at Great Barrington Mr. Bryant was married. It was there that he wrote some of his best verses, notably “To Green River”; “Inscription for an Entrance to a Wood” (1818), and “To a Water-fowl.” These have hardly been surpassed in later years. The closing words of the last-named are worth quoting:—

He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless air thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone
Will lead my steps aright.

In the ode “To Green River” the poet reveals the passionate love of Nature which his office studies were unable to subdue. He says:—

Though forced to drudge for the dregs of men,
And scrawl strange words with the barbarous pen,
And mingle among the jostling crowd,
Where the sons of strife are subtle and loud,
I often come to this quiet place,
To breathe the air that ruffles my face,
And gaze upon thee in silent dream;
For in thy lonely and lovely stream
An image of that calm life appears
That won my heart in my greener years.

In 1821 Mr. Bryant was invited to deliver a poem before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard College, and responded with “The Ages,” his longest production in verse. It is the only poem he has written in the Spenserian stanza, but in versification it is considered not inferior to “Childe Harold” and the “Faerie Queen.” It constitutes a survey of the past eras of the world in their successive advances in knowledge, virtue, and happiness, and seeks to justify and assure the hopes of philanthropic men for the future progress of mankind. The poem contains thirty-five stanzas, the following being the thirteenth and the last ones:—

Those ages have no memory, but they left
A record in the desert,—columns strown
On the waste sands, and statues fallen and cleft,
Heaped like a host in battle overthrown.
Vast ruins, where the mountain's ribs of stone
Were hewn into a city; streets that spread
In the dark earth, where never breath has blown
Of heaven's sweet air, nor foot of man dares tread
The long and perilous ways,—the Cities of the Dead!

But thou, my country, thou shalt never fall,
Save with thy children; thy maternal care,
Thy lavish love, thy blessings showered on all—
These are thy fetters; seas and stormy air
Are the barriers of thy borders where,
Among thy gallant sons who guard thee well,
Thou laugh'st at enemies; who shall then declare
The date of thy deep-founded strength, or tell
How happy in thy lap the sons of men shall dwell.

COMING TO NEW YORK.

In the same year a volume of his poems was published at Cambridge. Several prose articles also appeared from time to time in the North American. The remainder of these ten years were given to the law. But his mind found a more congenial employment in literary work, and, at the invitation of Henry D. Sedgwick, he came to New York, and accepted a position his friend had obtained for him as editor of the New York Review and Athenaeum Magazine. He soon made the acquaintance of the poet Halleck and the novelist Cooper. Literary society was not large in the city then. Gulliver C. Verplanck was its leading spirit. He had written a complimentary review of Bryant's “Ages,” and the two soon became associated in literary enterprises. One of these was the Literary Annual, in which they were joined by Robert C. Sands. Nearly all the articles were from these three men. In 1832 Sands died, and Bryant and Verplanck edited his works. Among the other acquaintances which Bryant made were the poets Hillhouse and Percival, who then lived in New Haven, but often visited New York. While Bryant was editor of the Review, there appeared in it Fitz Greene Halleck's “Marco Bozzaris,” a poem by N. P. Willis, a metrical translation by Bancroft, the historian, the first of Dana's poetical compositions, “The Dying Raven,” besides several poems by Mr. Bryant. He wrote a review of Dana's “Idle Man,” and sent it to the North American. Mr. Dana was not the editor at that time. The magazine was published by a society of gentlemen who did not agree with Dana in his enthusiastic defence of Coleridge and Wordsworth against the ferocious criticisms of Lord Jeffrey in the Edinburgh Review. He had accordingly retired from the position, and Edward Everett had succeeded him. Mr. Bryant's review of the “Idle Man,” when sent to the North American was respectfully declined. Some time after this the feelings of the North American clique toward Mr. Dana underwent a change. Edward Everett, as editor, had been succeeded by Jared Sparks, who, when Dana's “Buccaneer” appeared in 1837, wrote to Mr. Bryant that his article on the “Idle Man” would be accepted. Mr. Bryant added to it a notice of the “Buccaneer,” and the whole article was then published. During these years of Mr. Bryant's association with literary periodicals, and before his connection with the New York Evening Post had begun, he wrote a "Hymn to Death." Its composition was unfinished when the poet's father died. Soon afterward the work was resumed. Asterisks being inserted, two stanzas were added, beginning with the following words:—

Alas! I little thought that the stern power
Whose fearful praise I sang would try me thus
Before the strain was ended. It must cease:
For he is in his grave who taught my youth
The art of verse, and in the bud of life
Offered me to the Muses. . . .

This faltering verse, which thou
Shalt not, as wont, o'erlook, is all I leave
To offer at thy grave; this—and the hope
To copy thy example, and to have
A name of which the wretched shall not think
As of an enemy's, whom they forgive
As all forgive the dead.

THE "EVENING POST."

Mr. Bryant was associated with Verplanck and Sands in editing the Talisman, and contributed the tales of "Medfield" and "The Skeleton's Cave" to a book called Tales of the Glauver Spa. In 1825 the "Sketch Club," which remained in existence many years, was founded by the leading artists and writers of the city, and not long afterwards Mr. Bryant became a member of it. Before the Academy of Design, which was founded by several members of this club, he delivered a series of lectures on Greek and Roman mythology. In 1826 he became one of the editors of the New York Evening Post, William Coleman being manager of the paper. Its leanings were then toward the aristocratic party, though it was generally wanting in positive character. The new accession to its staff at once made itself apparent. The natural spirit and originality of Mr. Bryant were infused into its columns, and the paper soon declared with great boldness on the side of what was considered the more liberal policy. In 1828 it supported Jackson, and in his attack on the National Bank the paper became his staunch ally. From that time onward for many years it never faltered in its firm adherence to the articles of the Democratic creed. After the death of Coleman, Mr. Bryant obtained entire control of the paper, and later he associated William Leggett with himself in the management. Leggett, too, was a poet. A violent political controversy ensued with the Courier and Enquirer, in which the latter alluded to "the chanting cherubs of the Post," a term which remained in vogue for many years. The paper was Democratic through the administration of Van Buren, and cooperated with the Albany Argus and the Washington Globe until the election of Harrison in 1840, the Globe having for its motto the words, "The world is governed too much." In those days a newspaper, with short life, was published in the city, called the Times, which was Democratic in tone, but differed with the Post in its opinions, and considered that paper its rival. One day the editor, becoming enraged at something his neighbors had said, challenged Mr. Bryant to fight a duel. Previous to this there had been some personal difficulty between the editor and Mr. Leggett, and in his reply to the challenge Mr. Bryant remarked that when the affair with Mr. Leggett had been disposed of it would be his turn, and not till then. Nothing more came of the matter. The Post followed Mr. Van Buren through the contest of 1840 into Free-Soilism, as also through the contest of 1848 against Cass, and down to the final defeat of the old Democratic party. In 1852 it favored Pierce. In 1860 and '64 it supported Lincoln; and it aided in the election of Grant in 1868 and '72.

The course of Mr. Bryant upon the anti-slavery question was one of great moderation; but notwithstanding his party connections, there never was any doubt of the side to which he gave his sympathies. If he did not agree with the original abolitionists, who aimed at immediate emancipation, he had still less sympathy with those who sought unfairly to suppress discussion. He was too high-minded to feel the least prejudice on the score of color. Even in 1837, when the rage against the abolitionists was not in the least abated, he spoke decidedly and wisely in favor of putting whites and blacks upon an equality in this State in respect to suffrage. He never had the least patience with the attempt to keep anti-slavery petitions out of Congress. As a matter of course, he had sustained General Jackson in his denunciation of the nullifiers of South Carolina in 1832; but it was not altogether as a matter of course that he opposed the annexation of Texas, the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, and the extension of slavery. He definitely abandoned the political affiliations of a lifetime, when, in 1856, he supported Fremont for the presidency. As soon as there was a Republican party he became one of its most decided advocates. How much it cost him thus to array himself against those with whom he had so long been united will be understood when it is remembered that he was almost affectionately attached to the Democratic party. His associate in the conduct of the Evening Post, Mr. Leggett, had been somewhat in advance of him in 1835, when the pro-slavery rioters were rampant in New York. Whatever Mr. Bryant may then have thought of his friend's course, he lived to see how thoroughly noble and sagacious it was.

While Mr. Greeley was the leader of the protectionist party, Mr. Bryant was as firm in his belief in free trade. In 1868 the friends of free trade gave him a public banquet in honor of the doctrine he advocated, and as a tribute to his perseverance during forty years of a protective tariff. In 1848, Mr. John Bigelow became the managing editor of the Post. About ten years later Mr. Parke Godwin assumed the position. In more recent years the place has been filled by several men, among them Charles Nordhoff, Sidney Howard Gay, Charlton T. Lewis, and A. G. Browne, Jr. For the past two years the chair has been filled by Watson R. Sperry, who was graduated from Yale College in 1871. Mr. Sperry became connected with the Post immediately after he left college. Apart from its party preferences, the Post has steadily maintained four cardinal beliefs: free trade, hard money, an independent government treasury, and the impropriety of exorbitant issues of State banks without limitation. During the past fifteen years Mr. Bryant's labors for the paper have been comparatively few. He has remained its nominal editor, but aside from a few occasional suggestions as to the treatment of questions and contributions to its columns, the work has mainly fallen upon others.

MR. BRYANT IN EUROPE.

In 1832 a complete edition of Mr. Bryant's poems was published in New York. Washington Irving, then living in London, was asked to prepare an English edition, which he did, writing an introduction in which the following sentence occurred: "Bryant's writings transport us into the depths of the solemn primeval forest, to the shores of the lonely lake, the banks of the wild, nameless stream, or the brow of the rocky upland, rising like a promontory from amidst a wide ocean of foliage, while they shed around us the glories of a climate fierce in its extremes, but splendid in all its vicissitudes." The book was dedicated to the poet Rogers. Irving took the volume to Murray, who refused to publish it, saying, "Poetry doesn't sell nowadays." Another publisher, named Andrews, was found, who issued the book on condition that Irving should put his own name on the title-page as the editor of the volume. The offer was accepted; but before the book was printed Publisher Andrews, after reading the proof-sheets, ran to Mr. Irving and insisted that no book would sell in England which contained the following lines, and asked that a change be made:—

"The British soldier trembles
When Marion's name is told."

Mr. Irving finally consented to make the first line read:—

"The foeman trembles in his camp."

This alteration afterward became the source of a newspaper controversy, in which much injudicious abuse was heaped upon Mr. Irving. Mr. Bryant published a letter in which he said that, while the change was not what he would have made himself, yet he could not blame Mr. Irving under the circumstances, and always felt that he had done him a great kindness in England. The volume was dedicated to Samuel Rogers, the poet, and was generously reviewed by "Christopher North" in Blackwood; and since that time the author has been almost as well known in England as at home. Among the poems which appeared at this time were "The Death of the Flowers," "Monument Mountains," and "A Forest Hymn." The first of these is known to every school-boy or school-girl. The others are almost as familiar to general readers. The "Forest Hymn" opens with the following lines:—

The groves were God's first temples. Ere man learned
To hew the shaft, and lay the architrave,
And spread the roof above them—ere he framed
The lofty vault, to gather and roll back
The sound of anthems,—in the darkling wood,
Amid the cool and silence, he knelt down,
And offered to the Mightiest solemn thanks and supplication. . . .

Should we, in the world's ripe years, neglect
God's ancient sanctuaries, and adore
Only among the crowd, and under roofs
That our frail hands have raised?

The poet then addresses an eloquent hymn to the Supreme Being, which closes with these words:—

Be it ours to meditate,
In these calm shades, Thy milder majesty,
And to the beautiful order of Thy works
Learn to conform the order of our lives.

As a writer of books of travel, Mr. Bryant attained some distinction. He visited Europe three times, travelled in the Holy Land, and journeyed through the Southern States and to Cuba. The first of these trips was made with his family in 1834, Mr. Leggett managing the Post in his absence. He visited France, Germany, and Italy, enlarging his knowledge of the literature and language of each of those countries. His poems bear testimony to the familiarity he acquired with those languages,—especially with the Spanish, which afterward became a favorite study with him. Returning home he resumed his editorial work, and in 1845 again sailed for Europe. On his arrival in London, Edward Everett, the American Minister, gave a breakfast in his honor, and among the guests present were Thomas Moore, Kenyon, and Rogers. Rogers invited him to his own house, and there showed him the original copy of the bill of sale from Milton to his publisher of the "Paradise Lost," for £5. Rogers bade him good-by, saying he would never meet him again. But on Mr. Bryant's return, in 1849, the poet was still alive, and the two men met. Rogers remarked, however, that he had "no business here." He died in 1855, having reached the advanced age of eighty-nine years. In 1849 Mr. Bryant also visited Egypt and Syria. In 1857 he went abroad again and travelled in Spain. On all these occasions he wrote letters to the Post, which were afterward collected in two volumes. When riding in Spain one day, from Bayonne to San Sebastian, he saw the Atlantic Ocean. In his letter, mentioning the incident, he said: "I cannot describe the feelings awakened within me as I gazed on that great waste of waters which, in one of its inlets, steeped the walls of my own garden, and to the murmur of which, on a distant shore, those I loved were doubtless at that moment slumbering."

THE HOME AT ROSLYN.

In 1847 Mr. Bryant purchased an old Dutch mansion on Long Island, near what is now the village of Roslyn. The mansion had been built, in 1787, by Richard Kirk, a thrifty Quaker, who also constructed a dyke at the inlet to obtain water-power for a paper-mill. The mill disappeared many years ago; but the dyke is still to be seen in its mossy and time-worn condition, and obscured by a hedge of cedars. An inlet from the Sound extends to the very walls of the garden, and from the windows of the library the white sails of passing vessels are plainly visible. The house itself does not preserve its ancient appearance. Where once was a high stoop with massive pillars, a neat piece of lattice-work now supports a running vine, which in summer nearly covers that side of the house. Pear-trees are growing near the house which are said to be over one hundred years of age, and many cedar-trees adorn the grounds. From these cedars the place has received the name "Cedarwore." Mr. Bryant's library occupies a room from the windows of which one looks out upon the waters of the Sound. There are about five thousand books on the shelves, many of them being rare volumes of foreign literature. The wood-work is of tulip-wood, oiled and varnished. An old-time fire-place has been modernized, though the Dutch tiles, of an ancient pattern, representing events in Scripture history, illustrate its early character. In a wood near his home Mr. Bryant loved to pass an afternoon. He had classified the trees, and not long before he died said he had found thirty different specimens, but there were others whose place in botany he hoped to find. On an eminence near by, overlooking the inlet, is the residence of Mr. Parke Godwin. Among the best known of Mr. Bryant's later poems is "The Antiquity of Freedom." The following are selections from it:—

O Freedom! thou art not, as poets dream,
A fair young girl, with light and delicate limbs,
And wavy tresses gushing from the cap
With which the Roman master crowned his slave
When he took off the gyves. . . .

Thy birthright was not given by human hands;
Thou wert twin-born with man. . . .

Tyranny himself,
Thy enemy, although of reverend look,
Hoary with many years, and far obeyed,
Is later born than thou! . . .

HABITS AND TASTES.

The strongest point in Mr. Bryant's character was its simplicity. This is no more true of his poems than of his prose writings; no more true of either than of his daily pursuits and habits. Travelling, as he did, through many lands and among the proudest monuments of civilization; having, as he always did in his character and position a perpetual passport to all society and every public place, his heart remained fixed in its first love of Nature. Mr. Bryant has told the story of his daily habits himself. Nothing could be simpler. The Athenian, born on the poorest soil in Greece, contented himself at dinner with the head of a fish, an onion, and a few olives. Even the rich were quite satisfied with a dish of vegetables, while people at large were accustomed to eat meat on a feast-day for the whole year. Mr. Bryant in diet and in all the pursuits of the day was quite as simple. In winter he rose always at half-past five; in summer, from half an hour to an hour earlier. With little clothing on his body, he immediately began an hour's exercise with dumb-bells, a horizontal bar, and a light chair swung round the head. Sometimes he gave more than an hour to this exercise, but never less. When it was over he bathed from head to foot. In the summer, if living at Roslyn, he usually shortened the exercise in the chamber, and went out of doors to engage at some work requiring brisk exercise, such as pruning trees or cutting wood. After the bath, if breakfast were not ready, he sat in his library. No breakfast could be plainer than his,—honey and milk, or brown bread, oatmeal, or wheaten grite, and, in the season, baked sweet-apples. Buckwheat cakes he did not refuse, but coffee or animal food he never took. Occasionally he drank chocolate, as it has no narcotic effect. After the meal was over he engaged for awhile at his studies, and, if in the city, walked down to the Evening Post office, a distance of three miles. After three hours passed thus he returned, always walking, whatever the condition of the streets or weather might be. If living in the country, he studied or read until weary, and then went into his garden to prune pear-trees, or walked through the woods; he seldom drove. He dined early on vegetables, with a little meat or fish. At supper he never drank tea, but was satisfied with bread and butter and fruit. Fruit formed a large part of his diet, and he ate it at almost any time without inconvenience. In the city, where people dine later, he only ate two meals a day. Water was his almost exclusive drink, though he occasionally took wine. He once said he was a natural temperance man, his mind being rather confused than exhilarated by alcohol. Milton once said, however, that the lyric poet may drink wine and live generously; but the epic poet, he who shall sing of the gods, and their descent unto men, must drink water out of a wooden bowl. According to Milton, then, Mr. Bryant was more of an epic than a lyric poet; and though his verses are not of the epic order, no one lacking the epic spirit could have translated Homer as he did. Mr. Bryant retired early,—in town at ten, in the country somewhat earlier. For several years he avoided, in the evening, every kind of literary occupation which tasked the faculties, such as composition, even to the writing of letters, because it excited his nervous system and prevented sound sleep. He never used tobacco. "I never meddle with it," he said, "except to quarrel with its use. I abominate all drugs and narcotics, and have always carefully avoided everything which spurs Nature to exertions which she would not otherwise make. Even with my food I do not take the usual condiments, such as pepper and salt." When practising law in Massachusetts he was elected a justice of the peace, and at one time held the office of village clerk. He was often asked later in life to accept office, but he steadily refused. His name was once mentioned for the Italian mission, and he immediately responded, saying: "What would I do in the foul atmosphere of a court society which derives its tone from the sanction of royalty? Give me the pure air, the bright skies, and the green fields." In religion he was a deep, though unpretentious, believer. At Roslyn he regularly attended the little Presbyterian church, and partook of the sacrament.

OLD AGE.

During the past ten or fifteen years, Mr. Bryant has frequently appeared in public as a speaker on important occasions, and has paid several tributes to the memory of eminent Americans. In 1870 he pronounced a eulogy on the life and character of Verplanck, who died in that year. He made an address upon the career and achievements of Professor S. F. B. Morse, on the occasion of the dedication of the statue in Central Park. In 1852 he delivered a discourse on the life and writings of James Fenimore Cooper, and in 1860 paid a similar tribute to the memory of Washington Irving. On the death of Thomas Cole, in 1848, he pronounced a funeral oration, and in 1872 was the orator at the dedication of the statue of Shakespeare and Scott in Central Park. At the unveiling in Central Park last year of the statue of his friend Halleck, whose "Marco Bozzaris" he had printed in the New York Review in 1875, he also delivered one of the orations. His last effort of this kind was the last effort of his life,—the oration in honor of Mazzini, the Italian statesman.

When Mr. Bryant reached his seventieth year, in 1864, the event was celebrated by a festival at the Century Club, of which he has long been the president, nearly all the prominent literary men of the country being present or sending complimentary letters, which were afterward printed in a volume with the proceedings. The presentation of the "Bryant Vase," in 1876, is an event still fresh within the recollections of readers. He was engaged for several years on his translation of Homer, devoting stated hours of every day to the work. The Iliad appeared in 1870, and the Odyssey in 1871. Both volumes were generally conceded to be among the best English versions of the great epics,—some thought them to be the best. Greater credit could hardly have been given, when it is remembered that Homer has been translated into English at least a dozen times, and Chapman and Pope and Cowper and Derby are among the translators. Some years ago he published a collection of poetry, which he called A Library of Poetry and Song. It at once became very popular, and has taken rank as the most complete and satisfactory book of the kind ever issued. A new and complete edition of Mr. Bryant's poems was published in a large octavo volume in November, 1876. His Library of Poetry and Song also appeared in a new form as a holiday gift-book. He wrote an introduction to the Popular History of the United States, by Sidney Howard Gay, which is now in course of publication, and it was understood that he would also exercise a general supervision of the work, though this probably was only nominal. Few men were better prepared than Mr. Bryant to write the history of this country, especially the history of the past sixty years. All the men who have lived in that time, and all those who have made its history, were in his mind as though they were events in his own actual life. He was probably more familiar with the literature and history of the entire century than any other man living. He was born before Washington died, and was in the prime of life when Jefferson, Jackson, Webster, and Clay were influencing the politics and legislation of the country. Benjamin Franklin was alive when he was in his infancy. The lives of these two journalists extend back to the age of Louis XIV. Another such would very nearly reach the age of Elizabeth and Shakespeare.

Mr. Bryant was preëminently an American poet. No one in our literature was more free from foreign influences than he. His works are not only American in their subjects and treatment, but in their spirit; and history must forever hold him as one of the chief founders of our literature. As a minute observer of Nature, he was almost without an equal among poets, and the keenness of his vision remained undimmed until the last. His latest poems manifest the same freshness as those written in early life. Though he had grown old in years, and his long hair and beard were as white as snow, the poetic fancy survived in him as though it had drank at the fountain of eternal youth. "Christopher North" said of him: "His poetry overflows with natural religion,—with what Wordsworth calls the 'religion of the woods.'" There was probably no poet in modern times to whom he was more closely related than to Wordsworth, whom some one has called "the great regenerator of English poetry."

The death of any man who has lived beyond fourscore years ought not to be considered a surprise. But the death of Mr. Bryant at any age would have startled every intelligent man in America. One may truly say of his long life, slightly changing the last lines of one of the poems of his youth:—

He so lived that when his summons came to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
He went not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Sourced to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approached his grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

It is not less pleasant to recall at this time, when the clouds and cool air of the past week have given way to clear sky and warmer temperature, a little poem by Mr. Bryant called "June," in which he expresses a wish that has been fulfilled. [This poem will be found in full in our poetry column.—ED.]
—New York Tribune, June 12.

"THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS."

The first volume of this book has roused a lively discussion,—enough to show that the book is well-timed. It appears when this community is especially interested in the subjects involved. It is not because the views involved are specially new; for they are not. In their foundation, the more important of them have been discussed by theologians for the better part of a century. It is rather that there has grown up an opinion that theologians have notions about Jewish histories which preachers do not often allude to in the pulpit. Men suspect—rightly or not—that in the professional conversations, even of the more conservative clergy, there is a freedom of criticism of the Jewish historical books in which the same men do not indulge on Sunday. In proportion as such suspicions gain ground is there an increasing desire among intelligent men to know what are the views of the Old Testament which interest religious teachers who retain their love and respect for the Bible.

In proportion, also, as such attacks are made on the Old Testament as have been common from the days of Paine downward, thoughtful men have been more and more aware that no policy of silence or indifference would be of avail in maintaining its lessons in the esteem of men. When such a speaker as Colonel Ingersoll wins the laughter of a great audience, in Boston, on Sunday evening, by his ridicule of the astronomy of Joshua, or what seems to be the cosmogony of the book of Genesis, of the polygamy of Jacob, and of the slavery permitted under the law of Moses, thoughtful men are all the more desirous to know what is the connection of these with the Word of God, and why the Word of God has been thought to sanction them. What Paine says, what Volney says, and what Colonel Ingersoll says, men know. Nobody can charge them with holding back half an opinion. What thoughtful men are to say themselves they want to know. They want to know what good men say who are no more afraid than Paine or Volney or Ingersoll, and who have studied these subjects a thousand times as long and a thousand times as carefully as all of them. No man in his senses to-day believes that the Bible is to be kept in the respect of men merely by the statement that it is the Word of God, and therefore is outside of inquiry or examination.

Whether, therefore, men agree or disagree with the conclusions of the Dutch professors to whom we owe these valuable volumes, they will have a wide and useful circulation among all people who want to know what has been the general drift of the studies of theologians involved for the last half-century. On minor points, it is true, the old family commentators have led the way. Scott's Commentary itself has to say why the book of Chronicles differs from the book of Samuel, and when we are to receive the authority of the one and when of the other. But it is to the modern school of history, which has recast and which has given life to the history of Greece, of Rome, of the Middle Ages, of England, and of France, that we owe what we may call the recasting of the history of Israel which places it in a light quite new to the general reader, and to which these volumes belong. The deciphering of the hieroglyphics and of the cuneiform characters; the very careful recent descriptions of the Semitic race and their customs; the assiduous investigation of the antiquities of the Holy Land; the new attention to the rabbinical writings,—these, and a hundred other investigations in which half a century has enlarged its knowledge of sacred history, throw vivid side-lights upon the Scripture narrative. It would be difficult, indeed, to name any historical subject of general interest which in fifty years have so much enlarged our resources as this matter of the history of the Jewish race. It is to a popular view of that history that these thorough and interesting volumes are given.

It is absurd to speak of this book, as some of the controversial journals have done, as if it were an attack upon the Christian religion. There is not a principle involved in it to which Dean Milman is not fully committed, with the full approbation of the Church of England, and Dean Stanley, in his fascinating work on the Jewish Church. In this country, Moses Stuart and Dr. Stowe have admitted the validity of all the principles which are here relied upon; nor would those principles be disavowed by Mr. Joseph Cook, who seems to hold at this moment the banner of New England orthodoxy. We do not mean that these gentlemen would assent to the conclusions of the divines of Holland, but to the essential principle involved in this book; and, in all such discussions, that each book in the Old Testament is to stand on its own merit, to be discussed as is any other historical monument, all these gentlemen assented, as does every other scholar worth naming of the present day. The great German student, Ewald,—whose orthodoxy no man ever questioned,—is the leader of the school here represented. To attempt to repress a knowledge of the conclusions of such men is, indeed, to try "to keep New England out in the cold."

The second volume of The Bible for Learners pleases us even more than the first. The translators, as they worked, seem to have become more familiar with the turns of the somewhat crabbed Dutch language, and their English seems to flow more easily. Messrs. Roberts have added greatly to the value of the English edition by an admirable index to the Old Testament volumes. The history is now brought up to the time of Christ. The introduction of this book to the study of teachers and classes in well-conducted Sunday-schools is already noticed. It will be impossible to keep it out of circulation by any alarm of heresy or infidelity. —Boston Advertiser.

Poetry.

THE BURIAL OF BRYANT.

The venerable poet Bryant had the wish fulfilled which he expressed, thirty years ago, in the following fine poem:

June.

I gazed upon the glorious sky
And the green mountains round,
And thought that when I came to lie
At rest within the ground,
'Twere pleasant that in dowerly June,
When brooks send up a cheerful tune,
And groves a joyous sound,
The sexton's hand, my grave to make,
The rich, green mountain-turf should break.
A cell within the frozen mould,
A coffin borne through sleet,
And icy clouds above it rolled,
While fierce the tempests beat,—
Away! I will not think of these;
Blue be the sky and soft the breeze;
Earth green beneath the feet;
And be the damp mould gently pressed
Into my narrow place of rest.
There, through the long, long summer hours,
The golden light should lie,
And thick young herbs and groups of flowers
Stand in their beauty by.
The oriole should build and tell
His love-tale close beside my cell;
The idle butterfly
Should rest him there, and there be heard
The housewife bee and humming-bird.
And what if cheerful shouts at noon
Come, from the village sent,
Or songs of maids, beneath the moon,
With fairy laughter blent?
And what if, in the evening light,
Betrothed lovers walk in sight
Of my low monument?
I would the lovely scene around
Might know no sadder sight nor sound.
I know that I no more should see
The season's glorious show,
Nor would its brightness shine for me,
Nor its wild music flow;
But if around my place of sleep,
The friends I love should come to weep,
They might not haste to go.
Soft airs, and song, and light, and bloom,
Should keep them lingering by my tomb.
These to their softened hearts should bear
The thought of what has been,
And speak of one who cannot share
The gladness of the scene;
Whose part in all the pomp that fills
The circuit of the summer hills
Is that his grave is green;
And deeply would their hearts rejoice
To hear again his living voice.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

ACTIONS.

A PARAPHRASE OF TWO PARSEE LEGENDS.

I.

A soul that had long sinned departed from earth,
And entered that land where there's no rest but worth;
Passed into a region of blackness and cold,
Stood awed in the presence, all hideous and bold,
Of a woman black, profligate, foul, and deformed.
Wherever he looked, wherever he turned,
Face to face, straight before him that vision appeared,
Close into his face contumeliously leered.
Shrinking back from the sight, so loathsome and vile;
"Who art thou, O woman, that haunts me? more vile,
More horrid, more foul, no grim demon could be;
"Who art thou, base wretch?"

"THINE OWN ACTIONS," said she.

"Thy deeds upon earth done all darkly agree
With the darkness and ugliness born within me;
My nature was formed by thy life lived below;
Clasp now to thy bosom thine own self-made woe."

II.

Within the groves of Paradise,
Whose nectarous fragrance sweet
Is wafted from the upper skies,
With Godhood all replete,
There passed a soul that on the earth
Divine and grand had been,
His days filled full with honest worth,
His heart scarce stained by sin.
This soul beheld, aye, near his side,
A maid serenely fair,
Humble, yet proud with gracious pride,
Beauteous beyond compare.
"What is the name which thou dost wear,
Enchantress?" asked the youth;
"With thee no maiden could compare
E'er seen upon the earth."
In gladsome voice the form replied,
"I AM THY ACTIONS, youth;
This is the life thou ledst below,
Thy virtues and thy ruth.
Thine earthly deeds, all pure as snow,
With me do quite agree;
Thy nature formed my nature so,
Born from thy life's calm sea."

S. W. SAMPLE.

STRAWBERRY POINT, IOWA.

The Index.

BOSTON, JUNE 27, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FRY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston Index to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBOT, Editor.
COTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SURE, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KILBET, Editorial Contributors.

REV. GEORGE CHAINÉY, pastor of a Liberal Christian church at Evansville, Indiana, has published a little book called Foundation Stones, descriptive of his society, its work, and the ideas it represents. The sermons here contained show that, like most Western Unitarian preachers, Mr. Chainéy is very radical in the main, and that, while the name Christian (still explicitly retained) is reduced almost to meaninglessness by the identification of it with goodwill and goodness in general, he preaches substantially the principles of Free Religion. We venture to think that before many years the useless label "Christian" will be worn away by the friction of further experience and thought, and that he will find his place where he belongs on the simple platform of Free Humanity.

IT IS WELL to know what the enemies of equal religious rights are saying and doing. These resolutions of the General Synod of Reformed Presbyterians, passed lately, are in point:—

"WHEREAS, Sabbath desecration is rapidly increasing in the great centres of our population and throughout the land, in the following forms; namely, Sabbath excursions by land and by sea; running of freight and passenger trains; the employment of railroad hands in workshops; entertaining friends at dinner-parties; driving to our parks for recreation; attending to secular business in counting-rooms and thoroughfares; reading secular papers and works of fiction; thereby depriving domestics and others of the privileges of attending the house of God, and thus doing dishonor to God and his holy law; therefore,

"Resolved, That this Synod condemns all such forms of Sabbath desecration, and all other forms, whether springing up in our own land or imported from foreign countries; and further,

"Resolved, That foreigners must be taught that this nation is a Sabbath-keeping nation, and that we will not barter our Sabbath birthright for the profane practices on that day so prevalent in Continental Europe."

A WRITER to the American Israelite recently noticed as follows one of the good works of the new President of the Free Religious Association: "On Wednesday night I attended a meeting held at the Germania Assembly Rooms, in the Bowery, where an audience as large as could be crowded into the hall came to hear Prof. Felix Adler, who spoke on the subject of the 'Workingmen's Lyceum.' This noble project owes its inception to the Standard Hall lecturer, a man of whom we Americans in general and we Jews in particular ought to be proud. The Lyceum, whose cardinal aim is the elevation of the working-classes, has already a membership of eighty. It is intended to establish a Mechanics' Institute, to be controlled by the workingmen themselves. Lectures on economic and social laws are to be delivered, and other and more practical efforts are to be made to improve the condition of the working-classes. In the course of his address, which was attentively listened to, Prof. Adler said that in France the workingman demanded the right to work. With us he demanded 'the right to virtue' as well. The miserable hovels in which the workingmen of our city are now compelled to live were considered by the speaker to form insuperable obstacles to the moral happiness of those who dwelt in them, and it would be the object of the lyceum to advocate a reform in dwelling-houses as one of the principal means of elevating the moral character of the people. The new society will attempt to bring the two extremes of society together, and will represent a new principle in the history of the labor movement in the United States. At the conclusion of Prof. Adler's address, Rev. W. R. Alger addressed the meeting on the subject of education, and his remarks were received with great favor."

VICTOR HUGO.

The New York World's Paris correspondent thus quotes Victor Hugo on American communism:—

A day or two after hearing this I found an opportunity of taking Victor Hugo's opinion upon the question. The substance of his counsel to the States, delivered with much earnestness was: "Don't lose your heads." "Be moderate," he said, "in dealing with the authors of this national scare. Suppose you have communistic agitators among you; well, it is a misfortune; it is an evil; but do not give them the triumph, and your brother republicans of Europe the shame, of seeing you forget your self-possession. The world expects this example from you. You are bound to do it by your own past, by the noble principle of mercy and forbearance in dealing with misguided men on which you acted at the close of a memorable struggle. You must show them that a real democracy can be as generous as it is brave. You have shown it in a great civil war; you must take care not to fail to show it in what, at the worst, is but a political conspiracy. I am sorry to hear of the alarm of the public and the general outcry in the journals. A people in that frame of mind are apt to think that they may as well be cruel just for once, for the sake of the example. Any despot can persecute, fine, and imprison in the name of order; only a great and wise government, strong in the support of the people, can temper its force of repression with pity and toleration. You have a grand opportunity and responsibilities to match; you are called on to deal, for the first time in your history, with the social danger; you must most strenuously take care, for all our sakes, that you do nothing unworthy of yourselves. Europe has often looked to you for something new; give it an American novelty in this highest department of invention,—the art of governing through the self-control of the governors."

"Are all the working-men in America," he continued, "under the leadership of the élite of the nation? I express no opinion; I ask the question. There is no danger in a democracy so officered, but there is every danger when the best men in the country do not strive to take their proper place in the direction of affairs. The strength of the present republic in France lies in the fact that all the most considerable persons in our society are republicans. I do not mean the mere men of rank or money. I mean the best blood of France, in the best sense; say, if you like, the best brain. That is the true guarantee for moderation,—the only one. At the funeral of Thiers I saw how this admirable population of Paris, so much maligned, may be quieted by a sign. Thiers was not altogether a favorite of the masses. It was their faith in others alone that gave them faith in him. They had something to pardon to his memory, and there were cries here and there that were not exactly cries of affection as the hearse neared the cemetery gates. A single gesture of one in whom the people had confidence sufficed to hush them. We have no fears of popular trouble in France, and I repeat that it is because the French democracy is under the guidance of the élite of the nation."

What mingled benignity and wisdom there are in these words! Are the American people not sane enough to follow such counsel? We believe they are. Resolute in suppressing both rebellion and riot when these monsters rear their hideous heads, merciful in dealing with both rebels and rioters when the immediate peril is past, they will not disappoint the hopes of the friends of liberty in the Old World. True, they too often suffer themselves to be guided by other counsellors than the real "élite of the nation," the "best brain" of the people, in ordinary affairs, and sometimes even in affairs of greater consequence; but in the long run intelligence and conscience assert their natural right to govern the American republic. The "élite" or "best brain" can secure in this country no merely personal following; that, fortunately, is impossible, for personal leadership and personal discipleship are the defeat of national as of individual independence. But a democracy is as much bound as a monarchy to follow its "best brain," or it will share the fate of all things which rest on ignorance, incapacity, and immorality.

Victor Hugo's great Eulogy on Voltaire, at the centennial celebration of his death, May 30, called down upon him all sorts of abuse from the clergy, especially from Mgr. Dupanloup, Bishop of Orleans. Through Gambetta's organ, Victor Hugo has published a most scathing reply to the latter, whom he addresses as plain "Monsieur." Mr. Smalley, the London correspondent of the Tribune, translates it as follows:—

Monsieur.—You are guilty of an imprudence. You remind those who might have forgotten it that I was brought up by a churchman, and that, if my life began in prejudice and error, it was the priest's fault, not mine. That sort of education is so fatal that at nearly forty years of age, as you point out, I was still under its influence. All that has been said before, I don't dwell on it. I have a certain contempt for mere trifles.

You insult Voltaire, and you do me the honor to revive me. That is your affair.

You and I are two men, better or worse; the future will decide between us. You say I am old, and you pretend to be young,—which I believe.

The moral sense is so imperfectly developed in you that you reproach me with the very act which does me honor. You undertake to read me a lesson. By what right? Who are you? Let us come to the point. Let us see what sort of a thing your conscience is, and what mine is. A single comparison will suffice.

France has lately passed through an ordeal. France was free. One night a man treacherously seized her, overthrew her, and gagged her. If a nation could be murdered, that man would have murdered France. He brought her near enough to death to reign over her. He began his reign—since reign it was—by perjury, ambush, and massacre. He prolonged it by oppression, by tyranny, by despotism, by an indescribable parody on religion and justice. He was at once a monster and a pigmy. For him were sung the Tes Deum, the Magnificat, the Salvum fac, the Gloria tibi, and the rest. Who sang them? Ask yourself. The law abandoned the people to him, the Church surrendered to him the Almighty. Justice, honor, country, gave way before that man. He trampled under foot his oath, equity, good faith, the glory of the flag, the dignity of man, the liberty of the citizen; that man's prosperity perplexed the conscience of mankind. This lasted nineteen years. During that time you were in a palace; I was in exile. Sir, I pity you.

VICTOR HUGO.

Mr. Smalley very pertinently adds this brief comment to his translation:—

Monsieur Dupanloup has a reputation as a controversialist; he never had a better occasion to prove himself worthy of it. As between the Bishop and Voltaire, you may think what you like, but as between the prelate who thrives by servility to Bonapartist rule and the republican who preferred exile to submission, what American can hesitate?

Those who have learned to admire the transcendent genius of Victor Hugo, to cherish gratitude for his brave and uncompromising devotion to the cause of humanity, and to glory in the lustre which his great intellect and equally great conscience have shed on modern liberalism, will rejoice to see how splendidly the fires of that mighty soul still burn, even in advanced age. Such utterances as the above are radiant, one with the mild and beneficent sunshine which calls to life all the beauty of humanity's fairest flowers, the other with the terrible glare of a lightning-bolt which blasts a very Upas-tree of sanctified hypocrisy and truckling to imperial crime. The Emperor has already gone to the limbo of departed tyrants; the Bishop will sooner or later go to the limbo of departed sycophants; but, on the simple monument which (far be the day!) shall mark the last resting-place of their former victim, no inscription could be so appropriate as the brief epitaph:

VICTOR HUGO—HUGO VICTOR.

AN OLD SOCIETY IN A NEW WORK.

Having a spare half-hour, I went into the recent anniversary meeting of the American Tract Society. I have been glad ever since that I did, for I heard some very suggestive addresses. All the speakers whom I heard were careful to emphasize the point that the new times demanded new measures. There was a plain admission that the times were "new," and that the old methods were getting antiquated. These methods might have served their purpose, it was said, when adopted, and have accomplished a most needed work; but they were not adapted to meet modern exigencies. And when the difference between the old demands and the new was explained, it appeared to amount mainly to this: that the old work of the Society, determined by the needs of past times, was the publication of tracts and books that unfolded the special doctrines of salvation contained in the Bible; the publications were exclusively and openly religious and doctrinal and scriptural; whereas the new times required a general Christian literature,—in other words, works of all kinds, but written from a "Christian stand-point and in a Christian spirit."

The arguments, in fact, appeared to imply, though this was not so distinctly stated, that the popular reading world to-day would not be reached by the requisite evangelical doctrine, if that doctrine was presented in the old frank and undisguised form. The saving truth must be put as much as possible in worldly forms, so that people might get it without knowing what they were getting. Like bitter but necessary medicine for children, it must be concealed from the eye and from the first taste of the tongue by a nicely-adjusted sugar coating.

One of the speakers, for instance, dwelt upon the importance of the Society's publishing an "attractive literature," that would find a ready sale on the cars, and at the news-stands in depots and other places where travellers are accustomed to supply themselves with the light reading-matter most in vogue on journeys. And it was admitted that, in order to compete with the books that find the readiest sale at such places, this new order of Tract Society literature must not be on its face theological or even religious. None of the ordinary forms of literature—poetry, the drama, the novel—were to be abjured, if they could be used successfully to convey religious truth to people who otherwise would not obtain it. This new order of "Christian literature" for the travelling public must not, of course, be "sensational," but it was to have all the attractive qualities of the modern "sensational" literature without being that. Another of the speakers specially regretted that so much of the poetry of the day was not Christian nor religious, and intimated that the American Tract Society might do something to cultivate a new school of "Christian poetry." It was also urged that the magazine literature and even the philosophy of the day needed to be reconstructed from a Christian stand-point, and that the Tract Society should lead in this reformatory work.

But the climax was reached when it was seriously suggested and urged that the Society should hereafter make it a special aim to publish school-books. The school-books, it was said, in common use, are almost wholly secular (as is natural, since they treat secular topics), and as a consequence, it was argued, our children are in danger of growing up to regard the world we live in as an "atheistic world." In this field of school-book literature the Society, it was reported, had already made two experiments that were satisfactory and successful; and it was hoped that this department of labor would be greatly enlarged, since nothing could be more far-reaching in benefit than to impress religious truth on young minds through the public school-books. The speaker lamented that arithmetics should be written without any reference to the Being who created numbers. Grammar certainly, he thought, should teach the existence of the God who gave language to man, and, I thought he was going to add (though he did not), who had once miraculously confounded it. He did not explain the connection between chemistry and Christianity, but he thought that books on chemistry and on all the sciences should be written from the Christian stand-point, and that if they were the present danger that scientific teaching would undermine the truths of Revelation would be successfully met.

Now all this was seriously set forth as indicating the new field for the American Tract Society to cultivate. It is nothing less than the reconstruction of literature, science, philosophy, and even of the common school-books, on a so-called "Christian basis." It is an ambitious attempt, and in some respects may be safely left to the natural laws of mental and social progress. But it is an attempt that will bear watching. Especially let liberals be on the look-out for all school-books written and published under the auspices of the American Tract Society. W. J. P.

LAW AGAINST INDECENT LITERATURE.

The position of the editor of THE INDEX in regard to the law against the circulation of obscene literature through the mails is, in my opinion, just and judicious. The law of 1873 should be so modified that under it none but dealers in really indecent books and pictures, such as corrupt and ruin our youth, such as are unqualifiedly condemned by all pure men and women everywhere, irrespective of beliefs on religious, social, and scientific subjects, can be prosecuted and punished.

This is the position I took at the Congress of the National Liberal League, July, 1876; and as chairman of the committee on resolutions, I submitted at the last session of that congress the following resolution, which after a few minutes' discussion was adopted by the League:—

Resolved, That this League, while it recognizes the great importance and the absolute necessity of guarding by proper legislation against obscene and indecent publications, whatever sect, party, order, or class such publications claim to favor, disapproves and protests against all laws which, by reason of indefiniteness or ambiguity, shall permit the prosecution and punishment of honest and conscientious men, for presenting to the public what they deem essential to the public welfare, when the views thus presented do not violate, in thought or language, the acknowledged rules of decency; and that we demand that all laws against obscenity and indecency shall be so clear and explicit that none but actual offenders against the recognized principles of purity shall be liable to suffer therefrom.

The danger presupposed by this resolution was no imaginary danger, as subsequent events have shown. There is no doubt in my mind that the circulation of obscene literature should be prohibited by law, and that its transmission through the mails should be prohibited by Congress, which alone has authority vested in it to make laws and regulations pertaining to the postal system of the country. The absolute repeal of the present law against the circulation of filthy books and pictures through the mails would be welcomed by hundreds of depraved wretches, whom it would help by enabling them, with but little danger, to carry on their infamous business; while the advantages that would accrue would be secured just as effectually by a modification of the law, such as is contemplated in the resolution adopted by the National Liberal League and insisted on by the editor of THE INDEX.

No doubt the thousands who signed the petition that was sent to Congress asking primarily for the repeal of the law of 1873 did so with the best of motives, believing that the law under which Mr. Bennett was arrested, and others quite as innocent of circulating obscene literature, had been fined and imprisoned, ought to be repealed at once, to prevent the possibility of similar outrages on personal liberty in the future. In their honest indignation at the attempt made to suppress freedom of speech under the pretence of suppressing obscenity—an indignation that I felt as strongly, perhaps, as any of those who signed the petition—they failed to consider fully, I believe, that the repeal of the law would facilitate and encourage the spread of a disgusting moral leprosy, and that "Comstockism" would be abolished quite as effectually by a radical modification of the law as by its total repeal, while the former would leave its good features untouched and its good results unimpaired. I know, since the subject has been discussed, that the almost universal view among liberals is that we should petition for the modification, and not for the repeal, of the law. I suggest that another petition, carefully and judiciously worded, indicating the defects, and asking for a radical modification of the existing law, be put into circulation. It could be published at and sent from the office of a very liberal journal in the United States. A hundred thousand names, or even twice that number, could be obtained before the end of the present year. B. F. U.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S SUGGESTION.

Mr. B. F. Underwood's editorial contribution this week is especially worthy of attention. His testimony is most valuable as to the opinion actually held on this subject by the majority of liberals, concerning which no one is better qualified to speak; and it is equally encouraging for all those who do not wish to see the great liberal party of this country led by foolish or interested counsels into a position which will disgrace themselves, and give great "aid and comfort" to the enemies of free thought.

We cordially second his suggestion of a new petition which shall take defensible ground on this extremely important subject. If, for instance, he and Colonel Ingersoll should see fit to prepare one, explicitly conceding the right of Congress to exclude really obscene literature from the mails, and as explicitly requesting that all laws on this subject shall be so modified as to protect fully the precious rights of free thought and a free press, they would do an incalculable service to liberty; and they could easily secure an immense number of signatures all over the country. To such a petition as this we would gladly give all possible support, and so would every other liberal and decent journal in the land.

If the issue between repeal and modification shall be put before the liberals in such a shape that they shall comprehend the enormous difference between the two positions, and the vital interests involved, it will become impossible any longer to obscure this great question by virulent personalities and ridiculous side-issues. The vast majority of liberals, just as soon as they come to understand this matter, will oppose repeal and favor modification. Nothing could be more wicked or more false than the persistent attempt to represent us as saying that the "70,000" (?) signers to the Bennett petition are consciously in favor of obscenity. We never said anything of the sort; on the contrary, we have always taken special pains to say that very few of them have understood the real position in which that petition places them. This is perfectly well comprehended by the parties who are guilty of the misrepresentation; they have transparent reasons for making it, but not of a creditable kind.

Our own readers understand the ground we have taken, and will not be confused or bewildered by the clamor that is raised. We have had but just one object in all we have said on this subject: namely, to prevent the liberal party from making a great blunder in a matter of the first importance to their cause. This blunder, if made, will inure wholly to the benefit of Comstock, and put the liberals wholly at his mercy. Against such suicidal folly we shall protest to the end, no matter at what cost to ourselves or to THE INDEX. Colonel Ingersoll and Mr. Underwood, Mr. Frothingham and Mr. Mills, and every other radical who sees that liberty and morality are equally precious interests of mankind, perceive what is the sober truth in this matter; and if anybody thinks that noisy and irrelevant abuse can long keep this truth hidden from the liberals as a body, such a notion will speedily be dissipated by the result. Again we say that Mr. Underwood's wise suggestion is worthy of all attention, and we hope to see it energetically carried out by the proper parties.

MR. HOLYOAKE ON "RADICALS."

Our noble English friend, George Jacob Holyoake, contributed recently to the Nineteenth Century an article on "Impatience in Politics," from which we quote this admirable passage about "Radicals":—

The persons who have displayed, during the past half-century or more, definite qualities in popular politics are mainly those called radicals. They are commonly regarded as persons who have strong, untutored ways of thinking, and who act from impulse; but impulse is not politics, which can never be dissociated from patient calculation. By others radicals are thought to be persons having great energy of unrest, and to be animated by a vigorous and even manly indignation at injustice. This, however, is insubstantial; and insubstantial is not politics, and not often the prelude to it, though sometimes the only means of obtaining political justice. Some writers depict radicals as persons of robust crudeness of ideas, impatient of the formalities of "respectability," of unconventional, and even uncouth, manners and dress. These are not radicals,—they are not even radicals in the raw state; in a later stage they appear as the smooth-haired, smirky-dressed, officiously compliant, reactionary Tory. On the contrary, a radical is one who begins with a principle, and whose action and hope are determined by his judgment. Some persons are resolute, energetic, persistent, but not impatient. If they never rave, they never rest. They know what they want, and they ask for that, and not for more. They do not huxter for liberty by demanding what is sure to be refused, in order to get what they are willing to take. Asking only that which is reasonable in itself, and which may be safely conceded under the circumstances, they never abate their demand. Accepting a portion, if only a portion can be won, they recommence in due time their efforts for the residue of what they deem right. They are not "moderates"; their pride is to be just. Moderation in truth is as absurd as moderation in sunlight or health. No one makes his neighbor the poorer by taking of these all he wants. But moderation is shown in not insisting upon other persons complying at once with what you think right. It is more fairness to show consideration herein; and those who do show it are called "moderate," because they are not mad. A statesman opposed to progress prefers the mad politicians, and is always civil to them in private. He tells them he prefers them—they are "outspoken," and he can "understand them,"—which is quite true. Flattered by praise and by money into wildness which ruins their cause, they damage comrades of more measured sense, and even revile them on occasions as "half-hearted," or "wanting in principle,"—which, indeed, they are, if of the mad kind. A radical of principle is one who goes to the root of things as far as he can see; and by the root of things he means the general good of the community, advanced by the intelligent sense of the majority who think. He is not adventurous; he never loses sight of himself. He is not speculative; he never loses sight of society. Though he goes down to the reasons of things, any one can see where he is. He may not know much, and may entirely mistake the good of the community; but he will be far more likely to be right in aiming at this than by aiming at any lesser thing, parochial or personal. The rudimentary principles of radicalism—as, indeed, they are of any honest scheme proposed for the public service—are the free publicity of opinion, and the free discussion of it; and these are the conditions of its action, the guarantees that it works in what Lord Hampton would call "the open," and seeks only such changes as are approved by common intelligence, and accorded by common consent. The radical, therefore, in his mind, such as it is (and I do but describe it, it not being my place to praise it), is robust as a bison. He does not sneak after progress; he strives for it boldly. He may be objected to by persons not of his way of thinking; but he is never distrusted, as though he were an element of intrigue or of danger to the State.

I do not pretend to tell what all the truth is; I do not pretend to have fathomed the abyss, nor to have floated on outstretched wings level with the heights of thought. I denounce the cruelties and horrors of slavery. I ask for light and air for the souls of men. I say take off these chains, break these manacles, free those limbs, release that brain. I plead for the right to think, to reason, to investigate. I ask that the future may be enriched with the honest thoughts of men. I implore every human being to be a soldier in the army of progress.—Ingersoll.

POPE LEO proposes to abolish the Papal navy, which comprises sixty officers and men, under Admiral Cialdi. The fleet consists of a dispatch-boat, which has lain in the port of Toulon since 1870, awaiting repairs. Its title is the Immaculate Conception; and a crew of twelve men are attached to it, who give place to other sailors of the Papal navy, regularly, every three months.

Communications.

RELIGION AND MORALITY.

"Es reden und träumen die Menschen viel
Von bessern künftigen Tagen;
Nach einem glücklich-n, goldenen Ziel
Sieht man sie rennen und jagen.
Die Welt wird alt und wird wieder jung;
Doch der Mensch hofft immer Verbesserung."

Men ever talk and ever dream
Of better future days;
And after a happy, golden scheme
We see them run and chase.
The world grows old and grows young again,
Yet man hopes ever the goal to gain.

SCHILLER'S "Hope."

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Contentment has ever been praised as a great virtue and a sure means to happiness. Yet very few men there are who are really contented with their lot. Deep down in the human heart there is a never-ceasing longing for "better future days," for greater happiness, for a something desired, but hardly ever obtained, or, when obtained, for still another something. Thus an incessant craving for a future happiness, a silent aspiration after an undefined better something, ever agitates the minds of men and keeps them discontented with their present condition. Perhaps this is, after all, better for them than a perfect contentment would be; for it is an ever-driving spur to activity, inspires them with energy, is the soul of all industry and enterprise, speculation and invention, the source of all progress and improvement; while a perfect contentment would cause a stand-still, produce lethargy, and clog progress. It is therefore only in rare instances that we meet with a perfectly contented individual; the race, humanity, is never contented. No; happily humanity never will be contented with what it has achieved; it will, and shall, forever strive for improvement in physical and moral, individual and social, secular and religious relations and conditions; and man will forever and ever "talk and dream of better future days. . . . The world grows old and grows young again, yet man ever hopes for betterment."

If this is especially true in regard to all that concerns this life and this world, it is not less true in regard to "the life to come," to religion. There may, it is true, be found many men contented with themselves, as far as their religion is concerned, or men who, when not really contented, at least simulate such contentment. Almost all orthodox believers in any kind of religion avow great contentment in this respect, and their claim to perfect happiness becomes the stronger, the more sincere and intense their orthodoxy, or the more subtle their hypocrisy is. Religion, they say, begets such a peace giving, consoling state of mind that they who really enjoy it prize it so highly, feel the vanity of all earthly things and pleasures so intensely, that they are tranquil, contented, and supremely happy, whatever their conditions may be. If these assertions be correct, religion is, without any contradiction, certainly the most valuable and most desirable thing, beyond all hazard worthy our best efforts to obtain.

From the foregoing, results the most important double-question: "What is religion?" and "How can we obtain it?" I candidly admit that I do not know what "religion" is. And though others pretend to know it, and though almost everybody claims to have it, yet that man was never yet born who could define religion acceptably to all inquirers or to all who claim to possess it. That eminent scholar, Mr. Max Müller, admits that it cannot be defined. "There seem to be as many definitions of religion," he says, "as there are religions in the world" (INDEX, May 23); and, I believe, he would have been pretty nearly as correct if he would have said, "as there are believers in the world."

But, leaving the merely theological and sectarian definitions out of the count, and considering only the philosophical and rational ones, even the best of these will, after due analysis, be found to be rather a definition of morality than of "religion,"—your own definition, though in itself excellent, my dear Mr. Abbot, "the effort of man to perfect himself," not excepted. This is certainly a most calamitous case, and extremely disadvantageous, if not to religion itself, at least to those earnestly and honestly in search of religion. For if no one is able to tell what religion is, it becomes, very naturally, equally impossible to say how we can obtain it. What will then become of the great value that multitudes ascribe to it?

But it seems to me, sir, that all the laudations of religion, and all the declamations about the sublime felicities it imparts, must be mere delusions so long as we can neither satisfactorily define it, nor tell how we may get it. The reality of the happiness of which the so-called "pious" ones boast so much must, then, be doubted, and held to be but imaginary or deceptive. How different the case in regard to the sweet satisfaction that morality creates! Not, however, because all, at least civilized, men are in fullest accord as to what morality is, what acts are moral or immoral, while their opinions of religion are ever at variance; not because it is as easy to know and to say when our acts are moral as it is difficult always to act morally; but because it is only the practice of morality, and nothing else than the consciousness of having acted morally, that really imparts to the mind that felicitous self-satisfaction and sublime tranquillity of which religionists boast so much, and which they erroneously ascribe to religion. Yet, if even they, beside being religious, be also and really good and moral men, they, too, may actually enjoy that happiness and consolation which they claim, not however, on account of their religion, but in spite of it, and by virtue of the goodness and morality they practise. I must perhaps also admit that religion even may in some happily constituted natures, or in some artificially excited minds, momentarily call up feelings of exalted happiness. But then these will last only so long as their cause, the momentarily enhanced sentiments (e.g., in intense devotion), or the artificially aroused sympathies (e.g., at revivals), will last; while those produced by the consciousness of rectitude and morality are lasting and enduring.

Another equally undecided, if not indeterminate, question is, again, Is religion an innate, constitutional part of human nature, or is it only something acquired by man, the product of his conditions, the effect of the influences of his environments on him? In regard to this question the opinions of men are again as much at variance as are their views of religion itself. Mr. Müller calls it a "faculty," "a mental faculty to comprehend . . . the infinite." (INDEX, May 23.) But can finite man comprehend the infinite? Man, with all his physical or mental "faculties," can but conceive what has form and limits; but the infinite, to be the infinite, cannot have either form or limits. Must it not, then, be clear to everybody that religion is something beyond human comprehension, —a something that no one ever knew or ever can know? Yet the large majority of men, even the wisest and best among them, maintain that it is something proper to man as man, part of his being, born in and with him, and therefore found everywhere where man is found. Others, again, equally wise and good, great observers, profound thinkers, and acute reasoners, maintain on the contrary that it is not in man, but outside of, and merely acquired by, him.

Now, sir, these views and opinions are all so antagonistic that they mutually exclude and annul each other. We have, then, to look for another more reliable and substantial basis to build our theories upon. This basis is furnished by experience. It teaches us some facts which the advocates of all the various opinions aforesaid must acknowledge, since no one can effectually deny them, and which will shed more and better light on these enigmatical subjects. Man, experience teaches us, is, more especially in his infancy, only an imitating animal. The child observes and imitates. It thus forms from its surroundings and their influences on it its ideas, and these grow within it as itself develops and grows. When the child has become a mature man, he finds himself possessed of certain ideas thus unconsciously and early received, and nourished and strengthened through all the preceding years of infancy and youth; and his memory tells him consequently that he ever has had them, was at no period of his life without them. From these so easily and naturally explicable circumstances, men and women jump at the conclusion that their religious ideas have ever been in them; that they were born with them, and that these ideas were consequently innate, a part of themselves, instead of ascribing them, as they ought, to unmistakable external agencies (such as parentage, environments and their influences on them, etc.). At any rate, those who claim innateness for these ideas can no more prove them so, or the objects to which they relate—religion, God, immortality, etc.—than the advocates of other and antagonistic theories can undeniably demonstrate the correctness of their views, since religion itself will ever remain indefinable and incomprehensible, and all speculation on it will never attain to more than doubtful hypotheses.

But a new and mighty factor enters here by the aid of which any hypothesis may become an undoubted verity to those who embrace it. This magic factor is faith. Now what is faith? "A system of belief," says Webster,—"belief; the assent of the mind to the truth of what is declared by another." Hence, the hypothesis of another may become an unquestioned fact to multitudes of men. It is thus that religion originated and still exists. In the minds of hundreds of thousands of men, religion thus lives, not as "innate idea," not as the product of their own reasonings and speculations (for large majorities of them never think even, much less reason or speculate on this subject), but as a belief, as "assent to the truth of what others declare" to be truth. Because these multitudes see from their earliest youth others believing in these declarations as in truths, they accept them likewise as truths, without doubting or examining them. They have simply faith in them; and this "faith" (in thousands of instances a "blind faith") is mistaken for, and passes as, religion. This kind of "religion" will be the more intense, the stronger and "blinder" the "faith" of the believers is.

As long as this sort of religion is confined to the believer and his devotions, i.e., as long as it remains personal faith, restricted to the performance of diverse forms and ceremonies, and does not manifest itself in hostile acts towards those differing from that faith,—it may still be harmless for others or for society at large. But when the religious zeal animates the believer to hate all those who differ from his belief, and incites him to inimical acts, both the believer and his belief or faith become dangerous. It is certainly bad enough for religion that, no matter what benefits it may be claimed that it confers on the individual believer, it neither contributes to the real elevation of the individual nor to the well-being of society, its general peace and prosperity; but it is yet worse for it that it is, and ever and everywhere has been, a cause of discord between citizens and neighbors of different faith. The record that history shows on every one of her pages is still more damaging to it; is really appalling. More than nine-tenths of all the miseries that ever afflicted mankind can directly or indirectly be traced back to religion. The most horrible, most sanguinary, most furious and destructive wars originated in religious differences; and the intolerance and persecutions that it engenders prove it to be the greatest peril to society. Even to day, in these later days of the enlightened nineteenth century, it is still religion that separates man and man, neighbor and neighbor, citizen and citizen.

In the face of all this it is in vain that the partisans of religion claim so much for it. Of course, it will not be denied that there may possibly also be a better side of it; that there may even also be some good in it. But if there be, the bad most lamentably overbalances the good; and too much good is credited to it by its apologists that really does not belong to it, but to morality and the goodness of human nature (although some religions teach the total depravity of the latter!). But it is ignorance or priestcraft that thus overvalues religion, as it is ignorance coupled with fanaticism that at all times opposes its reform and improvement. The history of every religion shows that those who ever endeavored to reform or improve it were declared enemies of religion, and treated and persecuted as such by its priesthood. More than one reformer paid thus with his life the penalty of his audacity, although more than one has afterwards been deified for it. Yet all religions are more or less permeated with morality, and are thus to the same extent good and beneficial; for morality is the most beneficial and corrective element wherever found, even when mixed up with error. The more advanced, the more rational, a religion is, the more it will be found that morality forms an integral part of it. Yes, any religion, living or dead, must and will be rated and esteemed by the intelligent, unprejudiced classes just in proportion to its harmony with reason and morality, and because it does so harmonize.

But thus it also happens that so much is mistaken for religion which, in reality, is only morality. It is also this mistaking for religion what is only morality that makes so many zealous advocates of the former, even among the well-informed and educated classes. True, they cannot, and the honest ones will not, deny the records of history,—the countless evils done by religion; the horrors perpetrated in its "holy name"; nay, more, they not unfrequently even exaggerate them—in other religions than their own. But they do this in order to exalt their own. Those other religions, they say, were false religions, instigated by the devil, and could therefore have had no better results than they had. Their own religion, however, they claim, is "of God," a "revelation from on high" to "save poor, fallen humanity."

Suppose, now, these claims all true and substantiated; even then religion does not appear in a much better light, since we do not find such "revealed religion" having any better effect on the conduct of its believers in general than the "false religions,"—nay, even a worse one than any "heathen" or "pagan" religion ever had on its believers. Intolerance, persecutions, proscriptions, and penalties of all sorts, for belief's sake, never played so conspicuous a part in "those benighted pagan religions" as they did, and still do, in the so-called "holy revealed religions." And quite naturally so. The more firmly and sincerely a believer in any "revealed religion" believes it to be a veritable "revelation of God," the more he will value it and—himself, and the more he must despise or pity the unbeliever, and endeavor to bring him to believe as he himself does. His "holy religion," furthermore, teaches him that only those who believe in it are acceptable to his God, and will be "saved"; while all those who do not thus believe are "heretics," "children of the devil," "hated by God," and "lost," "damned forever and ever." If they are hated by God, must he not also hate them? And if they have a precious soul, destined to be lost, that might yet be saved by embracing his belief, can or ought he to hesitate at any means, any torture, by which he might save that "lost soul"? Why, then, should he not be intolerant and persecuting? These are no faults or vices, according to his religious code; on the contrary, they are great virtues, meritorious "piety." If morality teaches him differently, the worse for morality: he must be "religious" or "lost."

Thus is religion. Of morality it will not be necessary to say much more than I said in the foregoing, since its supreme value is equally admitted, not only by those believing solely in morality, but by those believing in religion as well; at least by such of them as do not discard reason and make the dogmas of their religion their sole belief. With those who do, I have no controversy. But all rational men, be they believers in any religion or not, will admit that the best element in any religion is the morality it teaches; that this alone constitutes all the real merit that may be found in religion; and hence, that every religion is to be judged, revered, and accepted, or disdained and opposed, just in proportion as morality is embodied in its tenets and doctrines, or ignored and slighted. Mere belief will never satisfy morality! It cares nothing for belief; it insists on practice, on a life in harmony with its principles. Religion, again, is more or less form and ritual, which change with time and circumstances; yet it regards a pious compliance with them, like the mere belief in its dogmas, as highest virtues and most meritorious acts. Morality, however, is an eternal, unchangeable law, judges our acts and pronounces them good or bad, right or wrong, according to its law. It rewards them immediately, here and now, when right and good, with that sweetest of rewards, that greatest of felicities, the consciousness of having done right; it even so punishes them when wrong with that bitterest of penalties, the consciousness of having done wrong, and the pang inseparable from it. Religionists may declaim the happiness and bliss that the religious enjoy as much as they please; but there is no other happiness or unhappiness equal to that which a satisfied or troubled conscience gives. Morality, reason, conscience, are but so many words for the same thing or idea, expressed in different relations and forms of thought,— a real and veritable trinity, three in one, and one in three. Morality is the court before which our acts and thoughts and aspirations are tried, and at the same time the law according to which they are judged; Reason is the judge that pronounces the sentences; and Conscience is the officer that executes the sentences of the court, deals out rewards as well as penalties. It is morality, then, and not religion, that gives to man that unspeakable happiness, or that excruciating pang, that religionists claim for religion. Morality is, as admitted by all, an integral part of human nature, and, as conscience, ever present and invariably the same in every rational human being; while religion is by no means such an essential part of man, nor so ever present in him; nor is it, even if we will admit it to be shared by all men, of such uniformity in them as is morality. No; it varies in form and essence in every individual, even in members of one and the same faith. This is at the same time also a necessary consequence and convincing proof of their widely different nature and genesis; the one resulting from man's peculiar nature, the other from his training and other external and accidental conditions. Hence the one, violated and suppressed as it temporarily may be, is and remains always and invariably the same in all civilized men; the other, never exactly the same in two individuals.

Yet even religion, in spite of its many drawbacks and countless abuses, may at least become—and more especially for the less educated classes—a valuable auxiliary to, or substitute for, morality; but morality is, must, and will be, the sole infallible guide to a good, just, and correct life. Religion may fancy unspeakable happiness for its believers in another life, in order to bribe its dupes to sacrifice to it their happiness in this life; but morality, in giving real happiness in this life (as well as in the one to come, if there be one), makes it conditioned on the practice of its principles, the compliance with its law, and the rectitude of life.

MORRIS EINHORN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., June 9, 1878.

PRINCIPLES, METHODS, MEN:

ON THE SCIENTIFIC FORMULA OF ORDERLY SOCIAL PROGRESS.

NO. II.

Reform is a problem which formulates itself into a first, a middle, and a third term, and may be expressed in this wise: PRINCIPLES, METHODS, MEN. Just in the degree that any scheme or enterprise is defective in either of these elements does it invite failure. Principles may be divine, but bad methods will turn to dragons' teeth, in the reaping that which had been sown in hope of golden corn. Principles and methods may be just and righteous; but if left to the administration of base and selfish men the fine gold will be turned to dross. Principles and methods must not only be adapted to ends, but find their accord and unity in character, or failure, sooner or later, is certain.

Let us, then, assume that social science, not less than mathematics, has its first principles or axioms, and that these have been correctly stated, and are accepted as true by the intuitive moral sense of mankind. By this assumption we beg no question at issue, but comply with an absolute demand of all scientific investigation. The assumption that there are axioms of moral science which no demonstration could make more clear does not imply that the mind is the source of truth, nor imply the perfection of the moral sense, any more than assuming the truth of the axioms of mathematics implies the perfection of reason. The assumption implies rather the perfection of the laws of order in Nature and society. Of this perfection there can be no doubt that man has an intuitive sense, which is to him the motive or incentive to progress. To discover how to coordinate the individual and collective welfare to those laws, in the structure of the social system, is the function of humanity under the divine providence.

Man is not born into the perfect life, but is to attain unto it through experience, growth, or experiment. Falseness will not lead to it, save by devious rounds, and only as it gives wholesome lessons through suffering. Through purity to peace, from truth to righteousness, is the divine order; and they who are wise will choose only that way which shines with truth, and which leads to joy every child of humanity.

Expediency is falsehood. They who do the right only so far as it costs them nothing, so far as it does not conflict with their pride, love of ease, or personal interests, are among its worst enemies, and are dangerous in proportion to their influence and social position. One respectable and pious monopolist, usurer, or gambler in stocks is a greater social pest than a hundred petty thieves who are hourly sent to jail, and all the more dangerous from whatever personal excellence or influence he may possess. His very respectability hides the iniquity of his business and of a social system which generates and sustains it. We fail to see that, while he may be conventionally a paragon of excellence, he is by vocation a blood-sucker and a devourer of widows' houses. Disregarding principles, society has gone from bad to worse, until it has come to be accepted as a matter of course, that public, legal, and popular sanction will be given to acts done by a banking, railroad, and manufacturing corporation which if done by an individual would send him to the State prison. If I, as a private member of society, were to defraud my neighbor of a cent, I should have both constable and curate after me in a trice; but if I steal with the crowd, and according to the National Banking Act, or by the charter of a factory, railroad, telegraph, or transportation company, and thus rob suffering women and children, I am a good fellow, because I steal with a company, and none of the sufferers can say which one of us did it. But every one of the crowd feels that he is a thief; and however we may whistle together to keep our courage up, "conscience makes cowards of us all." But who cries, Stop thief? or denounces the system by which we plunder the trusting or helpless poor? Who but a few fanatics cry out against the legislature granting a patent for stealing as a corporation, when it would send us to the penitentiary for stealing as individuals? Nobody. If the stealing is rich, deacon and clericus will run with the crowd to invest in the stock. And why not?

If it be not immoral for a corporation to speculate, to rob, to disregard the law of neighborly love, while it would be for an individual, why then let us all get into corporations and steal in hordes. But it is only the fool who flatters himself that he can rightly do as a member of an association what it would be immoral to do as an individual; and even the fool cannot succeed in the self-delusion. That law of right, put in his mind and written on his heart, like the flaming sword, smites to the inmost, and he walks a convicted criminal in his own eyes, however he may be petted by the wicked world.

Amidst the din of reform, society is driving madly to perdition from ignorance or contempt of the principles of the true social sciences. As a consequence we see everywhere social subversion, or an inversion of the true individual and collective life. It seems to be tacitly understood, that the rules of honor, equity, and good faith, which every gentleman is expected to regard, will be treated as pestilent spiders' webs by corporations, legislative bodies, and the officers of these. We are without a system of ethics which touches the collective morality. Nay, such a system is not even announced.

Does the college, church, or judiciary, either or any of them, undertake to decide upon, or even question, the present relations of capital and labor? the morality of our banking, our corporate, industrial, and transportation systems? Who has ever heard of such fitting work having been undertaken by latter-day Solons and Moseses? Are we told that the cost of truth or of the science of applied equity is too great? We reply, What science demands society must pay, and will pay, gratefully, so soon as men have a clear grasp, with mind and heart, of the principles and methods of the true social science, the same as we pay homage to gravitation and the principles of mathematics. Equity is the right line by which we safely build in social architecture, as we build by the line of gravity in material construction. The transition from the existing subversion to the true order may involve pain, but that necessarily attends all transitions. Birth and death are both attended with pain, but both are undoubtedly beneficent provisions of the universal economy.

The issue, then, being inevitable, should be met with courage and assured faith. All the suffering incident to a transition from the false to the true social order need not equal that now endured by the people in a single month. It would be a transition from sickness to health. Yet whatever the cost or pain, it must be accepted. But who is not ready to be just and noble when it costs nothing? And who but knows there is neither justice nor nobility in such conduct? Justice does to others what it asks of them. Love gives without barter or exchange. Justice looks at truth, the body of principles, as the eagle at the sun, with unbleached eyes, and never awakes from the line of equity. It looks not to results, for it knows that good only comes of truth. It knows that the truth never unsettles or changes the real. She only explodes shams, "uncovers the hiding-place of lies," and blows away the dust of images set up in her holy name.

Since our common mother ate that "pestilent apple," we seem to have groped in "disastrous twilight." If we gained knowledge by her heroic act, we seem to have lost wisdom by it. Affection is divorced from understanding, so that the former is without its proper continent, and the latter without its true influx. Our science is pretending, cold, proud, scoffing, and fruitless of methods, and our religion is only a dead faith in traditions. The love, if any, which it inspires in its votaries turns in practical life to selfish greed and indifference to good.

But let us not despair. There is a science of society, of social harmony. We have its axioms, its eternal principles. These are as exact and as exacting as those of mathematics. If we work in strict conformity with them we shall surely regain paradise. Our Eden will bloom again with more than pristine beauty. Not the Eden of our infancy, but of our manhood.

The compass which is to guide us in our search must be the pure and normal attractions of the soul, which are the permanent revelations to man of his individual and collective destiny,—our chart the principles of divine order preëstablished in the spiritual and material universe.

No longer does the "thus saith the Lord" of Moses stir us to an outward obedience, nor the "I say unto you" of Jesus charm us unto righteousness. We are no longer babies, to be terrified by threats; nor youths bound by the spell of a merely personal love, however revered the being who inspires it. We are men and women. We stand face to face with PRINCIPLES. We know no other authority. Our obedience springs from knowledge. We now revere Moses and Jesus all the more truly because we see that they spoke as the discoverers of the first great principles of the divine social code, in announcing the supreme love of the Good and the equal love of the neighbor to be alike the least and greatest duty of man.

Through a knowledge of principles, we seek and accept the divine government only. Henceforth no regulation, prescription, usage, or statute of human contrivance has our homage or regard, except as it is in unison with divine principles. We are no longer democrats, republicans, or monarchists. For us there is no law or binding order besides that love and wisdom manifested in the order of creation. We stand ever in the divine presence. Interest and duty are identical; the love of self becomes one with the love of the neighbor. Expediency has henceforth no place in the maxims and conduct of life. Truth is the pearl of great price. We gladly sell our possessions, and our inheritance if need be, that we may buy it.

PRINCIPLES are the Rock of Ages. Whatever is founded on them cannot fall; and whatever awakes from them, though a hair's breadth, is as certain to perish as if the departure were measured by infinite degrees. But there are no degrees in truth and falsehood, and society will, of necessity, continue to be a chaos of injustice, misrule, and crime, so long as the axioms of a divine social science are disregarded, and so long as we neglect to construct the social system, after the logical form, which that science demands.

JOHN ORVIS.

REV. W. E. COPELAND.

WHAT HE IS DOING FOR THE LIBERAL LEAGUE MOVEMENT.

EDITOR INDEX:—

For a number of years past I have been aware that there were few persons in the West doing more for the liberal cause than Rev. W. E. Copeland, of Lincoln, Nebraska. Since the commencement of the movement he has been earnestly laboring for its advancement. To give the readers of THE INDEX some idea of what he has been doing, I take the liberty of sending you for publication the following letter just received from him:—

LINCOLN, Neb., June 17, 1878.

MR. H. L. GREEN:

Dear Sir,—Fearing that you may regard me as an indifferent member of the Executive Committee of the N. L. L., I take the occasion to make a report of my work during the past year. I have organized a Liberal League at Palmyra, with S. S. Seeley for President and G. E. Bennett for Secretary; also a Liberal League at Hastings, with Dr. Lyman for President and Hon. Mr. Beatty for Secretary. The last League will begin the erection of a hall for the use of the League, which they hope to complete in September; and I have good reason to expect the organization of a League at Plattsmouth, which I will report so soon as it is effected. The two Leagues above mentioned have failed to apply for charters, simply because the members are too poor to spare the necessary ten dollars. I have spoken for the Liberal League in Lincoln once a month during the past year, always to good audiences, once a month at Hastings, twice a month to a Liberal Society organized at Fremont before there were any Liberal Leagues, and five or six times during the year (each) to the liberals of Friendville, Fairburg, and Beatrice. I have also given occasional lectures at other points in Nebraska,—Palmyra, Seward, Fairmont, and Omaha. I have been at work, as you see, though the results are not apparent in organized Leagues. Can you give me the names of liberals in Laramie City, Wyoming Territory, or Salt Lake, Utah? I desire to spend one or two months this summer in the West, and would like to lecture at those points and in Colorado. I have already written to Denver. I find many liberals throughout Nebraska, but there is a good deal of difficulty in organizing them. Please let me hear from you soon.

Yours truly,

W. E. COPELAND.

Allow me to ask the readers of THE INDEX who are able to do so, to give Mr. Copeland the information he calls for. I learn that the Palmyra League above mentioned will soon apply for a charter. And allow me to add that we hope to see Mr. Copeland at the Freethinkers' Convention at Watkins, in August.

H. L. G.

FOUR HUNDRED LITTLE VICTIMS.—The Rev. Mr. Hammond, the revivalist, recently conducted a series of meetings in Yonkers; and while he was there Mr. Eliza M. Carpenter, Superintendent of the New York Juvenile Asylum, invited him to visit that institution. Mr. Hammond had once started a revival in the Western House of Refuge, in Rochester, when Mr. Carpenter was in charge of that institution. That was fifteen years ago; but the success of the movement was so great—over one hundred of the boys being converted—that Mr. Carpenter had never forgotten it. His object in inviting the revivalist to visit the Juvenile Asylum was to try whether a similar result could not be accomplished there. Mr. Hammond went to the asylum, and attended several of the children's regular semi-weekly prayer-meetings. These gatherings had for several years been unattended by much religious fervor, and had not apparently affected the feelings of the boys and girls to any appreciable extent. But Mr. Hammond is a fiery revivalist, both as to his style of oratory and his teachings about future punishment. He told the six hundred and fifty children of the asylum that they would certainly be doomed to literal fire for all eternity if they did not become Christians. He is remarkable for his power with children, to whom he devotes especial attention in his revivals; and he impresses upon them in strong language the horrors of everlasting torment. Perhaps, believing that the asylum children were more wicked than the average, he dwelt with uncommon particularity on his doctrine of hell. The result was quick and general. Juvenile penitents crowded forward by the hundreds, when he invited them to do so; and within a week over four hundred converts had been made, ranging in age from nine to fifteen years. Mr. Carpenter says that a great majority of the children under his charge are now earnest, hopeful Christians. Prayer-meetings are held three times a week, besides the usual Sunday services, and in all the religious exercises the little ones are active.

—N. Y. Sun, Jan. 20, 1878.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " 8 " "
" 26 " 51 " 6 " "
" 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEINBERG.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
O. B. E. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.50 for one year, including postage, or 25 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Bowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loe, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesab Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Leaker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1866 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impenitence of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays, by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
Mrs. ELIZABETH GADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 25 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. G. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	1.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	1.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses, by Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Youmans, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 1 vol.....	1.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	3.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GORTON'S Faint. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 3 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GRÖTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Thoughts about Art. Various Friends. The Unknown River.....	1.50
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Outpost Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Back Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticism on Darwin and Administrative Whilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-les.....	1.75
Studies for Series.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Rounds.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGESSOL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Occurrences; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KEER (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.50
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.50
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.35
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversation of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	1.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	3.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.50
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Language. Vol. II. Essays on the Science of Language. Vol. III. Essays on Language and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Language, Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.50
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	2.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historical Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: The Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 16 Plates and 34 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnets, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expanses of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLELLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By F. R. M. Chubb, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.00
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	5.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyngany.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 1 vol.....	1.50
The Old-Fashioned Tale. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	1.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Deeds Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamorists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Lakes of Shosh.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	1.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragnents of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.50
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TITLEY (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Scatterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Stories.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 3 vols.....	5.50
WHEPPLER'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Scenes and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Puzzles. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	1.50
Child Life.....	1.50

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUS & Co. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE. Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE. For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doerflinger & Co., 55 Onondaga Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEERMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Night Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Night Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Tollenache, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir David Wedderburn, G. H. Lewes,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $2.50, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform. The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager. General Passenger Agent. C. B. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,

PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—
Heliotype Copy

by James B. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10 1/2 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.50. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:
Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VORNEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 15 and 20, 1878.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77. Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

WASHINGTON ILLUSTRATED.

The subscriber is prepared to engage for the next lecture season (or for the summer, at the places of popular resort), for the delivery of his lectures on "Washington and its Institutions." These lectures are brilliantly illustrated by a very large number of Stereoscopic Views of public buildings, works of art, etc. They have won enthusiastic encomiums from their audiences and the press. For circulars, giving full information, address Rev. FREDERIC HINCKLEY, Dorchester Station, Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PAVILION FOR NON-RESISTANCE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 4, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 445.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 24, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and enforced through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

4. The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS W. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

PRESIDENT ANDERSON, of Rochester, said to his students: "Friends, there are only three classes of men: first, the honest man; second, the beggar; third, the thief." We have heard worse sermons than that.

REV. JOHN WEISS proposes to give a series of six lectures at No. 2 Park Street, beginning October 31, on successive Thursdays, at 12 o'clock. The subjects are of a literary character, well adapted to give full scope to Mr. Weiss's brilliant powers. Tickets for reserved seats may be had of Messrs. Doll & Richards.

It is rough but wholesome truth (clothed in theological rhetoric, of course) that Rev. James Freeman Clarke tells, when he says that John Morrissey "may rise up in the day of judgment, with the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, to condemn the professors of religion who, while teaching Bible classes on Sunday, are robbing the corporations of which they are treasurers, during all the rest of the week."

THE Congregationalist is quoted as the publication responsible for this atrocious absurdity: "Is it not better to be a pure man than an impure man? Certainly; but then that does not touch the great question of salvation. A man may be pure, and honest in all his transactions, and yet be a criminal in the sight of God." To which the obvious reply is that, if the man is pure and God sees him to be impure, his "All-seeing Eye" cannot see at all.

THE PHI BETA KAPPA SOCIETY, founded nearly a century ago, anticipated the Free Religious Association in its declaration of the right of absolute freedom of thought and discussion. The Greek letters of its name are the initials of a motto signifying "Philosophy the Pilot of Life"; and this motto sufficiently indicates the pure rationalism of its principles. Rev. Edward Everett Hale, its President, writing in the Boston Advertiser of June 27, said: "There is the declaration, somewhat freely made [by the founders of the society], that in the meetings of the society all subjects may be confidently discussed without the limitations or repressions by which discussion is elsewhere bound. And this seems to be put in such a way as to imply that religion, though not named, was one of those subjects." The Phi Beta Kappa Society thus instituted a free fellowship in religion as well as in philosophy and literature, and owed its origin to the same rationalistic spirit prevalent at the time which created the secular Constitution of the United States.

THE BOSTON Advertiser says: "Not a little sensation has been created in France by the result of the two recent elections to the Academy. The places to be filled were those of MM. Thiers and Claude Bernard. For the first of these seats the candidates were M. Taine and M. Henri Martin; and for the second, M. Ernest Renan and M. Wallon, 'the father of the constitution.' MM. Martin and Renan were successful. The chief significance of the result lies in the position of the two new academicians on religious questions. Everybody knows what are the opinions of M. Renan; and the views of M. Martin, who is as radical in religion as he is in politics, are hardly less matter of universal knowledge. In the time of Guizot such elections would have been well-nigh impossible. But the times have changed. It is evidence of the point to which the 'liberal' school of thought, so-called, has gained control among the immortals, that the candidates of the Orthodox members were not more pronounced advocates of the stricter sect than they are. M. Wallon's appointment to the chair of public worship in one of the earlier republican ministries gave great offence to the Catholics, and M. Taine is by no means a representative of conservatism. In fact, it is not very long since the clerical journals stigmatized him as an atheist. The choice of those who were elected has caused much discussion, and not a few hard things have been said of the Academy."

REV. S. R. CALTHROP told this good story at Boston at the Anniversary: "My friend, Mr. Conway, happened to interview a little African prince, twelve years old, whom Stanley had just brought over from Africa. He had called on Mr. Stanley to do him honor, as all Americans wanted to do, and found him out; but, fortunately for theology, the boy was in. He was very much interested in this little boy, who was in charge of the housekeeper, a good-hearted woman, who had made a vocabulary that was not good English, nor yet good African, by means of which she could make herself understood by the boy. So Mr. Conway asked that the prince might come down stairs. The request was granted, and the boy came down. But as he was on the stairs, he whistled,—and it was Sunday afternoon! 'Don't you whistle!' said the housekeeper, 'don't you whistle! It is Sunday!' The African boy stopped suddenly; it was the awful English Sunday. Then Mr. Conway said to the woman, 'My dear madam, would you kindly ask for me his opinion of Sunday?' She did so, and the boy drawled out, 'Ugh! Sunday! Ugh! Sunday!' And then, with that sweetness of tone which my friend can so well command, he asked, 'Will you be kind enough to ask him what he thinks of Monday?' She reluctantly complied, and the boy shouted gleefully, 'Oh! Monday! Monday! Monday!' (Laughter.) Now, our children must never know what that boy had begun to know. Let Sunday be a beautiful day. Let us have the sense that it is better to be alive on that day than on any other day. On that day, somehow, the sun shines brighter, and God's peace comes nearer down upon a weary world."

NOT LONG AGO the Sunday School Times had this paragraph: "The old adage that 'extremes meet' nowhere finds more striking illustration than in religious ceremonies. Thus the Roman Catholics encourage, to a large extent, non-communicating attendance at their communion service, or mass. Their congregations are taught to be present at that service, whether they communicate or not, to 'assist' in the sacrifice by their private devotions, rather than themselves to partake of even the wafer,—for, with the decline of the communion idea among the Roman Catholics, the cup has long been denied to the laity. This non-scriptural idea of the Lord's Supper has just reappeared among the Massachusetts Unitarians, of all places in the world. Some of the more radical churches of that body have for some years found the necessity of celebrating the Lord's Supper an irksome task. One in New Bedford has abandoned the sacrament entirely; and dislike for it led Ralph Waldo Emerson, as long ago as 1832, to renounce the Unitarian ministry. A Boston church, however, has solved the difficulty. On Easter Sunday the pastor put bread and wine on the table, and, after breaking a piece of the former, and pouring out a little of the latter, invited the congregation to contemplate them, but not to partake; remarking: 'We would discern the real presence in these symbols, and nourish our souls on that. Through the veil of material things we would commune with things eternal.' This quite agrees with Roman practice and phraseology, and is the very thing condemned in the homely phrase of the Articles of the Church of England: 'The sacraments were not ordained of Christ to be gazed upon, or to be carried about, but that we should duly use them.' This Boston ceremony is analogous to one performed, some years ago, in another Unitarian Church of that city,—baptizing without water. After all, the scriptural use of ordinances is as good as any." And, "after all," disuse of them is the best use of all.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Ireington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. PROTHINGHAM,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT,.....Providence, R. I.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Boston, Mass.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Chicago, Ill.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Sparta, Wis.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Cincinnati.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. P. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMACK,.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS,.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. AMY POST,.....Tenaft, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON,.....Lottsburgh, Va.
 MRS. SALLIE HOLLEY,.....

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GIBBS, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madiun.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galena.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kansas.....J. B. CLARK, Wagonville.
 Kentucky.....EMERSON KENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Louisiana.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maine.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Limestone.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARRAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the
 National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeld.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeld, Julius Pfisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrook, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MICHIGAN, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
 CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudse, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. Hinson, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.

Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
 BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
 Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Kerns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Phillip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
 TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnadall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
 HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
 CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
 NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie.
 Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermandee, T. P. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. B. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. F. Sheppard, and others.
 ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Bliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
 ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
 TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boel, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
 CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. H. Ambler.
 MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
 JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
 Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
 Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
 FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
 WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
 Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
 MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
 MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
 Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
 ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
 Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrells, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
 CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
 WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
 CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
 ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Senft, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Senft, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Elyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
 PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
 XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
 Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauenstein, M.D., E. Leboeuf, and others.
 OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
 Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
 CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Atchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Atchison, H. Rely, and others.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.
 NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parze.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
 HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."
 CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.
 MOBERLY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.
 MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinkley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary, on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.
 [N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Honors to the Dead Poet.

FUNERAL OF WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

IMPRESSIVE SERVICES AT ALL SOULS CHURCH—LARGE ASSEMBLAGE OF PROMINENT PEOPLE—THE ADDRESS OF THE REV. DR. BELLOWES—THE EXERCISES AT THE CEMETERY IN ROSLYN, L. I.

The services at the funeral of William Cullen Bryant were held yesterday morning in All Souls Church. The gathering was memorable for the many prominent residents of the city and the large number of venerable men which it included. The services were marked by extreme simplicity, and the floral offerings were few, but rich. The Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows, Mr. Bryant's pastor for the last fifteen years, delivered an address. The remains were taken to Roslyn for burial.

SERVICES AT THE CHURCH.

A large number of representative men of the city paid the last honors yesterday to William Cullen Bryant. An hour before the time named for the funeral, the doors of All Souls Church were surrounded by a multitude of people. Policemen were present, but as they admitted the crowd within the church gates, they could do little to prevent the great crush that followed when the doors were opened. At the house no services were held; the coffin was removed directly to the church, where it was placed in the aisle, directly in front of the communion-table.

Just before 10 o'clock the relatives and immediate friends of the family began to arrive, and were received at the door by Mr. Goddard. It was only by the greatest exertion that a lane was maintained through the expectant crowd. Among the first to arrive was ex-Governor Tilden, with Mrs. Pelton and several other ladies. When the doors were thrown open, a few minutes before 10 o'clock, there was a great rush to secure seats. In a remarkably short time the church was completely filled. Late comers found standing room in the lobbies, but no seats.

The interior of the church was severe in its simplicity; few of the usual trappings of woe were apparent. Upon the coffin, draped in black cloth, was the plain inscription, "William Cullen Bryant, Born November 3, 1794, Died June 12, 1878." Below this were several palm leaves bound together with a white ribbon. On the baptismal font was a large pillar of immortelles, white roses, and calla lilies, to which was attached the card, "From his employes, who loved him." Upon the communion-table were placed two large baskets of flowers.

The scene was very impressive when the Rev. Dr. Bellows—a venerable figure, clad in sombre, flowing robes—rose to read the opening service. Rarely have there been assembled in this city so many men famous for services in politics, in the professions, in literature, in the arts. The assemblage recalled, in some features, that which gathered recently to bid farewell to Bayard Taylor, just prior to his departure for Berlin, and at which Mr. Bryant presided with so happy a union of dignity, social tact, and charming urbanity as to be the subject of comment and admiration. Many of the same faces seen on that occasion were beheld at the church. But the audience yesterday had one striking peculiarity,—its air of age. Men whose snowy hair showed that they had passed the Psalmist's allotted span of life were seen on every hand. It was a tribute of the venerable to one who had honored length of days.

Near the front were seated the relatives and intimate friends of the family, among whom were J. H. Platt, one of the executors of Mr. Bryant's will, Captain Cullen Bryant, a nephew, John Howard and Arthur Bryant, the two brothers of the poet, Isaac Henderson, Jr., Mrs. Monnell, Bryant and Harold Godwin, sons of Parke Godwin, and their sisters, Misses Minna, Nora, and Fannie Godwin. In the anteroom were Miss Julia Bryant and Miss Fairchild. Seated with the relatives were also the old family servants, dressed in deep mourning, who followed the remains of their late master to the cemetery at Roslyn.

In the body of the church were seated delegations from the Century Club, the Union League Club, the Historical Society, the Associated Press, the New York Press Club, the Children's Aid Society, the Mazzini Monument Committee, the Italian Mutual Benevolent Society, the Circolo Italiano, the Italian Brotherhood Society, and several other associations.

Of the many prominent men present the following may be mentioned: Peter Cooper, Joseph H. Choate, John Jay, F. D. Tappan, John H. Yourlie, the Rev.

Dr. Ormlston, Thurlow Weed, Chief-Justice Daly, John Bigelow, Cyrus W. Field, David Dudley Field, the Rev. Dr. S. Irons Prime, ex-Governor Tilden, Colonel Pelton, the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, Bishop Potter, the Rev. Dr. H. C. Potter, the Rev. Dr. Richard S. Storrs, Jackson S. Schultz, Elliot C. Cowdin, Joseph Seligman, Charles W. Griswold, Josiah M. Fliske, Lucius Tuckerman, J. Langdon Ward, Daniel Lord, Jr., F. A. Stout, M. M. Beckwith, Thomas Hillhouse, Judge Speir, Watson R. Sperry, the Rev. Dr. William Adams, H. B. Claflin, Drs. Gray and Paine, Charles O'Connor, Richard H. Dana, Jr., R. H. Stoddard, Collector Arthur, William Rose Wallace, Henry Bergh, the Rev. Dr. R. R. Booth, Dr. Litus M. Coar, ex-Governor E. D. Morgan, Walt Whitman, John Burroughs, E. C. Stedman, Judge William E. Curtis, the Rev. Dr. Samuel Osgood, Charles A. Graham, Salem H. Wales, Daniel Huntington, S. R. Gifford, Eastman Johnson, Edward Cooper, Erastus Brooks, the Rev. Dr. Henry M. Field, Stephen P. Nash, Chariton T. Lewis, Ellwood E. Thorne, W. R. Gilder, John G. Chapman, of Rome; Professor Lovering, of Harvard College; and Speaker James W. Husted.

When the large audience was seated, the organist, Melvin Brown, gave, as a prelude, the andante from Beethoven's Seventh Symphony. Then followed the hymn, "Rest, Spirit, Rest," sung by a quartette consisting of Misses Barton and Bell, and Messrs. Jamieson and Clapp. The service for the dead was then read by Dr. Bellows, after which Handel's hymn, "Come Unto Him," was rendered by the choir.

ADDRESS OF DR. BELLOWES.

A funeral oration was then pronounced by the Rev. Dr. Bellows. The speaker dwelt briefly on the biographical details, but brought out in sharp relief the salient features of Mr. Bryant's character, his political genius, extreme simplicity, purity of life, strength of will, delicacy of insight, abounding vitality, unvarying cheerfulness, strong and abiding religious faith. The address lasted for more than an hour, and was listened to throughout with close attention. In the tenderer portions, the speaker's sympathetic voice and expressive countenance added pathos to the well-chosen words. Dr. Bellows said:—

The whole country is bending with us over the bier that holds the dust of Bryant! Private as the simple service is that consigns the ashes of our illustrious poet and journalist to the grave, there is public mourning in all hearts and homes, making these funeral rites solemn and universal by the sympathy that from every quarter flows toward them, and swells the current of grateful and reverent emotion. Much as the modest, unworldly spirit of the man we mourn shrunk from the parade of public rites, leaving to his heirs the duty of a rigid simplicity in his funeral, neither his wishes nor theirs could render his death and burial less than an event of general significance and national concern. It is not for his glory that we honor and commemorate him. Public fame, for more than half a century, has made it needless, or impossible, to add one laurel to his crown. So long ago he took the place he has since kept in public admiration, respect, and reverence, that no living tongue could now dialogue or add to the security and mild splendor of his reputation. For three generations he has been a fixed star in our firmament, and no eulogy could be so complete as that which by accumulation of meaning dwells in the simple mention of his name.

Few lives have been so fortunate and complete as his. Born in 1794, when this young nation was in its teens, he has been contemporary with nearly the whole first century of its life. If no country ever experienced in the same period such a miracle of growth, if none ever profited so much by discoveries and inventions—never before so wonderful as those made in the half-century which gave us steam navigation, the railroad, and the telegraph,—he saw the birth, he antedated the existence, of every one of the characteristic triumphs of modern civilization; and yet he died not until they became wholly familiar and nearly universal in their fruitful influence! Born and bred in New England, and on the summits of the Green Mountains, he inherited the severe and simple tastes and habits of that rugged region, and having sprung from a vigorous and intellectual parentage, and being in contact with a few persons with whom Nature and books took the place of social pleasures and the excitement of towns and cities, his native genius made him, from a tender age, the thoughtful and intimate companion of woods and streams, and constituted him Nature's own darling child. It was a friendship so unfeigned, so deep, so much in accordance with his temperament and mental constitution, that it grew into a determining passion, and shaped his whole life, while in the poetry to which it gave birth it laid the foundations and erected the structure of his poetic fame. What Wordsworth did for English poetry, in bringing back the taste for Nature, as the counterpart of humanity—a world to be interpreted not by the outward eyes, but by the soul,—Bryant did for America. One who knew them both as I did, could not fail to observe the strong resemblance in character and feeling, with the marked difference between them on which I will not dwell. Both were reserved, unsmiling, austere, or irresponsible men, in aspect; not at home in cities or in crowds, not easy of access, or dependent on companionship,—never fully themselves except when alone with Nature. They coveted solitude, for it gave them uninterrupted intercourse with that beautiful, companionable, tender, unintrusive world which is to ordinary souls dull, common, familiar, but to them was ever new, ever mysterious, ever delightful and instructive.

CHARACTERISTICS OF BRYANT'S WORK.

It was no accident that made Bryant a politician and an editor. Sympathy with individual men and women was not his strong point; but sympathy with our common humanity was in him a religious passion. He had a constitutional love of freedom, and an intense sentiment of justice, and they constituted together his political creed and policy. He believed in freedom; and this made him a friend of the oppressed, an enemy of slavery, a foe to special and class legislation, an advocate of free trade,—a natural democrat, though born and reared in a federal community, that looked with suspicion upon extensions of the suffrage and upon the growth of local and State rights. But his love of freedom was too genuine to allow him to condone the faults even of his own party, when freedom's friends were found on the other side. He could bear, he did bear, the odium of his unpopular conviction, when what was called the best society in New York was of another opinion and belonged to another party; and he could bear with equal fortitude the ignominy of lacking party fidelity, when his patriotic spirit felt that his old political friends were less faithful than they should be to freedom and union. The editorial profession enabled his shy and somewhat unsocial nature to work at arm's length for the good of humanity and the country; and I can conceive of no other calling in life that would have economized his temperament and faculties so fully in the public service. He rebuked the headlong spirit of party, sensational extravagances of expression, even the use of new-fangled phrases and un-English words. He could see and acknowledged the merits of those from whom he widely differed, while unbecoming personalities found no harbor in his columns. His prose was in its way as good as his poetry, and has aided greatly to correct the taste for swollen, gaudy, and pretentious writing in the public press. He was not alone in this respect, for none can fail to recall the services in this direction of Charles King and Horace Greeley, not to name less conspicuous instances.

Happy the man that knows his own powers—their limits and their aptitudes,—and who confines himself rigidly within the banks of his own peculiar inspiration. Bryant was too genuine, too real a lover of Nature, too legitimate a child of the muse, ever to strain his own gift. He never made verses, but allowed his verse to flow, inspired by keen observation and hearty enjoyment of Nature, watching only that it flowed smoothly and without turbulence or turpidity, which his consummate art enabled him perfectly to accomplish. He had considered all the masters, and knew their quality and characteristics. But marked as his own style is, it is marked only with its native hues. There is no trick in his adroitness, no artifice in his art; nothing that tires, except it be the uniformity of its excellence. Considering how long his genius has been known and acknowledged, and how thoroughly he represents the old school of Dryden in his purity and fastidiousness of language, it is, perhaps, not to be wondered at that his popularity as a citizen and a man has even somewhat eclipsed his immediate popularity as a poet. I think him fortunate in not having the popularity of novelty, of fashion, of sing-song verse, of morbid sentiment, of mere ingenious thinking, or some temporary adaptation to passing moods of popular feeling, whether in universities or in social circles. He curiously escaped, if indeed his truthful genuineness of nature did not give him an original defence against it, from the introverted, self-considering, and individualistic temper which has characterized much of the poetry, of the highest academic culture, in our time. Either he was born too early, or he emigrated from New England too early, to fall under the influence of this morbid subjectiveness, or his active and practical pursuits kept him in the current of real life, and near to the universal feeling of man. At any rate—free, rational, as his genius ever was,—there is not a suspicion of the sceptical or denying element in his works. He is not sick, nor morbid, nor melancholy, nor discouraged.

Sentiment enough he has, but no sentimentality; awe of the Infinite, but no agnosticism; a recognition of all human sorrows and sins, but no querulousness, much less any despair. He loved and honored human nature; he feared and revered his Maker; he accepted Christianity in its historic character; he believed in American institutions; he believed in the Church and its permanency, in its ordinances and its ministry; and he was no backward-looking praiser of the times that had been, and a mere accuser and defamer of the times that are. This made his poetry, as it made his prose and his whole influence, wholesome, hopeful, nutritious; young, without being inexperienced, ripe, without tending to decay. The very absence of those false colors which give immediate attractiveness to the clothing of some contemporary poetry gives his undyed and natural robes a fadeless charm, which future generations will not forget to honor. Every one must notice that great immediate popularity is not a good augury for enduring fame; and, further, that poetry, like all the products of the fine arts, must have not only positive quality, power, and harmony, but must add to these freedom from defects. It is strange what an embalming power lies in purity of style, to preserve thoughts that would perish, even though greater and more original, if wrapped in a less perfect vesture. What element of decay is there in Bryant's verse? How universal his themes; how intelligible and level to the common heart; how little ingenious, vague, or technical; how free from what is provincial, temporary, capricious; how unflawed with doubtful figures or strained comparisons or new and strange words; how unmarred by a forced order or weary mannerisms! He is a rigid Puritan, alike in his morals and his vocabulary; there is scarcely a false foot, a doubtful rhyme, a luckless epithet, a dubious sentiment, anywhere to be found in his works. And perhaps Nature withheld from him what is called an ear for music only to emphasize his ear for rhythm, and save him from the danger of a clogging sweetness and a fatiguing sing-song.

MR. BRYANT'S CHARACTER.

It is the glory of this man that his character outshone even his great talent and his large fame. Distinguished equally for his native gifts and his consummate culture, his poetic inspiration and his exquisite art, he is honored and loved to-day even more for his stainless purity of life, his unswerving rectitude of will, his devotion to the higher interests of humanity, his unfeigned patriotism, and his broad humanity. It is remarkable that, with none of the arts of popularity, a man so little dependent on others' appreciation, so self-subsistent and so retiring, who never sought or accepted office, who had little taste for coöperation and no bustling zeal in ordinary philanthropy, should have drawn to himself the confidence, the honor and reverence, of a great metropolis, and become, perhaps it is not too much to say, our first citizen. It was in spite of a constitutional reserve, a natural distaste for crowds and public occasions, and a somewhat chilled bearing toward his kind, that he achieved by the force of his great merit and solid worth this triumph over the heart of his generation. The purity of the snow that enveloped him was more observed than its coldness; and his fellow-citizens believed that a fire of zeal for truth, justice, and human rights burned steadily at the heart of this lofty personality, though it never flamed or smoked. And they were right! Beyond all thirst for fame or poetic honor lay in Bryant the ambition of virtue. Reputation he did not despise, but virtue he revered and sought with all his heart. He had an intense self-reverence, that made his own good opinion of his own motives and actions absolutely essential. And though little tempted by covetousness, envy, worldliness, or love of power, he had his own conscious difficulties to contend with, a temper not without turbulence, a susceptibility to injuries, a contempt for the moral weaknesses of others. But he labored incessantly at self-knowledge and self-control, and attained equanimity and gentleness to a marked degree.

Let none suppose that the persistent force of will, his incessant industry, his perfect consistency and coherency of life and character, were not backed by strong passions. With a less consecrated purpose, a less reverent love of truth and goodness, he might easily have become acrid, vindictive, or selfishly ambitious. But he kept his body under, and a far more difficult task for him, his spirit in subjection. God had given him a wonderful balance of faculties in a marvellously harmonious frame. His spirit wore a light and lithe vesture of clay that never burdened him. His senses were perfect at fourscore. His eyes needed no glasses; his hearing was exquisitely fine. His alertness was the wonder of his contemporaries. He outwalked men of middle age. His tastes were so simple as to be almost ascetic. Milk and cereals and fruits were his chosen diet. He had no vices, and no approach to them, and he avoided any and everything that could ever threaten him with the tyranny of the senses or of habit. Regular in all his habits, he retained his youth almost to the last. The power of work never abated, and the herculean translation of Homer, which was the amusement of the last lustre of his long and busy life, showed not only no senility or decline in artistic skill, but no decrease of intellectual or physical endurance.

Perhaps the last ten years of his life have made him nearer and dearer to his fellow-citizens than any previous decade; for he had become at last not only resigned to public honors, but had even acquired a late and tardy taste for social and public gatherings. Who so often called to preside in your public meetings or to speak at your literary or social festivals? Who has pronounced as many hearty welcomes to honored strangers, unveiled as many statues, graced as many occasions of public sympathy? Who so ready to appear at the call of your public charities, or more affectionately welcomed and honored on your platforms? All this, coming late in life, was a grateful, I might almost say a fond, surprise. He had wrapped himself in his cloak to contend with the winter wind of his earlier fortunes, and the harder it blew (and it was very rough in his middle life) the closer he drew it about him. But the sun of prosperity and honor and confidence that warmed and brightened the two closing decades of his life fairly melted away his proud reserve toward the public, and he lay himself open to the warm and fragrant breeze of universal favor. He was careful, however, to say that he did not hold himself at the public's high estimate. In a long conversation I had with him at Roslyn, two years ago, he showed such a surprising self-knowledge and such a just appreciation of popular suffrages, that it was impossible to doubt his genuine humility, or jealous determination not to be deceived by any contagious sentiment of personal reverence or honor springing up in a generation that was largely ignorant of his writings. Yet he fully and greatly enjoyed these tributes,—and more and more, the longer he lived.

Of Mr. Bryant's life-long interest in the fine arts; his large acquaintance with our older artists and close friendship with some of them; of his place in the Century Club, of which he was perhaps the chief founder and of which he died the honored president, I could speak with full knowledge; but artists and centurions both are sure to speak better for themselves in due time, as the city and the nation surely will.

HIS RELIGIOUS BELIEF.

I must reserve a few moments still left me to bear the testimony which no one has a better right to offer, to Mr. Bryant's strictly religious character. A devoted lover of religious liberty, he was an equal lover of religion itself,—not in any precise, dogmatic form, but in its righteousness, reverence, and charity.

What his theology was you may safely infer from his regular and long attendance in this place of Christian worship. Still he was not a dogmatist, but preferred practical piety and working virtue to all model of faith. What was obvious in him for twenty years past was an increasing respect and devotion to religious institutions, and a more decided Christian quality in his faith. I think he had never been a communicant in any church until he joined ours, fifteen years ago. From that time, nobody so regular in his attendance on public worship, in wet and dry, cold and heat, morning and evening, until the very last month of his life. The increasing sweetness and beneficence of his character, meanwhile, must have struck his familiar friends. His last years were his devoutest and most humane years. He became beneficent as he grew able to be so, and his hand was open to all just need, and to many unreasonable claimants.

I shall have spoken in vain, if I have not left upon your hearts the image of an upright, sincere, humane and simple, yet venerable manhood,—a life full of outward honors and inward worth. When I consider that I have been speaking of one whose fame fills the world, I feel how vain is public report compared with the honor of God and the gratitude and love of humanity! It is the private character of this unaffected Christian man that it most concerns us to consider and to imitate. He was great as the world counts greatness,—he was greater as God counts it.

He is gone! and the city and the country is immeasurably poorer, that his venerable and exalted presence no more adorns and crowns our assemblies. But heaven is richer! The Church of Christ adds one unaffected, unsanctimonious saint to its calendar. The patriarch of American literature is dead. The faithful Christian lives no more:—

"Thou'rt gone; the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form; yet on my very heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given,
And shall not soon depart."

When the address was ended, Dr. Bellows gave out the hymn—one of Mr. Bryant's own composition—"Blessed are they that mourn." Pastor and congregation then united in reciting the Lord's Prayer, after which the benediction was pronounced. Beethoven's funeral march was played as the congregation went out. A large number of those present passed around by the coffin, in expectation of seeing the face of Mr. Bryant; but the coffin remained closed, and great disappointment was expressed by many.

The relatives and the intimate friends who bore cards of invitation proceeded at once in carriages to Long Island City, where a special train was in waiting to carry the funeral party to Roslyn. Shortly before 1 o'clock, the coffin was borne down the main aisle of the church and was taken away in the hearse. It was attended to the ferry by only one carriage.

THE BURIAL AT ROSLYN.

The special train left Hunter's Point by the Long Island Railroad at half-past 1 o'clock. The funeral party was small, and hardly filled the two passenger cars provided. There were, of the family of Mr. Bryant, Miss Julia Bryant, Arthur Bryant, John Bryant, Bryant Godwin, Harold Godwin, Miss Minna Godwin, Miss Nera Godwin, Miss Fannie Godwin, Captain Cullen Bryant, and Miss Annie S. Fairchild. Among the accompanying friends were Chief-Justice Daly, ex-Governor Tilden, Cyrus W. Field, Judge Howland, the Rev. Dr. Osgood, Charles Butler, Charles F. McLean, J. H. Platt, James A. Graham, ex-Secretary of State John Bigelow, S. L. M. Barlow, Isaac Henderson, Isaac Henderson, Jr., F. K. Goddard and Henry Ditmar. There was also a number of ladies.

The Roslyn Cemetery lies east of the village about a mile, and half a mile south of the Bryant country house. It is on the western slope of a rambling hill, and is full of handsome trees and shrubs. The paths and drives show care that country graveyards do not often get. The Bryant lot lies near the railroad, and may be seen from the passing train. It is surrounded by a hedge of evergreen. Within the inclosure are some fine, but not large, beech, oak, and maple trees. There is much shrubbery, too, for the lot is large. Near the western side rises the Bryant monument,—a tall, unpolished, gray granite obelisk. It bears only one inscription, as follows:—

Fanny Fairchild Bryant, the beloved wife
of William Cullen Bryant,
an humble disciple of Christ,
exemplary in every relation of life,
affectionate, sympathetic, sincere,
and ever occupied with the welfare of others.
Born March 27, 1797,
Died July 27, 1868.

Two children of Parke Godwin also lie buried within the inclosure. Mr. Bryant's grave had been prepared just south of, but close to, his wife's grave. The mound that marks Mrs. Bryant's resting-place had been covered with fresh flowers by some of the people in the village, a few of whom were in the cemetery at an early hour.

The train arrived at half-past 2 o'clock, not stopping at the villages, but at the crossing by the corner of the graveyard. Several carriages were in waiting, for the entrance to the grounds is not close at hand. The coffin, already inclosed in a pine box, was placed in the hearse. Most of the friends preferred to walk rather than to ride to the grave. First came the members of the family and then the other friends, without any formal order.

In this way the procession approached the grave. A slight breeze rustled the leaves overhead, softening the effect of the rays of the sun, which was still high. While the attendants were placing the coffin beside the open grave, the friends gathered near its head, under the shadow of the granite monument and a cluster of young trees. For a few moments there was a pause. Presently Dr. Bellows, standing at the head of the grave, spoke.

"My dear friends," he said, "let us draw lessons from Mr. Bryant's life; let us uncover our hearts, not our heads, to the sunshine. We have left the city behind us now, where we have done all that was possible to do to show our reverence and respect; but here let us pause and think that his dust might rejoice to find itself in the country, amid trees, birds, and flowers. While we breathe this pure air, may we not have a foretaste of the happiness he enjoys in the immortal fields? But I will not speak to you out of my own mouth. I have something better—Bryant's own words,—his own preparation for this hour, nay, this very moment. Seldom has it happened to any man to rehearse beforehand the thoughts and words appropriate to be uttered at his own grave. I shall read to you these extracts prepared by loving hands, of one who shared Bryant's cradle,—his brother."

The extracts were from the "Thanatopsis," beginning with the familiar verse:—

"So live that when thy summons comes to join,"

and from poems entitled "To a Water-fowl," "A Hymn to Death," "The Battlefield," "Waiting by the Gate," stanzas prefaced to "Thanatopsis" when first published, "The Journey of Life," "Poem addressed to Mrs. Bryant in her Last Illness," "The Life that is," "October, 1866," "November 3, 1861," and "The Two Travellers."

The conclusion of the address was a charge to the villagers present to "cherish the precious heritage of dust," and the assurance that in the future the best fame of Roslyn would be that it is Bryant's resting-place. The scriptural quotations of the Episcopal burial-service were read; a brief prayer was made, and the coffin was lowered into its place. Then a number of little children belonging to the Sunday-schools of the village stepped forward, and walking around the grave threw flowers into it until the box inclosing the coffin was nearly covered. Several branches of the century-plant, sent by the Century Club, were laid with the flowers.

The ceremony was finished. The friends stood a few moments looking into the grave, and then, in detached groups, wandered slowly toward the entrance of the cemetery. The grief of the relatives and friends was at all times quiet.

The little village of Roslyn, on the north shore of Long Island, twenty-seven miles from New York, is a pretty place, lying in a valley that opens upon a small inlet of the Sound. It is surrounded by hills well covered with inviting woods, whose masses of heavy foliage contrast pleasantly with open and cultivated fields. The churches, the houses, and the shops, that satisfy the spiritual and earthly needs of the one thousand three hundred inhabitants, are scattered along the little lakes in the bottom of the valley, upon the shores of which, in and out among the clusters of trees, wind many pleasant drives and by-paths. Quiet reigns everywhere. Even yesterday the stranger who lost his way had trouble to find any one to direct him aright.

The Bryant country house is situated about a mile out of the village. It is a two-story frame building, painted a light brown. Its outline is varied by many angles and curves, by bay-windows and verandas. The farm-house and stables are near by. The grounds are carefully kept. There is much shade and much greenward, and there are many arbors, a rustic bridge, and a charming rose-garden. Yesterday the place seemed entirely deserted until after the funeral, when a few friends, who had not taken the special train back to New York, walked and rested in the grounds.

The Presbyterian church that Mr. Bryant attended in Roslyn stands on a steep hill-side near the village. It is of wood, brown and quaint, with a modest tower. Steep steps lead up to the porch before the door, from which, through the surrounding trees, one may catch charming glimpses of the village and the lakes.

FURTHER TRIBUTES TO MR. BRYANT.

The National Academy of Design has ordered to be entered in its journal the following record respecting its "life-long friend and honorary member, William Cullen Bryant":—

"Though we mourn with the world at large the loss of the illustrious poet, the gifted journalist, the wise publicist, and the great and good citizen, and cannot add to the crown of honor already bestowed upon his memory, it is yet fitting that in behalf of the Academy and of our profession we express our great indebtedness for his deep and unwavering sympathy with our labors and fortunes, for his personal friendship, for his earnest cooperation in all our efforts for the advancement of art, and for the help his works have given us in the true reading of the great book of Nature."

"At the foundation of the Academy, half a century and more ago, Mr. Bryant warmly espoused its cause and fought its battles in the columns of the Evening Post, side by side with the late Professor S. F. B. Morse, the father and first president of our association. From 1828 to 1838 he was Professor of Mythology and Ancient History in the Academy schools. In 1833 he was elected an honorary member, and upon the institution of the grade of Fellows in 1868 he promptly enrolled himself in the new order. In 1848 he pronounced before us the eloquent oration on the death of his friend, our eminent academician, Thomas Cole. He delivered an address on the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone of the Academy Building in 1863, and again at the inauguration and public opening of the edifice in 1865. In 1876 he presided at the first public meeting of citizens for the formation of the great Centennial Loan Exhibition, by means of which we were released from a long-endured incubus of debt; and from first to last he has always been so quick to understand and so ready to promote all our efforts, and has ever maintained such intimate and kind personal relations with so many of us, that, although he never, even as an amateur, literally used pencil or pigment, we have always held him as a brother-artist in spirit and feeling, and in his death we regard Art, no less than Poetry, as grievously bereaved."

The New York Free-Trade Club has directed the following minute to be entered upon its journal:—

"In recording the death of William Cullen Bryant, an event which we lament in common with the whole community, we desire to express our admiration of his instructive, fearless, and untiring efforts in behalf of freedom of trade, and to suggest that all Free-Traders will best show their appreciation of his great economic services to the country by continuing without ceasing to work for the relief of our commerce,—a cause which he labored so zealously to promote to the very end of his long and useful life."

Alderman Morris yesterday sent a letter to Mayor Ely asking that he would be the custodian of a fund to be raised to erect a statue of Bryant in Central Park. The alderman proposed that the money should be raised by popular subscriptions in sums of five cents and upward. The mayor expressed himself as willing to do anything that he could to aid such a project.—N. Y. Tribune, June 15.

THE SOUL AND THE HEREAFTER.

A thoughtful correspondent having written a brief note of inquiry to Mr. Abbot of THE INDEX, asking him to explain an expression in the following editorial sentence in that paper, "To our mind the controversies on this question of a future life are profitless; we think there are grounds of hope, but none of knowledge," a very full and a profoundly thoughtful reply is returned, as such a question truly deserved. The correspondent wished to know "in what direction these grounds lie." We have rarely, if ever, read a confession of a spiritual nature that is more deeply pathetic and more universally applicable. The editor begins his reply by rejecting revelations of all kinds, and he follows it up with scotting everything like mere faith, "Orthodox or materialistic." He says that logic declares to him "of two things, one; either adhere to physics and deny your consciousness now, or adhere to your consciousness and admit that physics can raise no faintest presumption against its continuance forever." He insists on reason, and says he will not be put off with faith; nor does he plead "any fanciful intuition." He insists that his "grounds of hope" are not arguments, and therefore are not to be handled for the sake of refutation. If he had grounds of "knowledge" to offer, then argument would be in order and refutation possible. And he verily believes that "some day, man will be wise enough to make up a scientific conviction on this question that haunts us all."

Here is a soul that confronts alone the supreme question of life; the sphinx which no creeds or dogmatic utterings can answer satisfactorily. As Mr. Abbot practically says, faith amounts to but superstition. What the baffled human race craves is knowledge; not a mere ground of hope, but a solid and immovable conviction.

It was to answer this greatest of all questions, at the moment when the race should ask it in a very agony of desire, that heaven-born Spiritualism descended upon earth and opened mortal eyes and ears to the truth which has always existed just beyond the cloud-canopy of our ignorance and prejudices. As soon as we want to know we are told. Heaven does not let the light into our spiritual eyes any faster than we can bear it. We know just as fast as we desire to know. There must, in the divine arrangement, be the appetite before the feast. Spiritualism came to answer this very question, which no priest nor conclave could satisfactorily answer. They told men thus and so, and then expected to be superstitiously revered as divine authority. They demanded the regard which human beings refuse in secret to give to other human beings. They would be obeyed, and through their councils and combinations worshipped. But all that does not advance the soul's knowledge of immortality. That is the supreme fact of which it is eager to become conscious, and priests and churches had no more to say on that subject than anybody else. And if they had, the proof that their communications were genuine would primarily have been that they never assumed to employ their knowledge as the agent of authority. This universal yearning and search for fact seals the doom of that authority. Its day is over, for that of the soul's emancipation has come.

As for the materialists or physicists, Mr. Abbot asserts that their logic, as it begins with molecules, so it must end with molecules. "I see," says he, "that physics have no right to admit the bare existence of conscience. Physicists may twist and squirm all they please; they shatter their own philosophy into pieces finer than powdered glass the very moment they step outside the circle of matter and motion, or admit into it any conception not analyzable into these. Yet show me the physicist who has resolved conscience, love, thought, into matter or the motions of matter. Why should I be called upon to concede that these facts of consciousness are at bottom mere physical facts? Prove it, I say. The demand to make such a concession is a bare-faced appeal to faith, and I have done with faith forever." Still, he goes on to say in a meditative strain, "all this throws no light on the future of my own soul; with these wonders of thought, conscience, will, action, love, I am freed from the impertinent intrusion of acollum parading in the peacock-plumes of science,—that is all." And that, he thinks, is much. What is bound up in the question of a future life he admits to be solely "the intellectual, moral, affectional part of me." "It is much," he adds, "to see that physics have nothing, absolutely nothing, to say about it, either here or anywhere. It is a higher science that must deal with its destiny, and that higher science is not yet born."

That may be, we answer; but Spiritualism is supplying the facts as fast as it can on which the new science, the genuinely spiritual science, is to be based. The church scorns the facts, and physicists deride them; still they keep multiplying and accumulating. The heavens are opened, and all the priests and physicists in the world cannot close them again to the lengthening sight of mortals.

In answer to the question "Has hope anything but superstition to stand on?" Mr. Abbot answers promptly, Yes. "The soul," he says, "asks no leave to be; it is here, the supreme fact of all I know. Death creates no presumption of its extinction except on premises that would deny its existence here. I can only believe in my consciousness now in utter defiance of all physicalism; it is no harder to believe in my consciousness hereafter. Molecules, if I stick to them, conduct me to other molecules or their combinations, but never to my consciousness; I cannot believe in my consciousness at all without abandoning them, and leaving the vast chasm between the physical and the spiritual. Yet here I am, believing more certainly in my consciousness than in the molecules; it is idleness to doubt it."

Yet all this the writer regards rather as negation; it lacks the positiveness on which belief is to be established, if it is established at all. Now comes the real secret. He lets it out at last without a reserve or a qualification. He says he could bear to think of his own annihilation without a pang, but the supreme reason why he hopes for a future life is because of the love that rules in his being. "It is no consideration of my own destiny," he says, "that kindles a powerful hope. It is when I stand beside the grave of those I love, or in my thought shrink from the stroke that no prayers or tears can avert, that the longing for the deathlessness of beloved spirits overmasters me. It is when I behold the Himalayan heights of humanity, the Socrateses, the Spinozas, the Emersons, the rare peaks of spiritual greatness that seem evermore bathed in the pure sunlight of the ideal,—it is then that the hope blazes forth and refuses to be quenched. And the great ground of this hope is THE IMMEASURABLE VALUE OF THE HUMAN SOUL. Just in proportion as I realize that, and comprehend that a splendid soul is the very chef d'œuvre of Nature, the artistic masterpiece of creativeness, the glorious efflorescence of a lapsed eternity, do I also become permeated and saturated with the hope that Nature who creates shall be wise enough to preserve. On the one hand the beauty and sublimity of humanity, on the other hand its imperfection and incompleteness, even in its grandest growths,—these strike upon the slumbering hope like the spark upon the tinder, and kindle it to a flame. Fluctuate though it must with the varying moods of mind and the shifting scenes of life, this hope grows strong and vigorous under all influences that exalt my appreciation of the intrinsic worth and dignity of the human soul. This is the chief ground of hope, as hinting the deeper purposes of Nature, and suggesting to thought a possible reason of man's existence and a possible destiny that awaits him. It is not the only ground; the great question whether Nature is only mechanical or whether the mechanism is the utterance of Universal Mind connects itself with the question of human destiny. To me the cosmos is a vast system of hieroglyphics, with a meaning behind the symbolism of form and color and law, to which I can find no lexicon but mind. This makes me hope noble things at last."

Yet he is content without knowledge. He offers no demonstration, no argument, no ground of fixed conviction; only "a ground of hope to one, at least, of the myriad tossed and tired minds that have put out to sea on the vast ocean of modern thought,—worthless to others, yet not withheld when one wistful voyager calls to another across the waves, 'Brother, whither are we bound?'"

Were this all, life would to the awakened soul be a source of misery rather than of happiness. It is when a mind like that whose confession we have just retted cries out in an agony of suspense, at the graves of loved ones who have disappeared, that the kind heavens open and pour down their gentle floods of consolation through actual knowledge. When we hear the increasing multitude of these cries of human souls about us for help, for such help as a knowledge of the hereafter alone can give, we know that the time is ripe for revelation; that the same loving Father that has created us with these yearnings and these hungering desires has not left us without a provision for their full gratification. It was, in truth, the very expression of these desires, becoming at last a constant outflow of silent human prayers to heaven, that brought the answer; an answer that will surely enlarge and expand, become deeper and higher, according to the measure of the prayer which provoked it. Upon a slumbering and dead mass the modern light would never have beamed, for the sufficient reason that it would have been to no purpose. Heaven is always near and always ready to answer when we call. But the condition is that we call from the depths of our souls.

Here comes in Spiritualism to do its great and needed work among men. It comes to rest the human intellect that has vainly beaten itself so long against the walls of thought and speculation, and find its real repose even in its yearnings and aspirations. It supplies it not merely with "grounds of hope," but with grounds for knowledge. It converts faith into sight, and thus annihilates superstition. It brings the here and the hereafter visibly and audibly together, and proves to us that the being who left the earthly tabernacle still lives and dwells in a spiritual one, thus demonstrating beyond the remotest doubt the sublime fact of the immortality of the soul.—Banner of Light, June 1.

"A MODERN SYMPOSIUM"

Since our last issue we have received one of the most remarkable and suggestive books of this age of intellectual strife. The symposium of the ancients was a feast of the gods. The Modern Symposium is a feast of mental food provided by the most vigorous writers and thinkers of this restless and inquisitive age. Every shade of opinion, from Rationalism to Romanism, has its representative in the weighty questions under consideration; viz., "The soul and future life," and "The influence upon morality of a decline in religious belief." The method of discussion is a novel one: three lawyers, four divines, two scientists, four literary critics, and two politicians, orthodox and heterodox, discuss in writing on the method of oral debate. Frederick Harrison, a disciple of Comte, opens the first question with two papers, extending over forty-six pages, forwards the manuscript to the second (R. H. Hutton, editor of the Spectator), who comments on the opinions of Mr. Harrison, and forwards the two manuscripts to Prof. Huxley for his criticism, which method is continued until it reaches the tenth, when the ten manuscripts are returned to Mr. Harrison for a final review. By this arrangement we obtain the well digested thoughts and opinions of ten acute thinkers of every shade of belief on the question under consideration.

This deliberate sifting process offers the best means of arriving at certainty, if certainty can be obtained, as passionate declamation, gesture, modulation of voice, and all the tricks of rhetoric, are dispensed with, leaving full play to reason and reflection to grapple fairly with fact and argument.

The volume under notice is a valuable addition to any library. Its contents gave a rapid popularity and wide circulation to the Nineteenth Century, where the papers first appeared. In book-form it possesses three additional qualities: it is neat and cheap, compact and ably-edited, with a critical and explanatory preface.

The editor of the St. Croix Courier, May 9, after praising the book, and assuring his readers that he had read it with pleasure and profit in magazine form, and hoped to read and re-read it again, condemns the editor as partial, and asks for his dismissal. This appears to us to be ungrateful, as few would have discovered that the editor had made the acquaintance of any part of the book except the preface, had he not informed them of the fact. With all his professions of acquaintance with the contents in magazine form, renewed by a recent perusal of the book, he neither quotes, nor even substantially notices, any part but the preface. He charges the editor with thinking all the leading sects of Christianity (not forgetting to name them) are fools and liars, and that only he, and a few others, have truth and reason on their side. After a careful perusal of the preface we are of opinion that the charge is not supported by a single fact, not even by a fair inference. We consider the preface a very valuable addition to the original matter, as it furnishes information which the general reader is not only unacquainted with, but which is essential to his pleasure and profit. The lawyer may be acquainted with the legal position of the lawyers engaged in the controversy, the cleric with the divines, others with the scientists, but few will have formed the acquaintance of each and all. Hence the usefulness of a brief sketch of the disputants to readers in this country.

As the limits of our paper will only permit a very short notice of the contents of the first subject, we introduce Mr. Harrison, who opens by stating the fact that a profound change is coming over the religious belief of the world, both in the intensity of religious feeling, and in the certainty with which religious convictions are held. This state of things is also ably set forth by Frende, who says "that opinions once fixed as a rock are now fluid as water." Mr. Harrison deals mercilessly with the favorite arguments for a conscious personal existence after death, and contends very ably and earnestly that "man survives only in the activities of the race. He is willing to retain the words 'soul' and 'future life' for their associations, provided we make it clear that we mean by soul the combined faculties of the living organisms, and by future life the subjective effect of man's objective life on the actual lives of his fellow-men." This, Mr. Huxley shows, is an argument against a future life in the ordinary sense of the term; the future life, as advocated by Mr. Harrison, is but an immortality by deputy.

The earnest and eloquent plea of Mr. Harrison for the posthumous activities and their influence on the human race, with Prof. Huxley's trenchant attack on the unreality of positivist assumptions, which he maintains mean nothing firm or solid, give force to the discussion, which develops into an appearance of bitterness between these two ablest disputants; they seem to have had an old score to settle; but this Mr. Harrison disavows.

Mr. Huxley, like ourselves, regrets that he cannot find evidence of anything like certainty for the soul and a future life, and upbraids Mr. Harrison for "breaking away from beliefs, whether true or false, which embody great and fruitful conceptions, to fall back into the arms of a half-breed between science and theology, endowed like most half-breeds with the faults of both parents, and the virtues of neither." Mr. Harrison replies at the close, in a very masterly and minute manner, meeting every point at issue between himself and his critics.

Mr. Hutton denies that the Christian desire for eternal happiness is selfish, defining selfishness to be "the preference of our own happiness at the expense of some one else"; he contends that our own happiness must exclude the larger and wider growth to others, to be selfish. That the orthodox desire a state of personal happiness, which is intensified by their escape from torment (which others have to endure), cannot be denied; as to growth, there is neither growth for the saved nor reformation for the condemned taught by any orthodox body. Lord Blachford's metaphysical argument on the percipient and perceptible is more confusing than convincing. It bestows a soul upon a butterfly and withholds it from a babe. The argument is not even convincing to his lordship, for he says: "The natural world supplies nothing which can be called evidence of a future life." He believes in God and the Bible, and believes in a future state, "because he is told."

*Religion and Science, Ancient and Modern. Rose-Belford, Toronto.

One of the sweetest and smoothest pieces of writing in the book is the short but masterly essay of Rathbone Gregg on Addison's great argument for the longings after immortality. He says: "In our insatiable longings, misgivings will crop up, that the fabric will crumble into dust, and leave the spirit no solid sustenance to rest upon. We have aspirations to multiply; but who has any knowledge to enrich our store? Logical reasons to compel conviction I have none. I may say I share in the anticipations of believers; but I share them as aspirations, something almost approaching to a faith, but never able to settle into the constancy of a definite and enduring creed. . . . I cannot rest in comfort on arguments that to my spirit have no cogency, nor can I pretend to respect or be content with reasons which carry no penetrating convictions along with them." The whole paper is logically conclusive against the glorified immortality of orthodox future conscious existence.

The second discussion must be passed over for the present with a single remark, which appeals to the experience of all. Taking the two extremes of Christianity, Roman Catholicism and Unitarianism, those least religions are not the most debased, nor those most religious examples of moral purity. Let us not deceive ourselves in this matter. Not one of us would be a whit less upright, truthful, or useful by a change in our religious or non-religious beliefs.

This book as a radical missionary has no equal. It has more suggestive matter in it, on both sides of the subjects treated, than any book we can call to mind. The hopes and fears respecting a perpetuity of sensation are the main-stays of religion. Celestial resurrection to a future personal consciousness beyond this life is but a pleasant dream, and as far as we can judge has no support from a single fact in organic nature, nor a sound argument to sustain it.

A modern symposium is of all books best calculated to make us question the grounds of our belief in the foundation of current orthodox opinions. It is the best pioneer of freethought, as it contains the latest and best thoughts of the most acute thinkers, and is an excellent book to start the inquirer on his search for a safe and sure foundation for his convictions. That which cannot be defended is doomed; "that which may be doubted is doubtful." Here "rival opinions meet upon equal ground, and under honorable conditions of warfare," and the coward only fears the result.—Toronto Freethought Journal, May, 1878.

NOT THE surf-beaten rock, that lines the shore of ocean, stands half so firmly as the truth. It will live, and flourish, and will still be truth, when all its opposers have perished, and every rock is rolled from its bed.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

SONNET TO VOLTAIRE.

Besom of wrath, who fiercely swept away
The myths and dogmas of tradition hoar
And let, through Superstition's jungle, ray
Of reason flash its healthful sunlight o'er
Pretentious Europe, leveling Bastilles,
Breaking the Inquisition's torture-wheels,
Which crushed the limbs of poor Calas. Your wit
No quarter gave, for 'twas the fierce recoil
Of indignation, and like lightning smit
The tottering turrets of the old regime,
With wrecks of tyranny the Gallic soil
Strewing. They do you grievous wrong who deem
You wrote in wantonness. Your atmosphere
Lightning alone could purify and clear.

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE TWO WEEKS ENDING JUNE 22.

Arthur Farrar, $3.00; A. R. Hogshead, 75 cents; B. Harrington, $3.20; J. E. Mear, 80 cents; R. G. Ingersoll, $3.20; Anna E. Thompson, $3; F. S. Cabot, $2.50; Stephen Winkworth, $3.66; "F," $10; Mrs. Orren Gillett, $3.20; Ellen M. Wright, $3.20; John Curtis, $12.40; C. M. Cuyler, 25 cents; Wm. D. Pitt, $1.25; Chas. H. True, $3; A. Wolf, $5; Ch. A. Hardy, $2.24; S. K. Hazleton, $2; J. Mitchell, 50 cents; W. P. Wesselhoeft, $3.20; Raynal Dodge, $1; Wm. Hogan, $3.20; F. Zimmerman, $3.20; Rev. E. W. Munday, $3.20; T. Tibbette, $1; A. Hale, $1.50; Geo. F. French, $3.20; F. M. Vaughn, $3.70; Henry Schoeppey, 30 cents; S. N. Allen, $1.25; S. J. Logan, $3.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the event.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 4, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 MONROE STREET; J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS HILLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERNEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH ORT STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, O. D. B. MILES, W. D. LE BUREAU, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

MR. B. R. TUCKER requests us to state that he is to edit the Word during Mr. Heywood's imprisonment, and desires to increase its circulation and frequency of issue, if possible. His address is Cambridge, Massachusetts. We certainly believe that in his hands the Word will lose its most offensive features; but we cannot pretend a sympathy for its ideas which we do not feel.

THE Christian Union is a masterly trimmer in its adhesion to "justice," when it says: "If the public demanded the taxation of church property it would certainly be wise, we think it would even be just, for churches cheerfully to accede to the demand; nevertheless, it must be counted as a good sign that the New York Senate has refused, by a vote of twenty to eight, to pass a bill imposing such a tax, for it is an indication that the people recognize the service which the churches and the clergy, without respect to denomination, are rendering the community, and believe that this service is not too highly paid for by the exemptions which already exist."

It is not probable that the New York Tribune intended to refer at all to the danger of losing the principle of secular government under the gradual encroachments of clericalism in this country, yet what it says in these words is strikingly true in that connection: "Of all dangers in a republic, absolutely the greatest is the disposition to believe that there is no danger. Indifference to public affairs, blind confidence in the fidelity and good sense of the majority, chronic belief by those who selfishly neglect all civic duties that others will neglect none, unwillingness to bear taxes or other burdens in order to guard against perils not yet visibly present,—these are vices which self-government fosters in a remarkable degree. Yet it is true now as it ever has been that 'eternal vigilance is the price of liberty,' and if this nation has not been destroyed already, it has not been because of the tardy efforts of a sleepy conservatism."

An "esteemed contemporary" thus forcibly puts the case: "We suppose many people think that the newspaper men are peralstid duns; let a farmer place himself in a similar business position and see if he would not do the same. Suppose he raised one thousand bushels of wheat, and his neighbor should come and buy a bushel, and the price was a small matter of two dollars or less, and the neighbor says, 'I will hand you the amount in a few days.' As the farmer did not want to be small about the matter, he says all right, and the man leaves with the wheat. Another comes in the same way until the whole one thousand bushels of wheat are trusted out to one thousand different persons, and not one of the purchasers concerns himself about it, for it is a small amount that he owes the farmer, and of course that would not help him any. He does not realize that the farmer has frittered away all his crop of wheat, and that its value is due him in a thousand little dribbles, and that he is seriously embarrassed in his business because his debtors treat it as a small matter. But if all would pay him promptly, which they could do as well as not, it would be a very large amount and enable him to carry on his business without difficulty."

THE HEYWOOD CASE, AND THE PRINCIPLES IT INVOLVES.

On Tuesday, June 25, Ezra H. Heywood was sentenced by Judge Clifford, of the United States Supreme Court, in the United States District Court in this city, to a fine of one hundred dollars and an imprisonment of two years in Dedham Jail. He had been convicted last January in the same court, under Judge Clark, of having violated the law of 1873 for the suppression of obscene literature; but a motion for arrest of sentence was then made on the ground that this law is unconstitutional. At the present term, however, his counsel, in consequence of the recent unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court that the law is constitutional, withdrew this objection, and asked leave to amend the motion for arrest of judgment on account of an alleged flaw in the indictment. This request was denied, and sentence was passed as above.

On this case as a whole it is our duty to make some very unpartisan and dispassionate comments. It is not a pleasant duty. But the certainty that issues are here involved which must vitally affect the whole future of American Liberalism forbids us to withhold our own contribution of thought to a right settlement of them.

Is it or is it not consistent with the sacred constitutional rights of free thought and a free press to have and to enforce laws forbidding the circulation of obscene literature? That is the general question. Mr. Heywood and those who agree with him take the ground that all such laws, either State or National, violate these great rights and ought to be immediately and unconditionally repealed; and this is the only bold and consistent ground to take on his side, since State laws against obscenity violate these rights exactly as much as National laws do. But Mr. Heywood's position on this question is part and parcel of his more general position against all claims of society to exercise authority over the individual, no matter for what object. Hence he denies the State's right to tax any man, or to enforce any law whatever to which the individual objects; his principle is "personal sovereignty"—and this is nothing but absolute anarchy or universal lawlessness. Mr. D. M. Bennett has wavered and shuffled and shifted his ground so often that it is impossible to speak with any certainty concerning it. But his latest position seems to be that all National laws against obscene literature should be repealed, and all State laws enforced. Now laws against obscene literature, as such, either do or do not violate the rights of free thought and a free press; if they do, a State has no more business to pass such laws than the Nation, while if they do not, the Nation has just as much business to pass them as a State. So far as the rights of free thought and a free press are concerned, Mr. Bennett is thus very evidently and very grotesquely "on the fence," affirming them and denying them at the same time. Mr. Heywood's position is the only self-consistent, brave, or logically respectable one to take; but it can be defended only by denying the right of society to coerce or control any individual for any purpose, however criminal or dangerous may be his conduct.

Opposed to all the consistent or inconsistent protests against the right of society to suppress obscene literature, THE INDEX has taken a perfectly consistent stand from the beginning. It affirms the right both of the Nation and of all the separate States to prohibit really obscene literature, and denies that such prohibition, whether applied to the production, sale, circulation, or transportation of it, involves the slightest infringement of the real rights of free thought or a free press. We shall not pause now to recapitulate our arguments; so long as they are met only by evasion or misrepresentation, we have a right to conclude that no other or better answer to them can be found. We pass, therefore, to consider three classes of publications which need to be carefully distinguished in this connection.

1. The first class consists of such publications as permit of no controversy that their MAIN AND MANIFEST INTENTION is to inflame lewd passions, deprave the imagination, and entice to vicious practices, for the sake of profit to publishers or advertisers. This intention should be proved first of all from the character of the work as a whole,—from the general tenor of it, and not from isolated passages alone, though these could be used in showing what the general tenor is. Moreover, this bad intention should be proved to the satisfaction of the court, ever and above any alleged "immoral tendency" of the work, or else no penalty should be inflicted on the publisher or writer; and no work should ever be condemned by the courts, either for a real or an alleged "immoral tendency," unless the fact of bad intention had been proved first of all. All such works, however, as can be shown by their general tenor and manifest purport to have been written or published with the bad intention of inflaming lewd passions, etc., for the sake of money, should be suppressed by law. About the right of society to suppress such poisonous works as these, addressed to lewd passions alone and not intended to reach the reason or conscience at all, there can be no reasonable doubt; for the right of free thought is not involved in the suppression of literature which is not in any degree addressed to thought.

2. A second class of works are as clearly beyond the scope of just legislation on this subject as the foregoing class are clearly within it. Any publication addressed to the thinking faculties, to the reason and conscience of its readers, and designed primarily to advocate any religious, political, social, or other theory whatever, should most certainly not be liable to suppression under the law of 1873. No matter how abhorrent to the popular mind a particular set of opinions may be, it is one of the most precious rights to be allowed without harm or penalty to address arguments to the popular mind in behalf of these very opinions. As Lord Coleridge ruled concerning blasphemy, "No controversial arguments maintained in decent and proper language come under the head of a blasphemous libel," so it must be held by all enlightened minds concerning obscenity, that no controversial arguments maintained in decent and proper language come under the head of obscene literature. The right of publicly debating the "free love" theory in a decent and proper manner, either affirmatively or negatively, is a right that will be questioned only by the most bitterly bigoted and fanatical enemies of free thought; it is a right which even now, we believe, will not be attacked under cover of the law of 1873, for the liberty of every citizen to avow and defend publicly any opinions he may hold, provided he does so in a decent and proper way, has already become a mere matter of course in this country. About the right of every individual to utter, to print, and to circulate through the mails his honest and decently expressed opinions on all subjects whatsoever, there can certainly be no reasonable doubt.

3. But while these two points permit no reasonable doubt (1) that really obscene literature ought to be suppressed, and (2) that no controversial arguments in behalf of any theory or view or opinion whatsoever ought to be considered obscene, if expressed in a decent and proper manner, there is a third class of publications to be considered about which we cannot wonder that doubts have been and are entertained; for they contain controversial arguments not always expressed in a decent or proper manner. Men may think what they please about the immoral tendencies of the "free love" craze; they cannot think worse than we do of its namby-pamby sentimentalism, its intellectual inanity, its moral poisonousness; but if its advocates are content to plead their cause by appeals to reason or conscience, however mistaken these may be, no man has a right to complain of them for publicly advocating what they believe to be true. It is only when they stoop to indecent language or foul suggestions, that reasonable doubt arises as to the right of suppressing their incubations as obscene literature. This third class of publications, advocating or discussing social doctrines in the name of reason and conscience, yet doing so in a more or less indecent, improper, and obscene manner, stand on the border-land between publications which do and those which do not deserve to be suppressed on the ground of obscenity. It is very difficult to treat their authors with exact justice. The best way is to give liberty the benefit of the doubt, and to leave such writers free from all legal punishment. They are entitled to respect so far as they confine their advocacy to legitimate appeals to reason or conscience; they deserve indignant moral reprobation so far as they disgrace their own cause by dabbling in dirt. It is altogether safer, wiser, and on the whole more just, to inflict no legal penalties whatever, in such cases as these, but rather to let a healthy public opinion inflict its own moral penalties in its own way. In a word, let no literature be legally suppressed as obscene which is not exclusively devoted to obscenity, both in substance and form; and in all doubtful cases, in which a plausible pretence of arguing, pleading, or discussing can be made, let liberty have the benefit of the doubt in the courts.

Now to which of these three classes of publications does the condemned pamphlet of Mr. Heywood belong? We are very sorry to feel obliged to say that, in our own opinion, it must be ranked with the third class just described. It is not one of the worst of its class; it is evidently the outgrowth of very strong and sincere convictions respecting the right relations of the sexes; and its departures from decency are rather in its suggestions than in its expressions. Taken as a whole, it is an absurd and extravagant production, utterly unworthy of a thinker, a man of education, or a sensible reformer; its intellectual texture is of the flimsiest, and its moral influence, so far as it has any, can only be in the direction of the utter destruction of permanent family life. For such a general social theory as that there set forth, compounded as it is of the wildest and most unscientific notions, we have not a particle of intellectual or moral respect; but we have a great deal of respect for Mr. Heywood as a citizen and a man, and credit him with none but upright, pure, and disinterested motives in writing and publishing and circulating his worthless pamphlet. He might have written it so as to escape all criticism on the score of public decency; and since he cannot see that he has failed to do so, we attribute the incidental indecencies of style to a defective taste, not to a depraved purpose. The evident and main intent of the pamphlet is to advocate the "free love" theory of social morality, which he considers to be the highest possible theory of the ethical relations of the sexes; and, unless it is essentially obscene to advocate a theory (which we deny strenuously, false and harmful as the theory may be), the only obscenity in the book lies in a few incidental expressions and isolated passages.

From what we have said above, it follows that to imprison Mr. Heywood on account of this publication is a great wrong, a great infraction of the right of free discussion. It is easy to see such wrongs when you share the opinions of the party wronged; it is not so easy when you abhor them. That is precisely the case with the majority of this community; they abhor Mr. Heywood's views, and therefore see no injustice in imprisoning him because he has publicly advocated them. It happens that we abhor the views expressed in this pamphlet quite as much as the majority; but on the question of his right to publish them, and circulate them through the mails, we take our place by his side, and will share uncomplainingly the odium he has provoked. There are absolutely no views for holding or publishing which a man ought to be imprisoned; and the real disgrace in this matter rests with the court which imprisons, not with the man who is imprisoned. It is not a crime to possess a defective literary taste; it is a crime to rob any man of his liberty without just cause, and it is no just cause for imprisonment to have advocated one's honest convictions, even with very bad taste.

The grievous injustice of this imprisonment does not lie in the sentence, severe as it is, but in the conviction itself, of which the sentence was the inevitable result. The injustice of the conviction does not lie necessarily in the law of 1873, but in Judge Clark's interpretation of that law as given in his charge to the jury. This whole case hinged absolutely on the definition of obscenity which was to be adopted in interpreting that law. The law itself does not define the offence which yet it punishes—a monstrous omission! It devolved on Judge Clark to establish the definition. If he had given so narrow and restricted a meaning to the word as to include only the first of the three classes of publications above described (and a decent regard for the rights of free thought, free discussion, and a free press would have made him so define it), then Mr. Heywood would not and could not have been convicted. His whole defence should have turned on this one point exclusively; there was nothing else in his case worth arguing for three minutes. As it is, a great injustice has been wrought, and a most dangerous blow struck at the freedom of the press, by the definition which Judge Clark incorporated into the law, as an essential part of it. What was this definition? It was thus reported at the time:—

"A book is obscene that is offensive to decency. A book to be obscene need not be obscene throughout the whole; whole or in part comes within the meaning of the law," etc.

These words, italicized by us, are practically the enactment of a new United States statute by the arbitrary will of Judge Clark alone. Henceforth any book which contains a single indecent passage is liable to suppression as "obscene" under this law of 1873. Whoever mails a copy of Shakespeare, Milton, Dryden, Burns, Moore, Byron, Homer, Virgil, Dante, Goethe, Gibbon, Victor Hugo—it is idle to enumerate,—whoever mails a single copy of any one of a vast proportion of the greatest works in poetry, fiction, history, belles lettres, science, will be liable to imprisonment as a circulator of obscene literature! If some wealthy radical was only bold enough to order a Bible through the mails from some Orthodox society, and then prosecute them under this law, he could procure a conviction under it as it has been interpreted by Judge Clark, unless the judge conspired with the jury to overthrow his own definition. Yet it was only in virtue of this definition that Mr. Heywood was convicted. If we had been in his place, we would have frankly conceded that there were a few incidental indecencies in the pamphlet, if judged by a strict canon of propriety, though not intended to be such; but we would have contended that neither the occurrence of a few incidental and unintended indecencies, nor yet the serious advocacy of the "free-love" or any other theory, was enough to make the book as a whole come within the scope of the law of 1873. We would have compelled the judge to perceive the enormous responsibility he was assuming in establishing such an interpretation of the law as would make it a criminal offence to send a copy of the Bible through the mails. We would have compelled him to see that the law had got to be restricted to the suppression of the first of the three classes of publications above described, or else it would shut the mails to almost all books in all languages. And, if nevertheless convicted, we would have left no stone unturned to get this question of the true definition of obscenity before the full bench of the Supreme Court. On this one point, and on this alone, depended the whole result of the prosecution. Mr. Heywood is now in jail simply and solely because of a false and arbitrary definition!

The practical effect of this wrongful imprisonment will be to make Mr. Heywood a martyr for liberty, to lend to his pamphlet an importance which by no means belongs to it, and to increase its circulation. There can be no question that the law of 1873 has been stretched far beyond its proper scope, and turned into an instrument for the suppression of free discussion on the "free love" theory. Never was a worse blunder committed. It would have been impossible to make this theory respectable without persecution, but persecution will make it so in too many eyes. Since the courts are now committed to a most dangerous interpretation of the law of 1873, nothing remains but to attempt to modify that law by making it define narrowly and precisely the offence which it was framed to punish. The whole subject is now forced upon the reluctant attention of all who love freedom of thought and of the press, and who do not mean to surrender these great fundamental rights to an incipient censorship of the press by the government. It is time to think seriously and to act with energy.

BEING A MOTHER FOR THE GLORY OF GOD.

If the universe has been created and is upheld and governed, physically and morally, according to the conception of theism, it would seem unnecessary to force this conception on any human mind by human legislation. Furthermore, from the nature of the human mind itself, it seems impossible. If God himself does not make me believe in God, how can I expect man to do it? Does the throne of the omnipotent depend upon an act of Parliament or Congress? If a human being is placed on a throne or in a presidential chair, a statute is not required obliging every one to believe that Mrs. Guelph sits on one or Mr. Hayes in the other, for example. The fact is left to demonstrate itself to every mind concerned. So long as a person behaves properly he is left at liberty to doubt or deny the existence of both the chairs and their occupants.

Nevertheless, human legislation for ages has manifested the unspeakable folly of attempting to force the popular idea of God upon such minds as reject it, as if the very existence of society depended on the success of its endeavor. It has always failed, and yet society exists, and all the laws essential to its existence and stability are practically as much respected by atheists as by theists. It is perfectly impossible, in the nature of things, that legislation can have resulted in any increase or conservation of the belief in God, though it may have increased the pretence of such belief. Here is its great danger and evil,—the growth of insincerity and hypocrisy. If a man or woman does not entertain the popular or legal conception of God, how much better honestly and openly to say so than to pretend to entertain it, and thereby make life a chronic lie!

If Mrs. Besant had pretended to believe in God, just as the Church of England does, the Hebrew Jew Jesus would not have taken her child away from her. As a hypocrite, would she be a better mother than as a frank and blamelessly moral atheist? The Hebrew judge, who seems as likely to have descended from Ahab and Jezebel as any more respectable Israelites, under the license of British law takes from a woman of unimpeachable morals, and intellect superior to that of most British statesmen, the custody of her female infant, and gives it to a father who in the very act of suing for it violates the most solemn engagement which a man in his circumstances could make. Never talk about the folly and wickedness of communistic junes when a united Church and Parliament can sanction such injustice as that. Why, if that law and that judge had made a promissory note void because the latter was of opinion that the enforcement of it would not benefit the payee, it would have been a piece of sheer communism, but not a whit more destructive of the very foundations of society than this ecclesiastical outrage on the rights of Mrs. Besant. Can any "God-in-the-Constitution" person tell us how much God is glorified and his throne fortified by such doings? Are such things going to be made possible in our country? We want many more Liberal Leagues to prevent it.

Mrs. Besant's belief about the government of the universe, whether it is a monarchy, republic, or neither seems to be of no consequence to society so long as she is a worthy member of it. Whether she is a Christian theist, an agnostic, a pantheist, or an atheist properly so called, is of no consequence to anybody but herself. Probably she believes that the universe is not dead, but alive, body and soul, in every atom of it, always was, and always will be, so far as she knows; but she does not seem disposed to persecute other people for not believing in this matter as she does. What she teaches is of some consequence to society. And it is that people should not bring children into this world without thinking whether they and the world will be made happy by their coming. This may seem shocking to some as a disobedience to the "divine commandment." But society had better not burn Mrs. Besant, or, perhaps what is more painful to a mother, rob her of her child, for this heresy, till it has disposed of the problems of tramps, labor strikes, communistic rifle drills, and superfluous population generally. The old persecutions, in which theological bigots burnt each other and their over-zealous disciples were bad enough; but this persecution of a philanthropic woman is worse. A contemptible law, used unreasonably and cruelly by a bigoted judge, tends to bring all law into contempt and make mankind worse than theoretical atheists. E. W.

FATHER CURCI'S book is published, and is "about to be translated into all languages." He has refused to subject it to the revision of the local ecclesiastical authority, despite the precise injunction of the head of his order. Hence the archbishop of Florence publishes in the Armonia (the clerical newspaper of Florence) a "warning to the good" to be on their guard against a book published under such and auspices, until the Supreme Ecclesiastical Tribunal shall deem it right to pronounce its authoritative judgment. The book is divided into eight chapters. The first treats of dogmas and the truths attaching to them; the right interpretations of the same, as expounded by the fathers of the Church, and the errors, falsely called dogmas, propounded by fanatics. The second treats of the legitimate authorities and the changes to which they are subject. Here it is shown that the temporal is not necessary to the full exercise of spiritual authority. In the third it is declared to be absurd to hope for the restoration of the temporal power, as it is certain that the Italians will never consent to the dismemberment of their country, and that their patriotism is perfectly legitimate, and by no means incompatible with their allegiance to Holy Mother Church. The fifth chapter, on the Catholic Press, the Syllabus, and Liberal Catholics, has some home thrusts which Catholic editors will appreciate, even while they rebel. Father Curci considers the Catholic papers as worse than useless,—detrimental to the cause which they uphold; shows that they never treat any questions of general importance, and consequently are rarely read, and certainly win no adherents to their cause. He blames the use and abuse of the Syllabus; the bigotry which condemns all books published by lovers of their country, as if they must of necessity be hostile to the interests of the Church. In the sixth chapter the Reverend Father demonstrates clearly that the hostility shown by the Holy See to Italian unity has been the cause of the loss of the temporal power; and that if this hostility continues, all influence and authority will also be forfeited. He blames without stint the abstention of the Catholics from the urn, and shows that the good and devout Italians having abdicated, freethinkers and good-for-nothings have all the power in their own hands. He holds to his former belief that the Church may yet come to terms with Italy. In the seventh chapter he narrates the history of the Church from 1870 to 1877, and his own relations; and in the eighth and last chapter studies the ways of Providence, and believes that "all will work together for good."—Ex.

Communications.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XXVII.

The idea of unity—which I have shown to be the essential idea, first of religion at large, and then of theology as culminating in monothelism (one-God-ism)—is, it should be impressively stated and reiterated, no other than these special applications of the mathematical idea one, as the primal arithmetical number; and we are hence authorized to expect, as will be shown later to be the fact, that whatever is opposed to or contrasted with religion and with God, whatever is evil or irreligious, and satanic or averse to God, will be allied in thought with the number two, as the opposite of one. This tendency was even extended, in many early speculations, to the female principle and everything feminine, God being taken as masculine and as exclusively good; woman therefore as evil. In the main, however, and finally, justice is done, as we shall see, to the female principle.

ONE is, in the next place, identified with point, centre, source, origin, or beginning, first-ness, or first cause; and hence with generation and paternity; and, hence again, the one God is the father of all.

The God-idea is, therefore, essentially masculoid, or associated with the male sex. It is true that, in the earlier hermetic speculation, the feminine aspect or side of God was equally provided for, as will be subsequently shown; but the Christian fathers, the founders of Christian theology, confined the term God to the male attributions of Supreme Being; while yet Christianity, as will also be shown, still adequately provided otherwise, for the feminoid aspect of Supremacy. Reference is not here made to "Mary, the Immaculate Mother of God," of the Roman Catholic Church. This dogma is the quite inadequate and merely provisional development of the larger, more rational, and more truly religious idea of the feminine aspect of divinity. It is, however, less metaphysical and occult than the truly philosophical solution; and it is far better capable of satisfying the aspirations of the souls of men and women for a supreme motherhood than the bald absence of any female representative in the divinity, which characterizes Judaism, Mohammedanism, and the Protestant sects. The various stages of the conception of Supremacy or of the Most High have, however, their justification and legitimate place, in the course of the development of the integral or total idea.

At the opposite extreme of the long career of the development of the religious conception—in this age and generation—arises the effort to found a church and a religion on the exclusion of the God-idea, and upon the lifting of humanity into the supreme place as the Most High; as, in other words, the conception and object of worship most worthy of the supreme adoration of man. The immediate originator of this "new religion" was Auguste Comte, the great French philosopher and "founder of the philosophy of Positivism." John Stuart Mill wrote, in the Westminster Review, in defence of the position that the traditional belief in the existence of God is now essential to the existence of religion. John Stuart Stuart-Glenie writes a work of great profundity and force, In the Morningland; or, The Law of the Origin and Transformation of Christianity, the leading thought of which is that not only Christian theology, but the whole Christian polity or system of social ideas, is effete, decadent, and ready to give place to a more positive and rational faith. Within the churches a virtual concession of this startling proposition is extensively made; and in the scientific world at large it is the tacitly foregone conclusion.

At the various centers of civilization, small congregations are beginning to gather for the organization of religious worship and effort, under this new form of religion; precisely as at Rome and at Ephesus the little knots of Christians assembled eighteen hundred years ago. In the city of New York one of the most prominent assemblies of this kind is called "The Church and Society of Humanity," and is presided over by Thaddeus B. Wakeman, who is the author of The Epitome of the Positive Philosophy and Religion. That Christianity is about to undergo, or is in the process of undergoing, an immense transformation cannot be doubted; but is it merely to be transformed to accord with the exigencies of the times and the progress of knowledge, or is it to give place to this new phase of religion based wholly on humanity, with the exclusion of the God-idea; or with, at least, the admission of our entire ignorance of the existence and nature of God? with, in other words, no place found, and no want felt, for that aspect of thought, belief, and adoration which hitherto faith in the existence of God has filled and supplied?

Let us contrast with the more ancient idea the newer conception of humanity. The humanity worshipped by the positivists is not the crude and universal bulk of mankind, past, present, and future. It is humanity idealized or the ideal humanity; or, in other words, the true and perfect type of collective or societary human existence. In still other terms, it is the élite of humanity; and this is the same word and idea as ecclēsia, the called forth, separated, or chosen, the select and perfected body of humanity. The humanity of the positivists is, therefore, in a large sense, and with a more modern seeming, identifiable with the early Christian idea of the Church.

It is this perfect humanity, or the Church; as it is also the "high harmony" of the humanity of the future, of Charles Fourier; and the heaven, or glorified consociations of perfect men and women, as spirits in the spiritual world, of Swedenborg, which is to be contrasted with the God-idea, in the constitution of that which is most high or supreme. And, in so far as the God-idea is that of beginning, source, or cause, and hence of paternity and masculism,—so this contrasted idea, that of a perfected humanity or the true Church, is that of end, final purpose, or result; that which is affected and effected or caused to produce; and so with maternity, the mother-principle, and feminism at large. In the apocalypse God (as father) is transformed into the Lord, as a bridegroom or husband, and the Church into the bride.

In a word, then, God is the masculine, and humanity or the Church is the feminine, aspect of the supreme ideal. Each is from a different point of view the most high; and both, in their marriage or mystical union, are, in the supreme sense, the most high. The female sex instinctively—and so the infantile-feminoid stage of the historic development of mankind, which has lasted hitherto (see Basic Outline of Universology, Index, words infantism and infanta-feminoid)—turns to the worship of the male ideal; and as that relates to origin and causation, it relates also to the past in history and in time; and hence the predominant veneration for ancestry and antiquity in this earlier age of the world. On the other hand, the male sex—and so the senescent-masculoid age, upon which the world is now entering (see Basic Outline, Index); the age dominated by science and reason, rather than by natural impulse and sentiment; turns, just as naturally, to the study of Nature and the worship of humanity (both of which are antithetical to the God-idea). It is the courtesy and devotion of the male to the female principle, succeeding to that which the world's age, prior to now, has rendered as the homage of the female to the male. An age which could and did instinctively worship a God in whom there was nothing, or only a subordinate presence of anything, feminine could only have been itself feminoid. A masculoid age turns admiringly towards Nature and humanity, both feminine ideals, and goes forth from science and God, which are in kind like itself, or of its own essence. We love, go to, and so manifest ourselves as the opposite of that which we are. This is a universal principle; THE ANTITHETICAL REFLECTION OF INHERENCE AND APPEARANCE. This again means, for instance, that an age which is inherently feminine will manifest itself by its tendency to the projection of male ideals; and vice versa.

This principle accounts for the fact that Comte, himself pivotally representative of the positive spirit of modern science (masculoid), projects Nature, humanity, and Naturism-in-humanity, which is woman (affectional, emotional, the opposite of the sciento-positive), as the object of worship; why, indeed, this grim apostle of the most hard-headed scientific philosophy should elevate woman into the place of supremacy; and speculate upon the possibility that the exceptional part of the Christian miracle-system may become normal, in the ideal future, and women become independent of men in the procreation of progeny. No extreme can go farther than this in illustration of the principle here invoked. We may see now why it is that, while the utmost to which Catholicism reaches is the secondary deification of the mother and child, positivism places the feminine principle in the ascendant. See the vignettized heading of The Positive Thinker, in which the mother and child stand as the central figure, surrounded by the representative men of science.

But the Christian Scriptures, as their final legacy, exceptionally, and against the general spirit of Christianity, had prepared the way for the quasi-deification of woman, or what, by the analogy, is the same thing, of humanity, or the Church. "The heavenly New Jerusalem" (Rev. xxi.), which symbolizes the harmonic or divinized now or future order of human society, is the bride of the Lamb, that is to say of the Lord. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready" (Rev. xix., 7). "And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband" (Rev. xxi., 3). The church, the New Jerusalem, the true humanity, is therefore, by the symbolism, the wife of God; and thence, by the true idea of wifehood, coequal with God. If God, the Lord, "or the Lamb be, then, the King of kings and the Lord of lords" (Rev. xix., 16), the ideal humanity is, by the logic of the analogy, the Queen of queens and the Lady of ladies, or she who, equally with the Lord, is entitled to our supreme adoration.

On the other hand, as the ideal true humanity of the future is symbolized by a pure and beautiful woman, so the extant and false humanity of the past is represented as a harlot; and by another city than Jerusalem, namely Babylon, which stands for the imperfect social condition of the past. And as the true humanity is the spouse and consort of God, so this harlot of Babylon and mother of harlots is the consort of Satan. "The great dragon was . . . that old serpent called the Devil and Satan" (Rev. v., 9); and the dragon gave his power to [was transformed into] the beast (Rev. xiii., 4), and the harlot sat upon the beast (Rev. xvii., 3). We have, therefore, in presence, four personages, two male figures, God, the embodiment of beneficent masculinity, and Satan, of maleficent masculinity, and the bride, the embodiment of a pure or perfect femininity, and the harlot, the embodiment of fallen or imperfect feminine condition. The male principle, as generator or father, was at a previous point contrasted with the female principle as generatrix, or mother. This is the temple or historical view, and the discrimination refers us to the past, or the historical beginning, and the future, or the historical end. But, here, at the close of the New Testament, we are conducted forward to a more complex relationship. The symbolism is with the good husband or man and the bad man, on the one hand; and with the good wife or woman and the bad woman, on the other hand; or otherwise, and abstractly conceived of, with the two opposite principles, good and evil, each of them developed in a two-fold manner, according to the proclivities of sex. The consideration of this four-fold symbolism will be resumed farther on. At present let us pass to the consideration of a particular sign by which it is intimated, in the Bible record, that the principle of evil is to be specially recognized.

This distinctive sign is MYSTERY, the natural attendant upon night-time and obscurity. Mysticism and the love of mystery have been the characteristics of the past history of mankind, and especially in the religious domain. The Apocalyptic prophecy foretells the abolishment of this phase of human affairs, with the rising of the future sun of scientific intelligence. It places mystery, as a damning brand, upon the forehead of the scarlet woman, and again identifies her with Babylon, the symbol of the old, hitherto extant, and chaotic order of the world's condition: "And upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth" (Rev. xvii., 5).

Positivism, the distinctive representative of science, is pledged to the elimination of the element of mystery. Such is the essential nature of science; but in the sphere of life, also, the most emphatic injunction of Comte to his followers is to live absolutely without concealment, and to be open as the day. Perhaps the two most fundamental points of distinctive positivism may be stated as: The Worship and Service of the True Humanity; and the Expulsion of Mystery from the Programme of Human Affairs.

Upon both of these points Christianity may fairly claim, as we now see, to have foreshadowed positivism; not indeed in its own practical evolution, which has belonged emphatically to the old, but in this inspired prevision of the new order. The way is therefore clear and open for the reconciliation of Christianity with positivism and the new scientific order. It need have no difficulty in submitting to its own necessary transformation, which, in the closing up of its own Scriptures, it has undeniably prognosticated. The glorified woman, in the twelfth chapter of John, is also the Church. But at first she is simply "with child," "travelling in birth, and pained to be delivered" (Rev. xii., 2). But "she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron [the rigors and exactitudes of science]; and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne," while she withdrew for a time into the wilderness. It is, thus, scientized humanity which succeeds, under the new dispensation, to that which was the throne of God, under the old,—or becomes, in other words, the controlling power over the world.

Inversely, to reconcile positivism to the Church, to the acceptance of its dogma throughout, including the God-idea, as having had an adequate scientific basis, and as truly capable of being integrated with the scientific doctrine of the future, is a severer task. For that purpose we must recur to the older world-religions, those hermetic origins from which Christianity mainly derived its theology, and to the universal rediscovers, verification, and enlargement of those primitive scientific truths.

In the meantime we have been conducted to another important basis of reconciliation. The Protestant sects have been prolific in their interpretations of prophecy. In this they have mostly concurred in charging upon Roman Catholicism the character of the scarlet woman (Babylon), the dragon, and the beast. The Catholic church, less profuse in this style of literature, has to some extent cast back the imputation. By the new theology it is shown that these wonderful symbols apply directly and mainly to the whole past, unscientific and mystery-loving development of human career. We are all, therefore, "in the same boat." Let us, then, "shake hands over the bloody chasm," and consent to be brethren, in the out-working of a higher and happier destiny for the future of the human world.

DO RE-DEFINITIONS DEFINE?

EDITOR INDEX:—

It is evidently useless to expect "A. W. K." either to admit that he knows nothing of Fourier, or to quote one line from him advocating community of property. But as some of the sincere lovers of truth among the readers of THE INDEX may wish to know more of social science as taught by one of the great thinkers of the world, I say again, and advise them to verify my assertion by the study of his works, which, I venture to assure all such, will amply repay the time and thought they may bestow on them, that Fourier teaches the opposite of community of property.

It is not possible, I think, for any intelligent man who has read the articles of "F. S. O." (except "A. W. K.") to suppose that he teaches communism. It is equally absurd and indiscriminate to assert that "the socialist writers" teach "theoretical and visionary communism." Some socialist writers teach community of property, but not one socialist of the Phalansterian school does so, and there is a large and influential class of socialists, of whom the late Josiah Warren is a type, who are extreme individualists.

Not to know these facts is to be ignorant of the A, B, C of the subject. It still seems to me, as I said once before, that we do not need any more misinformation and fog, or any half-knowledge, on a question so important to the welfare of the human race.

A very little thought would have shown "A. W. K." that all harmony, yes, that life itself, is a union of opposites, that we do not wed positive to positive, but always positive to negative, light to darkness, earth to air, and fire to water; we do not wed man to man, but woman to man.

Even a little knowledge of Fourier would have taught "A. W. K." that before he or I, or Mr. Bradlaugh or Mrs. Besant were born Fourier had written upon the problem of population, and had proposed a remedy for over-population deduced from the study of human nature, which I and some others believe to be more scientific, and consequently more artistic and more practical, than any other that we know of.

There may be so-called socialists who think that their cause would be promoted by violence and revolution; but a large number of real socialists know that it is justice that is wanted, and not charity on the one side or anarchy on the other. At the present time, in this country at least, there is no over-population; we can produce enough and more than enough, if it could only be equitably distributed, to give everybody not merely comforts, but the luxuries of life as well.

The problem of production has been solved; that of distribution remains. It is just possible that social science will help us; and it is certain that all socialists do not regard social science and "visionary communism" as convertible terms. F. S. C.

MRS. BESANT AND HER PERSECUTORS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

As I read, in THE INDEX of June 20, your scathing but well-merited rebuke of that clerical "sneak," the Rev. Frank Besant, and the "upstart judge," Sir George Jessel, the blood mantled my cheeks, and my lips quivered with emotions of indignation to which any language that I can command would give but the feeblest expression. Such a monstrous perversion of justice, such a cool and calculating disregard of a legal and solemn compact, such a brutal trampling upon the tenderest instincts of motherhood as was the judicial decision in the case referred to is simply infamous, and will be so regarded by every man and woman who becomes acquainted with the facts, and whose heart is not absolutely hardened by the spirit of bigotry and intolerance. The unjust judgment of this Hebrew judge is analogous in principle, if not in the reach of its barbarity, to that of the King of Portugal, who, when some eighty thousand of the Jews that had been banished from Spain, toward the close of the fifteenth century, sought an asylum within his realm, and were promised protection, basely forfeited his pledge, and, at the instigation of the Romish Church, expelled from his dominions every adult Hebrew, seizing and detaining all below the age of fourteen years, and forcibly baptizing them into the Catholic Church. One would suppose that, in the heart of a Jewish law-giver, the recollection of the heart-rending scenes that followed the issuing of that terrible decree, when the Jewish mothers, frenzied with grief, inconsolable, rent the air with shrieks of anguish and piteous lamentations—in many instances frantically killing their offspring, rather than they should be thus kidnapped and subjected to the indignity of Christian baptism,—would have awakened emotions of pity for an innocent and honest, though non-Christian, woman pleading at the bar of justice, as only a devoted mother could plead, for the custody of her darling child. But no; the wretched sycophant, Jew though he is, preferred the adulation of Christian lips, which a decree against his heretical victim would surely evoke, to the approval of his conscience, which must have followed an act of simple justice to his persecuted suppliant.

I quite agree with you that Mrs. Besant will receive, as she certainly ought to, the cordial sympathy of all American liberals, in the great distress which has been brought upon her by her Christian persecutors and her Jewish judge.

It is one of the anomalies in the order of human affairs, with which we are daily confronted, and which it is difficult to explain upon the theory of divine justice, that martyrdom should, so often, be the only visible recompense for loyalty to convictions and honest endeavors to advance the cause of humanity. But so it is; and Mrs. Besant is not the first, nor will she be the last, of the victims of religious intolerance.

The defiant words she utters, however, in the article which was the fitting conclusion to your manly editorial, are an earnest that no amount of persecution will cause her to swerve from the path she has chosen, or curb her proud and royal spirit. Brave women, be of good cheer! DANIEL CONY.

WOBURN, Mass., June 23, 1878.

HEYWOOD'S IMPRISONMENT.

MR. EDITOR:—

Filled with an indignation which forbids coherence of expression, I will yet endeavor to preserve a method in my madness, and be as mildly reasonable as if the outrage upon equal rights was not so flagrant as to provoke and justify the most vigorous invective.

A man sent to prison for two years as a common felon for saying "I believe!"

Nothing has occurred demanding so mighty a protest since Burns was remanded to slavery by the maladministration of an iniquitous law. Charles Torrey in Baltimore jail was nothing to it. I am not a little surprised, in conversation with several radical friends—men for whom I have an unbounded respect and admiration,—to find in minds exceptionally clear on most subjects such confusion on this.

The feeling which I manifest elicits little sympathetic response, and they say to me, in substance, "It is true, as you observe, that a man is condemned and punished for an expression of opinion; but you must remember that it is not purely speculative opinion, but opinion which has a vital, practical bearing upon the morals of the people; and society is justified in thus defending itself, and the individuals of which it is composed, against such assaults upon its well-being."

That is exactly what I do not forget, and upon which I lay the greatest stress,—that the opinions so freely and boldly uttered are of a practical character, and more or less intimately connected with the moral welfare of society. Who cares much for purely speculative opinions? To defend the freedom of practical opinions is worthy of us,—opinions which help to form character and regulate conduct.

Mr. Heywood himself would claim the practical nature of the opinions for which he suffers as his justification in persisting in giving them publicity. It is only because he believes, with an all-absorbing conviction, that the tendency of his opinions is towards a freer, truer, more perfect social life that he is willing to sacrifice so much for their dissemination. He is not alone in this conviction. It is shared by many equally earnest and equally ready to suffer the odium which always falls upon the innovator.

Directly opposed in belief is another party, much the larger and older, to be sure, and possibly more sound in doctrine; but that is the question at issue, to be settled by free discussion or left unsettled. In either party, of course, is a moiety of insincerity, and some slight admixture of personal and selfish motive; but, for the most part, each is actuated by an honest desire to promote the best interests and welfare of the whole. One party, taking advantage of its power of numbers, has no right to proscribe and imprison the other, and in so doing makes confession of its want of faith in the power of truth itself.

"You shall not teach that which I do not believe" is a strange position for radicals to take. What enormity of injustice may not be accomplished, if radicals themselves so easily forget their obligation to the sacred principle of equal rights! That the doctrines set forth are false—if so be they are—is surely no reason for the incarceration of the one who utters them; that there is now and then, or still oftener, an expression which would not be sanctioned by the commonly accepted rules of good taste is no better reason; and that is the full head and front of his offending.

Zealots who would subdue error by main strength, strangely blind to the nature of the weapons which they use, are ever hurling boomerangs to their own destruction. The pamphlet which was made the excuse for this prosecution will now be read by ten where it was read by one before.

Although such attempts to muzzle the brain by abusing the body—the common practice of the dominant faction from time immemorial—have always failed, and ever will, yet our sympathy and assistance are due to the one who is sacrificed in the maintenance of our right. I am not in full accord with Mr. Heywood in the matter of his special reform; but his right to advocate that reform is sacred, and should be defended by every emancipated tongue and pen.

J. A. J. WILCOX.

THE THIRD NEW YORK LEAGUE.

NEW YORK, June 23, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

As I have made it a duty to acquaint yourself and the readers of THE INDEX with the progress of our League movement here in New York, I cannot abstain from giving a short report of our first large public meeting, which took place on Wednesday evening, June 19, at Republican Hall. The meeting was of more than ordinary interest; the audience was large and attentive, and responded heartily to the scholarly utterances of the speakers.

After the President had read and explained the platform of the National Liberal League, our Secretary, Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., presented a series of resolutions against the passage of the bill of the New York Legislature which granted the New York Catholic Protectorate an appropriation of $50,000, which bill has received the signature of Gov. Robinson. The action was shown to be unconstitutional, and the Controller was requested to withhold such appropriation and refuse the payment, except by compulsion of the court.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The speakers of the evening were Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, our President, and Mr. T. B. Wakeman, an original thinker who has investigated the old and new philosophy, adding to it his own vigorous thought, which in most questions is in full harmony with, and a reflection of, the broad scientific spirit of our age. Mr. O. B. Frothingham, who meant to be a listener only, was enthusiastically called upon the platform after the second speaker had closed his remarks, and gave one of his happiest impromptus.

We are indebted entirely to Dr. Foote for the timely measure against the Catholic Protectorate; such arbitrary sectarian favoritism shows the necessity of vigilance and attention from Liberal Leagues.

The three speakers of the evening, starting from the same principle—the necessity of entire separation between the Church and our State—arrived by different modes of reasoning at the same broad conclusion: that the Church of the future must be based on a human instead of a theological interest.

The proceedings of the evening offered a rare intellectual treat seldom enjoyed by a public meeting, and the hearers went away enriched in thought, elevated in sentiment, and, let us hope, ready to enter upon the practical work of our League with that ardor which comes from clear understanding. The addresses were complementary to each other, and gave a grand picture of what the State of the future will and must be, if once entirely freed from theological bias and from sectarian influence.

Mr. Palmer's "Utopia," as he pleased to call it, was a scholarly production, and should be given to the readers of THE INDEX. The historical illustration, the progress of ideas in matters of religion, which he painted to have taken place in the latter part of our century gave to his Utopia a strong plausibility, an unusual veracity. Mr. Wakeman set the reality and near possibility of the Utopia in still bolder relief. He gave, as it were in a nutshell, the philosophical synthesis of the law of evolution applied to the growth of the State and society. He traced it from its homogeneous form through the various stages of growth, arriving in its natural course by differentiation and integration at the greatest heterogeneity which at the termination of this long process ends in the spiritual homogeneity of mankind, as it is foreshadowed by the poet's dream,—"In the Parliament of man the Federation of the world."

Mr. Frothingham confirmed, by his apt and thoughtful remarks, the historical and philosophical views taken by the preceding speakers, making the principal idea still more clear, and pointing out strongly the practical requirements needful to reach and fulfil the high promise of the future.

Such meetings, such words, are highly welcome; they are a necessity in our present depressed state of society.

Many are ready and anxious to be instructed in the science of the day, and to learn the good which will result from it. Many an earnest mind would like to do better if it knew how. And there is no lack of talent in our country; the instructors only wait to be called out; they wait for support and encouragement to unfold the richness of their minds, the fruits of their learning and investigation.

Would that the apathy and indifference of our liberals could be metamorphosed into energy, ardor, and zeal!

Yours truly, CLARA NEYMANN.

BRIEF.

Books with a purpose, as a rule, fail to fulfil their intention. The author is either a fanatic in his or her line of thought, or lacks the constructive and picturesque faculty essential to the success of any book, and doubly so where a certain prejudice is to be overcome. But in What our Girls Ought to Know, Dr. Mary Studley has accomplished this most difficult task so ably, that the most carping critic will hardly find it possible to question her principles, or the mode of their presentation. As a piece of literary work it is charming, clear, direct, simple, and graceful; a model of strong Saxon; a book from which one would not blot out one line, and which is filled with a quiet, yet intense, power born of absolute knowledge and a noble purpose. The writer has lived all she writes, and her position as resident physician and teacher of natural sciences in the State Normal School of Framingham, Mass., has given her a wide experience from which to draw. A graduate of the Woman's Medical College of New York, she is pronounced by Dr. Willard Parker one of the ablest and most thoughtful women of our time, and this statement is confirmed by every page of her book. Let no one fancy her another decrifier of natural laws, or a one-sided advocate of all the isms connected with the woman suffrage movement. Her chapter on marriage is one of the most beautiful and even pathetic appeals for a better understanding of its laws, a nobler view of its responsibilities, a more earnest preparation, and an absolute belief in its sacredness, a woman has ever penned. It ought to be in the hands of every man as well as woman who plan a future together, and if read understandingly could not fail of rousing the most trifling or the most apathetic with its ringing call to thought of what life demands. No better missionary work could be done than sending this book into every family where girls are growing up; for even those most carefully trained would still find inspiration to the best and wisest use and development of power, while the untrained would see possibilities undreamed of, and find it a way out from the vapid and dreary purposelessness of the average girl's existence. There is not a line to which the most fastidious and conservative of mothers could object, and we desire all the success to which its perfect and beautiful womanliness as well as strength entitles it. This definition of temperance is the key-note of the book, yet only one of myriad paragraphs one would gladly transfer bodily: "Temperance is personal cleanliness; is modesty; is quietness; is reverence for one's elders and betters; is deference to one's mother and sisters; is gentleness; is courage; is the withholding from aught which leads to excess in daily living; is the eating and drinking only that which will ensure the best body which the best soul is to inhabit,—nay, temperance is all these, and more." The publisher is M. L. Holbrook. CAMPBELL WHEATON.

LOCAL LIBERAL LEAGUES.

There are probably over a hundred places in which there are liberal friends with whom I have been in correspondence in relation to the organization of Local Liberal Leagues and in which organization is contemplated, and some fifty other places where Liberal Leagues and other societies in sympathy with the movement are organized that have not as yet taken out charters.

To all of these friends I desire to say that, for the interest of our cause, it is very important that they organize and perfect their Local Leagues at once, and elect their delegates for the next Annual National Liberal League Congress, the call for which will be before long issued by the Directors.

H. L. GREEN, Ch. Ex. Com. N.L.L.
SALAMANCA, N. Y., June 25, 1878.

I WILL NOT attack your doctrines, nor your creeds if they accord liberty to me. If they hold thought to be dangerous, if they aver that doubt is a crime, then I attack them one and all, because they enslave the minds of men. I attack the monsters, the phantoms of imagination that have ruled the world. I attack slavery. I ask for room,—room for the human mind.—Ingersoll.

A NEW STEAMER, built for the Sultan of Zanzibar, is ornamented with a number of inscriptions from the Koran. The figure-head, a spread eagle, bears upon its breast the following verse: "Embark on board of her in the name of God, who is her course and her haven; for my Lord is forgiving and merciful."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 " "	For 26 to 51 " "	For 52 to 100 " "
10c	8c	6c	5c

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HERVEY S. BROWNE.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,

No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,

Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.50 for one year, including postage, or $1.00 for three months on trial.

Address

THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keahub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Laaser, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of Important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,

Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenny, N.J.

J. L. STODDARD, Boston.

ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.

C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.

W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.

ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address

THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS.

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined list, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets. Second Series. Records of a School. A new edition.	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.	1.50
Little Men.	1.50
My Boys, etc.	1.00
Shawl-Straps.	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.	2.00
New Poems.	2.00
Literature and Dogma.	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.	2.00
Edelweiss.	1.00
German Tales.	1.00
BACON'S Essays.	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.	1.25
Physics and Politics.	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.	1.75
The Science and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.	4.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.	1.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.	2.25
The World-Priest.	2.25
The Tall Student.	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.	1.25
BUEBLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, etc., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.	2.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.	1.40
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thereon! The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.	1.40
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.	1.40
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.	2.50
Common-Sense in Religion.	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.	2.50
The Religious Demands of the Age.	.30
COONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.	2.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	4.00
Journal of Researches.	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.	2.25
DICKENS' CHINA'S History of England.	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.	2.00
ELLIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 6 vols., each.	1.00
Adam Bede.	1.00
Romola.	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.	1.00
Felix Holt.	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.	1.50
The Sign of the Cross. 2 vols.	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.	1.50
Essays. Second Series.	1.50
Miscellaneous.	1.50
Representative Men.	1.50
English Traits.	1.00
Conduct of Life.	1.00
Poems. With Portraits.	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.	5.00
Society and Solitude.	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). Short Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Abbeaux Soguel, the Younger.	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.	2.00
FREIBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Making. Cosmic Philosophy.	2.00
5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.	2.00
GORTON'S Poems. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.	5.00
Elective Affinities.	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portraits of Goethe, 3 vols.	3.50
Herbert and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.	2.00
Creed of Christendom.	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.	6.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.	1.50
Thoughts about Art.	2.00
The Unknown River.	6.00
The Intellectual Life.	2.00
Chapters on Animals.	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.	1.00
Child World. Part First.	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Hitherto Romance.	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.	2.00
The Marble Faun.	2.00
The English Note-Books.	2.00
The American Note-Books.	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.	1.50
Atlantic Essays.	2.00
Oldport Days.	2.00
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.	2.00
Suburban Sketches.	2.00
Venetian Life.	2.00
Italian Journeys.	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Twenty-Three."	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.	1.25
Bits of Travel.	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.	1.25
On the Origin of Species.	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.	1.50
Songs of Seven.	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.	1.75
Studies for Stories.	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.	1.25
Mosses from the Fairy: A Story.	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES.
No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," or "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Hailfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.	3.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KIER (ORPHEUS O.). Verses, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.	1.50
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portraits.	4.00
2 vols.	4.00
Prose Works. Portraits.	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.	4.00
The Higher Papers. First Series.	1.50
The Higher Papers. Second Series.	1.50
Among my Books.	2.00
My Study Windows.	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.). Poems for Children.	.75
LURBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.	2.00
5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.	5.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.	2.50
Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.	.75
MEYER'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.	2.50
Representative Government.	1.50
Autobiography.	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Stars.	1.50
Songs of the Sea Lands.	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.	2.00
Romances, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.	2.50
The Same. Second Series.	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.	1.50
Kisses from Kentucky.	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. C. B. Frothingham.	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.	1.00
PEEL'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.	1.50
The Troty Book.	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.	1.50
Hoged In.	1.50
The Silent Partner.	1.50
What to Wear?	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.	1.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Works than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.	1.75
Natural Phenomena.	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Stars, etc.	4.50
With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.	1.00
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMER:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.	1.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.	1.25
First Principles.	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.	1.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 1 vol.	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.	3.00
Philosophy of Style.	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.	2.00
Sociology.	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	2.00
Universal Progress.	2.00
STONE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.	1.00
Most Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	11.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.	1.50
The Glass-Door Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.	1.25
Vanity Fair.
The Newcomes.
Adventures of Philip.
Essex.
The Virginians.
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Harry Lyndon, Rogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorous, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portraits.	2.00
The Maine Woods.	2.00
Cape Cod.	2.00
Letters.	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.	1.00
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.	2.50
Light and Electricity.	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.	2.00
On Sound.	2.00
Radical Heat.	5.00
Form of Water.	1.50
Lectures on Light.	1.50
Proceedings at the Farwell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.	.50
Lessons in Electricity.	1.00
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.	.50
TITTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.	1.00
Seventy Years.	1.50
Back-Log Studies.	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	6.00
WHIFFLES'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.	1.50
Essays and Reviews.	3.50
Character and Characteristic Men.	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.	1.50
Success and its Conditions.	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.	1.50
W. Girls: A Home Story.	1.50
Real Folk.	2.00
The Other Girls.	2.00
Panics. A volume of Poems.	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.	4.00
Child Life.	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

$66 a week to your own town. Terms and 25 cents free. Address H. HALLIST & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth free. Address STUBBS & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRICK & CO., Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE.
Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address O. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Dordinger & Co., 56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
35 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. B. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and E. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Trollope, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn.

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,
Solomon Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $2.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. O. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Jannet Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,
PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 431 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James H. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM!

AN EPITOME OF THE Positive Philosophy and Religion.

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Herriot Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN,
President of the Society,
No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOTKEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass., for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1878.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 30 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

WASHINGTON ILLUSTRATED.

The subscriber is prepared to engage for the next lecture season (or for the summer, at the places of popular resort), for the delivery of his lectures on "Washington and its Institutions." These lectures are brilliantly illustrated by a very large number of Stereoscopic Views of public buildings, works of art, etc. They have won enthusiastic encomiums from their audiences and the press. For circulars, giving full information, address Rev. FREDERIC HINCKLEY, Dorchester Station, Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. M. Abbot, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 25, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 cop., 1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER.

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to vote, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1878.

WHOLE No. 446.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized, public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

4. The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

COLONEL HIGGINSON was present at the Centenary of Voltaire at Paris, and heard the great oration of Victor Hugo, which he praises in the highest terms. One is impatient to see this oration translated for American readers.

THIS JEST is going the rounds of the press: "A Sunday-school teacher was telling her scholars the other Sunday about a bad boy who stole $100, when she was interrupted by one of her audience with the query: 'And how did he get such a bully chance?' " It is not at all amusing to reflect that the greed of money-getting so rife in American society fatally tends to produce the moral state of that boyish questioner. The gospel of smartness ends in theft; and the great crowd of defaulters have all been suckled on that creed not outworn.

SAYS THE Christian Union: "It is not an uncommon thing for a Boston business man, opening his mail in the morning, to find an envelope containing a scrap of paper coarsely printed as follows:—

Which will You do,
Forsake your Sins and go to HEAVEN, or Keep your Sins and go to HELL?

We venture to say that more people are warded off from a Christian life than are won to it by such pious indiscretions and impertinences as these."

THE Tribune is responsible for these statements: "The room in which Voltaire died, on the quay named after him, was hermetically sealed until the one-hundredth anniversary came round. Then the windows were opened and the sunshine was let in. The proprietor of the mansion, the Marquis de Villette, had directed in his will that the shutters should not be taken down, and the room was never entered, even in 1814, when Voltaire's bones were dragged from their coffin in the Pantheon and buried with quicklime in a rubbish-corner. The opening of the windows of this historic room was one of the good results of the Centenary; a vigorous letter from Victor Hugo in reply to Monsiour Dupanloup's strictures was another."

PROFESSOR ALEXANDER WINCHELL declares, in the Nashville American, that the abolition of the lectureship recently filled by him is practically "a dismissal from office on account of heresy." He goes on to say: "This heresy consists in holding, with the great body of scientific men, that a method of evolution has obtained in the history of the world, but not in holding that man is the product of evolution. The overt act on which the accusation is based is the publication of my recent pamphlet entitled Adamites and Pre-Adamites, though, as a fact, a belief in the doctrine of evolution is not there avowed nor taught; and the only position to which strict 'Orthodoxy' could object is the opinion that perhaps the black races existed on the earth previously to the white and brown races."

WHAT A melancholy illustration is this of the tyranny which Orthodoxy exerts over our educational institutions, and from which not one of them can claim complete exemption! "The Vanderbilt University at Nashville, Tenn., has signally vindicated its Orthodoxy and the pure religious faith of its founder by dismissing from his lectureship Professor Alexander Winchell, the illustrious astronomer and student of science, for the alleged sceptical tendency of his views. The unpardonable heresy which was the immediate occasion of his dismissal was the opinion that the negro race is pre-Adamite, though the expression of this opinion was coupled with an earnest and forcible tribute to the wisdom and inspiration of the Bible. His theories, it was alleged, were 'contrary to the plan of redemption.' Something similar to that, if we remember rightly, was the fatal objection to the views of that old-time heretic, Galileo."

ORTHODOXY is far stronger at the South than at the North; indeed, there is very little heterodoxy there. Hence it is instructive to read the following remarks by Rev. Dr. Fuller, in the Atlanta, Ga., Advocate, with special reference to the claim of the churches of being the chief bulwarks of morality: "The churches of the South, as a whole, are lacking in moral strength. The people are generally Orthodox in sentiment, believing in the inspiration of the Scriptures, the atonement, and in salvation from sin by faith in Christ alone. There is less scepticism in the public mind in the South than in the North. The first table of the law touching man's relations and obligations to God has been well maintained by the religious press and the pulpit; but the Bible view of man's duty to man has been greatly overlooked by both ministers and churches. The morality of the Gospel has been sadly neglected in precept and practice. The pulpit has been Orthodox in its teaching of the theory of religion, so far as it has gone, but weak in enforcing the divine precepts touching practical questions of right and wrong."

IN CONNECTION with our leading editorial of this week, we quote the following paragraph from the New York Independent of July 4: "The Rev. John C. Kimball writes us to argue that the Unitarian name is not 'divisive,' nor is its spirit and record. So be it. He tells us that the constitution of the National Conference allows the membership of Trinitarians, as well as Unitarians. We are glad that this is so. We know this to be the fact, and we, nevertheless, regard the name and the temper of Unitarianism as divisive; but the subject is not worth arguing at length." The point here illustrated is that Unitarianism, by its chief representative body, is recognized universally as planting itself on the fundamental "traditional creed" of Christianity, and differs from other Christian sects only in omitting the later and fuller creeds which have grown out of it. The Unitarian denomination cannot claim membership in the "Church of Christ" on the ground of their acceptance of this ancient and primitive creed, and then turn round to the outside radicals and profess entire "freedom from traditional creeds." Let us all be frank in this matter; it is necessary to choose between Unitarianism and perfect spiritual freedom.

IT IS REPORTED that the nephews and nieces and other heirs of Stephen Girard, of Philadelphia, have brought a suit against that city in which they claim that the Board of City Trusts are not administering the philanthropist's will in accordance with its provisions, but are using the income of the property illegally. In view of this violation, they claim the accumulated income of all the Girard real estate in the city. Girard intended to found a college for the strictly secular education of orphans. The city of Philadelphia accepted the bequest, but has perverted it to uses in direct opposition to the terms of the trust by giving Orthodoxy full control of the institution. We should be sorry to see the property revert to private owners, to the defeat of Girard's benevolent and wise intentions; but a more revolting breach of trust cannot be instanced than has been committed without shame or conscience in this case by Christian cupidity, and the interests of public morality demand that such a crime should not be suffered to go unpunished. It would be a most salutary moral lesson if the courts should decide (as we fear they will not) that the Christian Church has no right to steal, even for "the glory of God," but that Liberals have as good a right as Christians to found public institutions in accordance with their own principles. There is no doubt that Philadelphia has in equity forfeited this bequest by her bad faith in administering it; but we wish that it might still be devoted to the uses for which it was designed. Is there not enough virtue in the courts to do justice in this matter?

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE,

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. W. M. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. F. HOLLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON, New York City.
 MR. F. SCHUEMANN-POT, San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL, Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYER, Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC W. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. E. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK, Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Lottsburg, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ABBOTT, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLEY, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHELER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Louisiana.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maine.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Maryland.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Massachusetts.....KARL SCHMEMMANN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Solomanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 Rhode Island.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 South Carolina.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Tennessee.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Texas.....R. L. HUGHTON, North Birmingham.
 Vermont.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 West Virginia.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wisconsin.....D. P. WILCOX, Yonkers.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, 137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN F. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeld.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeld, Julius Pfisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MISHOORT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
 CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudso, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. rison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lockhead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendam, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harlin, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.

Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.
 BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
 Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
 TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
 HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
 CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
 NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hume.
 Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. Shepard, and others.
 ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
 ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
 TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
 CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
 JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
 Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbuit, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
 Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
 FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
 WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
 Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loumis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
 MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
 MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
 Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransoh, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendik, L. Oberland, and others.
 ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
 Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
 CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
 WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
 CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
 ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sentf, M. Senn, G. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sentf, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
 PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
 XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
 Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauentstein, M.D., E. Lebon, and others.
 OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willison; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
 Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
 CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Redly, and others.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.
 NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parse.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
 HANNSVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."
 CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.
 MONKLEY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.
 MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinckley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary, on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.
 [N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Sketch of Michael Servetus.*

BY M. MAURIS.

The publication of an elaborate life of Servetus in English at the present time will be welcome to many readers, who at present know little more of the man than that he was burned at the stake at Geneva, at the instigation of John Calvin, three hundred and twenty-five years ago. The progress of the world from polytheism to monotheism has had many tragic passages, but perhaps the most unique was this roasting alive of the Unitarian Servetus with green wood by a leader of the Protestant Reformation.

Dr. Willis, the author of the work, had edited an edition of the writings of William Harvey, accompanied by a biography of the great demonstrator of the circulation of the blood. His researches into this interesting subject led him to investigate the claims of Servetus to a share in this grand discovery, when it was established that he was "the first who proclaimed the true way in which the blood from the right reaches the left chambers of the heart by passing through the lungs, and even hinted at its further course by the arteries to the body at large." His study of the subject deepened the interest of Dr. Willis in the character of Servetus, not only as a physiologist, but as a philosopher and scholar; as a practical physician, freed from the fetters of medieval routine; an eminent geographer and astronomer, and a liberal Biblical critic in days when criticism, as we understand the term, was unimaginable.

Servetus was a Spaniard, born at Villanueva, in Aragon, in 1509, of an old family in independent circumstances. He entered the University of Saragossa when about fourteen years old, and there perfected himself in the study of the classics, in the Greek and Hebrew tongues, as well as in the ethics of Aristotle, scholastic philosophy, mathematics, astronomy, and geography. From Saragossa he appears to have passed to the law-school of Toulouse; but theology had more attractions for him than law. A rational exposition of God's revelation of himself in Nature seems to have been a craving in the ardent and religious temperament of the thoughtful young Spaniard. While at Toulouse he read the Bible, the writings of Luther, the rational theology of Rymund de Sabunde, and the works of Erasmus. The effect of these studies was that at eighteen years of age he had already framed a theological system of his own, far in advance of the ideas of his time. Leaving Toulouse, Servetus entered the service of Juan Quintana, a Franciscan friar, and confessor of the Emperor Charles V., whose coronation he attended in Aix-la-Chapelle, and also the Diet of Augsburg, which closely followed it. Servetus was in sympathy with the Reformers of the Lutheran Reformation, and, in fact, came into contact with them, because he did not think they were sufficiently rational and thorough-going; and what he saw of the pomp and tyranny of princes and bishops was not calculated to quiet the spirit of protest that early took a powerful hold upon his mind. At the age of twenty he writes: "For my own part, I neither agree nor disagree in every particular with either Catholics or Reformers. It would be easy enough, indeed, to judge dispassionately of everything, were we but suffered without molestation by the churches freely to speak our minds, the older exponents of doctrine, in obedience to the recommendation of St. Paul, giving place to younger men, and these in their turn making way for teachers of the day, who had sought to impart that has been revealed to them. But our doctors now contend for nothing but power. The Lord confound all tyrants of the Church! Amen."

With such views, and a constitutional temperament that knew no fear, and led him to the free expression of his opinions, he was, of course, soon dismissed from the service of Quintana. He then threw himself, body and soul, into the study of theology, and in 1530 we find him at Basle, Switzerland, disputing with Ecolampadius and other theologians on the consubstantiality and coeternity of the Son with the Father, and other points in connection with the idea of the Trinity then prevailing among Catholics as well as Reformers. Being unable to make his views acceptable to the Reformer of Basle, he proceeded to Strasburg to propound his doctrines to Martin Bucer and W. F. Capito, but with no better results. Meanwhile, he had not been otherwise idle; he had written a book in which his new opinions concerning Christianity were fully explained, and he resolved upon having it printed, to make the world judge between him and the other Reformers. He was in Germany, the land of free thought, as he imagined, and among men who, had thought freely; why should he not avail himself of the same right? The names of Luther, Calvin, etc., appeared on the title-pages of their works; why should his name be withheld from the world? Accordingly, the Seven Books on Mistaken Conceptions of the Trinity appeared, with the author's full family name, and the name of the country that called him son.

*Servetus and Calvin: A Study of an Important Epoch in the Early History of the Reformation. By R. Willis, M.D. 541 pages. London: Henry S. King & Co.

As he appears in this book, Servetus may be considered as the founder of the doctrine of real monotheism, as it was possible to conceive it in the sixteenth century. We are sorry to be unable to give more than a passing notice of the chief points discussed in this work. He believed in a kind of Trinity, but modal and formal, not real and personal in the usual sense of the word. "God cannot be conceived as divisible," he says; he acknowledges a Son of God and a Holy Ghost, finding them in the Scriptures, no word of which he would overlook, though putting his own interpretation on all they say. "The word Trinity," he writes, "is not to be found in Scriptures. The Son and the Holy Ghost are no more than so many forms or aspects of Deity. . . . To believe," he continues, "suffices, it is said (to salvation); but what folly to believe aught that cannot be understood, that is impossible in the nature of things, and that may even be looked on as blasphemous! Can it be that mere confusion of mind is to be deemed an adequate object of faith?" Speaking of the Holy Ghost, Servetus forgot what is due to a subject that has engaged the serious thoughts of so many pious and learned men. He saw some portions of the Catholic Christian dogma so unreasonable as to be unable to refrain from ridiculing them. Yet the idea of God to which Servetus had attained is unquestionably pure and grand,—the only one in fact, as we see the subject, that can be reasonably held by a true idealist. He also deals heavy blows at the doctrine of justification by faith, the leading feature of Luther's theology, in terms neither complimentary nor respectful to its author; nor less roughly dealt with is the leading Calvinistic theory of predestination and election.

The book seems to have caused a considerable stir both in Germany and Switzerland, to have found proselytes in Italy, and to have been read by every one of liberal education. Some of the antagonistic Reformers themselves could not forbear being strongly impressed with it. Ecolampadius, writing to Martin Bucer, July 18, 1531, says: "Read the book, and tell me what you think of it; as the writer does not acknowledge the coeternity of the Son, I can in no wise approve of it as a whole, although it contains much that is good." Melancthon writes to a friend, "I read Servetus a great deal." He does not agree with the author, but "I have little doubt," he continues, "that great controversies will one day arise on this subject, as well as on the distinction of the two natures in Christ."

"The Reformers of the sixteenth century," Dr. Willis says, "went little way in freeing the religion of Jesus of Nazareth from the accretions which metaphysical subtilty, superstition, and ignorance of the laws of Nature had gathered around it in the course of ages. Their business, as they apprehended it, was to reform the Church; the task Servetus had set himself, in the end, was to reform religion, with little thought of a church, in any sense, as it was conceived in his day either by Papists or Protestants." How could a book in this direction be welcome to the Reformers? It was too far in advance of their ideas; Servetus' dialectics were too stringent, and his arguments too conclusive against them.

After writing a splendid letter to Ecolampadius, for which we regret to have no room, he quitted Switzerland, whither he had returned after the publication of his book at Haguenau; and here he seems to have again taken up his quarters for some weeks or months, to write and superintend the printing of the Two Dialogues on the Trinity. Under color of modifying some of the views announced in his first work, he now cast the concluding anathemas against all tyrants of the Church, as a parting shot, and off he went to France, reaching Paris toward the end of 1532.

If Switzerland and Germany "were too hot for him," Roman Catholic France would have proved still hotter; but during the time he lived in that country he never made himself known save as "Monsieur Michel Villeneuve," from the town of his nativity. He entered as a student of mathematics and physics at one of the colleges of Paris, and lived very quietly. At a later period he took his degree of M.A. in the University of Paris.

But the study of mathematics had soon to be abandoned for present means of subsistence. After a short stay at Avignon and Orleans, Villeneuve betook himself to Lyons, then a great centre of learning. There he seems to have found ready employment as reader and corrector of the press, first, and afterward as editor in the celebrated printing-establishment of Trechsel Brothers. Among the works he edited for them, the Geography of Ptolemy, enriched by extensive comments from him, can by no means be overlooked, connected as it is with the charges imputed to its editor, later on, in his trial at Geneva.

The reading-room of the printers of Lyons, and the acquaintance Servetus formed there with the great physician and naturalist, Dr. Champier, brought the former back from the empyrean of metaphysics to the earth, and put him in the way of becoming the geographer, astrologian, Biblical critic, physiologist, and physician with whom we are made familiar in his subsequent life and writings. With the money he had saved in the two years spent with Trechsel, he went back to Paris (1536), and gave himself to the study of medicine. He became at once associated with scientists as distinguished as Andreas Vesalius, the creator of modern anatomy, and Joannes Guinterus; and in a singularly short time he obtained the degree of M.D. With the stimulus of necessity upon him, for he was poor, and the excitement of ambition, with which he was largely endowed, as he found it hard to earn a living by his profession, Servetus appeared before the world as lecturer on geography and astrology,—which then embraced the true doctrine of the heavenly bodies, as well as the false one of their influence on the life of man; and in this capacity he achieved an enormous success. Next he came forward in connection with his profession by writing a book on Medicinal Syrups and their Use, thus winning fame also as a physician. A fiery struggle was going on during the early part of the sixteenth century between the Averroists and the Galenists. Like his initiator into medical matters, Dr. Champier, Servetus was himself a Galenist; but in this character, too, he showed the independence of his nature, by having open eyes for any truth which the Arabian writers and their followers might present.

Servetus' fate on starting in life was opposition. Through superior endowment and culture, he found himself antagonistic to almost all around him; his convictions were deep, and the haughtiness and violence of his disposition made it impossible to suppress them. The physician, therefore, met the fate of the theologian. It seems that he had gone out of the way, in his lectures, to accuse his fellows of ignorance, at least of astronomy. The doctors of the faculty retaliated by denouncing him from their chairs as an impostor and a wind-bag. Servetus then wrote a pamphlet, in which he laid bare the sore places in the characters of his adversaries, even holding them up, in their ignorance, as the pests of society. His intentions being made known, the Senate of the University and the Parliament of Paris were petitioned to forbid the publication of the pamphlet; but Servetus outwitted them; before the day of citation came, the dreaded pamphlet was distributed to the public. The faculty of medicine had him summoned before the inquisitor of the king as an enemy of the Church, on the score of heresy, implied in the practice of judicial astrology. So thoroughly, however, did he satisfy the inquisitor that he was a good Christian, that he left the court with flying colors, absolved even of all suspicion of heresy. The doctors, however, in the end, won the day. The award of the Parliament ordered Michael Villanovanus to call in his pamphlet and deposit the copies in the court; to pay all honor to the faculty and its members; and he was expressly forbidden to appear in public or in any other way as a professor of astrology.

Villeneuve now moved to Charleu, near Lyons, where he resumed the practice of medicine. While at Charleu (1539), having attained his thirtieth year, according to the religious tenets he professed, he had himself baptized.

Pierre Faumier, one of his Paris admirers and friends, and now Archbishop of Vienne, hearing of his whereabouts, invited him to quit the narrow field of his practice for a wider one. Villeneuve accepted, and for the next twelve years he lived in Vienne, under the immediate patronage of the eminent prelate.

Besides practicing medicine, he resumed his connection with the publishers of Lyons, and among other works edited the Latin Bible for Trechsel, with comments of his own. From his long studies in the Scriptures he had come to the conclusion that, while the usual prophetic bearing ascribed to the Old Testament was ever to be kept in view, the text had a primary, literal, and immediate reference to the age in which it was composed and to personages, events, and circumstances among which the writers lived; and according to this plan he carried out the work. Yet Spinoza, Astruc, and others, who lived a century later, are called the founders of the modern school of Biblical exegesis, and Servetus is not even named as a Biblical critic and expositor!

We have now arrived at a momentous event in the life of Servetus,—his theological correspondence with John Calvin. It seems to have been entered upon at the suggestion of John Frelon, one of the Lyons publishers.

Servetus has been accused of having provoked the Genevese Reformer by addressing him in a style calculated to wound, if not to insult him; and the character of the man gives likelihood to the charge. But, had Calvin's letters been preserved, we doubt whether the accusation would hold good; we know for a certainty that the great Reformer applied very freely the lowest epithets to his opponents,—"rascal, dog, ass, and swine being found of constant occurrence among them; had they been any stronger than scoundrel and blasphemer, they would have been hurled at Servetus." Calvin's own letter to Frelon, their go-between, throws a great light on the subject. Among other things, he writes: "I have been led to write to him more sharply than is my wont, being minded to take him down a little in his presumption; and, I assure you, there is no lesson he needs so much to learn as humility." At any rate, Villeneuve approached the Reformer, at first, as one seeking aid and information from another presumed most capable of giving both. Calvin replied in a concise, dogmatic way which, indeed, could not satisfy a mind as thoroughly made up as that of Servetus. Moreover, the Reformer soon grew weary of the correspondence, so that Frelon had to interpose in behalf of the Spaniard in order to make the former answer his letters. Nor is this all: thinking he might escape further molestation, Calvin referred Servetus to his book, Institutiones of the Christian Religion, as though he had been a school-boy who had entered upon a discussion with the Reformer, with no knowledge of his doctrines. Villeneuve now became his critic. The copy of the Institutiones was sent back, copiously annotated in the margin. There was hardly a proposition in the text that was not taken to pieces by him and found untenable on the ground of Scriptures and patristic authority, and this he did with the freedom of expression in which Villeneuve indulged. Calvin, in writing to a friend, indignantly says, "There is hardly a page that is not defiled by his vomit." "The liberties taken with the Institutiones," Dr. Willis says, "were looked on as a crowning personal insult by Calvin; and reading, as we do, the nature of the man, it is not difficult to conclude that it was this offence, superadded to the letters, which put such rancor into his soul as made him think of the life of his critic as no more than a fair forfeit for the offence done." As a matter of course, the correspondence was soon dropped by Calvin, but not so by Servetus, who seemingly could not bear his opponent's neglect; over thirty letters of his, embracing a period of more than two years, are still extant.

Servetus meanwhile had prepared another book, Christianismi Restitutio (The Restoration of Christianity), with which he intended to bring religion back to more winning simplicity and purity. Having made a MS. copy of it, he sent it to Calvin, requesting an opinion on its merits. It was on its reception that, writing to his friend Farel, Calvin made use of the following language: "Servetus wrote to me lately, and besides his letter sent me a great volume full of his ravings, telling me with audacious arrogance that I should there find things stupendous and unheard of until now. He offers to come hither if I approve; but I will not pledge my faith to him: for, did he come, if I have any authority here, I should never suffer him to go away alive." We see already by what feeling Calvin was animated: he hates the man who did not acknowledge his superiority, as he was accustomed to see others do, and who dared to criticise his opinions. Not only did he not even condescend to offer any strictures upon Servetus' work, but he never sent back the MS., although repeatedly asked for it.

Servetus, who had kept another copy for himself, determined to have the book printed anonymously. Arrangements were made with Balthasar Arnoullet, printer at Vienne, and, as secrecy was of capital importance, a small house away from the known printing establishment was taken; type, cases, and a press were there set up, and in a period of between three and four months an edition of one thousand copies was successfully worked off. The whole impression was then made up into bales of one hundred copies each, and confided to friends at Lyons, Frankfurt, etc., for safe keeping, until the moment of putting them in the market abroad had come.

The book on The Restoration of Christianity comprises a series of disquisitions on the speculative and practical principles of Christianity as apprehended by the author; thirty of the letters he had written to Calvin, and other writings of minor importance. It is in this book that Servetus shows himself the most far-sighted physiologist of his age, by anticipating the discovery of the circulation of the blood.

Through Frelon a copy of this book, "hot from the press," was especially addressed to "Monsieur Johann Calvin, minister of Geneva." We leave for the reader to imagine what additional anger must now have entered the Reformer's heart, when, besides the offensive and, as he regarded it, heretical matter of the book, he found the letters written to him made public, himself publicly schooled, his most cherished doctrines proclaimed derogatory to God, and some of them as barring the gates of heaven! What the reader, perhaps, could not imagine is, that the "high-minded" man who had emphatically denounced the "right of the sword" in dealing with heresy was now ready to become instrumental in having it applied to Servetus. He became the denunciator of Servetus to the Catholic authorities of Vienne; he betrayed friendship and trust by furnishing them with the documents (letters and leaves from the printed book, as well as the MS. copy which he had kept) that would bring about his conviction, and consequently his death. And this was not done openly. Calvin sent the wanted information through a convert to the Reformation, a young man by the name of William Trie. Did not the style of Trie's letters and the documents show plainly the part played by the Reformer in the treason, he might be easily absolved from the charge,—so cautiously had he worked to keep his treachery a mystery. Servetus was arrested and tried; he only avoided being burned alive by making good his escape from prison (April 17, 1553), in which he seems to have been aided by some devoted friend. All the books, however, that could be found were seized and burned, together with his effigy.

Escaped from the prison of Vienne, after rambling some weeks through Southern France, he fled to Geneva. His choice of this place can hardly be accounted for. Perhaps, though he knew that Calvin had been his denunciator, it never entered his mind that the Reformer would now take the knife in hand himself. In the early morning of some day after the middle of July, he entered Geneva and put up at a small hostelry on the banks of the lake, where he seems to have lived very privately for nearly a month. On Sunday, August 13, he ventured imprudently to show himself at the evening service of a neighboring church. Being recognized, Calvin was informed of his presence, and without a moment's delay he again denounced him, and demanded his arrest. Servetus was at once thrown into the common jail of the town.

According to the laws of Geneva, grounds for an arrest on a criminal charge were to be delivered within twenty-four hours thereafter. Calvin worked all night, and thirty-eight articles drawn from the Christianismi Restitutio were in due time presented in support of the charge. Another law prescribed that criminal charges should be made by some one who avowed himself aggrieved, and was contented to go to prison with the party he accused, the law of retaliation disposing of him in case his charges were not made good; and Calvin complied with this law, too, by means of a substitute. His cook, Nicolas La Fontaine, was the man who now came forth as "personally aggrieved by," and prosecutor of, Michael Servetus!

"The Christianismi Restitutio of Servetus is one of the rarest books in the world. Of the thousand copies printed, two only are now known to survive: one among the treasures of the National Library of Paris, the other among those of the Imperial Library of Vienna.

The main charges against the Spaniard were: his having troubled the churches of Germany, about twenty-four years previously, with his heresies and with an execrable heretical book, by which he had infected many; having continued to spread poison abroad with his Comments to the Bible, the Geography of Ptolemy, and lately with his Restoration of Christianity; having blasphemed against the Trinity, the Sonship of Christ, his consubstantiality with the Father, and proclaimed infant baptism a diabolical invention; having escaped from the prison of Vienna; and, finally, "of having in his printed books made use of scurrilous and blasphemous terms of reproach in speaking of Monsieur John Calvin and his doctrines."

Servetus' reply in his preliminary interrogatory was: that he was not conscious of having caused any trouble to the churches of Germany, and defied any one to prove it; that he was unaware that the book he owned to have had printed at Hagenau had produced any evil; that it was true he had commented on the above-mentioned books, but he had said nothing in them that was not the truth; and in the book lately printed he did not believe that he blasphemed, but if it were shown that he had said anything amiss, he was ready to amend it; that in the book he wrote on the Trinity he had followed the teaching of the doctors who lived immediately after Christ and the apostles; that previous to the Council of Nicæa no doctor of the Church had used the word Trinity; that his strong language against the Trinity, as apprehended by the modern doctors, was suggested by the belief that the unity of God was by them denied or annulled; that as regards infant baptism it was his belief that none should be baptized who had not attained the years of discretion; but he added, as ever, that if he were shown to be mistaken he was ready to submit to correction; that Calvin had no right to complain of the respondent's abusive language, as he had been himself publicly abused by Calvin; he had but retaliated, and shown him from his writings that he was mistaken in many things.

On August 16, the council was formally installed as a court of criminal judicature, and the trial commenced; the answers of the prisoner to the articles being generally in the terms of his previous examination. The court closed the meeting with making good a petition of Nicolas La Fontaine to be discharged from prison, Servetus himself having given sufficient prima facie evidence of his guilt. Bail was, however, required; and this was immediately forthcoming in the person of Monsieur Antoine Calvin, brother of the Reformer. The chef de cuisine was discharged, while Servetus was remanded to jail. About this time, in a letter to his bosom friend Farel, after relating the events of Servetus' arrest and of the proceedings against him, Calvin wrote, "I hope the sentence will be capital at least."

It would be most interesting to follow this unprecedented sham-trial in all its details, as Dr. Willis has done; but want of space limits us to mere outlines of it. The party of freethought, or Libertines, showing sympathy for the prisoner, the trial assumed the character of a struggle between the two factions in Geneva. It was necessary for Calvin to nip in the bud the new growth of rebellion against his authority; and, throwing aside disguise, he now came forward as prosecutor of Servetus. The Spaniard's opinions differed so obviously from all they had ever led to believe that it was easy for Calvin to satisfy the majority of the judges of Servetus' culpability on theological grounds. It seems, however, that a feeling in favor of the prisoner prevailed in the court; the Swiss churches, which on a similar occasion had decided against Calvin, were appealed to for advice, and the proceedings were postponed. It is pitiful to see how Calvin had set his heart on the condemnation of Servetus. He interfered with the course of justice by threatening the weakest among the judges, by stirring the feelings of his party in the council; he denounced and vilified his opponent from the pulpit in no measured terms, exposing his opinions in their most glaring and repulsive aspects; he tampered with the ministers of the Swiss churches; he formulated new and more elaborate articles of accusation, and to these, besides his own, had the signatures of thirteen of his fellow-ministers appended,—in one word, he left no stone unturned to wreak his revenge. He wanted Servetus' death! The arguments and authorities piled against him by Calvin were so many, and the proceedings became so intricate, that Servetus was forced to request that he might be furnished with books, and have pen, ink, and paper supplied, in which to epitomize his defence. The jailer was directed to give him the books he wanted, and a single sheet of paper!

On this "famous" sheet, Servetus, after demonstrating that civil tribunals are incompetent to decide on questions bearing on religion only, and that heretics were either to be brought to reason by argument, or punished by banishment, and not by prison, concludes:—

"Secondly, my lords, I entreat you to consider that I have committed no offence within your territory; neither, indeed, have I been guilty of any elsewhere.

I have never been seditious, and am no disturber of the peace. During all the time I passed in Germany, I never spoke on such subjects" (his theological views), "save with Oecolampadius, Bucer, and Capito; neither in France did I ever enter on them with any one. I have always disavowed the opinions of the Anabaptists, seditious against the magistrate, and preaching community of goods. Wherefore, as I have been guilty of no sort of sedition, but have only brought up for discussion certain ancient doctrines of the Church, I think I ought not to be detained a prisoner, and made the subject of a criminal prosecution.

"In conclusion, my lords, inasmuch as I am a stranger, ignorant of the customs of this country, not knowing either how to speak or to comport myself in the circumstances under which I am placed, I humbly beseech you to assign me an advocate to speak for me in my defence."

If a shadow of justice had ruled the trial, this petition would have met with success; but the court took no notice of it. "Skilled in lying as he is," said the attorney-general, Calvin's tool, "there is no reason why he should now demand an advocate."

After the sitting of September 1, in compliance with a wish previously expressed by the court, Calvin, surrounded by a staff of ministers, proceeded to the jail to visit the prisoner. Calvin having then opened upon him with a bigoted lecture, the consequences are easily imagined: the interview ended as it could only end,—with increased irritation on both sides. From this time (and we cannot but excuse the man), Servetus became more intemperate and aggressive on Calvin; not only indisposed to yield one jot or tittle, but negligent also of opportunities to defend his conclusions. Perhaps he knew it was useless to argue, for, as a Spanish proverb says, "No man is so deaf as he who will not hear." Perhaps Perrin and Berthelier, the leaders of the Libertines, too, had fed his brain with false hopes and promises.

The trial was now interrupted through differences between Calvin and the city fathers about municipal affairs. On September 15, Servetus wrote to the council a letter, from which we quote the first paragraph:—

"MY MOST HONORED LORDS: I humbly entreat of you to put an end to these great delays, or to exonerate me of the criminal charge. You must see that Calvin is at his wit's end, and knows not what more to say, but for his pleasure would have me rot here in prison. The lice eat me up alive; my breeches are in rags, and I have no change,—no doublet, and but a single shirt in tatters. I have also demanded to have a counsel assigned me. This would have been granted me in my native country; and here I am a stranger, and ignorant of the laws and customs of the land. Yet you have given counsel to my accuser," refusing it to me."

On the 22d of September, perhaps instigated by Berthelier, Servetus took a bold step: he accused Calvin as his calumniator, and asked him to be declared subject to the law of retaliation; but the council took no more notice of this than they had of the previous petition. The appeal to the churches of Switzerland caused another pause in the proceedings, and Michael Servetus, October 10, forwarded the following letter to the council:—

"MOST NOBLE LORDS: It is now about three weeks since I petitioned for an audience, and still I have no reply. I entreat you for the love of Jesus Christ not to refuse me that you would grant to a Turk, when I ask for justice at your hands. As to what you may have commanded to be done for me in the way of cleanliness, I have to inform you that nothing has been done, and that I am in a more filthy plight than ever. In addition, I suffer terribly from the cold, and from colic, and my rupture, which causes me miseries of other kinds I should feel shame in writing about more particularly. It is very cruel that I am neither allowed to speak nor to have my most pressing wants supplied; for the love of God, sir, in pity or in duty, give orders in my behalf!"

This appeal of the prisoner, as far as his needs were concerned, met with an immediate response; but the audience was never granted. The answers of the Swiss churches arrived at last, and as Calvin had been their inspirer, and they had been taken in concert, they unanimously condemned Servetus' theological views. On the 26th of October the council solemnly assembled and condemned Servetus to be burned alive with his books, the sentence to be carried into effect on the morrow! In a letter to Farel, alluding to the vain attempts made by Perrin, the first syndic, by delay and entreaty, to save the prisoner's life, Calvin speaks of the merciful man by the nickname under which he was wont to characterize his great Libertine opponent, and says:—

"Our comical Cæsar (Perrin), having feigned illness for three days, mounted the tribune at length, with a view to aid the 'wicked scoundrel' to escape punishment. Nor did he blush to demand that the cause might be remitted to the Council of the Two Hundred. But in vain; all was refused, the prisoner was condemned, and to-morrow he will suffer death."

The sentence was imparted to Servetus in the early morning of the following day,—his last. Encouraged by the Libertines, and knowing himself guilty of no intentional blasphemy, he had never thought it possible that he would be condemned to death. He was at first as if struck dumb by the intelligence. He did but groan and sigh, as though his heart would burst, and cry, in his native language, "Misericordia!" Having by degrees recovered self-possession, he requested to see Calvin. Accompanied by two councillors, Calvin entered the prison and asked what he wanted of him. Servetus had the heroic virtue to ask pardon of him,—the man who had brought him to his death! Hard to say: the intolerant despot of

*Germain Colladon was introduced as counsel for Nicolas La Fontaine, and continued all through the trial as Calvin's champion.

Geneva, devoid of all humanity, had not a word of mercy for his victim, when a word of his would have saved him!

An hour before noon of October 27, 1553, Servetus was taken from his jail to receive his sentence from my lords the councillors and justices of Geneva. The tribunal, in conformity with custom, assembled before the porch of the Hôtel-de-Ville, and received the prisoner, all standing. The proper officer then proceeded to recapitulate the heads of the process against him, "Michael Servetus, of Villanova, in the kingdom of Aragon, in Spain," in which he is charged:—

"First, with having, between twenty-three and twenty-four years ago, caused to be printed at Hagenau, in Germany, a book against the Holy Trinity, full of blasphemies, to the great scandal of the churches of Germany, the book having been condemned by all their doctors, and he, the writer, forced to fly that country. Item. With having, in spite of this, not only persisted in his errors and infected many with them, but with having lately had another book clandestinely printed at Vienne, in Dauphiny, filled with the like heresies and execrable blasphemies against the Holy Trinity, the Son of God, the baptism of infants, and other sacred doctrines, the foundation of the Christian religion. Item. With having in the said book called all who believe in a Trinity tritheists, and even atheists, and the Trinity itself a demon or monster having three heads. Item. With having blasphemed horribly, and said that Jesus Christ was not the Son of God from all eternity, but only became so from his incarnation; that he is not the son of David according to the flesh, but was created of the substance of God, having received three of his constituent elements from God, and one only from the Virgin Mary, whereby he wickedly proposed to abolish the true and entire humanity of Jesus Christ. Item. With declaring the baptism of infants to be sorcery and a diabolical invention. Item. With having uttered other blasphemies, with which the book in question is full, all alike against the majesty of God, the Son of God, and the Holy Ghost, to the ruin of many poor souls, betrayed and desolated by such detestable doctrines. Item. With having, full of malice, entitled the said book, though crammed with heresies against the holy evangelical doctrine, Christianismi Restitutio—'The Restoration of Christianity,'—the better to deceive and seduce poor, ignorant folks, poisoning them all the while they fancied they were sitting in the shadow of sound doctrine. Item. With attacking our faith by letters as well as by his book, and saying to one of the ministers of this city that our holy evangelical doctrine is a religion without faith, and, indeed, without God, we having a Cereberus with three heads for our God. Item. For having perfidiously broken and escaped from the prison of Vienne, where he had been confined because of the wicked and abominable opinions confessed in his book. Item. For continuing obstinate in his opinions, not only against the true Christian religion, but as an arrogant innovator and inventor of heresies against popery, which led to his being burned in effigy at Vienne, along with five bales of his books. Item. And in addition to all of which, being confined in the jail of this city, he has not ceased maliciously to persist in the aforesaid wicked and detestable errors, attempting to maintain them, with calumnious abuse of all true Christians, faithful followers of the immaculate Christian religion, calling them tritheists, atheists, and sorcerers, in spite of the remonstrances made to him in Germany, as said, and in contempt of the reprehensions and corrections he has received, and the imprisonment he has undergone as well here as elsewhere.

"Now we, the syndics and judges in criminal cases within this city, having reviewed the process carried on before us, at the instance of our lieutenant having charge of such cases, against thee, Michael Servetus, of Villanova, in the kingdom of Aragon, in Spain, whereby guided, and by the voluntary confessions made before us, many times repeated, as well as by thy books produced before us, we decree and determine that thou, Michael Servetus, hast, for a long time, promulgated false and heretical doctrine, and, rejecting all remonstrance and correction, hast maliciously, perversely, and obstinately, continued disseminating and divulging, even by the printing of books, blasphemies against God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; in a word, against the whole foundations of the Christian religion, thereby seeking to create schism and trouble in the Church of God, many souls, members of which, may have been ruined and lost,—horrible and dreadful thing, scandalous and contaminating in thee, thou, having no shame nor horror in setting thyself up in all against the Divine Majesty and the Holy Trinity, and having further taken pains to infect, and given thyself up obstinately to continue infecting, the world with thy heresies and stinking heretical poison,—case and crime of heresy grievous and detestable, deserving of severe corporal punishment."

"These and other just causes moving us, desiring to purge the Church of God of such infection, and to cut off from it so rotten a member, we, sitting as a judicial tribunal in the seat of our ancestors, with the entire assent of the General Council of the State and our fellow-citizens, calling on the name of God to deliver true judgment, having the Holy Scriptures before us, and saying, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, we now pronounce our final sentence, and condemn thee, Michael Servetus, to be bound and taken to Champel, and there bound to a stake, to be burned alive, along with thy books, printed as well as written by thy hand, until thy body be reduced to ashes. So shall thy days end, and thou be made an example to others who would do as thou hast done. And we command you, our lieutenant, to see this our sentence carried forthwith into execution."

The staff, according to custom, was then broken over the prisoner, and there was silence for a moment. The terrible sentence pronounced, the silence that followed was first broken by Servetus; not to sue for mercy, for he knew there was no appeal, but to entreat that the manner of carrying it out might be commuted for one less dreadful. "He feared," he said, "that, through excess of pain, he might prove faithless to himself, and belie the convictions of his life. If he had erred, it was in ignorance; he was so constituted, mentally and morally, as to desire the glory of God, and had always striven to abide by the teachings of the Scriptures." His appeal to the humanity of the judges, however, met with no response. He prayed God to forgive his enemies and persecutors, and then exclaimed: "O God, save my soul! O Jesus, Son of the Eternal God, have compassion upon me!" From the Hôtel-de-Ville he was taken to Champel. While on the way thither, Farel, the minister who accompanied him, tried to wring from him an avowal of his error, and the prayer, "Jesus, thou Eternal Son of God!" The unhappy Servetus, with a martyr's faith, only replied in broken invocation, "Jesus, thou Son of the Eternal God, have compassion upon me!"

"When he came in sight of the fatal pile, the wretched Servetus prostrated himself on the ground, and for a while was absorbed in prayer. Rising and advancing a few steps, he found himself in the hands of the executioner, by whom he was made to sit on a block, his feet just reaching the ground. His body was then bound to the stake behind him by several turns of an iron chain, while his neck was secured in like manner by the coils of a hempen rope. His two books—the one in manuscript sent to Calvin in confidence six or eight years before for his strictures, and a copy of the one lately printed at Vienne—were fastened to his waist, and his head was encircled in mockery with a chaplet of straw and green twigs beset with brimstone. The deadly torch was then applied to the fagots and flashed in his face; and the brimstone catching, and the flames rising, wrung from the victim such a cry of anguish as struck terror into the surrounding crowd. After this he was bravely silent; but the wood being purposefully green, a long half-hour elapsed before he ceased to show signs of life and suffering. Immediately before giving up the ghost, with a last expiring effort, he cried aloud, 'Jesus, thou Son of the Eternal God, have compassion upon me!' All was then hushed save the crackling of the green wood; and by-and-by there remained no more of what had been Michael Servetus but a charred and blackened trunk, and a handful of ashes."

Thus perished a noble man of whom his age was not worthy,—the victim of murderous religious bigotry. But the crime that had been committed shocked the humanity of Geneva, even in that dark period, and, before the year was out, Calvin was driven to self-defence, and displayed the remorseless traits of his character by libelling the man whom he had slain. It is said that, in this persecution unto death, he only manifested the spirit of his age, and must be judged by that standard. While this may be true, it is also happily true that in the lapse of centuries better standards have arisen, by which the character of Calvin will be given over to execration, while that of Servetus will be increasingly honored as that of an heroic Christian martyr.—Popular Science Monthly.

THE MASSACHUSETTS MEDICAL SOCIETY AND THE "PATHIES."

Attempts to set the public right as to the position of the Massachusetts Medical Society in their relations to the so-called irregular physicians are sufficiently discouraging, and by many indeed are considered as useless and beneath the dignity of an honorable profession; but if it be true that silence gives consent to erroneous charges, it is certainly proper occasionally to assert the truth as to our position. A large proportion of the community have neither the time nor the inclination, and many, indeed, it is quite proper to say, have not the ability, to examine for themselves; so that bold assertions, however wide of the truth, if persistently reiterated and allowed to pass unchallenged, are finally accepted as correct.

To notice the constantly recurring misstatements of anonymous paragraphists in irresponsible journals would truly be a hopeless and unavailing task; but when a journal which is by general consent so influential and intelligent as the Springfield Republican, ordinarily so active and keen-sighted to all issues affecting the interests of the public, can so misapprehend the facts as to enunciate the following, under the title of "The Pathy of the Future," we may surely be pardoned if we embrace the opportunity for a word or two of comment:—

"We confidently look forward to a school of medicine in which all theories shall have their fair place, and the foundation of the doctor's education—the knowledge of the human frame and the cumulative teaching of experiment for ages—shall be the acknowledged reliance of the profession for their work, without any reference to Galen, Hahnemann, or any other theorist."

(1.) We confidently claim for the Massachusetts Medical Society that it does, not only for the future, but in the present (as it has in the past), require of its members that every theory shall have its fair place; namely, that everything new shall be carefully investigated and have a fair trial. Not only is there no disposition, but there is no power in the society to prevent this. To convince the unbelievers by enumerating the changes and additions to regular practice, even during the past half-century only, would require a volume, and we may add that two such volumes would be needed for the recapitulation of the host of novelties and crudities which after impartial trial have been rejected as worthless. Hinc illæ lachrymæ.

(2.) We confidently claim for the society that it rigidly requires of its members that a "knowledge of the human frame and the cumulative teaching of experiment for ages shall be their acknowledged reliance"; in other words, that the required standard of education, necessarily embracing all of that, shall keep pace with the rapidly progressing scientific development of the age. And,

Lastly, that, while freely welcoming all thus qualified, every "pathy," past or future, shall be strictly excluded; that homoeopath, allopath, "or any other theorist" shall not associate with us as such. Is not that plain enough for the comprehension of the most careless?

A good moral character, a high standard of education, ethical rules forbidding mystery and deceit, and only demanding that our associates shall be gentlemen in the highest sense of the word, each to the other and both to the public, ought surely to be reckoned a good enough platform. Such we unhesitatingly claim to be our platform. So often has this been asserted that ignorance of it would almost imply that our very liberality was in itself a source of offence. It is not pleasant to recognize the need of such constant repetition for the information of intelligent people; but the cry of persecution, exclusiveness, and illiberality is so perseveringly indulged in by those who either are unqualified to meet our requirements, or who find it for their interest to mislead, that, as before stated, we think it worth while from time to time to show our standard, for the guidance of those well-meaning but mistaken individuals who are so readily and carelessly misled by the disingenuous utterances to which we have alluded.

Examination must insure conviction to every reasonable mind that our claim to be the champions of the fullest latitude, both in theory and practice, not inconsistent with the demands of an educated and scientific profession, is incontrovertible.—Medical and Surgical Journal, June 27.

A STORY OF TWO PRIESTS.

The French papers are making some noise over a horrible event which has just occurred in a village of the Orleans diocese, and which throws a light on the extraordinary ignorance and fanaticism which still debase sections of the clergy, even in a country whose priests are, as a rule, more intelligent than those of other Catholic lands. In the village of Champoly, Loire, a peasant woman, some three weeks ago, was in travail. Her condition being very precarious, the parish priest, M. Cuisson, was sent for, and arrived with his curate, M. Tirard, to administer the last sacraments. While they were officiating the woman died, as the priests say; or, according to others, she merely fell into a syncope: anyhow, she lost consciousness before being delivered; and hereupon it occurred to M. Cuisson that a Cæsarean operation must be performed, in order that the unborn child might be baptized before it died, too. There was no doctor at hand, so the village shoemaker was summoned, and requested to undertake the operation. He declined, rather because he disliked the business than because he saw the impropriety of mutilating a woman before her death had been certified by the proper authorities. Nothing daunted, the curé went out to fetch another villager, whose services were always given when pigs were to be killed; and this person undertook to do what was wanted. He proceeded to some surgery which can be better imagined than described, and the child, being brought to light, was hurriedly baptized, and died in a few minutes. The husband seems to have sanctioned these extraordinary proceedings. He thought that the priests knew what they were about. So did the pig-man. In the whole village there was not a person to suggest that a gross breach of the law was being committed; and when the affair reached the ears of the local justices they were disposed to hush it up. M. About's journal, the XXIXme Siècle, had, however, got wind of the occurrence; and when it had been published in Paris a show of investigation became necessary. But in the Orleans diocese Monsignor Dupanloup is almost omnipotent in his twofold capacity of bishop and senator, and procureurs are loth to vex him. He seems to have interfered very actively to point out that MM. Cuisson and Tirard ought not to be prosecuted for an act of pious zeal; and so a judicial report has been issued exonerating the priests, on the ground that two doctors have certified that the woman must have been dead an hour when the operation was performed. As the République Française points out, the fact of the woman having been dead, even if the evidence on this point were conclusive (which is far from being the case), does not acquit the priests at all. They were not qualified to pronounce that life was extinct, and still less to order an operation which, if the woman had been in a catalepsy resembling death, must of course have killed her. The circumstance of the child having been alive when christened, certainly seems inconsistent with the theory that its mother had been dead an hour.

The conclusion to be drawn from this unpleasant story is one not favorable to the education which Romish priests receive in seminaries. MM. Cuisson and Tirard may be very worthy men, but they appear to know no more of the world than children. They have never studied the laws; science is a sealed book to them; they are animated by a fanaticism which robs them of common-sense, and impels them to arrogate to themselves attributions which it would occur to no other man, except a priest, to usurp. They think nothing of deciding off-hand that a human being is dead; and the necessity of a most delicate operation having commended itself to their minds, they decided that the nearest cobbler is the man to perform it. Failing the cobbler, they try a butcher. So great is their assurance, so evident their good faith, that they electrify all around them, and smite a whole village with foolishness. The husband looks on; the women of the place join in hunting up the butcher, and in overruling his scruples. There is a baby to be christened, lest it should not go to heaven! This is enough; and one may be sure that to this day MM. Cuisson and Tirard, the women, and the butcher are persuaded that they have done a meritorious act. They have no feeling for civil laws which fetter a priest in the administration of a sacrament. If prosecuted, they will be martyrs. Will it even occur to Monsignor Dupanloup to rebuke the zeal of his two subordinates? Possibly not; for Ultramontanes are not wholly sorry when they witness a downright case of fanaticism, showing that among the clergy the race of zealots utterly untinged with the squeamishness of modern heresies is not yet extinct. It is nearly so; and that is what makes an exception the more welcome to those shrewd men who know that a Church never holds its own by lukewarmness. The Univers has not found a word to say against the two pious men of Champoly. M. Louis Veillot will probably furnish his pen for a retort upon the République Française, and he may be expected to characterize the remarks of that journal as impious. M. Gambetta's organ persistently wages the battle, which is that of all the young Republican party, against the system by which the clergy educate its recruits in seminaries, and also against the claims of the clergy to direct the educational system of the whole country. If Monsignor Dupanloup and his friends had their way, MM. Cuisson and Tirard would hold the management of the communal school in Champoly. It would be their task to mould the young republican mind; and what lessons they would teach it in the way of respect for civil authority may be conceived. It is rather significant that Monsignor Dupanloup's seminary has the reputation of imparting a higher standard of instruction than those of any other diocese; and the two priests of Champoly, who are both comparatively young, were educated there. They must have learned Latin, ecclesiastical legendry, and so much of political history as the Jesuits choose to inculcate: nothing else. They saw no newspapers, books of science, nor other works that might have told them how the world has gone on rolling since the days of Ignatius of Loyola. So they came forth into the world with souls ecstatic and simple, and minds contracted within the narrowest compass. Their recent adventure is not calculated to make Republicans rescind the opinion that they are not the sort of tutors by whom a nation should be taught.—Pall Mall Gazette, May 7, 1878.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

ST. PETER—MAHOMET.

St. Peter.

Those who wield our ancient sceptres,
Triple crown and turban wearing,
Bishop's crozier, sword of conquest,
Once o'er all the nations bearing,—
See'st thou not they wane and dwindle
By the Golden Horn and River,
Whose famed waters deemed we fondly
'Neath their sway would roll forever?

Mahomet.

Yes, behold I rain's shadow
On our Vicars both descending,—
Superstition to their sceptres
Potency no more is lending.
Flourished they in reason's twilight;
Cross and Crescent awe no longer.
Than Faith's wild, Semitic phrensy
Truth and knowledge now are stronger.

St. Peter.

Still the rearward of the nations
Bend with wonted awe before us;
Still the Tartar, Celt, and Arab
Blindly as of yore adore us;
But what boots their adoration,
When the high, imperial races
From our altars, creeds, and temple
Haughtly avert their faces?

Mahomet.

Reminiscence must console us;
Once our away o'er souls was ample;
Sceptic Thought with all its cavils
We at will could crush and trample.
Then, recall the might we've wielded
In the centuries behind us,
When at length our rudest votaries
Shall no longer deign to mind us.

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 6.

R. D. Sawyer, 10 cents; W. H. Eastman, $3; E. D. Larned, $1.00; Philip Klinger, $1.00; Alex. Foster, $3.20; M. B. Adams, $2; Edith E. Williams, $3; D. H. Spofford, $3.20; W. H. Allen, $1; A. W. Harbaugh, $20; R. F. Briggs, $3.20; Dr. W. D. Coker, $2.50; J. H. W. Toohy, $1.70; G. H. Snelling, $1.20; Geo. W. Mead, $5; J. W. Pike, 25 cents; J. R. Morley, $3.20; H. Pratt, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 11, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLSON Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAWCETT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

M.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
COTYAVUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. OLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SURUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

THE NEW YORK Herald of May 25, reporting the "Funeral of a Positivist," classes us as one of those to whom that name applies, and adds: "Their numbers here are few, but in Boston they make quite a respectable figure." This is comical enough. Positivists, in the New York sense of the word, may be as thick in Boston as flies in a kitchen, but we do not happen to know of a single one.

BY A MISTAKE this paragraph, which ought to have been inserted in our last issue, was omitted in making up the forms for the press: "The thoughtful article on 'The Soul and the Hereafter' which we republish this week from the Banner of Light is a model of courteous and fair criticism. We are not convinced of the truth of Spiritualism, but we congratulate the Spiritualists that they have writers who can be just and kind without being untrue to their own convictions. To the unknown author of this article we return our thanks for the beautiful spirit in which our views have been considered."

A SUBSCRIBER in New Zealand has been so kind as to send us from time to time copies of local journals containing intelligence of interest respecting the progress of free thought in that distant part of the world. An old-fashioned revival has been recently carried on there by itinerant evangelists, after the fashion made familiar in this country by Moody and Sankey, Hammond, Whittle, and others. Mr. Charles Bright, however, a very independent and keen thinker, has given incisive lectures on the other side which are reported in the Dunedin papers. These show that the revivalists are not received without criticism of a healthy sort, and that Australasia has audiences in full sympathy with modern rationalism and science. The dense, dark foliage of superstition cannot keep out all the sunbeams of a better religion, even in the isles of the Pacific Ocean which are supposed to be the special garden of the missionaries.

QUOTING some time ago a floating paragraph that—"It is rumored among the Chinese that, in consequence of numerous national calamities of late, such as famine, floods, and pestilence, the youthful Emperor has been solicited to change his dynastic title, and thereby appease the wrath of the gods,"—the Christian Statesman unconsciously satirized itself by ridiculing the notion that "the legal or technical extinction of the dynasty by change of title will appease the wrath of an offended Deity and set the nation free from impending retribution," and by declaring: "Most Americans escape all concern of mind over the nation's responsibility for national sins by simply denying that any such responsibility exists. The Chinese device to bring relief to the public conscience is at least as wise as ours." The Statesman's plan of appeasing the imagined wrath of God, by getting his name into the Constitution, is veritably a "Chinese device" of the first water. It was cruelty to itself on the Statesman's part to make fun in this public way of its own superstition.

REV. MR. GORDON ON UNITARIANISM.

Rev. G. E. Gordon, the Unitarian minister of Milwaukee, is an able and liberal preacher, and has done excellent service in behalf of State Secularization. It surprises us, however, to see that he publicly claims Charles C. Burleigh as a "Unitarian."

We believe that Mr. Burleigh did not accept that name, and we are very sure that Unitarians in general indignantly disowned him thirteen years ago because of his radicalism. In April, 1865, a delegate convention was called at New York to "organize the Liberal Church of America." To that broad invitation the Free Congregational Society of Florence responded by sending delegates, of whom Mr. Burleigh was one. In the brief debate on the preamble, soon cut off by the "previous question," Mr. Burleigh shocked beyond forgiveness the highly conservative and respectable majority by declaring that the New Testament phrase, "The Lord Jesus Christ," meant no more than would be to-day expressed by the phrase, "Mr. Jesus Christ." His right to be a delegate at all was immediately and hotly denied by excited Christians; and though he was not turned out of the convention, he was subsequently disowned and treated as an interloper and an outsider by nearly every clerical member of it. At the next year's convention at Syracuse, he was again sent as a delegate by the same society; he made a splendid speech, full of the fire and lofty spirit of an old Hebrew prophet, in behalf of the reform-preamble there presented for the purpose of pledging Unitarianism to the principle of perfect spiritual freedom; and we believe he was the only delegate who spoke in support of that preamble, except the mover of it and Rev. E. C. Towne. When this movement for liberty was defeated by a two-thirds majority, we believe that Mr. Burleigh was one of the few delegates who considered themselves as no longer members of the Conference, and who afterwards stood steadfastly for that perfect spiritual freedom which Unitarianism then denied. It is our strong belief that Mr. Burleigh never afterwards considered himself a Unitarian. If we are correct in this belief, it is not right to claim him as one; if we are incorrect, we shall immediately yield the point on the presentation of evidence. Will not those who are best acquainted with the facts send to THE INDEX information on this point for the sake of putting the truth beyond dispute?

It is true that Mr. Gordon claims this great and noble reformer as a Unitarian only on the ground of "that combination of culture, freedom from traditional creeds, natural virtue, and superior philanthropy which is Unitarianism." This is Mr. Gordon's definition of Unitarianism. He says:—

"We call these high combined principles Unitarianism because they have abundantly proved to belong exclusively to Unitarians. I am not egotistical; I was not born Unitarian; but I challenge my statement to be controverted or even contradicted. Other creeds produce men of marked honesty and integrity. Other beliefs generate great enthusiasm for human welfare. Materialism and Atheism produce freedom of intellectual culture. But nothing but Unitarianism has been able to combine perfect intellectual freedom with perfect Christian philanthropy and perfect righteousness of life."

Now we have no quarrel whatever with the Unitarians, with whom we were once glad to be denominationally associated, with whom we are still glad to cherish most brotherly personal relations, and with whom we have no difference at all except one of impersonal principles. To their great credit it should be said (what cannot be said of some outside liberals) that they have manifested no personal hostility to us on account of our opinions. We shall not, we think, be suspected of any lurking ill-will, either to Mr. Gordon or to the denomination with which he is united, if we now feel called upon by his emphatic challenge both to "controvert" and to "contradict" the statements above quoted. We left the genial Unitarian fellowship for no personal grievance whatever, for we had none then and have none now; we left it with poignant regret, simply and solely because we could not enjoy perfect spiritual freedom without repudiating the position which the denomination had publicly taken. The freedom we required was larger than this public denominational position sanctioned or permitted; and the high obligation of harmonizing our own public position with our private convictions forbade us to wear the badge of a name which, notwithstanding all individual protests, belies these convictions to the world. We considered and still consider it impossible, without a breach of personal sincerity, to accept employment and compensation as a Unitarian minister without taking in good faith, unstained by mental reservations, the same religious position which the Unitarian denomination as such have publicly taken. We could not take this position in good faith, and that alone was the reason why we left the denomination. There was no quarrel, no ill-will, no grievance, but there was a separation for conscience' sake; the Unitarians could not honestly take our stand, and we could not honestly take theirs. That was all. And we want it well understood that the reasons we now proceed to state for accepting Mr. Gordon's "challenge" to "contradict" his statements are accompanied with nothing but the kindest feelings towards him and his denomination.

In the first place, then, we must respectfully deny Mr. Gordon's moral right to define Unitarianism at all. The denomination has authoritatively defined the meaning of its own name by the position it has collectively taken. No individual has a moral right to profess publicly to be a Unitarian in any different meaning of that word,—at least unless he explicitly informs his audience that he rejects the meaning which the denomination itself affixes to it. The same principle applies equally to all other sects. Unitarians are the first to apply it when eccentric Orthodox preachers put forward arbitrary private interpretations of Orthodoxy—the first to deny the right of such preachers to set up a definition of Orthodoxy other than the old standards and creeds recognized by their respective denominations. How can they object to be bound by their own rule? Arbitrary private interpretations are just as inadmissible in the case of Unitarianism as in the case of any other sect; why not? Each sect as such has the sole moral right to fix the meaning of the sect-name; why not? Mr. Gordon is bound to accept the meaning of the Unitarian name which has been fixed by the Unitarian denomination; why not? We should like a clear and direct answer to these questions.

In the next place, Mr. Gordon's definition is incorrect as a matter of fact. When he affirms that Unitarianism includes "freedom from traditional creeds," he not only disregards the collective utterances, but also the practical history, of his own denomination. The greatest of all the "traditional creeds" of Christendom—that fundamental creed out of which all the others have grown—is that "Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God"; that is, the God-appointed Messiah, the Lord and Saviour and King of the world. This most ancient and original creed of the Church, which is the only one recorded in the New Testament to have been approved by Jesus himself, is firmly imbedded in the very name of his religion, "Christian," and is the central distinction of Christianity from all other religions. Now this creed is imbedded also in the name and constitution of the "National Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches," the chief representative body of Mr. Gordon's denomination; it is imbedded just as firmly in the vast majority of its constituent local churches and associations of all sorts. It is the one "traditional creed" which was never questioned even by Channing himself, whose protest against "human creeds" never extended to that original creed of the gospel which he thought "Divine," and has never been extended to it by any of his successors who remained in full fellowship with the denomination. This "traditional creed" is still affirmed by the whole sect, and cannot be denied publicly in the pulpit except on penalty of leaving the sect. If Mr. Gordon doubts this, let him try the experiment of distinctly repudiating the Christian name and distinctly denying that Jesus is the Christ; experience will convince him that he is not "free" to discard this "traditional creed," unless he is also prepared to be forced out of the Unitarian ministry. He may forbear to affirm it positively in so many words, but he is publicly understood to affirm it by his very position as a Unitarian Christian minister. We believe him sincere in holding this position; and therefore his "freedom from traditional creeds" cannot include freedom from this chief creed of all.

Lastly, to assert that "culture, freedom from traditional creeds, natural virtue, and superior philanthropy," when combined, have been "abundantly proved to belong exclusively to Unitarians" is to make a claim which we have never seen surpassed for sectarian complacency and narrowness. To class all men and women as Unitarians in whom these qualities are combined is to force the Unitarian name on many who would repel it; it is enough to instance John Stuart Mill and Lucretia Mott, the one a vigorous opponent of Unitarianism, and the other a radical Quaker. Multitudes of others could be easily mentioned. We are inclined to think that Mr. Gordon has made an inadvertent statement here which he will not seriously abide by.

In our turn we "challenge" Mr. Gordon, in the most good-humored spirit, to meet frankly and fully the points we have made in response to his own "challenge." If he has evidence in his possession to show that Mr. Burleigh himself accepted the Unitarian name after the Syracuse Conference of 1866, we hope he will produce it; it may exist, but we are not aware of it. But, be this as it may, we trust that Mr. Gordon will, if he can, prove his own moral right to define Unitarianism rather than to accept the definition of it which the denomination have made by their collective words and history, and also prove that his own arbitrary definition is in accordance with the truth of facts. We have only responded to his "challenge" in raising these points, and take it for granted that he is prepared to defend the paradoxical position he has thereby taken.

A VIEW OF THE SITUATION.

The past eight months, with me, have been months of travel and hard work, yet work for which I have a genuine love, because devoted to the advancement of a cause to which I am strongly attached and in which I feel deeply interested. Since November 1, I have given one hundred and seventy-five lectures, and have been engaged in three public oral debates, each lasting a week, on the issues between the New Science and the Old Theology. I have been north as far as Duluth, Minn., south as far as Independence, Kansas, and west as far as Lincoln, Neb., lecturing in Ontario, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, and Missouri. In the time mentioned I have spoken in seventy different places. The audiences have usually been large, filling the best halls, the press, with but rare exceptions, friendly, giving fair, frequently full, reports of the lectures; in almost every place visited, an intelligent and lively interest has been manifested in the subjects discussed; and wherever I have been, I have witnessed unmistakable indications of the decay of the old faith and the diffusion of liberal principles.

Yet nowhere do I find the old faith extinct, and in but few places, comparatively, is liberalism yet in the ascendant. Religions do not grow in a day, neither do they die in a day. The multitude still believe more or less in the old dogmas. Unaccustomed to reasoning, disinclined to investigate, they are beyond the reach of argument and inaccessible to the immediate influence of scientific culture. And many of the educated still cling with tenacity to the orthodoxy of their youth. What is commonly called education is no guarantee against credulity or the acceptance of notions for which there is no evidence and no reason. There is another large class that conform outwardly to the prevailing system as a matter of policy,—to avoid social ostracism, to retain the good-will and patronage of the Orthodox, to secure positions, to avoid disputes for which they have no taste. Orthodoxy offers a premium on this timidity, this love of ease and popularity, this time-serving and hypocrisy. It rewards with patronage, with office, with smiles, and social favors the man who conceals his heterodoxy, while it punishes by the withdrawal of patronage, by the withholding of office, by frowns, and fulminations the man who courageously avows and maintains liberal sentiments. On the other hand true liberalism prescribes no one on account of religious convictions. No politician is in danger of losing a nomination, no merchant is liable to lose customers, no man fears he will sacrifice his social standing, by declining to identify himself with free-thought. As a class, the Orthodox clergy are narrow, prejudiced, and intolerant. They do all they can to cast reproach on science, to prevent doubt and investigation, and to perpetuate their authority over the masses. They are not in advance of the people in their theological teachings; now, as in former ages, here, as in other lands, they are behind the people, whose release from the thralldom of superstition is delayed rather than hastened by their influence. Some of the least rigid of the Orthodox clergy have recently ventured to question whether God will torture a portion of the race forever; but for doing this, when thousands in the churches have quite outgrown belief in the dogma of eternal punishment, when the progress of scepticism and freethought and the advancing spirit of humanity have caused it to be rejected by the leaders of thought, and to be seriously doubted and almost disbelieved by intelligent Christians generally, the clergymen referred to, such as Canon Farrar, Beecher, and Thomas (of Chicago), have been severely criticised and fiercely denounced by thousands of their clerical brethren.

As danger to their faith increases, the clergy naturally redouble their effort to defend it. Every observer must know that sincere belief in the Christian theology and zeal to defend it are compatible with but very little honor or honesty. And further, a man may be conscientious—desirous of doing right,—and yet if religion be the predominant sentiment, the regnant element, the controlling influence of his being, to defend and advance that religion he may not scruple to employ means most unfair and unjust. These facts should not be disregarded in viewing the course of the Orthodox clergy and their adherents. Wilful or ignorant misrepresentation of scientific men, distortions of scientific theories, malicious denunciations of liberal papers before they have been read, and of liberal lecturers before they have been heard, exhortations to the people not to read the papers and not to attend the lectures, getting control of public libraries and putting in theological books and excluding all liberal authors, harangues to the people to enforce old laws against Sabbath-breaking, diverting temperance movements from the object for which they were inaugurated, and making them the means of working up an interest in religion and of adding members to the churches, opposition to every effort made to exclude prayer and Bible-reading from our public schools, and working, often in an underhanded manner, for political influence and legislative action in favor of Christianity,—these are some of the methods and means now employed by the Orthodox clergy, and with a zeal and desperation proportionate to the danger they see from the steady advances of liberalism among the people.

Thus we see confidence in the Christian theology growing less and less every day, and liberal views spreading in every direction, permeating our literature, modifying the religious beliefs of the people, influencing the general legislation of the country, and making itself felt on public sentiment directly and indirectly in a thousand ways, and, at the same time, great activity in the churches, scheming and wire-pulling in the interests of religion, and unusual energy and determination, on the part of religious leaders and their more zealous adherents, to resist, by fair means or foul, the innovations and changes that naturally result from the progress of liberal thought.

The lectures of Joseph Cook, boasting of victories for Christianity that never occurred, and proclaiming defeats of liberalism that no historian ever did or ever will record, and declaring that a reaction against liberalism is already visible in both the Old World and the New, have been very widely published and extensively read in the country, and have given temporary courage and hope to not a few, who have been led to think that in Boston and other large cities of the East, as well as in Europe, scepticism is disappearing and that it is increasing only on the prairies of the West where it will also disappear before the advancement of enlightenment and culture. The efforts of Moody and the class of preachers to which he belongs have added to the churches an element which, although very inferior intellectually and without influence socially, enables the leaders to point to an increase of membership; and this, when the churches are in debt and liberalism seems to be increasing all around, is somewhat encouraging.

But of late, since Cook has been shown to be a wordy, bombastic, unreliable representative, since his recklessness of statement and his shallowness have been exposed in leading magazines and in representative organs of the Orthodox sects, and in the leading secular papers, as well as in the journals devoted to liberalism, confidence in him has been weakened, and he is appealed to now less frequently than he was a year ago. The more intelligent Christians show a disposition to drop him as an unreliable leader in religious thought and return to the older and more solid, even though less brilliant, authorities on which they relied before they were dazzled by Cook's rhetoric or misled by his misstatement. It is quite as true that the addition made to the churches by the efforts of men of the type of Moody and Sankey "pan out" very unsatisfactorily at the end of a year or two; and this is being seen more clearly and by a larger number of Christians every year. They fail to get the class they want the most, and they fail even to keep a large proportion of those they do get. Hence constant scheming and all sorts of attractions to draw in persons of brains and culture.

But the growth of liberalism is a steady growth. Its conquests are of an intellectual character. It is strengthened by research and discovery in almost every field of thought. It has its basis in reason and justice, and is advanced by those methods only which stimulate thought and diffuse knowledge.

Hence it is but little subject to those fluctuations which characterize movements the success of which depends largely upon appeals to the emotions of men.

While I see everywhere I go indications of the growing strength and the increasing influence of liberalism, both in and outside of the churches, I discover very little disposition on the part of liberals to unite in organizations. If liberalism in this country were to be judged, as to its strength and influence, by the number of associations formed to advance it, there would be very little reason for satisfaction. But no intelligent person will so judge it. It is broad, catholic, cosmopolitan, and at the same time progressive. Hence its aversion to propositions, formulated into a creed, to be presented for acceptance as a condition of union and a basis of action. Liberals, differing widely in their views, and attaching no criminality to any honest conviction, will never in this country unite in an organization which shall exclude from membership any class of honest, earnest thinkers on the subject of religion. But an organization broad enough to include all who choose to join it, whatever be their views on the subject of religion, can never pledge itself to, nor work for, any particular school or phase of religious or unreligious thought. It can only encourage the study of all schools and systems of philosophy and religion, and work in favor of the widest liberty and the broadest charity. But such an object will never enlist the interest of any except those who are liberal in fact as well as in name. The Christian, the Spiritualist, the Materialist, who attaches so much importance to his particular religion or philosophy, and thinks the welfare of the world so dependent upon its immediate acceptance, that he feels it to be his duty to devote all his time and energy to its promulgation, can never feel much interest in an association that regards his religion or philosophy as only one of many, all to be studied with equal interest. A religion to elicit the interest and to excite the enthusiasm of the masses must be narrow, must be positive and dogmatic concerning matters about which nothing is known, must have authoritative standards of an objective character, a rigid discipline, and an imposing ceremonial. And such a religion must necessarily be intolerant. In proportion as religions lose these features the maintenance of organization becomes difficult. Universalism, Unitarianism, and Spiritualism may be referred to in illustration of the truth of this statement. In the future, liberals of all classes may organize throughout the country on the broad basis indicated above, which I understand to be the basis of the Free Religious Association, an association which, for the very reasons I have mentioned, fails to receive encouragement or appreciation from a large number of liberals. But there must first be some years of growth.

The Liberal League offers a plan of organization which is broad and comprehensive in its character, and clear and specific in its purpose. It excludes no class of liberals. It excludes not even the Orthodox Christian. It requires only that he who joins it shall labor for equal religious liberty for all and the secularization of our government. It must be confessed that in regard to this movement liberals generally have shown themselves singularly apathetic. For this a variety of reasons can be named. The majority, accustomed to the evils which this League aims to remove, do not realize their magnitude or their injustice. A wrong inflicted on some individual excites indignation; but the wrong inflicted on millions by the exemption of churches from taxation or keeping the Bible in our public schools, because it prevails all over the country and has from the settlement of the country, is regarded as a matter of small importance even by the mass of liberals. A Liberal League formed in any community must at first be weak in numbers and influence; and men of means and position, men whose countenance and assistance are necessary to give it a start and make it a success, although ready to attend and support lectures and sign petitions, as a rule, decline to give time or attention to a League. Some who are in sympathy with the object of the League are afraid if they join it that they will be regarded as "infidels," and suffer in their business. Others think the best way to secure the reforms aimed at is by general education independently of organization. A large class are more interested in propagating their particular religious views than in working for such a general and comprehensive principle as impartial religious liberty for all. In some places where Leagues have been organized, meetings cannot be sustained because the societies have nothing to offer in the way of entertainment. There are various other reasons that so few Leagues have been formed; but they all show the movement for State Secularization is one that is in advance of the people; one indeed that the majority of liberals, owing to their education and surroundings, are not yet in a condition fully to appreciate. The subject must be agitated. It must be presented in all its bearings through the papers, in tracts and pamphlets and from the platform. The cause of State Secularization, stronger now than ever before, and growing stronger every day, has not yet acquired sufficient prominence in the public mind to attract to it many men of political influence. Those who work for it now do so from principle, not for popularity. Its history will doubtless be essentially the same as that of all other just movements which have been first opposed, then treated with indifference, and finally approved by the people, and counted among the triumphs of civilization.

The Liberal League will probably never meet the desire for an organization in which the discussion and comparison of the various systems of religion and philosophy shall be the main object, and for which there will still be the same need as now, when the noble work of State Secularization shall have been accomplished. But no other organization of liberals is as greatly needed at this time, or, in my opinion, as deserving of support, as the Liberal League.

B. F. U.

D. M. BENNETT'S CONFESSION.

In THE INDEX of January 17, referring to the well-known petition against the law of 1873, we said:—

The advice we gave about that petition was wise and good, as time will show; and we reiterate it with increased emphasis, when such an advertisement as this, published in the New York Tribune of January 8, is thrust upon public notice:—

The public are respectfully informed that the use of our name in connection with a circular petition issued by one D. M. Bennett is wholly unauthorized.

It is a matter for regret that our laws provide no suitable penalty for offences of this kind.

McKESSON & ROBBINS,
Wholesale Druggists, 91 Fulton Street, New York City.

The same paper states that McKesson & Robbins have brought suit against Mr. Bennett for "having refused to strike their names from his circular." We submit that, no matter what its objects, a petition pressed in such ways as these—putting on it the names of some parties against their protest, and slandering others because they decline to sign it—is just such a petition as should be left severely alone. It is rather late in the nineteenth century to imagine that such tactics as these can succeed with intelligent or high-spirited liberals. The cause of liberalism is the cause of purity, of truthfulness, of justice, of common kindness, of a noble morality in the very best sense of that word; and it can only be served by methods as high and noble as its objects.

Mr. Bennett sent a letter to us on this subject for publication, and we inserted it (as soon as was possible) in THE INDEX of January 31, and said simply:—

Mr. Bennett explains his use of the names of McKesson & Robbins on his circular. We drop that subject, not wishing to comment on his explanations.

This omission of comments was prompted by kindness to Mr. Bennett, for his explanations were altogether inadequate and lame, carefully evaded the essential point of McKesson & Robbins' advertisement, and made statements which did not command our own credence. We left his letter to produce such effect as it might, without expressing our own unfavorable opinion of it. Our original publication of the advertisement was made for the perfectly legitimate purpose of warning the public that at least one firm-name appended to the circular had been used without the authority of the firm itself, and that a petition so pushed should be judged by its merits, without giving any weight to the names used to support it under such suspicious circumstances. It was not we who brought the charge of misusing the names of McKesson & Robbins; these gentlemen themselves made the charge, and it was a simple act of justice to them to let their disclaimer be known. There was no malice whatever in our publication of that advertisement; the petition was a public matter; we had a perfect right to discuss it in the light of all the facts bearing upon it; and one of the most important facts was that one of the firm-signatures affixed to the circular was declared unauthorized by the parties concerned.

Mr. Bennett, however, has chosen to make the petition a personal matter, and to treat our opposition to the petition as personal hostility to himself. In the Truth Seeker of July 6, he says of us:—

He printed in one of his editorials a false statement in an advertisement from one of the city papers, penned by an enemy who was bulldozed and urged on by Anthony Comstock. By doing this, Mr. Abbot tried to show that we had committed forgery, and gave this as an additional reason why the petition should not be signed. This conduct has been pronounced by many sensible liberals with whom we have conversed and who have written us as being uncalled-for, ungenerous, unfriendly, unbrotherly, illiberal, mean, and contemptible, and we had no grounds upon which to deny the charge.

We propose to give Mr. Bennett "some grounds upon which to deny the charge," or rather to show that he has all along had grounds which he did not choose to use. He pretends to say that the statement in the advertisement, to the effect that the use of McKesson & Robbins' names was unauthorized, was a "false statement"; and he therefore pretends that we have done him injustice by publishing it. Now all this is infamous. We propose to show the public that Mr. Bennett last December confessed in writing to the aggrieved firm that his use of their names was, as the advertisement declares, "unauthorized"; and that his present air of injured innocence is proved by his own written confession to be utterly insincere. We have done him no injustice whatever. He was guilty of the offence charged upon him by the advertisement; he confessed it in writing to the parties he had wronged; he has been guilty of denying to the public what he had confessed to these parties privately; and he has been guilty of equal falsehood in almost every word he has printed concerning us during the last six months. As for these latter falsehoods, we shall not take the trouble to refute them; but we now publish the following letter from Messrs McKesson & Robbins, together with a copy of Mr. Bennett's written confession which they enclosed, leaving the public to see for themselves what degree of credit Mr. Bennett's other false accusations are entitled to:—

NEW YORK, June 25, 1878.

F. E. ABBOT, Esq., Editor, etc., Boston, Mass.:

Dear Sir,—Your favor of the 24th of June is received, calling attention to the statement of D. M. Bennett, as published in THE INDEX under date of January 31st last. These statements are a series of wilful misrepresentations of facts, which are as follows:—

D. M. Bennett called at our office for the only time, so far as our knowledge extends, in the latter part of the year 1877, with a circular having our firm name and others attached, and he desired that we should permit him to circulate this and cooperate with him in securing a repeal of the so-called Comstock laws, which request was declined. We told Mr. Bennett that we did not approve of all the provisions of these acts, but that in so far as the law related to the suppression of the circulation of immoral publications we did approve of it. He then suggested that we had better join him and have the present acts repealed, and afterwards obtain a more carefully drawn law in regard to the sale of drugs, etc., which was also declined. We then asked him by what authority he had affixed our firm name, as also the name of Messrs. Appleton & Co., publishers, to his circular; and he replied it was so placed because he had understood we were opposed to the present law, and that he was calling upon us and others to obtain consent for the use of our name in connection with his circular. We then said to him, "You have our names, and you had better see Messrs. Appleton & Co., and if they deem the law one that should be repealed, you may call on us again and we will give the matter a more careful consideration." This reference to Messrs. Appleton & Co., as publishers, was made because we did not want any argument with Bennett at the time, and because we considered Messrs. Appleton & Co. to be very competent authority in the matter of law in so far as it related to publications.

In conclusion it is only necessary to say that we have D. M. Bennett's written admission that the use of our name was unauthorized, and he has since agreed that his circular, with our name attached, should not be circulated.

When Bennett called, he was received and treated courteously, and has taken advantage of this treatment to do what he was expressly forbidden to do, and hence our present estimate of him is a very unfavorable one. We claim the privilege as citizens to approve or disapprove all measures of legislation, and to join, or to refuse to join, such parties as we may select for the promotion of desirable ends. We regard the attempt of D. M. Bennett to make us parties to the circulation of his petition, against our express request, as the work of a man quite destitute of principle, and, in all respects, despicable.

Very respectfully yours,
McKESSON & ROBBINS, per Sec'y.

[COPY.]

LIBERAL AND SCIENTIFIC PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Science Hall, 141 Eighth St.
Office of "THE TRUTH SEEKER,"
A journal of free thought and reform.
D. M. BENNETT, Editor and Proprietor.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12, '77.

I hereby admit that the name of McKesson & Robbins, as it appears on a circular addressed to publishers, booksellers, editors, lovers of liberty, justice, etc., which emanated from 141 Eighth street, was unauthorized. I called upon Mr. Robbins, and he referred me to Mr. Appleton, stating that whatever Mr. Appleton would approve he would no doubt also approve.

D. M. BENNETT.

Compare this confession with the advertisement, and judge for yourselves whether the latter is a "false statement," or whether that name belongs exclusively to Mr. Bennett's denial. We have done him no injustice at all, himself being judge.

Communications.

ST. GEORGE MIVART ON UTILITARIAN VERACITY.

In an article in the Nineteenth Century, St. George Mivart says that he cannot understand why a utilitarian, or any unbeliever, should set any store upon scientific veracity. He thinks that if a utilitarian does really interest himself in the well-being of mankind (of the possibility of which Mr. Mivart is very sceptical), in consistency, he ought not to reveal such scientific truths as he may discover, but rather to propagate such a series of ingenious fictions as will be likely to prove most conducive to the ultimate advancement of humanity according to the principle of Voltaire's famous utterance, "Si dieu n'existait pas, il faudrait l'inventer." Surely this is a genuine instance of things being hidden from the wise and prudent and yet revealed to babes; for it hardly needs more than a babe's discernment to see that if the prosperity of mankind is to be built upon a solid basis that basis must, whatever else, be sound; yet this is absolutely the whole mystery which Mr. Mivart, with all his wit and learning, declares himself at a loss to comprehend. Mr. Mivart says that he can fancy a utilitarian exclaiming against the immorality of practising such deception from utilitarian motives; and he says that although he might smile at such a person's notion of consistency, yet would he willingly pay a tribute of respect to his virtuous impulse. But what Mr. Mivart can so easily fancy would certainly never happen. That which the utilitarian would exclaim against would be, not the immorality of practising deception on Mr. Mivart's hypothesis, but the inanity of Mr. Mivart's hypothesis. Mr. Mivart (after Novalis) suggests that possibly suicide might really be the wisest policy for mankind at large. Very well! let him prove it, and the utilitarian will not regard the argument as a reductio ad absurdum, but simply accept the consequence. Assuredly it is easier to suppose that suicide might be advisable for humanity than to believe that human welfare can be promoted by systematic and habitual fraud.

St. George Mivart's argument is a fair sample of a kind very usually employed by the a priori moralists. For example, Mr. Lecky's admirable history of European Morals contains many of them. The same inherent unsoundness underlies them all. The argument runs thus: The inductive morality involves such and such conclusions, which are monstrous on the face of them. What makes the conclusions monstrous? The disputant does not inquire or explain. To do so would be against his principles, because his morality is based upon nothing except intuition. Just as the theologian accepts his dogmas because they are impossible, so does the intuitionist act thus or thus because there is no reason for so doing. To show the utility of moral conduct is to destroy its very merit in his eyes. But if we think of it we may see that what makes these principles supposed to proceed from the inductive theory seem so monstrous is, that they are plainly subversive of human welfare; in other words, that the inductive theory does not involve them.

After all, a theory of morals sufficient for the exigencies of daily life is not so hopelessly elaborate. What makes the intuitionist blunder so in their application of utilitarian principles is not dulness, but prejudice. Any one of ordinary wit—any one with wit enough to conduct the simplest business—may shape his course right on natural principles, unless in some rare dilemmas in which the a priori theory will certainly not serve him any better. Which of two or more courses will be most advantageous to mankind may be occasionally doubtful, but increasing knowledge may relieve our embarrassment; and, in the meanwhile, our duty is plain; namely, to use the best of our judgment. But the a priori moralist is often in a quite hopeless dilemma in which further knowledge will be of no avail. Principles which to him are equally sacred clash (as they must very often clash), and he has only to choose between a variety of sins. He needs a spiritual monitor always by him to nudge his elbow and direct his steps; but those good people are hard to meet with nowadays. And, besides this, since virtue and felicity have no common measure, the a priori moralist must either deny all worth to the latter, or else he will be left without any criterion of conduct, unless he will say that it were better the world should perish than that one man should commit one little sin,—in which case God is very much to blame for having made it. For any fool may know that the concern could not be run for a week on those conditions. Doubtless before my ink is dry a hundred thousand sins will have been committed in the city of New York alone, and not very little ones at that. We all know quite well that sinning is the main occupation of a good many people; but that does not spoil our appetites.

It is no wonder that a Christian cannot credit genuine unselfishness. His religion forbids it. The New Testament forbids it. The Master enjoins his disciples not to be self forgetful, but to keep continually in view the heavenly recompense. Whenever he issues his commands, that condition is always implied when not expressed. Do the believers serve the Lord for naught? "Que mon nom soit flétri, pourvu que la France soit libre." said Danton standing beside the guillotine to bid his friends his last adieu. With prouder reason than Antonio might this brave desperado have exclaimed: "Repent not ye that ye have lost a friend, as he repents not that he pays your debt." This is the mystery of love: this strong exhalation,—

Which cheers the spirit, ere its bark
Puts off into the unknown dark.

(Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.) There is nothing like this in the New Testament. Yes, once there is; but that apparent exception only confirms the rule. St. Paul says that he would be blotted from the book to save the Church, if that were possible. But it is not possible. Why not? Because such sublime devotion is unchristian. The gospel commands each individual first and foremost to secure himself. The devotion of the Christ, according to the myth, bears no comparison to the devotion of Prometheus. Every one recognizes the correctness of the judgment which pronounced the poor widow who cast her solitary mite into the treasury to be the most magnificent of givers, because of her poverty she gave her all. By parity of reasoning the sacrifice of the Christ was but a meagre sacrifice; for what are a few years of travail out of an endless life? CHARLES ELLERSHAW.

NEW YORK CITY.

UNAPPRECIATED CONDESCENSION.

YANKTON, D.T., June 7, 1878.

DEAR SIR:—

A very good friend of yours, living in this place, sent me, a day or two ago, the number of THE INDEX containing your letter of comment on your "grounds of hope." I like the tone of the letter, in portions of it, better than anything of yours I have ever read. But I perceive that your grounds of hope do not rest on, and, therefore, be assured, they cannot bring true rest to others. And it is very unwise in you or in any man to say positively, "The man is not born," who comprehends the law of matter and spirit, from the earliest to the latest hours. There are men born who have seen many things clearly that you have only guessed at, and sometimes raved at. I do not mean crazy Spiritualists; and they work now as highest souls have always worked. But I ask your pardon: this is not my way exactly, and yet I am moved to write you. If you look deep enough into the enclosed, you will see more than you ever yet have seen, and talk more cautiously in the future.

Truly, W. H. THORNE.

[We never said, "positively" or otherwise, that "the man is not born" who comprehends the law of matter and spirit." What we did say is this: "Logic declares to me: 'Of two things, one—either adhere to physics and deny your consciousness now, or adhere to your consciousness and admit that physics can raise no faintest presumption against its continuance forever.' The man has not yet been born who, understanding that, can break its force." It is something worse than "unwise" to quote in this reckless manner. There is not the remotest resemblance between what we said and what the Rev. Mr. Thorne absurdly rebukes us for saying. We are not given to "raving" at all; but if anything would justify it, it would be the wild and perverse way in which writers so unscrupulously misquote each other. Probably it is the fault of our vision that we fail to see anything new or important in the subjoined "creed," or to be in any respect instructed by our volunteer Mentor.—ED.]

Card from Rev. Mr. Thorne.

YANKTON, D.T., June 1, 1878.

EDITORS PRESS AND DAOTAIAN:—

A discussion having recently arisen in your paper, in which my name has been classed with men charged with infidelity and the holding of indefinite religious views, will you oblige me by publishing the following card, setting forth in brief the principles or creed on which all my teachings have been based for the last ten years, and in accordance with which they are likely to be uttered for the rest of my life?

This creed was first published in the Wilmington, Del., daily papers in the spring of 1872. It was again republished in the Philadelphia Public Ledger and Daily Times, and in the Camden Daily Post, last fall, in connection with a course of Sunday afternoon lectures on the "Science of Religion," which I gave in the lecture-room of the new Academy of Fine Arts at Philadelphia.

This creed, therefore, has met the eyes of about two hundred and fifty thousand readers, and in response to it I have received numerous letters from able men, commanding it as the only creed that can satisfy the reason and religious spirit of these times; but no man has ever yet charged it or its author with expressing infidelity or indefinite views.

I ask no man to subscribe to it. "Unity Church" in this place will be in no manner pledged to it; but I am pledged to it as an expression of God's eternal truth and justice and mercy and am prepared to defend it at all times and in all places, by word or deed, as infinitely superior to the faded and enslaving orthodoxy that many sincere men are still trying to uphold:—

RELIGIOUS RATIONALISM: CREED IN BRIEF.

1. The unity, eternity, and divinity of the universe; God in it and it in God, from eternity to eternity.
2. The natural evolution of every finite form and order of life, thought, worship, and being in the universe.
3. The mortality of each finite object and being, including worlds and men, eternal involution and eternal evolution being the divine order of Nature.
4. All forms of human evil and suffering are the natural, necessary outgrowths of ignorance or selfishness; and character, which is the incarnation of truth and justice in each human being, always has been, is now, and ever will be the sole salvation and hope of man.
5. The greatest "characters," in the above sense, always have been the greatest saviors, are now, and ever will be, and the saved are those most like them.

6. Religious worship, beginning with ancestral-worship, has grown to hero-worship, relic-worship, Nature-worship, polytheism, tritheism, dualism, deism, theism, pantheism, and cosmethism, or religious rationalism; and, while all worship of superior by inferior beings is elevating, and all religions of the past and present as good as possible at the time, yet the universal religion must be based on universal natural-spiritual laws, and the purest and truest worship is the worship of the Universal Spirit alone.

7. While all varieties of truths and worships are most helpful, the largest spiritual truths and worships are most helpful and inspiring to mankind.

W. H. THORNE.

THE MOBERLY LEAGUE.

MOBERLY, Mo., June 17, 1878.

DEAR INDEX:—

You have probably received ere this the report from our secretary, of the organization of a "Liberal League" in Moberly. We have had quite a "revival" here. Two months since, Mr. Underwood delivered four lectures which aroused a great deal of comment, both favorable and adverse.

Sunday, June 2, Mr. W. F. Jamieson, of Chicago, gave us two lectures on "The Demands of Liberalism" and "Common-sense vs. Orthodox Christianity."

These lectures were able, and it was during the stay of Mr. Jamieson that our League was organized, twenty signatures being obtained that day. Wishing to keep the ball in motion, we sent for J. R. Baker, of New Boston, Ill., who commenced a course of four lectures here last Friday night, giving the closing and very able lecture last night (Sunday) on the subject, "Is the Universe governed by Fixed Law or a God?" This lecture dealt hard blows at Moedysm, and shows up in a powerful manner the ridiculousness of trying to pray grasshoppers out of Kansas, Lady Franklin up from her death-bed, or a drunken boy into the paths of temperance and rectitude (even though the father of the boy be a noted divine, of exceptional character and piety.) Mr. Baker was formerly a Methodist, but of the free kind, and therefore gradually walked out "into the light," became a Universalist, and finally a liberal of the broadest kind. We bespeak for him consideration at the hands of liberals who wish a good speaker and a bold, honest man. Through the inquisitorial spirit of one man and weakness and ignorance on the part of a good many others, we were shut out of the hall which we had when Mr. Jamieson was here, and were compelled to hire the opera-house at a greatly increased rate. But the lectures were not suppressed as this religio-political wire-puller evidently hoped they would be. At the close of last night's lecture, we challenged the churches to put up their favorite, Wendling, against Underwood, the debate to take place as soon as Mr. Underwood has rested a little. But, alas! there is no prospect of their putting up any one. I hope to give you in a future letter some facts as samples of Christian truth and charity in our city of late; but no more at present. Very truly, S. C. MASON.

SOME CRITICISMS.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Your correspondent "Z" tries to demonstrate logically that if Mr. Heywood is in favor of, and should make use of, any contrivance by which, in his absence, any person could be prevented from putting before his (Heywood's) children obscene and filthy pictures and books, he must be in favor of any law which will prevent the circulation of such books and pictures; and if such a law is now upon the statute-books, he is opposed to its repeal. To me, such reasoning is absurd and the conclusion far-fetched. He might as well argue that because I do not want my children to use tobacco in any form, it being a substance which is injurious to all, I am in favor of a law which shall prevent the sending of samples through the mails, and that if I am willing that my children shall have free access to such filth, I am then consistently in favor of the repeal of such law, if one exists. "Z's" reasoning is simply contemptible.

Mr. Billingsley is also mistaken when he asserts that the advocacy of the repeal of the Comstock law will be likely to lead "all liberals" "into the support of lax morals or low sensuality of any kind." Because we do not believe that the Comstock law is the best way, or a proper way at all, to prevent the dissemination of obscene literature does not prove that we are likely to be led into any such thing. Because some of us believe that prohibitory liquor laws are unjust in themselves and ineffectual for the suppression of the traffic in these alcoholic poisons does not place us in danger of being "led into the support of lax morals" or of that traffic and its fruit, intemperance. Quite likely that it would subject us to the unfair criticism of those who favor such sumptuary laws, but that we should expect, and continue on our way, following the light of truth as we saw it, regardless of such animadversions. So in this matter of the Comstock laws, we cannot expect anything less than that the Orthodox world, which favors those laws, and possesses no powers of discrimination, will malign us, and attempt to make it appear that we are immoral and in favor of obscenity. But we do expect different treatment from liberals. We are perfectly willing to argue this question upon its merits, whether or not it is best to suppress the circulation of obscene literature by congressional enactment; but we do not consider it is fair for liberals to insinuate that we are in favor of such literature, or that we are likely to lead liberals into the support of lax morals or sensuality. Mr. Billingsley does not attempt to answer the arguments of those who favor the repeal of the Comstock laws, and show that these laws, with their abuses removed, would be the best means by which to eliminate this pernicious literature,—in other words, to argue the question upon its merits, but he; in common with yourself, Mr. Editor, and others, simply tells us that if we agitate for the repeal of said laws, the Orthodox world will be about us. THEY DO THAT ANY WAY, and shall we turn from what we consider to be the path of right and duty for that? No, gentlemen! It will take a weightier argument than the threat of Christian scorn and misrepresentation to make us abandon this work. It is the mission of liberalism to settle questions right by putting them upon the solid foundation of fact and principle; and only when laws are so founded have we stability and equilibrium. As liberals, it is our work to settle disputed questions upon their merits; not to say, "You must not do so and so for fear that your hereditary foes will say this and that about you." And as regards the merits of this question, if a national prohibitory law is the best means by which to suppress the traffic in obscene goods, is it not a fair inference to assert that it would also be the best means to suppress the liquor traffic and every other vice? And if not, why not? I cannot see how you come to the conclusion that there can be no "tampering with the mails" under the present law. Probably, though, you have a different definition for "tampering" from what I have. "The power vested in Congress to establish 'post-roads and post-offices' embraces the regulation of the entire postal system of the country. Under it, Congress may designate what shall be carried in the mails, and what shall be excluded." But upon what grounds shall matter be excluded? This is the test question. I maintain that such matter only can be excluded as would be likely to injure the mails, the means of transit, and those handling it,—for instance, liquids, explosives, poisons, and things of similar nature. If you can exclude on moral grounds, so can you on religious. The nation has just as much right to regulate, by restrictive legislation, the religious belief of its units as it has to regulate their morals. You will say that the children are the future citizens of the State, and that therefore it is her right and duty to see that they become good citizens. Certainly; but not by establishing a censorship of the mails. If the State has the right to attempt to make them good citizens in that way, so can she make them such citizens by regulating their religion in the same way.

E. C. WALKER.

WHO ARE THE LIBERALS?

Some traders in liberal literature and editors of so-called liberal papers, and some other assuming scribblers, have shown themselves to be the greatest enemies to the liberal cause. In every generation there are men like Jesus and like Judas, like Washington and like Arnold, like Emerson and like Cook, etc. It is a great enjoyment to find men who are really liberal, especially those who give us better insight into the vital principles of liberalism, and who are true to the cause which must promote the welfare of humanity. But it is a sad disappointment to find men who boast about their liberality, in the same way as some theological speculators ostentatiously parade their religion. They possess no real ability except to ridicule, misrepresent, and defame others who decline to obey their will or join their wrangling. If you differ from them and publish your opinion, they make long-winded replies in which they write very much about themselves and their great doings, but dodge the question. They pretend that they seek the truth; but if you tell them truth they do not like, they accuse you of not having outgrown reverence for old dogmas, etc., and will not scruple to use slander and falsehood instead of good reasonings.

Every brother who dissents from their notions is charged with mean motives and actions against them; yes, the very misrepresentations of their own manufacture they try to charge others with. They have a number of accomplices who assist them to misrepresent the good motives of others and deceive good people who read only one side. The press and public speakers do certainly a great deal of good; but if vain, jealous, unscrupulous persons and shrewd dissemblers wield an editorial pen, they can easily pervert the unschooled mind. Let us ascertain who are true liberals, cooperate with them, and assist them with heart and hand; but if we wish to maintain and propagate liberalism, let us shun all those pretenders whose most important effort is only to sell their illiberal productions and make money out of the liberal community. Quacks and mountebanks cannot thrive where intelligence and honesty prevail.

CARL H. HORSCH.

DOVER, N.H., June 25, 1878.

NO MORE CHURCHES NEEDED.

IN THE INDEX of June 6 a writer says: "As it is not the mission of the Liberal League to teach morality nor to cultivate the spiritual and aesthetic sentiments in human nature, I believe that a liberal church, based on rational and moral principles, would meet a very vital want of liberalism."

In reply I would say that, if the writer of the above wishes to join a church, there is a large assortment for him to select from, each of which is desirous of securing more members; and thus his want can be supplied without the labor and expense of forming a new church. To undertake to transform liberals into church-members would be a tedious and difficult job, as liberals are not likely to favor the formation of any more churches.

It costs the people of the United States about two hundred million dollars each year to support what churches we have now, and that is all that can possibly be afforded in that direction. Liberal Leagues are more likely to suit the tastes and accomplish the purposes of liberals than churches. CYRUS LEE.
June 23, A. R. 102.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

If the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STERNBERG.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 50 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. WASON, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oella Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loe, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains various reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Galtrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kaush Chander Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wason.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impairment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLIGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 Mrs. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	3.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BAUCON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.) The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Seriaty.....	2.25
The World-Poet.....	2.25
The Tail Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUECK (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-4. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist, with Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
GLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWELL). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects.....	3.00
Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CONSERVATION and Conservation of Forests: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	7.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENÉ). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' CHAS.'s History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	3.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	5.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Old-Fashioned Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
RUGO'S (VJ) New Novel, "Mistake-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 3 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	1.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	1.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelton.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Child's Eye-View.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INSESSOL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	1.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aëronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS O.). Verses, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 1 vol. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. E.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1880 to 1884.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.00
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	3.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Language, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Elkoos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Oceanic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 1 vol.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. E. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLXV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trosby Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds settled under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	1.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonancy, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.50
REYNA'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Agassiz, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S., &c.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	12.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.50
First Principles.....	1.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.00
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 1 vol.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	2.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.00
Sociology.....	1.00
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINIE'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Last-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Bridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACHER'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
Edmund, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Studies, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
TRAITER'S (MRS. CHILLA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Association at Belfast.....	.50
TITLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The String and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols. II, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHITNEY'S (H. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldsworthy's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	5.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & CO. Augusta, Maine.

ENTERPRISE.

Excellent chances for merchants, manufacturers, and laboring people. Unfailing water-power. Town growing. Address C. B. HOFFMAN, Enterprise, Kansas.

THE YOUTH'S

LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doerflinger & Co., 56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 30 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,

55 BEEKMAN STREET,

NEW YORK.

A REMARKABLE BOOK.

A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT-

TERNS OF

CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred E. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Right Hon. L. T. Salomons, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn,

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROBE-BEL-FORD PUBLISHING CO., 50 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to gether up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to NATH'L T. ALLEN, West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE

INDEX for

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.50, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. O. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-

TION REPORTS.

Attention is especially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles? Wm. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE

AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. F. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

E. A. SAWTELLE,

PIANO-FORTE TUNER.

Fifteen years' experience. Satisfaction warranted. Organs skillfully tuned and regulated. Orders left at THE INDEX office, or at Oliver Ditson & Co.'s, 451 Washington St., Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN

ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878. ... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ... E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF

THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POSITIVISM

AN EPITOME OF THE

Positive Philosophy and Religion,

Published by the Society of Humanity in the city of New York, contains the clearest statement of the subject ever made; also, Harriet Martineau's masterly defence of her religious convictions; and the Positive Classification of the Sciences, by T. B. Wakeman, etc., etc.

Send for it (enclosing 25 cents in postage stamps) to

HUGH BYRON BROWN, President of the Society, No. 141 8th St., N.Y. City.

A NOTABLE TREATISE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, T. W. HIGGINSON, W. J. POTTER, W. H. SPENCER, F. W. NEWMAN, CHAS. VOYSEY, A. W. STEVENS, R. H. RANNEY, F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address,

THE INDEX,

No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIA-

TION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. ABBOT). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Law. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

WASHINGTON ILLUS-

TRATED.

The subscriber is prepared to engage for the next lecture season (or for the summer, at the places of popular resort), for the delivery of his lectures on "Washington and its Institutions." These lectures are brilliantly illustrated by a very large number of Stereoscopic Views of public buildings, works of art, etc. They have won enthusiastic encomiums from their audiences and the press. For circulars, giving full information, address Rev. FREDERIC HINCKLEY, Dorchester Station, Boston, Mass.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. ABBOT, James Parton, E. T. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League, 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE!

CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 447.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

4. The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech on the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSES.

MR. JAMES PARTON has accepted an invitation to be present at the Watkins convention, and will read a paper on "The Coming Man's Religion."

MR. FRANK J. MEAD made an excellent address at St. Paul, at the recent session of the State Association of Spiritualists, on "Church and State."

THE FRENCH government dealt impartially with the "infidels" and the "clericals" at the late Voltaire celebration. It forbade the former to erect a statue to him publicly in the Place Chateau d'Eau, and it forbade the latter to make a public demonstration in honor of Joan of Arc. Montreal affairs are not so equitably managed.

THIS EXTRACT is from a report at the Sheffield Conference of the National Secular Society of Great Britain, June 9: "In the United States of America and in Canada there has been more Freethought lecturing during the past twelve months than has been known there for many years. The most persistent and hard-working lecturer in the North American continent has been Mr. B. F. Underwood; but during the last eight months a great amount of interest has been excited by the stirring and eloquent anti-theological addresses of Colonel R. G. Ingersoll. Some threats have been printed in New England and in Maryland, that the Blasphemy Laws would be enforced against Mr. Ingersoll, but no proceedings have yet been initiated."

AN ECLECTIC INSTITUTE, for the free discussion of all subjects relating to truth and human welfare, was organized at Dunedin, Otago, New Zealand, on May 14, with a membership of eighty-two. Mr. Charles Bright moved the first resolution, as follows: "That this meeting is of opinion that the time has arrived for the establishment of an institution in Dunedin having for its object the mental and moral advancement of those who are disinclined to take part in any sectarian association." The second resolution appointed a provisional committee of several gentlemen, and the third appointed Mr. Kelsey as secretary pro tempore. This movement is wholly in the direction of the Free Religious Association, and will command the sympathy of all its friends.

THE DEGREE of "liberality" possessed by the new Pope may be very fairly estimated by the following: "The Spanish clergy having shown great alarm at the progress of Protestant propaganda, and especially on account of the results of Bible colportage, the Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo and the Archbishop of Saragossa have applied to the Pope, and obtained from him a brief, which must be read from the pulpit in all the Spanish churches, and which forbids every Spaniard, under pain of excommunication, to give either food or shelter to any Protestant missionary. An excommunication still more severe is pronounced against any person who shall possess, whether for sale or his own private use, any Protestant books whatsoever. Beyond this, Leo XIII. has addressed an autograph letter to King Alfonso, begging him, in the name of the great Catholic country over which he reigns, to use every effort of the civil power to banish Protestant missionaries, and to confiscate their churches, schools, etc."

AT GLASGOW, a large public meeting recently adopted a resolution declaring that "the establishment of a popish hierarchy in Scotland may greatly conduce in many ways to the accomplishment of Rome's scheme of temporal subjugation; it will be the virtual institution of a separate nationality in Scotland, governed by a foreign authority, and actuated by separate interests; and as a measure of toleration it is quite uncalled for, inasmuch as Romanists at this hour enjoy in this country the fullest religious liberty." It is not a "separate nationality" in each country that Rome aims to establish, but rather one universal power throughout the globe, both spiritual and temporal, to which each country shall stand in the relation of a mere local district. Successful in this attempt, it would control legislation everywhere by controlling the consciences of all citizens and all legislators. Patriotism would cease to exist; the Church would take the place of the State in all hearts, as alone supreme.

THIS EXTRACT from one of General Washington's order-books is very aptly quoted just now by the Christian Union: "5 Nov., 1775.—As the Commander-in-Chief has been apprised of a design for the observance of that ridiculous and childish custom of burning the effigy of the Pope, he cannot help expressing his surprise that there should be officers and soldiers in the army so void of common-sense as not to see the impropriety of such a step at this juncture, at a time when we are soliciting, and have readily obtained, the friendship and alliance of the people of Canada, whom we ought to consider as brethren embarked in the same cause,—the defence of the general liberty of America. At such a juncture, and in such circumstances, to be insulting their religion is so monstrous as not to be suffered or excused; indeed, instead of offering the worst insult, it is our duty to tender thanks to them, our brethren, as to them we are indebted for every late happy success over the common enemy in Canada."

THE ATTEMPT of the London School Board to have the Bible taught in the schools of that city, yet without the inculcation of religious dogmas, has ended so far in a fierce dissension. In 1871 the Board ordered that "the Bible shall be read, and there shall be given such explanations and such instruction therefrom in the principles of morality and religion as are suited to the capacity of children." To this rule were added two provisos,—one forbidding attempts "to attach children to any particular denomination"; the other allowing the whole rule to be suspended in special cases on cause being shown. A committee has ascertained that generally "the Bible lesson is confined too exclusively to mere formal explanations of the history, or the geography, or the grammar of that portion of the book which was selected for the day." The teachers claimed that they have only obeyed the Board's directions. "You have forbidden us," they said, "to attach children to any particular denomination. Now, there is a particular denomination which does not believe in hell; if we tell a child that when the Bible says the wicked shall be cast into hell it is untrue, we attach that child to this particular denomination; if we tell him it is true, we attach him to some of the Orthodox denominations. We cannot even explain the first verse of Genesis without teaching dogma in an Orthodox or heretical manner; and so we say nothing, and the children must get their religious education elsewhere." The committee did not like this reasoning, and they issued a circular to the teachers, telling them not to be so particular, but to seize upon every opportunity of instilling into the minds of the children "those moral and religious principles on which the right conduct of their future lives must depend." The secularist members of the Board took the opportunity, when they heard of this circular, to denounce the committee for issuing it, and the fight between the Board and the committee has since been raging fiercely. The teachers adhere to their position that they cannot teach the Bible without teaching dogma, and they are unquestionably correct. This is the inevitable result of undertaking to make the Bible a "moral text-book." Until the scientific conception of morality has entirely replaced the present religious conception of it, no other result is to be expected. When it is once perceived that the laws of right and wrong are simply natural laws, the difficulty will vanish; for these natural laws can be as easily taught without theology as the laws of chemistry or political economy.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. WM. J. POTTER, New York, N. Y.
 MR. R. P. HALLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUBERT, Providence, R. I.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAINE, Boston, Mass.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE, Chicago, Ill.
 RABBI B. FELSETHAL, Sparta, Wis.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER, Florence, Mass.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL, Detroit, Mich.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN, Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER, Editor of "The American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Jewish Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. P. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. MCCORMICK, Franklin, Pa.
 HON. F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON, Tenafly, N. J.
 MISS LILLIE HOLLEY, Louisville, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, 8 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galena.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Lima.
 Iowa.....J. O. MICHEMER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....B. B. CLARK, Russellville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. EDELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....B. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLE, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lancaster.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....B. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPALDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Waton.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Dakota.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, 137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HANLAN P. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Manfede.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Manfede, Julius Plisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fleher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, B. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
 CHILMARK, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 BROOKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. Henson, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 PALMER HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elmer Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John B. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.

Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Coesad, and others.
 BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
 Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
 TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
 HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, K. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
 CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
 NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunie.
 Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
 ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunsing.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
 ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
 TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. B. B. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
 CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert O. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
 JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
 Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
 Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
 FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
 WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
 Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roy, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
 MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
 MANTOWOOD, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
 Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransoh, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
 ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
 Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
 CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. E. Swartzkopf.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
 WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
 CASE COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. E. Steele.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Case County.
 ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Benf, M. Benn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Benf, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
 PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
 XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
 Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Fraustein, M.D., E. Lebus, and others.
 OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
 Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
 CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Altchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Altchison, H. Bely, and others.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.
 NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parne.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
 HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."
 COSTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.
 MOBERLY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.
 MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinkley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary, on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.
 [N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

[FOR THE INDEX.]

The Church and State of the Future.

BY COURTLANDT PALMER.

PRESIDENT OF THE THIRD LIBERAL LEAGUE OF NEW YORK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—

Appointed as I have only very lately been to the presidency of the New York Liberal League, I have hitherto been unable to give its immediate and practical objects the attention they deserve in all their details. Its general principles, of course, I heartily concur in, else I should not be occupying this position. The elaboration of such questions as the non-exemption of churches from taxation, the secularization of our public schools, etc., etc., requires much study and statistical investigation, and it is the hope of the League that during the coming winter these subjects may be fully explained through the mouths of able and eloquent speakers.

Meanwhile, I venture to lay before you, this evening, the following essay, the points of which I have somewhat loosely thrown together, and which I entitle "The Church and State of the Future." It is true that society needs the discussion of practical questions, and the doing of practical work, rather than the construction of Utopias; but, at the same time, an ideal towards which, perhaps, we may direct our course has its use; and I present the following views, which I adopt from the standpoint of my own philosophy, as a humble contribution towards the literature of this subject. The old adage remarks, "A place for everything and everything in its place." I amend it by saying, "A place for everybody and everybody in his place."

A story I heard told not long since affords a humorous illustration of this. I was present at a dinner given by certain members of the Goethe Club to its President, Dr. Ruppner, on the eve of his departure for Europe. The late honorable and honored Wm. Cullen Bryant presided. When the after-dinner time for speech-making came, he insisted on calling upon each person present to make some remarks. I rather trembled when he finally fixed his eye on me, but managed to get through by making a little speech illustrative of my inability as a speech-maker. I mention thus much simply to give point to what follows. On the conclusion of my effort a young gentleman next to me was called on. He rose and said:—

"Mr. Chairman, Mr. Palmer says he has never attempted a speech but once or twice in his life. I am worse off than he, for I never attempted one before, and I can only convey an adequate idea of my defects as an orator by relating an experience that befell me when at college. A singing-class of the students was being formed. The music-master was trying the various voices. To one he would say, 'You go up among the tenors'; to another, 'You stand with the baritones'; to a third, 'You take your place among the bass singers.' When it came my turn, however, to display my vocal powers, he simply looked unutterable things, and said, 'Young man, go home!'"

It seems to me that this story illustrates, after a somewhat comical fashion, our position as members of the Liberal League. In the great World-Sängerfest we want the Church to chant its anthems, but not to intrude them on the national music of the State. If base and baritone, contralto and soprano, are to be inextricably mixed, nothing but discord can result; and if in the chorus of life we cannot make the powers spiritual and temporal sing each their respective parts, we had best at once chant a "Nunc dimittite," and "go home" in despair.

As a further illustration of my subject, I was led to recall a recent trip to Boston on one of the great Fall River steamboats. Did you ever think what completeness of order prevails throughout the gigantic mass? Everything and everybody were in their places. Even the waiters knew their places. Down deep in the hold were the firemen, like demons in Pandemonium, as the fires flashed upon their red shirts and blackened faces. The furnaces were glowing with the coal that supplied by its heat the moving power to the mighty hulk. The boilers were generating the steam that propelled the enormous engine, which, in the silence, smoothness, yet resistance force, it displays, reminds one of the science of the age, which alone is the grand impulse that carries us on to progress. Narrow-minded sectaries may scream forth in their nerve-grating, steam-whistle notes, suggesting danger and dismay; politicians may ring their mournful fog-bell as the mists settle down about us, but, after all, it is the great engine of truth and law that is ever taking us nearer to the haven where we would be.

But I find myself wandering from my description. Leaving the inspection of the boilers, we turn to find the vast piles of freight stowed away on the decks. The kitchen and dining saloons prove to be models of convenience (except perhaps to the impecunious); the cabins are spacious and attractive, with their carpets, furniture, and fresco; the state-rooms suggestive of rest and pleasant dreams. The captain, his mates and subordinates, discharge their important functions, while, among the passengers, Jew or Christian, Orthodox or Heterodox, may freely hold and discuss if they please their own doctrines; and yet, strange to say, the majestic mass of wood and iron keeps cleaving the water like a thing of life, a wondrous example of power and of beauty.

The whole description seems to me strongly suggestive of that well-ordered condition wherein we would wish to see the Church and State, and all the operations of public and private life. The vessel is well governed, the people are free and contented; all things are in order, and each fulfils his duty.

When I was first proposing to myself the writing of this essay, it was my intention to make something of a historical investigation of the subject; and I wrote a note to a very dear friend of mine who is one of the most learned historical scholars I know, or ever expect to know, asking him to favor me with illustrations from his studies of the EVILS of a union of Church and State. I received from him the following letter, which is sufficiently remarkable to be read in full, though, in my own self-justification, I would preface my reading of it by saying that my note of inquiry to him was written in haste and only expressed one side of my own belief on this topic. His reply was as follows, which I give with his own consent:—

"MY DEAR MR. PALMER:—

"Your kind note has made me quite miserable. I wish you had asked me something else. EVILS of a union of Church and State!! The truth is that never has a country become really and truly great unless Church and State were perfectly blended together. In fact, the power, health, and influence of a State depend upon the thorough union of Church and State, and the moment their union is dissolved the State decays. All the States of antiquity during their period of bloom and usefulness were theocracies,—Egypt, Assyria, Persia, the Greek States, and Rome itself.

"The weakening of the bonds between Church and State always forbodes the downfall of the State. You seem to consider it a sign of progress, this want of religion in our society. I consider it a sign of approaching dissolution. Our Christian society is entirely based upon the intimate connection between Church and State. The Church, or rather the soul of the Church, the implicit belief, has died before the social fabric has tumbled down; and now we see the deplorable sight of the Siamese twins repeated. You remember how one of the twins died before the other, and how the survivor had to drag along with a decaying corpse fastened to him. To sever it would be death, and not to sever it would be death. So he led for several days (nay, even weeks) a horrible existence, until kind death released him from his troubles.

"That is the deplorable position of society. One of the twins, the Church, is a rotting corpse, having died a natural death before his twin brother, the State. Of course the Church will drag its twin brother after it in the already yawning grave.

"EVILS of the union of Church and State!!

"When was England greater, when had it more weight in the councils of Europe, than during the great Cromwell's reign, when Church and State were more intimately united than ever? When was France greater and more influential than under Robert, St. Louis, and Louis XIV., epochs in which Church and State were one?

"Remember the greatness of the first chalfs!! Remember the greatness of the Ottomans under Solomon the Great!! Or Persia under the great Shah Abbas!! Or India under Aurangzebe!!

"I defy you or any one to give me an instance of a nation being great, powerful, influential, without the religious principle pervading every part of the social fabric.

"That this republic here is nothing but a mushroom growth, that notwithstanding a thousand blessings of Nature it is, after a short existence of one century, already decayed and rotten to the core (as much as other States after ten centuries), that is the result of want of a true religious principle. Hypocrisy is here abundant, but belief entirely wanting. How great would America be if the social fabric was purified by the healthful fervor of a true religious devotion!!"

Now, my friends, what shall we say in reply to this letter. Is it possible that we people of the Liberal League are all in the wrong? In advocating a total separation of Church and State, are we proposing that which is to topple down our republic? Is it wrong for us to demand that the general community should be exempted from paying taxes levied to support churches freed from such taxation? Is it absurd for us to require that Episcopalians, chaplains should no longer be hired in our navy to lead the worship of Roman Catholic sailors? Is it improper for us to ask that all public appropriations for sectarian purposes shall cease? Is it out of the way for us to insist that the Christian Bible shall not be forced down the throats of Jewish children in our schools, or that Sunday shall not be imposed upon them as their Sabbath? Must that large and growing body we variously denominate radicals, freethinkers, liberals, infidels, atheists, and the like,—must they, I say, submit to having a Christian God introduced into the Constitution of their country, a God the worship of whom to them means idolatry? Is it possible that the early settlers on our American shores, when they fled the Old World and came here to seek civil and religious liberty,—is it possible that they were mistaken? Were they in error in demanding freedom to worship their own God according to the dictates of their own conscience? Ought they to have humbly bowed to king and pope and said, "Thy will, not ours, be done"? Was Luther an anarchist of the most gigantic sort, instead of the hero we picture him? Is the right of private judgment a mockery, a delusion, and a snare?

Ladies and gentlemen, what shall we say to all this? We are apparently involved in a paradox. We are met, on the one hand, by the letter of the learned historical doctor, which assures us that all great civilizations are always the accompaniments of great RELIGIONS, and that ONLY by the union of Church and State can the institutions of society be cemented and upheld. I, for one, freely confess that I cannot dispute this. The facts of history are too strong for me.

On the other hand, I just as plainly see that the great principle of liberty, which is the soul of our American system, is a treasure I cannot part with except by the abdication of my manhood. Rather than enslave my soul to priest or king I would see civilization itself perish!!

Is there no solution of this problem, no deliverance from this horrible dilemma? Is the inevitable result before us that we must either sacrifice civilization or else surrender our freedom?

Hard were it for the race if this were really one of the enigmas of our lives! But with all humility I may say that I think I see an answer, if not the answer, to this most vital question.

We all have our remedies for social ills, each man his cure-all for public diseases; and before suggesting my explanation of the trouble, I wish to state that it is only my explanation and that of the comparatively small school with whom I agree; and I feel in such a Society or League as this that no special doctrine should be forced upon any, but that all should have full and free opportunity to ventilate their sentiments. I therefore, by way of parenthesis, express the hope that at each and every election a new president will be chosen, representing each year as widely diverging views as possible, so that all may have every chance to disclose their methods of stating and solving the great problem before us. The school to which I have alluded, and in which I include myself, is that little body whose creed is Science, whose religion is the Religion of humanity. In science and humanity I see the only hope for the individual and the race. In this doctrine I at once perceive that we have the elements of a belief in reference to which both Church and State can be guided separately, yet unitedly, while at the same time the individual becomes more and more free.

A reference to history will help us. We know that there was in the Middle Ages a certain separation of the spiritual and temporal powers. The kings ruled on their thrones, while the Pope dispensed spiritual authority from Rome. But it was the kings that kissed the toe of the Pope, and not the Pope that kissed the toe of the kings. The Church, claiming its powers from on high, was paramount over princes and peoples. Thus a great unity existed. All things were ordered and complete. A philosophy which guided the lives of all was ready made and fully believed. In the daily walks of life, in the affairs of State, in sleeping or waking hours, the aegis of the great Roman Church hung its protecting infallibility over all.

But Luther and the Reformation sprung at the throat of this great unity, with their dogma of the right of private judgment as their war-cry. The reformers said, "You may be a great, united Church, hoary with age and with the prestige of centuries behind you; but what you are doing is to crush us into spiritual slavery. We will not believe in your indulgences. They are naught but bits of parchment. We will not worship your idols. They are naught but blocks of wood. We, as men, have the same freedom to judge of these things as pope or priest."

Now, ladies and gentlemen, here was a great UNITY that Luther was aiming to destroy in the sacred name of freedom. What was this freedom that he thus claimed? Did he exact freedom from the laws of existence? Did he demand that he should be allowed to breathe without air, or to live without food? Did he claim exemption from the necessities of natural law? No! what he claimed was deliverance from false law, from an ecclesiasticism and a dogmatism that had no foundation in truth, nor in the needs of human nature. Protestantism meant a protest against false theological rules, against wrongfully assumed divine authority.

But suppose, my friends, that we continually keep applying this Protestant (pro-test-ant) principle in the affairs of the Church, what will be, nay, what must be, the result? I answer that the result can only be, in the end, total theological destruction. The Presbyterian protests against the Calvinist, the Episcopalian against the Presbyterian, the Unitarian against the Episcopalian, till the logical end can only be that all individual men and women will be protesting against each other; each one will be setting up his own little God, with his own little heaven and hell, and liberty untrammelled, individualism undiluted, and anarchy unexampled will prevail. This, friends, is the final picture of individual sovereignty from the theological point of view. If freedom means nothing but deliverance from Christian dogmatism, freedom simply means destruction. Both State and citizen may be emancipated from the Church, only to revel in an orgy of license and revolt.

But Luther builded better than he knew. The logical eventuation of his policy, as I said, could only be the final and total destruction of the theological fabric. This must in time undoubtedly happen. We to-day, in my opinion, are actually seeing the process. I am confident that among the intelligent of our race we are witnessing Christianity in its last stages of disintegration. But this is happily not all that is resulting as the outcome of Luther's revolution. To show how differently Protestantism may be regarded, I quote from Carlyle, Heroes and Hero-Worship, page 148:—

"Now I venture to assert that the exercise of private judgment, faithfully gone about, does, by no means, necessarily and in selfish independence, isolation; but rather ends necessarily in the opposite of that. It is not honest inquiry that makes anarchy; but it is error, insincerity, half-belief, and untruth that make it. A man protesting against error is on the way towards uniting himself with all men that believe in truth."

Again, on page 150, "Hero-worship never dies, nor can die. Loyalty and sovereignty are everlasting in the world; and there is this in them, that they are grounded not on garnitures and semblances, but on realities and sincerities. Not by shutting your eyes, your private judgment; no; but by opening them, and by having something to see! Luther's message was abolition and deposition of all false popes and potentates, but life and strength, though afar off, to new genuine ones. All this of liberty and equality, electoral suffrages, independence, and so forth, we will take therefore to be a temporary phenomenon, by no means a final one. Though likely to last a long time, with sad enough embroilments for us all, we must welcome it as the penalty of sins that are past, the pledge of inestimable benefits that are coming. In all ways it behooved men to quit stimulacra and return to fact; cost what it might, that did behoove to be done. With spurious popes, and believers having no private judgment—quacks pretending to command over dupes,—what can you do? Misery and mischief only. You cannot make an association out of insincere men. You cannot build an edifice except by plummet and level,—at right angles to one another! In this wild, revolutionary work, from Protestantism downwards, I see the blessed result preparing itself; not abolition of hero-worship, but rather what I would call a whole world of heroes. If hero mean sincere man, why may not every one of us be a hero? A world all sincere, a believing world,—the like has been, the like will again be, cannot help being. That were the right sort of worshippers for heroes; never could the truly better be so revered as where all were true and good."

These splendid words of the great prophet of sincerity place us in the way of learning what freedom really means. It means not only freedom from error, but freedom to follow the truth. What, then, is error and what is truth? Going far beyond Carlyle my answer would be: Theology is error, science is truth.

That science is truth we will all undoubtedly agree to; that theology is error I fear many of us will dissent from; but we who have totally discarded anthropomorphism, the supernatural, see that the affairs of this world, with their vast mixture of good and evil, cannot be referred to the ordering of an all-wise, all-good, and omnipotent God; and, looking at the question in a still larger light, we see that theology belongs to that shadowy domain into which the faculties of man cannot enter; or, in other words, that it resides and can reside only in the unknowable. This, then, is the error, the grand error of the ages, which the centuries have been vainly trying to solve, and which I, for one, claim the freedom to lay aside.

But as the heavens are fading away in the mists of the infinite, like a dissolving view, we find rising into clearer and clearer prominence this earth and the interests pertaining thereto. God, under Protestantism, is becoming a stimulacrum, a semblance, a thin imagination; but man, that is, humanity, as a great organic whole, is strongly emerging to claim the notice which is his rightful due. The soul, after seasons of wandering through the infinite, has at length returned to find a hearty welcome in its own mundane home.

This whole question, my friends, is but an excellent illustration of the law of evolution as defined by our greatest living thinker, Herbert Spencer. He shows that evolution is not only a differentiation, but that it is also an integration, which leaves us with the calm conviction in regard to the subject we are discussing, that if the old creeds are being differentiated away, men also are becoming integrated into a new social régime, wherein all that is good of the old will be preserved, and much that is superior will become superadded. Ernst Haeckel, the great German biologist, affixes a good name to the new philosophy. He calls it the monistic as opposed to the old dualistic one. In this light, no longer are we who call ourselves emancipated troubled with the foreign existences of another and impossible sphere; but in the light of cosmic emotion we find ourselves to be parts of the one great monistic order that surrounds us, wherein the known and the knowable are our only world,—lapped everlastingly in the infinite, but never comprehending it.

Thus at last is a new unity given to our lives. Humanity with its varied interests becomes our be-all and our end-all here. As I have said in another place, our atonement (at-one-ment) is completed. We are at one with the great external order of inorganic Nature by resignation to her inevitable decrees, and we become at one with our fellow-men in service, love, and duty.

And now, ladies and gentlemen, we have arrived at that conception of unity wherein Church and State can really become united, not in administration, to be sure, but in SENTIMENT. You all remember the old Roman fable of the belly and the members: how the Patrician lord instructed the revolting Plebs that their separation from the body politic was like the amputation of a limb, by means of which all the parts suffer. And thus will it be in the Utopia of which we, believers in the human religion, dream. Adopting the old Roman's simile we may liken our whole ideal to the human figure, as representative of humanity. The spiritual power (and for this comparison I am indebted to my friend, Mr. Wakeman) may then be compared to the left arm, and the temporal power to the right. Both arms are indispensable parts of the one body, yet both act independently, and with the most perfect freedom. Under this new order of things the spiritual power will be that power which advises, educates, adorns, and consecrates. It will consist of the artist, the teacher, the doctor, the lawyer; yea, also, in the scientific sense, the priest; in the sense perhaps I might say that Mr. Frothingham or Dr. Adler is a priest.

This spiritual power while united in sentiment will remain separate in administration. And so with the temporal power, the power in the future that will watch over the material well-being of the race, the power that will provide, protect, and regulate exchanges. This, also, while governed by the same motive, will fulfil its separate office. Recurring to our simile of the steamboat, we might say that under this proposed régime, in the great ship of progress, not only will Church and State be divided off from each other, but there will be a place for everybody willing to work and do his duty, and everybody will be in his place; and all, under the inspiration of this new enthusiasm, will perform their functions, not so much for themselves as for the ship; and in this view, with this impulse, the grand old vessel of life will bound forward, armed with increased safety, and animated with renewed power. Thus in this vision of the future will prevail the greatest of unities between Church and State, yet the most complete of separations.

Ladies and gentlemen, this earthly heaven for which we long lies in the future, is in fact the human future. It can never be attained by any revival of the past. On the portals of progress evolution has written its motto, "Nulla vestigia retrorsum,"—"No steps backward." We never can reconstruct our race and restore it to another genuine, all-pervading BELIEF, by offering it the dead relics of the past. As long as this earth was regarded as a vale of tears, and the after-life the one thing needful, a real unity could be, and actually was, built on this idea. But as industry, science, and the thousand complex influences of modern life, came in, the affairs of time and sense became so paramount that the old ideal had to give way; and I, for one, see no hope of a grand reconstruction except in the realization of the human Utopia I have tried to intimate.

It may perhaps be asked with some pertinence why, if I advocate this great unity of Church and State, do I assume the presidency of the New York Liberal League, whose chief aim is the complete separation of Church and State. The reply is simple enough. The union that I advocate (though under the separate conditions I have mentioned) is that of a human State and a human Church; but I do favor with all the strength of my nature the separation of the theological Church from the human State. As far as the east is from the west would I have them separate. My cry to the Church, as it stands to-day, would be: "Hands off! Attend to your affairs in heaven while we manage ours on earth." The fact is inevitable that the present Church and State are contrary the one to the other, and in the chop sea of their opposing currents no peace can exist. One glorifies heaven, the other magnifies earth; the one has its end in the hereafter, the other in the here. And, my friends, in this view, the strictly Orthodox Church is perfectly logical in refusing to advocate our measures. From their stand-point they are entirely correct to wish their God figure-headed to our Constitution; for by reason or instinct they see and feel that the more the management of affairs temporal slips from their grasp, the more their power will wane, till, finally, nothing but a vain semblance of influence will be left them.

Perhaps I have spoken too plainly; perhaps policy would suggest to me that I should adopt a more conciliatory tone. If my sentiments seem revolutionary and destructive, I would quote the oft-used motto, "To destroy, you must replace"; and what I offer as a "replacement" is this State and Church of the future. I certainly advocate no violent warfare. Far, very far from it. "Peace hath her victories more renowned than war"; and if this human ideal is to triumph, I wish it to conquer in the strength of its own power and beauty only. I therefore hope and expect that Jew and Gentile, Catholic and Atheist, one and all, who are liberal enough to love truth better than their creed, will join our ranks. We can then compare views and suggest remedies, and, in the long run, I have an abiding faith that that which is best and fittest will survive. The great St. Paul once pictured the Christian career under the metaphor of the race-course. Following such a precedent, let me fancy that Church and State have been entirely divided in our land. I see all the sects ranged like racers under the flag of the National Liberal League, which floats above the race-course of the world. An open track and even start are given to them all. I see the colors of the Catholic, Protestant, Spiritualist, Atheist, Positivist, and of all the denominations, mingled in inextricable confusion, as "they press towards the mark for the prize of their high calling." I do not predict the finish of the race. I simply say the steed of the most thoroughbred blood and mettle, the one that has the most staying power, will be sure to win, and with that I am content.

I would say, in conclusion, that I trust that the candid expression which I have thus given of my private views will excite no prejudice against our work. If our age demands one thing more than another, it is the utterance from each man of his best, most sincere and honest thought. This I have done; and I feel, moreover, that our American love of fair play, which is the essence of our association, assures to one and all a free platform. My thoughts have been led to the turn they have taken, prompted principally by the letter I have read from the learned historical doctor, and I offer them for what they are worth, thanking you for your attention and promising the same tolerance to others' views which I solicit for my own. There are certainly many points, upon some, or perhaps all, of which, we shall be able to unite, and the one aim of this League will be to seek agreements, not differences. In essentials, unity; in non-essentials, liberty; in all things, charity.

RENAN'S "CALIBAN."

PARIS, May 31.

Renan has composed a sequel to Shakespeare's "Tempest," under the title of "Caliban." He himself calls it a philosophical drama. He was inspired to write it at Ischia one fine morning, "when the vines were covered with dew, and when the sea was like a whitish silk." He had left Paris, its noise and its quarrels, and was able to enjoy the silent beauty of light and form. But his mind could not divest itself of the problems of the time. "Caliban" is, after all, but an idealized "Rabagas." It is a philosophical study of democracy.

Democracy has always appeared to me like a huge body without any nervous centre. You can prick it, and try satire and irony against it; it does not feel. It opposes to all your efforts its portentous ignorance. It works, it digests, it consumes, it produces, it has appetites, it has instincts; but where can you find the nodus vitæ, the point which, touched, suffers acutely? Where is the seat of conscience? Where is responsibility lodged? A despotism has a nervous centre in the person of the despot, in his pride, in his vanity, in his personal and traditional sentiments. It is possible to wound even a Louis XIV. or a Napoleon. Those who do it do so at the risk of their life's happiness, sometimes at the risk of their lives. Fénelon had to pay by a long exile at Cambrai for the timid advice which he dared to give Louis XIV. Chateaubriand was never pardoned for throwing up his diplomatic post after the assassination of the Duke d'Angoulême. Despots do not like reproach. They see it sometimes even in the most trifling objects. A Russian of my acquaintance told me that he was for a week in mortal fear of disgrace and of exile because the Emperor Nicholas, just before the Crimean war, met him in the Nevskoi Prospekt dressed in an English pea-jacket. Still, it is a joy and a consolation to think that you can go and seize the powerful and wicked man on his throne at the height of his glory, and that you can tell him the truth and force him to hear it. From his island of Jersey, Victor Hugo hurled forth his "Châtiments" on Napoleon III., and did not Napoleon feel the shaft when he heard such verses as these:—

"Ah! tu finiras bien par orier, misérable!"

Despotism, wrapped up in all its magnificence, surrounded with its armies and battalions, affects to ignore the existence of the intellectual worm; but the pen is, in the long run, mightier than the sword. Then, your despot is not always a moral monster. He is often—too often—a very weak man, and in this very weakness there is a resource, if he can be approached by good, moral, high-minded advisers. The influence of man over man is nowhere so great as in countries governed by traditions, with monarchical and aristocratic institutions. It is almost painful to see in the immense collection of the letters of Richelieu how much care this great minister had to take in order to preserve the confidence of his young king, to give him truly royal ideas, and to separate him from low, debasing, selfish influences. He succeeded, however,—at least, to a great extent. The poor and sticky king, so proud and so shy, so brave in battle, so timid in his court, so afraid of his best friends, and so willing to abandon them, was, nevertheless, what I have called a nervous centre. His qualities as well as his defects afforded a definite ground for the exercise of the faculties of a master mind like Richelieu.

But how are you to direct democracy? You can only do it in an indirect manner, by education, by changing the current ideas of a generation. But so long as this educational work is imperfect you must feel quite helpless. It is with democracy as with parties; you can only lead parties by following them. The general comes behind. The general is the man who feels most keenly, and who can express with the greatest force the most popular notions and ideas.

Renan supposes that Prospero, triumphing by his magic art over all his enemies, is replaced on his throne at Milan; he goes back to Lombardy with Ariel and Caliban. In his philosophical drama Prospero represents the aristocratic spirit, the dilettante, fond of art, of science; he inhabits the Certosa of Pavia, where he continues his experiments, caring but little for his subjects. Ariel represents pure idealism, the Hellenic spirit of love, of beauty. Caliban represents the democratic spirit, or rather the democratic instinct; he embodies the longings, the brutality, the inexperience, the strength, of the masses. He is the same Caliban who says in the "Tempest" to Trinculo, speaking of Prospero:—

"As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant: A sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated me Of this island."

He says no more to Trinculo:—

"I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck thee berries; I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough. A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man."

Caliban has found out that he has the same rights even that Trinculo has; he complains of his bondage. "Prospero is an usurper; I was the first occupant." Ariel tells him in vain that he is happy at Pavia, that he has plenty of good wine. "Yes," says he, "but I am exploited. Vile valet, don't you see that to be exploited by another man is the most insupportable thing? Have you no honor? No mortal has a right to make a subaltern of another. In that case, revolt becomes the holiest of duties." Ariel explains in vain that Caliban owes everything to Prospero,—the faculty of articulate language, even his human form; Caliban answers that it was a folly to teach him to speak, since he can use the faculty of speaking against Prospero. He has been deceived long enough; the monsters with which his master frightened him were inventions, lies; he will serve no more.

In the second act we are in the gardens of the Palazzo of Milan; the court is assembled, and the courtiers exchange their views on all sorts of matters. Some want reform, and some laugh at reform; they are all happy and amiable and highly-polished. Caliban is a witness of the feast behind a bush, and he asks himself why he was not invited. "Is it just that I should not be one of them? The rights of men are the same for all men." The feast begins in earnest when Prospero arrives with Ariel; he shows his guests the "gods of the future." Immense giants appear, all in polished steel. Their joints are formed and moved by powerful mechanical articulations; the oil flows in each joint; an incandescent tube is their soul. They seem to eat coal. In another part of the garden a table is spread round which the gods of flesh,—the Olympian gods. The gods of steel attack the gods of flesh, kill them, smash them. An immense confusion ends the scene.

Prospero is delighted, but his prefect of police tells him that he ought to remain for the night in Milan, that the city is in a state of fermentation. Prospero disdainfully returns to his laboratory in the Certosa. The revolution takes place after his departure. Caliban is proclaimed the head of the government, and carried in triumph to the palace. He immediately discovers and tells the people that "Order is necessary. Leave your arms, return to your houses; crown your victory by your moderation and by your respect for property. Vive Milan!" The revolution is ended. Caliban finds himself in Prospero's bed; he is kept awake by his own triumph. In the deep silence of the night he thus soliloquizes:—

"No, I would not have believed it could be so sweet to reign. I would not have believed that reigning makes men so mature. In the journey from the communal square to this palace I have changed more than during the rest of my life. Ten hours have passed since the people brought me here in their arms, and I don't know myself. I was unjust to Prospero; slavery had embittered me. Now, lying in his bed, I can judge him as colleagues judge each other. There was some good in Prospero, and in many things I feel disposed to imitate him. Is there anything more odious, for example, than this inopportune impatience of the people, this succession of impossible petitions with which they annoy me? What avidity for enjoyment! what subversive pretensions! . . . A government ought to resist. I will resist. After all, the established people and myself,—we have common interests. I am established as they are; this ought to last. Property is the ballast of society; I feel in sympathy with the proprietors."

"Then, after the useful comes the brilliant. The brilliant is necessary. I will repair my wrongs. I was jealous at the feast yesterday, because I was there uninvited. Well, feasts, the fine arts, palaces, courts, are the ornament of life. I will favor the artists. The men of letters are the distributors of glory; I will not neglect them. Who was the centre of this fine assembly of yesterday night? It was Imperia; I will court Imperia. . . . Ah! if I were only beloved I would be good and happy. A new world opens. The good exists. I see it for the first time. Prospero always spoke of making the happiness of humanity. It was not his destiny to do it. If, perhaps, it were mine."

Here Caliban goes to sleep.

Prospero has left Milan after his great feast and returned to his dear Certosa. A friend comes the next day and brings him the first proclamation of Caliban. Caliban gives himself out as a moderate. The men of order in Milan, frightened at first, already group themselves round him, and call him the savior of society. Some of them call him the great citizen. Prospero comes out of his scientific dreams; he laughs heartily; he cannot even hate Caliban. He calls Ariel; the time has come for Ariel to show what he can do. They must get rid of this brute of a Caliban, so as to be free to pursue their noble researches. Ariel goes forth, and he soon comes back; he falls from heaven heavily, like a bird blown by a hurricane. "Oh, my master! our art is vanquished; it is powerless against the people." Where Caliban can do everything Ariel can do nothing. In the enchanted island of the "Tempest" Alonso was accessible to Ariel's charms. Now all is different; the revolution is realism. What is ideal, not substantial, has ceased to exist. "When the people says, 'This does not exist,' all is finished. I tremble for the day when this terrible method of reasoning shall touch God. He will be summoned, and if the Eternal stays proudly behind the clouds he will be struck off the catalogue of existences. As for kings and dukes, we know what will become of them. The people is positivist." While Prospero is discoursing with Ariel and a few friends on the triumph of Caliban, on the moderation of Caliban, on the best way of dealing with the people, enters Fra Agostino, of Ferrara, who reads an indictment of the Holy Inquisition, accusing the Duke Prospero of heresy, calling him to account for his impious experiments, his witchcraft, and finally ordering him to follow him into the prisons of the Holy Office. The Milanese friends of the Duke become very angry, and one of them, Gonzalo, says to the Duke, "You see, Monseigneur, Caliban has one more quality: he is anti-clerical." Prospero laughs, and says: "Well! Vive Caliban!"

We come now to what may be called the moral of the piece. Caliban makes a visit, as Duke of Milan, to the Certosa; he is received by the friars. The organ plays for him, as he is sitting in the choir on the sedes ductus: "O eternal, Thou whom nothing can trouble, irritate, or console, pure and holy being, crystalline light which goes through the world without a stain, we praise Thee with our voice, and proclaim Thee just, perfect, and good. Those who believe, those who hope, those who love, are those alone who do not err." The legate of the Pope denounces the dissolute Prospero, "the mortal enemy of your highness," but Caliban feels now equally proud and generous. He refuses to deliver Prospero into the hands of the Inquisition, and says: "I am the heir of the rights of Prospero; I will defend him. Prospero is my protégé. Let him work at his ease with his philosophers, his artists, under my patronage. His labors will be the glory of my reign." He calls those who have the tradition of government, and names Gonzalo member of the Council of State. Gonzalo says: "Sir, I have counselled all my lifetime: I will die counselling; I thank your Highness."

The ceremony is finished. The prior of the friars is in his cell; he prays, and says:—

"The world, which I did well to leave, is an eternal illusion, a comedy composed of acts without an end. What happens proves what nobody would believe, that Caliban is susceptible of progress. Yes, all civilization is the work of aristocrats. Aristocracy has created the grammatical language (how many blows have been necessary to make grammar obligatory!), laws, morals, reason. . . . Well-combed, well-washed will become presentable. There will, perhaps, some day be medals 'to Caliban, protector of sciences, letters, and arts.' Prospero can live, at least for a while, under this régime, and he may even take the direction of it with prudence. . . . As for the extreme delicacy of tender souls, moved by a personal sentiment of loyalty, it has not much place left in this order of things. Such souls have nothing to do but to disappear. 'I have loved justice and hated iniquity,' said a great pope. You can still love justice; but to hate iniquity! . . . It is easier said than done. Where is iniquity? The best minds search for it, and in the end are much embarrassed."

Ariel dies, and Prospero hears from his cell the last accents of his ideal friend:—

"Præsumam quod foedat. . . . This human life is strong, but impure. I want chaste kisses. Every idealist will be my lover. I will be the virgin snow on the neck of the young girl, the fairness of her hair. I will bloom with the rose; I will be green with the myrtle, perfumed with the pink, pale with the olive-tree. Adieu, my master. Remember your little Ariel."—New York Nation.

THE SOCIALISTIC PROBLEM.

WHY IT EXISTS AND WHY IT WILL BE ARRESTED.

The existence of socialism in the United States is one of the most remarkable facts of the times. At first sight we should say that in this free and rich republic there is neither cause nor even possibility of its existence. The means of comfortable life are easier attained than in any country of the world; not absolutely cheaper, but, in proportion to labor, easier obtained. In the countries where clothing costs little and rice is abundant, the money cost of living is very little; but so is labor. We say, therefore, that, in proportion to other things, the means of comfortable living are easier attained in the United States than in any country. Why, then, should there be an attempt to reorganize society for the exclusive benefit of laborers? Or, if there be such need, why should it not have begun in the old countries long ago? Why should this country, which is best and happiest, be selected as the peculiar field for such operations?

What is the object? The National Socialist says: "The newspaper will advocate the reconstruction of society on the basis of an all-embracing justice, demanding conditions in obedience to the law of society evolution, the compulsion of progress. The necessity of the sought-for change has, through all the years of our century, been formulating this loud claim. Science, disliking the past from the present, gave the initiative, and trades-unionism, as an avant courier, stimulated by the changed teachings, asserted the new order by more urgent demands for ameliorations to oppressed labor. New inventions in machinery contributed their share in forcing the proposed revolution, and now, under the pressure of a long season of business depression, the great common heart is fast harmonizing its life-beats to the pulsations of a nobler justice than the world has yet known."

We are here told that the object of the socialist is the "reconstruction of society," the principle an "all-embracing justice," and the mode the "law of society evolution." These are the most general and abstract terms, leaving the reader totally at a loss to know what is really meant. How reconstruct society? The family is the unit of all society, and from this has proceeded society as it is. Is it proposed to reconstruct the family? The law of "society evolution" is exactly the law by which the family has been evolved. Is it proposed to make some new law, real or imaginary? Is it proposed to adopt Mormonism with many wives, or Shakerism with no wife? But the socialist may say: "We do not intend that; we merely mean to reconstruct property; we merely mean to prevent the few from holding so much, and give the many a chance." But property is the result of industry in any country where industry is free and inheritances are equal. Such is our country. A man can work at what he pleases, and save what he pleases, and invest in what he pleases. Is society to be so reconstructed that he cannot do this? Then society is no longer free. No despotism is greater than that which limits the labor, or the results of labor, or the modes of employing the fruits of labor, in any citizen. It is entirely safe to say, that any successful attempt to do that must first destroy the American government. What, then, is meant by the reconstruction of society? Who is to reconstruct society but society itself? The "reconstruction of society" is the most unmeaning phrase which can be employed, unless we first define who is to reconstruct it, and what its new reconstruction is to be. Suppose society reconstructs itself. Upon what principle? Upon "all-embracing justice." Who is to be the judge of justice? The majority, or minority? Who is to enforce justice? But supposing it can be done, where is justice more clearly announced than in the Christian doctrine? We do not ask whether society has lived up to its Christian profession, but simply whether anything can be conceived more just than that man should do unto others as he would have them do unto him. It is not conceivable by the human mind that a more exact principle of justice is possible. But the socialist may say: It is not carried out, and we want to put it in law. That the laws have favored capital, and especially incorporated capital, I think is plain. After the overthrow of the feudal system, the commercial system became dominant, and incorporations now occupy in the commercial world the place occupied by feudal barons in the landed system. That it will be overthrown or modified seems plain. But will any modification of laws of personal property solve the socialist problem? Will it benefit the laborer any more to be employed by individuals than by corporations? It is not obvious. At any rate, no abstract theories nor any denunciation of capital will avail the least until the propositions to reconstruct society are put in some definite practical form.

We come now to inquire what kind of people are they who have started and continue socialism. And is there a possibility of success? On these points the public mind is not as well informed as it should be. It is assumed that the socialists are an ignorant and depraved class of people; in one word, the lowest class, struggling against good order and restraints of government. This is a great mistake. Socialism is the result of intelligence unrestrained by religion. It is not intelligence of the highest order, but it is just such intelligence as modern education will give to men who read and understand the superficial books of the day, and especially the hundreds of books which are issued by theoretical economists, German philosophers, and infidel opposers of Christianity. In some of its leaders it is high intelligence on all the social or philosophical subjects of the day. Behind this intelligence lies the great mass of unthinking men, who are in want, and are irritated by the fact of great wealth in the hands of men who seem to have done no more for society than themselves. They forget that in this country the millionaires have, without exception, come from the very ranks to which they belong themselves. Astor and Vanderbilt are removed but one generation from common laborers. Shall we forbid the laborer from rising to the rank of Astor and Vanderbilt? Yet it is to this class, confined almost entirely to cities, that the philosophers of socialism appeal. It is to the human nature of want, and passion, and feeling they appeal, and the appeal is never wholly in vain; for human nature is always the same, from the days when David led out his needy band, to the days of the Chartists of England and the Commune of Paris. The last question is, Can they possibly succeed? No. I once talked with one of the leading Chartists of England. They had presented a petition to parliament signed with three millions of names. It seemed portentous of revolution; but the revolution did not come, and no power was used against them but that of the constables of London. I asked the Chartist about this, that, and the other class being for and against them. When we had got through I said to him: "You have but one-fifth of the people of England with you, and you can get no more." He said: "Yes." "What, then, is possible to you?" "Nothing but insurrection and revolution." "But," said I, "that is impossible, because the people are against you." So it is in this country; only more so. The socialists, nationalists, or whatever they may call themselves, are confined almost exclusively to the cities and large towns. What can they do against all the farmers, merchants, manufacturers, and bankers? The former make up two-thirds of all the able-bodied people of this country, and not a man among them has any interest in disturbing that order of society in which they live peaceably and prosperously. When you add to these the commercial and manufacturing men of business, you have nearly if not quite four-fifths of the whole people of this country. What can any socialist organization do against that? Absolutely nothing. Undoubtedly a few evil-disposed men can do much mischief, and expose the whole commercial class to loss and danger. The National Socialist, however, declares that no violence is intended, and that they will operate by the ballot. What can one fifth of the people do by the ballot? There is one thing they can do, and perhaps it would not be an unmixed evil. They can disturb and possibly disorganize the dominant political parties. This they can do, and probably will attempt. But the moment they introduce their peculiar doctrine, that moment others will be united against them. In one word, they may destroy political organizations for the time being, but cannot affect the legislation of the country, until one becomes greater than four. The vote of the last October elections shows precisely how this question divides society. The national party cast nine thousand votes in Cincinnati. Of these half were cast in the wards where the Germans predominate, and the forty precincts of the country did not cast more than half as many as one ward. It is not, therefore, a "national" party, and never can be. That it is an imported element, foreign to this country, is very plain. It is just such a product as the philosophers of Germany and the infidels of England would produce,—wholly theoretical and wholly impracticable. In this country it can have no practical success, for if Americans are characterized by anything it is common-sense. And yet our commercial system might be greatly improved and the laborer greatly benefited by putting the moneyed corporations on the same level with the laborer, and leaving individual industry to free competition. The laborers have just right to complain of some of the workings of society. But the only way to remedy them is by the gradual enlightening and convincing society that some remedy is necessary and reasonable.

While it is impossible, either by violence or by ballot, that socialists should succeed, there is, nevertheless, a real danger that masses of men in cities and in mines may be induced, by special arguments of wrongs and sufferings, to commit violence and disturbance, which may cause loss, and interrupt the operations of business. At this moment there is a great organization in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, which may result any time in a dangerous outbreak. The same is reported in several large cities, and it is evident that even a small minority may do much harm.—E. D. Mansfield in Cincinnati Gazette.

AN ELEVATED purpose is a good and ennobling thing, but we cannot begin at the top of it. We must work up to it by the often difficult path of daily duty,—daily duties always carefully performed.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE RIVER'S LESSON.

Through a lovely little village, in a valley green and still,
With streets embowered in blossoms, guarded by one stately hill,
Runs a broad and sparkling river, fed by many a trickling rill.

Ah, that river! what a lesson it conveys to thoughtful minds,
As in its proud, strong beauty by verdurous banks it winds,
And brave and free and daring its eager way it finds.

To the wide and boundless ocean, this river's destined goal!
Strong the lesson it is teaching to many a lonely soul,
Held in bondage by stern poverty, while hating such control.

For, however still and peaceful in outward mien and air,
There's no village, town, or hamlet that hides not hearts of care,—
Ambitious hearts, yet timid, that long to do and dare,

But think themselves all powerless to contend against their fate,
And deem it only possible on circumstance to wait;
So sit in silent sorrow until, alas, too late.

But the river, the brave river, sings to these a song of cheer,
Says, "O trembling hearts, be strong and calm to conquer slavish fear;

See how, through stony obstacles, my way I force and clear.
"For though the sea I long for is miles and miles away,
Though I have no guide to lead me if from my course I stray,
Yet fearless I my path pursue; no obstacle can stay.

"I plough my way with joyful song and cheerful, daring heart,
While, never pausing on my route, I take an active part,
Where'er I go, by lonely hut, or traffic's busy mart.

"So take, O silent, longing soul, thy courage by the hand;
Bid fear adieu; by force of will seize fortune's magic wand,—
So shall the river's lesson in place of fortune stand."

THORNDIKE, Mass.

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 13.

G. T. Alpaes, $1; H. P. Ring, 25 cents; Mark H. Judge, $3.66; C. B. Collins, $3.20; Mary C. Shannon, 30 cents; E. S. Westcott, $2.20; Andrew S. Walt, $3.40; Mrs. M. E. Sawyer, $3; Louis Belrose, $25; New England News Co., $5.06; American News Co., $7.95; Mrs. E. Merriman, $1.34; C. F. Baxter, $3.20; T. A. Hanson, $3.20; Geo. D. Haworth, $3.20; Prof. L. Eliaberg, $3.20; Nath'l Little, $3.20; Val H. Seaman, $3.20; R. M. La Follette, 30 cents; J. W. Ward, $9.25; Dr. N. T. Cleverger, $1.50; Chas. Vovsey, $5.83; B. Emich, 10 cents; Col. R. S. Stone, $40; E. W. Hopkins, $3.20; Cash, $3.20; Mrs. E. Crosby, $3; Geo. McMurray, $1; Geo. D. Henck, $2.10; J. E. Hawley, $1; Mrs. Mack, $3.20; Lewis James, $1; Dr. H. Nye, $3.20; Isaac N. Sterne, $3.20; Thos. Dugan, $3.20; Giles A. Adams, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 18, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FERT, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 8, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLVOAKS (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

THE Hampshire County Journal, in this State, in defence of its course in exposing a defaulting church-member, said lately: "We honestly believe that the doctrine of 'the atonement,' as inculcated from most pulpits, has been received by many as a sort of license to crime. Not in the sense of the sale of an indulgence—for its grossness would shock all sense of right,—but as a resort, in case of detection, for immunity from its punishment, especially if it is accompanied by confession."

PROFESSOR H. M. KOTTINGER'S Youth's Liberal Guide, published at Milwaukee, is an attempt to furnish a text-book on ethics for the use of liberals in educating their children without superstition. It contains much that is excellent in the teaching of moral ideas, and is especially rich in illustrative stories, extracts, and poems. It devotes a great deal of attention to religion and its history, criticising it from the stand-point of dogmatic materialism. All this, we must confess, seems to us put of place in a manual of ethics, which, properly treated, have no more to do with the common notions of religion than has geography or arithmetic. It is a mistake to treat morality as having any real connection with religious ideas, positive or negative; it has its own independent basis in social relations, which are necessary, objective facts. In the hands of a judicious teacher, however, Professor Kottinger's book can be made very useful, and is certainly a praiseworthy attempt to meet a serious practical want.

FOR SOME TIME the New York Tribune has been wavering in the support it had previously given to Anthony Comstock's bad methods of getting evidence, and his arbitrary prosecutions. These we have always condemned. But it is a good sign of the times to see one of those journals which sedulously obey current opinions beginning to perceive that Comstock is abusing a power which ought never to have been so largely vested in the hands of any single person. The Tribune said in its issue of July 11: "The Tribune has again and again defended the general purposes of the work which has unwisely, perhaps, been committed to the discretion of Mr. Anthony Comstock. Of late it has been compelled more than once to express its doubts as to the wisdom with which Mr. Comstock conducted the work. In a card written a few days ago, he resented, with some heat and doubtful grammar, any question of the entire correctness of his methods, repeated his charges in the particular case in which the Grand Jury had thrown them out, and boasted of his purpose yet to make them good. We print elsewhere his letter, together with yesterday's record of judicial proceedings in the case. The one seems to dispose pretty effectually of the other; and we now repeat, with somewhat more emphasis, the warning to the members of this society, that they must either teach Mr. Comstock more discretion or lose a good deal of the cordial support they have hitherto received from the better portion of the public and the press of New York."

THE POPE'S VICTORY OVER THE QUEEN.

Montreal is annually threatened with bloody outbreaks in the month of July, in consequence of the hostility between two factions of the Queen's subjects, the Catholics and the Protestants. The anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, at which in 1690 William III. defeated James II. and thereby ascended the throne of Great Britain, occurs on the twelfth of that month, and commemorates the final triumph of Protestantism over Catholicism in the contest for political supremacy in the British Empire. Ever since that fateful day, the Protestant organization known as the Orangemen have in one way or another celebrated the day, partly on political but still more on religious grounds; and, not unnaturally, any public celebration of it is exceedingly offensive to all Catholics. Most of the daily papers speak as if it were merely an obsolete issue that so persistently threatens the public peace at this season; but it is the fatal rancor between antagonistic living creeds that stirs the blood of each faction, and prompts to insult on the one hand and to revenge on the other. Unfortunately, mankind are still in so barbarous a condition as not to have outgrown the childishness of hating each other on account of a difference of belief; and it is this latent ferocity of the savage, surviving in those who imagine themselves civilized, which is the root of all this bitterness and threatened bloodshed.

The old quarrel this year assumed larger proportions than ever at Montreal. Notwithstanding that the Orangemen abandoned their procession last year, a young Protestant named Hackett was murdered by a Catholic mob, and it was determined and announced that the procession would certainly take place this year, in order to establish beyond dispute the Orangemen's "right to march." A conflict of civil authority arose. Mayor Beaudry, himself a Catholic and under the control of the Catholic hierarchy, issued a proclamation forbidding the procession, on the ground that the Orangemen were an illegal association and endangered the public peace. Some of the local magistrates, however, appealed to the general government at Ottawa, and asked for troops to vindicate the right of procession and to protect the Orangemen from assault. A large number of troops was sent to the city in compliance with this request, and placed under the orders of the magistrates. But Catholic roughs flocked to Montreal from all quarters; five hundred of them were sworn in by the Mayor as special constables; and it is said that thirty thousand rioters were all ready to break up the procession at all hazards. When the day came, Mayor Beaudry arrested the members of the procession as fast as they issued from their hall; and, intimidated and overawed, the Orangemen abandoned their purpose, and ventured on no demonstration abroad. The Catholic mob, virtually headed by the Mayor and no doubt secretly governed by the Church authorities, achieved a signal triumph for the second time.

Is it imagined that this will prove to be a permanent settlement of the question? He who thinks so must know very little of human nature, and equally little of the necessities of just government. The "right to march" is the principle at stake; it will not be surrendered, however flushed with victory the mob may be. The Catholics themselves claim this right, and exercise it whenever they please, as on St. Patrick's day. The "right to march" is not an absolute one; it would be far better if all political or religious processions should be impartially prohibited in great cities, on account of their dangerous tendency, under circumstances of public excitement, to lead to a breach of the peace. But the prohibition should be strictly impartial, and as strictly enforced; it can only exasperate and foment disturbance to permit one party to march, while preventing another. The "right to march" is really nothing in this case but the equality of rights in religion; and justice would be done either by protecting each faction in its processions, or by compelling both alike to refrain from them. As matters now stand in Montreal, however, it would be gross injustice to pass a law of this sort just now; it is the government's manifest duty to permit the Orangemen to enjoy what the Catholics have already enjoyed, and to vindicate their present "right to march" before abolishing this artificial right altogether for the future, both with respect to the Protestants and the Catholics. No matter if it should require the entire military force of the Dominion, the Orange procession should be protected next year by a demonstration on the part of the government so formidable as to make the Catholic mob afraid to lift a finger by way of molestation, aye, even though it should be necessary to line the whole path of the procession on each side with triple ranks of soldiers. Nothing short of this energetic and determined action will wipe out the disgrace of the fact that this year the priests have proved themselves stronger than the government. The civil authorities of Canada have received a staggering blow; they have been shown to be unable to cope with the tyranny of the Church.

This struggle has deeper roots than the shallow observers and scribblers of the press perceive. At bottom it is the question—Shall the Queen or the Pope be supreme in Canada? Shall the State or the Church be the actual dominant power of the land? This menacing and most dangerous attitude of the two in Montreal is a practical proof of the wisdom of those who, like Mr. Gladstone, discern the remote but certain consequences of the new Vaticanism of the Papacy. In every country the same question is slowly rising for solution; we must meet it here by-and-by. One is little disposed to laugh at it in Canada, in view of the late occurrences in Montreal; for there the Pope has achieved a signal and startling victory over the Queen. It remains to be seen whether the State, controlled by illogical Protestantism, is powerful enough to cope with the Roman Church, controlled by the terrible logic of Jesuitism. As Montreal proves, it is not to-day, and we do not believe that it ever will be. We believe that nothing but absolutely secular government will in the end prove itself strong enough to sustain free institutions permanently; and there is constantly growing danger in the delay to secularize it. We watch the struggle in Canada with intense and fraternal interest; for the battle there is the battle here, and victory there will be victory here. But to-day we witness there the total and ignominious defeat of the State by the Church, of the Queen by the Pope; and we cannot help wondering whether English love of liberty, equal rights, and fair play, roused at last, will be mighty enough to overthrow the proud and implacable tyranny of Rome. Of one thing we are sure: neither in Canada, in the United States, nor anywhere else, can the mongrel half-breed of Protestant Christianity prove a match for the full-blooded, inexorably logical, and Jesuitized Christianity of the Vatican. In politics as in religion, it will yet prove to be "ROME OR REASON."

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

EDITOR OF INDEX:—

When I was a boy no part of the Bible was more read, or talked, or preached about than the last book, curiously named an "Apocalypse" or "Revelation." Since the great disappointment of the Millerites, some forty years ago, in regard to the use of their white ascension-ropes, I have heard less of the book of Revelation and of the scriptural prophecies generally. But it is a wonderful book, and seemed to me when a child far superior to Milton's Paradise Lost. Many times I read it through at a single sitting, with the same sort of wonder and delight as I felt in reading the Arabian Nights, only as much greater as a thunder-storm is greater than a salvo of artillery. Further on in life, though as a prophecy it seemed to me incomprehensible and useless, I tried to persuade myself that as a poem or allegory it had a good moral.

To-day, after having laid it aside for about thirty years, I have carefully re-read it, prompted by a sermon I lately heard, which had a verse of this book for a text; and the conviction forced upon my mind as to the effect it has had upon the history of the world for the last twelve or fifteen centuries is such that I feel impelled to state it as widely and distinctly as I may.

A word about that sermon first, and the distinguished divine who preached it.

A year or two before the present century began, the first missionary society was formed in Connecticut, and its first missionary, with his young bride, was sent to the Indians at the mouth of the Maumee, in Ohio.

He was as harmless as a dove, but if he had been as wise as a serpent he would not have started on such an enterprise with the slender outfit and stipend of cash which the society allowed him. Whiskey in the hands of better-paid missionaries had preceded him, and he found the Indians much preferred that to the Gospel. He went further and fared worse till he brought up at Mackinaw, where, on account of the distance and stinginess of his employers, he was obliged to incur debt to keep from starving. None too soon he was recalled by the society to preach to the white people beginning to settle on the Western Reserve, or New Connecticut, as it was then called.

Here he conceived the idea of getting a virgin township settled wholly and exclusively by Christian people, so that the Church and the Town should be identical. To this end he made a most excellent selection of land, and, obtaining the consent of the proprietors, became their agent for the sale of homesteads, receiving instalments of pay and promising titles as soon as the payments were complete. As early as 1807, he built with his own hands, and moved into, the first log cabin in the township, with his wife and two or three children. In 1810, when it was my lot, at the age of six, to be carried to that same township, he had attracted fifteen or twenty families, very nearly all of them professing and very respectable Christians. They had already constituted themselves a church. I can remember only three men, and they were squatters, who were not in it. One of these was an honest Dutchman, one a genial but bibulous Irishman, and the other a Yankee who seemed to make a point of breaking the third and fourth commandments, simply to show his independence. But unfortunately the good missionary's family expenses and much travelling had caused him to use so much of the money paid him for land that titles from the proprietors were not forthcoming when the payments were complete, and this interfered with his usefulness and popularity as a pastor, and in fact led to his return to Connecticut with his family in 1812, in a condition of great affliction. His oldest son was my school-mate in a log school-house for two years, and just sixty-six years after that I heard that son, now a venerable D.D., preach in that same town, to which he had come on a visit with three of his sons, to find the site of the log cabin his father built.

The labors and preaching of that missionary founder of a purely Christian town seem to have been highly successful in perpetuating a race of persistent church-goers, of exemplary Orthodoxy, but his example of getting into debt beyond his ability to pay seems also, in spite of a most exuberant fertility of soil, to have had some effect; for here I found a great many people who were up to their eyes in green fields also up to their eyes in debt, because they must needs go into mining and manufacturing beyond their depth. Happily the church is not in debt for the meeting-house, which was built before the fashion of running in debt for sacred things. It is an old-fashioned structure outside, but has all modern conveniences inside, with a beautifully-flower-adorned dais for a pulpit, and a congregation dressed in the style of the day, while their theological opinions are just the same as they were fifty years ago, when I knew them going to meeting in homespun. Just as if they were pat to the people and the occasion, the preacher read from the book of Revelation those startling epistles to the seven churches of Asia.

I come now to the sermon of one of the greatest lights of Orthodoxy on the Atlantic coast. I must say, I thought it a little brave in my old friend to take his text from a part of the Bible so little used nowadays. What he made of it was that every Christian has an opportunity and is under a corresponding obligation to work for Christ, however little his strength may be, and that only they can work for Christ, that is, do any good in the world, who have not denied his name. In short, assuming Christianity to contain all that is good in the world, he preached that none but Christians can do any good. But I must do him the justice to say that he preached this in a very humdrum, professional tone of voice, as if it came from his cloth and not himself. He kindled up a little when he said every man should be true to his convictions, which seemed so much the right thing said in the right place that I felt like clapping him for it. His sermon done, he asked liberty of the congregation to be a little personal, and spoke of the labor of his father and its fruits, with a depth of feeling which touched the hearts of his hearers, and made his previous sermon seem like a lay figure. It seemed refreshing to find that preaching a purely artificial and conventional theology for half a century could not entirely spoil a man.

But how comes it to be possible that a book which if it is not prophecy is nothing, and nearly forty years after its last chance of being a prophecy has failed, can now be used without a word of apology as the sure word of God? Can it be that any educated clergyman, and especially one with two capital D's, is ignorant of the history of the interpretations of this book, and that Time has put his seal of falsehood on every one of them, till it is a sure symptom of insanity to venture another?

If it was a prophecy, time has proved it false, whether by a day we understand a day or a year.

The longest period to which its time could be stretched, from the latest date of beginning, has gone by, and no millennium, no Satan bound for a thousand years, no Lord coming in the clouds, and no saints rising to meet him. Nothing like it either, in any spiritual sense. There is no possible escape for believers in the truth of the entire Scriptures but in taking it not as a prophecy at all, but a mere poetical fiction with some allegorical sense. But if such it was, it was still a most unfortunate production, because from the first it was, and has been, almost down to the present day, understood, or rather misunderstood, as prophecy, and been used by quarrelling Christians against each other.

Look at the book calmly and read it in the light of the admitted fact that the first Christians, from the time of the crucifixion till long after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, expected Jesus Christ to come down from the clouds and set up his kingdom on earth. Consider how persecution had embittered them towards the Roman government. What was to hinder a sublime zealot from writing just such a book, prudently putting off what was momentarily expected for just three years and a half, filling up that time with visions calculated to excite the highest enthusiasm of the saints, and promising at the end of that short period the utter destruction of hated Rome, under the pseudonym of Babylon? That was to be the beginning of Christ's reign on earth for a thousand years in a golden New Jerusalem. After that Satan was to be loosed awhile, and go forth to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle, and on this occasion the world would be brought to an end by being burnt up. Considering the circumstances of the time in which he wrote, there seems no great improbability that the revelator meant literally what he said, a day for a day, and a year for a year. Of course, after three years and a half had gone away and Rome did not perish nor the New Jerusalem come down, the credulous Christians had either to extend the time or spiritualize the prophecy into an allegory. Oceans of ink have been expended in doing it, from century to century, but not much since the aforesaid disappointment of our good friends the Millerites.

As a prophecy it has turned out utterly false in every possible interpretation. As an allegory no book in the whole world's literature ever proved more disastrous to mankind. "Turbid and phantasmagorical" is what Matthew Arnold calls some of the prophecies, as those of Ezekiel and Daniel, which preceded the Christian era. But the Apocalypse is the very culmination of religious frenzy and fanaticism. It was the false glare, the aberglaube, of this very book which has upset the reason—or, as Matthew Arnold well calls it, the "sweet reasonableness"—of the Church, both Catholic and Protestant, down to the present time.

Christians were the followers of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; all other men were the children of Satan, had the mark of the Beast on their foreheads, and what was to happen to every one of them is thus described in this marvellous book: "The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb; and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." With such horrible texts Catholic priests for ages stirred up the simple-minded people to murder heretics; and Protestant divines, taking the Beast for the Pope, sternly consigned every papist to hell. Dr. Thomas Scott, commenting on this passage, says, "Every one who is at all conversant with the writings of the reformers and their successors knows that they generally declared, without hesitation, that popery was a damnable religion. Mr. Hooker, in Queen Elizabeth's time, brought himself into suspicion, and was engaged in a controversy, because he asserted, with much caution and many distinctions, that papists might be saved; and whatever contempt may be cast on their bigotry, in this day of false candor, liberality, and disregard to the Scriptures, it is worthy of serious consideration, whether this passage does not warrant by far the greatest part of what these reformers advanced on that subject." My conviction is, that the literature of the world does not contain a book which has done more mischief to the human race, or has been more palpably convicted of falsehood, than that from which my reverend friend took his text. E. W.

Communications.

HEYWOOD'S SENTENCE.

DEAR INDEX:—

I see that Heywood is sentenced to fine and imprisonment. I am sorry for this on many accounts; but it is enough to say that I regard it as unwise from more than one point of view. The main question is, however, "Is it wrong?" I am glad to see that you will treat that subject.

Meantime will you give me room to offer a distinction? If the sentence be wrong, it must be either because it is too severe or because there should be no punishment at all. If it be said that the sentence is too severe, this may be granted; but it involves the admission that Heywood has done some wrong and may be punished justly to some degree. If it be said there should be no punishment, this must be either because the publication in question contains nothing corrupting, or because what is corrupting is merely incidental, and neither the intent nor presumably the effect of the pamphlet. The former point, that there is nothing indecent or corrupting in the essay, I do not discuss. This is a matter upon which persons will differ according to their bias of mind or the influence of circumstances. But if it be said there is no crime, because whatever is corrupting in the expression or mode of treatment is merely incidental and not the intent of the writer, it may be answered that intent to commit injury is not always necessary to the idea of crime. When injury is possible, a gross carelessness may be criminal. Absolute recklessness concerning collateral consequences may be highly reprehensible and justly punishable, when the main intent is innocent and the common effects harmless.

Suppose, for instance, that a dealer in toys for children should paint his articles with dangerous and virulent poisons, because they conferred very brilliant colors attractive to the childish eye. He would not intend to poison the little ones; nevertheless the act would be intolerable and criminal; and if the dealer persisted in it after being warned, no course would remain but to restrain him by force.

Regarding Heywood's pamphlet, with which I became acquainted because he made me a present of it, I am willing to confess that after I had read it, or sufficient of it, I threw it in the fire; not with the feeling that Heywood was a bad man or that he intended to corrupt young persons, but that he had treated a topic of extreme delicacy, and of the first moment to public morals, with a recklessness of expression and manner tending to confuse, or even obliterate, moral distinction in the minds of the young and unprotected; that, to continue the above illustration, he had yielded to the temptation of daubing his work with flaunting and stimulating, but poisonous and deadly colors, to make it "sell well" and "take" with the uneducated and the exposed. If this be true, the main intent is of little consequence; the incidental recklessness is criminal, and may be restrained justly by society. Heywood may claim that liberty entitles him to be the sole judge of the proper manner and expression, so long as he does not directly aim at debauchery. But this, I apprehend, as only another form of the attempt to shield the whole abuse under free speech,—the absurdity of which, I think, has been so well shown in your columns that no one could wish it better done. I do not hesitate to lay down the principle that society may claim rightfully not only that the writer or teacher shall be responsible for what he intends to teach, so that he shall not deliberately inculcate lewdness, but that he shall be responsible also for the collateral tendencies of his style and manner of teaching, so that it shall be incumbent on him to use the language, illustrations, etc., the least likely to work injuriously on the imaginations of the young, the untought, and the passionate.

I have seen the point raised that, if Heywood's intent be unquestioned, his book is as much entitled to go its way as Shakespeare, in which the indecencies are much greater. I think the claim is nonsense. It may be more fit to discuss it when Heywood's work, or any other such production, displays the impaling and majestic moral power of that immortal poet. The cases are exactly reversed. In Shakespeare the incidental uncleanness (an admitted disfigurement, the imprint of a state of society now happily passed away) is buried under a colossal temple of morality and a beauty as sublime as that of mountains. In penny pamphlets of puny English and crude or feeble thought, the incidental uncleanness is apt to stand out as the only part sticking to the mind, and it swallows all the rest.

But, more than this, I would not be willing to see "Titus Andronicus" published in cheap form and urged upon boys through the mails at five cents a copy, or peddled about the country by female agents. I would like to see the man who should do this restrained and punished. I would say the same of many other writings whose intent was by no means to debauch, and which it would not be wise to destroy altogether. But more than this, also, whatever may be said of the claims of genius, I would hold any poet who should write "Othello" or "The Merry Wives" now, just as they stand written, to be dishonored thereby; and if, having so written, he should set agencies to work to get his writings in cheap forms into the hands of children, or of the ignorant and unthinking, I would restrain and punish him. I think it is time to say that poetry is never the better, but always the worse, for sensuality, or even a low and common sensuousness; that genius is never the more admirable, but is despicable, for dabbling in the dirty iridescence that floats on stagnation. I am glad that certain poets now in vogue do not belong to these shores; and I trust it is true that "there is little chance that the Lesbian school of poetry, which makes it a boast that it does not write for mothers or children, will ever gain a solid footing on English ground."

This subject is a grave one. The attitude of many of the "Liberals," against which you have been obliged to protest, shows the danger of a crude and rash doctrine of liberty. If reasonable men will not admit that a true doctrine of liberty requires us to refrain from interfering with speaking, printing, and disseminating things the avowed object of which is corruption, it is surely a fair question how far a correct theory of freedom obliges us to put up with a recklessly broad and offensive expression, which may not be obtrusively and avowedly, but possibly the more insidiously, hostile to delicacy of feeling and purity of character.

J. VILA BLAKE.
QUINCY, Ill., June 29, 1878.

THE MONGOLIAN PROBLEM.

Bishop Ferrette's criticisms on my recent article on the Mongolian Problem are in substance just, but he has not quite correctly apprehended me. Perhaps I was not sufficiently explicit. Perhaps I took too much for granted a measure of acquaintance with the particular merits of this case larger than is general. Also, I viewed the situation from a less remote perspective than the bishop occupies, my aim being simply to point out the pressing and intolerable evils which attend upon Chinese immigration as it is now being conducted. If the principal facts stated in Mr. Sergeantson's great speech in the California Legislature two years ago be substantially correct (and I believe they are vouched for by unimpeachable witnesses), then all the Chinese at present in this country are in the position of slaves. They consist, for the most part, of men who have left their families in bond with the Chinese usurers. In modern China, as in ancient Rome, a lender who fails to meet his engagements punctually becomes the slave of his creditor, until he has worked out his redemption, and that is the business on which the Chinese are now engaged in the Pacific States. Is it not, then, a real wrong to import these poor people in order artificially to depress the labor market,—to depress it below starvation point for the American or European? No doubt cheap imported labor does increase a country's material wealth, but, according to existing social arrangements, it enriches the rich only and impoverishes the poor. The Chinaman will always be able to underbid the American-born citizen in some departments of the labor market, because he is unambitious and satisfied with a meaner way of living. But is he, because of this, the better man? Not so. In this country he only plays the part of a well-trained animal. He has hands, but not a head. And, unluckily for him, hands are at a discount, whereas the demand for heads grows brisker every year.

What Hume, with his accustomed perspicacity, surmised from a priori reasons, has since then been confirmed a posteriori; namely, that the legalization of infanticide (as has always been the usage of the Chinese) would exert the reverse influence from that which was intended, because it would facilitate marriages, and when the hour came only a small proportion of women would possess the hardihood to put in practice this barbarous economy. From hence it comes to pass, or at any rate it does come to pass, that the three and a half hundred millions who inhabit China always press closely on the starvation level, and even when the cup swells over and a few odd millions get starved out of the way the balance is rapidly restored to average height. So that if, as the bishop suggests, a steady influx of the free Chinese should set in to our shores, this land may be afflicted with a plague of yellow-skinned more horrible than the Egyptian locusts.

The time appears to be approaching when the problem of the fusion of races will take rank among the two leading problems for decision almost the world over. 'Tis so already here. For in the eyes of the discerning, the Chinaman is even now a worse scare than the negro ever was.

All experience is against the amalgamation of races of unlike types by intermarriage. To begin with, marriage is rendered difficult on account of pride and because it is unnecessary. Nearly all hybrids of this sort are the fruit of concubinage. But this is not all. The produce of such unions, whatever merits they may have, invariably lack robustness and tend quickly to sterility.

Wherever the lower races encroach upon the higher, one of two things befalls them: either slavery or extermination. This looks hard, but it seems to be inevitable. And, after all, is it not well? For is it not fit that men of the noblest type should spread until they cover all the lands they can inhabit? We present just now a spectacle unique in history. We are deliberately inviting the Chinese to our shores to eat us out of hearth and home. When the Germanic hordes descended upon Rome, that was according to the proverb of St. Paul, that the race is to the swift and the battle to the strong. But the Chinese can not drive us before them. The only question is whether we are bound to die of our own accord in order to make room for them to live. I think that we are not, and for the following reason: Not the most human lives, but the most human worth, is the final end of all economy. And just as any one is bound to die to preserve a life more precious than his own, and count himself too much rewarded by the honor (because, as De Tocqueville says, incorrectly yet sublimely, "Life is neither a pain nor a pleasure, but a serious business, to be begun with courage and ended in self-sacrifice"), just so are the lower races bound to die to make room for their superiors. You say, perhaps, that the Chinese is a thrifty, ant-like people, able to dwell thickly on the ground. Well, maybe so; but stock the land with the very ants themselves, and the population will be still more numerous.

Some years ago a curious case chanced to come within my knowledge, which occurred in the great asylum for the insane at Colony Hatch, near London. One of the patients had shown such signs of returning reason that the authorities ventured to leave him a good deal unrestrained. For some days he behaved himself quite well, but one morning at breakfast he pointed to one of his comrades in misfortune and observed in a serious and reflective tone, "That man is too ugly to live." And, accordingly, later in the day, he made a violent attempt on the poor fellow's life. The bishop, to judge from his eloquent peroration, harbors the same prejudice (and I confess I partly share it); but if the ugly races are indeed bound to die, at least we need not invite them to our shores to kill them.

CHARLES ELLERSHAW.
NEW YORK CITY.

WHO IS AT FAULT?

PROVIDENCE, July 8, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

You will notice by the report of the Providence Journal that in these "Plantations" dedicated to soul liberty a very heartfelt feeling found expression last evening in a meeting attended by one of the most thoughtful and respectable audiences that could have been gathered on any occasion. I have also been assured by some of the most eminent members of the Rhode Island bar that the rulings of Judge Clark in the case of Mr. Heywood were partial, arbitrary, and wholly unwarranted.

Now does the Liberal League mean business, or is it a harmless figure-head? If there ever was a fitting occasion to prove its usefulness, this issue has furnished it. The history of liberty is essentially embodied in the progress of defining liberty. If a judge can send a man to jail at hard labor for two years for attacking "time-honored institutions," who is safe?

A hundred years ago the doctrine of the Trinity was one of these "time-honored institutions," and public sentiment backed the judges who condemned the "immoral" pamphleteer to prison. While the evolutionists promise us so much for the infinite perfectibility of the race, is it possible that any one arrangement of fallible men is so far a finality that a man must suffer martyrdom for attacking it? These questions and issues have been forced upon thoughtful men, through the startling proceedings of the court which sentenced Mr. Heywood. No radical can afford to stand on the fence. The Liberal League, with every other power for good, is to be put on record in these matters. Shall it be found wanting?

HENRY APPLETON.

[It is not talk or empty resolutions that are wanted, but vigorous action. The National Liberal League was designed to act efficiently in defence of equal rights in religion and universal mental liberty; but it must remain weak until those who are interested in these principles prove by their own active support of it that they appreciate its value. Rhode Island has not a single local League; has Mr. Appleton ever tried to help form one? The National League can only become powerful by the multiplication of five local Leagues; and it strikes us as not very reasonable or fair for those who have not lifted a finger in its support to map out work for it in this assuming manner. Let the liberals form a great constituency of local Leagues and supply the Directors with ample funds; and then let them complain if the work is not done with vigor and zeal. But until they do this, let them blame themselves if they find themselves powerless to protect their own rights. For five years and a half we have labored incessantly to give them the means of protecting these rights by a powerful organization; and we do not see the propriety of being called upon in this way to "make brick without straw."—ED.]

THE CLARKE INSTITUTION FOR DEAF MUTES, AT NORTHAMPTON, MASS.

The anniversary exhibition of this institution, together with the giving of diplomas to the graduating class, occurred yesterday. Illustrations were given of the progress of the pupils in articulation and in lip-reading, this system of instruction being the basis on which the institution is founded. In speaking, they could, generally, be quite well understood, and their voices were remarkably well-modulated, and relieved, in a good degree, from those unnatural and painful sounds which usually accompany the utterances of persons deprived of hearing. The rising and falling inflections of voice, and also the circumflex, were given with great accuracy, and, when rapidly performed, amounted almost to a musical trill. Their success in the gradual crescendo and diminuendo of the vowel sounds was quite perfect. The beatitudes and the Lord's Prayer were repeated in concert by one of the classes in an intelligible manner, and in as nearly measured accents as are usually heard from classes in full possession of hearing. A poem was read quite pleasingly by one of the young ladies. Patient and persevering effort on the part of the teachers could alone secure such satisfactory results. The facility of the scholars in lip-reading was equally remarkable. The graduating class was examined in one of their studies by questions heard by the audience, while of course inaudible to them, but were understood readily by them from the reading of the lips, and answered audibly as readily as would be done by a class in the full exercise of hearing, so that a stranger unaware of the conditions would hardly have suspected the questions were addressed to ears entirely destitute of ideas of sound.

The compositions of the graduating class evinced very little thought, and in this respect were far inferior to those of scholars generally of the same age. They were mere compilations of objective subjects, of about the grade of children's first efforts at composition. It would seem that a ten years' course of study and instruction should produce more mental development than was apparent, if this class is a fair specimen.

A great amount of time must be consumed in the teaching of articulation and lip-reading. While acquisitions of this kind are of great value, in many respects, it might seem questionable whether the individual can be brought to as high a degree of development and culture, in a given time, by this method of teaching as by that of signs, and the teaching to use books without a knowledge of the sounds of language. It would be interesting to know the comparative results of the two methods in this respect.

The enthusiasm and ability with which Miss Harriet B. Rogers, the principal, and from the first the inspiring spirit, of this institution, has consecrated herself to this department of humane work is worthy of the highest estimation. Her skill in methods, and her grace in imparting nice shades of meaning to these unfortunates, shut out from one of the greatest enjoyments of sense, is admirable. It is seldom, in any of our higher institutions of learning, that we notice in the presiding teachers such quiet dignity and self-repose, and such evidences of high culture and refinement, apparent in manners and in the appointments and regulations, as we are impressed with by the general bearing of Miss Rogers and the assistant principal, Miss Caroline A. Yale.

And in this connection, by contrast, is suggested the prevalent fault of the most of women who, these late years, have come before the public as lecturers, speakers, and writers. Not yet accustomed to this publicity, the consciousness of its newness sitting ungracefully upon them, and, withal, a tincture of the idea of exceptional smartness prevailing their movements and sayings, a degree of flippancy and conceit often covers an amount of shallowness which, on the principle that they mistake for comprehensive wisdom. It is greatly to be desired that woman, at this era of her elevation to higher and more public positions, in assuming such should be most scrupulously careful in seeking the highest culture and refinement, and in maintaining that true modesty and womanliness which should characterize her in all situations.

"A little learning is a dangerous thing,"

A. H.
NORTHAMPTON, July 10, 1878.

SERGEANT COX'S "TRIBUNAL OF SCIENCE."

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Some danger, it must be confessed, would attend upon the carrying out in practice of Sergeant Cox's suggestion, cited on page 270 of THE INDEX, of a Tribunal of Science to decide controversies by methods used in a law-court.

Truth is independent of prejudice; but prejudice, or the consent of many in what is regarded as settled, is the very basis on which judicial administration must rest. One may be right while the great multitude are wrong. Then it would be a solemn farce to accord to the erring multitude, or to a tribunal by them appointed, authority of decision in what they may not be competent to comprehend, and therefore not able to appreciate. It need not be said that Galileo would not be inclined to trust Pope and Cardinals with the office of deciding upon the reality of his astronomical discoveries, and the sufficiency of his proof thereon, or that Mr. Abbot would be as little inclined to trust his apophoristic theses, which to him are axioms, to the decision of the Synod. Satisfied as to their correctness, he would maintain them against the whole world.

But inasmuch as truth may often be set in a clear light by free and fair discussion, in which different views, individually claimed to be correct, are contrasted, such a procedure, fairly conducted, might be useful as a means of throwing light on the merits of disputed questions, provided authority of decision was refused; for mankind may be educated into error as well as into truth. A knowledge of what is ascertained might thus be extended, and some erroneous prejudice removed. The tribunal being really a respectable one, the decision would carry authority so far only as to afford reasonable presumption that what was thus decided to be true was not wholly to be rejected except after careful examination. But it is to be borne in mind that while truth, when reached and clearly appearing, is to be cordially accepted, it is then to be jealously guarded and maintained against all personal authority whatsoever; and private judgment is the only final arbiter. Only the authority of truth and natural reason is supreme. Therefore, in the domain of truth, the admitted authority of any tribunal is to be looked upon as advisory rather than obligatory.

Since, in discussion, antagonists are disposed to act as much from impulse of party spirit, and love of cherished theory, as from love of truth for its own sake, which causes of incompetency may operate more or less with persons constituted judges and jurymen, every decision would be open to more or less suspicion, especially when it is considered that arguments most plausible are not always justly most convincing. This being understood, such procedure is not wholly to be condemned. The human intellect is not to be despaired of; reason, proceeding on ground of actual information, is the only legitimate guide of human life; and "truth," as Milton says, "is powerful next to the Almighty." Still, truth and goodness are not welcomed by those who are strangers to them. Truth, as well as virtue, is to be loved and sought after for its own sake; therefore the applause of a multitude, or the superfluous parade which wealth makes possible, can bring no compensation to the wise or good man for generous devotion to that which brings its own reward, and rises in dignity in proportion as it is uncompromising. A troop of supposed philosophers, prating on the one hand about the illegitimacy of human reason, and on the other about what people did not comprehend, would be a piece of machinery which would smooth the pathway of error, and encourage prevailing arrogance and vain pretension. Real advancement, beginning with the light that shines in a dark place, is developed by slow degrees; and the march of truth must be slow and difficult in a wilderness of surrounding error. It would be a problem to test severely the skill of the most learned sergeant-at-law to find a more effectual method of clipping the wings of invention and discovery, and relegating to an uncertain, far-off future the results of unbending logic, salutary, if severe, than that of requiring of every man's individual reason subordination to any assumed standard of the universal reason of mankind. C. C.

NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., June 22, 1878.

"FREE, PURE, AND RATIONAL."

AUGUSTA, Mich., June 23, 1878.

DEAR FRIEND ABBOT:—

Inclosed find post-office order for five dollars, my subscription for THE INDEX for 1878. I wish it were much more (though it is all my limited means will allow), as I am sure that I could not support a more noble and just cause than the cause of Free Religion. A religion that shall work any great good to mankind must be free, pure, and rational. With anything short of this, we can never hope to make a religion universal; and in universality only can be absolute and perfect good.

The lovers of liberty, the friends of progress, could not afford to lose THE INDEX; though the cause it has inaugurated will never be lost, the world needs it, and we must sacrifice something for it; I look to it as my brightest star of hope, that shall guide men to higher and purer aims and better deeds. It is worthy the attention and support of the purest, the noblest, the greatest, of men and women, as no one can possibly attain to greater heights of purity and righteousness than it aims at.

Mr. Abbot, I cannot think that you have overdrawn the picture, or have been in the least degree unjust, when speaking of the powers that endanger our liberty. When we take a careful survey of general affairs, even in this New World, we are not very favorably impressed in regard to man's purity and goodness. We are making rapid progress in general science; but in general goodness, little, if any, progress is apparent. The conditions of the masses of the people are not being bettered, but are growing hopelessly worse. To better the condition of the poor, the oppressed, the helpless, is the one all-important and most needful work; and whoever engages in that work can have no doubt about his or her calling.

Respectfully and fraternally,

GEORGE W. MEAD.

THE WATKINS CONVENTION.

EXCURSION TICKETS.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. has agreed to issue excursion tickets at two cents a mile, to and from the Watkins Convention, over its road and branches; viz., "Pennsylvania Central," from Pittsburgh to Watkins through Harrisburg, and from Philadelphia to Watkins through Harrisburg; also at all stations on the "Northern Central Railroad," from Baltimore to Watkins, including Harrisburg, Northumberland, and Elmira, and north from Canandaigua, passing through Stanley and Penn Yan. Also at all stations on the "Pennsylvania & Erie Railroad," from Erie, Pa., to Watkins, passing through Corry, Warren, Emporium, Lock Haven, and Williamsport.

Friends coming from Washington can reach this road at Baltimore; from the west, at Erie, Corry, and Pittsburgh.

TAKE NOTICE. Any person desiring to get excursion tickets on either of these roads should send me his name, the number of tickets desired, post-office address, and six cents in postage stamps; and I will return certificates that will entitle the holder to the pass. Do not delay. H. L. GREEN, Sec'y.

SALAMANCA, N. Y.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I know you will be pleased to give space to the following letter from Rev. W. E. Copeland, of Nebraska, and that hundreds will be pleased to take him by the hand at Watkins Glen:—

LINCOLN, Nebraska, June 27, 1878.

FRIEND GREEN:—

I have received your kind invitation to be present at the gathering of liberals to be held in Watkins Glen in August, and shall take great pleasure in accepting. It will be a noteworthy occasion, one which no liberal can afford to neglect. Never before has such a gathering of leading free thinkers been held in America, and if it fulfil your expectations, it cannot but make a deep and lasting impression on the minds of all thinking people. It is to be hoped that many of our leading liberals in the West will attend, and that from East and West, North and South, the liberals of America can look into each others' faces, grasp each others' hands, and hear the voices of those whose names are as familiar as household words. I am rejoiced that we are to have the opportunity of mustering our battalions and showing the quality of our soldiers enlisted for the war in the contest against superstition and bigotry. I am rejoiced that those of such diverse views can meet on a common platform and, laying aside differences, unite to promulgate a religion of humanity and lay the foundation for a national church peculiarly American, and yet which welcomes the emancipated of all nations.

Brothers in the West, from the valley of the Mississippi and the plains of Kansas and Nebraska, from the mountains of Colorado and Wyoming, let us make all effort to annihilate space and join in this grand rally in favor of freethought and free speech.

Yours fraternally, W. E. COPELAND.

To save answering many inquiries, may I say that the "Glen Park Hotel," a three-dollar house, has agreed to entertain those attending the convention for two dollars per day? Probably the other first-class houses will do the same. But good places may be had for one dollar and probably less.

H. L. G.

H. L. GREEN, Sec'y, etc.:

Dear Sir,—Your invitation to attend the Watkins meeting in August and to take part in the same is received. In reply I would say that I shall be there if possible, whether Deus is volens or not, and if I can do anything to add to the success of the meeting, you may command me. I am in fullest accord with the objects of your meeting, and think that the Liberal League is the most practical movement before the unchurched people of the country, and deserves the heartiest coöperation of every friend of liberty in the land. Respectfully yours, CHARLES ELLIS.

BOSTON.

STATE RELIGION.

I copy from the Record and Evangelist, a Disciple paper of Oskaloosa, Iowa, the following extract and comments:—

"It has come to our knowledge that the United States government has sent to light-houses and men-of-war copies of the Book of Common Prayer and the Protestant Bible. Inside the covers of these books is pasted a slip of paper on which the words 'Public property' are printed. Now it is in order to ask, Has the government established a State religion, and, if so, by what authority?"—Catholic Mirror.

"We do not at all sympathize with the Mirror's hatred of the Bible, and think it in order for the government to supply it, if it can furnish chaplains; but we would like to know about the government supplies of the Episcopal Prayer Book. Is that our State religion?"

"If it can furnish chaplains; but can it furnish chaplains, in a legal or moral sense? Our Disciple friends seem to be in an agony lest the government should favor the Episcopalians more than other sectaries, and sarcastically inquire if that is our State religion. Now I would ask the Record and Evangelist if Christianity is our State religion, and, if so, whether the government has any more right to establish that as our national faith than it would have to so establish Episcopalianism. Is 'public property' in prayer-books any more blameworthy than 'public property' in Bibles? Please answer. Yours, for the Secular State, E. C. WALKER.

IRON vs. CLAY.

MR. EDITOR:—

Will you allow me a word to my critic, Mr. E. C. Walker? He says: "Your correspondent 'Z.' tries to demonstrate logically that, if Mr. Heywood is in favor of, and should make use of, any contrivance by which in his absence any person could be prevented from putting before his (Heywood's) children obscene and filthy pictures and books, he must be in favor of any law which will prevent the circulation of such books and pictures. . . . 'Z.'s reasoning is simply contemptible."

I did not say, "he must be in favor of any law," etc. I said he is in favor of a law. This correction puts back the iron link in the place of the clay one secretly inserted by Mr. Walker.

"I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word"—contemptible. Z.

INGERSOLL.

We hope the Methodist Protestant body will not ostracize the Rev. Alexander Clark, editor of the Methodist Recorder, for his kindly words about the Philistine giant whom the religious papers have been throwing pebbles at so long, without getting his sword by the handle. It is really quite breezy to read such an article as the following.—N. Y. Independent.

"A few days ago we chanced to meet Robert G. Ingersoll, and enjoyed the interview. Don't be alarmed, timid reader! But it is a fact. Each wished the other well, to begin with, and better going further on. There is something about the man's big round face and hearty hand-shake and straightforward words that wins respect. He was quite ready to talk upon religious questions, although neither obtruded them upon the other. He was courteous, frank, and evidently willing to hear opinions expressed, however diverse from his own. He claims to be ready for truth from any side. He said, in substance, among other things: If there is a heaven, it must begin now. If there is a hell, it is already kindled. He said that many poor, unknown men and women, by their patience in hard toil, by overcoming bad propensities, by providing bread for those dependent upon them, and by the unnoticed struggles of life, were really achieving as grand victories as the leaders of armies. He said there was as much downright goodness in these lowly people as among the great teachers of theology.

"All of which we admitted, of course. Christianity teaches just those things when its teachers get their mouths rightly opened. Heaven does begin here, and so does the other pl.—. When Mr. Ingersoll gets rid of his 'if,' he will see clearly how these very principles he admires are explained by the gospel he now rejects.

"We do like Ingersoll. Now, please don't frown, and slap down the paper, and threaten to discontinue, and stamp your foot so, and begin to lecture the editor for a blunderhead. We must do one of two things: either like Ingersoll or get him killed. It is impossible to be indifferent toward such a man; and it would be unscriptural to hate him. If he is to be hated to our credit, we must hire a hater, and get the hating done by proxy. Are there not a few professional haters hiring out now?"

"Ingersoll has already overcome some oppositions in himself,—which commends his courage. He has a steady nerve, a clear eye, a clean skin, and a manly strength. He is temperate, candid, industrious, and, so far as the devil will let him, he minds his own business. And that is about as much as some Methodists get done. He is not a brute, nor a demon, nor a monster. He is rather better-looking than the average preacher, and that is admitting a great deal, under the circumstances. He bears close inspection. He wears clean clothes. His home is one of the brightest in the land, and his family a happy group. He cannot be inherently and essentially irredeemable. He is not so bad a greenback as that. Where the outward shows something of purity there is hope of a man. True, he has gone to such an extreme in his assertions of human independence that his influence has been counted on the side of some very mean sins; for example, the circulation of pernicious literature. Such books and papers as would poison the purest home might, without the wholesome restraints of law, ruin his own. The best remedy for poisonous reptiles is to smash their heads. Some vices are so dreadful that they deserve no more protection than mad dogs. And Ingersoll made a mistake, surely, in advocating the right of everybody to send anything in the United States mails. It was not that he believed in such literature; perhaps he as thoroughly as any Christian despises it. But the point illustrates the danger of lawlessness. There must be a curb on human passions. If men themselves do not practise wholesome restraints, the law must practise upon them and for their own and others' good. The same philosophy which makes Ingersoll a lawyer ought to make him a Christian; for he admits the necessity of law and makes his living as an attorney. Therefore, he should raise no question of rights with the theologian, nor of authority with the Almighty.

"But we merely wished at the outset to say that we cannot help liking Ingersoll. There, now! Please don't smite us to the earth with that ponderous theological fist. Does not the Savior tell us to love—that is a stronger word than like—even our enemies? Ingersoll's errors we do not like, nor his way of promulgating them. His lectures and his books, however, do him injustice. He is not so rough of speech in private conversation. Some men are all honey in pulpit, and on platform, and all poetry in the press; but they are vinegar and mustard at home. They scowl at their wives, and storm like thunder at their children, and strike like banditti among the skulls of supposed heretics. Ingersoll is seen at his best in his own household. Is not that something to build on? We hope some day to accept his kind invitation to spend awhile with him at his home. We propose to eat with that Republican and sinner. Wonder whether he is ever invited to break bread in the homes of Christians? Many believers have talked about him; but few have talked with him. It is remarkable how sentences are modified when it comes to talking them to a man's face, instead of circulating them behind his back. It is somebody's duty to be kind and patient and loving and Christ-like to Robert G. Ingersoll. We do not presume to answer his hard questions. Nor shall we entertain any vain ambition to debate with him, never so quietly. But somebody who has the experience will, sometime or another, meet him, and face a man who is well worth saving. The churches cannot get rid of their responsibility to Ingersoll by calling him names, by avoiding him, or by ruling him out of the circle of their consideration. Nor can Ingersoll get rid of Christianity by calling it names, joking about its Bible, and saying smart things at the expense of its institutions. The Gospel unhorsed the proud Saul at mid-day on the public road. It has power for such victories still. It is not enough that ministers go about among easy-minded folks, who will assent to every proposition, without even thinking of the truths involved or the duties implied. It is not the end of the Christian's accountability to sing hymns already set to music; to repeat prayers by bell and book; to pronounce the routine phrases of Orthodoxy, and then to intone an echoing amen; to sigh, to groan, and go to sleep. There is a more rugged service than that. The Sauls of Tarsus who ride high horses; the puzzled Nicodemuses of the night-time; the little Zacheuses of wealth who climb trees to see the Christ; the rampant Ingersolls of our day, who have been hurt in spirit away back yonder in childhood or beyond; the Tyndalls who are endowed and cultured, and who cannot be silenced by the stamping of feet when Joseph Cook pronounces them superficial thinkers,—these are types of men to whom the gospel bears a message.

"Ingersoll is worth saving. He will probably laugh at our credulity; but he may. A man who can laugh can be saved. It is the man who neither smiles nor weeps that is the most helpless of all. He will possibly pity our crude opinions. He may. A man who can exercise pity can be made to understand what infinite compassion means, and why One who was sinless should die in illustration of that divine principle."

ENNUI is a malady for which the only remedy is work; pleasure is only a palliative.—Vacation Days.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 5 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory results—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY B. STEBBINS.
 Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 O. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or 90 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Dr. Bartol, Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loe, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Oathrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. B. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tena-
 sy, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined list, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Briefcase.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUEHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUECKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 1 vol.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. S.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	1.00
CELVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with "Patience." Illustrated.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	1.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLOUD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COHERENT and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanea. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Bomby, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	1.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	1.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Mem.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	3.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	3.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Elective Affinities.....	1.00
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	5.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Cred of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	3.00
The Unkown River.....	2.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Years.....	1.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.00
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Rite of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.00
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Sevan.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERBOLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustine to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	4.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man.....	2.00
Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Metaphysical Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	3.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Psychology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	3.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	5.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedgehog in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTER (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Pages on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.25
ROBBETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SOHELLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Boscawen.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.00
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	1.50
The Principles of Psychology. 1 vol.....	1.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.25
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	1.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.50
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Boom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 6 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the best English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.25
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.25
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....	1.25
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....	1.25
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.00
The Maine Woods.....	1.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
Letters.....	1.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	1.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.00
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols. II. IV. and VI., each.....	1.25
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Sannering.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (J. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

231 Washington St., Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

INGERSOLL'S NEW BOOK

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.25. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.
Same style and price.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

A REMARKABLE BOOK. A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and E. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tollenache, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn.

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 80 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $2.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT
THE
PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD
stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES
in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals,
Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform,
The Wharton Patent Switch,
and the Westinghouse Air-Brake,
forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars
are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,
and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.
Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Office of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager. General Passenger Agent.
O. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

R. H. RANNEY,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,

* No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 20 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,
55 BEEKMAN STREET,
NEW YORK.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles E. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUB & Co., Augusta, Maine.

THE YOUTH'S

LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doerflinger & Co., 56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 180. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 8 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 448.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N.B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS M. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC is said to have been elected Superintendent of Public Schools in Milwaukee.

MR. GREEN requests us to state that Hon. George W. Julian has engaged rooms at the Glen Park Hotel during the Watkins Convention, for the purpose of attending its sessions.

IT IS very pleasant to read of such kind and gentle deeds as this, reported in the Albany Express of June 24: "Saturday morning, through the kindness of Mrs. E. P. Hulburt, of Kenwood, all the patients in the Albany Hospital were supplied with beautiful bouquets. A nice lot of cherries was also received from the same source."

A SHARPER or more brilliantly witty sarcasm was perhaps never uttered than that of Alexander von Humboldt on the clergymen of Prussia: "These black coats are the only persons of my acquaintance who resemble the camelion in being able to keep one eye directed upwards to heaven, and the other downwards to the good things of this world."

THIS STATEMENT well illustrates how completely Philadelphia has betrayed the trust confided to her by the will of Stephen Girard: "A chapel for the use of the boys of Girard College has recently been built; it will seat two thousand persons. The new buildings erected will enable the college to receive three hundred and twenty more scholars. Although by the will of Mr. Girard ministers are wholly excluded from this institution, it is nevertheless Christian in its character. The President, Dr. W. H. Allen, is an accomplished and successful lay-preacher; Mr. Welsh, the Minister to England, has frequently occupied the desk. Although most of the graduates of the college have entered secular callings, some have entered the Christian ministry."

GENERAL FORNEY writes from Paris: "There is such a difference between a Sunday at the Philadelphia Exhibition in 1876 and a Sunday at the Paris Exhibition in 1878, that a reference to it may not be out of place. The doors of the Centennial were closed on the Sabbath to the poor paying public, and gratuitously opened to the rich and favored few; but this pitiful inconsistency that would have broken down any ordinary fair was overlooked in the general pride and joy of the people over their magnificent celebration. Here the gates are open to all; and though the English and Americans do not show their wares, and some of the other foreign sections are closed, the French, Italians, and Spaniards are in their glory; the water rushes from below the gallery of the Trocadéro into the basin, and the French bands fill the air with the music of France."

IF JUDGE CLARK had thoughtfully pondered these noble words of William Lloyd Garrison, he would probably have given a different charge to the jury in the Heywood case, and refrained from striking a blow at freedom of the press which will only react disastrously on the interests he doubtless intended to protect: "A forcible suppression of error is no aid to the cause of truth; and, to allow only such sentiments to be spoken or circulated as we think are correct is to combine bigotry and cowardice in equal proportion. If I leave my children any example, it shall be a fearless, impartial, conscientious investigation of every subject to which their attention may be called, and a hearty adoption of those principles which to them may seem just and true, whether standing alone or proscribed as schismatics." Is not the institution of marriage strong enough to stand the public discussion of it, even by fanatical "free lovers"?

THIS is a bit of testimony to the spread of liberal views which comes from the New York Evangelist, which will not be suspected of any bias in their favor: "Said an intelligent young business man of New York to us, within a few days: 'I know a great many young men in business here in New York and Brooklyn; but I do not know a single one among all my associates that believes in the Christian religion, or that ever goes to church, except it be for the purpose of pleasing some ladies of his family or acquaintance.' Here is the great difficulty in reaching our non-church-going people. It is not that they are hungry and are driven away from the feast by the manners of the preachers, or the burdens of the churches, or the social style of the worshippers, or the coldness or hardness or narrowness of Christians. It is that they do not believe Christianity to be true. This is notoriously the fact with our German and French population. It is true of our young men of American birth in our cities to an extent which would surprise the good and staid church-going people, and even the women who associate with them, or the ministers of the churches which they think it would be a waste of time to attend."

FROM THE London Secular Review of July 6 we clip this kindly and encouraging paragraph: "The latest numbers to hand of our American fellow-workers, THE INDEX and the Investigator, are full of interest and vigor. A most able article in the former deals with the alleged willingness of Colonel Ingersoll to repeal the law of 1873 against obscene literature. It is shown that the Colonel by no means desires this repeal. He himself writes: 'No one wishes the repeal of any law for the suppression of obscene literature. For my part, I wish all such laws rigidly enforced.' (The italics are not ours.) THE INDEX adds the following sensible comment upon the Colonel's declaration: 'We repeat that it is a libel on Colonel Ingersoll's good name to say that he is intentionally in favor of the total repeal of the law against obscene literature, which he yet hopes so to modify as to make it impossible to use it for the persecution of freethinkers. And to this we heartily say "Amen," rejoicing that Robert G. Ingersoll knows how to defend to the uttermost "liberty for man, woman, and child," yet without in the least allying himself with the vendors of obscenity, the vampires of the press.' We cordially greet our Transatlantic brethren, and wish them success in the noble work in which they are engaged." It is evident that the English Secularists will not permit themselves to get into a false position on this very important subject.

THE PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD of Toronto, on motion of Prof. MacLaren, lately adopted a series of resolutions of which these are a portion: "Third, That, as it appears from the memorandum of the Minister of Education that there is no hindrance to be apprehended from the school law, but that the Bible may be introduced into the public schools, and be used as a text-book, therefore this Synod recommends and enjoins as a Christian duty on all the office-bearers within its bounds, and on all Christian parents, earnestly and constantly to use their influence as individuals, citizens, school trustees, and teachers towards such use of the Bible by the pupils of our public schools, beseeching and urging them to do this, as the highest interests of future generations for time and eternity depend on their thorough acquaintance with God's revealed will. Fourth, That ministers and office bearers, etc., be enjoined to give all due publicity to the existing state of the law, in order that advantage may be taken of it without delay to secure the general introduction of the Scriptures into the public schools." It is also stated that "The authorities of Windsor [Canada] have received instructions to rigidly enforce the Sunday law, and to prosecute everybody who is caught hunting or fishing on the Lord's day." Such symptoms of an increasing disposition to use the laws as a means of enforcing Orthodoxy on the people ought to receive more attention than is accorded to them. Canada and the United States alike need to be better instructed in the principles of secular government.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. K. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irvington, N. Y.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. E. PROTHINGHAM,.....New York
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. E. F. HOLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Saratoga, N. Y.
 MR. F. SCHUMANN-POTTE,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. B. F. ELLINGHAM,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Florence, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZ,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAY,.....Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Jewish," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of "The Jewish Voice," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. E. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thornfield, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. L. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK,.....Franklin, Pa.
 ELDER F. W. EVANS,.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST,.....Richmond, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON,.....Tampa, Fla.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY,.....Lottsburg, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arizona.....JOHN ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOBLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARRSWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Wiltonville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. E. BROWN, Bangor.
 Massachusetts.....W. E. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Michigan.....W. E. SAYWARD, Boston.
 Minnesota.....E. H. SCHMIDT, Detroit.
 Missouri.....J. E. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN, Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....W. THORPE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lewisville.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....F. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....H. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPALDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wyoming.....D. P. WILCOX, Fankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....157 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeldt.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeldt, Julius Phisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, E. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MISHOOTT, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Graasch.
 CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudsc., Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. rison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lohead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elizer Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. K. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North,

A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.

Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.

TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.

HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.

Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, E. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.

CATARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.

NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunne.

Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermande, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, E. F. Shepard, and others.

ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunning.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.

Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.

ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.

Issued to Benj. Greegg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.

TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.

Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.

MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.

JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.

Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.

Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.

FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.

WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.

Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roy, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.

MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.

MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.

Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.

ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.

BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.

Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.

CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.

WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.

CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.

ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—President, C. B. Hoffman; Secretary, E. L. Senft.

Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Senft, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Senft, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.

PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.

LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.

XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."

NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.

Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Fraustein, M. D., E. Lebeuf, and others.

OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.

Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.

CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]

Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Reilly, and others.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Klob; Secretary, F. B. Parso.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.

HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunnely.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."

CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.

MODERLY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.

Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.

MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinckley.

Issued to the President and Secretary, on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Voltaire.

BY REV. JOHN W. CHADWICK.

It will be one hundred years, come May 30, since Voltaire died in Paris, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. He had come from Ferney, near Geneva, where he had been living for about a score of years, preferring exile to imprisonment or any fetter on his lips. "Ovid in Pontus, pulling for his Rome," could not have longed for the eternal city, with its noisy games, with more avidity than Voltaire, himself Paris incarnate, longed for the city of the Seine. But he had less valor than discretion always, and so it was no easy matter for his niece, the foolish Madame Denis, to persuade him that his new tragedy demanded his immediate supervision. Nevertheless, she finally prevailed. Fancy him, a tall man, his form much bent with age, with the least possible flesh between his skin and bones, with hollow, toothless cheeks, protrusive nose and chin, and eyes incomparably bright and piercing and expressive. The Court and the ecclesiastics did not much relish being bearded thus; but all the rest of Paris went into raptures of delight over the old man. Benjamin Franklin came to see him and beseech his blessing for his grandson. "God and liberty," said Voltaire. "My child, remember these two words." At the Academy of Sciences, nothing would satisfy but that Voltaire and Franklin should hug and kiss each other. The days were one continuous ovation. The theatre had never heard such thunders of applause before. His bust was crowned with laurel, and he himself, no serious weight, borne on men's shoulders to his carriage, and followed by an immense throng to his hotel. "Do you wish to stifle me with roses?" said he, as he passed out of their sight forever. For these excitements were too much for his enfeebled health. Morbidly sensitive about the disposal of his body after death, in order to insure it decent burial he called a priest and made some dubious confession. But a neighboring curé, thinking this too general, tried to force from him a confession of the deity of Christ. The dying man had already stretched his conscience to its farthest limit; and so he answered, "Let me never hear that man's name again; let me die in peace"; and a friend wrote at his dictation, "I die adoring God, loving my friends, not hating my enemies, and detesting superstition." Such was the death-bed repentance of Voltaire. Upon his death, the ecclesiastical authorities hastened to prevent his decent burial, but his nephew, the Abbé Mignot, had taken time by the forelock, and the bigots were too late. In 1791 the dust was taken up and transported, amid salvos of artillery and thunderous shoutings, to the Pantheon in Paris. The fevered ashes of Rousseau were not far off, and close beside him was laid the wretch Marat, the stroke of whose assassin he would have applauded.

Who was this man Voltaire, and what was his character, and what had he done, that on the one hand he was so ardently admired, and on the other hand so hated that his very corpse was reckoned a pollution? Many of you, no doubt, are well acquainted with the general outline of his career. In 1694 appeared Bayle's famous Historical and Critical Dictionary. Voltaire, the man who was to popularize the method of this learned chaos, was born in the same year, February 20; but for a time his life was so precarious that he was not baptized until the following November. His baptismal name was François Marie Arouet. The name Voltaire, which seems to us to express the very essence of his character,—such is the power of long association!—was assumed by him when he was twenty-eight years old, for what reason, good or bad, no one has yet been able to discover. His father was a notary, somewhat distinguished, who, destining his son for the law, sent him to the Jesuit College, Louis le Grand, in Paris. Later in life Voltaire raised an immoderate laugh at the expense of his Alma Mater, but, though all natural sciences were entirely neglected, in the classics his teachers were Father Foree and the Abbé d' Olivet, two of the most gifted scholars of the time. Here he remained from ten to seventeen, and already, upon leaving, had an enviable reputation, especially for his poetic taste and skill.

Immediately on leaving college, his godfather, the Abbé Chateaufort, introduced him into the most gay and frivolous and dissolute society of the time,—a society of princes and ecclesiastics, in which the ecclesiastics were the more immoral, an abbé being almost universally a skeptic and a voluptuary. Certainly two or three abbés of Voltaire's acquaintance were of this sort, one of them, the Abbé Chaulieu, being the most erotic poet of the time. It was a gay life that Voltaire lived in this society. The wonder is that any particle of real earnestness survived. But though Voltaire never at any time attained to any Puritan severity of manners, ere he was twenty-two he had settled down into a life of earnest literary purpose, and from henceforth work was his dominant passion. The death of Louis XIV. in 1715 was the signal for an outbreak of ribald joy, so cordially detested was he for the gloomy, hypocritical pietism and murderous zeal of his last thirty years. Amid the jests there came a deeper strain, a poem with the title, "Things I have Seen." The writer was not twenty, so he said, and he "had seen the Bastille and a thousand other prisons crowded with faithful subjects. He had seen the people groaning in the most cruel bondage. He had seen a demon (Madame de Maintenon) govern in a woman's form, and sacrifice her God, her religion, and her soul to seduce the mind of a too credulous king. He had seen the mitre bought and sold. He had seen the hypocrite honored and the Jesuit adored." Voltaire, suspected of writing this—and it was worthy of his genius and his heart, a genuine moral lyric,—was thrown into the Bastille and kept there nearly a year. A gayer prisoner was never pent in any prison, nor a less idle. Though denied pen and paper, he completed his first tragedy, memorizing as he composed, and planned his famous epic, the Henriade, which his contemporaries thought a greater epic than the Æneid, but of which Voltaire's wisest critic says: "Of poems whose names are known out of literary catalogues, it is perhaps the least worth reading in any language by any one but a professional student of letters." Getting out of the Bastille, he was presented to the Regent, the Duke d'Orléans, most profligate of men. A thunder-storm was raging at the time. "Things couldn't go on worse if there was a Regency up there," said Voltaire, looking at the sky. The Duke forgave the slander for the wit, and Voltaire thanked him for his board, but begged him never to trouble himself again about his lodgings.

Between affairs of literature and love, the years slipped by till 1725 or '26, when, having been insulted by a young duke, and having made a characteristic retort, he was caned a few days after by hired ruffians. Smarting with pain, but more with indignation, he challenged their cowardly employer to single combat. Averse to this, this gentleman procured a letter de cachet, and Voltaire found himself again in the Bastille. Released after six months, but ordered to leave Paris, despairing of redress, he betook himself to England. No line of conduct could have been more fortunate. By his residence in a country so much freer than his own, by contact with superior men, by contemplation of a society where ecclesiastical restraints were not appreciably felt, all that was best in his own tendencies was wonderfully encouraged, and he returned to France in 1728 the devoted apostle of English ideas and of English liberty; of the science of Newton and the philosophy of Locke; of inoculation for small-pox, then but recently introduced in England, and of much beside that was most liberal, free, and progressive. In the religious life of England, nothing impressed him so much as Quakerism, then little more than half a century old. Of his Letters concerning the English Nation, he devotes four out of twenty-four to them. Nothing could be more significant of his position on religious matters. Here was a sect that naturally invited him to some amusement, but it is surprising in how little he indulges. He has hardly anything for it but admiration. Its freedom from ceremonial observances, its moral earnestness, its condemnation of war as the most hateful of all anti-Christian practices,—all of these things excited in him a genuine sympathy, and we may be sure that if Christianity had presented itself to Voltaire only in this guise, he would never have considered it "the infamous," never have had any desire to "crush" it, and we should only know of him as the most brilliant literary exponent of the eighteenth century. The treatment which Voltaire's English Letters received is our best proof how just his admiration was of English liberty; for this book which he could publish in England with impunity, in France was seized and burned by order of the Parliament of Paris, and its publisher was thrown into the Bastille; whereupon Voltaire, having so much more to say that he had no disposition to make a martyr of himself in middle-life, exiled himself from Paris and made his home at Cirey, in Champagne, the country residence of Madame du Châtelet. Henceforth his visits to Paris were short and secret. The danger of arrest and imprisonment was constantly before his eyes. Even at Cirey he could not always feel himself safe, and many a lumbering journey over abominable roads was dictated by that prudence which was a remarkable characteristic of one so ardent and impulsive as Voltaire was for the most part. But beside this prudence, a perpetual restlessness often hurried him hither and thither, so that he hardly had a home till he was more than sixty years of age. The days at Cirey were not those of nectar-sipping gods; rather were they full of toil. Whatever the relation of Voltaire to the Madame du Châtelet, questionable enough, though it has found eloquent apologists,—it is not to be doubted that the principal bond between them was intellectual. Madame du Châtelet was one of the most gifted women of her time. She and Voltaire saw little of each other. He was busy with his studies and experiments; she with her translation of Newton's Principia, and other similar occupations. For fifteen years (till 1749) Voltaire and his distinguished friend encouraged each other in the pursuit of knowledge. In all France there were not two busier people, nor two more eager and less partisan in their search for scientific truth. During these years, Voltaire wrote several of his most impressive tragedies; several comedies and satires; his Seven Discourses on Man; a great many philosophical papers; that which he never should have written, La Pucelle, a burlesque poetical biography of Joan of Arc, a match for the impurities of Byron's "Don Juan"; and the most significant of all his historical works, the Essay on the Morals and Spirit of Nations. This had been preceded by his Charles XII. and Age of Louis XIV. The three coincide with an important progress in his ideas of what history should be: the first was a piece of merely personal aggrandizement; the second was the history of an age in which persons and personal interests were of secondary value and the general movement of society was of principal importance. In this Essay on the Morals and Spirit of Nations, this relative significance of the particular and general is more strongly marked, and we have a wonderful foreshadowing of the best modern historical method: may we not even say, a wonderful example of this method?

As early as 1735, Frederick the Great, of Prussia, had entered into correspondence with Voltaire, for whom his admiration was immense. Coming to the throne a few years later, he invited Voltaire to make his home in Berlin. This, Voltaire's devotion to Madame du Châtelet and his contentment with the life at Cirey forbade; but visit followed visit, and in 1750 (Madame du Châtelet having died the year before) Voltaire, despairing of any decent royal recognition in his own country, betook himself with Louis' curt permission to the court of Frederick. The friendship of the Pompadour, which he had for a time enjoyed, had been transferred to Crebillon, whose tragedies were brought out with every possible advantage. Voltaire revenged himself by taking three of Crebillon's principal subjects and writing tragedies upon them so obviously superior to Crebillon's that court and poet were both made to appear contemptible. But Voltaire's residence at Frederick's court proved the least satisfactory and most humiliating episode of his whole career. It ended in a most inglorious squabble, in which the principal actors were Frederick and Voltaire and Maupertuis, a natural philosopher whom Frederick had enticed from France. This Maupertuis had much learning, but more vanity. Having by an adventurous voyage verified Newton's demonstration that the earth is an oblate spheroid, he had his portrait painted with his hand gently flattening the North pole of a painted globe. He had treated a friend of Voltaire's shamefully, and soon after made a remarkable fool of himself in certain philosophic letters. Here was Voltaire's opportunity. To punish Maupertuis for his ill-treatment of his friend, he made Europe shake with inextinguishable laughter, by such a satire as Voltaire alone could write. Frederick was mightily offended, for Maupertuis was his philosopher. He had Voltaire's satire publicly burned. After this a separation was inevitable. Each shot a Partisan arrow; Voltaire's another squib; Frederick's an order of arrest and search for certain decorations and a volume of his own poems of which he had much reason to be ashamed. But all of this commotion sobered down at length into an amicable correspondence. It was impossible that these two men should not profoundly admire each other, and suspect each other as profoundly. And there was ample ground for both the admiration and suspicion.

This squabble was in 1753, and the next twenty-five years (from sixty to eighty-five) were the valuable and important of Voltaire's life. During all these years he did not once go to Paris, till a few months before his death; they were spent in Switzerland,—the last nineteen in Ferney. He owned another residence in Berne, and still another just across the French border; "for," he said, "philosophers ought to have two or three holes under ground against the hounds who chase them." These were the years which steadily resounded with Voltaire's attack upon "the Infamous." "Crush the Infamous"; this was his watchword in these years; and by "the Infamous" he meant not the Christianity of Jesus or of William Penn, but the Christianity of Roman Catholicism in the eighteenth century; a Christianity without intelligence, without earnestness, without morality, whose priests encouraged every form of ignorance and superstition, whose higher ecclesiastics were often gamblers and voluptuaries, and which, whether Jesuit or Jansenist was uppermost, stood first and always for darkness against light, arming itself with all the natural weapons of intolerance and persecution. New tragedies and comedies abounded in these later years, but their most characteristic work was moral and polemical. The Lisbon earthquake, which gave the first impulse to young Goethe's thinking in Frankfurt, at the tender age of six, was felt in Voltaire's library as nowhere else in Europe; hence, Candide, the Optimist, that tremendous satire on the shallow optimism of Pope and Bolingbroke, and a little later the poem on the Lisbon earthquake, perhaps the deepest cry that Voltaire ever uttered. Rousseau was horrified that one, himself so rich and happy, should lay bare the miseries of his brother-men with such relentless truth. As if it were not the glory of Voltaire that he did not erect his own good fortune into a scheme of universal happiness; that his own wealth and happiness did not blind him to the poverty and misery of his fellow-men. These later years produced also a great many little tales, the vehicles, almost without exception, of an earnest moral purpose. But most notably of all, in quantity and in directness of moral purpose, they produced the numerous contributions of Voltaire to the Encyclopædia of Diderot and D'Alembert, and the whole of his own many-volumed Philosophical Dictionary, in which he gave his fancy and his conscience freer play than in the Encyclopædia. This Encyclopædia, which in its day was considered a stupendous monument of infidelity, and which made "the Encyclopædists" from henceforth a name for bigotry to conjure with, would for the most part seem very old-fashioned and conservative to a modern reader. The new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica is, upon the whole, much more advanced in its conclusions. It departs much more widely from the type of Orthodox current midway of the eighteenth century, but as yet its most radical article has been unable to convict Prof. Smith of heresy before his Presbyterian judges.

The tastes of Voltaire were always princely, and his abundant fortune, which he had himself amassed by shrewd investments, independently of his literary income, to which he was indifferent, enabled him to live at Ferney the life of a Grand Seigneur. He had his private theatre, and his private church with the inscription "Deo erexit Voltaire" (Voltaire erected this to God), smacking of patronage, perhaps, a little more than of theistic devotion. Here his hospitality was unbounded; often he housed and entertained a score of guests. A rude hamlet of four or five dilapidated houses he converted by his enterprise into a model village of one hundred pretty dwellings, whose inhabitants regarded him as their visible Providence. The arch enemy of Jesuits, upon the abolition of their order in 1762, he made one of them the almoner of his far-reaching bounties. "This is Father Adam," said Voltaire, introducing him, "but he is not the first man." The niece of Corneille found shelter and education under his generous roof. And there were splendid fêtes, and there was ample industry and sparkling gaiety, and a correspondence marvellous in its extent and brilliancy; and so the end drew on, the Paris visit, the unexampled triumph, and the dying prayer: "O God, whom all things proclaim! O God, who knowest me, hear my last words! If I have deceived myself, it has been through searching for thy laws. My heart may have wandered, but it was full of thee. I wait the approach of eternity without anxiety. I cannot believe that thou, who hast showered so many blessings on me here, wilt torment me forever when my days on earth are ended." The last letter that he ever wrote was to young Lally, whose father had been unjustly put to death. For years Voltaire had been laboring to have the sentence reversed, and the stain upon a good man's memory blotted out. The news came to him upon his dying bed that success had at length crowned his efforts. With his own trembling hand he wrote: "I die content. I see that the king loves justice." The ruling passion of his life was strong in death.

The most admired and the worst-hated man in Europe was no more. What did he signify? To what extent was he truly admirable, and to what extent did he deserve the hatred which men heaped upon his living head and still heap upon his memory? Aside from all moral and religious considerations, his place in literature is among the great immortals. What Homer is to Greece, Goethe to Germany, Shakespeare to England, Cervantes to Spain, that Voltaire is to France,—her greatest literary name. Among Frenchmen he has superiors in some directions; his humor is not comparable with Montaigne's; his comedy with Molière's, his eloquence with Bossuet's; but in his total manifestation, he is easily first of all his countrymen. The proverb says: "That man is terrible who does one thing." But Voltaire did many things with almost equal excellence. He has been called the French Virgil; but he was just as much the French Horace and the French Cicero and the French Lucretius and the French Tacitus, and we are still left without any Roman representative of his twenty-six tragedies, in his lifetime the most successful of his literary work. One cannot but admire this wonderful versatility and the enormous industry by which it was attended. Be sure that no unworthy passion could have seriously engrossed a man who was the most indefatigable worker of his generation. His passion was for knowledge, justice, "peace on earth." There are eighty volumes of his works, and the edition is still incomplete. He wrote twenty-six tragedies, poems innumerable, much valuable history, a great variety of tales, and a mass of philosophical and critical essays and discussions that range through every imaginable subject which was of vital interest to eighteenth-century men. "After all, my dear friend," he writes to Cideville, "it is right to give every possible form to our soul; it is a flame that God has entrusted to us, and we are bound to feed it with all that we find most precious; so long as it does not go in pell-mell, there is plenty of room for everything."

And now in regard to the quality of all this versatile performance. The quality of none of it was the highest possible. The genius of Voltaire was particular and not universal; he is not now, he never will be, the poet of all civilized lands, like Homer and Shakespeare, upon both of whom he set a moderate value. Himself supremely elegant, a classic poet, these seemed to him barbarous. After three hundred years, Shakespeare is more to his countrymen than Voltaire to his (as a poet) after one hundred. We have revolted from classicism; the revolt began in Voltaire's own time. Jean Jacques Rousseau was the leader of it. And so to us the tragedies of Voltaire seem over-bred and stilted and declamatory. To his contemporaries they did not appear so; they could not hear them or read them without violent emotion. We find Marmontel, in his delightful memoirs, reading "Tancrède" with streaming eyes. In comedy, to which humor is necessary, Voltaire was not successful, for humor was not in his line. Wit, satire, and sarcasm,—he had these abundantly, but not humor, the Cinderella elater of these flashing dames. Voltaire was the wittiest of Frenchmen, and in being so was—may I not dare to say it?—the wittiest man that ever held a pen. This spirit was given to him without measure; it is not an occasional sparkle, but a perpetual flash and gleam. And almost without exception it is the ally of justice and humanity. It is the weapon of his hatred of intolerance and superstition. I dare believe that it is never wilfully the weapon of licentiousness. Even in La Pucelle, the means only are licentious; the motive is not so. It spoiled Joan of Arc for Voltaire that she was a fanatic and that superstition made for itself a fortress of her name; hence the most witty and immortal poem that he ever wrote.

Upon the side of history, the labors of Voltaire—though an immense advance on anything which had appeared since the sad-hearted Tacitus lamented that the vices of the Roman people had rendered it impossible for the gods to be gracious to them—were the immediate forerunners of other labors so much more important, especially those of Robertson and Gibbon, that Voltaire is apt to get less credit upon this score than he deserves. His Charles and Louis are still among the most entertaining of histories. His Manners and Spirit of Nations was one of the first examples of a method which has since become the method of historical presentation, finding its last and ablest representative in Green's new History of the English People, a history not of battles and intrigues, but of political, industrial, intellectual, and moral evolution. In this work of Voltaire's there are many judgments which have since been reversed. It is not a book for us to read for careful information; but for the time when it appeared, its information was the carefulest that could be had, and of its general conclusions many have stood remarkably well the brunt of subsequent investigations.

The novels and romances of Voltaire would be excluded from the realm of art by M. Taine's standard: "A work of art must be devoid of any moral purpose." Not one of these is so. Candide and Zadig and the rest are the weapons of a moral warfare against those enormities which to Voltaire were different aspects of the more general "infamous," of which ecclesiastical Christianity was but a single manifestation. Whatever shortened life, or made it miserable; poverty and war; intolerance and persecution; civil corruption; court intrigue; quack philosophy; the laziness of priests; the ignorance of the people, and their neglect by those who should have been their teachers,—such were the evils by which Voltaire found himself confronted, turn whichever way he would; and, coarse or fine, his novels and romances were so many blows square in the face of these enormities. Nowhere in these stories does he ever satirize religion or morality. The one moral of them all is that truth, unselfishness, genuine religion, freedom of thought and speech, brotherly love, are the good angels of humanity; that its bad angels are hypocrisy and cant and falsehood and selfishness and bigotry and superstition.—Pamphlet Mission, June 15.

[TO BE CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

COUNT CAVOUR'S PREDICTION OF A NEW RELIGION.

In the concluding chapter of the Memoirs of Count Cavour (the great Italian statesman, who died in 1861), which was published simultaneously in Rome and Geneva, last month, the biographer, Col. de la Motte Baudin, describes his last interview with the Count just before his death, and mentions a prophecy which acquires a singular interest from the fact that Cavour's social and political predictions, which appeared quite as strange and far more premature at first, have since been fulfilled to the very letter.

The far-sighted Italian foretold the downfall of Bonapartism at a time when the "Second-of-December man" stood in the zenith of the political heavens; anticipated the now general opinion, that the temporal power of the papacy is untenable, by full twenty years; and knew that slavery had reached the eleventh hour of its existence a good while before Alexander I. was seized with that fit of generosity, and while Dixie was still the fertile Mother of Presidents.

Cavour's last sickness was an aggravation of the hectic decline which had wasted his strength for some years; and while there was yet a shadow of hope he consulted native and foreign physicians, and waded through the dismal swamp of pathological literature with relentless energy. But when he knew that he was booked for the long journey, he proved that with the scepticism of his stoic ancestors he had inherited a share of their fortitude, and astonished his friends by his intrepid humor and his calm reflections upon the future of a world that was about to dismiss him from its portals, and, as he fully believed, without a return ticket.

"If you knew how your country will miss you," Baudin told him, "you could hardly be so resigned to your fate. Tell me, is Hamlet's alternative really a matter of indifference to you?"

"La riviere est passé," said Cavour. "Italy has passed the dangerous ford, and I dare say will be able to muddle along on terra firma without me. But as for myself, speaking from a spectator's rather than from an actor's stand-point, I do not deny that I regret my exit from the play-house. I have witnessed some pretty lively performances in my time; but I shall miss the grand sensation piece. Before the curtain of this century drops we shall have a new religion."

"At the rate our English-speaking fellow-creatures are manufacturing that article, we shall have a pretty good stock on hand by that time," suggested Baudin. "No, no!" said the old infidel. "I do not mean a new hypocrisy. I mean a new religion."

"Don't you think that the Protestants are in earnest?"

"Yes, in their protest against Catholicism. So much, indeed, that they have protested it out of the better portion of the world. But what they have substituted for it is purely negative, born of schism and prolific of new schism,—scepticism the very soul and essence of it."

"But will not that scepticism prevent the growth of what you call a new religion?"

"Indeed not. Rotten trees make excellent manure for new trees, you know. Our old creed has become a heap of vegetable mould, the very soil for a new creed to germinate in. On naked rationalism no such plant can grow; but the world is as far from being rational as from being —"

"Being what?"

"Trinitarian, if I must speak it out. Of course I mean the living portion of the world, not the big petrified trees in Asia."

"But among our own variety of trees there are some pretty good-sized ones."

"Yes, in circumference; but that is no criterion of their staying power. The hollow oak can often boast of an imposing girth. Of course the collapse of the old shell will not come off without a crash, both audible and sensible to the ends of the world. It will be catastrophic, spectacular, and exciting; worth while seeing, in short. And that is what makes me loth to leave. It's hard to leave on the very eve of a phenomenon that occurs only once in two thousand years or so."

"And so you think a few years more would have been sufficient to—"

"To witness it? Yes, sir. The old shell is very hollow."

"But infidels have battered it in vain ever so long."

"For good reasons. An old creed can never be superseded by infidelity, which means indifference on the whole; but by a new creed."

"It can; but will it? And who knows when?"

"During the next thirty or forty years. The decay of an old faith always coincides with the advent of a new one."

"What makes you think so?"

"The history of religions."

The conversation then shifted to comparative mythology and certain topics in regard to which M. d'Alembert said that "prudence obliges one to be short-sighted unless one happens to be the king of Prussia." But the above quotations may be sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to let us fear that Cavour knew what he was talking about. The Church of his country denounced him as a Voltairian and rancorous infidel; but the type of his infidelity was generally different from that of the French scoffers. It was not born of spite and scurrilous irreverence, but of a sublime deism and of ideals which found no room under the roof of an Italian church. Love of truth, of course, implies that abhorrence of untruth which Johnson called an honest hate; but Cavour never permitted that hate to become personal. He knew how to fight error without insulting his erring fellowmen, and never advanced a heterodox opinion if he could not back it with reasons which showed that he was speaking within the truth, and which enabled others to infer what he might forbear to say.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

CONFERENCE OF LIBERAL THINKERS.

Yesterday a General Conference of Liberal Thinkers was opened at South Place Chapel, Finsbury. From the circular issued, it appeared that the object of the conference was to give an opportunity for the exchange of thought to those persons who, though working in connection with particular organizations, yet "acknowledged no authority above truth, and are interested in the tendency to that universal religion which would break all partition walls raised by dogma and superstition between race and race, man and man." Dr. Wyld occupied the chair, and among those present were Mr. C. Voysey, Mr. W. Higginson, Newport, U.S.A.; Sir G. W. Devys, Mr. E. G. Devys, Mr. H. M. Judge, Mr. Leslie Stephen, Mr. G. W. Foote, Mr. Conway, Professor Levy, Professor Garrison, Chicago; Mr. R. Drummond, Edinburgh, etc.

The Chairman congratulated the Committee of South Place Chapel who had inaugurated the movement put on foot that day, and he believed that their efforts would result in much good. In dealing with the questions which they were met to consider, he felt that the great want among liberal thinkers at the present time was unity and visible combination. Their state of disintegration had lasted long enough, and it was time that their very loose order should be consolidated; at least it was desirable that the various bodies of freethinkers and individual freethinkers should combine so as to be able to take action when their interests were affected. If religion was to attain a permanent development it must be by taking hold of and retaining the younger generation. Freethinkers should increase their numbers and strengthen their organization. If that were not done they would be overtaken by a reaction in the next generation. Everything seemed to point that way. The upper classes of society and the ministers of religion that were antagonistic to each other were ready to combine for the purpose, if not of actually crushing, at least of rendering the position of liberal thinkers, their common foes, as inconvenient as possible. Emissaries and wire-pullers had been working actively, both in the religious and political world, for the accomplishment of that object. There was nothing he would venture to caution the younger men more against than being put off by that makeshift rationalism with which Orthodoxy was sometimes tainted, and with which it was hoped to take the wind out of the sails of the freethinkers. The speaker proceeded to assert that many of the ideas on religion circulated had been great obstacles to human improvement, and the painful source of superstition, ignorance, and misery. Hence the necessity of combination among themselves and the first development of their principles. As long as priests remained in the world they would not cease to subject men to a false standard of religion and an unwarrantable species of authority which mystified men's interests, stopping the progress of every enlightened man to aid us as far as he could by information to counteract those evil influences. Among the influences with which they had to contend was the invidious action of the clergy in the school boards. The same influence, too, was at work in the middle-class schools; and as long as those false religions lasted, so long would they have an insupportable barrier to the progress of science and free government.

Mr. Charles Voysey then read a paper dealing with freethought ideas. He affirmed that theology, if it existed at all, in the future must be more enlightened and freed from irrational dogmas. In his opinion there should be a disestablishment of creeds and articles, and a repeal of the Act of Uniformity, so as to leave all Christian clergymen free to speak their honest mind. Intellectual correction was a great religious need,—the getting rid of what was unreasonable, and the getting hold of what was reasonable, by giving freedom to ministers.

The discussion was continued by Miss Downing and Captain Price, after which

The Rev. J. C. Street (Belfast) made some remarks, and concluded by proposing that an association should be formed having for its object the encouragement of freedom of discussion and the protection of those whose opinions were attempted to be crushed by the Orthodox party.

Mr. G. J. Holyoake said he was for giving the freest play to individuality of conscience. The moral aims of most people were nearly the same; and what they wanted was to recognize each others' differences without attempting to reconcile them. Atheists were such from necessity rather than from desire. The only bond of union at present required among them was the one he had just suggested; and let them see how much common work they might do for the protection of each other, the advancement of thought, and the right of conscience, on which all true progress depended.

Mr. Mark Judge said he took it they were not there to discuss abstract problems, but to meet the needs of the times as far as liberal thinkers were concerned. They ought not to attempt to define what true religion was, but rather to get those of every religion among them. He understood the object of the conference was to found a Free Religious Association such as had been established in America. The chairman's address, he thought, was too sectarian; for it would not include among them those who believed in the Bible or pinned their faith to Orthodox theology. The Free Religious Association of America was not so narrow as that, nor did he think they should be so themselves.

Mrs. Ernestina Rose was in favor of free discussion, which was as necessary as the air we breathe.

Colonel T. W. Higginson, U.S., related his experiences of the inception progress of the Free Religious Association in America. He recommended a platform of few "planks," and to confine themselves to a limited area of operations.

Mr. Leslie Stephen said personally he did not feel the smallest desire to see an association such as had been suggested established. As a freethinker, he had never experienced the slightest inconvenience in expressing his opinion.

Mr. Moncure D. Conway moved the appointment of a committee to draw up a plan of action to be submitted to the Conference. He thought it was better to have elicited the views of the Conference first, instead of laying before it a cut-and-dried scheme which they never had the opportunity of discussing.

The following were elected members of the Committee: Mr. Stuart Glennie, Colonel Higginson, Mr. Daru, Mr. G. J. Holyoake, Rev. J. C. Stuart, Mr. Russell (Limerick), Mr. Leslie Stephen, Dr. Wyld, and Miss E. Downing.

The remainder of the evening was occupied by an address from Professor Garrison (Chicago).

The Conference adjourned until this morning.—London Daily Chronicle, June 14.

VICTOR HUGO ON VOLTAIRE.

BY COL. T. W. HIGGINSON,
IN THE "WOMAN'S JOURNAL."

PARIS, HOTEL DE L'ATHENE, 1
RUE SCRIBE, June 10, 1878.

I find myself again in this most beautiful of cities, more beautiful constantly, through the erection of new buildings and the opening of new and more magnificent avenues. It is the policy of the present government to spend money freely and to guard against the suspicion of being austere and puritan; and the result shows itself in the renovation of churches and the improvement of all public works. Since my visit of six years ago, the traces of the war have vanished, except the ruins of the Tuilleries and Hotel de Ville, already growing picturesque with time, and perhaps never to be rebuilt. But from the doors of this hotel one can almost look into the new Avenue de l'Opera, which is claimed as the finest street in the world, extending from the new and vast Grand Opera House to the Louvre, and lighted at night by electric lights alone, more brilliant than the brightest gas.

From brilliant luminaries to oratory—Oh, call it not gas!—is a natural transition. I came to Paris a little earlier than I had intended, not so much to honor the memory of Voltaire—though in many ways I honor it, not in all—as to avail myself of an unusual opportunity of hearing French eloquence. I had always wished to know whether this wonderfully adaptive language lent itself to oratory as it does to prose writing and to conversation; and when I heard Victor Hugo and Emile Deschanel, I found that its resources were greater than I had dreamed. Its delicacy, its precision, the fine edge of its satire, the exquisite ease with which one who wields it can decapitate an opponent before he knows it, like the sword of Saladin,—all this I observed with delight. But I found also that it had in it a power of gradual swell and reach, for which I was not so well prepared. I never heard a finer ocean-swell of a sentence than when Victor Hugo described all the arts of peace, all the joys of home, all the pursuits and interests of life, and then showed how sovereigns made all this to culminate in that frightful international exposition called a battle-field! To say that it was brilliant and electric is nothing; it was a swell like an ocean wave, bursting at last in spray and dying away in sound. It is idle to call Victor Hugo a mere rhetorician; it is impossible to appreciate his style without hearing it from his own lips. And it implies a French audience, too, full of enthusiasm, of literary perception, and of demonstration; men around me followed the progress of a sentence with smothered "Ah-h-h" of breathless delight, and the applause at the intervals with hands and with shouts, never with feet, were such as might well carry an orator beyond himself.

Long before the hour of meeting, all tickets were sold, and placards announced the fact; a dense crowd surrounded the theatre and it was hard to reach the door. When I told the sergent de ville (or policeman) at the door that I was an American and must have a place, he left his post to another and guided me to where a very few more seats were yet sold by speculators, and I got one for a less price than some who came later. Never did I see an audience of finer aspect. There I, among cultivated Frenchmen, I maintain, an air superior to that of Anglo-Saxons of the same grade,—equal intellect with far higher polish. The platform was filled with such men, and the audience had a prevaillingly well-dressed look which surprised me. This, indeed, was the picked audience; the vast popular demonstration of six thousand persons was going on at the American circus at the same time. When I asked my French neighbor whether Victor Hugo was on the platform, he looked at me with surprise. "When Victor Hugo enters," he said, "you will hear a sound from the audience like that of an ocean." And such, indeed, was the shout of applause when that commanding, gray head appeared amidst the crowd on the platform. He was escorted forward and took his seat between M. Spuller and M. Deschanel, both men of noble appearance. There was no music. M. Spuller spoke first, without notes, and resting one hand on the table, but putting into the other hand an amount of gesture impossible to any Anglo-Saxon. Then M. Deschanel spoke, sitting, that he might read better from numerous quotations and illustrations,—partly relating to Voltaire, partly to Victor Hugo, who really seemed to have an almost equal place in the commemoration. I would not have believed it possible that even the best orator in the Chambre des Deputés, such as he is reported to be, could have produced such an effect while sitting. I was particularly struck, moreover, with the skill with which he handled Voltaire's greatest reproach, his poem on Jeanne d'Arc. Utterly surrendering the greater part of it as partaking the spirit of that age, "Honneur et culpabilité," he yet claimed that Voltaire had fully recognized her as the savior of France; and then turned with wonderful force upon the clerical party for trying to make capital out of her memory. "If you come to that," he said, in effect, "who was it who burned her?" ("qui est-ce qui l'a brûlée?") and the wave of his hand with which, in this brief phrase, he dismissed all his opponents, was as triumphant a stroke of brevity as I ever heard; and the audience responded peal on peal.

When Victor Hugo rose to speak, the scene was to the eye far more impressive. Twelve candles were lighted that he might see his manuscript—these candles lighted up the strong face of the old poet, with its white hair and short white beard,—and behind his face rose a laurelled pedestal, on which smiled the bust of Voltaire. It was the only bust of him ever seen by me in which the smile was not cynical and a little repulsive. In this bust it was simply kindly and equable, and Victor Hugo's praises of the smile seemed therefore less daring. The speaker's manuscript consisted of sheets twice the size of the largest foolscap I ever saw, and the handwriting was in proportion, so that the speech was read without glasses. The effect of it was—to try a sentence in his own vein—serene, defiant, conciliatory, revolutionary, winning, terrific. You could not call his manner overdone, because it was so in keeping with the matter and so natural to the man. Never had he more felicitous antitheses, more dramatic climaxes; and even when he raised his hand above his head, each finger quivering, as with separate currents of excitement, and even when he struck his head with his hand as if to tear his hair, it still seemed merely as if the key-note of the whole were pitched a little like ours, and as if all else were correct. And certainly if the test of oratory is to make the most of an occasion and an audience, that effect was reached by Victor Hugo.

I left the hall by a side-passage and found myself emerging just behind Victor Hugo. He could scarcely get into his carriage for the crowd of admirers that pressed around it. The windows and balconies of the square were full of people. There is no question of the enthusiasm inspired here by the centenary of Voltaire; nor did any counter-enthusiasm make itself publicly visible. I was sorry not to know until late of the banquet held in the evening, and at which farther speeches were made. But perhaps I ought not to make this assertion too strongly, for I observe by both the Paris-American weekly newspapers that I was there. These discrepancies between newspaper biography and autobiography are not confined, it seems, to the Western Continent.

Victor Hugo is to preside, it seems, at a literary convention, to which I am a delegate, called by the French, "Société des Gens de Lettres." There is also some talk of an international convention in regard to the civil and other rights of women, at which he is to be invited to preside. The projector of this is, I believe, M. Leon Richer, editor-in-chief of the weekly journal, L'Avenir des Femmes. I am to return to London on the 11th of June, and to remain some three weeks in England, after which I shall be in Paris for some weeks again; so that if this convention is held, I may be able to attend it.

JOSEPH COOK.

HE MEETS A TARTAR IN A HAMBURG MERCHANT, AND IS VANQUISHED IN ONE ROUND.

So much has been written and published in the newspapers about the arrogance and supercilious conduct of the Rev. Joseph Cook, the great Boston divine, that we were led to believe he was being persecuted by members of the press who aim their keen shafts of ridicule at any prominent man, and point out his frailties without directing attention to his better qualities; but the following we have heard from several reliable gentlemen in this city; and while it seems to show Mr. Cook in rather an unenviable light, we wish it understood that it does not detract from his brilliancy as a student and orator.

On Thursday afternoon, Mr. Cook stepped into the store of a Market Street merchant and announced in a very pompous manner that he would like to buy some letter paper.

"What kind of paper do you wish, sir?" said the merchant.

"Let me see it, and then I'll tell you," said Mr. Cook, savagely.

Said the merchant: "How can I show you what you want, unless I know what it is?"

"Well," said the reverend, "I want commercial note paper. Now produce it."

The merchant didn't at all fancy the style of his customer, but, being obliging, he placed some very fine paper on the case, which Mr. Cook picked up, examined very closely and then said:—

"Is all this paper good?"

"Yes, sir."

"How should I know but what you are cheating me? Suppose you open the package and allow me to look at it."

The package was tied around very neatly with ribbon, and secured with fancy paper bands which it was necessary to break in order to open it. The dealer informed Mr. Cook that the paper was alike, that he could not open the package unless he destroyed the bindings, and then warmly resented the idea that he intended to cheat him.

"Well," said Mr. Cook, "I guess you are losing your temper. You must be a Pennsylvania Molly Maguire."

"No, sir," said the dealer, "I am no more of a Molly Maguire than you are a gentleman. In fact, I think you are a d-d rascal. I don't know you, sir; but any man who accuses another of a desire to cheat him is not honest,—is not honest to himself."

A sharp cross-fire of words ensued, when suddenly the merchant said, a happy thought striking him:—

"You must be Cook,—Joe Cook, the lecturer."

"Yes," said the minister, "that is my name, and I lecture in this city this evening."

"I thought so," said the merchant; "I've heard of you before. How is your friend Ingersoll?"

"Oh," said Cook, "Bob Ingersoll is a bad man. He swears."

"Perhaps he does," said the merchant, "but he is a gentleman."

This ended the conversation, and the scene was ended by Mr. Cook making a liberal purchase, shaking hands with the merchant, and inviting him to hear the lecture.—Harrisburg (Pa.) Daily Telegraph, June 15.

NEW FLYING-MACHINES.

The Hartford (Conn.) papers give long accounts of the trial trips there of the Riecht flying-machine. This apparatus consists of a horizontal cylinder twenty-five feet long and thirteen feet in diameter, filled with hydrogen gas. Under the bottom of the cylinder runs a hollow brass rod, to which the car is attached. A horizontal fan is used to raise or lower the machine, and a vertical one to propel it. Both these are worked by the operator. In one of these experiments, the machine not only rose in the air, but moved backward and forward, up and down, at the option of the aeronaut, and the evolutions were accomplished without waste of gas in descending, or any use of ballast whatever. The aeronaut worked the central propeller of the machine, and rose over every obstacle to the height of one hundred feet. The breeze was blowing to the eastward, and the exhibitor allowed his machine to be carried with it for an eighth of a mile, and amused himself by showing his ability to ascend or descend at will. Then the propeller was set in motion and the machine shifted its course, twisting and turning in small circles. Still its general drift was to the eastward with the wind, but at a given signal the propelling wheel was started at full speed, and with accelerated rapidity the air-ship sailed along back, at an altitude of one hundred feet, until it hovered over the exhibition grounds, whence it started; then the central propeller was set in motion, and under its influence the machine sank slowly and easily to the earth. Another invention, which is occupying the scientific world of Paris, is the Guglielmini steam balloon. If the experiments answer the inventor's hopes this balloon will be one of the wonders of this age of wonders. The invention is based on eight points: 1. Ascension power. 2. Translative horizontal and diagonal power. 3. Safety against accidents. 4. Direction from one point to another given point. 5. The material employed in the construction of aerial steamboats. 6. Perfectly aerial architecture. 7. The disposition of the ascensive power. 8. The manœuvres on board and the degree of temperature of the aërostat. The gas employed is hydrogen, disposed in twelve globes instead of one. Once in the air, the boat, which is oblong like a ship, is moved on by two steam engines placed underneath the keel. Thus it cuts the air as other boats cut the sea. With an engine of fifteen-horse power thirty metres are made in a second. The acting manœuvres consist in passing the excess of hydrogen in the globes into others reserved expressly for the guidance of the boat, and then repassing them into their first globes, according to the descent or ascent which may be required. No trial trip of the new invention has yet been made.—Tribune, June 22.

THE THIRTEEN LEOS.—Now that the familiar name of Plus IX. has already passed into history, and has been replaced by the to us unaccustomed sounding title of Leo XIII., one's curiosity is naturally aroused to know, if possible, who the several Leos, predecessors of the new Leo, were, and when they lived. The following facts are found in the Oxford Chronological Tables: Leo the Great, A.D. 440; Leo II., 682-3; usurps the right of investiture; Leo III., 795-816; in 800 the Pope finally departs from the Eastern Empire and becomes supreme Bishop of the Western; Leo IV., 847-855; Leo V., 903-905; Leo VI., 928; Leo VII., 936; Leo VIII., 963; Leo IX., 1048-1054; Leo X. (de Medici), 1518-1522; a munificent patron of literature and art. Leo XI. (de Medici), 1605; one month; Leo XII., 1823-9; Leo XIII., 1878. Four of the Leos came in the tenth century and reigned only a short time. It was Leo III. that crowned Charlemagne emperor in 800; and while Leo X. was in power, the German Reformation broke out under Luther, in 1517. These, then, are the two great epoch Leos. Leo IV., in 1053, marches against the Normans, is defeated and taken prisoner, and confers Apulia and Calabria on the Normans as a fief of the Holy Sea. After Leo XI. there is a great gap; and for more than two hundred years history does not furnish another Leo. The longest reign is that of Leo III., twenty-one years.—Advertiser.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

IPHIGENIA.

SUGGESTED BY A PICTORIAL ILLUSTRATION OF GOETHE'S IPHIGENIA AT AULIS.

Iphigenia, the daughter of King Agamemnon, was sacrificed at Aulis, before the Grecian fleet bound for Troy could sail. But the priest found not the maiden, but a mountain stag, stretched bleeding before the altar by the blow of his knife. Diana snatched the human victim away. She was carried through the air to a temple of her rescuer on the coast of the Black Sea, among the Scythians or Tartars. Shipwrecked Greek sailors were here sacrificed to Diana by the barbarians, and Iphigenia was made a priestess; but she only clipped the locks of the victims, and was not present at the sacrifice. She finally escaped from Scythia to Athens, where she was worshipped as a goddess after her death. A man was sacrificed at her shrine during the rites. So that Iphigenia was associated with human sacrifices as victim, priestess, and goddess.

I.

Old superstition's lurid shadows cloud,
Famed Grecian maid, thy stately loveliness.
Priestess of altars, where in his distress
The wave-worn mariner, shipwrecked, poured his blood,
Thy seeming sacrifice the winds unchained
At Aulis, while soul-stricken bowed thy sire;
But not thy pure and virgin arteries stained
With life-tide sweet the dark priest's altar fire.
For lo! beneath his curst knife bleeding lay
A beauteous mountain hart in place of thee;
For Dian not in mercy snatched thy form away
Through blue air to a hideous ministry.
Dira Religion! in his deathless verse
Thou wilt might the indignant Roman curse.

II.

O priests of current creeds, your altars too,
Like those of Aulis and of Tauris, claimed
Their human victims. Sacrificial dagger drew
Not blood; but faggot-fires of torment flamed
In a not distant past. Your god was then
A homicide like Tauric Artemis,
Who drained the shrunk veins of poor shipwrecked men.
Three centuries back did grim Toledo hiss
With torture-fires; Geneva, Smithfield glowed;
Still later Rome. No longer brooks that scorching mode
Of pious argument the world we know.
Calchas* and Dominic and Calvin now
Could corrugate with pain no victim's brow.
Their knives and fires are things of long-ago.

B. W. BALL.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 20.

Mrs. M. J. Regan, $2.00; Dr. N. H. Webster, $4.40; Mrs. C. Dumas, $2; Wiley Britton, $3; Mrs. C. D. Childs, $3.20; Ed. Howland, $5; F. H. Macgill, $5.20; M. E. Linton, $3.20; H. W. Johnson, $3.20; J. L. Stoddard, $3; Mrs. Clara Noyman, $4; L. and M. Kahn, $3; J. H. Mason, $3.20; John M. Thomas, 25 cents; Dr. Aug. Hubne, $3.20; Miss A. Seeger, $1.60; Wm. Rotch, $3.20.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

* Calchas, the priest who sacrificed Iphigenia.

The Index.

BOSTON, JULY 25, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB
HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH
GADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZUR WRIGHT, C. D. B.
MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT
WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

DR. AUERBACH, in his oration at the late Schutz-anfest, said: "The true German hides no treason in his heart. He couples liberty and order. He aims at the preservation of the family. He stands for justice and truth, for liberty and morality." This is exactly what is wanted—an equal love for "liberty and morality." May such "true Germans" as Dr. Auerbach describes become numerous and influential in the United States!

MR. B. R. TUCKER communicates to us the following particulars of the meeting at Faneuil Hall elsewhere referred to: "An indignation meeting is to be held in Faneuil Hall, Thursday evening, August 1, to protest against the injury done to the freedom of the press by the imprisonment of E. H. Heywood. Hon. Elizur Wright will preside, and many able speakers will be present. The galleries will be reserved for ladies, and for gentlemen accompanying them. For further particulars, see Boston daily papers of next week."

THE Independent has concluded to adopt the Jesuit maxim that the end justifies the means, if we understand the morality of this editorial utterance: "A rat is a mischievous, predaceous animal. We detest him. The way we treat him is this: we prepare a wire cage, attach to the door a spring, put some cheese inside the cage, entice in the vermin to eat the bait, have him loosen the spring, which shuts the door and holds him prisoner. We then take the cage with the rat out of doors, and let him out, where a terrier instantly catches and despatches him. Thus we kill rats. But it is a deception and a lie. Yes, we know it; but the rat is a depredator and has no rights. We are willing to deceive him. By all the language that he can understand we dote to him. We tell him the cheese is good. We assure him he can safely eat it. We show him that the door is wide open, and that he can escape at any instant. We see him cautiously approach, and smell of the wire. We tell him there is no danger, that wire will not hurt him, and that there is nobody around; and we entreat him to take a bite. He believes our lie; he trusts us; and he is caught. Then we glory over him. We call him a thief. We hand him over to the executioner, 'Gyp,' and are glad to see him die, the victim of misplaced confidence. Do we feel any compunctions that we have lied to the villainous brute? None whatever. He must be exterminated, and lying is none too bad for him. We will deceive him, entrap him, exterminate him, when and how we can. Rats—one of them was called Madame Restell. The rat-catcher's name was Anthony Comstock. The more traps he sets for vile men and vile women the better we shall like it. But he lies to them, says he has a friend, etc., and offers money, and buys their wares, and deceives them? We are glad of it. Help him to get good traps, and good bait, and let us see if he cannot make the vermin scarce."

THE FANEUIL HALL MEETING.

The Board of Aldermen of the city of Boston, on the evening of July 9, granted the following petition:—

We, the undersigned, citizens and legal voters of the city of Boston, hereby respectfully request your honorable body to grant us the use of Faneuil Hall on Thursday evening, Aug. 1, for the purpose of holding therein a public meeting to consider the injury done to the freedom of the press by the recent sentence and imprisonment of Ezra H. Heywood.

Henry N. Stone, Charles H. Codman, John Wetherbee, H. B. Storer, H. M. Bearce, Fred H. Henshaw, Lyman S. Hapgood, C. A. B. Shepard, E. M. Chamberlin, Fred W. Barry, F. S. Cabot, D. J. King, D. S. Watson, Eben Carpenter, Joseph M. Hart, Newhall Davis, C. W. McLellan, Isaac B. Rich, C. J. Rich, Samuel W. Douglass, Charles M. Nye, Wm. Johnson, Horace Seaver, Wm. Hill, N. H. Dillingham, Arthur Burnham, Archibald Thompson, Gilman Joslin, J. W. Gillespie, Wm. Lee, A. W. K. Newton, Francis Milliken, Chas. McLean, Geo. L. Hovey, J. W. Phinney, Wm. E. Cash, A. Folsom, John P. Whittier, Henry Damon, Geo. D. Buzzell, J. L. Newman, Albert Crowell, Amos A. Stevens, John Q. A. Clifton, Chas. W. Slack, Spencer Thomas, John Hardy, W. W. Eastham, Franklin Stevens, Thos. Adams, Howell Matson, J. Edwards Andrews, and B. Franklin Clark.

The next day, two of the city papers (we did not see all of them) commented on this action in a way to give altogether a false impression of the real object of the meeting proposed. The Herald said:—

Faneuil Hall is to rock again for freedom—this time of the press,—the Aldermen having voted its use, on Aug. 1, to citizens who believe that editor E. H. Heywood, of The Word, ought not to have been imprisoned for publishing obscenity.

The Advertiser said:—

The complaint is made on the part of some of our extreme radicals that free speech is denied them; and yet the complainants are to have the free use of Faneuil Hall for a public meeting in sympathy with a convict now serving out his sentence in Dedham jail for circulating obscene books. The only obstacle in the way of those who insist upon dragging offensive subjects into public debate is the unwillingness of decent-minded people to listen to them. But they have abundant liberty to talk. Until they resort to open defiance of the laws they are personally safe enough. The granting of Faneuil Hall to them for such a purpose is an act of extreme liberality, for which they ought to be profoundly grateful. As to the case of Heywood, it was very fortunate for him that the evidence on which he was convicted was of such a nature that it could not be spread before the public. Nobody would have protested against such a publication more vehemently than some of the fathers of families who signed the petition for the use of Faneuil Hall for a meeting of sympathy. It is a libel on Freedom of the Press to attempt to make so good a cause cover the odious and disgusting books for which this lenient sentence was given.

Now both of these notices agree in representing that this meeting is called in order to uphold Mr. Heywood in publishing obscenity. No credence is given to the expressed purpose of the petitioners; namely, "to consider the injury done to the freedom of the press by the recent sentence and imprisonment of Ezra H. Heywood." The object of the meeting is to make a needed protest in behalf of the freedom of the press; but, as is shown by the above extracts and as will undoubtedly be shown by the comments of the press on the meeting itself, this object is not understood by the press, and we see no reason to expect that it will be any better understood by the public. Why?

The reason seems to us very clear. Mr. Heywood was convicted and imprisoned for "circulating obscene literature through the mails"; and this meeting, according to the petition, is called "to consider the injury done to the freedom of the press" by his conviction and imprisonment. These are the two great prominent facts before the press and the public, the only facts as yet clearly presented to them. Is it any wonder that both the press and the public draw at once the only inference of which these facts alone are logically susceptible—that the "injury done to the freedom of the press" consists in interfering with the circulation of "obscene literature," and that the meeting is called for the express purpose of declaring by a public demonstration, that freedom of the press ought to cover the right to circulate obscene literature? We do not see how any other inference could possibly be drawn from the only facts prominently before the public. Yet this inference is an utterly false one. The signers of the petition are no more in favor of "obscene literature" than the general public are; they are really concerned to defend the freedom of the press alone, in a case where this freedom has been indeed infringed upon. But the effect of the meeting must be greatly lessened by this fatal popular misunderstanding of its object.

How, then, could this misunderstanding have been avoided? Only in one way. If the object of the meeting had been avowedly twofold,—to uphold the right of society to legislate against really obscene literature, but to protest against the extension of such legislation to a case beyond its proper scope, as a real injury done to the freedom of the press,—then this fatal misunderstanding could not have arisen. There is a double and equal necessity now of emphatically approving proper laws against obscene literature and of emphatically disapproving their perversion to interference with free thought. If only the latter half of this work is done, the efforts made will lose nine-tenths of their effect. It is substantially the same question as that raised by the Bennett petition, but in a new form; namely, the question, "What attitude shall the liberals of the United States take with reference to the law of 1873?"

Our own convictions on this whole subject are well-known to readers of THE INDEX, though they have been wilfully and unscrupulously misrepresented elsewhere; and our own strong protest in the Heywood case has already been published in these columns. We cannot make, or join in making, any protest in this case which is unaccompanied by a strong and emphatic approval of proper laws against really obscene literature. We believe that the whole truth must be told in this matter, or all protests will be practically unavailing; we believe that the public can never be made to appreciate the liberal protest in behalf of "freedom of the press," unless the liberals show plainly that they appreciate the public's side of the right to suppress really obscene literature. With great sympathy for the avowed object of the Faneuil Hall meeting, and with equal regret that it is not made to cover the whole ground essential to what we are constrained to believe to be the only right, tenable, or practically effective position on this question, we hope that the meeting will succeed in convincing the public that great wrong has been done by imprisoning Mr. Heywood, but fear it will not.

We append here an article which was offered to and refused by the editor of the Boston Advertiser, commenting on a sentence of the extract above quoted from its columns. Whether the Advertiser's course, in not permitting so important a subject to be temperately discussed in its columns, sustains its own assumption that "freedom of the press" is not concerned in this matter, we leave to our readers to decide. The article, of course, contains repetitions of what has been already said here; but it will show that the Advertiser, at least, is unwilling to let its own public understand this matter in its true light.

Freedom of the Press.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DAILY ADVERTISER:

Sir,—In an editorial paragraph of this morning's issue, you thus allude to the sentence recently passed on E. H. Heywood: "It is a libel on Freedom of the Press to attempt to make so good a cause cover the odious and disgusting books for which this lenient sentence was given."

Will you permit one who considers the pamphlet (not "books"), to which you allude, justly characterized by the epithets you employ, to say a few words on this very distasteful subject? There are a great many "odious and disgusting" books in the world which are not suppressed by law; and it would be very unreasonable to expect that they ever will be, so long as men place any value on freedom of the press. I am one of many who believe that the "odious and disgusting" character of this particular pamphlet is not such as ought to subject its author to fine and imprisonment; and I beg leave to state some grounds for this conviction which may possibly cause intelligent and fair-minded citizens to pause and reflect.

There are three classes of publications to be considered with reference to the law under which E. H. Heywood was convicted:—

I. Utterly vile books, pamphlets, circulars, etc., which make no pretence of discussing or advocating a theory, address themselves solely to low passions instead of to conscience and reason, and are published for the sake of profit to publishers or advertisers.

II. Publications which are addressed exclusively to reason and conscience, and which, although advocating moral ideas or theories condemned by the enlightened portion of the community, do so in a scrupulously decent, delicate, and proper manner.

III. Publications which, like the preceding class, advocate crude moral or social theories, and yet, unlike them, offend decency and good taste by occasional objectionable passages.

The first of these classes ought to be suppressed vigorously, though by methods whose morality cannot be justly questioned; and I do not doubt that it was this class alone at which the statute of 1873 was really aimed. The second class are as clearly beyond the just scope of this law as the first class are within it. It is with reference to the third class alone that reasonable doubt arises; yet I believe that an enlightened regard for freedom of thought and of the press, no less than a sagacious foresight of the disastrous consequences that must follow the cry of "persecution" and "censorship of the press," will give to liberty the benefit of the doubt, and forbear to inflict a legal penalty in cases where the indignant reprobation of public opinion will prove a far more efficient remedy. Nothing could possibly do so much towards the abrogation of all laws against obscene literature as a widespread suspicion that they are designed or used to suppress freedom of thought. I speak solely as a friend to such laws, provided their operation can be restricted to the first class of publications above mentioned. Under cover of a pretence of suppressing "obscenity," it will be neither right nor safe to attempt to suppress social or moral theories, however wild or mischievous they may be. Such an attempt will be sure to defeat itself in the end in a free country. The rights of free thought and free discussion will certainly be vindicated at last; and it is deplorably unwise to excite against all laws for the protection of our children from obscene literature that formidably strong love of liberty which is so deeply rooted in every American heart.

Now the pamphlet for circulating which Mr. Heywood was convicted and imprisoned belongs to the third of the three classes of publications described. It is simply a plea for the "free love" theory, expressed in the main with chaste language, but occasionally descending to indecencies of suggestion which are utterly abhorrent to every cultivated reader. The "free love" theory itself is so pitifully feeble in an intellectual point of view, and so revolting to every high moral sentiment and conviction, that it is an inexcusable blunder to permit it to boast of a single "martyr." It is a sad mistake for the United States government to dignify this "odious and disgusting" nonsense which calls itself "free love" by anything that can be considered persecution. Nothing sells like a proscribed book, and the government has taken the surest possible means of reviving and spreading a noxious delusion which had already begun to die of its own inherent folly.

But there are still graver features of this case. Mr. Heywood's pamphlet, wild, false, and immoral as its teachings are, was so manifestly a plea for a social theory that it could only be brought under the head of obscene literature by ruling that, according to the statute of 1873, every book is to be adjudged obscene which contains a single obscene passage! The language of Judge Clark, in his charge to the jury, was as follows:—

"A book is obscene that is offensive to decency. A book to be obscene need not be obscene throughout the whole: whole or in part comes within the meaning of the law," etc.

I certainly speak within due bounds when I say that this is a monstrous doctrine, and one that cannot possibly stand. Whoever sends through the mail a copy of any book that contains a single obscene passage (that is, a passage that is "offensive to decency") is, according to Judge Clark, guilty of violating the criminal law of the United States, and liable to punishment. Are there not passages which are "offensive to decency" in Shakespeare, Milton, Byron, Moore, Burns, and a vast proportion of the classics of the literature of all languages? Nay, take that case which is certain to touch the public most deeply: are there no passages "offensive to decency" in the Bible? If there are, then whoever should send a Bible through the mails will be liable to fine and imprisonment! I protest against classing the Bible with that obscene literature which it is a crime to mail; I protest against any decision of the courts which must either require this application of the law, or else apply it with glaring inequality, injustice, and favoritism. It was only by construing the law of 1873 in a sense so sweeping and indiscriminating that it strikes down the Bible itself as an "obscene book," that E. H. Heywood was convicted: is there no offence against the freedom of the press in that? Is it unreasonable to demand that the law of 1873 shall be so construed and administered, or else so radically modified, as not to strike a blow at the great masterpieces of all literatures, and at the great fundamental rights of free thought and a free press? Be assured, sir, there are many in this community who are deeply disquieted by this unjust conviction of Mr. Heywood, and who yet abhor "obscene literature" and "free love" as strongly and sincerely as yourself. With the meeting in Faneuil Hall which was the occasion of your paragraph, I have had no connection; but so far as it expresses a protest against the encroachment on the freedom of the press committed by the United States Court in the conviction of Mr. Heywood, I do not see how any reflective citizen can withhold from it his sympathy.

Your obedient servant,

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

CAMBRIDGE, July 17.

IS IT TRUE?

The issue of the Philadelphia Christian Statesman on July 4 contained the following editorial article, which deserves to be very thoughtfully read by all who are capable of taking broad and comprehensive views of great questions:—

THE INDEX quoted recently some remarks from the Statesman in reference to the opposing forces at work in our national life, and the opposing precedents which they have established, and claims that "the United States Constitution, which is the political Bible of Free Religion, shows that the national government was founded on the principle which underlies our 'set of precedents,' not that of the Christian Statesman." The National Liberal League, which aims to settle this "great unsettled issue" on the principle of political secularism or infidelity, "ought to be supported," says THE INDEX, "with enthusiasm, with generosity, with combined individual energies, and with the powerful cooperation of hundreds and thousands of Local Auxiliary Leagues, as the great educator of the American people in the most important principle of their national life,—the Total Separation of Church and State."

The "enthusiasm, generosity, and powerful cooperation of hundreds and thousands of local auxiliary leagues," for which THE INDEX pleads, we do not believe it will ever see. Unbelief has never shown itself able, except for brief periods of spasmodic fanatical devotion, to make men generous or to hold them together in societies. Selfishness and hatred hinder all its work and dissolve all its organizations. Socialism is already divided into three recognized bodies in the United States. The quarrel of certain liberals with THE INDEX because it would not echo their denunciations of Anthony Comstock is bitter and unceasing. On the other hand, Christianity unites men as no other social force has ever been able to do. It begets a spirit of generosity and self-sacrifice which is no less peculiar and remarkable. The Christian churches of this country, divided on minor points of doctrine and practice, feel and confess their oneness. They have often proved themselves capable of combined and harmonious action. Christians, by virtue of their faith and its influence upon them, have a capacity for organization and for self-sacrifice in which we believe the enemies of our national Christianity to be almost wholly wanting. When once the National Liberal League has succeeded in bringing the "great unsettled issue," and its proposed settlement of the issue, more distinctly to the consciousness of the American people, it will be astonished at the emphasis and unanimity with which the Christian majority of the nation will render its decision. And that decision, once given, will never be reversed. All experience and all discussion will only serve to reveal the strength of the arguments upon which it will be based.

To secure and hasten this decision is the work of the National Reform Association. With THE INDEX, whose clearness of perception in these questions is only equalled by its candor and consistency in advocating its own solution of them, we are laboring to set the "unsettled issue" before the people. No man knows how soon some practical issue will involve the settlement of the whole question. Meanwhile our testimony must be maintained and lifted higher into the view of our fellow-citizens. The seed must be scattered every year with a more liberal hand. These halcyon days of peaceful discussion, before angry tumult and struggle arise over some issue of national significance, should be diligently improved. There is no cheaper or more effective method of work than the dissemination of tracts and other literature, and it should be wisely and laboriously prosecuted.

Is it really true that the liberals, as a great class in the community, are incapable of forgetting themselves sufficiently to enter into combined action in behalf of their common principles—in capable of that generous self-devotion and public-spirited cooperation in a great cause which are the loftiest traits of humanity? Or are they still unaware that they really have a common cause,—that the highest welfare of their country and their race depends on its ultimate triumph,—and that this ultimate triumph cannot possibly be won without the organized union of their individual energies?

We do not know how to answer these questions. What we do know is that the Christian party display that "capacity for organization and for self-sacrifice" which the Christian Statesman claims for them, and which gives to them the easily maintained control of all public affairs. The Christians govern the liberals; and the latter either do not know the fact or are indifferent to it. The National Liberal League aims to emancipate the liberals from this political and social subjection; yet they take comparatively slight interest in the matter, and wear the yoke of their masters without manifesting any "noble discontent" with their own serfdom. Such a phenomenon per-plexes and confounds us. We do not know how to explain it. Is the explanation of the Christian Statesman the true one?

THE POPE AND VOLTAIRE.

In reply to an address by Count Alessandro Cavadelli, at the head of a deputation from a number of Catholic societies, Pope Leo XIII. made the following speech at the Vatican on "Ascension Thursday":

Our heart experiences a lively satisfaction at seeing present so large a number of our sons, who, united to us not only by the bonds of common charity, but also by those of pious associations, manifest their solicitude for the honor of God, the interests of the Church, and the good of souls.

It is, then, agreeable to us to receive your sentiments of faithful devotion and unalterable attachment to our person, above all on this day, consecrated by the ascension of Jesus Christ to heaven. But, alas! this day, so beautiful when the Church, surrounded by all her children, can celebrate in holy festivities the triumph of her Divine Spouse,—this day is profaned by the public honors which are rendered amid a Catholic nation to Voltaire, the most bitter enemy of Jesus Christ and of his Church.

It is useless to deny, my dear children, that to celebrate the memory of such men as Voltaire, insulters of the faith and its Divine Author, men without morality or honor, reveals the depth of the baseness of our age, rushing rapidly to its ruin. The country of his birth is at this moment the scene of these honors; but for the honor of this nation be it said that from every part of its territory a powerful voice of disapprobation and indignation is raised; under the influence of her bishops and of the Catholic press acts of reparation are with a noble emulation made everywhere.

Meanwhile, this work of reparation does not belong solely to the Catholics of France, but to all; because in the honors rendered to Voltaire, the faith, the conscience, and the piety of all Christians are insulted. These doctrines and teachings are not the melancholy heritage of France alone; they are scattered everywhere, and everywhere produce the most grievous fruits of infidelity. It is incumbent, therefore, on all Catholics to protest by their acts and by their words against such impudence. And this is principally incumbent on you, Romans. Your Rome is the centre of the Divine religion of Christ, against which Voltaire, this leader, this precursor of modern infidelity, waged such a bitter war. Your Rome is the see of the Vicar of him against whom is impiously launched the most horrible blasphemy.

It is, then, right, my very dear children, that when your religion is insulted you are excited to courageously repel the outrage; and you have repelled it in seconding the movements of your hearts; you have repelled it this moment in our presence, and you will always repel it by a frank and open confession of your faith, in the midst of an unbelieving world; by the constant exercise of the good works to which you are laudably devoted. With our authority as Pontiff, with our love as a father, we invite you to persevere, and we encourage you by all possible means to increase the glory of God, the salvation of your brethren, even in presence of grave difficulties which serve to excite the enemy. You render a signal service even to civil society, which has no greater peril to fear than that of banishing Jesus Christ and his Divine commandments.

Our assistance and our advice shall not be wanting to you, dear children; and as a pledge of our good will and of our affection, we give our Apostolic Benediction to you, and to all the members of your societies. May this benediction fortify your faith; may it sustain you in the practice of Christian works, and may it render your institutions prosperous. Benedictio Dei, etc.

THE DIFFERENCE.

The editor of the Truth Seeker winces under the exposure of his mendacity which we were at last compelled to make a fortnight ago, in consequence of his reiterated complaints that we had done him injustice by publishing the McKesson & Robbins advertisement. As we then showed, he gave to those gentlemen in December last a private written confession of the precise offence which they charged upon him in their advertisement; yet he has had the effrontery since that time to declare again and again to the public that this advertisement was a "false statement"! He now tries to escape the disgrace of proven and confessed falsehood by pleading cowardice, as follows:—

"We allowed him [Mr. Robbins] to 'bulldoze' us, so to speak, and we wrote by his dictation such an article as would show to his Christian friends that his name had been placed upon our infidel circular without his authority. Perhaps it was one of the weakest things we ever did, but so it was. He stood over us in an imperative manner, and we penned by Mr. Robbins' dictation, in part at least, the note which Mr. Abbot terms 'Bennett's Confession,' etc."

The truth of that confession he does not venture to deny, though he tries to explain it away at great length, and without success. The fact remains that Mr. Bennett either did, or did not, use the names of McKesson & Robbins without authority; if he did, his denial is false—if he did not, his confession is false.

Now we should not have again referred to this disgusting subject, if Mr. Bennett had not gone out of his way to repeat a malignant falsehood about us, by way of revenge for our telling the inexorable truth about himself,—a falsehood, moreover, which had already been annihilated in his own columns. Some months ago he published in the Truth Seeker a statement that we had “forged the signature” of Mr. O. B. Frothingham to a circular issued in 1874. The only foundation for this statement was an affidavit of Mr. Frothingham in 1875. The language of this affidavit, drawn up by an attorney in legal style, certainly gave some color to the charge; but it was never intended by Mr. Frothingham to make the remotest insinuation that we had used his name improperly. As a matter of fact, there was not the slightest shadow of truth in the accusation; we had received at the time, and have now in our possession, Mr. Frothingham's cordial and explicit written consent to put his name to that circular. But we wrote at once to him, and received in reply a letter containing these words:—

“The idea of your forging my name to the document in question is unspeakably absurd. It was given you freely, and was never either by word or implication disavowed. . . . Use this note in any way you please.”

In accordance with this permission, we sent a copy of the note to Mr. Bennett for publication in the Truth Seeker. This was the only time we ever asked such a favor, and we expected it to be granted without hesitation, because we had just published unhesitatingly in THE INDEX Mr. Bennett's own explanation about the McKesson & Robbins advertisement, refraining out of kindness from pointing out its unsatisfactory character. But Mr. Bennett would not print it! Mr. Frothingham himself then sent to him another similar letter, and again Mr. Bennett would not print it! His motive was evident enough: he had got hold of a useful calumny, and meant to make the most of it. But Mr. Frothingham, knowing the villainous injustice done by it and not choosing to be used as its instrument, sent a third letter in full vindication of our course respecting his name. Mr. Bennett did not dare to make a third refusal, but printed the letter in the Truth Seeker of April 20. This letter closed as follows:—

“Nothing in my affidavit was designed to cast reproach or blame on Mr. Abbot, who did simply what he was authorized to do—namely, affix my name to an appeal in behalf of THE INDEX. The language of the affidavit referred to does, I perceive on close examination, admit of a construction injurious to Mr. Abbot; but it was never intended, or suspected by me before. I repudiate it wholly, and declare, interpreted as it ought to be, the affidavit contains no reflection on him whatever. Yours truly,
“O. B. FROTHINGHAM.”

Now if the party himself whose name is used in any such case is satisfied, nobody else has any right to complain; it is a little too absurd for third parties to invent grievances, and thrust them upon those who emphatically repudiate them. The difference between Mr. Bennett's case and ours is simply this: Messrs. McKesson & Robbins declare that Mr. Bennett used their names without authority—Mr. Frothingham declares that we used his name with authority. If Mr. Bennett thinks that his readers are too stupid not to perceive this world-wide difference, he must entertain a remarkable opinion of their intelligence.

When Mr. Frothingham had thus, in the Truth Seeker itself, utterly extinguished the silly and groundless accusation that we had misused his name, it could never have been revived for any honest purpose. But Mr. Bennett stands now in sore need of some disgraceful charge against us, to make his readers forget the avalanche of disgrace which he has so rashly drawn upon his own head; and, having no other that is even plausible, he turns resurrectionist and digs up the corpse of this one. After quoting the affidavit above mentioned, he says:—

“Let the reader decide whether Mr. Abbot has a stone to throw at us for using names without authority. If he is not, at least, ‘as deep in the mud as we are in the mire,’ we do not understand the force of language. . . . It is thought that Mr. Abbot might as well attend to his own circular and not fret himself about ours. Mr. Frothingham, in a note which appeared in the Truth Seeker, April 20 last, endeavored to relieve Mr. Abbot to some extent from the odium resting upon him, but he did not deny the sworn statement above given.”

No, but Mr. Frothingham did deny, in the most explicit terms (which Bennett studiously forbears to quote with the affidavit itself), the construction which Bennett puts on that sworn statement. Mr. Frothingham testifies that he authorized us to use his name exactly as we did use it; and we still possess, moreover, his explicit consent written at the time. Who is this D. M. Bennett, forsooth, that he should know better than Mr. Frothingham himself what Mr. Frothingham has or has not authorized? Or that he should undertake to instruct Mr. Frothingham as to the meaning he intended to express by his own affidavit? We do not choose to print this affidavit in part; if we print it at all, it will be in full, and Mr. Bennett knows very well that we forbear to do this out of mercy alone.

We did not at all blame Mr. Bennett in the first instance for thinking that the affidavit reflected upon us to some extent; it was self-evidently worded by a lawyer, not by Mr. Frothingham, and its legal phraseology can easily be interpreted to mean what Mr. Frothingham himself testifies he did not mean at all in signing it. But after Mr. Frothingham had explicitly declared what his real meaning was, so far as it concerns us, and that he was and is entirely satisfied with our use of his name on the circular in question, there was not a shadow of excuse left for persisting in the charge that we had used his name without authority. His letter in the Truth Seeker absolutely refuted that charge. To quote his affidavit now without also quoting his letter which interprets it, and to do this for the purpose of making him appear to blame us when he explicitly approves what we did, is a piece of deliberate scoundrelism of the most transparent kind; and it will open the eyes of all honest readers of the Truth Seeker to the real character of the man who has so long deceived them respecting THE INDEX. It ought to open the eyes even of T. C. Leland, who has been duped into becoming Bennett's accomplice in this dirty work of defamation unless he does dirty work from a natural love of it, and who either deserves pity for his credulity or contempt for his willingness to be the cat-paw and tool of calculating knavery. Sooner or later all who do not wish to be similarly duped will discover the unblushing falsehood of Bennett's course, and learn to estimate at its true value the character of a journal whose chief arguments are wilful misstatements and calumnies.

Communications.

THE SCIENCE OF UNIVERSOLOGY.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

NO. XXVIII.

The sciences of comparative mythology and comparative religion have, quite of late, undergone a remarkable development. Ordinary mythology has been discovered to be, in great part, “a disease of language,” in that portion of it which related to the simple aspects and processes of Nature; and it may now be added that the mysticism of the Hermetic philosophy, of which the Kabbala so largely partakes, is the corresponding disease of language affecting, not physical aspects and processes, but the earliest metaphysical speculations of the human mind. “Myths,” says Stuart-Glennie, “may now be considered as conclusively proved to originate, not in the conscious allegory of philosophic thought, but in the causation-notions of primitive ignorance and the poesy of popular language” (in The Morningland, p. 258). What is here asserted is only true of one class of myths, those of ordinary mythology. There was another distinct and more subtle current of similar development which was based expressly on “the conscious allegory of philosophic thought.” This cropped out primitively in the Hermetic and Kabbalistic doctrine, mysteries, and literature, and was finally crystallized in the doctrine of the Trinity and the allied doctrines of the Christian theology. The explanation of these statements will result from what follows; and we shall see how mythology and naturalism were derived mainly from Nature, were, in other words, Nature-myths; while Hermetics and Christian theology were derived, on the contrary, from the primitive SCIENCE of mankind.

To recur now to the origin of the distinct idea of God as Creator and Father. There are three dominant ideas which are closely allied with all our experiences, and which, indeed, constitute THE EPI-TOME OF ALL EXPERIENCE, or OF THE ON-GOING OF THINGS in time. These are: BEGINNING, MIDDLE, and END. So named they are cosmical discriminations of the temple or ordinal class. But, concurrently, the same discriminations crop out in various special spheres. Mathematically, they recur, and appear as: FIRST, SECOND, and THIRD; temporally, as PAST, PRESENT, and FUTURE; philosophically, as CAUSE, MEANS, and END, or EFFECT; socially, as PARENT, CHILD, and GRANDCHILD; practically and semi-theologically, as CREATOR, MAINTAINER, and DESTROYER, modified in a more theological sense into CREATOR, CREATION, and CREATURE; or, again, both theologically and philosophically, as: GOD, the WORLD or UNIVERSE, and MAN. All these several series of thought are so analogically identified that, in the earliest use of language, they were virtually confounded with each other. Indeed, this had to be so; for before language had developed abstract terms (or distinct series in each sphere) the concrete terms, as father, son, etc., had to be employed in the abstract sense also (or the single series for the still greater variety of meanings). Later, when language differentiated and developed, the primitive series of terms, charged with many meanings, fell into partial disuse, and became mystical. This was the origin of the Hermetic mysticism above alluded to. The desire to conceal the secret wisdom, to which the mysticism is usually attributed, was a subsequent affectation and pedantry. The mysticism itself had this otherwise everyway sufficient philosophical and scientific ground.

The most distinct identification of this primitive ordinal trio of ideas with theology, which now remains to us, is found in the Brahminical trinity, Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva, who are literally, the Creator, the Preserver, and the Destroyer; and in the three idols of the Chinese joss-house, which distinctly symbolize the past, the present, and the future. It is the same succession of ideas, as partially shown in what precedes, and as will be more fully shown in what follows, which was subsequently lifted and modified into the far more spiritually constituted Christian Trinity: God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. But notwithstanding the difference, the fundamental identity is such as to constitute the valid basis for another instance of the impending grand reconciliation,—that, namely, between Brahminism, Buddhism, and Christianity. Madame Blavatski is of the opinion that this particular Brahminical trinity was “an after-thought, or of later origin than the other more subtle, metaphysical, and occult trinities of the Brahminical system,”—which will be subsequently noticed. It is, at all events, the simplest or most palpable one, and therefore popularly, or in the ordinary historical point of view, the earliest, howmuchsoever a higher metaphysic may have preceded it.

Generalizing this family of ideas, or making them universal, the beginner, or author of things, was also the Father of universal being, and thence God the Father; and also First, and Cause, and hence First Cause. The maintainer or preserver of things, or else that which is maintained and preserved—for an ambiguity begins here to declare itself—is the second in the series of three. From the prior view, we have, here, the Son of God, and the mediator (means, middle term, or go-between); and, provisionally we may say, the grandchild or grandson, as the third of the series. From the other or mundane point of view, we have: 1. God; 2. The Universe or World, or Man (the human world); and 3. The Son of Man, for any darling or beloved member of the human world, and so especially for the messianic idea. Hence the designations the Son of God and the Son of Man concurred as the appropriate titles of Christ.

Continuing, in a simplistic way, the generative idea, from God, through a son, and then through successive generations, infinitely, but essentially of the same family and kind, we have the origin and type of the Neo-Platonic system of theology and doctrine of emanations; by which God diffused himself into the external universe, and by which all beings whatsoever are sparks or emanations from God. This doctrine reproduces itself in modern Rationalism and Pantheism, and is intermediate between Brahmanism and Christianity, and is consequently swept into the same grand circuit of reconciliation.

But this immense sweep of mental evolution was destined to reach a higher refinement in that wonderful series of doctrines, the Christian theology. The method of this transformation is curious and instructive. Instead of pursuing onward the generative idea indefinitely, or indeed very distinctly, even to the third stage, that of a grandson, the current of speculation was arrested and became transcendental. The method of it was this: Instead of the series, father, son, and grandson, we have, as a natural epitomizing of this series with all subsequent progeny, the following abridgement: 1. Father, or, now, God the Father; 2. Son, or God the Son; and 3. The total out-sending, spirit, or projection along that line of descent; as if we should say, Father, Son, etc. It was, then, this “etc.” (et cetera) which finally became The Holy Spirit; much as when Max Müller finds the question-word “How?” transmuted, in Hindoo mythology, into a god. “Total” is the same as “whole-y” which converts into “holy”; and spirit (out-giving), spirit (what stands out), spray, spirit, and spirit are the same word, etymologically modified. The wind and breath are the allied ideas, as currents, and “ghost” is similarly allied with “gust.” It is of no importance that these words are modern and English. They are also ancient and Aryan. Apart from this, the ideas involved have the same relations in all languages, and the specialized meanings having once become attached to the words, in any one nation, the words with those meanings were readily rendered into all other languages. Doubtless, also, in passing through some one of these translations, a case occurred where for “son” a word was used which meant also the young of an animal, perhaps especially of the sheep (?), whence the “Lamb” of God came also to be used as synonymous with the “Son” of God.

The series of terms here given is masculine. There must have been at one time a corresponding female series: “Mother, daughter, etc.” Hence it happened that there are in Gnostic and Kabbalistic literature two Holy Ghosts,—one male, Ennoia, and one female, Sophia.

It is the profound and acute perception of Stuart-Glennie, that the long and severe conflict between Neo-Platonism and early Christianity turned solely upon the peculiar constitution of the Christian Trinity and its all-important logical inferences. He has also, with astonishing acumen, seized upon the very essence of the difference between the two systems; a difference upon the historical origin of which, this investigation will, however, throw an additional illumination. Without necessarily participating in the animus of the writer, the following quotation is too important to be omitted in this connection. Having stated the Neo-Platonic theory of the trinity, this author proceeds as follows (p. 268):—

"Compare now the Christian theory of the Trinity. The three persons are not here, as in the Neo-Platonic trinity, united by the same, but by a different relation. The Father begets the Son, but the Son does not beget the Holy Spirit. This person is the fruit of the union of the Father and the Son, and proceeds from both the one and the other. Nor are these distinctions so puerile as they may to some appear. If the three hypostases of the trinity are conceived as emanating, the second from the first, and the third from the second, each has an immediate relation only with that which precedes, and the first and the third are in a manner strangers to one another. But if the third person is conceived as the very relation of the first and the second, the Father and the Son, all three are profoundly united together, and form, to use the expression of Bossuet, 'une sainte et divine société'. And hence results another important consequence. The world must be thus conceived as profoundly separated from God. The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost form, as it were, a circle. They suffice for themselves. And if the world depends on God, it is by a bond altogether different from that which unites the divine persons to each other. The world has neither proceeded from, nor has it been engendered, but created by God. Not a necessary, and therefore a divine emanation, as in the Neo-Platonic system, the world is thus but, as it were, an accident. Its duration is but a point in eternity. And it needs but that the hand be withdrawn which has formed it out of nothing, and sustained it on the abyss, and all this fair world returns to the nothing whence, for the glory of its Creator, it was commanded forth.

"Now consider these two theories. Equally unverifiable they may indeed be, and equally dreams. But not on that account will the true student of man's history turn away from the consideration of them. For he knows that nothing has hitherto exerted a greater influence on the destinies of mankind than mere fictions, dreams, fictions: most of them, no doubt, uttered in good faith, but none, therefore, the less false. It is, indeed, the tragic pathos of this fact that chiefly gives to the history of humanity its profound and inexhaustible interest, as of a sublime drama. And the scientific student further knows that, in different modes of dreaming, there may be discovered tendencies of thought and general intellectual conceptions which it is of the utmost consequence, for a true understanding of the history of man, duly to distinguish and rightly to appreciate. Puerile, therefore, as these theories of the trinity, both Christian and Neo-Platonic, may be, not trifling is the interest, nor trivial the task, of their examination.

"Seriously, then, comparing the Christian and Neo-Platonic theories of God, is it not evident that they are distinguished by nothing less important than fundamentally different conceptions of causation? In the Greek theory of Neo-Platonism, God, as the cause of things, is conceived of as in the world; hence all the orders of being are knit together in a series of necessary relations; and, even in the relation of things to the first cause of all, there is nothing arbitrary, but throughout the whole system of the universe there is one pervading law.

"In the Judaic theory of the Christians, God, as the cause of things, is conceived of as outside and independent of the world; and, hence, there is no necessary connection between the various orders of being; no necessary, and therefore predictable, relation between the different classes of phenomena themselves, but only a purely arbitrary relation to a cause outside of them, an independent Creator. But the Neo-Platonic conception of the relation of things is thus seen to be fundamentally the conception of science; and its theory of an emanating trinity, though but a dream, a prophetic dream—a dream of law, and a prophecy of the theories of transformation, evolution, and development. On the other hand, the Christian's conception of the relation of things is thus seen to be fundamentally the negation of all science; yet its theory of a creating trinity, though but a dream, is also a prophetic dream—a dream of MIRACLE, and a prophecy of the most disastrous superstition, intolerant bigotry, and intolerable cruelty."

Returning to the historical and lingual development of the Christian doctrine of the Trinity, observe how it is that this close family type of the idea was differentiated from the open-communion type of Neo-Platonism. It is obvious, on reflection, that the "etc." which developed into the Holy Ghost represented equally the Father-and-the-Son; or neither more than the other. It was not a definite descendant of the Son, as a grandson would have been. It was a spirit or efflux from both; and so came as directly from the Father as from the Son. From this seemingly slight incident, the immense difference of doctrine in question seemingly arose. But it is in the seeming merely that this circumstance is trivial. Any difference whatever at this fountain-head of discriminations—such even as it may require the closest metaphysical acumen to perceive—is like the pebble which, disparting two mountain rills at their common source, sends two mighty rivers to their opposite oceans. We shall have still more striking illustrations of this fact in treating of occultism and spiritualism, in this same connection; and when we are fully acquainted with the subject, we shall be no longer free, with the author quoted, and with the proclivities of the positivistic order of mind, to regard these logico-fundamental discriminations as mere dreams or fancies. Nor is it to be inferred, from the account we are giving of the historical and lingual genesis of doctrines, that the things represented, the doctrines themselves, are much less important than they have been instinctively conceived of as being. All that positivism can rightly insist on, in the premises, is, that the element of mystery be eliminated; and to this Christianity is also absolutely committed.

WAITING FOR THE CARS.

Conservative.—Now, am I wrong in saying that your organs and associations, at best, barely keep their heads above water?

Radical.—No, not in the least; you might put it stronger still.

C.—And your attempts at organization have always failed?

R.—You mean failed to sustain themselves in the given forms?

C.—Of course.

R.—In that sense they have always failed.

C.—Why not in every sense?

R.—Oh, the spirit endures, and keeps making new forms.

C.—For new failures.

R.—That does not trouble me. Our work is not organization, but disintegration. Our two best workers, Socrates and Emerson, never tried to organize anything. All they attempted to do was to agitate,—to wake people up, and get them to move forward. That they succeeded in.

C.—Socrates left but few followers who agreed with him. Will Emerson leave many?

R.—What of that?

C.—Don't you know that the real work of shaping people's thoughts has been done by men like Paul, and Luther, and Wesley? I mean by men who have held fast to one idea, and forced men to follow it; is not that so?

R.—Don't you know that to me all three men, great and good as they were, were merely reactionaries and obstructives, who checked human progress for a time? Man always gets free again, though.

C.—But what good will this freedom do? You said a moment ago that you did not want to organize, but merely to disintegrate.

R.—Precisely.

C.—But don't you mean to set up new forms of belief and worship, in place of the old ones?

R.—No, indeed!

C.—You are deliberately trying to pull down all creeds and rites, and put nothing in their place?

R.—Yes; that is, no other creeds and rites. We are backwoodsmen, clearing the old forest, without any idea of putting out another forest. We want new ground for new crops.

C.—But, more definitely, do you intend to establish any new ideas of the future life and the relations of God to man,—in other words, a new religion?

R.—I, for one, do not.

C.—Then it does seem to me, if I may speak plainly—

R.—By all means.

C.—That you are doing a great deal of mischief, for which you are not going to make any atonement. You are going to take away our most precious ideas, and give nothing in their place.

R.—All idea of the relations of God to man, we shall not take away. Still, we shall take most of your ideas away, and I am not sorry for it. I don't, of course, insist on the fact that error is more dangerous than ignorance; for you claim that your views are true. I only maintain that, whether your views are true or false, the world will be none the worse off for our destruction of them.

C.—What do you mean?

R.—Why, in the first place, the material comfort of the world depends mainly on the progress of science; I mean, not merely in new discoveries, but in the diffusion of scientific ways of thinking and acting,—for instance, expecting that similar causes will produce similar results, and adapting one's means to one's ends accordingly.

C.—Oh, I admit all that.

R.—And you must also admit that the Bible, and the whole mass of religious teachings based upon it, are diffusing a tone of thought which is not scientific.

C.—You don't call it anti-scientific, I hope.

R.—Oh, no; but ante-scientific it certainly is; and it is also plainly unscientific; for it was essentially framed in the infancy of science, and by men who cared nothing about what little science they knew of. Paul told his converts to avoid the oppositions of science, and beware lest any man spoil them through philosophy.

C.—I have heard all this before. What does it all amount to, in comparison with what religion does for the feelings?

R.—I was coming to that.

C.—Yes. That is your weak point. People want to have their feelings excited. Your freethought does not do that, and never will.

R.—I hope not. The more readily any one is excited, the more easily he is tempted. For one of the hysterical and excitable people who become great saints, there are ten who become great sinners.

C.—You don't think that vicious feelings predominate over virtuous ones? If you do, you are more Orthodox than I am.

R.—I consider the feelings virtuous or vicious according as they are directed properly or not. Feeling which has no control from the reason is never virtuous. Virtue means conformity to moral laws.

C.—What do you think of feelings that conform instinctively?

R.—A case of unstable equilibrium. It is like a child, whom you can predict nothing about except that he will keep changing. Manly virtue is calm, thoughtful, and steady. You know how many excesses and falls there are during revivals.

C.—You can't make people virtuous without stirring up their feelings.

R.—Yes, to a steady glow, but not to a fitful blaze. Besides, religious feeling is apt to be stirred up so much that it burns out without warming the conduct perceptibly.

C.—Is not that the whistle?

R.—Yes. I was going to say something about the advantage of devoting ourselves to this life, if only as the best possible preparation for any other; but I will only insist on what I said before. In establishing scientific ways of thought and action in place of unscientific ones, in giving reason control over the feelings, so that excitability can be kept in check, and, finally, in teaching us to devote ourselves to this life wholly, and make the most of it, we destruction-agitators, as you call us, are doing so much to make people's conduct right, that it matters little whether we are making their opinions on questions which nobody professes to understand more or less correct. If I must go wrong in theology in order to go right in practice, I am perfectly satisfied to remain in my errors. I care more for practical than for speculative truth; but I won't admit that I am farther than you from either.

C.—Well, we will travel the same way at present, at all events. Here's our train. F. M. H.

CONCORD, Mass.

THE WATKINS CONVENTION.

RAILROAD REDUCTIONS.

The Atlantic & Great Western Railroad Company will sell half-fare tickets from either of the following cities, where twenty persons purchase; viz., St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Cleveland. Send your name either to R. Peterson, corner 3d and Walnut Sts., St. Louis, John P. Caldwell, P.O. Box 1093, Cincinnati, or E. D. Stark, 9 Rouse Block, Cleveland. There will be no doubt of the required number at Cleveland. Fare for round trip from Cleveland about $10.

Eric Railroad.

Excursion tickets to Watkins Glen, the round trip from New York City, $13; Dunkirk, $8; Buffalo, $5.75; Salamanca, $7.50. (Hope to get better rates.)

From the South.

The Penn Railroad, the Erie & Philadelphia Railroad, and the Northern Central Railroad will sell excursion tickets at all stations. You must first get an order from H. L. Green, Salamanca, N.Y. Send six cents. Rates from a few of the stations: Baltimore, $11.12; Harrisburg, $7.52; Philadelphia, $9.00 (this low rate should give us a large delegation); Lock Haven, $5.00; Williamsport, $4.00; Pittsburg, $12.44; Tyrone, $7.20; Elmira, 88 cts.

From the North.

The Ontario Northern Railroad gives half fare. Connects at Canandaigua with Northern Central Railroad, which will give the following rates, round trip: Canandaigua, $1.88; Stanley, $1.44; Penn Yan, 92 cts.; Sodus Point, $2.25; Wallington, $2.10. Many from Canada and northern New York will come this way. Remember you must send for order of H. L. Green, Salamanca, N.Y., to get excursion tickets from Canandaigua. Send six cents.

Other Roads and Boats.

The Utica, Cortland & Elmira Railroad, the Corning & Geneva Railroad, and the boats on Seneca Lake will carry at half rates.

From the East.

Friends from the East had better come to Geneva, N.Y., and there take railroad or steamboat. $1 both ways.

P.S.—Latest. Trip tickets from Corry, Pa., $9.00; Erie, Pa., $10; by Penn Railroad.

H. L. GREEN.

AN OPEN LETTER TO E. F. UNDERWOOD.

MY DEAR BROTHER IN HUMANITY:—

You will allow me to communicate in this way my appreciation and admiration of your noble and efficient efforts for the maintenance and propagation of liberty. Although we are not personally acquainted, and I may differ from you regarding the belief in deity, you compel me, by your excellent work for liberalism, to acknowledge sincerely that you act in accordance with that highest law for which I do not know a more appropriate name than divine law. In a life of fifty-six years, I have had my share of acquaintances with cultured and good men; but with regard to my dearest sentiment, true liberalism, so far as my capability permits me to comprehend it, I must say that I never have found persons who carried out liberal principles so consistently and conscientiously as you, William J. Potter, Eliza Wright, and others. With the hope that all "those who are liberal in fact" will coöperate, and bring humanity to a more rational and to a truer brotherly and sisterly condition, Yours sincerely, CARL H. HOBBSCH.

DOVER, N.H., July 14, 1878.

THE FIVE POINTS.

WHAT POSITIVE TRUTH HAS A RADICAL TO TEACH?

First. That the order of Nature embraces all our feelings and thoughts, so that it is only by obeying natural laws that we can improve ourselves.

Second. That this earthly life is the ideal to which should turn all our desires.

Third. That knowledge is our only guide, and that faith is useful only to make suggestions which reason must verify or discard.

Fourth. That all excitement, especially religious excitement, is extremely dangerous.

Fifth. That we should devote ourselves to carrying our race upwards in the same line which it has followed in rising out of the caudal period.

These are our "five points."

F. M. H.

IT SO FALLS OUT that what we have we prize not to the worth while we enjoy it; but being lacked and lost, why, then we rack the value.—Shakespeare.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

If the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10¢ per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8¢ per line.	For 26 to 51 insertions, 6¢ per line.	For 52 to 104 insertions, 5¢ per line.
10¢	8¢	6¢	5¢

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSOC., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or reading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.20 for one year, including postage, or 5 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Oelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh Chunder Ben, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1863 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Comard Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physiology and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science; A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science; A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Broviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BURGHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CABYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 2 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, at 10s. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. A New Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWELL). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove Heilmann, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Obedience.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	4.00
Emotional Expression of Man and Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 1 vol., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compiling—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Father Time.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	2.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (S. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellaneous.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Free Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. F., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Bahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot" translation.....	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GROE'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.00
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Ordinances on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelton.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Food. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by A. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERE (ORPHEUS O.). Versifications, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 3 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 1 vol.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.50
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.50
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annals. Report on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1859 to 1868.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Humankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MOBLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUKLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kickos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHILIPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Slave's Ajar.....	1.50
The Tropic of Cancer.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds suggested under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.00
Natural Phenomena.....	1.00
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c., with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	1.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	1.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.00
RENNAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SORELLEN (H.) Spectroscopic Analysis in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By J. A. Smith, Esq., LL.D., F.R.S., &c.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.25
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STEAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TEMPERSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vendy Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Emancipand and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Book, &c. 3. No. 6, Sketches, Basil Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humarists, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Shrapnel Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Manhood.....	1.25
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	6.00
TENDALL (JOHN). Papaday as a Discov.....	1.50
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Excursion in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
On Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	2.00
Lectures on Light.....	2.00
Proceedings at the Farwell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.00
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLE (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The King and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.00
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. F.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Science and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	1.00
Child Life.....	1.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

331 Washington St., Boston.

Digitized by Google

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STIRSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.25. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style and price. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Kilguswood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

A REMARKABLE BOOK. A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Boden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. E. Gladstone, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,
Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on its issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.F., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir David Wedderburn,
G. H. Lewes.

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 80 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER.

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 6 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to getter up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orrville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried. ...
E. C. WALKER.

THE BEST PORTRAIT OF THOMAS PAINE.

Engraved by the famous W. Sharpe from Romney's celebrated portrait—

Heliotype Copy

by James R. Osgood & Co., of Boston. This is a beautiful work of art, and by all odds the very best likeness of Thomas Paine to be found. It is 10x8 inches in size, and will be mailed post-paid on receipt of $1.00. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSKY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NEW BOOKS

TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Bookshelves and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 25 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE,

55 BEEKMAN STREET,

NEW YORK.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Sent to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BELIEFS AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 18 and 20, 1876.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. O. Gannett.

No. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 80 cts.; one hundred, $8.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS for 1872, '73, '74, '75, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUS & Co. Augusta, Maine.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE.

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doerflinger & Co., 56 Ossida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESSES TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 28, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XIV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 449.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,
ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

GLIMPSSES.

THE STORY of an "infidel's" suicide on the platform at Capron, Ill., after a public lecture, turns out, as we suspected it would, to be a mere hoax. As a general rule, "infidels" are not fools.

PROFESSOR ADLER lectured recently at Stockton, California, before the Liberal League of that place, on "The Advance of Liberalism in the United States." His lecture is highly spoken of in the local press.

IT IS credibly recorded (who could doubt the assurances of the chaplain?) that Thomas Ford, the first prisoner who has died at the new State Prison in Concord, Massachusetts, "though a prisoner, gave his soul to his only friend, Jesus Christ." There need be no further anxiety about the poor fellow's welfare.

OUR GOOD FRIEND of the Christian Register says: "THE INDEX says, 'It is necessary to choose between Unitarianism and perfect freedom.' Well, we are ready for that election; we choose perfect freedom, and, in the exercise of that freedom, we choose also Unitarianism." So says the Roman Catholic: "I choose perfect freedom, and, in the exercise of that freedom, I choose also Catholicity." The question is whether the freedom remains after the exercise of that choice. Can one have his cake and eat it too?

WE ARE indebted to Mr. Charles K. Whipple for this amusing item: "I never knew whether to consider as a joke or a fact the story of the child who, being asked whether he had been baptized, said—'Yes, but it didn't take!' I can now easily believe it to be the latter, having actually heard a little boy seriously ask the following question: 'Mother, what does being baptized keep you from taking?' The amusement caused to those present by the question prevented the child from pressing for a direct answer."

THE Congregationalist joins the company of bewailers over the decadence of Orthodoxy: "The Connecticut River Valley, where Edwards lived and labored, with saintly men of kindred spirit, is losing its spirituality, and the service of a home missionary is greatly needed to work outside the pulpit and to reach non-church-goers. An old clergyman in one of these villages, who knows whereof he affirms, tells us that not over one-half of the American families in his town are in the habit of attending church. Has the raising of tobacco had anything to do with this demoralization?" What a guess! The trouble is that Orthodoxy is not true, and the people are finding that out.

SAYS THE Christian Statesman: "There are some indications that the Sabbath question is destined to come to the front as one of the leading aspects of the great question of religion and the State. The action of the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, the work which will be steadily maintained in this city and State, the efforts of the International Sabbath Association to reduce to the lowest point the amount of railway and postal service, the action of other Sabbath-protecting societies like the Sabbath Committee of New York, will almost certainly maintain and extend the interest which has been awakened. Probably, before long, we shall be ready for a national convention or conference, and perhaps for a national organization to secure uniform action on this subject in all the States. The old controversy over the Sabbath-malls is almost certain to be revived, and when it is the Christian people of the land will not submit to an insulting and erroneous decision as quietly as they did fifty years ago."

AN ULTRAMONTANE satirist gives in a handbill, at Berlin, the following as "An Old Catholic's Confession of Faith": "I believe in the German Emperor, the mighty creator of the united German Empire, and in the great Chancellor, a native-born Prussian, our Lord, who leads us by his mind which he inherited from father and mother; in the year 1886 he suffered much, was reviled by his friends of to-day, of whom many at that time would rather have seen him dead and buried; was sought to be degraded from his place of dignity, but after four years rose again, and is ascended even to the highest seat of the kingdom and made to be a prince; he sitteth at the right hand of the emperor, from whence he decreeth penalties and judgeth both the Black and the Red [i.e., both Jesuits and Communists]. I believe in the great spirit of German science, in an Old Catholic State Church, the communion of Freemasons, the increase of taxes, the dearness of flesh [i.e., of meat], and an everlasting soldier-life. Amen."

REV. WASHINGTON GLADDEN, editor of Sunday Afternoon, is frightened at the realists spread of free thought: "The men who are fit to be masters in Israel know that the real issues of this day are far more profound and vital than those over which most of the noise is made. It would be a pity if, while we were discussing a question of fellowship, the multitudes about us should come to the conclusion that there is no God; or if, while we were zealously stopping the cracks by which heresy creeps in, the Lord himself, in the persons of his poor, should be quietly shut out of his Church. We do not urge that the questions which now absorb the sectaries be disregarded; we ask that they have the attention that rightly belongs to them and no more. We do not plead for the omission of any truth; we only ask that the word of truth be rightly divided, and that the emphasis of our censure be put where it belongs. We know what reply will be made to all this. 'Obsta, principis!' our friends will cry. But we beg to suggest once more that it is too late to resist the beginnings. The battle is on us, and the simple question is where the onset is heaviest, and where the line is weakest. That is where the good soldier wants to be. And when he is there he will be careful not to fire into the men that are fighting on his side. The old proverb about the nose of the camel in the door of the tent is likely also to be quoted for our discomfiture; but it may be well to consider whether it is worth while to spend all our strength in holding the tent door against the camel's nose, when all the rest of the menagerie are tearing down the tent itself and threatening to devour the household."

THE Christian Union, in answer to the question, "What are our reasons for believing in the inspiration of the Bible?" makes the following reply: "Impossible to answer in a paragraph, except in hints. 1. Its unity. A library of sixty-six different books, written by over forty different writers, centuries apart, in different eras, languages, civilizations, without coöperation or a knowledge of each others' work; yet all teaching the same substantial views of God and the same law of life, and pointing to the same method of salvation from sin; viz., through repentance and acceptance of the divine forgiving and helpful love. 2. Its spirituality. Its views of God are not only immeasurably higher and broader than those of the ages in which its various books were written, but even higher and broader than those which now prevail in countries which have been under the instruction of the Bible for centuries, so that it is still leading us up higher and higher. 3. Fulfillment of prophecy. 4. Miracles, attesting the authority of the writer or speaker. 5. Its inspiring power. Its actual effect in giving divine strength to the tempted, comfort to the afflicted, light to the perplexed, and divine elevation not only to individuals, but to entire communities. There is no better evidence of the inspiration of the Bible than is afforded by its effect on the Sandwich Islands, for example. What other collection of so-called sacred writings has ever produced any even analogous effect?" These, then, being the "reasons for believing in the inspiration of the Bible," we are compelled to—disbelieve in it!

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT, Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL, Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES, St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH, Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN, Irvington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZABETH WRIGHT, Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. BROTHINGHAM, New York
 MR. WM. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. P. HOLLOWELL, Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON, Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT, San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE, Providence, R. I.
 HON. M. J. SAVAGE, Boston, Mass.
 HON. W. E. SPENCER, Chicago, Ill.
 HON. W. H. HILL, Sports, Wis.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH, Florence, Mass.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN, Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEAYLER, Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 MR. ISAAC WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. HENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. F. UNDERWOOD, Portland, Me.
 MR. ROBERT COLLYER, Chicago, Ill.
 MR. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN, Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. R. S. MCCORMICK, Franklin, Pa.
 HON. F. W. EVANS, Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON, New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST, Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON, Tenny, N. Y.
 MISS SALLIE HOLLEY, Littleburg, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MRS. JANE P. TITCOMB, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX, 142 Chandler St., Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT, W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX, H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BELL, Granada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOULT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
 Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galena.
 Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Levia.
 Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
 Kansas.....JOHN FARNWORTH, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....B. E. CLARK, Louisville.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. BAYWARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....KARL SCHENKMAN, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....E. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....G. B. BARNETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. OVEIS, Passaic.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lewisville.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT O. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wyoming.....D. P. WILCOX, Laramie.
 District of Columbia.....W. E. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Alaska.....W. FERGUSON, Prisco City.
 Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman, Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS, 137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HARLAN P. HYDE, 231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeldt.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeldt, Julius Philsterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrook, W. Hookman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
 CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Haas, G. O. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudso, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. cison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seayler, J. P. Mendum, Elmar Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
 Issued to O. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gint, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
 TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
 HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi E. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi E. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bodet, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harcaron, Philip Sewall.
 CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
 NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunle.
 Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Snow, F. A. Hermande, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
 ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunning.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Ellis, Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
 ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Greegg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. O. D. Dake, and others.
 TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
 CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
 JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
 Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhuiz, A. O. Allen, C. E. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
 Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
 FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
 WEST MINNESOTA, MINNESOTA.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
 Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, O. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
 MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
 MANTOWOOD, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
 Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Rausch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
 ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
 Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrell, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Moot, and others.
 CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
 WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
 CASE COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. B. Steele.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Case County.
 ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—President, O. B. Hoffman; Secretary, E. L. Sent.
 Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sent, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. E. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sent, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
 PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
 XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. E. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
 Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauenstein, M.D., E. Lebovitz, and others.
 OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
 Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
 CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Reilly, and others.
 ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Paré.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
 HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."
 CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.
 MONKLEY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.
 MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinckley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary, on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.
 VINCENNES, INDIANA.—President, Charles Graeter; Secretary, Oran F. Baker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary in behalf of the Vincennes Liberal League.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Voltaire.

BY REV. JOHN W. CHADWICK.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

There still remain for our consideration those writings in which he dealt with philosophical and moral and religious subjects with absolute directness, save as he ever and anon assures us that for himself he believes everything and explains nothing. His sarcastic expressions of intellectual humility, of his inability to comprehend the adorable mysteries which nevertheless he plausibly accepts, deceived nobody; they were not intended to. These essays and discussions, of which his Philosophical Dictionary contains the most important, touch upon every subject that was vital to the interests of the eighteenth century, especially upon every subject that nearly or remotely concerned the Christian religion; its literature, the Bible; its organization, the Church. Of all that Voltaire wrote upon these subjects, it would be very strange if much were not already out of date; but as I read him here, my wonder is to find how much of him has been endorsed by subsequent investigation; not in mere matters of detail, but in the general outlines of his thought. There is here many a rough draft of what has since been made complete. But in his anxiety to worst his adversaries, he sometimes matched their theories with others almost equally absurd. The discovery of the ark atop of Ararat would not have been regarded by Voltaire's contemporaries as a more convincing evidence of the flood than the sea-shells discovered on the Alps. Geology was then too infantile to help him out; so he insisted that these shells had all been dropped by pious pilgrims crossing the mountains on their way to Rome. The vice of all his biblical criticism was that he treated the Bible as a contemporary writing. Relatively to his antagonists, he had a perfect right to do this. An infallible Bible ought at least to stand the tests of the most modern science and morality. But absolutely considered, his method was entirely wrong. A believer in progress, as he was, scouting the doctrine of Rousseau, that modern civilization was inferior to the primitive condition of mankind, somehow it never occurred to him to treat the Bible as one step in the great onward march of history. But practically his failure to do this was a great advantage; so fine a theory would have been altogether wasted on the coarse-brained fanatics to whom he found himself opposed, and the ill-cultured public to which he appealed. His method was exactly suited to the purpose which he had in hand; he treated the Bible as a flat surface; he allowed nothing for perspective; nothing for difference of time and place. Every scientific statement in the Bible he judged as if it had just been written; every action of prophet and apostle as if it had been done in Paris or Geneva only the day before. Every inconsistency, every impurity, every absurdity, he hailed before the bar of a remorseless common-sense, and then triumphantly demanded, "Is this your infallible Bible?" And therefore it must be allowed that he failed almost utterly to appreciate the real significance of the Bible; he could not, if for no other reason than because it was not classical. It was too much like Homer, whom he detested; too much like Gothic architecture, which he despised.

In one respect, his hatred of the priests entrapped him into acquiescence with Rousseau's theory of the degeneracy of mankind. Hateful as this theory was to him in general, he accepted so much of it as asserted that a pure monotheism was the original religion of mankind, and that this had been degraded by the priests into the various forms of polytheistic worship. But, in declaring Roman Catholic Christianity to be a miserable perversion of primitive Christianity, he was clearly right. No theory of evolution is worth considering which does not admit that the stream of progress often bends upon itself, flowing back into the darkness on its way to the perennial light.

But we should make a great mistake to judge Voltaire by the exactness of his theories and their correspondence with the established doctrines of the present time. He had an insatiable curiosity; a more passionate desire for knowledge has never animated any human being; but he was no learned Dryas-dust. He might have been ten times as learned as he was and we should scarcely have heard of him, if to his knowledge had not been superadded such a gift of style as no other man has ever had for just the task to which he found himself invited. It was a style which brought Bayle down from the clouds and made him walk the earth. It was a style of miraculous clearness, of immense vivacity, of such wit and sarcasm as no other man, of any time, has been so compact. "Half a dozen light, apparently careless words, and behold a whole generation's folly so completely turned inside out that the dullest must see its drollery, and the gravest must laugh at it." Voltaire was not a democrat and had not democratic ways; but his style was democracy incarnate. Those who could read at all could understand.

What was the nature and what was the motive of the attack which Voltaire made upon the organized religion of his time? The common understanding is that he was an out-and-out opponent of religion; that he was an atheist in his creed; that the name of God, as well as that of Christ, stood for nothing sacred and precious in his thought. But such an understanding is consistent only with absolute ignorance of the man and what he taught. He wrote to D'Alembert: "I want you to crush the Infamous; that is the great point; it must be reduced to the position it occupies in England; 'tis the greatest service that can be rendered to the human race. You will perceive that I speak only of superstition; as for religion, I love and respect it as you do." Nor did he ever write a word that disagreed with this explicit statement. His writings everywhere imply the existence and the ruling providence of God. Not only so, but explicit statements to the same effect occur by hundreds and thousands. Whole essays and romances are devoted to the proofs of theism. "Atheism and fanaticism," he said, "are two monsters which rend society and devour it." But of these two monsters, he considered atheism the less terrible. With Plutarch and with Bacon, he was thoroughly convinced that total absence of belief was better than belief in such a God as that of Jesuit or Jansenist theology. He would rather men should say there was no such person as Voltaire than say that he had brought a swarm of children into life only that he might give over the most of them to be tortured endlessly. And so he felt sure that God would rather have men deny his existence altogether than attribute to him such a character as that ascribed to him by Augustine and Calvin. But I shall do best to let him speak for himself,—recite the creed which he has written, and let you judge of it for yourselves: "I believe in one God alone, and I love him; I believe in one alone, because there can be but one soul of the great All, a single vivifying Being, a sole Creator. I believe in God, the Father Almighty, because he is the common father of Nature and of all men, who are equally his children. I believe that, God being our common father, we are bound to regard all men as our brothers. I believe that the persecutor is abominable. I believe that theological disputes are at once the most ridiculous farce and the most dreadful scourge of the earth." It must, however, be confessed that, while Voltaire was ever ready to affirm the existence of a Deity, and while the dogmatic atheism of Diderot was altogether repulsive to him, he was a good deal of what we now call an Agnostic. He had no inclination to "talk about God as if he were a man on the next street." That He is, that the order of the universe is ample testimony of his power and wisdom, that he rewards the good and punishes the wicked by no arbitrary decree, but by the simple process of cause and effect,—this was the sum of all that he aspired to know. He never imagined that he could explain everything; he found himself often in the dark. But he had great faith in the increasing knowledge of mankind, and not a little in another life where some dark things would be made clear, and some inequalities be smoothed away.

But if Voltaire was not an atheist, men say, he was certainly an infidel. If by an infidel they mean a person who did not believe the theological statements generally current and authoritative in his time, Voltaire's infidelity does not admit of any doubt whatever. He did not believe in the accepted creed of Romanists or Protestants; he did not believe the Bible or the Church to be infallible or inspired; he did not believe in the Trinity or the atonement, or in total depravity or endless hell; he did not believe in election or reprobation; he did not believe that Jesus was the Infinite God, nor that he was miraculously born, nor that he rose from the dead, nor that he wrought one single miracle; he did not believe in one of all the seven sacraments of the Roman Church. He treated the mass especially with infinite contempt. And what is more, he identified all of these doctrines and these sacraments with Christianity. When he spoke of Christianity, he always had these things in his mind; when he called it "the Infamous," it was because he identified it with these things, and also with the intolerance and persecution of those who were the constituted defenders of these doctrines and these sacraments. But if Christianity had presented itself to him as it presents itself to us in such men as Principal Tulloch and Dean Stanley, you may be very sure he would not have thought of calling it "the Infamous"; he would not have arrayed himself against it. Remember how respectfully he treated Quakerism, notwithstanding the fanatical elements which were involved in it. No other man ever hated fanaticism so much; but he hated war still worse, and ecclesiasticism still worse; and when he found a sect that condemned war and had no priests, he had nothing for it but respect and sympathy. But why did he not labor to reform Christianity instead of trying to destroy it? Because the Roman Catholic Christianity of France seemed to him long past all hope of reformation; he thought it rotten to the core; it was "the Infamous"; to crush it was the only means of saving men from its immeasurable curse.

Let it be noted here that Voltaire did not identify the Christianity of his own time with the Christianity of Jesus. He did not hold Jesus responsible for the abominations of the Jesuits and Jansenists.

And for Jesus, as he estimated his character and work, he had no contempt, but only admiration. I must confess that what he says of Jesus is in exact accord with my own thought. In his own words it is "that Jesus preached a pure morality; that he announced the kingdom of heaven as the reward of the just; that he had disciples attached to his person and his virtues; that those very virtues drew upon him the persecutions of the priests; that through calumny he was put to a shameful death; that Christianity was more likely to succeed by his death than if he had not been persecuted. Seventy individuals, convinced of the innocence of their leader, the purity of his manners, the barbarity of his judges, must influence many a feeling heart." That was abominable heresy in the eighteenth century, but in the nineteenth it is pretty good Orthodoxy. Elsewhere we have another and more critical statement of his belief concerning Jesus: "He was born under the Mosaic Law; he fulfilled all its precepts; he kept all its feasts; he did not reveal the mystery of his incarnation; he never told the Jews he was born of a virgin; he never spoke of the seven sacraments; he instituted no ecclesiastical hierarchy during his life. He concealed from his contemporaries that he was the Son of God, begotten from all eternity, consubstantial with the Father, and that the Holy Ghost proceeded from the Father through the Son. He did not say that his person was composed of two natures and two wills. In the eyes of men he was no more than a just man, pleasing to God, persecuted by the envious, and condemned to death by prejudiced magistrates." Of miracles ascribed to Jesus, of theories of his divinity and so on, Voltaire was as disrespectful as only he could be of superstition and absurdity; but of Jesus, as the teacher of a pure morality and holy trust, he was more reverent than any priest or bishop of his time.

And still we daily in the outer courts of this man's character and aim. For he had very little speculative interest in Christianity. If Christianity, as he encountered it, had been the friend of poverty, the instructor of the people, the advocate of civil justice, the enemy of cruel wars; if it had withheld its hand from persecution and been tolerant of various opinions within its ample fold, Voltaire would not have attacked its creeds and sacraments with half-nay, with a hundredth part—of the tremendous energy he actually brought to bear upon them. Voltaire believed in knowledge as the one great source of human happiness; and he believed in "peace on earth, good-will among men," as did no other man in Europe in his day. But he saw that the Christian Church was the great refuge of ignorance; he saw that the priests, instead of educating the people, did all they could to make their ignorance more dense; he saw that the ecclesiastics opposed themselves to every new discovery; that they barricaded every avenue along which science threatened to approach. If this were all, Voltaire might still have gone his way, comparatively indifferent. But this was not all; this was the smallest part. Voltaire had a nervous horror of all cruelty, a burning hatred of injustice. But cruelty and injustice were the most characteristic manifestations of the Christian spirit in his time. A few examples here will serve my purpose better than any generalization. In 1762, the son of John Calas, of Toulouse, committed suicide; morbid and unhappy, he had prepared his mind for such an act by reading all the literature of suicide that he could find; but it occurred to some one that his father had hung him to prevent his turning Catholic. The act how natural! And what an easy way of compassing the death of an able-bodied man! There was not a particle of evidence; Calas had been remarkably tolerant; another son, who had turned Catholic, he had still treated handsomely; he had had a Catholic servant in his house for many years; the young man's body bore no signs of violence; his linen was not rumpled. But because some superstitious knave chose to imagine that he had been murdered, his father was put to the torture and finally put to death; his wife and children were also put to the torture. The news came to Voltaire; the wife and children also came to him; he gave them shelter; he did more; he made all Europe ring with his recital of the infernal crime which had been committed in the name of justice and religion. And he did this so effectually that in due time, though Calas could not be brought to life again, his sentence was reversed, and his wife and children had their property, of which they had been robbed, restored to them. "Who is that whom such a crowd is following?" asked some one of a poor woman in Paris during Voltaire's triumph there in 1778. The answer was, "He is the savior of Calas." Now do you wonder that he was admired by some and, for the same things, hated by others? Another instance: Sirven, a citizen of Castres, near Toulouse, had been deprived of his daughter, a poor, simple creature, by the ecclesiastical authorities, who shut her up in a convent. With bleeding flesh, and mind still more enfeebled by the treatment she had received for her soul's good, she made her escape, and her body was soon after found at the bottom of a well. Accused of murdering her, Sirven made his escape and joined the family of Calas in Voltaire's sanctuary of the unfortunate, his poor wife perishing among the snows of the Cévennes upon the way. Nevertheless, both Sirven and his wife were condemned to be hung, with their two remaining daughters standing on the scaffold. For eight years Voltaire endeavored to reverse this sentence, and at last succeeded, but only after he had operated on a thousand lines of influence. He gave himself no rest, he spared himself no labor or expense, till he had compelled the courts to render tardy justice to his poor clients who could only pay him with their love. One instance more: At Abbeville, in the north of France, a crucifix was found to have been mutilated. Two lads, La Barre and D'Etallonde, only sixteen years old, were accused of having committed the offence. If they had done so, worse crimes could be imagined; but there was no evidence against them; still it was considered evidence that they had once been heard to speak disrespectfully of the Virgin Mary, and that they secretly admired the Philosophical Dictionary of Voltaire. D'Etallonde escaped; La Barre was sentenced to have his tongue torn out, his right hand cut off, and afterwards to be burned alive. The first and second things were done; the Parliament of Paris commuted the third to decapitation. Voltaire had only twelve years more to live, but his one great endeavor through these years was to have the sentence of La Barre reversed; but it was all in vain; he died without that satisfaction.

It was such things as these that made the Christian Church of France appear the Infamous in Voltaire's eyes. Do you wonder that they did? Was infamy too harsh a word for such intolerance and persecution? It was no prince of persiflage, as Carlyle calls Voltaire, it was the most earnest man in Europe and the most humane, who wrote to D'Alembert after the legal murder of La Barre: "This is no longer a time for jesting; witty things do not go well with massacres. . . . Here, Calas broken on the wheel; there, Sirven condemned to be hung; further off, a gag thrust into the mouth of a lieutenant-general; a fortnight after that, five youths condemned to the flames for extravagances that deserved nothing worse than St. Lazarre! Is this the country of philosophy and pleasure? It is the country rather of the St. Bartholomew massacre. The Inquisition would not have ventured to do what these Jansenist judges have done." Voltaire's humanity was not confined to the limits of his own country. He labored as assiduously to prevent the judicial murder of Admiral Byng in England as that of Lally in France; he left no stone unturned. Byng had been accused of not getting near enough to the French fleet; Voltaire procured from its commander a complete exoneration; but again his efforts were in vain. Aside from all ecclesiastical considerations, Voltaire was in his day the most distinguished advocate of civil justice, and raised up a host of writers, who, following up his attack, at length succeeded in imposing upon judicial procedures a few just restraints and regulations, so that caprice and passion might not determine everything, and the distinction between different kinds of evidence might not be wholly disregarded. "Voltaire," says Lecky, and his testimony is all the more valuable because Voltaire's ways are not his ways, "Voltaire was at all times the unflinching opponent of persecution. No matter how powerful was the persecutor or how insignificant the victim, the same scathing eloquence was launched against the crime, and the indignation of Europe was soon concentrated upon the oppressor. The fearful storm of sarcasm and invective that avenged the murder of Calas, the magnificent dream in the Philosophical Dictionary, reviewing the history of persecution from the slaughtered Canaanites to the latest victims who had perished at the stake, the indelible stigma branded upon the persecutors of every age and creed, all attested the intense and passionate earnestness with which Voltaire addressed himself to his task. On other subjects, a jest or a caprice would often turn him aside. When attacking intolerance, he employed, indeed, every weapon, but he employed them all with the concentrated energy of a profound conviction. His success was equal to his zeal; the spirit of intolerance sank blasted beneath his genius; wherever his influence passed, the arm of the Inquisition was palsied, the chain of the captive riven, the prison door flung open. Beneath his withering irony, persecution appeared not only criminal, but loathsome, and since his time it has ever shrunk from observation, and masked its features under other names. He died leaving a reputation that is indeed far from spotless, but having done more to destroy the greatest of human curses than any other of the sons of men." Now you can understand why he was so admired and loved in his last days, and why the ecclesiastical authorities would fain have robbed his lifeless body of a few feet of consecrated earth.

This is the one thing to remember in determining the merits and demerits of Voltaire's attack upon the organized Christianity of his time; it was the organized Christianity of ignorance and superstition, of cruel Jesuits and more cruel Jansenists, of the torture-wheel, the brand, the stake, the gallows, of trials without justice, and murder without pity. And hence it was to him the Infamous; hence he would "crush the Infamous." And all his writings on religious subjects took form and color from this dominating passion of his life. All the belongings of a church which was the apologist of war, the armory of persecution, the nurse of superstition, were hateful to him and abominable. It was as the Bible of this Church that the Bible invited on itself all the resources of his matchless rillery and scorn. Could he convict it of absurdity, of immorality, of inconsistency, he was doing something to help crush the Infamous. It was as the history of this Church that Christian history seemed to him only a mingled stream of blood and tears. The quarrels of councils, the forgeries of priests, the rapacity of bishops, the licentiousness of popes,—it was from no mere love of dirt, from no contempt of human nature, that he burrowed in this mass of sewage; no, but because he would crush the Infamous, the Church of his own time, the murderer of Calas and La Barre, by making it contemptible in every possible way. Hence, doubtless, much exaggeration; hence, constant failure to perceive that, in the march of history, it must needs be that offences come; that on its way to the perfect, humanity passes through many stages and generates its own oppressors. But hence, also, a great deal of simple truth, which we, on the one hundredth anniversary of his death, can utter without fear of wheel or stake, thanks in good part to his unwearying endeavors to break the iron-clad arm of persecution, and establish on the earth a toleration broad as the range of human difference of speech and thought.

The man of whom so much in simple justice must be said was strangely mixed of worse and better traits. He was not a complete man; he was not by any means a saint; we miss in him the note of holiness; there are stains upon his character which no apologist can quite obliterate. But even here we must not be too hard upon him. I do not like his hankering for royal recognition; I do not like his asking Louis XV., that Western Turk, "Is Trajan satisfied?" when he had heaped on him some fulsome flattery. But did not Sir Walter Scott beg of George IV., at Edinburgh, the glass in which he had drunk his royal toddy? Granted that Voltaire's brilliant pages are often disfigured with licentiousness, and that his life apparently was of a piece with them; but then remember that times change and the manners with them. He wrote nothing which fine ladies could not hear without a blush. Condemn his morals, but remember that they were the morals of the average ecclesiastics of the time; the morals, too, of our own Franklin, of our own Hamilton; there is good reason to believe of our own Washington: no better because theirs, but no worse in Voltaire than in the Abbé Chateaufort or Alexander Hamilton; nay, not so bad; for one of these was pledged to chastity, the other to fidelity. Voltaire was certainly no hypocrite. There was a certain lack of dignity about him always. He went off into fearful rages; fancy the author of the Henriade boxing a bookseller's ears, and his Italian secretary, anxious to mend matters, interposing, "Sir, sir, you have had your ears boxed by the greatest man in Europe." I must confess I hardly like him less for these explosions. He had a child's impulsiveness; his resentments soon burned themselves out. "We must forgive our enemies," said Heine, "but not till they are hung." Voltaire could seldom wait so long as that; if now and then he showed himself capable of deep resentment, at other times he showed himself capable of forgiving the most cruel and intolerable wrongs. It may have been because he felt so sure of his position, but envy, by which he was every day assailed, found scanty harbor in his breast. Young men fighting their first battles were always sure of his encouragement; criticism and money both, if both were needed. It speaks great things for him that those who knew him best were passionately fond of him. Because he was not a beggar like Rousseau, he has been called avaricious; he valued money because he valued independence; but Father Adam, his Jesuit almoner, and Sirven, and Calas, and the niece of Cornille never suspected him of being avaricious. Nevertheless, let every fault be noted down; granted that they were many. These petty quarrels with the publishers who pirated his books, often with his connivance! What say you? Shall we laugh or cry about them? I hardly know. But this I know: take him for all in all, Voltaire was undeniably the most inspired and most inspiring prophet of a new and better day for human kind that Europe furnished in the eighteenth century. France need not fear to match her greatest literary chief with England or with Germany. Though nothing in his purely literary work has the perennial freshness of Shakespeare's plays and Goethe's lyrics, there was a man behind the artist such as we seek in vain behind the mask of Shakespeare,—such as the magnificent Goethe had nowhere concealed about his person. It was a man who loved all knowledge, hated all superstition; who, rich and safe, did not forget the poor and miserable whose lives were in continual jeopardy; who, though a Frenchman of the Frenchmen, was indifferent to national glory purchased by poor men's lives; who felt in his own shrinking flesh the torture of the humblest victim of intolerance; who made his own the cause of every man unjustly punished; who, when he could not rescue from the infamous the victim around whom it had already coiled, still gave himself no rest till he had vindicated the poor victim's memory. Acknowledge every fault and every limitation, and still, because he honored human nature in its humblest incarnations, and did great battle against everything which kept men down in ignorance, and held them back from higher possibilities of truth and good, and robbed their lives of safety, peace, and joy, shall we not keep his memory green and honor him as one among the many saviors of the world?—Pamphlet Mission, June 15.

FREETHOUGHT IN SYMPATHY WITH NO KIND OF INDECENCY.

MR. EDITOR:—

During the past week I have seen, in two Christian papers, freethought and what is commonly called "free love" spoken of as though they were one and the same, one of the journals even representing that infidelity naturally defends obscenity because obscenity is its legitimate offspring. Such representations are an outrage on truth.

There is no connection, none whatever, between freethought and "free love." There is nothing in liberalism that gives the least encouragement to any kind of obscenity. If there are liberals who are at the same time believers in what is commonly called "free love," so there are Christians who entertain "free love" theories and are addicted to "free love" practices. There may be individuals engaged in the sale of obscene literature who profess liberal views, as there are such who believe in the Church and its dogmas. I know of no such freethinkers. Whether there be or not, let this be understood, that liberalism has no word of encouragement for, and no sympathy with, any literature that aims to inflame the mind and to debauch our youth.

There is a kind of literature concerning the character and the tendency of which all decent persons are agreed, whether they be Christian or infidel. The circulation of this vile trash is, as it should be, prohibited by law. But, unfortunately, under this law persons innocent of circulating or publishing obscene literature have been tried, convicted, and imprisoned. Very naturally, therefore, men imbued with a sense of justice, Christians as well as infidels, have protested in earnest language against these infringements on personal liberty, and have asked for such modification of this law as is necessary to prevent a repetition of these outrages in future. It is true some have petitioned, most unwisely, I believe, for the repeal of the law of Congress against obscene literature; not because they are in favor of obscenity, but because, indignant at the wrongs which have been inflicted on individuals by malicious prosecutions instigated by Comstock, they have inferred that any law under which such injustices can be perpetrated by the sanction of government must be inherently evil and should be abrogated, believing there is some other way by which to suppress obscenity, and at the same time avoid subjecting innocent persons to the suffering and disgrace of imprisonment; many believing that the present law should be repealed, and another, with all its objectionable features omitted, substituted in its place; and this is simply equivalent to asking for a modification of the existing law.

This hastily written statement is intended less for regular readers of the Investigator than for other persons who have written me on this subject, and whom I have not the time to address individually.

Respectfully, B. F. UNDERWOOD.
Boston, June 26, 1878.
—Boston Investigator.

VICTOR HUGO'S LAUDATION OF VOLTAIRE.

Following are a few extracts from the eloquent speech made by Victor Hugo at the Voltaire centenary celebration in Paris:—

"A hundred years ago a man died. He died immortal, and he departed loaded with years, loaded with works, loaded with the most illustrious and the most terrible of responsibilities,—the responsibility of the human conscience warned and put in the right track. He departed cursed and blessed,—cursed by the past, blessed by the future. Those, gentlemen, are the two superb forms of glory. He was more than a man,—he was an age. He had exercised a function and fulfilled a mission. The eighty years that he lived occupy the interval which separates the monarchy at its apogee from the Revolution at its dawn. His cradle might have seen the last days of the great throne, and his bier the first glimmerings of the great abyss." . . .

M. Victor Hugo then described, in a most dramatic and eloquent fashion, the double trial and torture of Calas and La Barre, and exclaimed: "O Voltaire, thou didst utter a cry of horror, and it will be thy eternal glory! Then didst thou begin the terrible trial of the past; thou didst plead against tyrants and monsters the cause of the human race, and thou didst gain it. Great man, be forever blest! Voltaire has conquered. Voltaire has waged the brilliant war,—the war of one against all, the war of thought against matter, of reason against prejudice, of the just against the unjust, the war for the oppressed against the oppressor, the war of goodness and of sweetness. He had the tenderness of a woman and the wrath of a hero. He was a mighty spirit and an immense heart. He vanquished the old codes and the old dogmas,—the feudal lord, the Gothic judge, and the Roman priest. He elevated the populace to the dignity of the people. He taught, pacified, and civilized. He was indefatigable and immovable.

"He conquered violence by a smile and despotism by sarcasm, infallibility by irony, obstinacy by perseverance, and ignorance by truth. I have pronounced the word 'smile.' I dwell upon it. The 'smile' is Voltaire. Whatever may be his just wrath, it passes; and Voltaire irritated is always succeeded by Voltaire calm. Then in that profound eye the smile appears. That smile is wisdom. The new society, the desire of equality and concession, and that beginning of fraternity which is called tolerance, reciprocal good-will, the recognition of reason as the supreme law, the wiping out of prejudices, the serenity of souls, the spirit of indulgence and of pardon, harmony and peace,—that is what has come from that grand smile. The day, doubtless, is near when there will be an identity of wisdom and of clemency. The day when the amnesty shall be proclaimed, I affirm it, above there in the stars Voltaire will smile." (Triple rounds of applause, and cries of "Vive l'Amnistie!")

The orator went on to describe his age, and, after an eloquent eulogy of Montesquieu, Buffon, Beaumarchais, Rousseau, and Diderot, he said:—

"These mighty writers have disappeared, but they have left us their soul,—the Revolution. It has only been given to three nations to resume epochs in the name of men,—to Greece, to Italy, and to France. We talk of the age of Pericles, of Augustus, of Leo X., of Louis Quatorze, and of Voltaire. This privilege is the highest mark of civilization. Except Voltaire, they are the names of chiefs of States. Voltaire is a chief of ideas. He begins a new cycle. One feels that henceforward the high governing power of the human race will be thought. Civilization was obeying force; she will now obey the ideal. The people will have no other sovereignty than the law, and the individual than conscience. For each of these in the two aspects of progress comes out clearly,—they are to exercise one's right, that it is to be a man, and to accomplish one's duty, that it is to be a citizen. Such is the signification of the words 'the age of Voltaire.' Such is the meaning of that supreme event, the French Revolution. The nineteenth century glorifies the eighteenth.

"The time is come; right has found its formula,—the human federation. To-day violence is called to account, and is beginning to be judged; war is put in accusation; civilization, on the complaint of the human race, is drawing up the mighty criminal dossier of conquerors and captains; people are beginning to understand that the aggravation of an offence cannot be a diminution of it, and that if to kill is a crime, to kill on a large scale cannot be an extenuating circumstance; that if to steal is a crime, invasion cannot be glorious, and that in the eyes of God Eternal the face of the murderer is not changed because he wears the crown of an emperor instead of the cap of a convict. Ah! let us proclaim absolute truths; let us dishonor war. No sanguinary glory exists no longer; it cannot be, O ye mothers who surround me, that war shall continue to rob you of your children! It cannot be that humanity works, that civilization progresses, that arts and industry are perfected, to end in that terrible international exhibition called a battle-field. The true battle-field is here. It is that rendezvous of the masterpieces of human toil which Paris now offers to the world. The true victory is the victory of Paris."

FREETHOUGHT AND SECULARISM.

It was about the year 1850 that efforts were commenced to turn freethinking attention to a new form of freethought, bearing the name of secularism. At this time, as before that time, freethinking was a bold but indeterminate thing. It claimed to think what it pleased upon what it chose, and to express its opinions. Practically, it spoke in all manners of ways upon all kinds of topics. It stood upon the right to differ in conduct and dissent in opinion. The government had ceased to inflict legal penalties upon the exercise of freethought. It seemed to me at that point that freethinkers ought to advance to the occupation of more positive ground. Having conquered the right to inquire, it was necessary to show what had been found. Having conquered the right to speak, it was necessary to make it clear what might and should be said.

Freethinkers had been badly used by the clergy, who generally held them up before their neighbors as so many reprobates, who dissented less or more from Christianity, out of mere wilfulness, obstinacy, and badness of heart. There were gentlemen among the clergy who recognized the reality of honest doubt; but, as a rule, the rejecter of Christianity was treated as one who ought to believe, who might believe, who could believe, if he would, but he would not.

The first thing to be done to give position and character to freethought was to enable it to become independent of Christianity, and to select those principles which should insure independence. To do this, it was the policy of secular freethinkers to keep clear of Christianity, to take nothing from it, to owe nothing to it, to ignore it. Asking nothing and receiving nothing from Christianity, its professors had no longer right to question us, or meddle with us, or defame us. Students of science, of politics, of socialism, holding no relations with Christianity, were no longer in danger of it, and could no longer be assailed by it. We, therefore, took the secular as our province, leaving the theological to the clergy.

Freethought, upholding individuality, had, and desired to have, amongst its adherents, diversity of views,—diversity being the sign of originality. Truth is one; the paths to it are many. It is because freethought allows each person to take his own way that more truth is reached by its means than by any other.

The term secularism is the name of a New Form of Freethought; not a new name for old, desultory freethinking, but the name of a new organization of self-helping ideas,—religious in the sense of binding men to duty by the new bond of secular principles.

Any one mingling among the working class soon finds many without definite opinions. Some have been wrecked among creeds, and are destitute of convictions. Some are even worse off, and never had any. Some are worse off still,—they have no minds at all, and don't want any convictions. Among them, however, are many thoughtful persons, who are in search of a creed of conduct. There are people lying in wait for such inquirers, and it is well that there are. It is a good sign, when any one who has found out a road of life for himself is possessed of a generous solicitude to call the attention of other persons to it.

The Christian, to his credit, is sure to come up. He is a troublesome person to know; hard to shake off, if you admit him too close; apt to be resentful,—to dislike you and damage you, if you do not coincide with him. Still, his motives are good. He is a good deal concealed, fancies that God has employed him to assail you, and generally so acts as to make God's message, which he has to deliver, a very disagreeable thing. He finds the workmen without art or force; but he offers him neither Greek grace nor Pagan energy, but a big old book, containing the lives and opinions of a race which he believes to be accursed, and he himself despises. His book of guidance is full of contradictions which nobody can reconcile, and has never been translated to anybody's satisfaction. Unless you are a master in obsolete languages, you must take its contents upon the word of others, and risk going to heaven second-hand. You are called upon to believe what you cannot understand; to impute to God what you cannot explain; and hold opinions of his judgments for which you would deserve perdition, if you die in them. You are not allowed to choose what is noble and true in that book; you must take it all, or be denounced by the hateful name of "Infidel," until the poor, thinking workman says: "Gentlemen, you are too much for me. I am much obliged to you. I respect your motives, I esteem your solicitude; but your road would distract me. There are Jews at the head of it; the devil at the bottom of it. Warring translators occupy one side of the road, and angry, belligerent, defamatory priests the other; and I had better choose my own bedlam at once than go down there, and be carried at last to one I know not of." A workman could not get the needed cultivation from ignorant apostles, given to strong prejudice and great license of speech, who knew nothing of human reason, nor wanted to know anything, and who hated the world and the things of this world, who had no self-help in them, and depended on miracles to live. It is of no use considering the case of other sects, who make up the dangerous varieties of believers, who modify Christianity by Rationalism. The Orthodox paint them all with the infidel brush, laying the thickest and most opprobrious paint on the most sensible. The workman, who is already the scape-goat of society, does well not to take upon himself the uncomfortable functions of the scape-goat of Christianity. He, therefore, keeps clear of it in self-respect and in self-protection, because his need and object are self-help.—G. J. Holyoake, in London Secular Review, July 6.

WHAT THE CHURCH CAN DO.

Zion's Herald—a Methodist paper published in Boston—assails the Republican's recently expressed views on "The Possible Church," in an article which is not only extremely bad-tempered, but untruthful. It says:—

"The great vice of this whole evangelical system, in the estimation of our very broad and philosophical religious teacher, is, that the Church of to-day fatally falls of meeting 'the definite, noble, and imperative opportunity' which lies before it. It fails to teach men the highest truths,—those relating to character and conduct." Think of that! Meditate upon the cool and calm presumption," etc.

The Republican did not say and did not imply what is here imputed to it. It said in substance that the Church as a whole concerns itself too much with the prospect of heaven and too little with the duties of earth, and that it does not sufficiently emphasize the truths of character and conduct. So far from imputing any "total failure" to the Church, we said, "This is a high ideal, but not an impossible one. We could name churches, not only in Boston and New York and London, but here in Springfield, that are working toward it." The entire article, so far from being an assault upon the Church, was in effect an appeal to the Church to rise to the height of its possibilities. We suggest to Zion's Herald that it correct its misstatements quoted above, and also take note that until it can practise the plain duty of truth-speaking, it is not entitled to any hearing upon questions of religion.

We address ourselves to a different class of readers when we repeat what we said before, that the churches now organized and existing have in themselves great possibilities for the highest service to the community. That they are already upon the whole, doing a large and substantial service is the very reason why they should press on to higher things. The great requisite is that they should more clearly recognize their true function, which is to educate and exercise men in the practice of truth, honesty, benevolence, trust in God, and love to man. It is commonly assumed that there exists a great controversy between the Church and a large section of intelligent society. But so far as we know, there is no controversy among decent people as to the immeasurable value and desirableness of self-control and justice and personal purity and sweet temper and devotion to all moral excellence. Any man, or institution, that makes a supreme business of cultivating these has the approval and sympathy of all honest men, even of such as lack the resolution to tread so high a path themselves. Why, then, is the Church, as a body, on terms of mutual hostility or indifference with so large a part of the thoughtful and influential class throughout Christendom? It is because the Church so largely avows itself as standing, not for simple rightness of life, for the highest moral excellence, but for a system of ideas, a theory of the universe. The Church (the liberal hardly less than the conservative section) has made an idol of theology. It is battling now for and against a hundred issues,—Bushnellism, Restorationism, Darwinism, and what not. Its true battle is against the wrong in men's lives,—their meanness, their absorption in material good, their neglect of the duties of citizenship, the selfishness of the rich, and the envy of the poor.

It will be said, and truly, that the Church ought to set man in his true relations to the universe, and that this requires a right conception of the nature of the universe and the relations of God and man. But the mistake lies in the assumption that the mass of men—or in truth any man, learned or unlearned—reaches moral truth mainly through an intellectual process. It is by fidelity to the duties that lie right before them that men come into fuller knowledge of their own souls and of God. "The life was the light of men." Jesus won men by what he was. It was his love that set fire to their love. It was the sense of his moral purity—not his philosophy, for he set forth no philosophy—that stirred in them a divine hunger and thirst for a like purity. It is by living, and not by talking or theorizing—except as talk and theory have the inspiration of life behind them,—that men are to be drawn into higher manhood.

If any preacher wants to combat practical atheism, his most promising way is not to demonstrate, in Paley fashion, the existence and nature of God. It is to teach and train men in those qualities which stand to us for the will of God, and also as the revelation of God,—in integrity and benevolence and all forms of noble living. Men need to be taught these things in a practical way. How shall a passionate man bridle his temper? How shall a man immersed in business keep himself scrupulously honorable, and sensitive to the noble and ideal relations of life? How shall a woman keep herself from being enslaved by household drudgery? What are the real duties that such ideas as "patriotism" and "benevolence" require of a merchant, a carpenter, or a seamstress in Springfield? This is the kind of questions on which people immensely need answers,—not vague exhortations, but practical, discriminating guidance. The preacher's main business should be to give such guidance. We repeat, there are churches in Springfield and its vicinity whose pastors and people are working into this sound and fruitful kind of Christianity. Just so far as the Christian Church accepts as its work the education and discipline of men toward the highest moral ideals it will vindicate its claim to respect and confidence.—Springfield Republican.

VIRTUE is not to be pursued as one of the means to fame, but fame to be accepted as the only recompense which mortals can bestow on virtue.—Johnson.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

Books.

- A HISTORY OF ENGLAND IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By William Edward Hartpole Lecky. 2 vols. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1878. (From W. E. Clarke, Boston.)
THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. By Dr. H. Oort, Dr. I. Hooykaas, and Dr. A. Kneen. Vols. 1 and 2. Authorized Translation. Boston: Roberts Bros.
THE BIBLE FOR LEARNERS. A MANUAL. Translated from the Dutch of J. Kneen. By Richard A. Armstrong. Boston: Roberts Bros. 1878.
A MODERN SYMPOSIUM. Subjects: The Soul and Future Life, and The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief. Detroit: Rose-Belford Publishing Co. 1878.
ASPIRATIONS OF THE WORLD. A Chain of Opals. By L. Maria Child. Boston: Roberts Bros. 1878.
OBSERVATIONS AND DEEDS. A Series of Discourses. By Felix Adler, Ph.D. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.
HISTORY OF OPINIONS ON THE SCRIPTURAL DOCTRINE OF RETRIBUTION. By Edward Beecher, D.D. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1878.
STUDIES OF THE CREATIVE WORK. By George D. Boardman. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1878.
THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE for their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. Kottlinger. Milwaukee: Taylor Bros. 1878.
STATE REGULATION OF VICES. Regulation Efforts in America. The Geneva Congress. New York: Wood & Holbrook. 1878.
WHY A CATHOLIC IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By William Giles Dix. New York: Catholic Publication Society. 1878.
VOLTAIRE. By Colonel Hamley. Edinburgh and London: William Blackwood & Sons. 1877.
GATHERED LEAVES. By Alfred Huidekoper. Cambridge: 1878.
THE PARADOX, and Other Poems. By J. Albert Wilson. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.
THE LIFE OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE OF CONSORT. By Theodore Martin. Vol. 2. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1878.
THE AMERICAN ALMANAC FOR 1878. Edited by A. H. Spofford, Librarian of Congress. New York and Washington: American News Co. 1878.
VIEWS OF OUR HEAVENLY HOME. By Andrew Jackson Davis. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1878.
THE LAWS OF BEING. By Almira Kild. Boston: Colby & Rich. 1878.
MEMORY GEMS. By Charles Northland. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
PRIMER OF PIANO-FORTE PLAYING. By F. Taylor. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1878.
SINGER'S PRIMER: POLITICAL ECONOMY. By W. Stanley Jevons. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1878.
LITERATURE PRIMERS:—GREEK LITERATURE, by E. C. Jobb, and ENGLISH GRAMMAR EXERCISES, by Morris & Bowen. New York: D. Appleton. 1878.

Novels—Paper (Appletons').

- BONNY KATE. By Christian Reid.
ROMANCES OF THE EAST. By the Comte de Gobineau.
RENNES AND FRAZE. By Gustave Haller.
THE GODSON OF A MARQUIS. By André Theuriet.
ARADON. By Henry Arville.
THE FIGHTERS OF ABER. By Katharine S. Macquoid.
A STRUGGLE. By Henry Phillips.
MISERICORDIA. By Ethel Lynn Linton.
JET. By Mrs. Annie Edwards.
GORDON BALDWIN. By Rudolph Lindau.

Periodicals.

- LA RELIGION LAIQUE. Paris.
SUNDAY REVIEW. London.
FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW. Toronto.
POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. New York.
JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. St. Louis.
WESTERN. St. Louis.
CANADIAN MONTHLY AND NATIONAL REVIEW. Toronto.
UNITARIAN REVIEW. Boston.
CATHOLIC WORLD. New York.
SANITARIAN. New York.
COMPLETE PRIMER. New York.

Miscellaneous Pamphlets.

- ANNUAL REPORTS of the President and Treasurer of Harvard College. 1878-7. Cambridge: Press of John Wilson & Son. 1878.
ANNUAL REPORT of the St. Louis Public Schools, 1878-9.
TWENTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Trustees of the Astor Library, for the year ending Dec. 31, 1877.
TENTH ANNUAL REPORT of the Freedmen's Aid Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.
TRANSACTIONS of the Massachusetts Press Association. 1878.
FIFTY-THIRD Anniversary of the American Unitarian Association.
AMERICAN COMMUNITARIAN. By W. A. Rands. 1878.
A TOMBSTONE as a Monument of Religious Liberty. W. Rothwell vs. R. Manak et al. Argument of Stille & Kittredge in Supreme Court of Ohio.
EQUITABLE TAXATION; or, The Debtor's Lien. By Manley Howe, of Boston.
CHURCH OF THE HOLY COMMISSIONS. By Edgar Wright.
THE TRACINGS OF FREE RELIGION. By L. E. Washburn.
SERMONS by Rev. John W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn, N.Y.—The Angel Song—Future Punishment—The Sacred Scriptures—The Morals of Belief.
SERMONS by the Rev. Charles Voysey and others, at Langham Hall, London, Eng.—The Healing Power of Joy.—The Gospel of Hope.—The Lord's Controversy with His People.—Some Scientific Aids to Faith in God.—The Last Link of the Fetter.—Atheism—Consequences of True Religion.—Rome or Reason.—The Rulers and the Pharisees.—The Doctrine of the Atonement Immortal.—The Omnipotence of God.—Is the Historical Christ a True Revelation of God?—Rise and Spread of Christianity.—Judaism and Theism.—Jewish Obligations and Prospects.—Why Attend Public Worship?—Willing and Unwilling Unbelief.—Ascension of Jesus.
CHARACTERS—Edward Hammond Clarke. By Rev. C. A. Bartol, D.D.
REVIEW of Bishop Ryan's Lecture on "What Catholics Do Not Believe." By E. H. Sonnenchein.
LEADERSHIP AND ORGANIZATION. By S. B. Brittan, M.D.
OUTLINE of Christian Belief as generally held by Unitarians.
THE GREAT TRIUMPH. By E. H. Heywood.
BUDDHISM AND CHRISTIANITY FACE TO FACE. By J. M. Peebles.
A TALK ABOUT SWEDENBORG. By Rev. Frank Sewall.
CORRESPONDENCE of Herdell and Cooper.
CONVERSATIONS on the Ceremony by E. D. Linton and G. V. Druy.
REVOLUTION. By W. N. Rogers.
CHRIST THE COMMERCE OF SPIRITUALISM. By J. M. Peebles.
"CHRISTIAN UNION" EXTRA.—The Army of the Republic—How to Spend the Summer.—The Future State.
THE DEVIL'S PEDIGREE. By J. H. Crocker.
IS THE UNIVERSE GOVERNED BY A DEVIL? By J. F. Smith.
TRANSMIGRATION. By Georgiana E. Kirby.
HANDBOOK OF BY CULTURE. By R. Wilkin.
VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE for 1878.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

Count it not rudeness, lady, I beseech,
That one a stranger to the world and thee
Should speak to you across the moaning sea;
Great wrongs give license to a stranger's speech.
Such wrongs are thine, and thy maternal plaint—
Has hither come and crept into our hearts;
Our indignation with the hot tear starts;
Our hope for sovereign freedom falters faint.
Robbed of thy child! the desolate, swooning cry
That smote high heaven in the stolid face,
When tyranny compelled that last embrace,
Will haunt the world till pity's self shall die.
O England! I had steadfastly believed
That Justice held for thee an even scale;
How little did I think a mother's wail
Would come to teach me I was so deceived.
Here in our land that holds but feeble claim
To aught pertaining to the realm of thought,
Some few the meaning of the times have caught,
And honor ANNIE BESANT'S injured name.
The soul that strives with tenderest endeavor
To push dead weights from off the human heart
Hath chosen for herself the better part,
And will not be forgotten, never, never!
May thy poor Mabel live, and learn to think;
The day may dawn when she will comprehend
The infamy that forced her truest friend
This cup of utter bitterness to drink.
Quail not, brave woman! Still to conscience true,
Speak out thy honest message to the world;
'Tis thus the flag of Progress is unfurled
And old beliefs precedence yield to new.

GEORGE MARTIN.

MONTREAL, Canada.

[For THE INDEX.]

SIR GEORGE JESSEL.

False and perdidious knight! To you,
Betrayed of a woman's cause,
No meek apology is due
From one who holds that dubious laws,
Subservient to a righteous end,
To mercy's side should kindly bend.
Had you, sir, sat in Fortia's place—
Silked in your robe of Hebrew pride,—
Old Shylock would have gained his case,
And poor Antonio must have died.
Or, had you filled the wise man's seat
When the two mothers claimed the child,
The false and true, you would have smiled
Your favor on the brazen cheat;
Or, pausing not a part to fawn,
Had cut the living child in twain.
Glance backward, callous judge, and trace
The ancient samplers of your race;
What pleasure you must feel to find
So many of a kindred mind!—
Elisha, who with holy zeal
Called the she-bears from out the wood
To breakfast on such dainty food,—
Forty-two children,—what a meal!
Sweet Jaël, hospitable dame,
Who Sisera bade to her tent
When weary from the war he came;
And whilst he slept, so gently bent
Above the soldier's peaceful couch;
And that she might forever vouch
How true his rest, she did not fall
In driving home a rusty nail;
Straight through his temple sped the brand,
Obedient to the hostess' hand!
Ahab and Jezebel,—their deeds
Must yield a special charm to one
Who, when an anguished mother pleads
To keep her child, whose bosom bleeds,
Discovers Nature's holiest tie,
Thinking the will of heaven is done,
And heeds not tears nor wounded cry.
Enough! the list were long to name.
Enough that time's avenging brand
Has smitten many a hoary shame
Once credited to God's right hand;
Enough for me to know and feel
That Superstition's iron heel
Is doomed; no sacred font nor river
Can save it from the fatal dart
That Science from her ample quiver
Draws in defence of human hearts.

MONTREAL, Canada.

GEORGE MARTIN.

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JULY 27.

J. O. Kearns, $1.60; A. A. Knight, $3.40; R. P. Johnson, $2; Mrs. Edw. Austin, $3.20; Carl Post, $3.30; Wm. Corning, $3.20; Mrs. Jacobs, $3.20; Joseph Hoskin, $3.20; Cash, $1; C. A. Greenleaf, $1; Dr. Rachael Speakman, $1; H. Quimby, $1.60; T. Dugan, 70 cents; Dr. G. E. Frothingham, $6.40; Dr. Wm. Mc Laury, $1; C. Butcher, $3.20; Jacob G. Deshler, 50 cents; James Langlands, $5; Seth N. Allen, $5.20; J. D. Zimmerman, $3.20; James Westwater, $3.20; R. S. Barker, $3.20; George Allen, $3.20; G. A. Lane, $3.20; Louis Liebman, $3.20; L. F. Robinson, $1.20; N. Paine, $4.45; J. A. J. Wilcox, $3.20; A. Williams, $6.86; H. T. Appleby, $4.68; Peter Newcomer, $1.55; J. R. Hawley, $1.70; Courtland Palmer, $3; Mrs. C. A. Tucker, $3; Mrs. Anna E. Wood, $3.20; J. H. Chase, 10 cents; Col. R. B. Stone, $5; D. A. Robertson, $3.20; Mrs. E. C. Stanton, $5; C. Lauer, $2

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 1, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1878: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIEUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURVEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Until September 1, the editorial charge of THE INDEX will be wholly in the hands of Mr. A. W. Stevens, who has kindly consented to relieve me of all literary responsibility for it during the present month. F. E. ABBOT.

BOSTON, Aug. 1.

THE CONVENTION of free-thinkers at Watkins, N.Y., will commence at 10 A.M., August 22, and continue four days. Mr. Green informs us that Hon. E. P. Hurlbut of Albany, who for fifty years has been an outspoken, able, and distinguished liberal, is expected to be present; and that Hon. Ellsbur Wright, whose trenchant and vigorous articles have given such lustre to these pages, is to read a paper on "Creed and Religion as a Cultivator of Political Hypocrisy."

THE FINE "Centennial Address of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists," published in the report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals, commanded admiration at the time by its forcible exposition of the ideas of the Liberal League movement. Those who read it will be interested to know that Mr. S. B. McCracken, the Secretary, announces the semi-annual meeting of this association at Grand Rapids, beginning August 29 and closing September 1. Excellent speakers are expected, and it is hoped to make this the largest liberal gathering ever held in Michigan.

DURING THE MONTH of August Mr. A. W. Stevens will be sole editor of THE INDEX, in order to enable us to get a little needed rest. Mr. Stevens made so many warm friends, while associated with us editorially from 1872 to 1875, that this announcement will give as much pleasure to them as it does to us. He will, of course, follow only his own conscience and judgment in his conduct of the paper for these four weeks, without being hampered by any embarrassing traditions or directions; freedom is the indispensable condition of good editorship, and it is his right to enjoy it to the full. With kindest wishes for him and our readers, we say goodbye for a brief respite.

IT IS BECOMING a matter of course, after hearing of a defalcation case, to inquire whether the defaulter was not a church-member. Says the Boston Advertiser of July 16: "Five years in the State Prison is much too short a sentence, South Hadley people are beginning to think, for their convicted town treasurer, Ira B. Wright. His property, which he has turned over to the selectmen as trustees for his creditors, will amount to about $7000. His obligations are: $29,000 to the town; other debts for which claims have been presented, $18,000; and still other known obligations of $1000. Wright puts his losses in business at $5100, and his style of living was not sufficient to account for the nearly $40,000 which is missing. A curious reminiscence of the man is that he has been scrupulous in his attendance at prayer-meetings, and has for years been one of the constant patrons of the Springfield Public Library. None of his habits can account for the consumption of so much money, and people in South Hadley still believe that he has it safely laid away somewhere."

F. R. A. REPORT.

The Eleventh Annual Report of the Free Religious Association, printed in pamphlet form, is now ready for distribution. It contains the reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer; essay by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of New York, on "The Religion of Humanity, and How it may be Organized"; essay by Rev. W. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism, and How it is being Disorganized"; and addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George W. Curtis, Anna C. Garlin, Maurice Ellinger, and Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith (the latter including a poem).

Members of the Association who have paid the annual fee of $1.00 within the last twelve months will receive the report free, in all cases where their post-office addresses are known. To others the price is forty cents single copy; four or more in one package, twenty-five cents each.

Address "Free Religious Association," 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

A SPLENDID ACHIEVEMENT FOR THE CAUSE OF WOMAN.

The letters of Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith, in this issue of THE INDEX, must delight every one who takes an intelligent interest in the emancipation and elevation of woman. The Thirtieth Anniversary of the movement in behalf of the equal rights of women, held at Rochester, New York, on the eighteenth and nineteenth of July, marks an era in this movement to which it would be impossible to attach too great importance. Woman has taken a new and splendid position.

In the minds of unnumbered liberals on both sides of the Atlantic, of whom Rear-Admiral Maxse, one of the most high-minded, acute, and independent thinkers of England, may be taken as a fitting representative (see his pamphlet entitled Woman Suffrage—the Counterfeit and the True: Reasons for Opposing Both), the belief that "women are likely to vote under the influence of the clergy" has operated more powerfully than any other to produce indifference, if not active opposition, to woman's enfranchisement. That the average woman is far more easily influenced by the clergy than the average man (and it is the average human being upon whom universal suffrage confers the balance of political power) can not be seriously and candidly controverted; and every free and philosophic mind has learned that the influence of the clergy is invariably cast, in all great contests involving liberty and human rights, on the side of despotism.

There is a melancholy monotony in the teachings of history on this point. The Church, judged by its record no less than by the obvious tendency of its ideas, is the great foe of secular and scientific progress; the logic of Christianity is at swordpoints with the logic of freedom, and as is its logic, so also has been and will be its history. Hence every thoroughgoing and consistent democrat, in the true sense of that word, is compelled to take anti-Christian ground. Europe is rapidly learning this lesson; America must learn it too. The clerical spirit and influence, the clerical policy and party, the clerical ambition, legislation, and institutions—these are the most stubborn opponents with which free institutions have to contend. "Scratch a Russian, and you find a Tartar"—scratch a priest, and you find a king. Civilization is simply a slow triumph over the Church.

Especially is this true of the woman movement, which in its essence is an assertion of woman's individuality and individual rights. The Church decrees for woman nothing but obedience, self-suppression, extinction of that individual self-possession and self-development at which the woman movement aims. If women are so blinded by their sentiments, emotions, affections, aspirations, religious sensibilities, as not to comprehend all this,—if they cannot understand that, so long as they submit their own souls to the Church and its religion, they can neither win the freedom of recognized individuality for themselves nor preserve it for others,—they should not wonder if free-thinking men hesitate to entrust the keeping of the world's dearly-bought liberties to those who are all ready, with the best of motives, to betray them again to the oppressor. Such men know that woman must free her own soul from superstition, or she cannot maintain her political freedom, even after she has achieved it; they know that she stands a better chance for becoming and remaining free, if she is compelled to encounter such obstacles in winning political freedom as shall perforce open her eyes to the real nature of the power that has so long enslaved her; they know that the deep, underlying ideas of the woman movement are only a part of those which underlie the movement for strictly secular government; they know that, if success for the former movement shall "come to stay," it must come by the same means which shall bring success to the latter movement—namely, by the destruction of the ecclesiastical spirit and power. All this is simply knowledge of facts that cannot be changed. Every genuine free-thinker must sympathize profoundly with the woman movement; but he is not to be blamed for perceiving clearly that the woman movement can achieve only a superficial and precarious success until woman herself has outgrown Christianity, and that it may prove a success ending in failure, if it succeeds too easily or too soon.

For these reasons, we hail with the greatest satisfaction every indication that the women of America are indeed outgrowing Christianity, and proving that they fully comprehend the politico-religious philosophy which alone can defend and perpetuate the freedom they seek. In this respect the late Rochester convention marks an enormous progress in the right direction. Never before, so far as we are aware, did a Woman Suffrage Convention take such advanced ground on the religious question, or plant themselves upon truths so profound, comprehensive, and impregnable. We speak with reference to the last three resolutions adopted, which were as follows:

9. Resolved, That as the duty of every individual is self-development, the lessons of self-sacrifice and obedience taught woman by the Christian Church have been fatal not only to her own highest interests, but through her have also dwarfed and degraded the race.

10. Resolved, That the fundamental principle of the Protestant Reformation, the right of individual conscience and judgment in the interpretation of Scripture, heretofore conceded to and exercised by men alone, should now be claimed by woman, and that in her most vital interests she should no longer trust authority, but be guided by her own reason.

11. Resolved, That it is through the perversion of the religious element in woman, cultivating the emotions at the expense of her reason, playing upon her hopes and fears of the future, holding this life with all its high duties forever in abeyance to that which is to come, that she, and the children she has trained, have been so completely subjugated by priestcraft and superstition.

These resolutions we have read with astonishment, admiration, and delight. We should not have believed it possible that the convention could be induced to adopt them. They will make forever memorable, in the history of the organized woman movement, this Thirtieth Anniversary of its birth. They put the National Woman Suffrage Association in an inconceivably higher and nobler position than that occupied by any similar society. They go to the very root of the matter. They are a bold, dignified, and magnificent utterance. We congratulate the Convention on a record so splendid in the eyes of all true liberals. We congratulate Mrs. Stanton, President of the Convention, and Mrs. Gage, Chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, on this great and victorious blow struck in the cause they have so much at heart and have served so faithfully and so long. From this day forth the whole woman movement must obey the inspiration of a higher courage and a grander spirit than have been known to its past. Opposition must be encountered, tenfold more bitter than was ever yet experienced. But truth is on the side of these brave women; the ringing words they have spoken at Rochester will thrill many a doubting heart and be echoed far down the long avenue of the years.

A NEW EPOCH FOR WOMAN.

TENAFLY, N.J., July 22, 1878.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Allow me to call the attention of your readers to the resolutions passed at the Third Decade Meeting of the National Woman Suffrage Association held at Rochester, July 19, which have been already sent to your journal.

I think our liberal friends will find those touching the religious element of woman's nature sufficiently broad to assure them that these women, armed with ballots, will not prove the dangerous element so many fear on the side of priestcraft and superstition. The contemptuous treatment of woman by the popular churches, the resolutions of synods and general assemblies as to the Divine Will in favor of woman's complete subjugation, the trials and tribulations of eminent clergymen who have recognized her equality, have at last emancipated a rapidly increasing class of women from all fear and respect for such authorities.

We have really been persecuted into the higher position to which reason failed to lift us. Once more has bigotry done the world good service, by launching another class on the sea of reason.

We had a large and enthusiastic convention, the last session in Corinthian Hall continuing until eleven o'clock at night, although the heat was almost unendurable.

One of the marked features of this convention was the very respectful and complimentary tone of the entire press of the city of Rochester.

Enclosed find five dollars for THE INDEX, which I find full of valuable instruction every week, and, with its reports from the various Liberal Leagues forming all over the country, full of hope for the preservation of the secular character of our government.

Yours with great respect,

ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.

LIBERAL SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

A committee of the Free Religious Association of Providence have printed the appended statement of the objects for which they intend to establish a Liberal Sunday School in connection with the Association; and it is so excellent that, by permission, we submit it to our readers. We are pleased to see every sign of a growing appreciation of the necessity of attending faithfully to the education of children in the direction aimed at; and we hope that other liberal societies may be encouraged to undertake the same work so well laid out in this plan.

Believing that the fundamental duties of a religious organization are development of a pure and noble character in all its members, and the youth connected with it, and their culture in earnest thinking upon the problems of human conduct and condition, the Free Religious Association of Providence, proposes to establish a Sunday School for the objects, and on the basis, hereinafter named:—

1. Ethical education, or training in knowledge of, and obedience to, that inviolable moral law which man has discovered rules his life, and makes itself known through the unvarying effects of good and evil, which follow right and wrong actions and motives; this ethical education to be based on the principles of constant subordination of the lower to the higher nature in the individual, of equality of rights for all human kind, of the obligation of the stronger to protect and help the weaker in all relations of life.

2. Study of the elements of religion, based on the principle of scientific investigation of the facts of human consciousness and experience in their relation to man's spiritual nature.

3. Study of religious history, based on the principles of a common source for all religions, of a subjection of all sacred writings to equally critical and discriminating examination, of a reverent acceptance of such of the teachings of all religious masters and systems as an enlightened reason and conscience find to be universal in quality and application, and a free rejection of such statements and dogmas as are proved merely local in character.

4. Study of the elements of natural sciences, of physical and mental hygiene, and of any other department of knowledge which shall lead to a true conception of the laws which surround man and determine the conditions of his progress.

OUR GERMAN friends will be interested in this story, quoted from a letter of the late Francis Lieber by a Cleveland correspondent of the Chicago Tribune:—

A New Anecdote of Washington.

An incident of more than usual interest occurred to-day, just after the class in constitutional law was dismissed, at the university. I had been lecturing upon the advantages of the bi-cameral system, had dismissed the class, and was about to leave the room when a young man, who I knew had taken instructions under Laboulaye, in Paris, approached me, and said that what I had urged in regard to the bi-cameral system reminded him of a story which he had heard Laboulaye relate. I was interested, of course, and, as the class gathered around, he proceeded with the following:—

Laboulaye said, in one of his lectures, that Jefferson, who had become so completely imbued with French ideas as even to admire the uni-cameral system of legislation, one day visited Washington at Mt. Vernon; and, in the course of the conversation that ensued, the comparative excellence of the two systems came up for consideration. After considerable had been said on both sides, finally, at the tea-table, Washington, turning sharply to Jefferson, said:—

"You, sir, have just demonstrated the superior excellence of the bi-cameral system by your own hand."

"I! How is that?" said Jefferson, not a little surprised.

"You have poured your tea from your cup out into the saucer to cool. We want the bi-cameral system to cool things. A measure originates in one house, and in heat is passed. The other house will serve as a wonderful cooler; and, by the time it is debated and modified by various amendments there, it is much more likely to become an equitable law. No, we can't get along without the saucer in our system."

Jefferson, of course, saw that a point had been made against his argument; but whether he was frank enough to say so, the story-teller did not relate.

Communications.

OBSCENE LITERATURE.

MR. EDITOR:—

Let me second the sense of THE INDEX on this painful theme, and back J. Villa Blake, but that there needs no endorsement of his note of hand. The sentence on E. H. Heywood, an honest if mistaken man, is severe to excess. But nothing he has said is more wrong than the method of his conviction by a lie, as one link without which there had been perhaps no proof. What a melancholy and amazing spectacle, that of Christian men and ministers, with a swallow so large for Mr. Comstock's deceitful ways as to greet with loud derision a liberal clergyman's objections to his decoy-duck style! Nor does the court or prosecuting attorney seem to have entertained, of such a witness's honor or credibility, the slightest doubt. We bait the trap to catch a criminal with a crime! When religion and law come to such a pass in a civilized land, let us thank God for all heathen examples of magnanimity and truth!

But the circulation of indecent books and pamphlets, though by a man insane on their subject, is a capital sin and justly made indictable by law. All freedom must have legal restraint. In vain we try to distinguish between action and speech. A word may be more than any deed for evil or good.

C. A. BARTOL.

THE WOMAN'S CONVENTION.

GENEVA, N. Y., July 21, 1878.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

On the thirtieth anniversary of the Women's Rights Association of the United States, the leading women of the movement met in convention at Rochester, N. Y., on the 18th and 19th of July, 1878. It is not my intention to report the proceedings of this distinguished body of intelligent and cultured women, who have done more than any other class of workers in the country in effecting a change in public opinion, not only on the great question of the right of women to suffrage in a republic, but also in many collateral branches of reform which naturally spring out of this movement, and cannot be separated from the interests of the sex.

That the suffragist women have effected a great and permanent advance in the right direction, no enlightened observer will attempt to deny. That they themselves are fully aware of this was apparent in the assured gravity marking the aspect of this most interesting meeting. There were but few appeals, little or no declamation, no mawkish sentimentalism, no inflation, no talking for effect. These women were fully conscious that they were the vanguard of a solemn movement, and, though not inclined to exultation, all they said, all they resolved, and all they suggested had the undertone reverberation of the prelude notes of a grand uprising anthem.

Some reminiscence was natural and effective; but the brevity of these reminiscences indicated the stress and earnestness of onward endeavor. For dignity, parliamentary propriety, force of statement, and clearness of logic, this convention may challenge the admiration of any class of persons accustomed to the action of any body of men anywhere or on any occasion. Differences of opinion existed which gave rise to fervid discussion, but a marked tolerance and courtesy pervaded even these.

Courage was not wanting, as you will see by the list of enclosed resolutions. Some on the committee for forming resolutions demurred at the wisdom of the bolt aimed at Church and priest, but gave in to the will of the majority. Free discussion, full and honest examination of every aspect of our civilization bearing upon the interests of women, being the law of this convulse of earnest, patriotic, cultured women, it is just and right that they should challenge a thorough investigation into whatever impedes the progress of woman, and through her the progress of the race. If it be the Church, if it be any aspect of religious thought, these women do well to thrust it into the foreground, and compel the thinkers of the age to controvert their position,—if they can, wisely and logically eject them therefrom. The day for contempt and abuse has gone by.

You will find among the women prominent on this occasion names familiar in THE INDEX. I will single but one name from the list of those present, leaving to others to forward you a catalogue of officials and speakers. Lucretia Mott, gracing with an angelic face her eighty-five years, gave her parting words of encouragement, advice, and admonition, amid the profound silence of the Convention, and left, all reverently rising in silent farewell.

ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH.

MALLOCK'S "NEW REPUBLIC."

This series of conversations on social progress, by fictitious characters representing Carlyle, Ruskin, Matthew Arnold, Huxley, Tyndall, Professor Clifford, and other advanced thinkers, is full of bright passages like the following:—

"A frog with half a brain having destroyed more theology than all the doctors of the Church with their whole brains can ever build up again," etc.

"Do you think it a good thing that our very religion should be nothing but a dilettante memory?"

"The whole teachings of that school have always seemed to me nothing more than a few fragments of science imperfectly understood, obscured by a few fragments of Christianity imperfectly remembered."

What is more to our purpose, however, is that this book makes two charges against the champions of freethought which those who read THE INDEX cannot afford to overlook. One is that the freethinkers are laboring to destroy the authority of morality and make pleasure the only guide. See pages 217, 218, 227, 636, etc. This charge every reader of THE INDEX and Investigator knows to be simply a falsehood.

And knowing this, we might presume the same of the second charge; namely, that to freethinkers life is commonly a mockery, and that there is no real happiness for those who have given up the old faith. See pages 211, 349-359, 147, etc.

This charge is pressed upon us from so many quarters, however, that it must be noticed at some length. And first of all I must admit that it has a grain of truth. All changes in opinion are apt to cause some pain at first, especially when they bring danger to our friendships or our livelihood, or disturb seriously our habits. But to suppose that this pain is likely to last and increase is an unwarrantable inference. Suppose I buy a garden full of poppies and hollyhocks, and weed them all out. The garden will look empty and bare, and my neighbors, especially the former owner of the land, may think I do not mean to have any flowers there. But the very fact that the ground is clear means simply that I am going to make some other use of it, and grow plants more to my taste. There is nothing to prevent my having a better garden than before if I choose. So my weeding out some of the common roots and sources of happiness does not prevent my putting others in their places if I choose to, and every one does choose to be as happy as possible, and, indeed, seeks to be so.

Moreover, the happiness of the most devout Christian comes largely from his health, his family, his friendships, his business activity, his amusements, his literary and artistic culture, etc. All these sources of happiness the freethinker is just as likely to possess; and if he gives up some of the other sources of happiness peculiar to the Christian he is able to acquire some peculiar joys of his own from the knowledge that he is free himself, and is helping to make others so. Besides, our happiness depends not so much on our possessions as on our wisdom and contentment. It is not he who has much, but he who is content with what he has, who is happiest. No amount of superstition or scepticism can prevent a man from being patient and satisfied with his lot, thankful for what he has, and indifferent to what is beyond his reach, and thus being happy. So far as there is any difference in the effect of doctrinal views, I should suppose that to think this life a vale of tears, and a mere stage of probation for a better one which we should be ever longing for, would not make us so contented as would the belief that this life is the best we can have, and the final scene of our success, honor, usefulness, and happiness, if we choose to make it so.

But let us turn from theories to facts. I must say for myself that as my views ripen they grow sweeter and dearer. And this has been the case with my friends. The only exception is that there are some who enjoy every step forward in freethought from the very first. A few years ago all my neighbors whose dwellings closely surrounded my own were what is usually called Atheists. They and their friends of similar belief in the town were as happy a set of people as I ever knew anywhere. None of them was gloomy or morbid. All were cheerful, good-natured, kind-hearted, and industrious. The women and children were as happy as the men. And of the people of various shades of dissent from Orthodoxy with whom I have associated I may say the same; namely, that they were certainly none the less happy for their peculiar views, but probably more so.

F. M. HOLLAND.

A PHILOSOPHER IN THE SICK-ROOM.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I do not know whether you are aware of the fact, but I am a confirmed invalid, having been confined to my bed and chair by a painful and incurable malady during the past ten years. I do not, however, look upon my misfortune from the ascetic side,—as a providential visitation to punish me for my sins, or to work my soul's eternal salvation; but rather as the natural effect of certain wise and immutable laws without which neither you nor I could have existed.

In my religious views I am a thorough rationalist, and find much consolation for my manifold afflictions in the contemplation of events past, present, and to come, from the elevated plane of reason. Denied the pleasures of the out-door world, confined within narrow physical boundaries, I yet find much to enjoy,—probably my full share of the delights of this beautiful world.

Through the operation of the beneficent law of compensation, of which our noble Emerson so censoriously discourses, I find that what I have lost on the one hand has been made up to me on the other; and that, on the whole, I am, probably, as happy as the average of mortals. For physical losses I have made mental gains; for the society of men I have substituted the companionship of books, and have not been a loser by the change. My general reading has been in the line of my general thought,—on the plane of rationalism. The current scientific and freethought literature with which I have come in contact has been a copious fountain of joy to my soul. In this connection, I should not be doing justice to my feelings, were I to withhold an expression of my warm regard for the dear INDEX. It is the light by which I boldly navigate the broad ocean of freethought, without fear of being cast upon dangerous shoals or sunken rocks. The only difficulty I experience is in keeping my own thought up to its lofty altitude; in striving to do so I always find myself strengthened and refreshed.

Would you know how one who holds heretical religious views, and whose life is nearing its western horizon, feels in view of death? By reason of my invalid condition, I have been living in the presence of that benignant angel, in thought at least, if not in fact, for many years; and while I do not count his special favors, neither do I shrink from his embrace. I indulge in no fanciful dreams of ecstatic joys beyond the grave, nor do I harbor any gloomy forebodings. If with this life all ends,—so be it; for then, at least, that precious boon to a foot-sore, pain-worn traveller—rest—will have been granted. If, on the other hand, life in another sphere and under happier conditions shall be vouchsafed,—better still. Whatever my destiny, I await it in patience, in calmness, in perfect trust. I do not fear that my beliefs or non-beliefs will affect my future in the smallest degree. No other light than reason glimmers on my horizon; that light I must follow, let it conduct me whithersoever it may. If I pursue that path which, to my poor vision, seems plain and straight, I shall not be blamed if it leads not to the stars. Finite thought cannot analyze infinite laws. If another existence be vouchsafed to mortals after death, even the wisest and best of the sons of men must awake, at last, to a future which they had not foreseen. I know not what may befall me; but I feel absolutely assured that the power that holds an impenetrable veil between mortal aspirations and immortal possibilities, not permitting so much as one poor ghost, of all the countless dead, to "blot out," what lies beyond, will not supplement this brief existence with one less blest beyond the grave, and which is to be eternal. Since, then, we know absolutely nothing of what lies outside the little orbit in which our finite nature forever revolves, let us not waste our energies in fruitless speculations concerning another world; but let us rather content ourselves with brave endeavors to mitigate the evils of this.

Very truly yours,
DANIEL CONY.

WOBURN, July 9, 1878.

P.S.—I have taken the liberty to address you a note, the whole or any part of which you are at liberty to publish if you choose. I felt as though I would like you to know that rationalism is not the religion of despair, as it is derisively said to be. I cannot speak for others; but for myself I can truly say that I have found it very comforting under the most trying circumstances.

Feeling that there is a bond of sympathy between us in our religious views, I shall offer no apology for, nor make any explanation of, what I have written.

D. C.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

Reading at the Cooper Union Reading-Room, in some review, an article of Emerson, I met the sentence: "All human productions are anthropomorphous." I read it a second time, reflected, then took my memorandum-book and put it down. My impression was that I had found a lump of pure gold. Musing over it further, I thought: "Well, what is it, after all? That is a simple tautology; one might as well say that all human productions are human productions." But all truth is wonderfully simple; and how little of it have we really in conscious ownership! To get all the good out of this sentence, however, I would enlarge it and say: All productions of a single human individual are analogous and proportional to the perceptions and faculties of that single human individual. That is also sure and irrefutable, just as much so as that two times two make four. But what a true standard we have got in that for giving right weight and measure! What a sharp-edged sword to fight with bigotry and self-conceit, with narrowness of mind and superstition! What a shield also to protect us from arrogance and false pretension in ourselves and in others! What an aid to grow in charity and tolerance towards those who do not share our creed or our opinions! One human individual, though that little eye can span a wide orbit when well developed, still is but a fragment, as for the power of perceiving truth. Once in a century a hundred or a thousand fragments are gathered into one, and a Shakespeare appears, a Goethe, but even their minds are but fragmentary, though wonderfully made, anthropomorphous, reflex of but some currents in that ocean of spirit-emanation from on high. Let us learn, then, by the words of noble teachers, that there is no contradiction in the realm of truth,—that it is sheer absurdity and nonsense to talk of antagonism between science, philosophy, and religion.

What is science? The knowledge of concrete things and their life.

What is philosophy? The knowledge of abstract things and their life, of the relation between causes and effects, of laws governing matter and of their workings and applications.

What is religion? The knowledge of divine things or substance and their life, their workings and applications, perception of the relation between the creature and the Creator, with all its consequences. God works by laws on matter; that makes the universe.

No link can be spared in that line backwards or forwards.

All principles of truth are of spiritual nature, of divine origin; therefore they can reach us only by deduction. All facts and phenomena are material; therefore we can understand them only by induction.

Where the middle link falls, God in his goodness sends faith to bridge over the chasm; humanity in slowly progressive labor erects gradually the more solid structure of knowledge, the airy provisory bridge disappears, and we march on solid ground safely to heaven. There is all the mystery on the palm of the hand. What is called the contest between science and religion is, in fact, either a clownish wrestling between its humbug substitutes, quack science and quack theology, ignorant pretension and sectarian dogma, or it is legitimate contest between true science and quack religion, or true religion and quack science. The issue cannot be doubtful. May we, then, all learn to fight ignorance, sin, and superstition, and all unlearn to fight our brother and fellow-man!

II.

Let me sit at thy feet, thou man with the clear perception of senses and discerning judgment, who with untiring industry hast gathered the facts of concrete life, with sharp sagacity hast analyzed and untangled the complex combinations of Nature, who hast dug that channel of perception and observation so wide and deep and long that thy keen mind has gained large wealth of knowledge; and let me gather a handful of thy treasures for my little storehouse.

Let me listen to thee, thou greater teacher, well trained by long discipline into mastery of a true philosophy, so that intuition may safely help where imperfect human tools are inadequate. Thou understandest to put together those facts and phenomena into one unbroken chain of causes and effects. But thou knowest so far and no farther. Knowledge does not yet span the chasm from finite to infinite; 'tis only the poet's imagination or the seer's inspiration that can accomplish this. Our tolling feet may well carry us to the top of the mountain, but if then in hazardous leap we would try to catch hold of the sky, we should only fall and bruise ourselves. There is provision, says the proverb, that trees do not grow up to the sky.

I love to hear thee, noble scholar and valiant soldier for truth and light, warring against darkness in the human soul, slaying bigotry and superstition, examining, under the guidance of history, the progress and development of the human mind, searching so intensely the mysterious working of soul-life in humanity as even to make a religion out of it; but do not forget that all light on earth is but reflected light; the emanating source is far beyond our grasp. The flower, tulip, lily, rose, might say it was her doing that clothes her with beauty and loveliness, and might think a little pride would well be justified in such finished artist-work. But we know better. 'Tis not thou, O child, it is the Sun, who does it all in thee; it is the Sun who dyes thy leaves green, thy chalice purple, white, or azure blue, works fragrance out of dust and morning dew, and all for what? To teach man where to look: first downwards and enjoy the happiness that beauty gives, then upwards to recognize with songs of praise the source of love and wisdom.

I draw courage and strength from the currents of life that roll from thy lips, thou eloquent preacher. Thy nature is dual, I see. One side of it touches the earth and knows its inhabitants and understands their doings with sharp discernment and loving interest; the other, with the poet's glowing imagination, soars upwards to eternal regions and draws inspiration from the source of truth. A teacher, friend, adviser, God owns thee as his worthy son, among the noblest of a noble nation; shortcomings though there are, He will mildly judge, but not before man's tribunal. Were ever moles and bats sent out to follow an eagle's track? How many among those that cavil at thee have done good to one fellow-man for every hundred thou hast helped and lifted up? For a thousand hearts that bless thy name, will there be one remembering thee?

And ye, bright shining stars on spirit's firmament, philosophers and prophets who gather in objectiveness, in self-forgetting receptivity, the purest rays of spirit-light, in olden, middle, modern time,—Spinoza, thou, nearest of all to central truth, the god-intoxicated man, though coming ages will better understand thee than the present one,—I strain my feeble mind to catch some radiance from your distant heights to teach me to look to the central light.

And, last and best, I want to love, yea, worship you, redeemers, saviors of mankind, whatever name you bear,—Moses, Buddha, Brahma, but before all Jesus, nearest and therefore clearest to our eye and heart, the gentle, sweet, loving teacher of Nazareth. Let me touch thy garment's seam, to gain belief and faith in thee. In prayer and deepest meditation thou hast found the way to God's eternal throne, then purged thyself from all the coarseness of the flesh-inheritance, then received and been baptized with the Christ-spirit, the fullest emanation of the Divine, the loftiest soul-impulse, to help and raise thy fallen brother-man from blindness, deafness, senselessness, ignorance, and sin, to follow thee, to learn by thee that light and life and love eternally await him who obeys. The creature learns to trace his way up to the Creator's feet.

JULIUS ASHMAN.

NEW YORK, June, 1878.

THE MEANING OF IT.

EDITOR INDEX:—

What does the conviction of E. H. Haywood mean? He is sent to jail and fined for circulating a pamphlet containing his matured thoughts concerning one of the most important questions affecting the happiness and well-being of mankind,—indeed which lies at the foundation of the very existence of man and of society. He comes to conclusions differing from those professed by the majority of our people, and taught by the Christian Church as a part of their religion.

For doing this, not for the manner of it, he is pronounced guilty of obscenity by judges who will live to be ashamed of themselves, and that is not wishing them very long life either; and the sentence is endorsed by the Boston Daily Advertiser, usually considered a respectable paper, not entirely without conscience. Many other papers will doubtless do the same, and stab the freedom of the press in the very house of its friends.

Why? Because they have been taught by their Christian teachers that God is a Man, a KING OF GLORY, LORD OF HOSTS (without a Queen), and hence, as the supreme good is man, the supreme evil is woman.

Through woman came sin and all our woes into the world. Any way of looking at woman and sex relations except that which subordinates woman to man and makes sex union with her a mere convenience and an unavoidable necessary evil, not to be spoken of in polite or pious society except with bated breath, is obscene.

This view of woman and sex belongs with the religious ideas evolved in the infantile or femine condition of the human mind, when the God idea was projected by the exaltation of the opposite or masculinoid aspect of mind, and by the abasement or sacrifice of self.

Now that the reason, or the mature and masculinoid condition of the human mind, begins to assert itself, we see the conception of God as the divine humanity symbolized by woman, and we have beginnings of the effort to do justice to woman in society.

We discover at the same time that religion does not consist in the exaltation of the opposite aspect from our own, or in the sacrifice of self, or self-denial in the old sense, but in the full development of the highest self in integral harmony, and in the full appreciation of the coequal value of the other side or sex.

Yet after we shall have attained this harmonious recognition and reconciliation of the opposite aspects of being, there will doubtless remain an ineradicable tendency in man to worship woman, and in woman to worship man, if not in public, at least individually.

Whatever Comstock or his friends and backers may have meant in the beginning, before the atrocious law of 1873 was smuggled through without discussion at the end of a session when many members of Congress were "thoroughly wounded in every respect," it is certain now that the present onslaught is mainly directed against free discussion of the sex problem, with the intention of maintaining the Christian taboo, and asserting by implication that sex and all that pertains to it is in itself obscene, and can only be redeemed and sanctified by the Church for the purpose of adding to the membership of Sunday-schools.

In fact, it is a very short time since the damnation of infants was openly preached, and the Catholic Church still requires the earliest possible baptism of infants, in some cases even before they are born, if there is any danger of time falling afterwards.

This is perfectly consistent. If Comstock had wished to prevent vice, to attack those publishers of books which represent sex and its relations to be as low and vile as he and his like believe them to be, he would have defined obscenity so plainly as to include them and them only. But his object is the exact opposite of this; the law is meant and interpreted to be against those who represent sex as sacred, and the relations of sex as holy and beautiful in themselves, and as vile only when perverted from their natural and normal manifestations.

There are no tons of really obscene matter sent through the mails, and if there were any large part of it the best place to suppress it would be where it is manufactured. Expert detectives would easily discover the presses which printed tons of matter, and, for that matter, if there are such places they know them already.

The danger to our children from such matter is as nothing compared with that from other sources, especially from that abominable teaching of the Comstock school, that sex is vile and must be kept secret and concealed, like anything of which we are the most ashamed, when, in point of fact, sex is the central fact of the universe, and that which in ourselves, as the crowning glory of creation, we should be most proud of.

Let us not be deceived by Comstock's pious fraud. He only uses the talk about obscenity to conceal his real object, which, as I have already said, is the degradation of woman; for she in all this controversy stands behind and represents sex. The present is woman's hour. No question, political, religious, or social, but turns on her. Tell me any man's position as to woman, and I know where to find him on all vital questions.

It is only necessary to examine the law itself to see its Orthodox, Christian, and anti-woman character. Unless woman and sex as the obscene facts of the universe are aimed at, would the Congress of the United States assume the extraordinary power of making the prevention of conception a crime? It is idle to multiply proofs of the animus and object of this monstrous perversion of law. Every lover of freedom must see it as soon as his attention is called to it. Let every man who values freedom remember its price, and cease not his work until the odious law is repealed, and in such a way that no future Comstock shall dare attempt a similar outrage.

F. S. C.

A NEW WAY TO REFUTE THOMAS PAINE.

LANESVILLE, Essex Co., Mass., July 17, 1878.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I send you a sketch of what occurred in this little village last Sunday in the Orthodox church.

The pastor, during a sermon on the merits of the Bible above all other books, held a copy of the Age of Reason in one hand and the Bible in the other, and, contrasting the Bible with the Age of Reason, reading passages from each, he got so excited that he dashed the Age of Reason to the floor with great contempt.

His course of late has led some of the younger of his congregation to read a book that he has denounced so violently (for this is not the first time he has used it contemptuously). The book that was used so violently, to show contempt of its author and those that dissent from him, was borrowed of an infidel about two years ago, who has been waiting patiently for its return!

You can use this as you wish. I write it to show that there is considerable venom yet left in small places not far from Boston.

Yours for the cause of progress,

X.

JESUS AND CHRISTIANITY.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In your article concerning "Rev. Mr. Gordon on Unitarianism," published July 11, you make the following statements:—

"The greatest of all the 'traditional creeds' of Christendom—that fundamental creed out of which all the others have grown—is that 'Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ of God'; that is, the God-appointed Messiah, the Lord and Savior and King of the world. This most ancient and original creed of the Church, which is the only one recorded in the New Testament to have been approved by Jesus himself, is firmly imbedded in the very name of his religion, 'Christian,' and is the central distinction of Christianity from all other religions."

Now, "without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness." But a little good-natured controversy sometimes resolves the "mystery." I have no design of controversy, however. But it occurred to me that you might be able to refer your readers to some Scripture passage or other authority for the evidence that the "creed" you name was "approved by Jesus himself," and that Christianity is "his religion." If you can find any passage "recorded in the New Testament" to support either the statement that Christianity is the religion of Jesus or that he approved the creed that makes him "the Lord and Savior and King of the world," I will try very hard to send you twenty new subscribers, if you will point it out. Fraternally, I. J. STINE.

July 17, 1878.

[From beginning to end, the New Testament writings are strung on this creed like beads on a string. We raise no issue of their authenticity or credibility; simply taking them as they are, we say that they lose all coherency if that creed is forgotten or neglected. It is utterly superfluous to point out single passages where narratives, parables, exhortations, epistles, etc., all agree. But, to oblige our correspondent, we refer to Matt. xvi: 13-20, where Jesus blesses Peter for declaring that he is "the Christ," and founds his "church" on this declaration, which is the universally recognized and distinctive "Christian Confession." So also the conversation with Pilate in the fourth gospel, xviii: 33-37, where Jesus confesses that he is "a king." But it is idle to point out single passages to prove the one doctrine which is everywhere affirmed and nowhere denied in the authoritative book of Christianity.—Ed.]

A FRIENDLY LETTER.

SPRINGFIELD, Vt., July 24, 1878.

MR. F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—I have but lately become a reader of THE INDEX; and, as it comes to me, I understand more and more every week how much I have lost in times past for the lack of just such matter as THE INDEX furnishes. It has long seemed to me that, when men could come to realize the fact that they were accountable to all humanity and not to a "demon of the air" for their sins, a higher plane of morality would be reached, and mankind be infinitely benefited.

I send THE INDEX as soon as read on a missionary tour among my friends, with the request to "pass it along," hoping thus to find some one who shall be as much edified by its perusal as I am. I wish all its readers would do as much, and thus hasten the time when Truth and Science shall occupy the place of Ignorance and Superstition.

Respectfully, FRED. JOHNSON.

THE WATKINS CONVENTION.

HON. FREDERICK DOUGLASS ACCEPTS AN INVITATION TO SPEAK.

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 23, 1878.

My Dear Sir,—I cheerfully give my heart and hand to every earnest effort to know the truth and free the human mind from the thralldom of bigotry and superstition of every kind and degree; and hence, if not prevented by the claims of duty elsewhere, I shall be with those who assemble in Watkins on the 22d of August.

We cannot, I think, do a better work in our day and generation than to hold the standard of perfect freedom of thought against all the fetters of priestcraft and the gloomy traditions of men. Law, irreversible and eternal, we should seek to know and obey, as the highest and best of which man is capable.

Yours truly, FREDERICK DOUGLASS.

H. L. GREEN, Esq.

SCHOOL-BOOKS.

"W. J. P." says in a recent number of THE INDEX:—

"Especially let liberals be on the lookout for all school-books written and published under the auspices of the American Tract Society."

Let me add also—to look out for religious school-books from other sources. A very large proportion of school-books now in use are well seasoned with Orthodox stories and exhortations.

This question of school-books deserves the earnest attention of the liberal public. We not only need to have religious services discontinued in the public schools, but we also need to have the school-books such as shall give correct and useful information, free from religious teachings. CYRUS LEE.

July 21, A. R. 103.

LABOR TROUBLES.

THE CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA—"KEARNEYISM" EXPLAINED BY JUDGE ORD, OF SAN FRANCISCO—WHAT THE WORKINGMEN OBJECT TO AND WHAT THEY DEMAND.

Judge Ord, of San Francisco, who arrived in this city a few days ago, is staying at the New York Hotel. A reporter of the Tribune called upon him yesterday to ascertain the real state of affairs that has been caused by the utterances and actions of Dennis Kearney and his followers. Judge Ord is a man apparently about fifty-five years of age. He gave his views in a quiet and nonpartisan manner.

"I have watched the progress of the Kearney movement," he said, "from its inception. It was brought about through the usual conflict between capital and labor, but principally through the employment of Chinese labor to the exclusion of all other. The emigration of the Chinese at first was very slight, and their coming was not objected to, and, in fact, scarcely noticed. It was not until the Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroads, which extended competitive advantages to Chinese emigrants, and created such a tremendous influx for several years to the Pacific coast, that the present disturbances began to exist. White men and women, who were only receiving a moderate compensation for their labor, were discharged, and Chinamen, who proved themselves to be willing and apt scholars, were substituted in their places. Not only did they make able miners, laborers, and mechanics, but cooks, servants, and chambermaids; and to-day many of our best houses contain Chinese servants of every grade. The enterprising laborer who had saved a small pittance easily stood this change for a short time; but while he was standing still the speculators, manufacturers, and others with capital were quickly gaining wealth through the introduction of cheap labor. The result has been that in a few years the workingmen have become beggars and capitalists have become rich, and to-day San Francisco contains over one hundred millionaires. As a natural consequence, this great wealth has created monopoly,—monopoly in every branch of speculation. This has assumed such gigantic proportions that any kind of legislation, either local or State, is constantly being tampered with, and even our courts are in danger of being controlled by these monopolists.

"This, with the general depression in business and real estate," continued Judge Ord, "has placed property-owners in a very bad odor. As an instance, I recall the case of a Mr. Hopper, an extensive stock-owner of the Pacific Company, who contemplated building a very fine mansion just outside of our city. The drawings were completed and ground broken; its cost was estimated at one million dollars. Mr. Hopper employed Chinese laborers, and the work was advancing rapidly; but while this was going on, the white laborers grumbled considerably, and one night a large gang of these men proceeded to the unfinished building and destroyed it. This was the signal for a general outbreak, since which time confusion and disorder have been rampant under the leadership of the drayman Kearney. Mr. Hopper was forced to leave the city, and settled in the southern part of the State, where he died in a few months, his nerves having become fatally affected. No will was found after his death, and an estimate of his wealth can be formed from the fact that his wife was compelled to furnish a personal bond of ten millions of dollars as administratrix of the estate."

"How are the finances of the banks affected by this movement?"

"At present the Kearney movement is in its infancy, and they do not take much stock in it. Their enormous wealth gives them unlimited control of the governing powers, and it is hardly necessary to say that legislation is in their favor and against the working classes."

"What hold has Kearney upon the working classes?"

"All parties must have a leader; and Kearney, who was an ordinary drayman and very demonstrative in his ideas, became a favorite among the rabble and was looked upon as their leader. Seeing this, he conceived that his only opponents were the great capitalists, whom he despises in their alleged inability to resist him. He was encouraged in his course by men who had more brains than himself, some of whom were amusing themselves at the expense of the public, and some who, from mercenary motives, were anxious for the movement to go on. He very soon became, not only popular, but powerful, among that class of laborers who, for a long time, felt sore at the capitalists. The discontented set throughout the interior, hearing of him, imagined that a great power reposed in him, and simultaneously 'Kearneyism' found adherents in every portion of the State."

"Has its strength been lessened since it began its existence?"

"Quite to the contrary; it is at white heat now, and it is evident that concessions must be made by both communists and capitalists. In the city it has gained more strength than in the interior, and there is no doubt but that at the next election it will show a bolder front."

"Are the legitimate working classes in favor of the movement, or is it acting independently of them?"

"The respectable working element is against any acts of communism, but is willing to affiliate with any organization opposing the monopolists and capitalists. It is willing mainly to destroy the power of the railroad, steamship, and banking corporations; in this way the Kearney men will achieve their object; but, as I said, concessions must be made on both sides."

"What is Kearney's object in coming East?"

"As far as I can judge, he is coming here as the champion of his party, to tell the working classes what he has achieved in California, and confidently anticipates being supported by a large majority of the National party here. There is no doubt that he will receive a great ovation wherever he goes, as I notice there is here a class of communists ready to approve just such a movement."

"What remedy do you consider best to stop this movement?"

"Well, they want that new laws, both State and municipal, shall be enacted, compelling the Chinamen to adhere to established laws of this country. At present the Chinamen don't know and don't care to know what the laws are. They want the Chinese traffic stopped, and object to Chinamen coming to this country who have no other object in view but to gain money, and then return home without having spent anything here. Another demand they make is that the law allowing dead Chinamen to be returned to their home shall be rescinded; for if the Chinamen knew they were to be buried in this country, they would not come here for love or money. If the Chinamen were compelled to adhere to the local laws, much of this trouble could be averted."—N. Y. Tribune, July 23.

SAN FRANCISCO COMMUNISTS.

Several weeks ago attention was called to indications of what appeared to be an organized movement in San Francisco to burn the Chinese quarter of the city, and probably massacre the Chinese; and it will be remembered that the federal government at Washington was called on to protect the intended victims from the threatened attack. The outbreak did not occur, and the movement seemed to be abandoned. But society in San Francisco has been uneasy ever since; and now there are threats of a more serious enterprise. It is said that the communists there are organized in force, and are threatening to begin their work at no distant day. The Alta openly asserts that a formidable conspiracy exists whose purpose is revolution, the seizure of property, and, if necessary, the destruction of the city. It says:

"The leader of the conspirators exercises the same control over his small band of followers as did the driver over his band of slaves in the olden time. He harangues his mob gatherings in one continued storm of vulgar blasphemy, billingsgate, and brutal threats against law, order, life, and property. Prominent citizens who are pioneers in this State, and by their energy, skill, and labor have built for themselves homes, reared families, and developed the resources of the State, are openly proclaimed to be thieves, plunderers, and capitalists, and by name are pointed out as objects of attack and outrage by the unthinking mob. The right of inflicting the death penalty on the citizen is openly asserted, without the intervention of a trial or an opportunity for defence, or for exercising the right of thinking, speaking, or voting for himself, according to the dictates of his own conscience."

"Men in all parts of the city are being enrolled in clubs and military companies with open threats to burn the city, murder the citizens, and revolutionize the State. The laws and treaties of the United States, which guarantee protection to all residents, native or foreign, are denounced, and threats to set them at defiance publicly asserted. Men of capital are held up to scorn and animadversion, whose property is justly subject to seizure and division by the communists without law or any restraint."—St. Louis Republican, April 18.

RUSSIANS AND TURKS COMPARED.—The Rev. Dr. Schaffner, who for twenty-five years was a missionary to Constantinople, addressed the Foreign Missionary Meeting at the Seventh Presbyterian Church, last evening, giving the result of his experience in Russia and Turkey. He said that, during his eighty years of life he had lived in Russia twenty years, and in Turkey forty years, and had become thoroughly acquainted with the customs of both people. Since the days of Peter the Great, the Czar of Russia had been the supreme power over all religious sects in his country; and, while the doors of the Russian Church were open to all who chose to enter, the doors of the Protestant Church were well guarded. Between 1840 and 1850, religious liberty in Turkey began to dawn, and the custom of decapitating Christians was abrogated. Now there were fully one hundred Christian churches and congregations in Turkey which supported themselves. What people said about religious persecution in Turkey was not true; and, as to interfering with Christian churches, the Mohammedan law and the Koran specifically forbade it. The Turks not only tolerated Christians, but they protected them. As the laws now existed, Dr. Schaffner continued, every inch of ground which became Russian was lost to missionary work. Every minister of the gospel was obliged to get permission from St. Petersburg before he could enter the country. He could not perform any ecclesiastical service unless he obtained special permission from the authorities at St. Petersburg. He felt obliged to deprecate Russian rule, while he admitted that both the Russian and Turkish governments were corrupt. The natural vices of the Russians were three—lying, stealing, and drunkenness. The Russians were naturally a religious people, but were ignorant and misguided. They longed for the Bible, and when they could get it would apply themselves to it. The Turks as a people were sober; to lie was considered shame, and to steal was a sin in the sight of God. But they were passionate and cruel, and were excusable in this because of their incapacity to distinguish right from wrong. He felt there was a hope for Turkey; the Koran was given up by them in a great measure, and they needed the prayers of Christians to insure advancement.

PREJUDICE squints when it looks, and lies when it talks.—Duchess d'Avranches.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookeller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,

HENRY S. STERNBERG.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.20 for one year, including postage, or 9 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.00.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonaschohn's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO
FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tenafly, N.J.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Pric.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; a Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD (MATTHEW). Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights.....	1.50
Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.35
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	2.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Prentice.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index.....	6.00
CARLILE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Fast and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Letter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately, 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	2.00
CEVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLEBY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLEBY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.40
CHERRY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.40
CLARK (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARK (DR. R. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.35
CLARKE (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	1.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	1.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compiling—
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Stina Marner and Scener of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 3 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Amos Conquer the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Knox's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 3 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 4 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.50
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.00
The Marble Faun.....	1.00
The English Note-Books.....	1.00
The American Note-Books.....	1.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	1.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. EMLEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeltons.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. 2. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerostatics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Seins, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 3 vols.....	6.00
LEGG'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.) What's Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Essay Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Essay Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	4.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. O.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education.....	3.00
Annual Reports on Education, from 1835 to 1845.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 3 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte.....	1.50
Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	3.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	1.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Land.....	1.50
MIVAT (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swinging Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PELPH'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trothy Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds suggested under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects.....	1.50
Natural Phenomena.....	1.50
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Essays on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Sonnet, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (E.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.75
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Huxley.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Appleton & Co., L.L.D., F.R.S., &c.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	12.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.25
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.25
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	1.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	4.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
Universal Progress.....	1.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D.F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	2.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	1.50
The Game-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNISON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W.M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.50
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Hammond, and Love the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Harry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....	1.50
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....	1.50
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Daurat, &c.....	1.50
4. Four Georges, Humourists, &c.....	1.50
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THACKERAY (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shokals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Lectures.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD E.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALE (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	1.50
Radiant Heat.....	1.50
Force of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Singing the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.25
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.50
Pandora. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

221 Washington St., Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 out at home. Address H. HALLITT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.25. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style and price. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

A REMARKABLE BOOK A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blackford, Mr. W. E. Gladstone, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.

Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Clifford, Lionel A. Tollermeach, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn.

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.

Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.]

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

1 8 7 7,
Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1872 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience. Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER, General Manager, General Passenger Agent, C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent, 203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried.
E. C. WALKER.

BOARD AT ONE OF THE

largest and best situated Hotels at

MT. DESERT.

Terms, $1 per day; children, 50 and 75 per week.

For particulars, apply to C. H. PHILLIPS, 460 Washington Street, Boston, or to STANLEY HOUSE, South West Harbor, Me.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

NEW BOOKS TO LOAN.

Sent to all parts of the United States. Booksellers and Newsdealers act as our agents. Better accommodations for general readers, even in small towns, than afforded by the large libraries of the great cities.

We supply promptly almost any book called for, and in any number which the demand requires.

All the leading Literary and Scientific Magazines loaned—the reading of a dozen for the cost of one.

Bookbuyers are offered the greatest inducements to be found anywhere in the United States. We issue a Semi-Weekly Catalogue. Our complete Catalogue will be sent post-paid for 50 cents, or free to any one buying to the amount of $1.00 or more.

AMERICAN BOOK EXCHANGE, 65 BEEKMAN STREET, NEW YORK.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1873, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly outfit free. Address TRUE & Co. Augusta, Maine.

THE YOUTH'S

LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. ROTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doeringer & Co., 56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, E. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRISTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 34 pp. Single copies, 3 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient co-operation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 450.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,
ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N. Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

VICTOR HUGO calls God "the millionaire of stars."

WE once more wear our blushing honors in the August presence of THE INDEX!

THE LARGEST Medical Library in the world, it is said, is in the Surgeon-General's office at Washington, D.C.

THERE are some persons whom we enjoy more while we are getting acquainted with them than we ever do afterwards.

NO MAN appreciates the occasional luxury or value of an oath but he who is too much of a gentleman to be an habitual swearer.

THERE is a grain of the serenest and purest philosophy in the saying of the greatest living French writer, that sunshine helps us to be patient.

MR. BEECHER thinks that "starvation is a means of grace," does he? Well, why doesn't he try it in his own case? There would seem to be some need.

GRUEL (so well known in the sick room) is like some people,—decidedly respectable; and yet you don't care to associate with them on the score of taste.

THREE HUNDRED drunkards, it is said, were "reformed" by Mr. Moody in his temperance campaign in Boston. If only one-half of these "stick," Mr. Moody will have earned so far the gratitude of a whole community.

THE LEADING ESSAY which we publish this week, from the pen of Lydia Maria Child, is somewhat long for these columns; and yet it is so excellent in matter and manner, that we feel sure it will take the reader through to the end, not only without weariness but with positive pleasure.

THE FRIENDS of Mr. Moody claim that the number of converts made by him, in his Tabernacle services in this city, was "not far from five thousand." If they were "converted" to an obsolete and decaying theology, how sad! If they were converted to a true morality and a true religion, how fortunate!

THERE is a class of people who seem to think that a man can't be a real reformer unless he accomplish three things: suffer himself to lapse into a decayed and generally seedy appearance; make himself thoroughly obnoxious to everybody of good taste; be immensely more anxious to take care of humanity's business than to mind his own.

THE INDIGNATION MEETING at Faneuil Hall, on the evening of August 1, to protest against the outrage on free speech in the two years' imprisonment of E. H. Heywood for circulating his pamphlet entitled Cupid's Yokes, is reported to us as having been large and very successful. Next week we may print Mr. Wright's opening speech at the meeting.

TRYING to "come down" to the style and tone of certain people, with the benevolent intention to make them feel comfortable in your presence, is like good-naturedly trying to conform to the conditions of "camping out," and taking your food and drink without a napkin: one always feels the immediate need of ablution in better society and better manners.

WE HAVE sometimes observed that long devotion to any particular "reform," or "cause," has a narrowing and hardening effect upon the mind. The fact is that a biased specialist as to any thing never can reason soundly or broadly even about his own matter; for in committing himself solely to that, he loses sight of its true relations to everything else.

DR. MINER, in his Fourth of July speech to some "temperance" people at Lake Pleasant, said that Boston "is a hundred thousand times worse than Sodom,"—and this because Prohibition isn't popular here. He denounced Gov. Andrew for his anti-prohibition principles, and said of the men who advocate and vote for a license law, "damnation should be the reward of them." It is astonishing how mad some men get when they can't make others believe as they do! But what business has a Universalist to talk of "damning" any body?

THE MOST hopeful sign in our politics, to-day, would be the thorough breaking up, or shaking up, of both the old parties; not necessarily the abandonment of any good and vital principles in either, but the utter destruction for a time of the party drill and discipline, the complete unbending of the party whip. This can be done only by the "Independent voter" persevering in his independence, and persuading as many others into the same attitude as possible. No truly honest and intelligent man can afford, in these times, to let himself be called either a "Republican" or a "Democrat."

POUCHET, a French writer, says that the battle of Cressy, when the French were defeated by Edward III. of England, Aug. 26, 1346, was "perhaps the first battle in which cannon were used." How long it takes the world to approach, and depart from, a given point of progress! The most destructive weapons of warfare are the invention of what is called Christian civilization. But the humane teachings of the "Prince of Peace," so far as this world is concerned (he, too, "damned" the "unbelievers" in a future world), will never be entirely vindicated until cannon in this world and hell in the next are utterly abolished.

ONE WHO would be a philosopher in any real sense or degree finds himself looking everywhere for the truth, and discovering it everywhere. He finds it more and more difficult to "take sides" with any body or any thing, well knowing that to do so is to shut himself into partialism and out of sphericity. A philosopher, it may frankly be confessed, is poor material for either a partisan or a "reformer," for he cannot help seeing that partial justice is unjust, partial truth faulty. At the same time, one endeavoring to carry the philosophic mind shares in the human liability to error; and no one knows this better than himself: but none can be so anxious as he to be set right.

GEN. BUTLER's proposition is, "that we should issue four hundred millions of non-interest bearing notes of the United States to settle the unemployed laboring men upon the public lands." That might be a good thing to do if it could be done; but doesn't the General know that many of those unemployed men, when once "settled," wouldn't stay settled three months? We know an establishment near Boston, which during all the hard times has given employment to over a hundred persons, where men are constantly forfeiting their right to be employed by shiftless, idle, and vicious habits. Barring accidents and failures in business enterprises, a thoroughly competent and faithful workman, when once employed, is almost sure to be kept employed; and this because his employer can't afford to let him go.

THE POET Bryant is no sooner gone from sight than a quarrel arises as to who shall have the credit and the profit of writing his biography. Gen. James Grant Wilson proposes to do it for the firm that originally published Mr. Bryant's Library of Poetry and Song; but the Evening Post pronounces Gen. Wilson's purpose to do so "impertinent," because the Bryant family haven't asked him, and besides have literary talent enough of their own to do it. Another journal suggests that the Post wishes to make something for itself out of the biographical venture; hence its nervous jealousy of Gen. Wilson and his firm. Why all this pother about the matter? Let who will write and publish a biography of Mr. Bryant; his admirers and the public will then judge which is best, and have the benefit of several to choose from.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.

FRANCOIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.

HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
 HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
 HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
 HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
 HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Irrington, Ind.
 HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York
 MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
 MR. R. F. HALLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
 MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
 MR. F. SCHUEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
 HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
 REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
 RABBI B. FELSENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
 REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
 MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Flomona, Mass.
 MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
 MR. KARL HEINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
 MR. HORACE SEEVER,.....Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
 RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
 MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
 MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
 MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thorndike, Mass.
 REV. ROBERT COLLYER,.....Chicago, Ill.
 COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
 DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
 HON. E. S. COCKBURN,.....New York City.
 KIDDER F. W. EVANS,.....New York City.
 MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
 MRS. AMY POST,.....Tenchey, N. Y.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CODY STANTON,.....Rochester, N. Y.
 MRS. SALLIE HOLLEY,.....Lottsburgh, Va.

Secretary.

W. H. HAMLEN,.....21 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.

MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.

J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.

F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
 J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
 D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.

Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
 Arkansas.....JOHN A. ARRENS, Monticello.
 California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
 Colorado.....DAVID T. BEALS, Grenada.
 Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
 Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GOWLT, Greenville.
 Florida.....T. D. HIDDINGS, Enterprise.
 Georgia.....DR. A. A. BRILL, Milledgeville.
 Idaho.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Caldwell.
 Illinois.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
 Indiana.....C. O. MICHENER, Adel.
 Iowa.....JOHN FAIRBANKS, Fort Scott.
 Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Hillsboro.
 Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
 Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
 Maryland.....J. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
 Massachusetts.....W. H. SAWYARD, Boston.
 Michigan.....E. H. SCHMIDT, Detroit.
 Minnesota.....H. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
 Missouri.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
 Nebraska.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
 Nevada.....V. O. BARRETT, White Rock.
 New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
 New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. OVEIS, Passaic.
 New York.....H. L. GREEN, (chairman), Salamanca.
 North Carolina.....J. W. THOMAS, Warren.
 Ohio.....E. D. STARE, Cleveland.
 Oregon.....RAMEL OOLT, Humboldt Basin.
 Pennsylvania.....G. W. BALDWIN, Leesville.
 Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
 South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
 Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
 Texas.....DR. L. S. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
 Vermont.....R. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
 Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
 West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DEET, Weston.
 Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
 Wyoming.....D. P. WILCOX, Yankton.
 District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
 Alaska.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
 Hawaii.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.

D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
 MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
 HANLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeldt.
 Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeldt, Julius Plisterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
 JACKSONVILLE, FLORIDA.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
 Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hookman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
 PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
 Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ferd. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clausen, and Fred. Orasch.
 CHESAIRE, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohay.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
 STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
 Issued to Chas. Hazz, G. O. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. rison, T. C. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
 DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry C. Dillon; Secretary, Frank H. Ingersoll.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
 FAIRM HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
 Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elmer Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. F. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urbino, John S. Verity.
 PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
 Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. R. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
 NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse.
 Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
 TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnadall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
 HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peterson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
 Issued to Levi R. Peterson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
 CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
 NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunia.
 Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopsen, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
 ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunasing.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
 Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliza Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
 ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
 Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. O. D. Dake, and others.
 TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
 Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Boal, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
 CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
 MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert O. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
 JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
 Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
 Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
 FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
 WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
 Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
 MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
 MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
 Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
 ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
 BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
 Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
 CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzscope.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
 WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
 CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. E. Steels.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
 ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—President, C. B. Hoffman; Secretary, E. L. Senft.
 Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Senft, M. Senn, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Senft, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
 PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
 LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
 XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
 NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
 Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tanzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauentstein, M. D., E. Lébent, and others.
 OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
 Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Juhn, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
 CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
 Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Altholson, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Altholson, H. Rely, and others.
 ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kleb; Secretary, F. B. Parze.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
 HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."
 CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.
 MOBERLY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.
 Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.
 MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinkley.
 Issued to the President and Secretary, on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.
 VINCENNES, INDIANA.—President, Charles Graeter; Secretary, Orlan F. Baker.
 Issued to the President and Secretary in behalf of the Vincennes Liberal League.

[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Christianity and other Religions.*

BY LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

... Sentiments unite men, opinions separate them. The fundamental rules of Morality are the same with good men of all ages and countries; the idea of Immortality has been present with them all; and all have manifested similar aspirations toward an infinitely wise and good Being, by whom they were created and sustained. From these three starting-points many paths diverge, leading into endless mazes of theology...

There has been some unfairness in our manner of representing the Sacred Books of nations outside of Christianity. The poorest specimens of their Holy Writings have been frequently brought into comparison with the best of ours. We have been prone to quote their enormous miracles, their wearisome repetitions, their devout rhapsodies (without meaning to us), and their seemingly idolatrous rituals, as specimens of the kind of spiritual food which satisfies the best minds among them. But when we wish to introduce our own Sacred Book to those who are unacquainted with it, we do not transcribe for them the description of Lot's drunkenness, or David's conduct toward Uriah, or the story of Jonah and the whale, or the voluptuous Song of Solomon, or the genealogical tree of ancient Hebrew families, or the mysterious allegories of the Book of Revelations. On the contrary, we instinctively present to them sublime passages from Isaiah, or the Psalms; the Sermon on the Mount, the Prodigal Son, the benediction on Little Children, and the Angels' Song of "peace on earth, and good will toward men." In fact, these are the portions which Christians generally prefer for their own reading. Other portions, usually kept in the background, are read with edification by many pious people, because they find in them a spiritual meaning. But we ought to bear in mind that the same thing is true with regard to the Sacred Books of other peoples. Enlightened Hindus and Mohammedans find much in the Vedas and the Koran which we cannot see there, and which the ignorant among the receivers of their own faith do not begin to imagine. What we call the mythology of the ancient Greeks and Romans was a venerable reality to those who were educated in the belief of it. Their wise men believed that the sun, moon, stars, and all other objects of Nature were, each and every one, endowed with a soul, or immortal Spirit, by means of which it lived. Thus they supposed there was a mighty Spirit of Ocean, whom they called Neptune, who ruled over storms, and tides, and mariners. They did not worship a marble image of Apollo: their faith saw an angel in the sun; a Radiant Spirit, who guided all the motions of that resplendent orb, and also kindled the fire of genius in the souls of men. All these Spirits, existing within the various forms of creation, they supposed to be subordinate deities, to whom the Supreme God had intrusted the care of various departments of the universe: ministering angels, as they would be called in modern times. Sculptors embodied their own ideas of these Spirits in marble forms of immortal beauty; and poets told manifold stories of them, most of which probably had at the time an allegorical significance, now lost to us. The ignorant populace worshipped the marble images, and believed the fables in a literal sense. But it was not so with thoughtful and cultured men. They fixed their thoughts mainly upon One Supreme Being, the Cause of All Things. They rejected many of the popular fables as blasphemous; and so far as they retained reverence for any of these traditions, they did it by infusing into them a spiritual significance from their own progressive minds. In various degrees, more or less unconsciously, Christians do the same with regard to their Bible. This proneness of human souls to transmute their own increasing vitality into old forms and traditions is a beautiful provision to guard freedom without destroying reverence. In this way do all the Written Oracles of the world become like the flaming cherubim, that "turned every way to guard the tree of life."

It is necessary for us to bear in mind that the same saving process is in continual operation with regard to sacred emblems. The meaning of symbols deemed holy in religions foreign to our own is so hidden from us, that it is impossible for us to understand fully the deep significance they have for minds that have been trained, from generation to generation, to regard them with reverence. History informs us that the renowned wisdom of ancient Egypt induced such men as Abraham, Pythagoras, and

* Introduction to Mrs. Child's Aspirations of the World.

Plato to travel thither, to listen to the teachings of the priests concerning God and the soul; and it is mentioned in praise of Moses that he "was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians." Therefore, when we find images of Beetles abounding in ancient Egyptian temples, we naturally exclaim, How could it be possible that such a wise people worshipped beetles! But suppose that, four or five thousand years hence, our Christian churches and cathedrals should be in ruins, and that future antiquarians should find on the altars images of a Lamb, with a Cross, or a Book, in its paws; and suppose that some fragment of literature should inform them that great numbers of the ancient people, who once worshipped in those ruined edifices, were in the habit of wearing next the heart a small image of a Lamb, which they called Agnus Dei (Lamb of God), which they regarded as an amulet to protect them from sickness, robbery, murder, and the temptations of Evil Spirits,—would not those antiquaries, in their ignorance of the meaning we attach to that symbol, naturally infer that Christians worshipped lambs? Very likely we make as great a mistake in supposing that the ancient Egyptians worshipped beetles. Among the Buddhists, the White Lotos, which opens when the sun rises and closes when it sets, is adopted as a symbol of the Great Central Sun of the Universe; and in their temples the constellations are represented revolving round a Lotos-blossom. How different must be the feelings of a devout Buddhist, who reverently bows his head wherever he sees the sacred symbol, from those of a Christian botanist, who merely admires the beauty of the flower, and is curious to ascertain the number of its petals and stamens! In Buddhist countries, men may everywhere be seen prostrating themselves in prayer, and exclaiming "O Gem of the Lotos! O Gem of the Lotos!" To us it seems to have no meaning. But they regard Buddha, as a large majority of Christians regard Jesus; namely, as a portion of the Deity, who entered into a human body, and dwelt among men, in order to teach them the way of salvation, and by his own sufferings to expiate their sins. Therefore, when they say, "O Gem of the Lotos!" it is not unlikely they may mean, O Highest Manifestation of the Deity! or something of similar import. It would require a long explanation to make them understand what we mean by our prayer, "O Lamb of God, who takest away the sins of the world!" and after we had done our best to enable them to comprehend it, their ideas of it would probably be as vague as ours are concerning the Lotos. We all understand the significance of the Cross in our churches; but it is impossible for the most pious Protestant to conceive of the feelings it inspires in an ignorant Catholic peasant, who regards it as a wonder-working charm to drive away Evil Spirits.

For ages, different sections of the world remained strangers to each other. We are now becoming better acquainted; but, however candid we may endeavor to be, we still translate each other's religious ideas very imperfectly. Half a century ago, the name of Buddha sounded as mythical to the nations of the West as any of the genii of the Arabian Nights. Now we have learned that he was a real personage, and that there is much in his efforts and his history to remind us of Jesus, whom he preceded six hundred years. His original intention appears to have been merely to reform and amend the religion of his native Hindustan, which in the course of centuries had become overgrown with many corruptions. Like all pious Hindus, his highest aim was again to become one with God, from whose soul it was believed all human souls had originally emanated. To accomplish this mystic re-union with the Divine Being, devotees abjured all worldly pleasures, and tried to subjugate all animal instincts, by fasting, and inflicting tortures upon their bodies. They retired to the solitude of mountains and forests, where they spent their time in meditation and prayer. Buddha resorted to all these means of becoming one with God; and he added to them instruction of the common people, and benevolence toward all. In Hindustan, the entire separation of the different castes of society was very strictly enjoined and maintained. The inferior castes were not allowed to enter the temples, or to partake of food with any of the superior castes. Even if their shadows touched a holy man, he deemed it necessary to go through a process of religious purification. And none of the castes, high or low, permitted women any share in spiritual instruction. But Buddha declared that his doctrines were for all mankind. The inferior castes shared his food and worship, and he taught that the way to the highest spiritual attainments ought to be as open to women as to men. These innovations of course gave great offence to the exclusive devotees of his nation. They accused him of violating their Sacred Laws, and of degrading their religion by companionship with low people. But he excited the enthusiasm of his followers, who shared the odium he had incurred, and were finally driven from their native land by persecution. His memory was venerated, and ultimately adored. He is now believed to have been an incarnation of the Deity, by a virgin mother; to have become one with God during his pilgrimage on earth; and to have ascended into heaven without dying.

The Jews were not divided into castes among themselves. But they considered their entire nation a holy caste, to whom it was unlawful to eat, drink, or worship with foreigners. If they did so, they rendered themselves unclean before the Lord, and were required to go through a process of purification before they were allowed to worship him. Thus the brethren of Joseph had a table by themselves, "because it was not lawful for them to eat with Egyptians; and Jesus was reproached for eating with publicans and sinners. The publicans were tax-gatherers, usually Romans, and very unpopular among the Jews, because they collected the tribute-money paid to their Roman conquerors. All foreigners were called sinners; not because they were criminal or vicious, in our sense of those terms, but because in their worship and their food they sinned against the laws of Moses. That Jesus should talk with these people, and go into their houses to cure their diseases, while he sternly rebuked the hypocrisy of many Jews, who prided themselves on their piety, were of course proceedings that excited great hostility among the ruling powers. We all know how he was rejected by the chief priests and elders of his people, and how his followers, being unable to persuade many Jews to believe on him, went forth to other lands to labor as his apostles.

While they were preaching Jesus throughout the territories of Greece and Rome, it is said that eighty thousand missionaries were abroad carrying the doctrines of Buddha into various Asiatic countries. The disciples of Jesus had the great advantage of carrying his teachings into countries where Grecian Philosophy and Roman Law had already awakened a spirit of freedom and inquiry, and consequently of progress; while the followers of Buddha had the great disadvantage of carrying his teachings into Asiatic countries, where minds were kept stagnant by unquestioned despotism, and the human will was rendered inert by belief in fatalism. The effects of these diverse influences are very visible in the character of countries dominated by the two religions. But the spirit of progress does not manifest itself in Christianity, where it has habitually breathed the Asiatic atmosphere; as in the case of the Arminian and Nestorian churches. Every religion is inevitably affected by circumstances which hinder or hasten growth; for religion, though a very important element, is but one of many influences that go to form the character of individuals or nations. A plant cannot grow and blossom by sunlight alone; it needs the agency of air, earth, water, and a variety of chemical combinations. The case is analogous with human development; it is going on all the time, by aid of multifarious influences, most of them unnoticed, and some greatly overrated.

Whatever disadvantages Buddhism has had to encounter, candor compels the admission that it has been more true to its own professions than Christianity has been. It has extended very widely, and has more followers than any other religion in the world; but its progress has been uniformly peaceful. It has never offered the alternative of baptism or slaughter to conquered nations, as Christianity has done; it has never persecuted its Hindu spiritual parents, as Christianity has persecuted its spiritual parents the Jews; and it has never tried to compel a uniform profession of faith by the establishment of an Inquisition, to torture and burn non-conformists, as Christianity has done.

Unwillingness to acknowledge whatever is good in religions foreign to our own has always been a very common trait of human nature; but it seems to me neither generous nor just. Sir William Jones, an English scholar, went to Hindustan in 1783, and applied himself diligently to the study of oriental literature, then almost unknown in the nations of the West. He published some translations from the Sanscrit, which he described as a very rich and copious language, obviously more ancient than any other language known in the world. The English clergy, and other European scholars, were greatly disturbed by this announcement. They had always believed Hebrew to be the most ancient of all languages, and the mother of all religious ideas; and the possibility that any had preceded it seemed to remove the platform from under their feet. Dugald Stewart published a pamphlet in which he denied the existence of any such language as Sanscrit, and stigmatized all that had been quoted from it as forgeries of the Brahmins. Many scholars are now well versed in Sanscrit, and considerable portions of the Hindu Sacred Books have been translated from it and rendered accessible to the public. This, and kindred developments, are teaching us that mankind are more nearly akin than they have been supposed to be.

With regard to three primeval ideas there is observable similarity among all ages and nations. They have all conceived of One Supreme Being, who created and sustained all things; they all believed that man had within his body a soul, which shared the immortality of the Eternal Source of Being, whence it was derived; and a Natural Law of Justice, the basis of all other laws, early dawned upon all human minds. Ideas of how or where the Divine Being existed were vague; and so they remain unto the present day. All the people on earth, from the beginning of time, have been "feeling after God, if haply they might find him;" and still we are obliged to ask, as Job did many centuries ago, "Canst thou by searching find out God?"

The earliest and most prevalent idea seems to have been Pantheism, which means God in All Things. More explicitly defined, it means that God is the Soul of the Universe, and the universe is his form; that the smallest creature and the minutest particle of matter exist by having within them a living principle, which is a portion of the Universal Soul; that every object we see was originally an idea in the Divine Mind, and could not otherwise have come into existence: as no machine could be made without first being an idea in some human mind. This doctrine still prevails in the Hindu and Buddhist religions; and gleams of it occasionally appear in the literature of all nations. It is conspicuous in the writings of the sect called Sufis; Spinoza, the learned and devout Jew, could conceive of the existence of God in no other way; and Pope, the English poet, expresses it in the lines,—

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul."

Hebrews conceived of God as a Great King, a Mighty Ruler, who rewarded those who obeyed his commandments and brought offerings to his temple, but who took vengeance on those who disobeyed his laws; especially on those who made offerings to other gods.

Grecian and Roman philosophers deemed it irreverent to suppose that the Supreme Being could be angry; and they were offended by the descriptions of the poets, which represented deities as revelling in all human passions.

Hebrews called God a Father, but they thought of him only as the "Father of Israel;" the "Father of all who feared him." Christianity, which included both Jews and Gentiles among its converts, removed that limitation, but established a new boundary, by representing God as "the Father of all who believed in his son Jesus Christ." This idea has gradually expanded; and now there may be found many, in all religions, who think of God as the Father of the Whole Human Race, and caring for them all.

But there has never been any religion strictly and entirely monotheistic. The human soul, in its helplessness, and its longing for support and guidance, has always been striving to connect itself with the far-off Infinite by means of intermediate links in the chain of being. The ancient sages of Hindustan conceived of One Central Source of Life; but between the Universal Soul and their own souls they imagined successive gradations of Spirits, employed as agents; and they believed that a Deity had more than once come down to earth and dwelt among men, to show them the way of salvation. Hence they worship Krishna, their most beloved incarnation of Deity, and pray to him for help; while the Supreme One is merely an abstract idea, a subject of thought, in the minds of their wisest men. The same is true of the Buddhists, who believe Buddha to have been an incarnation of Deity, and to him they offer prayers and praise.

In the religion of Zoroaster, hosts of Spirits, good and evil, influence the actions of men, and contend for the mastery of the world.

The ancient Hebrews worshipped but One God; yet they supposed him to be the God of their nation only; and that other deities, of a lower order, took care of other nations. It was an almost universal custom among the ancients to bow and kiss the hand to sun, moon, and stars, in token of reverence for the powerful Spirits of those luminaries. But Moses forbade that practice to the Hebrews; giving as a reason that the Supreme God had chosen them especially, "to be unto him a people of inheritance;" and had assigned to the inferior Spirits of planets and stars the care of "all other nations under the whole heaven." Therefore, they habitually styled Jehovah "God of gods, and Lord of lords." They also recognized various degrees of angels, who are often mentioned in their Sacred Records as messengers from God to "his chosen people."

The philosophic minds of Greece and Rome attained to elevated ideas concerning a Supreme Being; but they supposed that Spirits of the Stars, and of other departments of Nature, were employed as his agents in the affairs of men.

Many of the early Christians believed in Spirits of the Stars, and other intermediate Spirits. Origen, one of the Christian Fathers, says: "We know that angels have the government of fruits and seasons, and that the production of animals is committed to them. We speak well of them, and think them happy that they are intrusted by God to manage the conveniences of human life. But we do not give them that honor which is due to Deity alone. For neither does God allow it, nor do they desire it. They equally love and care for us, whether we do or do not sacrifice to them." It was quite a common belief with the early bishops of the Christian church, that Jupiter and other deities of Greece and Rome were real existences, and very powerful; but that they were Evil Spirits, bent upon hindering the progress of Christianity. They maintained, however, that Christians could, and did, cast them out of persons and places, by making the sign of the cross, and commanding them to depart, in the name of Jesus.

At the present day, Roman Catholics, who constitute a large majority of the Christian world, address fewer prayers to the Supreme Being than to Jesus, whom they believe to have been an incarnation of Deity; and more prayers are addressed to his mother than to the son. They also invoke the aid and intercession of a multitude of departed Spirits, called Saints. Nations, cities, trades, and individuals are supposed to be under the especial protection of some Patron Saint; as St. George of England, St. Denis of France, St. Patrick of Ireland, St. James of Spain, St. Genevieve of Paris, St. Victor of Milan, St. Januarius of Naples, St. Cecilia of musicians, St. Catherine of students, St. Maurice of soldiers, St. Martha of housekeepers, &c. In all Catholic countries, the populace may be seen kneeling and praying before images of Mary and the numerous Saints.

Protestant Christians generally believe in Guardian Angels, but they offer them no prayers. A great majority of them believe that Jesus was an incarnation of the Deity; his name has peculiar power to excite their devotional feelings, and the use of it is deemed necessary to render their prayers acceptable to God.

This desire to bring the Infinite and incomprehensible One nearer to us, by means of some mediatorial being more akin to ourselves, was strongly expressed by Henry Ward Beecher, when he said: "All that there is of God to me is bound up in the name of Jesus Christ. A dim and shadowy effluence rises from Christ, and that I am taught to call the Father. A yet more tenuous and invisible film of thought arises, and that I am taught to call the Holy Spirit. Neither are to me aught tangible, restful, accessible. But Jesus Christ stands my manifest God. All that I know is of him, and in him."

The Jewish and Mohammedan religions are more nearly monotheistic than any other forms of faith; for though they believe in the subordinate agency of Gabriel, Azrael, and various other angels, they never invoke any intermediate being when they pray to God; and the idea of Deity incarnated in human flesh is shocking to their reverential feelings.

Belief in the Immortality of the Soul appears almost universally in the earliest records of human thought. Sorrow for the death of dear friends, and inexpressible longing for reunion with them, would naturally give birth to this hope; and probably it was strengthened from time to time by the phenomena of dreams, visions, and clairvoyant-trances, which have occurred more or less frequently in all ages of the world, and of which science has not as yet given any satisfactory explanation. The early prevalence of the belief is sufficiently indicated by the fact that the ancient nations, almost without exception, offered oblations and prayers to the Spirits of departed ancestors. Hindus, Chinese, Greeks, and Romans, on the anniversary of the day of decease, or when they were about to undertake any difficult or dangerous enterprise, were accustomed to place offerings on the tombs, and pray to the Spirits of their ancestors for protection and success. The very ancient Greek poet Hesiod, 900 years B. C., describing the Age of Innocence, says: "Men became divinities after they died; they were the protectors of the living, and guardians of the moral laws." Virgil describes Æneas as offering oblations and prayers at the tomb of his ancestors. Xenophon, in his history of Cyrus the Great, represents him as saying, when about to die, 529 B. C.: "If the Spirits of the dead have not power and virtue, how is it that honors continue to be paid to them?" Romans habitually invoked the blessing of ancestral Spirits; and they had an annual festival, called Parentalia, in honor of the Souls of all Ancestors.

Sacred Books usually give assurance of immortality, accompanied with descriptions, more or less vivid, of a future paradise for the good, and a place of suffering for the wicked. But the Sacred Records of the religion taught by Moses are a singular exception. He says nothing to the Hebrews concerning eternal life. The rewards promised, and the punishments threatened are all of a temporal nature. He says to the people of Israel: "Thus saith the Lord: If ye obey my commandments, I will give you rain in due season. I will bless the grass of the field, and the increase of the cattle, and the flocks of sheep. The land shall yield her increase, and the trees shall yield their fruit; and ye shall eat bread to the full. I will rid wild beasts out of the land. Ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword; and ye shall dwell in the land with safety."

"But if ye do not observe to do all his commandments and his statutes, which I command you this day, the Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust. The heavens over thy head shall be brass, and the earth under thee shall be iron. Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store. Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of sheep. The Lord shall smite thee with pestilence, with consumption and fever, with madness and blindness, and with the sword. Thou shalt be smitten by thine enemies, and flee before them."

The English Bishop Warburton explained this peculiarity of the Pentateuch, by saying that the doctrine of a future state had been taught in "heathen countries," because it was deemed necessary as a means of keeping the people in order; but that Moses, though he believed the doctrine, did not teach it, because he preferred to control the Hebrews purely by inspiration and the perfect Law.

Ideas of a future life have always been very distinct among the Hindus and Buddhists. In Buddhist countries they never say a man is dead; they say, "His soul has emigrated." Hindu and Buddhist Sacred Books give glowing descriptions of various degrees of paradise, where there are crystal rivers, delicious fruits, golden palaces, and ravishing music. These are attainable to those who deal justly and kindly, who speak the truth, and observe the prescribed ceremonials of religion; and so fascinating is the prospect that it has not unfrequently led to suicide. But those who aspire to the highest degree of sanctity expect a reward which they deem infinitely superior to any region of paradise. Their earnest aspiration is to be re-united to the Soul of the Universe, from which their own souls originally proceeded. To accomplish this, they practise benevolence and humility, renounce the duties and pleasures of this world, torture their bodies, and spend their time in fasting, meditation, and prayer. By these means, some of them are thought to have become, even in this life, one with God. They are figuratively said to be born again, and are habitually spoken of as "twice born" men. These devotees give the most fervid descriptions of the state of beatitude they experience here, and expect to enjoy through all eternity. The loss of their individual consciousness, involved in this idea of complete absorption into the Soul of the Universe, seems to have no disturbing influence; they are supremely blest in being "one with God."

Zoroaster, the prophet of the ancient Medes and Persians, promised immortality, in regions of splendor, to those who resisted Evil Spirits and obeyed the Good.

The ancient Greeks believed in immortality, but their wise men considered the subject too sacred to be talked of to the common people. Mysteries, of a very grand and solemn character, were performed in the temple at Eleusis, to exemplify the nature and destiny of the soul; but only a few, who had been prepared by severe probations, were allowed to witness them. The doctrines there taught are unknown; but something may be conjectured from fragments that have come down to us. They believed the soul lived always, but was subject to changes of form. To typify this, a butterfly emerging from its chrysalis was a common emblem on their tombs. Poets described a paradise called Elysium, where philosophers, poets, and heroes wandered among majestic groves and blooming gardens, enjoying themselves with music, chariot-races, and whatever else they had liked best on earth. None of the common people are mentioned as entering there; and it is not known what ideas the populace entertained concerning a future life. Some supposed Elysium to be in a middle zone of the air; others, on a far-off isle of the ocean. Plato evidently conceived of it as the ethereal region where the souls of men dwelt before they came into bodies in this world, and where glorious types of all earthly objects preexisted. He says: "There is a world of realities, of which all the beautiful things on this earth are mere faint reflections. Colors there have a more wonderfully pure and brilliant beauty than any we see in this world. All trees, flowers, and fruits grow there, each according to its nature. The stones are transparent, and of colors so beautiful that rubies and emeralds are but dim representations of them. Animals and men are also there; some dwell about the air, as we do about the sea; others on islands, which the air flows round. They have dwellings, and temples of the gods, where gods really dwell. And they have intercourse with the gods by voices, and oracles, and visions. They surpass us in sight, hearing, and every thing else, as much as air excels water, and ether excels air, in purity. They can see sun, moon, and stars as they really are. To affirm positively that these things are exactly as I have described would not be becoming in a man of sense. But since our souls are assuredly immortal, it seems most fitting to believe that something of this kind takes place with respect to our souls and their habitations."

After the prosperous reigns of David and Solomon, the Hebrew nation were much troubled with incompetent kings, foreign invasion, and internal discord. During these turbulent times their courage was sustained by prophets, who predicted the coming of a prince, of the line of David, who would put all their enemies under their feet, and make the chosen people of God more glorious than ever. Nebuchadnezzar conquered the Hebrews, 588 years B. C., and carried all the people captives into Babylon. The ancient nations, groaning under oppression and continual wars, all cherished hopes of a future Golden Age, when some holy man would come and govern them in righteousness and peace. These expected deliverers had various names in various countries. Hebrews called theirs the Messiah, which means the Anointed, and translated into Greek is Christos, which we call Christ. During their exile in a strange land, they naturally clung very tenaciously to this prediction. They adhered to the Law of Moses, but in process of time their new surroundings inevitably produced changes. Their language became mixed with the Chaldean, and several ideas, not previously recorded in their Sacred Writings, began to appear among them. The religion of Zoroaster, which prevailed in Chaldea, taught the resurrection of the body and a Day of Judgment, when all the world would be summoned to give an account of their actions. Perhaps these doctrines became mixed in the Hebrew mind with its previous conceptions of the advent of a conquering prince, in the venerated line of David. At all events, in later periods of their history we find the Hebrews expecting that their Messiah would come to judge the whole earth; that all dead Hebrews would have a bodily resurrection, and that all living Hebrews would be gathered with them in Jerusalem, where their Messiah would reign over them for a thousand years, with unexampled splendor, and all the people would revel in a superabundance of corn, wine, oil, and whatever else they deemed delicious.

A portion of the exiled people obtained permission from King Cyrus to return to Jerusalem, 538 B. C., and, as they were mostly of the tribe of Judah, they were thenceforth called Jews. Their leader was the prophet Ezra, whom they revered as second only to Moses; and whom some believed to be equally recipient of inspiration from God. Ezra, with the assistance of the prophet Nehemiah, established synagogues for the religious instruction of the people, and arranged a ritual of prayers and reading for the services therein. As the Laws of Moses prescribed not only the religious ceremonies but the civil laws of the Hebrews, it was of immediate necessity that those laws should be clearly arranged and explained to the people for their government. During successive wars and captivities, the Sacred Writings had become scattered, dislocated, and some of them lost. Ezra appointed a college of learned men to gather up traditions from the aged people, and to collect all the copies that could be found of their Sacred Scriptures. New ideas, and new emergencies gave rise to extended interpretations of the Law of Moses, and the adoption of various traditions, which had been handed down orally from generation to generation. This produced sects. A sect called Sadducees adhered to the original Law of Moses, but did not invest with divine authority the Commentaries upon it, and the Oral Traditions. They denied the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body. The sect called Pharisees were zealous believers in the Commentaries and Traditions, and rigidly observed all the ritual of ceremonies; in consequence of which Jesus charged them with making the Law of Moses of no effect by their traditions. When the Romans subjugated the Jews, 63 B. C., the Pharisees related the payment of tribute to Caesar, and rendered themselves very popular with the people by their abhorrence of the Romans and their glowing descriptions of the coming kingdom of the Messiah on earth, of which all Israelites were to partake except those who denied the resurrection of the body. This state of the public mind produced several claimants to the office of the Messiah, who had more or fewer followers. One of them was actually anointed and crowned, and placed himself at the head of a considerable army. These attempts at sedition were vexatious to the Roman government, and rendered them very suspicious and severe toward all who were accused of claiming to be King of the Jews.

Some of the Pharisees believed the soul died with the body, and would be raised with it at the resurrection. But the prevailing opinion was that the souls of pious Israelites went to Paradise when they died, and waited there for the summons of the Messiah. They maintained that God originally created a certain number of Hebrew souls, and that these would keep returning to the earth in new bodies as long as the world lasted. This gave rise to the idea that John the Baptist might be Elias come again; and that Jesus might be Elias, or one of the old prophets. They supposed that children were punished for the sins of parents; and also that when a soul came into a new body it suffered by diseases, or mishaps, for the wrong it had formerly done while existing in another body; hence the questions concerning the man born blind: "Did this man sin? or his parents?" It was likewise a common idea that wicked souls, by way of penance, were sometimes sent back to earth in the form of animals. But at the general resurrection all Jewish souls would be purified, and enter into the joys of the Messiah's kingdom on an earth renovated and beautified for their presence.

There was another sect, of unknown origin, which dwelt near the Dead Sea, about two hundred B. C. They were famed for skill in healing, and were called Essenes, which means physicians. They lived in communities remote from cities, and were generally farmers, or shepherds. They drank only water, and lived on bread, fruit, and vegetables. They had no women among them, and considered celibacy essential to holiness. Their truthful and direct speech was so proverbial, that the simple yea and nay of an Essene were deemed more reliable than the oaths of other men. They objected to oaths, which they said implied distrust that ought not to exist among honest men. Sadducees valued only the literal sense of the Law of Moses; Pharisees said it had a literal and a spiritual sense, both of which ought to be revered; Essenes attached no importance at all to the literal sense, but spent much time in studying the spiritual meaning. They said God created all men equal; therefore they would call no man master, and would have no servants; making it a rule to wait upon one another. When they travelled, they never took money or change of garments. When they entered any town they inquired for an Essene, and having found one they tarried with him as long as they remained in the neighborhood. Their ideas of the soul differed from those of all other Jews, and probably had a Hindu or Egyptian origin. They thought it had preexisted in some high ethereal sphere, and had been fatally attracted toward the earth, where it became imprisoned in a body. They did not believe in the resurrection of the body, but thought the soul escaped from it at death; the good to go to a delightful paradise above, the bad to deep places of suffering below. They believed God employed successive gradations of Spirits as mediators between himself and the souls of men; and that he fore-ordained every event of human life, even the very smallest. They abhorred war, and forbade the manufacture of any deadly weapon. They inculcated complete forgiveness of injuries, and expected the Messiah would come as the Prince of Peace.

Such is a very brief summary of opinions among the Jews at the time Jesus was born.

In the Christian Scriptures, there are no descriptions of heavenly abodes except in the Book of Revelation, which seems to be written in the form of allegories. Its pictures of heaven remind one of the splendid audience-chambers of oriental kings. "The Lamb of God" is described seated on a throne encircled with "rainbows like unto emeralds," and before it is "a sea of glass like unto crystal." There are spirits in white raiment and crowns of gold, some of whom wave golden censers filled with incense, "which is the prayers of the saints;" others play upon golden harps, and sing "Glory to the Lamb!" and bow down in worship before the throne continually. This Book, written after the time of Jesus, has always been a great puzzle to commentators, who have found a variety of spiritual meanings in its allegories.

Jesus gave no detailed account of heaven; he merely said, "In my Father's house are many mansions." In the New Testament, eternal life is repeatedly promised to "those who believe in Jesus Christ, and are baptized in his name." The limitation was adopted by the Christian churches; and it necessarily involved the belief that the millions of people of other religions, most of whom never heard of Jesus, must inevitably be either annihilated or damned. Henry Dodwell, who in 1688 was Professor of History in Oxford College, England, published a sermon to prove that the human soul was not immortal, until Christianity made it so by administering the rite of baptism in the name of Jesus; by which process the recipient became united with "the Divine Baptismal Spirit." And he maintained that, after the apostles, none had the power of conferring this Divine Immortalizing Spirit except regularly ordained Bishops. The belief that only the baptized can go to heaven still prevails extensively among Christians; hence, the extreme anxiety of Catholics to have a babe baptized immediately.

The Jewish belief in the millennium passed into Christianity. Jesus said: "All the tribes of the earth shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other. . . . Know that it is near, even at the doors. This generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled. . . . Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. . . . Therefore, be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of Man cometh. . . . Verily I say unto you, ye who have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel. At another time, he said: "Verily I say unto you, there be some of them who stand here, who shall not taste of death till they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." At another time, when Peter questioned him concerning John, he replied, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" And when he partook of the last supper with his disciples, he said, "I will not taste wine again until I drink it new in the kingdom of God."

The apostles seem to have interpreted these sayings literally, and to have expected the coming of the Messiah on earth during their life-time. And a tradition extended universally, that the Apostle John would surely be living on the earth when the Messiah came to establish his kingdom. That the mother of James and John had this expectation is manifest from her petition to Jesus: "Grant that my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, the other on thy left, in thy kingdom." And a similar expectation is indicated by the other ten Apostles, when they "were moved with indignation against the two brethren," for thus claiming the highest places in the coming kingdom. The same idea is implied by the question, "Wilt thou, at this time, restore the kingdom to Israel?"

Paul said to his hearers: "We shall not all sleep (that is, die); but we shall all be changed. At the sound of the last trumpet, the dead shall be raised incorruptible; and in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, we shall all be changed; for flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God. . . . The Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God. The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." And again he said: "When Christ shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." And again he says: "Of times and seasons ye have no need that I should write unto you; for yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night; therefore let us watch and be sober." John also says: "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know when he shall appear we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." And Peter says: "The day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. The earth, and the works that are thereon, shall be burnt up. But we, according to promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him without spot and blameless." The author of the Book of Revelations says: "I saw the souls of those who were beheaded for witness of Jesus, and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years; but the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished."

Gentile converts to Christianity were eager for the promised Golden Age of the world, and Jewish converts were eager for the coming of the Messiah's kingdom; therefore, it is not surprising that the doctrine of the millennium was universally adopted by the early Christian teachers. Irenaeus and Justin Martyr especially delighted in giving glowing pictures of it; and though Jesus had said his kingdom was not of this world, their imaginations of it were decidedly of an earthly character. They said: "In those days every stalk of wheat shall make ten thousand pounds of the finest flour; each shoot of grapes shall bear ten thousand bunches; and every bunch shall bear ten thousand grapes. And when any of the saints shall go to pluck a bunch, another bunch shall cry out, Take me! I am better." Some of the Christian Fathers took more spiritual views of the millennium, but they all believed it was coming. Jews believed that the kingdom of their Messiah on earth would be for Jews only. Christians believed that all Jews who rejected Jesus as their Messiah would be shut out from the blessedness of the millennium, which would be enjoyed by Christians only. During five centuries, very glowing descriptions were given of the happiness of that promised time. Meanwhile, John and Paul had died without witnessing it; but it was believed they had been taken up into Paradise, and were waiting there to appear with Christ, at his second coming.

When Christianity was sanctioned by the Roman government, and ceased to be persecuted, this doctrine gradually became less prominent. But, for the first three centuries, an Epistle bearing the name of Barnabas was read in the churches. And that Epistle declared that the world would come to an end in six thousand years from the Creation; because it had been made in six days, and a thousand years was to the Lord as one day; and that the seventh day would be a thousand years of millennial rest. From this, and from some passages in Daniel, it was calculated that the Day of Judgment would come one thousand years after the birth of Jesus. Consequently, the approach of the year 1000 was watched with great anxiety and excitement, and the business of this world was much neglected. After a while, that agitation passed away; and the doctrine of the millennium slipped more and more into the background. It has however reappeared from time to time, and has been zealously preached and believed within the present century.

Jews also continue to believe that their Messiah will come, and gather all the scattered children of Israel together in the Holy Land, and that their temple in the New Jerusalem will far surpass the magnificence of Solomon's. The more liberal among them indulge the hope that all the Gentile nations will become converted to the faith of Israel, and that the whole world will be governed by the Law of Moses.

Mohammed gave glowing pictures of the joys that awaited true believers, "if they have forsaken their sins, and prayed to God to pardon them, and have given alms freely, and bridled their anger, and forgiven men." He declared that he saw "gardens, where rivers flow; and angels were building palaces with blocks of gold and silver and rubies, cemented with the soil of Paradise, which is pure musk. In those gardens of delight the faithful shall repose on couches adorned with gold and precious stones. Youths blooming with immortal beauty shall wait upon them with whatsoever birds or fruits they may desire, and with goblets of wine, the drinking of which shall not disturb the reason, or cause their heads to ache. They shall have for companions fair damsels, resembling pearls hidden in their shells, and having large, dark eyes. They shall not hear any charge of sin, nor any vain discourse; but only the salutation, Peace! Peace!"

I know not how far enlightened Mohammedans accept these descriptions literally. But in countries more favorable to the expansion of the human mind, ideas concerning a future state have been gradually changing from age to age. Visions of heaven in the semblance of gorgeous Asiatic palaces gave place to thoughts of it as a temple, where perpetual worship was performed by prostrations, and waving of censers, and singing of psalms. These pictures had peculiar attractions in the Middle Ages, when men were in continual danger, and churches and convents seemed the only places of rest and peace. In these latter years homes have become safer, and have been rendered more agreeable and interesting by an increasing recognition of women as the friends and equal companions of men; and as human beings long to find in another world what seems to them the most desirable lot on earth, there has been an increasing tendency to think of heaven as a home, where we shall rejoin the loved ones who have gone before us, and where we may exercise tender guardianship over the friends who remain in this world.

Emanuel Swedenborg says (as Plato did, though in different terms) that every object on this earth exists also in the spiritual world, only far more glorious in beauty. He describes gardens, and dwellings, and flowers, and fruits; and he says departed little ones are very happy with their angel teachers, "who, when they were in this world, were women full of maternal tenderness." And though the believers in his doctrines are not numerous, his writings have undoubtedly had great influence in modifying old ideas, and rendering heaven more home-like. Modern Spiritualism has also done much to produce a feeling of familiarity with the other world; a familiarity so tangible and earthly, as to be repulsive to many reverential minds. But it performs an important part in helping to banish the grim skeleton armed with a dart, and to introduce death as an angel leading us home.

Hindu and Buddhist Sacred Books describe places of future suffering as vivid as are their pictures of various degrees of Paradise. There are fourteen of these wretched abodes, each of the lower gradations being more dreadful than those above it. In these places human souls suffer according to the degrees of their wickedness on earth. Some are immersed in nauseous mud, some are continually stung by serpents, some are embraced by red-hot iron, and some are thrown into the lowest pit filled with burning charcoal. Some, who have not been bad enough to need such torments, transmigrate into the forms of various animals, more or less vile or ferocious, according to the character of the deceased. But all these states of degradation, or suffering, are probations intended for the purification of souls. The door of hope is not closed even for those in the lowest pit. When they have become sufficiently purified by suffering, they may gradually ascend and return to earth,—sometimes as animals, but finally as men,—with a renewed chance to attain to Paradise, or to beatific absorption into the Universal Soul.

Zoroaster taught that the souls of the wicked, for terms of time, would pass through sufferings by water and fire; but he also left the door of hope open for all. In the Zendavesta it is said: "If a man neglects to combat evil within himself, he has reason to fear that evil spirits will seize him and carry him where he will be punished according to his sins; not to satisfy the vengeance of Deity, but because, having connected himself with evil, this is the only way for him to become purified therefrom, so as to be capable of enjoying happiness at a future period."

The ancient Greeks and Romans believed in a subterranean abode which they called Hades, or Tartarus, where the wicked were chained and scourged, and gnawed by hungry wolves, and tormented with thirst in sight of water they could not reach. Some souls wandered for a while in forests; not being good enough to enter Elysium, or bad enough to be consigned to Tartarus. Some were cleansed of their sins by being submerged in deep waters, or passing through intense fires. After going through probations painful according to the degrees of their guilt, they finally attained to Elysium, which means Rest. At the end of a thousand years, all would return to the earth again, with liberty to live such a life as they chose. Those who returned three times into bodies on earth, and each time lived wisely and virtuously, ascended into the "world of realities," there to dwell for ever with the immortal gods.

The Christian Scriptures speak of no gradations of reward or punishment; and the common belief among Christians is that the human race is divided into two classes,—saints and sinners; the former of whom all go to heaven, and the latter all go to hell. In both cases, the condition is represented to be of eternal duration. Jesus speaks of the wicked as "cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched; where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched." When their deeds are brought unto judgment, he says, they will hear the terrible words, "Depart from me into everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels." In the Book of Revelation it is declared: "If any man worship the beast or his image, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone, in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torments ascendeth up for ever and ever; and they have no rest, day or night." For many centuries, the preaching of Christians was lurid with the fires of this pit, and it still continues to be so to a considerable extent. Travellers in Catholic countries continually meet by the road-side pictures of devils, with pitchforks, hurling human souls into blazing fires. But Catholics agree with the Hindus and Buddhists in their belief in an intermediate state, between heaven and hell, where the wicked are punished for their sins for a term of time proportioned to their guilt, and which may be shortened by the prayers and offerings of surviving friends,—the merit of whose righteousness is imputed to the souls they pray for. The majority of Christians probably retain an abstract belief in the eternal torment of the wicked by fire; but it has become far less prominent in their preaching. Some sects never allude to it at all. Others give allegorical interpretation to the texts that assert it, and thus arrive at the conclusion that all souls become purified by a limited probation of fire, and finally attain to happiness; or that they suffer only from the stings of their own remorse, and the scorching of their own recollections.

Mohammed declares that souls, when they leave the body, are obliged to pass over a bridge, "fine as the thread of a famished spider," and sharp as the edge of a scimitar. Beneath this bridge the flames of hell are roaring; on the other side lies Paradise. Some, who are not quite good enough to enter Paradise immediately, remain in a partitioned place, till by acts of adoration they have atoned for the evil they have done, or for the acts of worship they have omitted. Pious believers are conveyed over the bridge like a flash of lightning. Some pass over it slowly and with difficulty; and some slip off into hell, where devils tear them with red-hot pincers and pour fire down their throats. There are seven hells. Sinful Mohammedans are in the upper one, and hypocrites of all religions are in the lowest abyss. But though Mohammedans may have to suffer for their sins hundreds or thousands of years, according to their degrees of guilt, they will all attain to Paradise at last, because they believed the true faith, and because Mohammed continually intercedes with God for them.

Mohammedans are divided into many sects, and though all believe the Koran to be an inspired book, they interpret it in various ways. Thus some say the thread-like bridge over hell into Paradise merely means the narrow and difficult path to holiness. Hindu and Buddhist ideas have become mixed with Mohammedanism, as they were with primitive Christianity. There is quite a numerous sect, mostly in Persia and India, called Sufis, who tend greatly to asceticism and monastic seclusion; and who, by prayer and meditation, seek to become one with the Universal Soul. Devotees among them, who think they have attained to complete self-renunciation, sometimes say, "I am the Truth," "I am one with God." In this state of complete regeneration, they think, Sacred Books can be dispensed with; and heaven and hell signify to them good and evil states of mind.

The present century is remarkable for a lively interest in past ages. In the material world, men are laboriously exhuming buried cities and cemeteries. Embedded in masses of sand and clay they find gems and gold, which human thought and imagination have wrought into forms of grotesque or graceful beauty. Another class of men are exploring the ancient mind, in such vestiges of it as can be found in written records of the past. Encumbered with much spiritual sand and clay these diggers find mental gems, reflecting the light of heaven in varied hues, and forms of thought and feeling which, whether they are clumsy, fantastic, or graceful, are fashioned from the precious gold which man received from his Creator.

Of late years, several learned books have been written on the subject of ancient religions. . . . I have had but one object, and that a very simple one; namely, to show that the fundamental laws of morality, and the religious aspirations of mankind, have been strikingly similar always and everywhere. Indeed, when we examine them, they appear so much alike, that, at the first glance, the human race seem to have been continually moving round in the same circle. But though progress has been circular, it has not been on the same plane. The circles ascend perpetually; the ladder we climb is spiral; every thing that is evolved out of what has been. We cannot understand why good and evil, false and true, have been perpetually manifested in the mind of

[CONCLUDED ON PAGE 380.]

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUG. 3.

Chas. W. Buck, $3.40; James Welch, $1; Doerringer & Co., $2; C. H. Phillips, $1.20; Mrs. C. Neymann, $2; W. E. Darwin, $3.50; Joseph Horton, $3.20; Dr. W. O. Gouinlock, 75 cents; O. A. Farwell, $3.20; George Cary, $1.20; John Hendrie, $3; A. W. Kelsey, $4; Chas. Haskell, $3.20; Mrs. Beebe Booth, $3.20; Henry Field, $3.20.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 8, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. O'BRYEN, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH OAKES SMITH, J. L. STODDARD, ELIUR WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SUEUR, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Until September 1, the editorial charge of THE INDEX will be wholly in the hands of Mr. A. W. Stevens, who has kindly consented to relieve me of all literary responsibility for it during the present month. F. E. ABBOT.

Boston, Aug. 1.

F. E. A. REPORT.

The Eleventh Annual Report of the Free Religious Association, printed in pamphlet form, is now ready for distribution. It contains the reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer; essay by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of New York, on "The Religion of Humanity, and How it may be Organized"; essay by Rev. W. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism, and How it is being Disorganized"; and addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George W. Curtis, Anna C. Garlin, Maurice Ellinger, and Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith (the latter including a poem).

Members of the Association who have paid the annual fee of $1.00 within the last twelve months will receive the report free, in all cases where their post-office addresses are known. To others the price is forty cents single copy; four or more in one package, twenty-five cents each.

Address "Free Religious Association," 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

WOULD you have freedom in thought and in life? Then study the laws of thought and of life, and grow into harmony with these,—when you shall have the freedom of Nature and of God.

AN ENGLISH barrister, named Pike, has recently written a history of crime in England from Saxon to Victorian times; the moral of which is that, with the progress of civilization, the number of criminals in Great Britain has steadily diminished. In commenting on this book, the New York World says: "If any competent person will undertake a history of crime in New York City, he will find, we think, that even in this vast reservoir of vice, greed, and passion the ratio of crime to population has of late years steadily decreased. Especially will this appear if he examines the statistics of the higher felonies." If the statement of the World be true, it may go some way to relieve the fears begotten by the social problems of such great cities as London, Paris, and New York, which bring the great strain upon our modern civilization.

IN SOME parts of the West, "laborers" have combined to prevent the use among farmers of a new reaping machine, which very successfully reaps and binds at the same time,—thus saving the employment, to a considerable extent, of manual labor. These "laborers" have threatened the new owners of these machines, that, in the event of their being used, they (the "laborers") will burn or otherwise demolish machine, grain, barn, etc. What madness and what folly! By all such means "laborers" are only helping to bring their cause into obnoxiousness, and themselves into deeper trouble. The right of any man to choose between the employment of a machine or of another man does not lie under the least shadow of a doubt; and any "cause" or champions of a cause who undertake to obstruct this right will be swept away before a righteous public wrath.

THE LITERARY correspondent of the Springfield Republican, in commenting on some recent American novels, says: "What is yet lacking in most of our American novelists is a serious conception, either through the reason or the imagination, of what human life and its possibilities are." To our mind this is a very just and needed criticism; yet it applies not only to novelists, but to most of the popular writers of our day. It would seem that we in this country, of all peoples in the world, ought to be impressed as to what human life and its possibilities are. In our very short national existence, we have had extraordinary trials and extraordinary triumphs; and, as a people, have again and again touched the depths of life's pathos, and risen to the heights of its glory. No educated and thoughtful man can have lived the period of one generation in America, without having been brought seriously to consider, not only in their speculative but in their practical bearings as well, the most momentous questions underlying social welfare and affecting human destiny. How then can any such man, when he takes up his pen to write for the American people, hold himself back from making an honest and earnest effort to inspire no less than to amuse them? How can he write merely of what is light and transitory, and neglect that which is capable of rousing the noblest thought and the sweetest sentiment? We fear it is because our novelists, our poets, our essayists, and even our sermonizers, write chiefly for pay and for praise; not to lead men up to higher plains of intellectual and spiritual life. Such writers might better let their pens rust in idleness, and weed carrot-beds for a living, than that the finest quality of their heart and brain should trickle out into paltry fun and sickening sentimentalism. The great American novel has not been written; and we may not expect it, until that man—or that woman—appears who is born out of the full consciousness of what America signifies, and whose nature, like our continent, includes all temperatures of feeling and all zones of faith.

WE TRUST that the habitual readers of THE INDEX will not suffer absolute syncope if, during the brief absence of their vallant and admired editor, they hear very little about the Liberal League and its cognate enterprises in these columns. We are quite sure that it is from no unworthy disposition towards that excellent institution, that we propose to give it a month's vacation from these editorial pages with its distinguished founder. The reason is that we have nothing to say about it. Circumstances have led us to be interested in other things, and will now lead us to report of other things. For the past three years we have lived in a world far different from that where political enginery may be formed for the civil or religious emancipation of a people; far different from that where controversy rages, discussion excites, and party or public interests clamor at the ear. We have been living in a world of private life, where so few Americans can content themselves to live. We have been following purely private vocations, which have led us to associate with private citizens having no public aims; which have led us among books and authors, among men and women of calm thought and sweet philosophy; which have led us into that great, rich, boundless world of literature, where the best things woo us for their own sake,—not that we may build up cheap reputations upon them, or ravish them away from their beautiful retreats into public arenas where they become pearls before swine. In this private life we have had time to remember that God has some business of his own, which he has promised to look after; and that ours is not to get in his way if we can help it. From this private life we are very glad to emerge just far enough, for a brief time, to take the hands of THE INDEX readers once more and talk to them a little about the things that are of most interest to us, and report of others that have a real human interest independent of class or party. This new symposium can only be for four weeks; so that if they don't like it, they may be comforted in knowing that it won't last long.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

This man is the grand solitary figure in American society to-day. His genius among Americans is sublimis; his character, something unique. He came in with the nineteenth century, and is a genuine son of New England pedigree; but he is, notwithstanding, the purest piece of Orientalism that ever grew in the West. His wisdom is not unmodern; that is, it is not lacking in certain modern qualities of shrewdness, knowingness, and practicality; and yet the word modern does not describe it. His is the wisdom of the ancients,—subtle, discerning, intuitive, spiritual. He has an eye for the fact, and knows its temporal value; but he has a clearer, deeper eye for the fact's eternal significance, and cares less to report the fact than to set forth its transcendent meaning. He has been called by the popular tongue a "sage" and a "philosopher;" he is both, and more,—he is a mystic, and a seer.

Mr. Emerson's countrymen generally have not understood him; but he has understood them,—no man better. No American thinker or writer has taken so accurate a parallax of the true character of America and Americans as Mr. Emerson. He has caught in the camera of his swift intuition all their features, bad and good; and has given them the grand setting of his prophetic and optimistic genius. No American has ever believed more heartily in America than Mr. Emerson,—in her opportunity, her power, her destiny. And yet he has signaled himself among Americans by all his life studiously turning his back on what they most admire,—namely, riches and applause. His genius has been ever chaste and coy,—it could not bear publicity; nor was it capable, in its pure simplicity and sturdy self-respectingness, of depending upon the appliances of wealth. A public man, in no modern sense of the word, has Mr. Emerson ever been; and this, considering that no man ever held his talents more serviceable to his fellow-men than he, is something remarkable. No convention, no platform—arenas so fascinating to the average American man and woman—has been able to detain him beyond the brief time required for the delivery of his conscientious and weighty message. Even clubs of semi-private character have found it difficult to get possession of this shy thinker, especially if he had reason to suppose that a reporter lurked in the vicinity. Unlike most of his countrymen, he has never been in love with the sound of his own voice. Slow to open speech, and quick to recover it, has been his wont. Only as the mouthpiece of the Spirit has he desired to be heard; and then speedily to hush, and let the Truth make its own impression. All this has come of the ingrained modesty and moderation of his soul. Embosomed in the green hills of Concord, sitting beside his beloved Indian stream, far from the city's clamor and contention, its fascination and its sycophancy, this grand man has nursed his mighty heart,—not for himself, but for his brothers the world over; not for selfish culture, but that he might have a single eye for the Truth, and an equilibrated soul to report it without fear or favor. "Good-by" to the world he said, more than forty years ago, when he went to seek "a spot sacred to thought and God;" but that world he never forgot and never ceased to love; and from time to time, out of his calm solitude, he has sent to it or brought to it the wisest, most spherical words that any American has spoken.

Of course, Mr. Emerson has never been a "reformer," in the ordinary acceptance of that word. And this because he has never been content to have but one virtue, or one sympathy. He has always loved the oppressed of every color and nationality; but he has never hated the oppressor. He has always had justice for the wronged; but he has never meant injustice to the wronger. He saw that those who would renovate,—they needed renovation as much as anybody. He saw that those who sought to widen the bounds of liberty,—they too were enslaved in their own prejudices and fears, no less than others. He refused to be committed in favor of any one class, as against the whole. Slave and slaveholder, laborer and capitalist, poor and rich, weak and strong,—he saw that no one was without sin, no one without virtue: the word which he might say, should be a word to quicken, lift, emancipate, all. And yet, if it must come to particulars, there was never an anti-slavery tract or labor-reform pamphlet written one-half so trenchant or wholesome, as Mr. Emerson's "Ode," sung in the Town Hall, Concord, July 4, 1867, and his "Boston Hymn," read in Music Hall, Jan. 1, 1863. The fact is, Mr. Emerson is too large a man to be a come-outer. Like the old Roman Terence, nothing human is foreign to him. He can't get outside, because he includes everything. His method is not one of attack and aggression, but of flanking and circumvention. He draws a circle round his opponent, and captures his partial position with a completer statement. Does any man think to be a radical?—this man is more radical than he! Would any man be a safe conservative?—this man's wiser conservatism swallows up his! Not a reformer, but a former; not a regenerator, but a generator; not a savior, but an inspirer,—this has Mr. Emerson been to America; and this he will continue to be long after his soul has climbed the stars!

Mr. Emerson is the grandest fatalist that has breathed the air of our modern civilization. Jonathan Edwards never believed more unshakenly in the decrees of God than Mr. Emerson believes in the inviolableness of the spiritual laws of the universe. But there is not a particle of mental or moral paralysis in his fatalism; it does not overlook the finite will as a necessary part of the will of the Infinite. It comes as a strong breeze out of the eternities, sweeping us out of our puppyish conceits, our owlish egotism, our asinine willfulness; showing us that we are not the arbiters of our own or the world's destinies, but that they all are welded fast to the palm of God's hand; showing us that we are masters nowhere in earth or heaven, except as we ride on the strong backs of Perpetual Forces. Mr. Emerson's faith in the Integrity of the Old Universe makes the ordinary faith of the Church in its Heavenly Father seem pale and feeble. It is no faith in a special Providence that walks into the widow's cottage and says, "I heard you pray to me for some bread; here it is." It is faith in a Universal Might and Beneficence which perhaps would let that widow starve, and her six children beside her, while the procession of its divine purposes marched on, heaving up the world masses and every particle of mind and matter towards a perfect outcome. It is a faith which makes us feel safe any where, any how; which makes life and death the two feet on which all things move forward; which makes good and evil friendly forces in the arena of eternity. It is a fatalism which is optimism; which keeps us from despair and wrath and disgust; which makes us believe in the Good, and in nothing but the Good, and in the Power of that for evermore. Some poor benighted church-people have called Mr. Emerson a sceptic. We had almost said that he is the only real believer in America!

Only one thing more may we say, in weaving this modest chaplet to lay at the feet of so great a man. Mr. Emerson is the noblest prophet of Ethics which this country has ever listened to. He has lifted the word moral high above all the church steeples, and made it shine like a pure star in every earnest soul's ideal. His life-long friend, Henry James, once said to us: "Emerson and I have for years been kicking one another's shins over that word moral." Mr. James has never liked the word, considering it damaged goods left in the vacant shop of the old theology: he prefers the word spiritual. But the ethics which Mr. Emerson preaches is not based on cowardice or fear; his morality is not one that feels a yoke or a cross, and groans out a pusillanimous or sullen obedience. Far from it. It is a morality that comes just as natural and easy as breathing, because it is in conscious harmony with the law of life. It is a morality that dares every thing and can be overcome with nothing; which is on good terms with the world, and yet defies it; which can carry off any needful experience, and does not spill its ammunition wagon all along the roadside of life. It is a morality which looks Fate cheerfully in the eye, and says: "Come on, old friend! I know you. You will find me ready for any emergency!" It is a morality that does not walk more than it soars; it builds altars to the Beautiful Necessity, and worships while it serves. Those who are moral with the morality that this man preaches, they need not any other religion.

We believe that Ralph Waldo Emerson is the greatest legacy that God has yet bestowed on America, and that this will become more and more patent as our generations pass. The ten small volumes that he has given to the world in the course of his fifty years of working life, with the one or two more that he may give before he is summoned away, or his friends after he is gone,—these will constitute an American literature by themselves; one to which aspiring and thoughtful youth, and earnest mature men and women, will for ever go to slake their thirst for inspiring wisdom. For as Mr. Emerson once said of Goethe, so we may now say of him: "The Old Genius that builded the world confided himself more to this man than to any other."

"IS IT TRUE?"

Not entirely satisfied with the comments of the editor of THE INDEX, under the above caption, in the issue of July 26, on the editorial article copied from the Christian Statesman, I wish to present a few thoughts on the same subject.

There is, in my opinion, as little "selfishness and hatred," and as much of the "spirit of generosity and self-sacrifice," among Liberals as among Orthodox Christians. And is it not rather inconsistent, to use the mildest language, for a Christian journal devoted to a movement which aims, in opposition to the tolerant and liberal tendencies of the age, to deprive of their rights all who cannot accept its particular faith to claim for the adherents of that faith preëminence in unselfishness and generosity?

That Liberals are not, as such, organized like the Orthodox Christians is due to quite other reasons than lack of generosity or unselfishness on the part of the former. Some of these reasons are rather creditable than discreditable to Liberals. If they attached more importance to religious belief than to character; if they taught that the eternal interests of men depend upon the acceptance of their views; if they presented them to the world in the form of a creed, and made the rejection thereof a crime; if they punished unbelievers by social ostracism and civil disabilities in this world, and threatened them with eternal torture after death,—then no doubt they would to-day, like Orthodox Christians, have numerous organizations and a rigid discipline. With their diversity of belief, they would too, quite likely, be divided into sects, always wrangling with one another, perhaps, except in the presence of a common danger,—when, like the sects of to-day, confronted by Liberalism, they would probably be willing to subordinate their differences in a common defence. Christians claim great credit for the number of their Christian organizations; but instead of proving their superiority, this, to my mind, indicates a narrowness, a sectarianism and exclusiveness, which true Liberals have outgrown.

Is it any proof of lack of generosity or of interest in our views that we do not organize Materialistic societies, excluding all who cannot accept the philosophy of Materialism; or Theistic societies, denying membership to Atheists; or Spiritualistic Associations, rejecting all applicants who do not believe in the existence of, or communion with, spirits? It is neither desirable nor possible for Liberals in this age successfully to organize themselves into societies for the advancement of their scientific, philosophic, or religious views. This is evident. If the different schools of thought should organize separately, they would make so many more sects, and do more to diminish that breadth and catholicity of thought which are the distinguishing features of true Liberalism than to promote the special views which they were organized to advance. If all the classes of Liberals should unite in one organization for the advancement of Liberalism, it is unquestionable that the existing diversity of thought and belief among Liberals would make the undertaking a failure from the start. Materialists will not work for the advancement of Spiritualism; nor will Spiritualists advocate Materialism. Theists will not help propagate Atheism, nor will Atheists help strengthen Theism. The only basis on which it is possible for Liberals as such to unite is that of the Free Congregational Society of Florence, or the Free Religious Association, which encourages the study and discussion of all systems of thought, but pledges itself to the defence of none; while the members, from the platform of the society or elsewhere, are at liberty to advocate their individual views in their own way. That Liberals generally have not organized on this broad basis is very true. Neither have Christians, with all their centuries of experience in organization, generally been able to unite on a basis admitting to membership all classes of Christians.

An organization on the basis of the Liberal League is, I believe, very desirable, and the movement has had my sympathy from its inception. The work at which it aims is not the advancement of any particular beliefs on the subject of religion, but the securing to all, of every belief and of no belief, entire religious liberty. Its platform is so broad that nobody is barred from membership by reason of religion, sex, color, or "previous condition of servitude." While it is, in my opinion, deeply to be regretted that so few Liberals comparatively have joined this organization, to say that the reason of this is to be found in a lack of unselfishness and generosity among Liberals is to take a very narrow and false view of the subject.

If the editor of the Christian Statesman had referred to the fact that Christians as a class have no sympathy with the principles and objects of the Liberal League, as an illustration that there is no necessary connection between their faith and a respect for equal rights and religious liberty, he would have told the truth.

There are many Liberals who sincerely believe that the changes which the Liberal League would effect will, with the decay of the Christian theology and the advancement of intelligence and liberality, come as fast as the people can adjust themselves to them, without any organized effort whatever. This, indeed, is the view of a large proportion of our educated Liberals. We may dissent from it, but cannot fairly ascribe it to any lack of generosity on the part of those who entertain it and act accordingly.

There are again many who believe that State secularization can be hastened somewhat by wise efforts, but do not think that its success depends upon the Liberal League, and do not, therefore, feel the same interest in that organization as Mr. Abbot and some others do. If their attention is directed more to other movements, it does not follow that selfishness is the cause. Many who are favorably disposed toward the movement yet think there are other reforms of equal importance, and to which their support can be given with as great if not greater usefulness; and as they find in the communities in which they live others with whom they can coöperate in the reforms referred to, it is but natural that they should give to them greater attention than they bestow on a movement which is as yet perhaps hardly known to their neighbors. This may be unwise, but it is no evidence of selfishness. And then there are many who are anxious to help the Liberal League, but public opinion where they live is so intolerant that identification with the movement involves injury to business and sacrifice of social standing. If a man lives in a bigoted community, and is dependent on the patronage of the public, or has sons and daughters whose social position and advancement he regards with fatherly solicitude,—it requires something more than generosity to make that man put himself in opposition to public opinion. If we censure him who out of regard for the family he loves fails to work for a just but hated cause, what shall be said of those whose bigotry and intolerance are the occasion of this man's silence and inaction! Christianity in many places is powerful and strong, and it encourages men holding unpopular views to be disloyal to themselves, by offering a premium on hypocrisy. There are some who, seeing the proscriptive and persecuting spirit of Christianity invariably exhibited wherever it has the power, believe they can do but little in the way of State secularization except by destroying confidence in the system that is the cause of inequality and injustice. Hence their efforts are chiefly directed in opposition to the Christian theology.

These are some of the reasons why the Liberal League has not commanded more attention or awakened more interest: they do not imply selfishness on the part of Liberals. There are other reasons, which I will not attempt to offer now. But I may remark that the Liberal League is a recent organization, and that the working machinery of organizations for great and radical reforms is perfected slowly, and only after many failures and mistakes. This movement appeals to men's intelligence, to their sense of justice, to their honor. When Christians organize societies outside of the Church—like the Young Men's Christian Association—they bring into regulation all those dogmas whose narrowing tendencies and proscriptive character keep the churches exclusive, sectarian organizations. The Liberal League makes no appeals to the weaknesses or superstitions of men; and if it loses on that account, in competition with Christian societies, in getting support, it is exempt from the charge of fostering and perpetuating the childish beliefs of the past.

But even the so-called National Reform Party (which dates farther back than the Liberal League) has not proved a great success as an organization, for the reason evidently that the liberal tendencies of the age are against its aims and objects. Its meetings are not largely attended; the press, which is a good index of popular feeling, has generally viewed the movement without favor; and it has not yet commanded anything like general attention in spite of the long list of officers it publishes, and the show it makes on paper. Some scheming has been done by individual members, and some influence exerted; but nothing has been accomplished to justify the boastfulness of the editor of the Christian Statesman, either in the capacity for organization that its leaders have exhibited, or in the interest they have been able to awaken in the work against justice and a generous regard for the rights of their fellow-men. On the other hand, the number and strength of the Liberal Leagues give no adequate idea of the public sentiment in favor of State secularization, which is wide-spread, and increasing rapidly East and West.

I grant that Liberals are doing much less than they ought to do, and I for one care not how often or pointedly they are reminded of their short-comings by Christians. But when the failure of the Liberal League to achieve more than it has thus far been able to accomplish is ascribed to the "selfishness and hatred" of Freethinkers, and a "quarrel" between two Liberal journals on a certain matter is made use of as an illustration of the disposition of Liberals, I feel like resenting the imputation as most ungenerous and unjust. Liberals are not perfect, but they are quite as much devoted to every good work as Christians. They make as many sacrifices. Were they not prominent and active in the anti-slavery cause? Have they not done their part in the temperance reform? Do they not everywhere encourage and support education? Have they not fought in the struggles for liberty? Have they not been conspicuous in works of benevolence? True, they have not combined into sects; but they have, consistently with their unsectarian and catholic views, cooperated with all parties, classes, and sects, in every noble work. Wherever there has been a demand for generosity, for sacrifice, for courage, Liberals have been found, in proportion to their numbers, quite as active and efficient as Orthodox Christians.

B. F. U.

[CONCLUDED FROM PAGE 377.]

man; nor why gentleness and ferocity, beauty and ugliness, nourishment and poison, creation and destruction, have been productions of the material world through all its manifold evolutions. But when we measure by centuries, we see that the mind of man and the outward world have both been gradually though slowly improving. Whosoever makes diligent use of life, and strives to follow the light of reason and conscience, helps on the progress of the world by his own individual growth. . . .

The more closely and candidly we look into these things, the more fully shall we realize that human aspirations and human weaknesses have a common root, and that the growth from it is similar; making due allowance for difference of soil, climate, tillage, and numerous inter-graftings.

To "scorn any thing which a nation's heart has held for ages holy," is surely neither wise nor kind. All we poor mortals are groping our way through paths that are dim with shadows; and we are all striving, with steps more or less stumbling, to follow some guiding star. As we travel on, beloved companions of our pilgrimage vanish from our sight, we know not whither; and our bereaved hearts utter cries of supplication for more light. We know not where Hermes Trismegistus lived, or who he was; but his voice sounds plaintively human, coming up from the depths of the ages, calling out, "Thou art God! and thy man crieth these things unto thee." Being thus closely allied in our sorrows and our limitations, in our aspirations and our hopes, surely we ought not to be separated in our sympathies. However various the names by which we call the Heavenly Father, if they are set to music by brotherly love, they can all be sung together in harmony.

If Christianity had been true to its professions, the whole world would have been attracted by it, as bees are by sweet flowers. But the mournful truth is that its practice has been the reverse of its theories. It does great harm to the souls of men to make noble professions which they do not manifest in actions; and as the tallest mountain casts the deepest shadow in the water, so the higher the assumed standard the lower is the state of morals produced by a practical disregard of it. It will require many generations for Americans to recover from the demoralizing effects of reading the Declaration of Independence, year after year, with loud vauntings and ringing of bells, while they held millions of the people in abject slavery. And a similar effect is produced by repeating every Christmas day the angels' song of "peace on earth and good-will to men," while we cheat in trade, and break treaties with weaker tribes, and exterminate Seminole Indians because they refuse to give up their wives and children to become slaves, and massacre friendly Mexican neighbors because we covet their land, and fill our pockets with money by selling a deadly article that "steals away the brains of men."

We are no worse than other Christian nations. Yet they all marvel that the whole world does not bow down with reverence before Christianity! They forget that people of other religions make acquaintance with theirs principally through the medium of grasping traders and sensual sailors; neither of whom are favorable exemplifications of the Golden Rule, or the Sermon on the Mount.

It is a melancholy fact that some earnest souls, educated in other forms of faith, have been attracted by our theories only to be repelled by our practices. That pure and enlightened Hindu, Rammohun Roy, became in love with the teachings of Jesus. He went to England, expecting to find there a Christian community, living together like a band of brothers. He found haughtiness in one class, servility in another; super-abounding wealth on one side, rags and starvation on the other; stately cathedrals and pompous ritual, and the worship of God made a matter of bargain and sale. And he whose sensitive, truth-seeking soul had been pained by missionaries calling him

"a heathen," died sad and disheartened because he could not find his ideal of a Christian.

And in our own midst there are many to whom pious professions become a subject of hating, by reason of the worldliness with which they are accompanied. Such hating is not, in many cases, caused by want of reverence for what is good, but simply by a hatred of shams. Let us respect sincerity, wherever we find it; and let us cease from judging people harshly because they cannot believe what seems to us to be true. Belief is not in our own power. Natural organization, education, surrounding circumstances, and the various experiences of life gradually change our views, without our willing it, or even being conscious of it. I presume no reflecting person could say that the state of his mind, on any subject of mere opinion, remained the same at sixty years of age as it was when he was twenty years old. And these inevitable changes come to different individuals in diverse forms.

With a large majority of people, the love of approbation and the force of habit are so strong, that they prefer peace to progress. They go on using customary phrases and forms, without thinking much about what their significance or influence may be; and all whose mental organization leads them to question their import, they brand as infidels. But there are different kinds of infidels, as there are different kinds of Christians. Some Christians join the church, partake of ordinances, and repeat prayers, merely because custom has rendered it respectable; others find real support and consolation in such observances. Some are infidels because they find religion an uncomfortable restraint; others are infidels not from want of principle, but from having so much principle that they will not, by conforming to established usages, appear to believe what increasing knowledge has compelled them to doubt. The word sceptic, in its Greek origin, simply signified one who looks about him carefully; and this describes a large class of active minds at the present period. They reverence truth, and in their diligent search for it they are carefully shading their eyes from cross-lights, that they may see things as they are.

Two classes of minds always have existed, and always must exist, because they are as necessary to preserve equilibrium in the world of Mind, as are the centripetal and centrifugal forces in the world of Matter. In ancient times Jesus said, "The Jews ask for a sign, and the Greeks seek wisdom;" and this distinction exists quite as strongly in the mental organizations of people in modern times. Some have no power to stand alone; they seek some changeless authority to lean upon; they cannot feel sure that truth is truth, unless it is endorsed by some miraculous interposition of super-human power. Another class of minds perceive that truth is its own best evidence; they are unable to believe that any authority can possibly be unchangeable, and suited to all times and conditions; they regard all seeming miracles as the effects of universal laws, not understood; and they have a settled conviction that any departure from the established laws of creation, to accomplish temporary purposes, would inevitably resolve the universe into chaos. Of course, these two classes of minds cannot delight in each other's society; but it is time they should learn to have patience with each other, and to set up for one another no other standard of goodness than moral rectitude and perfect sincerity of speech and action. In the absence of this, the only just criterion, many good men in all ages have been deemed irreligious, merely because their souls had outgrown the mould society had prepared for them. It was so with Socrates; it was so with Jesus; it was so with Luther. The learned German Spinoza was a conspicuous instance of this injustice. He was pre-eminently pure and good, and so devout that he reverently recognized the presence of God in every leaf and insect; but because his mind was so constituted that he could not think of the Infinite One as a person, his own people, the Jews, united with the Christians in denouncing him as an atheist.

But as men become more familiar with each other by means of travel, emigration, free institutions, general diffusion of literature, and mutual translation of each other's languages, the more they will become convinced that all men are brethren; that God is the Father of them all, and that he has not neglected any of his children. The fire which sends steam-chariots whirling through the world is a mighty agent to melt away the barriers of race and creed.

The more we know of history, the more does it seem likely that Hindustan, or Central India, was the cradle of civilization. Fragments of their ancient language, called the Sanscrit, are found inlaid in languages formerly deemed the most ancient in the world; and it is surprising how many of our theological opinions, customs, manufactures, and even games can be traced back to that source. And now again India is leading the way in the great movement destined to eventuate in a Church of the World. There is an association existing among them called Brahmo Somaj, which simply means "Worshippers of God." They accept the best teaching of all religions, and try to embody it in just, pure, temperate, benevolent, and religious lives. Again day dawns in the East!

Milan cathedral, lifting its thousand snow-white images of saints into the clear blue of heaven, is typical of that Eclectic Church of the Future which shall gather forms of holy aspirations from all ages and nations, and set them on high in their immortal beauty, with the broad sunlight of heaven to glorify them all.

JOSE BILLINGS is not a classical author, yet thousands, probably, when seeking the indulgence of a midsummer festa, have had occasion to repeat, "uttered or unexpressed," his immortal apothegm, "Darn a fil."—Boston Advertiser.

Communications.

LECTURES.

LINCOLN, Neb., July 23, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I expect to be present at the Watkins Convention, and after it is over I propose spending a month or two in New York and New England, during which time I should be pleased to address Liberal Leagues and other Liberal Societies. I should esteem it a favor if you would make this announcement through THE INDEX. Some of the subjects on which I am prepared to speak are—

The Devil-Worshippers of America.
The Spiritual Bankrupt Act.
Armageddon.
The Reign of Law.
The Positive Side of Liberalism.
The Loom of Life.

Societies wishing my service will please address H. L. Green, Esq., of Salamanca, N.Y.

Yours truly, W. E. COPELAND.

LINCOLN, Neb., July 26, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

I understand that Rev. W. E. Copeland of this place is expecting to attend the convention of Liberals at Watkins, N.Y. Permit me, through your journal, to say to those wishing to hear a powerful lecturer, during his sojourn in the East, that they will find such a one in Mr. Copeland.

Few men in the ranks of liberal lecturers display so unselfish a spirit, and so marked talent upon the various questions of reform, as he. To hold good audiences for five years in one community among the unorganized element of freethinkers, besides doing a large work abroad in the State, is a powerful testimonial to his ability, and should draw for him a large hearing wherever he may go.

Very truly yours, L. J. BUMSTEAD.

LETTER FROM OLIVER JOHNSON.

ORANGE, N.J., July 29, 1878.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I desire to thank you most heartily for your courageous vindication of the freedom of the press, infringing in the recent conviction and sentence of Mr. Ezra H. Heywood under a strained interpretation of the law prohibiting the transmission of obscene publications through the mails; and also for your strenuous efforts to save the cause of liberalism from becoming identified in the public mind with the odious and detestable doctrines of "free love," and with the efforts to screen from deserved punishment the manufacturers and disseminators of obscene publications. Your expositions of this whole subject are as clear and sound as they are timely, and I trust they will in some good degree serve the purpose for which they were written. The liberty of the press, properly defined, is one of the most sacred of human rights; but the attempt to make it a cover for the indecorable and corrupting nastiness of obscene literature should awaken the indignation of every friend of purity and virtue. Once let the cause of liberalism become identified in the public mind with the efforts to corrupt the youth of the country by obscene pictures and appeals to animal passion, and it will be smitten (as it ought to be) with the lightning of public indignation and wrath. Liberals can no more afford to be thought indifferent to this question than to that of the liberty of the press. The advocates of the popular faith insist that every departure from the Orthodox standards is dangerous to good morals; and the wide prevalence of this belief constitutes one of the mightiest obstacles to the growth of liberal opinions. It is important, therefore, that liberals of every class should furnish a standing refutation of this error in the purity of their private lives, and in the open and strenuous advocacy of the highest standard of morals.

I am more, rather than less, inclined to thank you for your efforts to keep the standard of liberalism high and pure, from the fact that I do not agree with you in renouncing Christianity, but choose to fight the battle of freethought in its name and that of its founder. Upon this point I here enter into no argument beyond the simple fact that I stand upon the definition of Christianity which I find in Webster, and believe that liberalism, rightly understood, is far more Christian than are the creeds which I reject. I have read THE INDEX from the beginning, but upon this point my conviction remains unshaken.

And, now that I am writing, I desire to thank you also for your invaluable labors for the complete secularization of the Republic. You have done much to expose the evils arising from the attempt to confuse the functions of the State with those of the Church, and to form a sound and consistent public opinion upon the subject. In one respect, however, I think you make a very serious mistake; namely, in attempting to identify the cause of secularism with opposition to Christianity,—as if the latter and the former were necessarily at enmity with each other. As a Christian, and in the interest of Christianity as I understand it, I am an earnest and thorough secularist; and I believe the drift of thought and opinion, even in the Orthodox churches, is far more toward than away from secularism. You treat the National Reform Association as if it were the representative and expositor of the religious Orthodoxy of the country. In this I believe you are utterly mistaken. The "Covenanters"—a comparatively small, though highly respectable, body of Christians—are the soul and substance of that association, without whom it would perish in three months, beyond all hope of resurrection. The drift of thought and opinion in the churches is altogether away from its projects. The leading religious papers of the country (with few exceptions) show it no favor, and many of them have spoken openly against it. The New York Observer, the stout champion of old-school Orthodoxy, the Christian Advocate, the national organ of Methodism, the Independent, the Christian Union, and the whole Baptist press of the country have avowed their opposition to the Covenant scheme. Dr. Spear's book in defence of secularism, though it has not received the attention due to its merits, is exerting an influence to-day far stronger than that of the National Reform Association, with all its conventions, papers, and tracts. The Covenanters are a hundred years behind the age. Indeed, they are lingering still in the atmosphere of the Jewish Theocracy. We should never forget that in this conflict the main citadel was carried nearly one hundred years ago, when the Constitution of the United States was adopted. Against that bulwark the National Reform Association arrays its forces in vain. True, the work of secularization is not yet fully accomplished. A number of old customs, that had their roots in the union of the Church with the State, still remain. So, when the forest trees are cut down and burned, and a wide territory opened to the sun, rotting stumps will long remain to embarrass the work of the farmer. The employment of chaplains, religious worship in schools, the enforced observance of the Sabbath, the appointment of days of fasting, thanksgiving, etc., are nothing but customs that must die out sooner or later for want of life at the root. They are not signs of a great conspiracy to marry the Church again to the State, but remnants of a former state of things, anachronisms tending to decay. The processes of Nature here need help, just as a stumpy field needs the grubbing-hoe; but there is no cause for alarm, as if the forests were about to grow again. The only reason for the popular indifference to this subject is in the almost universal conviction that there is not the slightest danger that the nation will in this matter take any backward step. The efforts of the National Reform Association alarm the public no more than would a proposition to compel the cataract of Niagara to reverse itself and roll its mighty flood back toward the western lakes. But if ever a serious conflict should arise between the friends and the foes of secularism, you will find the vast majority of American Christians taking sides not with the latter, but with the former.

You wonder why liberals are not aroused by your appeals on this subject; but there is no mystery about it. They do not generally see and feel the danger that you describe, and so are little inclined to spend their time and money in what seems to them a needless conflict. They see that the line between secularists and anti-secularists is not the line that divides Christians from anti-Christians, but that Christians themselves are ready to resist any serious step toward a reunion of Church and State.

Pardon me for writing so long a letter. I have no claim to a hearing in THE INDEX; but if you will publish what I have written, you will at least gratify

Yours cordially, OLIVER JOHNSON.

LITERATURE.

MR. FROTHINGHAM'S TWO VOLUMES.*

Mr. Frothingham's position among the scholars and men of marked intellectual power in this country has long been recognized. As a preacher in the great metropolis of this nation he has achieved a happy eminence, and from Sunday to Sunday wins to his hearing an audience which, if not conspicuously great in numbers, is certainly so in culture and refinement. And yet Mr. Frothingham is no holiday man; he is not merely an orator capable of graceful and elegant periods; he is not a student to say with Prospero in the "Tempest,"—

"My library was dukedom large enough;"

so being content with his books, and indifferently leaving the affairs of men to drift by as they will. In all that concerns humanity this scholar and preacher has taken a vital interest. Early in his ministry he became deeply enlisted in the anti-slavery cause, and his pulpit trumpet gave no uncertain sound in that great ethico-political agitation. On later questions of reform, as they have successively risen to vex our social sphere, he has been as unequivocally committed to the side of justice and impartial right, finding in all a common ground of sympathy and cooperation with enlightened philanthropic men of every Christian sect.

We mention these facts with the purpose of indicating that Mr. Frothingham, as an author, has a distinct claim to the candid consideration of the public whenever he writes upon subjects that move his intellect and conscience; a claim which suggests that upon whatever topic his pen may touch he is likely to have something to say worthy in itself to be considered.

The fact, then, that the author of the books before us is a famous expounder of so-called religious rationalism should not deter any real thinker from turning their pages with care. Mr. Frothingham, both in the matter and manner of his writing, appeals only to cultured, thoughtful, and serious readers. He has no coarse, sneering, defiant sentences to tickle the ears of mere iconoclasts, to rouse the rude joy of reckless deniers and polemical shoulder-bitters; but he invites to calm thought, to candid comparison, to charitable judgment, to reasonable discussion.

We are of those who firmly believe that respect for the essence and substance of religion is ineradicably ingrained in the nature of man; and, therefore, that the frank discussion of the relative merits of any or all the forms by which the human religious element has sought to express itself is not only in order, but may fearlessly be encouraged to proceed. He who attacks religion itself, who believes, attacks an invulnerable fortress, which never has surrendered, and never will surrender; and this, because it is entrenched in the natural love, sympathy, aspiration, hope, and faith of the common heart of mankind. The finite human feels, even when it does not think, its relation to the Infinite; and out of that conscious relation springs what we call religion, which is the pose of the individual soul in more or less of awe, reverence, worship, and obedience toward God. This pose cannot be opposed successfully, simply because there is nothing so natural as religion.

In this belief Mr. Frothingham is himself a sharer. On page 117 of The Spirit of the New Faith, he says:

"It is my faith that as long as there shall be traces of human life there will be traces of religion; and the religion, instead of becoming more shadowy and ephemeral, will increase in richness and splendor. It is my belief that the cardinal ideas that constitute its intellectual substance will never decline; that great realities will become more real as time rolls on. Aspiration, the sighing for the perfect, the longing for the infinite, the craving for a better truth than has been discovered, will haunt the mind more and more as reason becomes calm and composed, and able to entertain the facts that make up human life. As man grows older, reason will more and more predominate over passion: then intellect will become wider, more comprehensive in its scope as it becomes richer in its culture, more rather than less imaginative and poetic; the great words will be charged with new meanings; the great doctrines will be interpreted in finer senses."

In this volume, which is a collection of discourses, twelve in number, one thing is markedly apparent; and that is the high moral tone which pervades every chapter. We do not use this word moral in any superficial or legal sense, but rather in that which expresses a certain elevation of spirit, which instinctively and spontaneously allies itself with whatsoever is pure and beautiful and good. On the current of thought and emotion in these pages we are borne up into sweet, wholesome air, where our minds and hearts are swept clean of anything like hatred or ill-will or uncharitableness toward our fellow-men.

The second volume, The Cradle of the Christ, is doctrinal, and even controversial, in comparison with the first; and yet here, that purpose which so generally characterizes the author is plainly manifest; namely, to be fair and just, and always from his point of view reasonable. The essay has for its object to strip off what its author conceives to be the husk of Christianity and to expose its inner life, and to tone down what are believed to be the extravagant and superstitious views of the Church with respect to its founder. Mr. Frothingham carefully distinguishes between the Jesus and the Christ, and seeks here to trace historically and critically the process by which he regards the veritable man as having taken on a largely mythical form. He declares his intention, even in this effort, to be mainly literary, and in his preface he takes no little pains to allay the apprehension of the reader that there is any dogmatic determination in the book. On reading over what he has written, he says:—

"The thought has occurred to him [the author] that, in his solicitude to make his positions perfectly clear, and to state his points concisely, he may have laid himself open to the charge of carrying on a controversy under the pretence of explaining a literature. Such a reproach, his heart tells him, would be undeserved. He disclaims all purpose and desire to weaken the moral supports of any form of religion; as little purpose or desire to undermine Christianity as to revive Judaism. It is his honest belief that no genuine interests of religion are compromised by scientific or literary studies; that religion is independent of history, that Christianity is independent of the New Testament. He is cordially persuaded that the admission of every one of his conclusions would leave the institutions of the Church precisely, in every spiritual respect, as they are; and in thus declaring he has no mental reserve, no misty philosophical meaning that preserves expressions while destroying ideas; he uses candid and intelligible speech. The lily's perfect charm suffers no abatement from the chemist's analysis of the slime into which it strikes its slender root; the grape of the Johannisberg vineyards is no less luscious from the fact that the soil has been subjected to the microscope; the fine qualities of the human being, man or woman, are the same on any theory,—the Bible theory of the perfect Adam, or Darwin's of the anthropoid ape. The hero is hero still, and the saint saint, whatever his ancestry."

Indeed, we cannot refrain from expressing the opinion that rationalists in general would do well to learn from Mr. Frothingham a larger and finer appreciation of the spiritual contents of Christianity, and to do better justice to many of its doctrines and institutions.

From any theological criticism of these volumes we purposely abstain. Their literary execution is on the whole excellent. We might object that the author is sometimes too rhetorical, and that he indulges too much in metaphors and antitheses. He has a habit of stating both sides very strongly; indeed, sometimes so strongly as almost to bewilder the reader, and leave him in doubt as to where the truth really lies. The orthography of the pages is a little mixed, partaking now of Webster and now of Worcester. Why does Mr. Frothingham give to Christian a small c, to Arabian a small a, and to Hebrew a small h? Would he begin German with a small g, and Russian with a small r? We are sorry to observe that the proof-reading of these volumes is quite faulty, and the mechanical execution of them in some respects astonishingly imperfect, excellent as it is in others.—A. W. Stevens, in the Literary World.

SUMMER VACATIONS.

We regard as one of the most encouraging features of modern times the increasing prevalence of the custom of leaving the city for a time during the heat of summer. Once it was thought to be only the privilege of the wealthy classes, who could afford to have country seats, among their other luxuries of living; for the rest, the very desire for a respite from city heat and labor was often frowned upon, and even stigmatized as a proof of an idle and frivolous mind. But every natural need of humanity will force its way through all opposing barriers; and gradually this one has been recognized and provided for so fully that now persons even in very moderate circumstances plan for their fortnight's or month's vacation as one of the necessities of city life, without even a thought of its being an extravagance either of time or money; while every year witnesses increasing provision for the poor, in the way of children's excursions, country homes for the sick, and similar benevolent and most praiseworthy enterprises.

While, however, we hail this change as most significant of a better understanding of life's uses, and a promise of increasing health and vigor for our busy and tired citizens, we have yet much to learn as to the best mode of spending our short respite and of gaining from it the refreshment, invigoration, and happiness which it is capable of affording. There is one infallible way of counteracting the blessed influences which meadow, forest, mountain, or sea are waiting to pour upon us. It is that of carrying with us our city life, with its business cares, its fashion, its conventionalities and excitements. Nothing will more surely nullify the good that may be in store for us than this. Most of us are weary with a ceaseless round of these things for ten or eleven months in the year. They have exhausted the vital powers, and worn upon the tissues of the brain and nerves, by their constant pressure. Whether it be the unrelieved toll of the mechanic or artisan or the mental labor of the student, the anxious cares of business, or the endurance of domestic perplexities, professional and public responsibilities or the exciting demands of fashionable society, the effect is alike exhausting and prostrating. What is needed is the tonic of complete change; the delicious freedom from the burdens of the past year; the sense of perfect liberty to come or go, to sleep or wake, to read or think or dream, untrammelled by the inexorable must of city life.

Our summer holidays, then, should always be planned with this in view. They must not involve an expense that will be hard to meet, or the care will frustrate the object in view. They must not be rural images of city life, such as fashionable summer resorts too often are, with an enforced routine of dress, amusements, and social excitements; for then the same drain on the vital energy will be made, only among different surroundings. Neither should they be eager and hurried efforts to crowd as much sight-seeing into a few days as possible. Some people rush through a week or a month of vacation, flying from one place to another, with the futile expectation of thus discovering the grandeur or sublimity or beauty of Nature. It is utterly impossible. They may catch glimpses of solemn mountains, roaring cataracts, wonderful caves, expansive oceans, lovely fields, placid lakes, and gentle rivers; but to experience the uplifting influence of their majesty on the one hand, or the tranquillizing and soothing effect of their loveliness on the other, a degree of leisure is needful that the hurried traveller can never command. It is far better to confine ourselves to a single contemplation, and to allow it time to fill our hearts day by day with its own peculiar charm, than to fly from one place to another, reaching home only to find our bodies exhausted with rapid transit, and our minds confused with a multiplicity of impressions.

In order to secure a vacation that shall be at once enjoyable and beneficial, we must endeavor to realize the two ideas of freedom and leisure. This is not so difficult a task as may be supposed. It demands no serious outlay of money; indeed, it forbids this, as involving care and anxiety. No extensive preparations are necessary, as only comfort and convenience need to be consulted. Health, circumstances, and taste will, of course, combine in the selection of a spot where these enjoyments may be secured. But whether by the side of grand old hills and stately forests, or by old ocean with its dashing waves, or amid the more tranquil scenes of fertile meadows and placid streams, let us for the time throw off our cares, lay down our labors, banish all conventionalities, and enjoy to the full that perfect liberty of action and unbroken leisure that shall, while affording us a season of pure and simple delight, also enable us to take up our work again with renewed life and vigor, and a full consciousness that our vacation has been both well planned and well spent.—Mrs. A. F. Curtis in the Philadelphia Ledger.

SECTARIANISM is not being offensively taught in our colleges now as it once was, and a growing liberality prevails within college walls as outside of them. Our Congregational colleges welcome students of all sects, allow a wise freedom in the matter of attendance on religious services, and find as a consequence that students of differing forms of belief yield compliance to the routine of the institution. Thus Catholics and Jews can regularly be found pursuing the course in almost any of our New England colleges, and generally taking a first-class stand. This year's valedictorian at Williams was a Jew, and a Jew took the DeForest medal at Yale. Amherst has honored itself by giving a doctorate to Father Hewitt of the Paulist Seminary at New York; and one of her students has been lecturing on the Catholic Church, indorsed by both Bishop O'Reilly, of this city, and President Seeley.—Springfield Republican.

* The Spirit of the New Faith: A Series of Sermons. By O. B. Frothingham. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

The Cradle of the Christ: A Study in Primitive Christianity. By O. B. Frothingham. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " " " "
 " 26 " 51 " " " "
 " 52 " " " " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEPHENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tennesse, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.20 for one year, including postage, or $1.00 for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Colla Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. O. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Somme's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. O. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wilson and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. E. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by C. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion." Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "PROCEEDINGS" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS KILLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Tennesse, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of these several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days. A new edition.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.50
German Tales.....	1.50
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 6 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol.; any volume sold separately, 31 vols., London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CEUVRES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHERRY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.00

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising— Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conduct of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Bahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	2.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Helen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp-Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.50
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	1.75
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGLELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGLELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelms.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Rugehot. 1.5

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LEOKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	3.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWIS' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.50
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HOBACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	2.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	5.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES) Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 1 vol., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MRS. M. A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workahop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
FARRER (THOMAS) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	4.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PEEL'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Works than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds stipulated under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.00
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Eclipses, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Boecoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	11.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	1.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	1.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	1.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	2.50
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	1.50
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I., II., and III., each.....	1.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	1.00
Universal Progress.....	1.25
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	1.50
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 3 vols.....	7.50
The Glass-Boom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Remond, and Lord the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Hamor, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	1.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	1.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	1.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	2.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.25
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.25
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	1.25
On Sound.....	1.25
Radiant Heat.....	1.25
Forms of Water.....	1.25
Lectures on Light.....	1.25
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.25
Address before British Assoc. at Belfast.....	.50
TYLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sings and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Seamstress.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WELLS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 3 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Man.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Science and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	2.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.50
Pamphlets. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $4 outfit free. Address H. HALLITT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.25. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.
Same style and price.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

The SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

A REMARKABLE BOOK. A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, E. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Blachford, Mr. W. R. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and E. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century.
Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PAT- RONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review, Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:—

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace,
Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison,
Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall,
Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley,
Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin,
Prof. Clifford,
Lionel A. Tallemaque, Author of Supernatural Religion,
M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock,
Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope,
Lealls Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope,
John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine,
G. H. Lewes, Sir David Wedderburn.

AND NUMEROUS OTHERS.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year.
Published every month by the ROSE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER,

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-
ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG
LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. R. Blahop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Pres. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCI- ATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1873 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F.R.A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD. GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the travelling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD

stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES
in use on this line well illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals,
Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform,
The Wharton Patent Switch,
and the Westinghouse Air-Brake,
forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible

Pullman Palace Cars
are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The Scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. P. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent.
C. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
203 and 205 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 (Vols. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 8) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
...THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

BOARD AT ONE OF THE

Largest and best situated Hotels at

MT. DESERT.

Terms, $1 per day; children, 50 and $4 per week.

For particulars, apply to C. H. PHILLIPS, 480 Washington Street, Boston, or to STANLEY HOUSE, South West Harbor, Me.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

ON
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCI- ATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.

II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.

IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.

V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 12 and 20, 1876.)

VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II., III., IV., V., VI., 15 cts. each; ten for 90 cts.; one hundred, $3.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, and '77, Five cents each.

FRANCON AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

GOLD Any worker can make $12 a day at home. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUB & Co., Augusta, Maine.

THE YOUTH'S LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doeringer & Co., 56 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, B. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.

2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

3. PRIVILEGES FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.
For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:—

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 15, 1878.

WHOLE NO. 451.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,
ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.
2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.
3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.
4. N. H.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State; or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS B. ABBOT.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

How SWEET is the sense of leisure to him who knows that he has earned the right to enjoy it!

DENNIS KEARNEY may help make Ben. Butler governor of Massachusetts, but we much fear that he will not facilitate the wise solution of the labor problem in this State.

THE GREAT California "apostle" of working men's rights says that a man who wears his shirt outside of his trousers (like the Chinaman) isn't fit to be an American citizen,—or words to that effect. Why is it not just as decent to wear a clean shirt outside, as to wear a dirty one inside?

WE LOOKED in vain in Dennis Kearney's speech at Faneuil Hall, on the evening of August 5, for any full, clear, and impressive statement of the laboring man's grievance and demand. The speech as a whole was empty of argument and reasoning, but fairly bristled with vengeful epithets and fierce denunciations.

A GRAND EMBASSY has come from China to this country, to be received by President Hayes and his cabinet at Washington. Among other international negotiations which may be made, we trust that the one suggested by Mr. Kearney may be settled; namely, the right of any one in this country to wear his shirt in whatever manner pleases him.

ENGLAND gets an increased taxation of twenty million pounds in consequence of Disraeli's new "policy;" and the Liberals expect this fact will help them in making head against the Conservatives. Let the English people alone for measuring the right or wrong of any policy, liberal or conservative, according as it increases or diminishes their taxes!

MR. H. L. GREEN wishes us to correct a former statement of his in regard to excursion railroad rates to the Watkins Convention. As corrected, the fare will be as follows for a round trip: From Baltimore, $11.19; Harrisburg, $7.84; Philadelphia, $12.00; Lock Haven, $5.06; Williamsport, $4.65; Elmira, ninety cents; Pittsburgh (via Lock Haven), $12.51.

IT SEEMS to be in the human nature of every oppressed class to desire to oppress some other class. It would appear that the working men of California, under Dennis Kearney's lead, propose to obtain their rights at the expense of doing some wrong to Chinese laborers. Hasn't a Chinaman as much right to come and live in this country as an Irishman; and when here, to be treated with equal justice?

THE WORKING MAN most certainly has a real grievance and demand, which society must give ear to, or refuse at its peril. The oftener these are plainly and calmly stated, the more rapid approach shall we make to that equitable readjustment between labor and capital which would seem to be indispensable. But we want sense and reason, not nonsense and madness, in the discussion and solution of this complicated problem.

THE COUNTRY is beginning again to resound with party preparations for the fall campaign, and the party organs are tuning up with wonderful exhilaration and expectancy of success. In what will it all end? Why, one side will beat and the other will be beaten; and then the country must try and get along as best it can, hopeful that as little damage will be done to its interests by the "ins" as is possible to the nature of politicians.

THE PETITION for the pardon of E. H. Heywood, which is now in circulation, will we trust rapidly grow with willing signers. Dissent from Mr. Heywood's social theories as much as any one may, all reasonable and unprejudiced persons can but allow that he is imprisoned on a false issue and under an unrighteous interpretation of the law. If Heywood should go to jail under Judge Clark's rendering of the obscenity law, then also should every publisher and vender of the Old Testament scriptures.

THE ESSAY which we print this week in these columns, from the pen of Francis Parkman,—one of the foremost historians of this country,—is one with whose sentiments we do not wholly agree; nor does it appear to us, we are bound in candor to say, so good as it ought to have been in justice to the nature of the subject. Nevertheless, it contains so much timely warning and excellent exposition of the perils attending our republican experiment, and is on the whole so worthy a treatment of a most needed discussion, that we are heartily glad to present it to the readers of THE INDEX for their most thoughtful consideration.

IT IS NEEDFUL that a man sometimes step aside from the roaring stream of current affairs, in which he has long been a strenuous actor, and stand in the cool shadows of calm thought and meditation, in order that he may see that not to him but to God belongs the praise of leading the world on to perfection. While we are struggling with might and main to renovate society, and are committed to some particular method for such renovation, the conceit is apt to be born in us that we are of more consequence to the world than is really the fact; and that things would not "move on" with any considerable progress, unless our shoulder were pushing so mightily at the wheel. But this is all a delusion. However useful a man may be in the world's affairs, his importance is not so great that he may not at any time be excused without checking the rolling chariot of Divine purposes. God always has a great crop of helpers; and no matter who or how many of them disappear, his resources never become bankrupt. The Cosmos is both intelligent and moral, and never fails in business, let what may happen.

SPRINKLING approvingly of the Nation's adverse criticism of Swinburne's recent volume of poems, the Christian Register considers "it a compliment to American literary discrimination that such poets as Swinburne have obtained but little popularity on this side of the Atlantic, and that Walt Whitman must go abroad to be 'appreciated.'" Of course, no gentleman is capable of defending for a moment any really coarse style of writing, which is the product of a pen dipped in the love of the vulgar and sensual; but there is a kind of squeamishness in certain "literary discrimination" which does not appear to us the sign of a healthy and robust virtue. Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass is as a whole a noble book, the product of a thoroughly noble and manly brain; and anything in it which may be deemed indelicate is merely incidental, not conspicuous. Any literary judgment which would exclude Leaves of Grass from our study or parlor tables on the score of immodesty of utterance would exclude the plays of Shakespeare, the essays of Montaigne, the poems of Burns, the Paradise Lost of Milton,—to say nothing of a score of other books highly esteemed by the best "literary discrimination." Would the writer of the Register paragraph read Solomon's Songs to his family at morning devotions or to his congregation at the Sunday service? Probably not. And yet he wouldn't be glad if the Bible had to "go abroad to be 'appreciated.'" We hazard nothing in saying that neither Solomon nor his father David was half so pure and chaste a man as Walt Whitman, and that neither wrote with a loftier or more honest purpose to inspire and benefit mankind. Whatever words a pure heart utters with pure lips any pure reader can bear to read, however different the style of the writer may be from that which the reader might employ. A person of really good "literary discrimination" will not throw a book aside because of some incidental features to which he objects, providing it be on the whole a book of high aims and aspirations.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. LINDSEY BOWEN,.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Birmingham, Ind.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM,.....New York
MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HOLLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. P. SCHENCKMAN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
HON. H. WILSON,.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. W. H. SPENCER,.....Baltimore, Md.
MR. H. H. MILL,.....Florence, Mass.
MR. E. W. MEADDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. K. H. HINZEN,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER,.....Editor of "The Investigator," Boston.
BARRIS ISAAC M. WISE, Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ KILGORE, Editor of "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. R. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thornfield, Mass.
HON. ROBERT COLLIER,.....Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Birmingham, Ala.
HON. R. S. MCCORMICK,.....Franklin, Pa.
EDWARD F. W. EVANS,.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
MRS. A. M. FOSTER,.....Kew-Forest, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH ADY STANTON,.....Trenton, N. J.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY,.....Litchfield, Va.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN,.....231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....5 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arizona.....JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California.....L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....DAVID T. BRALS, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. BALDWIN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. GORLT, Greenville.
Florida.....T. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....DR. A. G. HUMPHREY, Galesburg.
Indiana.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Iowa.....J. C. MICHENER, Adair.
Kansas.....JOHN W. WATSON, Fort Scott.
Kentucky.....S. B. CLARK, Hillsville.
Louisiana.....EMERSON BENTLEY, New Orleans.
Maine.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maryland.....S. S. RUSSELL, New Market.
Massachusetts.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Michigan.....KARL SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Minnesota.....J. B. BASSETT, Minneapolis.
Missouri.....H. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Montana.....W. E. COPELAND, Lincoln.
Nebraska.....W. G. BARRETT, White Rock.
New Hampshire.....WILLIAM LITTLE, Manchester.
New Jersey.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Passaic.
New York.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Salamanca.
North Carolina.....E. D. STARK, Warren.
Ohio.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
Oregon.....SAMUEL GALT, Humboldt Basin.
Pennsylvania.....W. H. BROWN, Lancaster.
Rhode Island.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
South Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Tennessee.....DR. E. H. PRICE, Chattanooga.
Texas.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Vermont.....E. L. HAUGHTON, North Bennington.
Virginia.....L. SPAULDING, Norfolk.
West Virginia.....DR. A. M. DENT, Weston.
Wisconsin.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
District of Columbia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Utah.....W. FERGUSON, Provo City.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE,.....231 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LEWISVILLE, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfeldt.
Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfeldt, Julius Plasterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek.
Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, R. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch.
Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Claussen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Fred. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Clusen, and Fred. Braasch.
QUEBEC, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.]
Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. H. Henson, T. O. Mallon, A. F. Lochead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry O. Dillon; Secretary, Frank V. Ingersoll.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
FAIR HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright.
Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Elizur Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. P. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. R. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson.
Issued to J. M. Jones, O. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. B. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Kittenhouse.
Issued to C. M. Kittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korn, F. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Glutz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker.
Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, E. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. J. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunt.
Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermance, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunzing.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson.
Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. Eliz. Evinger, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post.
Issued to Benj. Gregg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop.
Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flag, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel E. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike.
Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothbult, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead.
Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuinn; Secretary, E. C. Walker.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard.
Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roy, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGill; Secretary, J. B. Barry.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
MANITOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron.
Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heiberman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kolinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessey; Secretary, Thomas Dugan.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster.
Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrels, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartzcope.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
WAUBSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
CASS COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Cass County.
ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—President, C. B. Hoffman; Secretary, E. L. Sentz.
Charter issued to Dr. E. L. Sentz, M. Senn, O. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Sentz, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adamson; Secretary, F. W. Orvis.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
LINESVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Linesville Liberal League.
XENIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr.
Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tauzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Frauenstein, M.D., E. Lebon, and others.
OLATHIE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin.
Issued to C. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.]
Issued to W. Brown, J. Hay, J. Y. Urie, H. M. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Atchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Atchison, H. Belfy, and others.
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Klob; Secretary, F. B. Farse.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
HAINESVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."
CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.
MOBERLY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight.
Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.
MALEDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinkley.
Issued to the President and Secretary, on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.
VINCENNES, INDIANA.—President, Charles Graeter; Secretary, Orlan F. Baker.
Issued to the President and Secretary in behalf of the Vincennes Liberal League.
[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

The Failure of Universal Suffrage.

BY FRANCIS PARKMAN.

In different times and countries, patriotism has different work to do. For the last two or three centuries its business has usually been the bridling of tyrants, the dethroning of arbitrary kings and the setting up of constitutional ones, or the getting rid of kings altogether; in short, the extension of popular liberties at the expense of the wearers of crowns and bearers of sceptres. Going farther back, we see another state of things. Toward the end of the middle ages we find the relations of kings and peoples the reverse of what they afterward became. We find oppression divided and diffused in the persons of a multitude of feudal tyrants, and the masses looking to their sovereign as a protector. The feudal oppressor was both his enemy and theirs, and the progress of monarchical centralization was in the interest both of prince and peasant. It was not until feudalism was prostrate that the masses ceased to bless their sovereign as a friend, and began to curse him as a tyrant.

Still farther back in the centuries we find feudalism itself acting a part which could not have been spared in the reorganization of society. The foe of one generation is the friend of another, and there is scarcely a form of government so bad that it has not, at some time, prevented a worse or prepared for a better.

It is but lately, then, that crowns and sceptres have been denounced as enemies of the rights of man; but the war against them has been waged so hotly, and has left such vigorous traditions behind it, that the same battle-cry is still raised in quarters where the foe has been driven off the field and utterly annihilated; where the present danger is not above but beneath; and where the real tyrant is organized ignorance, led by unscrupulous craft, and marching, amid the applause of fools, under the flag of equal rights. One might be better employed than in hooting and throwing stones at the ghost of dead and buried privilege. But the amusement is safe and popular. Habit has made it second nature, and it gives excellent occasion for the display of oratorical fireworks. The transfer of sovereignty to the people, and the whole people, is proclaimed the panacea of political and social ills; and we are but rarely reminded that popular sovereignty has evils of its own, against which patriotism may exercise itself to better purpose. Here and there one hears a whisper that perhaps the masses have not learned how to use their power; but the whisper is greeted with obloquy.

We speak, of course, of our own country, where no royalty is left to fear, except the many-headed one that bears the name of Demos, with its portentous concourse of courtiers, sycophants, and panders. Those who live on its favors and pretend most devotion to it have been heard of late warning us to beware, and telling us that Demos is a "dangerous beast," whose caprices it behooves us to humor, lest he should turn and rend us. Far be it from us to echo this treason. Let others call him beast; we are his subject, and will but touch with reverence a few flaws in his armor.

Once he was a reasonable and sensible monarch, who had a notion of good government, and ruled himself and his realm with wisdom and moderation; but prosperity has a little turned his head, and hordes of native and foreign barbarians, all armed with the ballot, have so bewildered him that he begins to lose his wits and forget his kinglycraft.

When a king makes himself oppressive to any considerable part of his subjects, it is not worth while to consider whether he wears one head or millions; whether he sits enthroned in the palace of his ancestors, or smokes his pipe in a filthy ward-room among blackguards like himself. Nevertheless, if we are to be oppressed, we would rather the oppressor were clean, and, if we are to be robbed, we like to be robbed with civility. Demos is a Protean monarch, and can put on many shapes. He can be benign, imposing, or terrible; but of late we have oftener seen him under his baser manifestations, keeping vile company, and doing his best to shake our loyalty by strange, unkingly pranks. The worst things about him are his courtiers, who in great part are a disreputable crew, abject flatterers, vicious counselors, and greedy plunderers; behind their master in morals, and in most things else but cunning. If the politicians would let him alone, Demos would be the exact embodiment of the average intelligence and worth of a great people; but, deluded and perverted as he is, he falls below this mark, and passes for worse than his real self. Yet, supposing that his evil counsellors were all exterminated as they deserve, it would avail us little, for he would soon choose others like them, under the influence of notions which, of late, have got the better of his former good sense. He is the master, and can do what he will. He is answerable for all, and if he is ill-served he has nobody to blame but himself. In fact, he is jealous of his nobles, and, like certain other kings before him, loves to raise his barber, his butcher, and his scullion to places of power. They yield him divine honor, proclaim him infallible as the pope, and call his voice the voice of God; yet they befool and cheat him not the less. He is the type of collective folly as well as wisdom, collective ignorance as well as knowledge, and collective frailty as well as strength. In short, he is utterly mortal, and must rise or fall as he is faithful or false to the great laws that regulate the destinies of men.

A generation or more ago, a cry of "Eureka!" rose over all the land, or rather over all the northern part of it. It was the triumphant acclaim of a nation hailing its king. The enthusiasm had its focus in New England, at that time, perhaps, the most successful democracy on earth,—a fact which, however, was mainly to be ascribed to wholesome traditions, which had become part of the popular life. These the jubilants overlooked, and saw the fountain of all political and social blessings in the beneficent sway of an absolute Demos; that is to say, in the uncurbed exercise of the "inalienable right" of man to govern himself. A little cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, rose presently above the sea, the herald of an invasion of peasants. With this in-pouring of labor came railroads, factories, and a thousand prolific industries, which heads without hands could not have awakened or sustained. Population increased, wealth grew apace; men became rabid in making money, and women frivolous in spending it. The same influences were at work through all the Northern States. A vast industrial development, an immense prosperity, rested safely for a while on the old national traditions, love of country, respect for law, and the habit of self-government. Then began the inevitable strain. Crowded cities, where the irresponsible, and ignorant were numerically equal, or more than equal, to the rest, and where the weakest and most worthless was a match, by his vote, for the wisest and best; bloated wealth and envious poverty; a tinsel civilization above, and a discontented proletariat beneath,—all these have broken rudely upon the dreams of equal brotherhood once cherished by those who made their wish the father of their thought, and fancied that this favored land formed an exception to the universal laws of human nature. They cried out for elevating the masses, but the masses have sunk lower. They called for the diffusion of wealth, but wealth has gathered into more numerous and portentous accumulations. Two enemies, unknown before, have risen like spirits of darkness on our social and political horizon,—an ignorant proletariat and a half-taught plutocracy. Between lie the classes, happily still numerous and strong, in whom rests our salvation.

To these we must look for the sterling ability and worth of the nation, sometimes in wealth, now and then in poverty; but for the most part in neither the one nor the other. They are the natural enemies of the vulgar plutocrat, and the natural friends of all that is best in the popular heart; but, as they neither flatter, lie, nor bribe, they have little power over these barbarians of civilization that form the substratum of great industrial communities.

Liberty was the watchword of our fathers, and so it is of ourselves. But, in their hearts, the masses of the nation cherish desires not only different from it, but inconsistent with it. They want equality more than they want liberty. Now, there is a factitious inequality and a real and intrinsic one. Rank, titles, privileges, and wealth make up the first; and character, ability, and culture, the second. Excepting only the distinctions of wealth, we have abolished the artificial inequality, and now we are doing what we can to abolish the real one. Vaguely and half unconsciously, but every day more and more, the masses hug the flattering illusion that one man is essentially about as good as another. They will not deny that there is great difference in the quality of horses or dogs, but they refuse to see it in their own genus. A jockey may be a democrat in the street, but he is sure to be an aristocrat in the stable. And yet the essential difference between man and man is incomparably greater than that between horse and horse, or dog and dog; though, being chiefly below the surface, the general eye can hardly see it.

Mountains and mole-hills, deserts and fertile valleys, and all the universal inequality of Nature, are but types of inequality in men. To level the outward world would turn it into barrenness, and to level human minds to one stature would make them barren as well. The history of the progress of mankind is the history of its leading minds. The masses, left to themselves, are hardly capable of progress, except material progress, and even that imperfectly. Through the long course of history, a few men, to be counted by scores or by tens, have planted in the world the germs of a growth whose beneficent vitality has extended itself through all succeeding ages; and any one of these men outweighs in value to mankind myriads of nobles, citizens, and peasants who have fought or toiled in their generation, and then rotted into oblivion. Condé used to say that a thousand frogs were not worth one salmon. The saying, as he meant it, was false, but there is a sense in which it is true, though it tells the truth but feebly and imperfectly.

The highest man may comprehend the lowest, but the lowest can no more comprehend the highest than if he belonged to another order of beings,—as for some purposes he practically does. A single human mind may engender thoughts which the combined efforts of millions of lower intelligences cannot conceive. This is not the faith of Demos. In his vague way, he fancies that aggregated ignorance and weakness will bear the fruits of wisdom. He begins to think that science, thought, and study are old-time illusions; that everybody has a right to form his own opinion as to whether the world is round or flat, and that the votes of the majority ought to settle the question.

We have said that intrinsic equality is inconsistent with liberty. It is so because, in order to produce it, very unequal opportunities of development must be granted to different kinds of mind and character, and an even distributive justice refused to human nature. The highest must be repressed and the lowest stimulated in order to produce a level average. In such an attempt no political or social system can completely succeed; but in so far as it tends this way it is false and pernicious. If it could succeed, or approach to success, it would be an outrage upon humanity. Asiatic despotisms have done so as nearly, perhaps, as is possible; but the Amuraths and Bajazets will hardly be thought fit examples for emulation. Democracy can no more succeed in producing a level than they did, but it can do prodigious mischief by trying to produce one. It may pretend that it is only "levelling upward"; but this phrase of pleasing sound means levelling downward also; for, if the lower strata of humanity are raised as high as their nature and the inexorable conditions of human life will permit, there will still be no equality till the upper strata are pushed down to meet them.

A society where liberty was complete, and where all men had equal opportunities of development, according to their several qualities, would show immense diversities of all kinds; like the vegetable world, where the tallest trees and the humblest shrubs, plants climbing and crawling, poisonous and wholesome, all grow out of the same soil and are formed of the same essential elements. So the essential elements of human nature are the same, but mixed in such different proportion, and controlled by such different tendencies, that they often result less in resemblances than in contrasts.

Shall we look for an ideal society in that which tends to a barren average and a weary uniformity, treats men like cattle, counts them by the head, and gives them a vote apiece without asking whether or not they have the sense to use it? or in that which recognizes the inherent differences between man and man, gives the preponderance of power to character and intelligence, yet removes artificial barriers, keeps circulation free through all its parts, and rewards merit wherever it appears with added influence? This, of course, is a mere idea, never to be fully realized; but it makes vast difference at what a republic aims, and whether it builds on NUMBERS or on WORTH. The methods by which it tries to reach its mark may be more or less effective, but it is all-important that the mark should be a true one.

The success of an experiment of indiscriminate suffrage hangs on the question whether the better part of the community is able to outweigh the worse. There are certain social conditions, rarely to be found except in small communities and a civilization not the most advanced, in which this question may be answered confidently in the affirmative; but, as numbers, wealth, and luxury increase, the difficulty grows with them. It is aggravated by the fact, generally acknowledged by those most competent to judge of it, that intellectual development and high civilization are not favorable to fecundity, so that the unintelligent classes, except when in actual destitution, multiply faster than those above them. Thus the power of ignorance tends to increase, or rather the power of the knaves who are always at hand to use it.

A New England village of the olden time—that is to say, of some forty years ago—would have been safely and well governed by the votes of every man in it; but now that the village has grown into a populous city, with its factories and workshops, its acres of tenement-houses, and thousands and ten thousands of restless workmen, foreigners for the most part, to whom liberty means license and politics means plunder, to whom the public good is nothing and their own most trivial interests everything, who love the country for what they can get out of it, and whose ears are open to the promptings of every racially agitator,—the case is completely changed, and universal suffrage becomes a questionable blessing. Still we are told it is an inalienable right. Suppose for an instant that it were so, wild as the supposition is. The community has rights as well as the individual; and it has also duties. It is both its right and its duty to provide good government for itself; and, the moment the vote of any person or class of persons becomes an obstacle to its doing so, this person or class forfeits the right to vote; for, where the rights of a part clash with the rights of the whole, the former must give way.

When a man has not sense to comprehend the questions at issue, know a bad candidate from a good one, or see his own true interests; when he cares not a farthing for the general good, and will sell his vote for a dollar; when, by a native instinct, he throws up his cap at the claptrap declamation of some lying knave, and turns with indifference or dislike from the voice of honesty and reason,—then his vote becomes a public pest. Somebody uses him, and profits by him. Probably it is a demagogue, possibly a priest, or possibly both. In any case, it is folly to call him a free agent. His inalienable right may perhaps be valuable to him for the bribe he gets out of it; but it makes him a nuisance and a danger to the State. It causes pulpits, platforms, and press to condone his vices, and debauch the moral sense of the people by discovering objects of sympathy in vagabonds, thieves, and ruffians. It gives power to the communistic attack on property, and makes it difficult to deal with outbreaks of brutal violence against which even humanity itself demands measures of the most stern and exemplary repression.

Universal suffrage, imposed upon the country by the rivalries of contending parties bidding against each other for votes, has since been promoted into a "principle," regarded by many persons as almost sacred. This so-called principle, however, is by no means of universal application, and, when applied in the wrong place, at once reduces itself to absurdity. Distribute ballot-boxes among the subjects of King John of Abyssinia or those of the Khan of Kalat, and set them to govern themselves by the full exercise of their inalienable rights, and our panacea would result in anarchy. Universal suffrage is applicable only to those peoples, if such there are, who by character and training are prepared for it; and the only rational question is as to the degree of preparation that will serve the purpose. In any case, preparation must be the work of time. There must be hereditary traditions of self-government. Universal suffrage exists in some European nations, and exists along with a high degree of civilization and prosperity; but in these the traditions and material forces of a centralized government are extremely strong, and the evils of an ignorant or vicious vote are held in check by powers of resistance which are unknown here. Yet even in these countries the final results of the experiments are, and well may be, the objects of deep anxiety.

We are told that, to make a bad voter a good one, we have only to educate him. His defect, however, is not merely intellectual. It consists also in the want of the feeling that his own interests are connected with those of the community, and in the weakness or absence of the sense of moral and political duty. The evil is not to be cured by reading, writing, and arithmetic. The public school may cram his brain with all it is capable of containing, and he will be no whit the better citizen for the process. It might train instead of cramming him, lay the foundation of a sound morality, and teach him something of political and social duty; but such education is more difficult than that now in vogue, and demands more judgment and ability in those who conduct it. To teach the teacher must be the first step; and here, as in everything else connected with public education, we find ourselves moving in a vicious circle. To whom have we entrusted these high and delicate interests? They demand the best intelligence and the best conscience of the community; and yet their control rests, in the last resort, with legislatures and municipal bodies representing in part that very public which needs education the most,—wretched, wire-pulling demagogues, ignorant as the constituencies that chose them, reckless of public duty, and without the faintest notion of what true education is. In such education rests the only hope of democracies; but it is vain to look for it unless the wiser half of the public can regain its virtual control.

The results thus far of our present style of popular education are not flattering. That portion of young America which has sprung from humble and ignorant parentage ought to show its effects most conspicuously; but it may be doubted whether, as a general rule, the young Irish-American is a better or safer citizen than his parent from Cork. He can read; but he reads nothing but sensation stories and scandalous picture-papers, which fill him with preposterous notions, and would enfeeble a stronger brain than his and debauch a sounder conscience. He is generally less industrious than his sire, and equally careless of the public good.

Those who bray loudest for inalienable rights extol the ballot as an education in itself, capable of making good citizens out of the poorest material. Under certain conditions, there is a measure of truth in this. An untought and reckless voter, enveloped by honest and rational ones, is apt to change greatly for the better; but, to this end, it is essential that those whom the ballot is to educate should be segregated and surrounded by healthy influences. When extensive districts and, notably, large portions of populous cities are filled by masses of imported ignorance and hereditary ineptitude, the whole ferments together till the evil grows insufferable. The ballot then educates only to mischief. If the voter has a conscience, he votes it away. His teacher is a demagogue who plays on his prejudices or his greed, and out of a bad citizen makes him a worse. Witness the municipal corruptions of New York, and the monstrosities of negro rule in South Carolina.

It is said that vigilance is the price of liberty; but it has another condition no less essential. It demands moderation. It must stand on the firm ground, avoid rash theorizing and sweeping generalization, and follow the laws of development that reason and experience point out. It must build its future on its past. When it rushes deliriously after dazzling abstractions it is rushing toward its ruin. In short, it must be practical, not in the vile sense in which that word is used by political sharpers, but in the sense in which it is used by thoughtful and high-minded men.

There is an illusion, or a superstition, among us respecting the ballot. The means are confounded with the end. Good government is the end, and the ballot is worthless except so far as it helps to reach this end. Any reasonable man would willingly renounce his privilege of dropping a piece of paper into a box, provided that good government were assured to him and his descendants.

The champions of indiscriminate suffrage—such of them, that is, as deign to give reasons for their faith—point in triumph to the prosperity which the country has enjoyed till within the last few years, and proclaim it a result of the unlimited power of the masses. This prosperity, however, had been founded and half built up before the muddy tide of ignorance rolled in upon us. It rests on the institutions and habits bequeathed to us by our fathers; and if until lately the superstructure has continued to rise, it is in spite of a debased suffrage, and not in consequence of it. With still more confidence, and more apparent reason, we are told to look at the great popular uprising of the civil war. Here, indeed, democracy revealed itself in its grandest aspect. The degrading elements had not then reached the volume and force that they have reached to-day. The issue was definite and distinct. The Union was to be saved, and popular government vindicated. There were no doubts and no complications. Victory meant national integrity, and defeat meant national disintegration. Above all, the cause had its visible emblem, the national flag; and thousands and hundreds of thousands of eyes were turned upon it in abedient and loving devotion. We heard a great deal at that time about "thinking bayonets." The bayonets did not think, nor did those who carried them. They did what was more to the purpose,—they felt. The emergency did not call for thought, but for faith and courage; and both were there in abundance. The political reptiles hid away, or pretended to change their nature, and for a time the malarious air was purged as by a thunder-storm. Peace brought a change. Questions intricate and difficult, demanding brains more than hearts, and discretion more than valor, took the place of the simple alternative to be or not to be. The lion had had his turn, and now the fox, the jackal, and the wolf took theirs. Every sly political trickster, whom the storm had awed into obscurity, now found his opportunity. The reptiles crawled out again, multiplied, and infested caucuses, conventions, and Congress. But the people were the saddest spectacle; the same people that had shown itself so heroic in the hour of military trial were now perplexed, bewildered, tossed between sense and folly, right and wrong, taking advice of mountebanks, and swallowing their filthy nostrums. The head of Demos was as giddy as his heart had been strong.

But why descant on evils past cure? Indiscriminate suffrage is an accomplished fact, and cannot be undone. Then why not accept it, look on the bright side, and hope that "somehow or other" all will be well in the end? Because the recognition of an evil must go before its cure, and because there is too much already of the futile optimism that turns wishes into beliefs, and discourses in every tone of sickly commonplace about popular rights and universal brotherhood. Beneath it all lies an anxious sense of present and approaching evil. Still, the case is not yet desperate. The country is full of recuperative force, latent just now, and kept so by the easy and apathetic good-nature which so strangely marks our people. This is not the quality by which liberty is won and kept; and yet popular orators and preachers do their best to perpetuate it. Prominent among obstacles to reform is this weary twaddle of the optimists.

It is well to be reminded how far we have sundered ourselves from the only true foundation of republics,—intelligence and worth. The evil is not to be cured by hiding it, turning away our eyes from it, or pretending that it is a blessing. If it is to be overcome, it must be first looked in the face. All nations have in them some element of decay. Systems and peoples have perished, and not one was ever saved by shutting the eyes and murmuring that all was for the best. Faith without reason will only beguile us to destruction, and Liberty may elope while we are bragging most of her favors. We believe that our present evils are not past cure, and that, if the sound and rational part of the people can be made to feel that the public wounds need surgery, they will find means of applying it.

Under what shape shall we look for deliverance? It is easy to say where we need not look for it. To dream of a king would be ridiculous. We might set up an oligarchy, or rather an oligarchy might set up itself; but it would be one made up of the "boss," the "railroad king," and the bonanza Croesus,—a tyranny detestable and degrading as that of the rankest democracy, with which it would be in league. The low politician is the accomplice of the low plutocrat; and the low voter is the ready tool of both. There are those who call on imperialism to help us; but, supposing this heroic cure to be possible, we should rue the day that brought us to it. Our emperor would be nothing but a demagogue on a throne, forced to conciliate the masses by giving efficacy to their worst desires.

There is no hope but in purging and strengthening the republic. The remedy must be slow, not rash and revolutionary. A debased and irresponsible suffrage is at the bottom of the evil, but the State is sick of diseases that do not directly and immediately spring from this source. Something is due to the detestable maxim that to the victor belong the spoils, and the fatuity that makes office the reward of party service, demands incessant rotation, dismisses the servant of the public as soon as he has learned to serve it well, prefers the interests of needy politicians to the interests of the whole people, sets a premium on trickery and discourages faithful industry. When the scraps and marrow-bones of office are flung down to be scrambled for, the dogs are sure to get the lion's share.

Never was there a more damning allegation against popular government than was made unwittingly by the popularity-loving Governor of a certain State, who, talking for reform in one breath and against it in the next, said in substance that good administration might be expected in monarchies, but that with us the conduct of public affairs is in the hands of the people, and that to complain of bad civil service is to arraign democracy itself. Let us emulate this worthy gentleman: sit in smiling and serene despair, banish reflection, and drift placidly down the tide, fishing as we go! It is thus that republics are brought to their ruin. What the times need are convictions, and the courage to enforce them. The hope lies in an organized and determined effort to rouse the better half of the people to a sense that honest and trained capacity in our public service is essential to our well-being, and that the present odious and contemptible system is kept up in the interest of the few, not of the whole. There is much, too, in the organization of legislative and municipal bodies which might be changed in the interest of honesty against knavery, and of ability against artifice, without involving any attack against "inalienable rights." Yet, so long as a debased suffrage retains its present power for mischief, the snake is scotched, not killed. When a majority of the people become convinced that no aggregate of folly can produce sense, and no aggregate of worthlessness can produce honesty, and when they return to the ancient faith that sense and honesty are essential to good government, then it will become possible, not, perhaps, peaceably to abolish a debased suffrage, but to counteract and so far neutralize it that it may serve as a safety-valve and cease to be a danger.

There are prophets of evil who see in the disorders that involve us the precursors of speedy ruin; but complete disruption and anarchy are, we may hope, still far off, thanks to an immense vitality and an inherited conservative strength. The immediate question is this: Is the nation in the way of keeping its lofty promise, realizing its sublime possibilities, advancing the best interests of humanity, and helping to ennoble and not vulgarize the world? Who dares answer that it is?

Great fault is found with men of education and social position, because they withdraw from public life and abandon the field to men half taught and sans aveu. Tried by the standard of ideal perfection they ought, for the good of the country, to sacrifice inclination, peace, and emolument, go down into the arena, and jostle with the rest in the scrub-race of American politics, even if victory brings them no prize which they greatly care to win. Such men we have. Those who to-day save our politics from absolute discredit do so, in one degree or another, at a personal sacrifice. If the conflicts and the rewards of public life have something to attract them, they have also a great deal to repel. They enter a career where the arts of political management are of more avail than knowledge, training, and real ability; or, in other words, where the politician carries the day and not the statesman; where fitness for a high place is not the essential condition of reaching it, and where success must often be bought by compliances repugnant to them. The public service is paid neither by profit nor by honor, except such profit and honor as those best fitted to serve the public hold in slight account. It is only in the highest walks of political life that honor is to be found at all. For the rest, it might almost be said that he who enters them throws on himself the burden of proof to show that he is an honest man. More and more, we drift into the condition of those unhappy countries where "the post of honor is a private station;" and perhaps at this moment there is no civilized nation on earth of which this saying holds more true.

Out of this springs a double evil: bad government first, and then an increasing difficulty in regaining a good one. Good government cannot be maintained or restored unless the instructed and developed intellect of the country is in good degree united with political habits and experience. The present tendency is to divorce it from them; and this process of separation, begun long ago, is moving on now more rapidly than ever. Within a generation the quality of public men has sunk conspicuously. The masses have grown impatient of personal eminence, and look for leaders as nearly as may be like themselves. Young men of the best promise have almost ceased to regard politics as a career. This is not from want of patriotism. When the Union was in danger there were none who hastened to its defence with more ardent and devoted gallantry, rejoicing to serve their country in a field where it was to be served by manhood and not by trickery. Peace came; they sheathed their swords and were private citizens again. They would die in the public service, but they would not live in it.

In fact, the people did not want them there. The qualities of the most highly gifted and highly cultivated are discarded for cheaper qualities, which are easier of popular comprehension, and which do not excite jealousy. Therefore the strongest incentive to youthful ambition, the hope of political fame, is felt least by those who, for the good of the country, ought to feel it most. The natural results follow. A century ago three millions of people produced the wise, considerate, and temperate statesmanship on which our nationality is built. Now we are forty millions, and what sort of statesmanship takes forty millions produce let the records of Congress show. The germs of good statesmanship are among us in abundance, but they are not developed, and, under our present system and in the present temper of our people, they cannot be developed. The conditions of human greatness are difficult to trace; but one thing is reasonably sure: it will not grow where it is not wanted. It may be found in a republic that demands the service of its best and ablest, but not in one that prefers indifferent service of indifferent men, and pleases itself with the notion that this is democratic equality.

The irrepressible optimist, who discovers in every disease of the State a blessing in disguise, will say that eminent abilities are unnecessary in democracies. We commend him to a short study of the recent doings of Congress, and if this cannot dispel his illusion his case is beyond hope. This same illusion, in one shape or another, is wide-spread through all the realm of Demos, where we sometimes hear the value of personal eminence of any kind openly called in question, on the ground that the object of popular government is the good of the many and not of the few. This is true; but it remains to ask what the good of the many requires. It does not require that the qualities most essential to the conduct of national affairs should be dwarfed and weakened; but that they should be developed to the utmost, not merely as a condition of good government, but because they are an education to the whole people. To admire a brazen demagogue sinks the masses, and to admire a patriot statesman elevates them. Example is better than schooling; and, if average humanity is encouraged in the belief that there is nobody essentially much above itself, it will not rise above its own level. A low standard means low achievement. In every one of the strata into which civilized society must of necessity be divided, there are men capable of a higher place, and it is injustice to those whom Nature has so favored not to show them the heights to which they may aspire. What they do see clearly enough are the factitious heights of wealth and office; what they need also to see are those of human nature in its loftiest growth.

A nation is judged by its best products. To stand in the foremost rank, it must give to the human race great types of manhood, and add new thought to the treasury of the world. No extent of territory, no growth of population, no material prosperity, no average of intelligence, will ever be accepted as substitutes. They may excite fear, wonder, or even a kind of admiration, but they will never win or deserve the highest place.

Our civilization is weak in the head, though the body is robust and full of life. With all the practical vigor and diffused intelligence of the American people, our cultivated class is inferior to that of the leading countries of Europe; for not only does the sovereign Demos think he can do without it, but he is totally unable to distinguish the sham education from the real one. The favorite of his heart is that deplorable political failure, the "self-made man," whom he delights to honor, and to whom he confides the most perplexed and delicate interests, in full faith that, if he cannot unravel them, then nobody else can. He thinks that he must needs be a person of peculiar merit and unequalled vigor. His idea of what constitutes him is somewhat singular. He commends as self-made the man who picks up a half education at hap-hazard; but if, no matter with what exertion, he makes use of systematic and effective methods of training and instructing himself, then, in the view of Demos, he is self-made no longer.

The truth is, liberal education is at a prodigious disadvantage among us. In its nature it is only the beginning of a process that should continue through life; of a growth that will bear its fruit only in the fullness of time. Of what avail to nurse and enrich the young tree, if its after-years are to be spent in a soil and climate hostile or at least unfavorable to it? We do not say this in dependency, but simply to illustrate the position and its necessities. Amid the morbid levelling of the times, few signs are so hopeful as the growing strength of the higher education; but it is well to recognize with what it has to contend. In the platitudes of democratic society two counter-influences are apparent,—the one a curse, and the other a blessing: First, those sudden upheavals of accumulated wealth which break with sinister portent that broad distribution of property which once formed our safety; and, secondly, this recent reinforcement of trained intelligence. Each confronts the other; for culture is no friend of vulgar wealth, and most of the mountains of gold and silver we have lately seen are in the keeping of those who are very ill fitted to turn them to the profit of civilization.

But culture—to use that inadequate word for want of a better—has, as we have said, to contend with formidable difficulties. The lower forms of ambition among us are stimulated to the utmost. The prizes held before them are enormous. The faculties that lead to money-making, and those that lead to political notoriety as distinguished from political eminence, have every opportunity and every incentive. Ability, poor and obscure, may hope to win untold wealth, rule over mines, railroads, and cities, and mount to all the glories of official station. As a consequence, we have an abundance of rich men and an abundance of clever politicians. Again, we would not be misunderstood. We have no wish to declaim against self-made men. There are those among them who deserve the highest respect and the warmest gratitude. If rarely themselves on the highest pinnacle of civilization, they are generally the sources, immediate or remote, from which our best civilization springs. Yet there are achievements to which they are equal only in exceptional cases. We have had but one Franklin; and even that great man had fallings from which different influences would have delivered him. Nor was Franklin a product of democracy full-fledged.

While the faculties that win material success are spurred to the utmost, and urged to their strongest development, those that find their exercise in the higher fields of thought and action are far from being so. For the minds that mere wealth and mere notoriety cannot satisfy, the inducements are weak and the difficulties great. The slow but ominous transfer of power from superior to inferior types of men, as shown in city councils, legislatures, and Congress, has told with withering effect on the growth of true political ability. Debased as our politics are, they do not invite, and hardly even admit, the higher and stronger faculties to a part in them. Liberal education is robbed of its best continuance and consummation, in so far as it is shut out from that noblest field of human effort, the direction of affairs of State; that career of combined thought and action where all the forces of the mind are called forth, and of which the

[CONCLUDED ON PAGE 391.]

Poetry.

THE CHURCH.

BY O. P. CRANCH.

O mighty Church! who, old, but still adorned
With jewels of thy youth,—a wrinkled bride
Affianced to the blind,—so long hast scorned
The rising of the inevitable tide
That swells and surges up against thy pride,—
Thou, less the artist's than the tyrant's nurse,
Blight of philosophy, false star of poet's verse!

What though thy forms be picturesque and old,
And, clustered round thee, works of noblest art
Hallow thy temple! Once they may have told Profound emotions of the inmost heart;
Now shadowed by a faith that stands apart,
And scowls against the sunlight shared abroad,
Burning in altar-nooks its candles to its god!

The saints who toiled to help the world's distress;
The noble lords of thought and speech divine;
The prophets crying through Time's wilderness;
The vast discoveries, the inventions fine
That stamped upon the centuries a sign
Of grandeur,—all, like music thundered down
By stern cathedral bells, were silenced by thy frown.

Chained to Madonnas and ascetic saints,
Even Art itself felt thy all-narrowing force.
The painter saw thee peeping o'er his paints;
The sculptor's thought was fettered from its source;
Thy gloomy cloisters shaped the builder's course;
Thy organ drowned the shepherd's festive flute
With penitential groans, as though God's love were mute.

And yet, because there lurked some element
Of truth within the doctrine,—to man's need
Some fitness in the form; since more was meant
And more expressed than in the accepted creed,—
The artist's genius giving far less heed
To formulas than to his own ideal,—
The hand and heart wrought works the world has stamped
As real.

What didst thou for the already teeming soil
Of souls like Dante, Raphael, Angelo,
Save to suggest a theme or pay their toll?
While they o'erlooked their prison walls, and so
Caught from the skies above and earth below
Splendors wherewith they lit thy tarnished crown,
And clothed thee with a robe thou claimest as thine own.

Names that in any age would have been great,
Works that to all time speak, and so belong,
Claim not as thine; nor subsidize the fate
That gave them to the nations for a long,
Unceasing heritage. Amid a throng
Of starry lights they live. Thy clanging bells
Can never drown their song, nor break their mighty spells.

No mother thou of Genius, but the nurse.
Seek not to stamp a vulgar name upon
The sons of Morning. Take the Poet's verse,
But not the Poet. He is not thy son.
Enough for thee, if sometimes he hath gone
Into thy narrow fold from pastures wide,
Where through immortal flowers God pours the living tide.

Enough if he hath decked thee with the wealth
Of his heaven-nurtured spirit,—showering gems
Of thought and fancy, coining youth and health
To glid with fame thy papal diadems;
Plucking life's roses, with their roots and stems,
To wreath an altar which returned him naught
But the poor patronage of one suspected thought.

What didst thou for the studious sage who saw
Through Nature's veil the great organic force,—
Who sought and found the all-pervading law
That holds the rolling planets in their course?
When didst thou fail to check the flowing source
Of truths whose waters needs must inundate
The theologic dikes that guarded thy estate?

Is there a daring thought thou hast not crushed?
Is there a generous faith thou hast not cursed?
Is there a whisper, how'er low and hushed,
Breathed for the future, but thou wast the first
To silence with thy tortures,—thou the worst
Of antichrists, and cunningest of foes
That ever against God and man's great progress rose?

Yet life was in thee once. Thy earlier youth
Was flushed with blossoms of a heavenly bloom.
Thy blight began, when o'er God's common truth
And man's nobility thou didst assume
The dread prerogative of life and doom;
And creeds which served as swaddling-bands were bound
Like grave-clothes round the limbs laid living underground.

When man grows wiser than his creed allows,
And nobler than the church he has outgrown;
When that which was his old familiar house
No longer is a home, but all alone,
Alone with God, he dares to lift the stone
From off the skylight between heaven and him,—
Then shines a grander day, then fade the spectres grim.

And never yet was growth, save when it broke
The letter of the dead scholastic form.
The bark drops off, and leaves the expanding oak
To stretch his giant arms through sun and storm.
The idols that upon his breast lay warm
The sage throws down, and breaks their hallowed shrine,
And follows the great head that points to light divine.

But thou O Church! didst steal the mother's mask,
The counterfeit of Heaven,—so to ensnare
Thy flock around thee. None looked near, to ask
"Art thou our mother, truly?" None so bold
As lift thy veil, and show how hard and cold
Those eyes of tyranny, that mouth of gulle,
That low and narrow brow, the witchcraft of that smile,—

That subtle smile, deluding while it warmed;
That arrogant, inquisitorial nod;
That hand that stabbed, like Herod, the new-formed
And childlike life which drew its breath from God,
And, for that star by which the Magi trod
The road to Bethlehem, the Good Shepherd's home,
Lit lurid idol-fires on thy seven hills of Rome.

But thou who claim'st the keys of God's own heaven,
And who wouldst fain usurp the keys of earth,—
Thou, leagued with priests and tyrants who have given
Their hands, and pledged their oaths to blight the birth
Of thine own children's rights,—for scorn and mirth
One day shalt stand, thy juggling falsehoods named,
Thy plots and wiles unmasked, thy heaven-high titles
Shamed!

Look to the proud tiara on thy brow!
Its gems shall crush thee down like leaden weights.
Thy alchemy is dead; and wouldst thou now
Thunder anathemas against the States
Whose powers are Time's irrefragable fates?
Look to thy glories! They must shrink away,—
With meager pomp must fall, and sink into decay.

Lo, thou art numbered with the things that were,
Soon to be laid upon the dusty shelves
Of antiquaries,—once so strong and fair,
Now clasped with spells of magic, midnight elves,
And all half-lies, that pass away themselves
When once a people rises to the light
Of primal truths and comprehends its heaven-born right.

Toll on; but little canst thou do to-day.
The sun is risen. The daylight dims thy shrines.
The age outstrips thee, marching on its way,
And overflowing all thy boundary lines.
How art thou fallen, O star! How lurid shines
Thy taper underneath the glowing sky!
How feeble grows thy voice, how lustreless thine eye!

Like some huge shell left by the ebbing tide,
In which once dwelt some wonder of the sea,
Thou liest, and men know not that thy pride
Of place outlives thy earlier potency,
But, coming nearer to thy mystery,
Might call thee lovely, did not thy decay
And death-like odor drive them in contempt away.

So perish like thee all lies stereotyped
By human power or devilish artifice,—
Dark blot on Christ's pure shield, soon to be wiped
Away, and leave it fair for Heaven's free kiss;
So perish like thee, drowned in Time's abyss,
All that hath robbed strong Genius of its youth,
All that hath ever barred the struggling soul from truth!

And yet we need not boast our larger scope
In this broad land, if creeds of later stamp
Still cast their gloom o'er manhood's dearest hope,
Still quench the heavenward flame of Reason's lamp,
And dogmas shamed by science still can cramp
The aspiring soul in dungeons scarce less drear
Than those of olden times, when faith was one with fear.

Nor dream that here the inquisitorial chair
Is but a byword, though we flush and weep
In honest indignation, when we hear
Chains clank in Rome, and wonder how the cheap
And common truth of Heaven must cinge, and creep,
And mask its face, lest Mother Church disown
The rebel thought that flouts the apostolic throne!

If we indeed are sure our faith is best,
Then may we dare to leave it large and free,
Nor fear to bring the creed to reason's test;
For best is strongest, fearing not to see
As well as feel. Then welcome, Liberty!
Down with the scaffolding the priest demands!
Let truth stand free, alone, a house not built with hands!

Down with the useless and the rotting props.
That cumber only and deface each wall!
Off with the antiquated cloth that drops
Moth-eaten draperies round the columns tall.
Nor needs the heavenly Architect our small
Superfluous tricks of ornament and gilt,
To deck the royal courts his wisdom planned and built.

He wills a temple beautiful and wide
As man and Nature,—not a cloister dim,
Nor strange pagoda of barbaric pride
Scrawled o'er with hieroglyph and picture grim
Of saint and fiend. Why seek to honor him
By crusting o'er with gold of Palestine
The simple, stainless dome whose builder is divine?

Thanks to the Central Good, the inflowing Power,
The Primal Life in which we live and move,—
The aroma of the soul, the passion-flower
We bear upon our hearts, the deathless love
Of right, outlives device, and floats above
All human creeds, though armed with power to brave
The scholar's daring thought, and make the world their slave.

The music of the soul can ne'er be mute.
What though the brazen clang of antique form
Stop for a hundred years the angel's lute,—
The angel smiles, and when the deafening storm
Has pealed along the ages, with the warm
Touch the immortals own, he sings again,
Clearer and sweeter, like the sunshine after rain.

He sings the song no tyrant tongue represses;
He sings the song the world performs must join,
Though ages stand as mutes. For he insists
With such sweet emphasis, each chord divine,
That, soon or late, along the living line
Of hearts that form Humanity, there thrills
A sympathetic nerve no time or custom kills.

Humanity must answer when God speaks,
As sure as echo to the human voice.
And every grand o'ertrapping lie which breaks
With furious flood and century-deafening noise
In the eternal symphony that joys
Along, is but one base pipe or chord
That shall be tuned again when Reason sits as lord.

Eternal Truth shines on o'er Error's cloud,
Which, for a little, veils the living light.
Therefore, though the true bard may sing aloud
His soul-song in the unresponsive night,
His words—swift, arrowy fire—must fly and light,
Sooner or later, kindling south and north,
Till skulking Falsehood from her den be hunted forth.

Work on, O fainting hearts! Through storm and drouth,
Somewhere your winged heart-seeds will be blown,
And plant a living grove;—from mouth to mouth,
O'er oceans, into speech and lands unknown,
Even till the long-foreseen result be grown
To ripeness, filled like fruit with other seed,
Which Time shall sow anew, and reap when men shall need.

There is no death, but only change on change.
The life-force of all forms, in tree and flower,
In rocks and rivers, and in clouds that range
Through heaven, in grazing beasts, and in the power
Of mind, goes forth forever, an unspent dower,
Glowing and flashing through the universe,
Kindling the light of stars, and joy of poet's verse!

Each hour and second is the marriage-morn
Of spirit-life and matter; as when kings
Wed peasants, and their simple charms adorn
With Oriental gems and sparkling rings
And diadems, and with all royal things
Making their eyes familiar,—so, with tones
Sweet and unheard before, conduct them to their throne.

One mighty circle God in heaven hath set,
Woven of myriad links,—lives, deaths unknown,—
Where all beginnings and all ends are met
To follow and serve each other,—Nature's zone
And zodiac, round whose seamless arc are strewn
A million and a million hues of light
That blend and glow and burn, beyond our realm of night.

O ye who pined in dungeons for the sake
Of truths which tyrants shadowed with their hate;
Whose only crime was that ye were awake
Too soon, or that your brothers slept too late,— Mountainous minds! upon whose tops the great
Sunrise of knowledge came, long ere its glance
Fell on the foggy swamps of fear and ignorance,—

The time shall come when from your heights serene
Beyond the dark, ye will look back and smile
To see the sterile earth all growing green,
Where Science, Art, and Love repeat Heaven's style
In crowded city and on desert isle,
Till Eden blooms where martyr-fires have burned,
And to the Lord of Life all hearts and minds are turned.

The seeds are planted and the spring is near.
Ages of blight are but a fleeting frost.
Truth circles into truth. Each mote is dear
To God. No drop of ocean e'er is lost,
No leaf forever dry and tempest-tossed.
Life centres deathless underneath decay,
And no true word or deed can ever pass away.

And ye, O Seraphs in the morn of time!
Birds whose entrancing voices in the spring
Of primal Truth and Beauty, were the chimes
Of heaven and earth! still we may hear you sing.
No clang of hierarchal bells shall ring,
To drown your carol, in the airs that move
And stir the dawning age of Liberty and Love!

Light,—light breaks on the century's farthest round;
Light in the sky, light in the humblest home.
The unebbing tides of God, where errors drowned
Sink down to fathomless destruction, come
Swelling amain. Truth builds her eternal dome
Vast as the sky. Nations are linked in one.
Light, Love, henceforth shall reign forever and alone!

CASH RECEIPTS.

N.B.—Postage stamps are not included here, though credited on subscriptions, etc.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING AUGUST 10.

E. S. Campbell, $3.20; A. M. Dent, $5; Marcellus H. Parker, $3.30; O. P. Wrecks, $3.30; E. W. Gunn, $3; W. L. Coffinbury, $3.30; J. C. Delano, $10; Henry Obermeyer, $3.20; C. A. W. Crosby, $3.20; Benj. A. Andrews, $3.14; F. S. Cabot, $1.25; Maggie Devos, $1.00; Geo. Martin, $3; Wm. Galpin, 90 cents; F. J. Hoyt, $1.80; W. L. Taylor, $3.20; Guido Marx, $3.20; John M. Thomas, $3.25; Mrs. A. G. Richards, $1; J. H. Briggs, $3.20; Jas. W. Bartlett, $3.20; Rev. J. H. Allen, 25 cents; Cash, $10; A. Osborne, $4.10; Samuel Cole, $3.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N.B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the amount of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N.B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX, which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N.B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, AUGUST 15, 1878.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON. TOLDOO OFFICE, No. 35 MONROE STREET: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N.B.—The following resolution was adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3, 1876: "Resolved, That we accept the offer of the Boston INDEX to be our official organ of communication with the public, for the publication of announcements, acknowledgments, and other official papers of the Board of Directors; but that we assume no responsibility for anything else published in its columns and claim no control or influence in its general editorial management."

N.B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, MRS. ELIZABETH CARY STANTON, J. L. STODDARD, ELIZABETH WRIGHT, C. D. B. MILLS, W. D. LE SURE, BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, Editorial Contributors.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Until September 1, the editorial charge of THE INDEX will be wholly in the hands of Mr. A. W. Stevens, who has kindly consented to relieve me of all literary responsibility for it during the present month. F. E. ABBOT.

BOSTON, Aug. 1.

F. E. A. REPORT.

The Eleventh Annual Report of the Free Religious Association, printed in pamphlet form, is now ready for distribution. It contains the reports of the Executive Committee and Treasurer; essay by T. B. Wakeman, Esq., of New York, on "The Religion of Humanity, and How it may be Organized"; essay by Rev. W. H. Spencer, of Haverhill, on "The Religion of Supernaturalism, and How it is being Disorganized"; and addresses by O. B. Frothingham, George W. Curtis, Anna C. Garlin, Maurice Ellinger, and Mrs. Elizabeth Oakes Smith (the latter including a poem).

Members of the Association who have paid the annual fee of $1.00 within the last twelve months will receive the report free, in all cases where their post-office addresses are known. To others the price is forty cents single copy; four or more in one package, twenty-five cents each.

Address "Free Religious Association," 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary.

MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD is undoubtedly fulfilling a noble mission in so extensively travelling the country as he does, engaging in debates with Orthodox champions, delivering lectures on liberal themes, and generally reasoning and persuading men out of their superstitions, fears, and enervating longings as to a future life, and engaging their attention in the work of making this life divine and this state heavenly. Although we differ decidedly from what we suppose to be Mr. Underwood's materialism and atheism, we are bound to say that the method and spirit of his propaganda appear to us entirely unobjectionable. The God and the religion which he antagonizes we take to be the creation mainly of the old-school theology; and we care not how soon they are overthrown by such doubtful assailants. But there is an idea of God and religion in which we firmly believe, consistent with reason and the most approved science; which idea we think may go far to comfort, encourage, and reassure men's hearts in the midst of this life's trials, disappointments, and sorrows. But Mr. Underwood is doing his own work in his own way; and, as we have said, it is a work and a way to which we take no exceptions, but indeed commend. That he does not supplement the preaching of his own views with that of others which to our mind seem more complete and perfect, is surely no reason why we should not heartily speed him on his chosen course.

JUDGING from all we can learn of the prospects, we should say that the Watkins Convention promises to be a most agreeable and successful affair. Aside from the intellectual attractions of the Convention itself (and they are evidently to be first class), the natural beauties of the place of meeting are of themselves sufficient to tempt visitors thence. The Lakes, the Glens, the Falls, and the Springs in the vicinity are known far and wide as lovely and advantageous places of resort. And if all reports are true, we have no hesitation in saying that our liberal friends attending the Convention will make a vital mistake if they do not try to get entertainment at the Glen Park Hotel in Watkins. It is said to be the largest and finest Hotel in the place, and to be kept by a gentleman (Mr. C. S. Frost) who never fails to give satisfaction to his guests. The Hotel is situated within five minutes' ride of the railroad station and the steamboat landing; and its omnibuses will convey guests to the House free. Mr. Frost's terms are $2.00, $2.50, and $3.00 a day, according to rooms. The Hotel is near to all the points of interest which our friends will be likely to desire to visit; and the good entertainment which Mr. Frost is sure to give their bodies will not be a bad preparation for that which they are as sure to have for their minds in the Convention. We must not forget to say that Mr. George H. Foster, of Boston, will be the accredited representative of THE INDEX, at the Convention; and will be happy to receive new subscriptions and take dues on old ones.

THE FREE RELIGIOUS SOCIETY in Providence, R.I., have invited Mr. Frederic A. Hinckley of Boston to become their resident speaker,—thus adopting the plan of the Cosmian Society at Florence, Mass. We believe that the Providence society have shown great wisdom in thus deciding, and they surely could not have made a better choice than that of Mr. Hinckley to be their permanent leader. Mr. Hinckley never had any visible ordaining hands laid upon him, but he is a natural minister nevertheless, in the best sense of that word. He is full of moral zeal and energy, a forcible and manly speaker; and withal, though a man of most profound and earnest convictions, one of very broad and tolerant sympathies. He is a prince among reformers; for while he never ceases to stand bravely by his own opinions, he has the rare capacity of understanding and appreciating the man who differs from him. Mr. Hinckley will certainly do our Providence friends a great deal of good, if they will let him; and it will not principally be his fault, if he does not bind them into a serried and efficient organization. They have shown a deal of courage and fidelity in persevering to live as long as they have, and among them are some of the choicest and best spirits that ever blessed any community. We have a peculiar interest in the Providence society, and a like interest in the man they have chosen to come and labor with them. Our warmest wishes will attend them both. Mr. Hinckley has accepted their invitation, and will join them early in the fall. It is superfluous, and yet grateful to our feelings, to say that his many friends in Boston will seriously miss him.

THE INDEX is favored this week with two productions from the gifted pen of C. P. Cranch. We believe that these columns have never before been enriched by any of his writings, and we are happy and proud to be the medium of introducing him here to the readers of this journal. Mr. Cranch has for more than thirty years been well known to the literary and artistic circles of America as a poet and painter of no ordinary genius; but his consummate modesty has always held him aloof from that strenuous competition with rivals which appears to be necessary to ensure to a man even of rare ability that which is called success. But his exquisite poems and beautiful pictures have been deep sources of delight to thousands; and to those who are privileged to know him well in private life he is esteemed a most rare and favored soul. Mr. Cranch was one of the early transcendentalists of New England, leaving the Unitarian ministry after a brief experience,—as did Mr. Emerson, John S. Dwight, and others,—because his spirit craved a freer scope than was there allowed. He was a prominent contributor to the Dial, the transcendental magazine edited by Emerson and Margaret Fuller. Art soon claimed him as her natural child, no less than Poesy, and he spent many years abroad in the cultivation of his artistic talents. Afterwards he returned to New York, where he had a studio for some time. At present he lives in Cambridge, where literature, art, and social intercourse about equally divide his time. Mr. Cranch, we need not say, is a genuine idealist in his philosophy; although, like many others of the same school, he has a brave "heart for any fate" which undoubted science may ultimately impose.

LESSON NOTE.

The increasing din of our modern civilization has for some time been truly appalling, and we have long felt that sooner or later the serious attention of our people would have to be given to some method for its diminution, or our nervous systems would be shattered on the brazen shield of our material ambition. As a people, we have bestowed more or less careful consideration on well nigh every other matter involving the sanity of our minds and bodies; but to this augmenting and diabolical nuisance of noise we have consented or submitted, as if it were something commendable or at least absolutely inevitable. Fifty years or so ago, our great thoroughfares and streets were comparatively quiet; but within that time we have been adding every conceivable racket to every other conceivable racket,—in the shape of clanging machinery, pounding vehicles, shrieking whistles, and dingling bells,—until we have made all our great cities and considerable towns perfect babels of confused and confusing noises, and converted our conspicuous avenues of travel and communication into regular pandemoniums of devilish din.

The theory has been that we could or did "get used" to all this tumult, and that we came not to "mind it" at all, or to suffer any inconvenience from it. But this was all a delusion. Epictetus said to his master, when the latter was punishing his slave for some supposed misdemeanor, "If you are not careful, you will break my leg." The master persevered in his cruel torture of the noble bondman, on the plea no doubt that it was needful discipline, and at last did break the leg; whereupon Epictetus coolly remarked, "There, I told you so!" But this stoical philosophy on the part of Epictetus didn't make it one whit more comfortable or useful to him to have a broken leg, nor the folly and madness of his master less real. So this would-be reconciling unctious that we lay to our souls of "getting used" to our own noise does not render that noise any less impeachable for unsanity and needlessness, nor in the long run hide its disastrous effects on our mental and bodily health. The alarming increase of nervous diseases in connection with the increase of noise would seem to suggest some relation of cause and effect between the two. Then the fact that our people of late years have found it more and more necessary to abandon cities and large towns and much-travelled thoroughfares, and seek homes in the quiet country and places remote from the bustling centres and lines of hurried and tumultuous life,—this, too, is significant that consciously or unconsciously noise is intolerable to sound nerves, even temper, and patient dispositions. Doubtless a continuous noise is more tolerable than a periodic one, even though the former may be much greater than the latter; and yet that a loud and continuous noise causes a great wear and tear of the nervous system is beyond question. One who has investigated this subject ably and scientifically says that if the incessant roar of a great city were suddenly to be brought to a stop thousands would fall prostrate with exhaustion. Of course. And so will the man who has "got used" to taking opium lose all his strength and energy when the stimulating drug is denied him. All this goes to prove what it would seem every one must know; namely, that too much or too prolonged excitation of the nerves produces a deadening or vicious effect on them.

The truth is, we are hurrying and banging our nervous systems to death in this age of thunder-and-lightning civilization; and we are slowly coming to the consciousness that "that's what's the matter." How many of our working men and women just rub through the busy months of the year, in the midst of din and under high pressure, feeding their languishing hearts the while on hopes of a "vacation;" and then, when that time possibly comes, running off to the bracing seaside, or up among the grand mountains, or away into some cool country retreat, finding the month or so of vacation scarce time enough to repair their shattered energies, restore their wasted strength, bring back the sparkle and color to their lustreless eyes and faded faces, and send them home again to grapple with another year's hurry and noise! In this hot and tumultuous age we are having our lives crushed out of us between our numerously growing wants and ambitions; and are bringing children into the world to inherit our nervousness, impatience, and irritability, our poor blood and feeble constitutions. Is there any necessity for all this, and is there any remedy?

We are glad to see that there is an awakening in certain authoritative quarters to the necessity of putting some check on the careless if not unscrupulous ambition of our times to introduce so-called modern improvements for travel and trade, without considering the effect they may have on human health and life; and that especially the nuisance of noise is getting an indictment from scientific and thoughtful minds. The Springfield Republican informs us that one hundred and thirty-five physicians and surgeons of New York have protested before the grand jury against the operation of the elevated railway in sixth avenue in that city. These doctors practise in the fine blocks along that street, and are moved to a forcible appeal in behalf of their patients. The ninth avenue road which has been in operation for some years, passes quite a different quality of dwellings, to the comfort of which public opinion was less sensitive; but when the train sweeps along the brown-stone fronts humanity is aroused. This is what the doctors say about the diabolism of noise:—

"The degree of the annoyance resulting from the noise of its traffic as now conducted hardly admits of exaggeration. It disturbs and interrupts all mental processes and all common conversation near the line of its route during the passing of the trains, which, according to the plans of the company, is to be almost continuous. In our deliberate professional judgment, we declare that this noise is capable of doing, and undoubtedly will do, great and permanent injury to those who may be compelled to live within reach of its force. The soft brain of childhood cannot healthfully develop, and the faculties of mature life must rapidly waste, under the continuous excitation of a special sense. This is a physiological axiom, and does not admit of debate. Disease beginning in or maintained by disturbances of the nervous system is the great fact of modern pathology. The State can hardly provide lunatic asylums as rapidly as the number of proper subjects for them increases. Perverted mental and moral action, cerebral exhaustion, insomnia, hysteria, chorea, mania, paralysis, meningitis, and decay of nutrition must be largely promoted among those who live along the line of the railway, while to some the alternative will be deafness, or dementia, or death. It has been already definitely observed that patients suffering from inflammatory and other diseases, whose well-being requires rest in all its forms, have had convalescence arrested and relapses provoked by this noise. Tradesmen upon sixth avenue complain that as evening comes on they are overpowered by an unusual sense of weariness, caused partly by the irritant effect of the jar and din in which they must live, and partly by the necessity of talking all day in an over-loud voice. This strain upon the function of voice and respiration directly tends to produce laryngeal catarrh, bronchitis, emphysema, and pulmonary hemorrhage,—the antecedent and often the cause of pulmonary consumption. The municipal authority is relied upon to protect the nostril of the citizen from a disease-bearing stench. Has not the ear a right to an equal justice?"

The Republican, in commenting upon this protest of the New York physicians against the noisy railway, says: "The experience of New York with this road will probably direct attention more generally to the avoidance of sound vibrations in architecture and locomotion. . . . We believe that noise is not only an annoyance, but a costly one. Wherever there is noise, there is vibration, friction, and wear and tear, and frequent necessity of repair. Noises are needlessly multiplied by itinerant tradesmen. Bells were once a distinction; but now that horse-cars, omnibuses, bakers' carts, and the yeast man have taken them they are simply a nuisance. We do not doubt that attention to this subject will be found greatly to reduce the uproar now thought necessary to the conduct of a city's business. A few years ago the whistling of locomotives was greatly reduced within the limits of Boston, on the appeal of the State railroad commission, and upon grounds of public health. There are other noises equally deleterious and equally unnecessary, which it would be a relief to have done away with or modified."

As a further testimony on this subject, we quote from the Providence Journal the following remarks on the nuisance of noise:—

"American people are altogether too tolerant of noise. . . . Cleanliness and other virtues are isolated upon from each individual or corporation for the benefit of the whole community, but noise is well-nigh permitted to rage rampant, without the least effort to check it. It is perhaps considered effeminate to object to noise; and we have not yet arrived at a realizing sense of its power upon the health, as we were long ignorant of the effect of sewer gas. . . . Some day we fondly hope that the steam whistle and the howling huckster will no more be tolerated within the limits of a civilized city than menhaden factories or soap works, or even pest houses and small-pox hospitals."

MATTER AND SPIRIT.

The old Oriental religions regarded matter as base; the body as a clog to the soul. And all our modern religious thought is clouded with the remains of the old beliefs. At last matter came to be regarded as the servant of spirit, and the body as the necessary instrument of the soul, but still inert and perishable; still somewhat conceived of as the opposite of spirit.

Will not the thought of the future conceive of matter as something higher,—even as one with spirit?

We can never get rid of the material side of mind. Who can ever explain the wonderful connection of the senses with the soul? Who can interpret the marvellous power the material universe has over our thoughts, our imaginations, our affections? Who can explain why Nature has an answering voice to all our moods? Who tell the secret of the sunshine, the moonlight, the changing seasons, the various and exquisite perfume of flowers, the songs of the birds, the symphonies of Beethoven? Why should a certain odor bring back the scenes of boyhood? Why should a simple tune swell the hidden waters of recollection till they overflow in tears? Why, on a bright morning, when we walk towards the east, should the heart leap with joy and hope, till we break into singing,—while the afternoon and the sinking sun move us to pensiveness and even sadness? It is all inexplicable.

But has not matter here, affecting us through the senses, such a refined and subtle ministry that it becomes something more than the mere servant of the soul? Are not the manifestations of matter the sole avenue to the secret sanctuaries of this temple? We are accustomed to call matter dead. Is not the mind, too, dead without matter? Can there be spirit without form? Then why not call matter one side of an existence of which spirit is the reverse? Does not matter help to build one-half, at least, of the bridge between sensation and knowledge?

Remember that we no more see matter in itself than spirit in itself. We know nothing of either except through phenomena. Why, then, should not one be as potent and alive as the other?

The philosophy of the future will be variously expressed,—as recognition of the totality or solidarity of life; as a conception of the necessity of physical form as well as of psychical substance; of matter as only an under-side of spirit. It will be a philosophy which will reconcile the opposite tendencies of materialism and idealism; where all facts of consciousness will be presented as alike worthy of investigation, and their relative importance tested; where the balloon of metaphysics will need the grappling-hooks and anchors of the physical sciences; and these in turn will be indebted to the abstract thought of the mental philosopher, and the daring imagination of the poet.

Swedenborg had a strong and deep-seated conviction of this philosophy of the reconciliation of matter and spirit, in his doctrine of the spiritual body. But in Swedenborg the philosophical truth was, here as elsewhere in the books of this great but singular genius, clouded and inseparably confused with his theological views of the Hebrew Bible. His philosophy; usually based on science and on profound intuitive thought, was hopelessly saturated with the local color of the Jewish Scriptures, and with the dogmas thence derived. And though he swept away some of these dogmas as understood by the Christian Church, and explained others in a rational way, it was impossible for him to escape from the atmosphere and scenery of Bible and Church, and come out into the free air of Nature.

What in Swedenborg was founded on speculative intuition, and buttressed by Scriptural symbolism, may in the philosophy of the future find an eternal basis of fact.

What a perpetual testimony is it of the absolute necessity of this marriage of matter with spirit, that every created soul must be incarnated in a visible body! Paul compared the human body to the temple in which the spirit was enshrined; a noble image. But modern thought will conceive of this holy temple as alive with the presence of God; and in its essence as mysterious, perhaps as imperishable, as the spirit it incarnates. While it discriminates between the rational-moral nature of man and the bodily appetites, it will show how the latter may not only be subservient, but may be conditioned and educated so as to be absolutely necessary to the former in order to develop a complete specimen of the genus homo.

The fact that both matter and mind are only phenomenal existence should be one great motive toward their eternal reconciliation, and also toward belief in God and immortality. In exploring either, we come upon the region of the unknown. They are both manifestations of a power behind them, by which they appear. And so the invisible things of God, as Paul says, are made known through the visible. Both matter and mind are found to rest on indestructible forces, and therefore the inference is that they are both immortal. The more appearance, then, the more reality. And the universe is conceived of as an unshattering revelation of the divine love and intelligence.

True science, then, instead of leading us into the bog of the materialists, avoids this Slough of Despond, and conducts us to the high and beautiful lands of affirmation and faith.

Grant that science limits herself to experience of facts. But the world of facts is a very wide world. It does not follow that she is bound to exclude all experience except that of the senses, or even of the pure intellect. The moral, affectional, and religious nature of man surely affords wide enough ground for experimental knowledge. True science is patient, and wide-seeing, and reverent. Before she can formulate a complete cosmos, she must wait till all the facts of the universe are in. And who can say when that shall be?

So far as science can evolve the greater life of reason and conscience and imagination and artistic faculty out of primordial animal instincts and the utilitarian needs of society, let her work have due consideration and praise. But when she tries to account on a purely material basis for the grand preponderating forces of the moral nature, and to furnish the genealogy of the moral ideal of Christ or Buddha; or when she would trace the intellect and the imagination of a Shakespeare, or the musical genius of a Bach or a Beethoven, from some remote anthropoid ape,—let her pause till she is sure of all her facts and their bearings.

It is high time for truth-seekers to protest against these ultra-materialistic tendencies of science. It is time we should question the first premises, if they start with representing the mind as a tabula rasa, a negative, passive recipient, like a sheet of white paper, on which anything can be scrawled. The mind is a great factor, and not a passive recipient of knowledge. It is a rather active partner in that great firm—Nature, Spirit, & Co. It is an old established firm, and should own some capital by this time. And why should not our private, moral, and religious experiences (backed by the accumulated records of the world's experience in past time) be counted in as contributions—when repeatedly verified as experience—to the treasury of science?

C. P. CRANCH.

[CONCLUDED FROM PAGE 388.]

objects and results are to those of the average American politician what the discoveries and inventions of applied science are to the legerdemain of a street juggler. The professions still remain open, and in these comparatively limited fields the results are good. Literature offers another field; but here the temptation is powerful to write or speak down to the level of that vast average of education which makes the largest returns in profit and celebrity. The best literature we have has followed the natural law and sprung up in two or three places where educated intelligence had reached a point high enough to promise it a favorable hearing. For the rest, our writers address themselves to an audience so much accustomed to light food that they have no stomach for the strong. The public demand has its effect, too, on the pulpit. It is pleasanter to tell the hearer what he likes to hear than to tell him what he needs; and the love of popularity is not confined to the laity.

From one point of view, the higher education is of no great use among us. It is not necessary to make a millionaire, a party leader (such as our party leaders are), or a popular preacher or writer. So little is it needed for such purposes, that the country is full of so-called "practical men," who cry out against it in scorn. Yet, from a true point of view, it is of supreme use and necessity, and a deep responsibility rests on those who direct it. What shall be its aims? Literature, scholarship, and physical science are all of importance; but, considered in themselves, their place is subordinate, for they cannot alone meet the requirements of the times. It has been said that liberal culture tends to separate men from the nation at large, and form them into a class apart; and, without doubt, this is to a certain degree true of the merely aesthetic, literary, or scholastic culture. What we most need is a broad and masculine education, bearing on questions of society and government; not repelling from active life, but preparing for it and impelling toward it. The discipline of the university should be a training for the arena; and, within the past few years, no little progress has been made in this direction.

Some half a century ago, a few devoted men began what seemed a desperate crusade against a tremendous national evil. American slavery has now passed into history. It died a death of violence, to our shame be it said; for the nation had not virtue, temperance, and wisdom enough to abolish it peacefully and harmlessly; but it is dead. We would not compare the agitation against it to the far more complex and less animating movement by which alone our present evils can be met and checked. Conviction and enthusiasm, with very little besides, served the purpose of the abolition agitators. Their appeal was to sentiment and conscience, not to reason; and their work demanded a kind of men very different from those demanded by the work of political regeneration. The champion of the new reform will need no whit less enthusiasm, but it must be tempered with judgment and armed with knowledge. One idea will not serve him. He must have many, all tending to one and; an integrity that can neither be tempted nor enervated, and a courage that nothing can shake.

Here, then, is a career worthy of the best, and demanding the best; for none but they can grapple with the complicated mischiefs of our politics. Those gallant youths, and others such as they, who were so ready to lay down life for their country, may here find a strife more difficult and not less honorable. If these virtues in them for an effort so arduous, then it is folly to despair. If a depraved political system sets them aside in favor of meaner men, and denies them the career to which the best interests of the nation call them, then let them attack this depraved system, and, in so doing, make a career of their own. The low politician is not a noble foe, but he is strong and dangerous enough to make it manly to fight him; and the cause of his adversary is the cause of the people, did they but know it; or at least of that part of the people that is worth the name. No doubt, the strife is strangely unequal; for on one side are ranged all the forces of self-interest, always present and always active; on the other, only duty and patriotism. But if the virtue and reason of the nation can be as well organized as its folly and knavery are organized to-day, a new hope will rise upon us, and they who can achieve such a result will not lack their reward. The "literary feller" may yet make himself a practical force, and, in presence of the public opinion which he has evoked, the scurvy crew who delight to gibe at him may be compelled to disguise themselves in garments of unwonted decency.

It is in the cities that the diseases of the body politic are gathered to a head, and it is here that the need of attacking them is most urgent. Here the dangerous classes are most numerous and strong, and the effects of flinging the suffrage to the mob are most disastrous. Here the barbarism that we have armed and organized stands ready to overwhelm us. Our cities have become a prey. Where the carcass is, the vultures gather together. The industrious are taxed to feed the idle, and offices are distributed to perpetuate abuses and keep knaves in power. Some of our city councils, where every ward sends its representatives, each according to its nature, offer a curious and instructive spectacle; for here one sees men of mind and character striving for honest government under vast and ever-increasing difficulties, mingled with vicious bores in whose faces brute, knave, and fool contend which shall write his mark most vilely.

The theory of inalienable rights becomes an outrage to justice and common-sense, when it hands over great municipal corporations, the property of those who hold stock in them, to the keeping of greedy and irresponsible crowds controlled by adventurers as reckless as themselves, whose object is nothing but plunder. But the question is not one of politics, it is one of business; and political rights, inalienable or otherwise, are not in any true sense involved in it. The city which can so reorganize itself that those who supply the means of supporting it shall have the chief control over their expenditure will lead the way in abolishing an anomaly as ridiculous as it is odious, and give an impulse to its own prosperity which will impel other cities to follow its example. That better class of citizens who have abandoned civic affairs in disgust will gradually return and acquire in municipal administration a training which may avail them afterward in wider fields. The reform of cities would be a long and hopeful step toward the reform of the States and the Nation.—North American Review.

THE VENERABLE Richard H. Dana, who was the first to acquaint the public with the poetic gifts of the late William Cullen Bryant, by publishing "Thanatopsis" in the periodical of which he was then the editor—the North American Review—is living in beautiful retirement at Manchester-by-the-sea. He dislikes noise and activity; fashionable society is his Nemesis. It drove him away from Newport; it impelled him to leave Nahant. He owns his Manchester home, and the estate is so large that it is left undisturbed by summer populations. He is over ninety years of age, erect of form and firm of step, a living link between the literature of the past and the literature of the present. He introduced Bryant to the world, watched him grow to be a very old man and pass away. He was the contemporary of Percival, Alleton, and Channing. He is the sole survivor of a distinguished circle of literary men who were at the meridian of life and in the morning of their reputation fifty years ago. Mr. Dana is not a total abstainer. He drinks wine in moderation, and eats whatever his fancy craves. He has never been abroad, and has no desire to leave his picturesque home again.—Boston Herald.

BISMARCK is immensely taken with "Dizzy," and says he is the only man he has met for some years really worth talking to. That may be partly because the said "Dizzy" so seldom does talk that when he unbosoms himself he is really worth listening to. It is an odd thing, but it is true that no one in London can really be said to know this strange, lonely sort of man who has placed himself at the head of the English government. He has no confidants and few personal friends. I asked a gentleman who ought to know him well whether he talked much to him. "He never talks to anybody," said he; "sometimes, perhaps, to Monty Corry, but only on matters of business. He will not dine out, as a rule, and when he does go anywhere the chances are that he will not say much." A man, one might have supposed, after Carlyle's own heart; but Carlyle detests him. There he is, however, the central figure in English public life.—London letter to the New York World.

A PAISLEY PUBLICAN was complaining of his servant-maid that she could never be found when required. "She'll gang out o' the house," said he, "twenty times for ance she'll come in."

Communications.

A NEW LIBERAL LEAGUE.

VINCENNES, Ind., July 22, 1878.

EDITOR INDEX:—

The liberals of this city, to the number of about twenty ladies and gentlemen, have at last organized a liberal league, and have applied for a charter. The following is a list of our officers: Charles Graeter, President; O. F. Baker, Secretary; S. S. Burnett, Treasurer.

This is our feeble beginning, which we hope may soon grow into stronger results. While our city contains a large liberal element, it is of a character requiring development. We are not blessed with talented local speakers, and are too poor as a society to employ foreign lecturers. Much of our work must be done by the help of books, tracts, periodicals, and journals. Were we able to procure and properly distribute good works of this class, we should soon accomplish the best of results.

We promise our liberal friends everywhere that we will use every exertion to make our club a grand success; and we invite a correspondence with all who sympathize with us. O. F. B., Sec'y.

THE WATKINS CONVENTION.

MR. STEVENS:—

Allow me to ask the readers of THE INDEX who are interested in the success of the Watkins Convention to prepare at once a notice of the meeting, and get it published in the local papers of their neighborhood.

The speakers who have promised to be present are so numerous that I will not take your space to name them. They number some thirty-five in all, all of whom are able, and many of them men and women of national reputation. We are also to be blessed with good singers. First, Prof. Hudson, of Detroit,—known as the liberal Sankey of the West,—was engaged with his sister and her daughter; in addition, the "Hutchinson Family" have promised to attend and add to the interest of the occasion with their grand vocal and instrumental music.

I desire, moreover, to inform the readers of THE INDEX, who do not already know the fact, that Watkins Glen is one of the most interesting summer resorts in America, and that natural scenery is nowhere more attractive than here. It is worth a long journey to view it.

I have just learned that the Albany & Susquehanna Railroad Company will furnish cheap excursion tickets from Albany and return; this will assist Boston and New England people in reaching the convention. From most of the cities of the West excursion tickets can be obtained to Chautauque Lake and return; the holder can then get another excursion ticket from Salamanca or Dunkirk and return, which is probably about the best way to come from the West. These Western rates were obtained for the great Orthodox gathering at Chautauque Lake, but the tickets answer just as well for an "infidel" gathering. These tickets are good for a month or more after the Convention.

If further information is required write to me; and remember that you must first get an order from me to get excursion tickets on the Northern Central Railroad, the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the Philadelphia & Erie Railroad.

Liberal friends of America, lay aside business for a week, and meet in one grand body at Watkins!

H. L. GREEN, Sec'y.

HIGHER EDUCATION FOR WOMEN.

Whatever differences of opinion may exist upon the question of female suffrage, or even upon the less mooted point of woman's employments, there is, at length, an entire unanimity in regard to her right to the best and highest education that her abilities and circumstances will enable her to obtain. In the thirteenth century the proper education of woman was defined by a European writer as "knowing how to pray to God, to love man, to knit, and to sew"; and for several centuries scarcely more than reading, writing, and accomplishments were added to the list. Gradually, however, the barriers against her mental improvement have given way, and now each year opens up new and improved methods for her intellectual development. Even the sneer of "blue-stocking" has died away, or, if at times feebly echoed by some would-be wit, it falls harmless, having lost its sting. Many of the best colleges in the land have freely opened their doors to women, and we hail the day when, in fact as well as in name, her educational advantages shall be established on as solid a foundation as those of the other sex.

To promote this desirable end there is nothing so much needed as thoroughness. At present the chief impediment to the higher education of woman is the superficial character of her studies. In the two, three, or four years commonly devoted to the higher branches, she is rapidly led through a maze of languages, mathematics, sciences, philosophy, history, literature, and accomplishments that a lifetime would be too short to apprehend. If conscientious, perhaps her health breaks down under the constant strain; and then we hear the cry of the physical incapacity of the sex for mental labor. In any case, her mind is left with an inextricable tangle of confused knowledge, which she can neither classify nor remember; and her mental powers, taxed but not disciplined, are unable to cope with subjects of deep thought or of practical importance. Education, to be worthy of the name, necessitates time, labor, patience, system; and those who crave its privileges must pay its price. It is far better to learn a few things thoroughly than many superficially, not only for the worth of the knowledge thus obtained, but still more for the mental development that ensues.

Teachers and friends of education generally are becoming awakened to this need of thorough mental training for our young women, and many judicious plans are being brought into operation to secure it. Perhaps none have been found of greater practical efficacy than that of frequent written examinations, given at short intervals, upon the studies which have previously engaged the attention. These afford so fair, and usually so correct, a test of the scholar's real acquaintance with the subject as to leave no doubt as to her fitness for further advancement. They also afford an equally correct test of the character of the teaching and the wisdom of the plans that have been pursued, thus keeping alive in both pupil and teacher the spirit of improvement, and exposing all superficiality, however brilliant a gloss may have hidden it from view. In many of our best schools, both public and private, this plan is being put into successful operation; and we cannot too highly recommend it in every stage of education.

In 1874, Harvard University offered to women, as a test of culture, written examinations of two grades, preliminary and advanced, and promised certificates to successful candidates, stating that they had "passed," or "passed with distinction," or "passed with the highest distinction," the prescribed examinations. These were held for the first time in Boston, then in Cambridge, New York, and Cincinnati. A local committee is now organized in Philadelphia, to cooperate with Harvard, and to offer the same opportunities here. Neither of the examinations is identical with the entrance examination of the University, or with any of those given to resident students, but are simply regarded as tests of liberal culture, and the certificates as assurances of proficiency from a high and most trustworthy source. It is to be hoped that many of our young women will take advantage of this opportunity, and, during the coming year, will prepare themselves to join this class of candidates for literary honors. Whether regarded as a special preparation for teaching, or other literary work, or as a means of purely private mental cultivation, it cannot fail to richly compensate those who are willing to strive earnestly after a thorough education.—Philadelphia Ledger.

HINTS FOR VACATION READING.

BY CHARLES ELIOT NORTON.

It is certainly one of the chief pleasures of vacation that a man, busied the rest of the year in set studies, has leisure during its course for the reading of books for delight. And remembering Lord Bacon's saying, that "studies serve for delight," he may seek for something different from what is known as "light reading." And yet to give any general advice in the matter of the selection of books for vacation reading is not altogether easy; for the choice made by each man must be determined by considerations in great degree special to himself. There are, indeed, a few books with which every one who pretends to education ought to be familiar; and the sooner he begins acquaintance with them the better it is for him. There should be no need to call over their names, but I am afraid that some of our college students fail to make themselves friends with Shakespeare; and I am sure that some who have begun to know their Shakespeare have yet never read the Prologue to the "Canterbury Tales" or the first part of Don Quixote.

But next to, and near to, the supreme masters of delight come a band of authors of whom one may say that "to love them is a liberal education"; for instance, Montaigne; and what pleasanter vacation reading could there be than his essays,—the most frank of books, and one of those most full of human nature; remote in tone, but contemporary in spirit,—the writing of a gentleman? Or what better or more befitting use could one make of the long, but only too short, summer days on country hill-sides or by the sea-shore, than by the reading of some old poet or dramatist,—whether it be Chaucer or Spenser or Marlowe or Ben Jonson or Milton, with such helpful comment as may be got from the essays of Lowell or Hazlitt or Charles Lamb? Truly, a young fellow were to be envied with such companions.

And there is a use in such company beyond the direct and immediate enjoyment. It may serve to introduce us to the best society of the living. A man who has refined himself in companionship with the poets will easily make friends with the men of culture whom he may chance to meet. A common taste is one of the strongest bonds of sympathy.

There is yet another sort of reading which may be well done in vacation; reading that shall illustrate and give life to the studies of the remaining year. If a student has become interested in any part of history, let him seek out the books written by men who were alive during the period of which he may desire fuller knowledge, the shapers or eye-witnesses of its events, or the nearest narrators of them. I will not commend a man for vacation reading to books in a language he does not read easily, and over which he would have "painfully to pore"; nor would I commend him to translations in general. But there are some translations good enough to read in lieu of the original; so that, for example, if one should wish to learn of the best thought of Athens in her best century, he could hardly do better than read Jowett's Plato, with the commentary to it afforded by Frere's Aristophanes. For the whole Greek and Roman time, Plutarch's Lives are an indispensable source of the most instructive and entertaining information,—the book of all among those that have come to us from the ancients that tells us most concerning the thoughts and lives of the great men of antiquity, and consequently a book that has always been a favorite with all sorts of readers, from Lord Bacon to Rousseau.

To come to a later time; the external spirit of the later chivalry and the Crusades is vividly expressed in Joinville's incomparable Life of St. Louis; while the Divine Comedy, which no ignorant of Italian should read in Mr. Longfellow's translation, is the summary of the faith, the convictions, the character, and the sentiment of the Middle Ages. These two books would open the way for many others.

One might thus give a long list of books for each modern century, which serve the purpose of making real to us the men of past times, and bringing us into relations with them as contemporaries. The diaries and autobiographies of men with any greatness or sincerity in them are always good reading. So are the best biographies.—Boswell's Life of Johnson, facile princeps. There could be no better study of the history of England in the seventeenth century than to read in sequence and comparison Isaac Walton's Lives of his friends, the Memoirs of Lord Herbert of Cherbury, Cromwell's Letters and Speeches, Pepys's and Evelyn's Diaries; and then, to connect America with England, to follow these up with John Winthrop's Journal and William Bradford's History.

But suppose it difficult to get books of this sort for vacation entertainment, there are every year likely to be one or two books, recently published and easily obtainable, which it will not be a waste of time for a lover of literature to read. Just now, for instance, we have two remarkable biographies, each interesting in itself, and both made still more interesting by comparison and contrast,—the Lives of Mr. Ticknor and of Lord Macaulay.

These are brief and slight hints; but nothing more is needed. Mr. Emerson's essay on "Books," in the volume entitled Society and Solitude, had best be the first piece of vacation reading, and will give all needed suggestions.—Harvard Advocate.

FREE SPEECH.

The following is the address of the Hon. Elizer Wright at the meeting in Faneuil Hall, on the evening of August 1, to protest against the infringement of free speech in the imprisonment of E. H. Heywood for circulating an alleged obscene pamphlet. Mr. Wright presided, and spoke as follows:—

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS:—

Being unexpectedly asked to preside at this meeting,—for I was never so honored before,—I ask your kind indulgence towards a few remarks on the matter that will be brought before you by speakers who will command your attention, as I cannot, by their eloquence. "Know thyself," said a Grecian sage; and he was recommending the most valuable kind of knowledge. It is good for the human race collectively as well as individually. Human society is not yet as happy as it might be, on account of the imperfection of its self-knowledge. It does not know its own goodness or the origin of it. It has no faith in its own virtue and honor. It seems to think that if it did not make statutes compelling every man and woman to be good under pains and penalties everybody would be bad. It seems to think if it only had statute law enough and severe enough everybody would be wise and virtuous, and vice and crime would cease. Well, why not? Make it impossible to be wicked, and shall we not all be righteous? Of course we shall be—after a sort. So abolish downhill and there will be no up-hill. With repressive law enough, thoroughly enforced, society will be perfectly innocent and quite flat.

But how can involuntary virtue be its own reward? One hundred and two years ago a heavy blow was delivered in the face and eyes of this notion that virtue is to be manufactured by law; that total depravity is the raw material out of which all that is good in the world is made by the joint government of priests and kings. It was the Declaration of American Independence. This remarkable document presupposes that virtue, honor, conscience, religion, are indigenous in the human race. In itself, and as interpreted by the Constitution of the United States, it restricts law to the defence of human rights, leaving all theoretical rights of superhuman beings to their own care, thus striking off at one blow all the old fetters of the soul, rusty with age and smeared with blood. The world—I mean the old one—stood aghast. It looked to see American society swallowed up in an ocean of vice, corruption, and crime. Now, for more than half of the one hundred and two years of this audacious experiment I have watched society to see the effect upon it of having speech, printing, and all sorts of opinion free—so far as they have been left free,—have watched and compared with the past and with the other side of the Atlantic; and I say to you I have seen society as a whole growing cleaner, sweeter, wiser, purer, nobler, happier, every year I have lived; and it is here now far better than what I saw on the other side of the Atlantic. Too well I know there is deplorable rottenness and falsehood, and too much of it in regard to the vital and naturally holy relation of the sexes, by which society perpetuates itself, and by the refinement of which it rises above the level of the brute beasts. But I do not believe the disease is growing worse, or that it affects the great body of the people, or that it can be in the least degree diminished by visiting with pains and penalties either the scientific or religious opinions that may be supposed to engender it. That the newspapers are now, every day, filled, as never before, with crimes, scandals, rascally failures, and fast life, luxury, extravagance, and folly, is no proof that people are growing worse. These, like all abnormal things, are news; and it is to be noticed that any newspaper now collects news from an area at least one hundred times greater than it could fifty years ago. Hence, supposing the crimes and scandals in a given population to be only half as rife as they were then, by the newspapers they would seem to be fifty times more so. Still, better and better as society grows, its sexual vices are too bad, to be sure. Read Rabelais, Boccaccio, and the Bible, and you will see it was always so, in spite of plenty of both ecclesiastical and civil law. It is not more statute law prescribing the relation of the sexes that society wants, but more knowledge of natural law, more self-knowledge, more knowledge of causes, consequences, moral and physical effects. With better opportunity to gain such knowledge in due season and from pure sources, the conservatism of innocence and the increase of virtue is possible, nay probable, nay almost as sure as sunrise. Nobody here doubts that there is such a thing as obscenity in literature and art, and that it is a bad thing. Unhappily, it is very difficult to define it or to prosecute it without increasing its mischief. But happily the sway of public taste is such that it is rather clandestine in our cities, quite so in the country. It takes detectives to find it in either. The States have had laws against it coming down from the days when it was less clandestine than now. They are severe enough, but have no more succeeded in suppressing it than in suppressing the obscene people who patronize it. It is quite another sort of force which has driven it into obscurity. But nobody comes here to complain of that law, or justify that literature. Nobody would have come here if loose and careless federal legislation had not been used to prosecute, prescribe, and punish honest freedom of opinion. Nobody here, I think, would object to a law regulating the transmission of literature through the mails, if it could so define obscenity as not to exclude a great part of our most valuable literature, including the Bible, and so as not to violate the true and constitutional liberty of the press. This is truly a difficult problem; and more than one able legislator, without despairing of the cause of good morals, has shrunk from it in despair. But when a detective, employed by a bigoted and aggressive religious sect, traps into the mail by a lie (yes, by a lie; as if lying was not a more dangerous vice than indelicacy) a book openly sold, earnestly discussing the most vital question of society—with no word more indecent than can be found in the most revered works in our libraries, and with no opinions even more heterodox or erroneous, if you please, than can be found in the writings of John Milton,—and the Supreme Court of the United States having pronounced the law constitutional, a Circuit Court sentences the author of that book to two years of imprisonment. Faneuil Hall would cease to be Faneuil Hall if its four walls did not become phonographs of indignation till this wrong application of the law is righted. Why, admitting the law to be constitutional, and the sentence according to law, there is no such thing as the liberty of the press; and without it the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence are not worth two brass buttons.

You will read in the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah, in the prophet's rejoicing over the downfall of evil-doers, these significant words: "And all that watch for iniquity are cut off; that make a man an offender for a word, and lay a snare for him that reproveth in the gate, and turn aside the just for a thing of naught." The simple and whole truth is that Mr. Heywood was openly "reproving in the gate" by the circulation of two works, one on human physiology and one on marriage, neither of them any more open to the charge of obscenity than any work must be which thoroughly discusses those subjects. One of them was written by himself, and contains opinions which, though by no means new or very rare, do not accord with those professed by the people who employ Mr. Comstock. If they had, all the words being the same, the charge of obscenity would never have been thought of. It was easy enough to obtain the books and prosecute under the Massachusetts law, a law which makes the possession of an obscene book as criminal as its publication, and which, if Mr. Heywood's book is obscene, would put a large part of the people of Massachusetts in jail; but it was deemed desirable to subject Mr. Heywood to the odium of appearing to circulate his books clandestinely, as if they were not fit to be seen. For that reason, Comstock, as rogues generally do, hides behind a feigned name, an alias, tells the lie that he admired Heywood and his books, and asks the favor of having them mailed to him in New Jersey. He had been engaged with apparently great success in ferreting out obscene literature from the mails, and as if he were still about that business, and not a wholly different one, a very incautious prosecuting officer and grand jury of the United States find two bills of indictment against Heywood, each for having mailed (I quote the exact words of both indictments) "a certain obscene, lewd, and lascivious book (naming it), which book is so obscene, lewd, and lascivious that the same would be offensive to the Court here, and improper to be placed on the records thereof." In regard to one of the books, the jury did not hold this to be true, because it acquitted. But if it was true of either, it was true of both. And if it was true of either, then would many passages of the Bible be too offensive to that Court to be placed on the records thereof. This language of the indictments put the prosecuting officer and grand jury in the place of the judge and petit jury. It prejudged the case. A fair indictment, if it did not set forth the entire book itself, which I understand is held to be law on the other side of the Atlantic, would have at least set forth in its express words so much of it that the jury could understand its drift, purpose, and intent, and the defendant could know the exact point of attack. Instead of this, the grand jury treated the Court to a dose of judicial prudery, for which no Court that respected itself could possibly be thankful. The criminality of words must lie in the intent with which they are used; otherwise such an indictment would be as much a violation of law as the crime it charged.

If words are used to allure the young to the "chambers of death" they are criminal; but there can be no crime in using any words necessary to warn them away. Under the law, as Judge Clark administered it, if Solomon and his family were alive to-day he might be indicted for his Proverbs and Songs, and be in Dedham Jail along with Ezra H. Heywood. And, all things considered, which do you think should be pardoned out first?

Fellow-citizens, this prosecution and punishment of Heywood, to put the most charitable construction upon it, is a dangerous mistake. Grant that his doctrine is a social heresy, the only safety of the republic against social as well as political heresies is the perfect freedom of publication, allowing every man to load his literary gun, whether with wisdom or folly, sense or nonsense, and fire it in the face and eyes of the common-sense of the public. Our fathers, about the end of the last century, frightened at the virulence and want of respect for authority in the political press, tried for a limited time the experiment of a "sedition law," so-called; that is, a law for the punishment of seditious publications. It made matters so much worse that when it expired they did not renew it. Half a dozen convictions under it were enough to prove the Constitution right and the law worse than useless. So, granting Heywood's doctrine to be erroneous and foolish, and even granting his motives to be bad, which I think no candid person can intelligently believe, the people who, under the false pretence of suppressing obscenity, have let loose upon him the old bull-dog of religious persecution have committed against the interests of society one of those blunders which are worse than crimes.

One word more. I am sure you will pardon me, if, standing where I do by your favor, I express my own opinion and define my individual position in regard to the question of marriage. I believe the family is the foundation of the State, and the perfection of the family is the union for life on terms of perfect equality of one man and one woman. I believe such union in our country is generally happy, and is held together by an ever-increasing force, to which law or anything from the outside can add nothing; to wit, genuine, truthful, supersensual love, or mutual worship. I do not blame the law for punishing a man who deserts the mother of his children to follow another woman, and I sympathize with the public scorn for his baseness. But considering that all laws are made and administered by men, and that women have no voice in the matter, I don't see where the law gets its right to punish the wife for slipping her neck out of the yoke. Men have put into their laws regarding women too little of doing as they would be done by; and I think Jesus was of that opinion when he said, "Neither do I condemn thee."

KISSING THE BOOK.

"Take the book in your right hand—there—now—kiss it. Where d'ye live and what ju do?"

This witness, says the Philadelphia Times, was a rubicund-faced saloon-keeper, with red hair and freckles, and he stood in the box at the Mayor's office. Time, 10 A.M. Rows of prisoners on seats formed the congregation behind him, and in that congregation was a man that had stolen $6, a revolver, and some trinkets, and the rubicund-faced man was the one to prove it.

"Well, and you swear he's the thief? That'll do. Get down. Let your wife up. The other hand, madam. Kiss that book now, and tell us what you know."

The woman, having a very prominent nose and a very prominent chin, pressed the book against the point of the former and the tip of the latter, leaving so much space between the sacred volume and her lips that the largest conceivable pucker could not reach it. Then, slowly depressing her hand, she laid the book on the table before her.

"And that's all you know? That'll do. James Tolen!"

A very retiring-looking young man, in the extreme corner of the prisoners' box, rose, and, with a cheerful smile, looked at the magistrate and said:—

"John Tolen, sir."

"Ah—well—John Tolen. Who's the witnesses? The other hand, sir; take that book in your right—that way. Kiss it. Where d'ye live and what ju do?"

The story is told, the witness the while shuffling the book around like a hot brick, and never releasing it till he steps out of the witness-box, and then showing an inclination to carry it away with him.

"Who's the next witness?" A young woman steps into the box.

"The right hand, madam; kiss the book. Now tell us what you know."

Even so soft a thing as a kiss may prove destructive if repeated a great many times. That book is worn smooth and shiny. Contact with so many lips has begun to tell on the corners and binding. No two kisses alike, and some don't kiss it at all, but rub it against their nose, while such of the masculine persuasion as have moustaches sometimes scrub it with tobacco juice.

"Next witness, where is he?" There he is, a stalwart colored man, as black as they generally grow. He takes the book, inflicts on it a very audible smack, puts it down and tells his story.

"Kiss the book, madam, kiss the book." The young woman, who is the next witness, takes it up and presses it triangularly against her lips. "And you're positive he's the man?" "Yes." "That'll do; call the next witness."

A huge-moustached individual ascends the stand, takes up the book in a most business-like manner and rubs it across his lips horizontally, with an energy that is good for all the enamel on that particular spot of the cover at least, if it has not been kissed away before. A colored damsel is the next witness, and she kisses the book square, with fully as much smack about it as her brother before her. That is all, and the book is laid away for the next occasion.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 15 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 16 to 25 " " " " " "
 " 26 to 35 " " " " " "
 " 36 to 45 " " " " " "
 " 46 to 55 " " " " " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookeller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEVENS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

Office, No. 231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON, publish

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Ten-
 sy, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the difference between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $2.50 for one year, including postage, or 30 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street Boston.

PUBLICATIONS INDEX TRACTS.

OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion. A volume of ten essays upon speculative and practical problems of religion, by D. A. Wasson, Samuel Longfellow, Samuel Johnson, John Weiss, W. J. Potter, F. E. Abbot, O. B. Frothingham, J. W. Chadwick, T. W. Higginson, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney, and extracts from Addresses by Ralph Waldo Emerson, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, Dr. Bartol, Wendell Phillips, Rabbi Wise, Horace Seaver, A. B. Alcott, Lucy Stone, Charles H. Malcom, Julia Ward Howe, and others,—all given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. Price (reduced) $1.50.

"One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by O. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, O. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Chadwick, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Proceedings of Ninth Annual Meeting, 1876. Contains a full abstract of the interesting discussion at the Business Meeting on the Practical Methods and Work of the Association; the annual report of the Executive Committee; address of the President, O. B. Frothingham; essay by James Parton, on "The Relation of Religion to the State" (or, as he styles it, "Cathedrals and Beer"), with addresses on the subject by Miss Susan H. Wixon and Rev. M. J. Savage; essay by Samuel Longfellow, on "The Relation of Free Religion to Churches," with the addresses that followed it by Prof. Felix Adler, Rev. Henry Blanchard, Rev. Brooke Herford, and John Weiss,—together with letters from Judge Doe, Rev. Joseph Cook, and others, invited to speak.

Proceedings of Tenth Annual Meeting, 1877. Contains Essays by Rev. Wm. R. Alger, on "Steps towards Religious Emancipation in Christendom," and by O. D. B. Mills, Esq., on "Internal Dangers to Free Thought and Free Religion"; Addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Wm. Henry Channing, Rabbi Lasker, Dr. J. L. Dudley, and T. W. Higginson; and tenth annual reports of the Executive Committee, Treasurer, etc.

Any one of the above pamphlets of "Proceedings" sent to any address for Five cents received in postage stamps; and more at the same rate. Sold also for Five cents at the office.

For series of Important Tracts see last page of THE INDEX.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited and at special rates. Orders by mail may be addressed "Free Religious Association, 231 Washington Street, Boston, Mass."

WM. J. POTTER, Sec. F. R. A.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—God in the Constitution, by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—The Sabbath, by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—Compulsory Education, by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fifth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyses the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 15.—The Battle of Syracuse. Two Essays by Rev. James Freeman Clarke, D.D., and F. E. Abbot discussing the Authority of Christianity. Price 10 cents; 12 copies for $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 231 WASHINGTON STREET,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 8.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Haverhill, Mass.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.
 MRS. ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, Ten-
 sy, N.Y.
 J. L. STODDARD, Boston.
 ELIZUR WRIGHT, Boston.
 C. D. B. MILLS, Syracuse, N.Y.
 W. D. LE SUEUR, Ottawa, Can.
 BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD, Thorndike, Mass.
 ALBERT WARREN KELSEY, St. Louis, Mo.

THE INDEX aims—
 To increase general intelligence with respect to religion;

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual;

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and 20 cents postage for the year; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE.

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	1.25
The World-Friend.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BURKE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition, comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero-Worship, 1 vol.; Letters, 1 vol.; Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. MILLER, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. MILLER). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCIS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Biblical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Barthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, &c. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50

Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.50
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.50
Journal of Researches.....	2.50
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBINS (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 1 vol.....	.25
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	1.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	1.50
Essays. Second Series.....	1.50
Miscellanies.....	1.50
Representative Men.....	1.50
English Traits.....	1.50
Conquest of Life.....	1.50
Poems. With Portrait.....	1.50
May-day and Other Pieces.....	1.50
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.25
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	1.50
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 3 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.50
GOTTFRED'S Tapest. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Effective Amitties.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	3.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	2.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	2.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	2.50
HAWTHORNE'S (MATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	1.50
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.50
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	3.25
The Mouldings of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelms.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Palaeontology" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot. I

III. Woods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix treating of the Moral Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by E. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KER (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.) History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.50
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1850 to 1865. Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 3 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	3.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 1 vol., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Science. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and M.DCCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Tragic Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (HOWARD A.) Other Works. That Ours; the Feasibility of Working under the Light of Modern Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, with 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts. Society. The Moon, her Moons, &c.....	2.50
and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Bodies, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	4.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introduction. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S. &c. 2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe..... 3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations..... 4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50 .50 .50 .50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	21.50
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.25
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.25
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	2.50
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	3.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	1.50
Descriptive Sociology. Parts I, II, and III, each.....	4.00
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
Universal Progress.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorised translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 1 vol.....	7.50
The Athenaeum Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Level the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoshals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Week in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
Lessons in Electricity.....	1.50
Address before British Assoc'n at Belfast.....	.50
TITLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	2.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Seaside Sketches.....	1.50
Black-Lag Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 1 vol.....	5.00
WHIFFLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pennies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 1 vol.....	4.00
Child Life.....	5.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

231 Washington St., Boston.

$36 a week in your own town. Terms and $3 outside free. Address H. HALLETT & Co., Portland, Maine.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Address STIRBON & Co., Portland, Maine.

NEW BOOK BY INGERSOLL.

Contains his latest lectures on "The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Centennial Oration," "Farming in Illinois," and others. Handsomely bound in one volume. Price $1.25. Also

THE GODS AND OTHER LECTURES.

Same style and price. Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY—PRICE TWO PENCE.

THE SECULAR REVIEW.

EDITED BY CHARLES WATTS.

THE SECULAR REVIEW is the leading organ of Secularism, and each week has Special Articles on Theological, Social, Scientific, and Political Subjects. Its distinctive features are the advocacy of Constructive Secularism, and the dissemination of useful information on all questions which affect the welfare of the people. Letters are inserted in its "OPEN COLUMN" from all who are courteous in the expression of their views; while a special department is allotted for "NOTES AND QUERIES."

The Contributors to the SECULAR REVIEW comprise the principal advocates of Secularism, including its founder, G. J. Holyoake.

CHARLES WATTS, Publisher,
84 Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
231 Washington Street, Boston, U.S.A.

A REMARKABLE BOOK. A MODERN SYMPOSIUM.

SUBJECTS:

The Soul and Future Life.

By Mr. Frederic Harrison, Hon. Roden Noel, R. H. Hutton, Lord Selborne, Prof. Huxley, Canon Barry, Lord Balfour, Mr. W. B. Greg, Rev. Baldwin Brown, and Dr. W. G. Ward.

The Influence upon Morality of a Decline in Religious Belief.

By Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, Prof. Clifford, Lord Selborne, Rev. Mr. Martineau, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Dean of St. Paul's, the Duke of Argyll, Dr. W. G. Ward, Prof. Huxley, and R. H. Hutton.

1 Vol. Crown, 8vo. Cloth, neat, $1.25.

This volume contains the scholarly utterances of the leading scientists and philosophers of Great Britain on two of the most important subjects of the century. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

TO THE AMERICAN PATRONS OF CHOICE LITERATURE.

We have made arrangements with Messrs. CHAPMAN & HALL, London, England, for the right to publish an American Edition of

The Fortnightly Review,

Edited by JOHN MORLEY,

and are now publishing this celebrated Monthly Magazine, from a special duplicate set of stereotype plates, which are forwarded from England so promptly as to enable us to produce each month, not only an exact facsimile of this able Review, but to publish it almost at the same time the original is from England. It is in every respect equal to the London issue, at about half the original price. This effort will place in the hands of American readers the freshest utterances of leading thinkers on the issues with a promptitude unequalled. The comments of a large number of the best European thinkers on Science, Philosophy, Literature, Politics, and Miscellaneous Matters of general interest cannot fail to be appreciated and encouraged by thoughtful American readers. The following are a few of the contributors:

Matthew Arnold, Alfred R. Wallace, Herbert Spencer, Frederick Harrison, Goldwin Smith, Prof. Tyndall, Right Hon. Lyon Playfair, Prof. Huxley, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Prof. Darwin, Lionel A. Tallemauche, Author of Supernatural Religion, M. E. Grant Duff, M.P., Sir John Lubbock, Hon. Robert Lowe, Anthony Trollope, Leslie Stephen, T. Adolphus Trollope, John Morley (the Editor), Sir H. S. Maine, Sir David Wedderburn, G. H. Lewes, and numerous others.

Subscription Price, $5.00 per Year. Published every month by the ROBE-BELFORD PUBLISHING CO., 60 York Street, Toronto, Ont.

POSITIVE THINKER.

Science Hall, New York City.

A weekly paper. Advocates the Positive Philosophy, and the Religion of Humanity. $1.50 a year; 6 months, 75 cents; 3 months, 40 cents; 5 copies to one address, $5; 10 copies and one to get up of Club, $10. Send for single copy and circular, 5 cents.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The twenty-fifth school year of this Family and Day School for both sexes will begin WEDNESDAY, Sept. 19, 1877. For Circular and information apply to

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
West Newton, Mass.

BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX for

1 8 7 7,

Complete for the Past Year, are now ready for delivery at this Office. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Price $3.00, in advance. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

MISS DEVEREUX' BOARD-

ING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES AND CHILDREN, at Irvington-on-Hudson, will re-open on Monday, Sept. 17, 1877. Miss Devereux refers, among others, to the following gentlemen: Rev. Orville Dewey, Sheffield, Mass.; Mr. A. C. Richards, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. H. B. Bishop, Irvington, N.Y.; Mr. Wm. H. Orton, Free. W. U. Telegraph Co., N.Y.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION REPORTS.

Attention is specially called to a change in the advertisement of the publications of the Free Religious Association. By a recent vote of the Executive Committee the Annual Reports of the Association, from the year 1875 to the year 1877 inclusive, are now offered at five cents each (and at the same rate for any larger number) to any body who will take the trouble to send for them, enclosing five cents in postage stamps. They will also be sold at the office for the same sum to any one calling for them there.

The Committee have put the pamphlets at this low rate, which hardly more than covers the cost of sending them by mail, with the hope that they may thereby be more extensively circulated. By referring to the advertisement describing their contents, it will be seen that they contain much matter of special interest on the most vital religious problems of the age. It is not too much to say that some of the most valuable contributions of the last five years to religious discussion may be found in these pamphlets. Let any one who wants to know what the Free Religious Association means, send for these Reports. And will not the members and friends of this Association take this opportunity to extend the knowledge of its principles?

WM. J. POTTER, Secretary F. R. A.

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD.

GREAT THROUGH LINE AND UNITED STATES MAIL ROUTE.

The attention of the traveling public is respectfully invited to some of the merits of this great highway, in the confident assertion and belief that no other line can offer equal inducements as a route of through travel. In

CONSTRUCTION AND EQUIPMENT

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD stands confessedly at the head of American railways. The track is double the entire length of the line, of steel rails laid on heavy oak ties, which are embedded in a foundation of rock ballast eighteen inches in depth. All bridges are of iron or stone, and built upon the most approved plans. Its passenger cars, while eminently safe and substantial, are at the same time models of comfort and elegance.

THE SAFETY APPLIANCES

In use on this line will illustrate the far-seeing and liberal policy of its management, in accordance with which the utility only of an improvement and not its cost has been the question of consideration. Among many may be noticed

The Block System of Safety Signals, Janney Coupler, Buffer, and Platform, The Wharton Patent Switch, and the Westinghouse Air-Brake, forming in conjunction with a perfect double track and road-bed a combination of safeguards against accidents which have rendered them practically impossible.

Pullman Palace Cars

are run on all Express Trains from New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, to Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, Indianapolis, and St. Louis.

WITHOUT CHANGE,

and to all the principal points in the far West and South with but one change of cars. Connections are made in Union Depots, and are assured to all important points. The scenery of the Pennsylvania Route is admitted to be unsurpassed in the world for grandeur, beauty, and variety. Superior refreshment facilities are provided. Employees are courteous and attentive, and it is an inevitable result that a trip by the Pennsylvania Railroad must form

A Pleasing and Memorable Experience.

Tickets for sale at the lowest rates at the Ticket Offices of the Company in all important cities and towns.

FRANK THOMSON, L. F. FARMER,
General Manager, General Passenger Agent.
O. S. HALDEMAN, New England Agent,
233 and 235 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the fine list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished on order. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 231 Washington Street, Boston.

SINGLE BOUND VOLUMES OF THE INDEX

for the years 1871, 1872, 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 (Vols. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8) can be furnished on application at this Office. PRICES—volumes for 1871 and 1872, $2.50; volumes for 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, $3.00. Sent by express at the purchaser's expense. Address THE INDEX, 231 Washington Street, Boston.

THE INDEX AS AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Testimony of one who has tried it.

FLORENCE, Iowa, Jan. 5, 1878.
... THE INDEX is the best advertising medium which I have tried...
E. C. WALKER.

BOARD AT ONE OF THE

Largest and best situated Hotels at

MT. DESERT.

Terms, $1 per day; children, 50 and 75 per week.

For particulars, apply to C. H. PHILLIPS, 450 Washington Street, Boston, or to STANLEY HOUSE, South West Harbor, Me.

A NOTABLE TREATISE. WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

THE COUNTERFEIT AND THE TRUE:

Reasons for Opposing Both.

BY

REAR-ADMIRAL MAXSE,

Of the British Royal Navy.

This is a little book of 74 pages, with neat paper covers, published in London, and presenting the reasons why a cultivated English gentleman is opposed to Woman Suffrage. It ought to be read and pondered by all who are interested in that question, on either side. Price, 25 cents. For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 231 Washington St., Boston.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

O. R. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
R. H. RANNEY,
F. B. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Nine Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Send to Office at 231 Washington St., Boston, Mass.,

for

TRACTS.

- I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton. 5 cts.; ten, 20 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.
- II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. Enlarged edition.
- IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published.
- V. THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION, as understood by a Catholic American citizen (Bishop McQuaid) and by a Liberal American citizen (F. E. Abbot). (Two Horticultural Hall Lectures, Feb. 13 and 20, 1874.)
- VI. HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? An Answer in Four Parts: 1. Sunday in the Bible. 2. Sunday in Church History. 3. Sunday in the Massachusetts Laws. 4. The Workingman's Sunday. By Charles K. Whipple, Minot J. Savage, Charles E. Pratt, and Wm. C. Gannett.

Nos. II, III, IV, V, VI, 10 cts. each; ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $5.

REASON AND REVELATION, by W. J. Potter. 5 cts. (Ten for 50 cts.; one hundred, $1.50.)

PROCEEDINGS OF THE F. R. A. ANNUAL MEETINGS FOR 1872, '73, '74, '75, '76, and '77, Five cents each.

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION, a volume of essays and addresses representing the F. R. A. platform. $1.50.

GOLD Any worker can make $11 a day at home. Costly Outfit free. Address TRUB & Co. Augusta, Maine.

THE YOUTH'S

LIBERAL GUIDE,

For their Moral Culture and Religious Enlightenment. By Prof. H. M. KOTTINGER, A.M. Translated from the German, and

FREE FROM SUPERSTITION.

For Sale by Doeringer & Co., 55 Oneida Street, Milwaukee, Wis. Price $1.50.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

1. EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION. Contains an Historical Account of the Liberal League movement; a full Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia, July 1 to 4, 1876, with Essays by F. E. Abbot, James Parton, R. F. Underwood, and others; the Constitution of the National Liberal League, List of Charter Members, etc., etc. Octavo, pp. 190. Cloth, $1.00; paper, 75 cents.
2. PATRIOTIC ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES, adopted at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. With Resolutions of the Congress, Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens, Constitution of the National Liberal League, etc. Adapted for gratuitous distribution by friends of the cause. Octavo, 24 pp. Single copies, 5 cts.; 10 copies, 15 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.
3. PRIVILEGE FOR NONE—JUSTICE FOR ALL. Contains the N. L. L. Platform and Resolutions adopted at Rochester, Oct. 26, 1877, full information how to organize Local Leagues, etc. Twenty-page tract for the use of workers. Single copies, 5 cts.; 50 copies, 75 cts.; 100 copies, $1.50.

ADDRESS

National Liberal League,
231 WASHINGTON ST., BOSTON.

SEND ONE DOLLAR

For a handsome Certificate of Membership as an

ANNUAL MEMBER

of the NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

For TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, a still larger Certificate of Membership as a

LIFE MEMBER,

Will be sent to any person; and individuals cannot render more efficient assistance to the National Liberal League than by making themselves Annual or Life Members of it.

The following extracts from the Constitution of the National Liberal League explain the privileges of membership:

ARTICLE IV.—Any person who shall pay one dollar into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate, signed by the President and Secretary, as an annual member of the National Liberal League. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a similar certificate as a life-member. All the persons present as members at the Centennial Congress of Liberals, at which this Constitution was adopted, are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the National Liberal League.

ARTICLE V.—... All charter-members and life-members of the National Liberal League, and all duly accredited delegates from local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress. Annual members of the National Liberal League shall be entitled to seats, but not to votes, in the Annual Congress.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

ORGANIZE! CHARTERS

For Local Auxiliary Liberal Leagues, conferring the privilege of representation by five delegates in the Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, will be promptly sent on application, according to the following provisions of Constitution of the same:—

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ARTICLE XIII.—The Board of Directors shall have authority, as often as they receive a written application signed by ten or more persons and accompanied by ten dollars, to issue a charter for the formation of a local auxiliary Liberal League.

ARTICLE XV.—Local auxiliary Liberal Leagues organized under charters issued by the Board of Directors shall be absolutely independent in the administration of their own local affairs. The effect of their charters shall be simply to unite them in cordial fellowship and efficient cooperation of the freest kind with the National Liberal League and with other local Leagues. All votes of the Annual Congress, and all communications of the Board of Directors, shall possess no more authority or influence over them than lies in the intrinsic wisdom of the words themselves.

ARTICLE XVI.—Every local auxiliary Liberal League organized in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution shall be entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates to the Annual Congress.

These Charters are beautifully printed on the best of paper. Adorned with the handsome Seal of the National Liberal League, they will, if tastefully framed, make a fine ornament for any hall.

Address NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE
231 Washington Street, Boston.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 9.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 1878.

WHOLE No. 452.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

PLATFORM

For the Presidential Election of 1880,

ADOPTED AT ROCHESTER, N.Y., OCT. 26, 1877.

1. TOTAL SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE, to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution: including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. NATIONAL PROTECTION FOR NATIONAL CITIZENS, in their equal civil, political, and religious rights: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. UNIVERSAL EDUCATION THE BASIS OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE IN THIS SECULAR REPUBLIC: to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every State to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

N. B.—The nomination of candidates upon the above platform was postponed to a future Congress of the National Liberal League.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrine of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious rites shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The above is the platform of THE INDEX, so far as the editor is individually concerned. But no other person, and no organization, can be justly or truthfully held responsible for it without his or its explicit approval.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

POE'S "RAVEN" was originally sold to the American Quarterly Review for ten dollars.

IT IS REPORTED that Dennis Kearney doesn't drink, or use tobacco in any form. His intemperance is all in his speech.

IT IS SAID that Mr. Beecher's lecturing tour in the West, this side of the Rocky Mountains, didn't pay—anybody but himself.

THE SOCIALISTS, in Germany, cast four hundred thousand votes in 1877, and they hope to double their representation this year.

THE STATE OF IOWA has a new capital-punishment law; but within one fortnight after it went into operation there were four murders. So much for legislation instead of civilization.

DR. MINER says of the Republican party: "It means to succeed by the help of the Lord if it can, and if not, by the help of the devil." Precisely so, doctor; but then, what political party doesn't?

TO THE PHILOSOPHER prayer, as generally understood, is a waste of time. It does one of two things,—perhaps both: it impeaches either the faith of the one who prays, or the wisdom and goodness of the One to whom prayer is made.

GEORGE HERBERT, giving his ideas of a Country Parson, says: "A pastor is the deputy of Christ for the reducing of man to the obedience of God." Not unless the pastor himself is so "reduced;" which is far from being always the case.

"IF HE BE married," says George Herbert of the Country Parson,— "if he be married, his judgment, not his affection, found out a fit wife for him." Why shouldn't a parson marry for love as well as any other man? He will not marry wisely, surely, if he does not.

BISMARCK never walks out for his "constitutional" without being watched over by a squad of police in citizen dress, and attended by a large, smooth, black boar-hound. If he weren't an oppressor and a destroyer of personal liberties, he might walk abroad with as much safety as any other honest citizen.

WE ARE TOLD by the Christian Register (which of course registers everything correctly) that "the average life of the Christian is only thirty-six years and eleven months." Now if you will just turn Free Religionist, you shall have that even month added to your years, and be exactly thirty-seven when you die on "the average."

LORD BEACONSFIELD has attributed to him, among his other deep designs, a scheme to move the Pope to Jerusalem, as the head of the Greek and Roman churches, and indeed of all Christendom. Well, why not? This would be but an act of historic justice; for the Catholic Church is the true representative of historical Christianity.

MAUNDEVILLE, a celebrated traveller (1844 A.C., more than one hundred years before Columbus discovered America), maintained "that the earth is of a round form," and "that if a man found passage by ship he might sail all round the world, above and beneath," and always "find men, lands, and isles." In the same way, every speaker of a new truth has been antedated by some one else, who has thought if not spoken the same thing.

THOMAS JEFFERSON, when he was eighty-three years old (March 2, 1826), wrote as follows to one complimenting him on his public services: "Your very friendly letter supposes in me claims on the attention of my country to which I have no pretensions. I happened to be born in times which required from all its citizens every aid they could render, and gave full value to even the smallest that any could render. Those within the reach of my faculties have been fully remunerated by the honors and compensations which my fellow-citizens have bestowed upon me."

MR. EMERSON wrote, thirty years ago, of Plato: "Out of Plato come all things that are still written and debated among men of thought. Plato is philosophy and philosophy Plato,—at once the glory and the shame of mankind; since neither Saxon nor Roman have availed to add any idea to his categories." It is thus that an admirer of the great Greek can write; but one should read what Walter Savage Landor, a critic of Plato, has to say of him, in order to see how differently a master mind may be received and interpreted by two equally distinguished students.

QUEEN VICTORIA has given Mr. Disraeli, not a dukedom as was expected, but a "garter," for raising England once more to the rank of a first-class power. If his lordship really needed that useful article of apparel, we are glad he has got it; and now, we may reasonably hope, his stockings will never more slip down. But however that may be, there are many chances that the Premier himself may "slip up" before he has gone very far in his cunning game of diplomacy; for we see that the Liberals are once more reported as being very confident of soon winning his trump card.

IN AN ARTICLE on John G. Tappan's case, pointing out the precise manner in which that man has violated the Massachusetts law punishing the servant of any corporation who uses its name or his own official name to obtain money on the credit of the corporation without its authority, and demanding his arrest and conviction at the hands of the State, the Springfield Republican vigorously remarks: "Then again, what will the Mount Vernon [Boston] Church, of which he is a member, do about it? It belongs to a fellowship of churches who are just now unusually concerned about purity of doctrine. They may be right in this. But the question will be asked, Are they also concerned about 'clean hands'? Will this dignified worshipper and attendant on the weekly prayer-meeting be proceeded with after the gospel fashion of discipline?"

ELIZABETH CADY STANTON, in the Rochester Woman's Convention last month, advocated self-development in the place of self-sacrifice; saying that women had practised altogether too much of the latter in our civilization, and been too willingly subject to Church and State. This may do very well as a healthy reaction against the sacrifice-theory of the popular Christian inculcation. But the right sort of self-sacrifice produces self-development, does it not? Any other kind is certainly demoralizing. Yet one of the most beautiful traits of character,—one which endears to all its possessor,—is, not constant self-assertion, but that thoughtful consideration which is continually seeking to promote the happiness and welfare of others. Not they who are anxious to govern, but they who are desirous quietly to serve, are the real helpers of mankind.

WE HAVE RECEIVED the following note from Mr. E. H. Heywood: "Cell 52, the Jail, Dedham, Mass., Aug. 13. Dear Mr. Stevens: I wish to thank you for the reprint from Mrs. Child's writings. Next to Theodore Parker, I owe most to her for religious enlightenment. Her Progress of Religious Ideas let a flood of light in upon the midnight darkness which imprisoned me in the old creeds when I was a student at Brown University. Later, in the Anti-Slavery movement, I owed much to her teachings. Her frequent visits to the old Anti-Slavery Office, 221 Washington Street (old number), were inspiring events. She was one of the famous Executive Committee, composed of Garrison, Phillips, the Jacksons (Eben and Francis), Quincy, May, Bowditch, and the rest. Thanks to Mr. Abbot's kindness, THE INDEX comes regularly, and is indeed welcome within these walls."

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.

OFFICERS.

President.
FRANCIS E. ABBOT,.....Boston, Mass.

Vice-Presidents.
HON. E. P. HURLBUT,.....Albany, N. Y.
HON. SAMUEL E. SEWALL,.....Boston, Mass.
HON. NATHANIEL HOLMES,.....St. Louis, Mo.
HON. HENRY BOOTH,.....Chicago, Ill.
HON. GEORGE W. JULIAN,.....Birmingham, Ala.
HON. ELIZUR WRIGHT,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. O. H. PROTHINGHAM,.....New York
MR. WM. J. POTTER,.....New Bedford, Mass.
MR. R. P. HALLOWELL,.....Boston, Mass.
MR. JAMES PARTON,.....Newburyport, Mass.
MR. F. SOBUENEMANN-POTT,.....San Francisco, Cal.
HON. ABRAHAM PAYNE,.....Providence, R. I.
REV. M. J. SAVAGE,.....Boston, Mass.
RABBI B. FEISENTHAL,.....Chicago, Ill.
REV. W. H. SPENCER,.....Sparta, Wis.
MR. SAMUEL L. HILL,.....Flint, Mich.
MR. E. W. MEDDAUGH,.....Detroit, Mich.
MR. KARL HEINZ,.....Editor of "Der Pioneer," Boston.
MR. HORACE SEEVER,.....Editor of the "Investigator," Boston.
RABBI ISAAC M. WISE,.....Editor of "American Israelite," Cincinnati.
MR. D. M. BENNETT,.....Editor of the "Truth Seeker," New York.
MR. MORITZ ELLINGER,.....Editor of the "Jewish Times," New York.
MR. B. F. UNDERWOOD,.....Thornton, Mass.
REV. ROBERT COLLIER,.....Chicago, Ill.
COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,.....Peoria, Ill.
DR. T. L. BROWN,.....Binghamton, N. Y.
HON. E. S. MCCORMICK,.....Franklin, Pa.
ELDER F. W. EVANS,.....Mount Lebanon, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH THOMPSON,.....New York City.
MRS. AMY POST,.....Rochester, N. Y.
MRS. ELIZABETH OADY STANTON,.....Tombury, N. Y.
MISS SALLIE HOLLEY,.....Lottsburg, Va.

Secretary.
W. H. HAMLEN,.....221 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Assistant Secretary.
MISS JANE P. TITCOMB,.....142 Chandler St., Boston.

Treasurer.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....3 Pemberton Square, Boston.

Board of Directors.
F. E. ABBOT,.....W. H. HAMLEN.
J. A. J. WILCOX,.....H. L. GREEN.
D. G. CRANDON.

Executive Committee.
Alabama.....J. H. HALLEY, Selma.
Arkansas.....JOHN A. HARRIS, Monticello.
California.....J. L. HATCH, San Francisco.
Colorado.....D. W. P. BEALS, Granada.
Connecticut.....GEORGE W. JULIAN, Bridgeport.
Delaware.....JOSEPH D. SMITH, Greenville.
Florida.....J. D. GIDDINGS, Enterprise.
Georgia.....DR. A. A. BELL, Madison.
Illinois.....N. D. WATKINS, Xenia.
Indiana.....J. C. MICHENER, Adel.
Iowa.....JOHN FARRSWORTH, Fort Scott.
Kansas.....R. H. CLARK, Winona.
Kentucky.....H. H. WATKINS, New Orleans.
Louisiana.....DR. W. H. BROWN, Bangor.
Maine.....W. H. SAYWARD, Boston.
Maryland.....R. H. SCHMIDT, Detroit.
Massachusetts.....J. H. SASSETT, Minneapolis.
Michigan.....R. PETERSON, St. Louis.
Minnesota.....W. H. COPLAND, Lincoln.
Mississippi.....G. J. LARRETT, White Rock.
Missouri.....W. L. LITTLE, Manchester.
Montana.....FRANCIS W. ORVIS, Pascale.
Nebraska.....H. L. GREEN (chairman), Selma.
Nevada.....J. W. THORNE, Warren.
New Hampshire.....E. D. STARK, Cleveland.
New Jersey.....SAMUEL COLT, Humboldt Basin.
New Mexico.....G. W. BALDWIN, Lincolnville.
New York.....GEORGE LEWIS, Providence.
North Carolina.....P. W. FULLER, Columbia.
Ohio.....DR. E. H. PRICH, Chattanooga.
Oregon.....DR. L. J. RUSSELL, Harrisville.
Pennsylvania.....H. L. HACKETT, North Birmingham.
Rhode Island.....J. SPALDING, Norfolk.
South Carolina.....DR. A. M. DENT, Western.
Tennessee.....ROBERT C. SPENCER, Milwaukee.
Texas.....D. P. WILCOX, Fannin.
Virginia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Washington.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
West Virginia.....W. H. DOOLITTLE, Washington.
Wisconsin.....N. H. WEBSTER, Milwaukee.
Wyoming.....NORMAN S. PORTER.

Finance Committee.
D. G. CRANDON, Chairman,.....Chelsea, Mass.
MRS. SARAH B. OTIS,.....137 Warren Avenue, Boston.
HARLAN P. HYDE,.....221 Washington St., Boston.

LOCAL AUXILIARY LIBERAL LEAGUES

To which Charters have been issued by the National Liberal League.

LINCOLN, NEBRASKA.—President, Rev. W. E. Copeland; Secretary, Dr. A. S. von Mansfelde. Issued to L. W. Billingsley, D. A. Cline, A. S. von Mansfelde, Julius Philsterer, Joseph Wittman, W. E. Copeland, Benj. F. Fisher, Sidney Lyons, L. Meyer, G. E. Church, and others.
JACKSONVILLE, ILLINOIS.—President, David Prince; Secretary, Miss J. M. Meek. Issued to A. W. Cadman, Mrs. D. M. Cadman, S. W. Sample, David Prince, B. A. Nance, C. H. Dunbrack, W. Hackman, Jennie M. Meek, Emma Meek, Hattie E. Hammond, and others.
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, Carrie B. Kilgore; Secretary, Joseph Bohrer. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Philadelphia Liberal League.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, Lauriston Damon; Secretary, Anton Braasch. Issued to Anton Braasch, Fred. Clausen, J. Runge, Jr., Louis Zander, S. Damon, Ford. Heyroth, Louis Heyroth, Fred. Zander, Fred. Halberg, Ernst Olsson, and Fred. Braasch.
CHELSEA, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, D. Goddard Crandon; Secretary, J. H. W. Toohy. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Chelsea Liberal League.
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.—[Officers not reported.] Issued to Chas. Haas, G. C. Hyatt, F. C. Lawrence, A. T. Hudson, Chas. Williams, W. F. Freeman, J. Grundike, J. Harrison, T. O. Mallon, A. F. Lohead, and others.
DENVER, COLORADO.—President, Henry O. Dillon; Secretary, Frank W. Ingersoll. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Denver.
PAINE HALL, BOSTON.—President, Henry Damon; Secretary, N. M. Wright. Issued to Horace Seaver, J. P. Mendum, Ellmar Wright, B. F. Underwood, David Kirkwood, James Harris, G. H. Foster, H. F. Hyde, Robert Cooper, S. B. Urbino, John S. Verity.
PALMYRA, NEW YORK.—President, J. M. Jones; Secretary, C. C. Everson. Issued to J. M. Jones, C. C. Everson, Henry M. North, A. B. Sherman, Joseph Fritts, L. B. Keeler, J. J. White, R. H. Sherman, Henry Gardner, Samuel Cosad, and others.

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. M. J. Savage; Secretary, Miss J. P. Titcomb. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Boston, Mass.
NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.—President, George Riker; Secretary, C. M. Rittenhouse. Issued to C. M. Rittenhouse, George Riker, J. C. Price, Daniel Korns, P. W. Himes, John Arn, Philip Gintz, A. H. Brown, Jacob Miller, L. A. Cornet.
TITUSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, William Barnsdall; Secretary, C. M. Hayes. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Titusville Liberal League.
HUDSON, MICHIGAN.—President, Dr. Levi R. Peirson; Secretary, Dr. F. O. Baker. Issued to Levi R. Peirson, A. D. Armstrong, James S. Bedel, Miles C. Beach, W. R. Norris, R. H. Armstrong, R. W. S. Johnson, E. M. Brown, G. L. Harceron, Philip Sewall.
CATTARAUGUS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, H. L. Green; Corresponding Secretary, John Hammond. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cattaraugus County Liberal League.
NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, Roger M. Sherman; Secretary, A. F. Hunia. Issued to R. M. Sherman, W. W. Stow, F. A. Hermon, T. F. Hamilton, D. M. Hamilton, W. F. Hopson, E. R. Whiting, E. E. Seaman, A. C. Harrison, R. F. P. Shepard, and others.
ST. JOSEPH, MISSOURI.—President, P. V. Wise; Secretary, H. Brunzing. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the St. Joseph Liberal League.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Hugh B. Brown; Secretary, A. L. Rawson. Issued to T. B. Wakeman, Henry Evans, A. L. Rawson, Hugh B. Brown, E. Langerfeld, D. S. Plumb, O. E. Browning, Mrs. E. L. Erving, Miss E. W. McAdams, Mrs. O. E. Langerfeld, on behalf of the Society of Humanity.
ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Mrs. Amy Post; Secretary, Willet E. Post. Issued to Benj. Greegg, Mrs. Amy Post, Willet E. Post, Emily G. Beebe, Dr. Sherman, Mrs. Barker, Clement Austin, Wm. H. Gibbs, Dr. C. D. Dake, and others.
TOMPKINS COUNTY, NEW YORK.—President, Dr. John Winslow; Secretary, Myron E. Bishop. Issued to C. W. Ames, Wm. A. Anthony, Geo. Arnold, M. E. Bishop, H. Bool, W. Dennis, Isaac Flagg, B. W. Franklin, C. Gardner, W. Hutchins, and others.
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, A. L. Rawson; Secretary, Porter C. Bliss. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Manhattan Liberal Club.
CLEVELAND, OHIO.—President, E. D. Stark; Secretary, Mrs. M. B. Ambler. Issued to E. D. Stark, Mrs. Louisa Southworth, B. White, W. A. Madison, S. E. Adams, Daniel R. Tilden, W. Galen Smith, Walter F. Johnson, Thomas Jones, and Mrs. M. B. Ambler.
MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN.—President, Robert C. Spencer; Secretary, William A. Boyd. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Milwaukee.
JEFFERSON LIBERAL LEAGUE, ROCHESTER, NEW YORK.—President, Moses Hays; Secretaries, Fred. Hebard and J. B. Pike. Issued to L. Garson, N. O. Tiffany, Adolph Roth, J. W. Roberts, R. F. Smith, Julius Rothhulst, A. C. Allen, C. B. Strong, De L. Crittenden, and F. Bush.
MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.—President, S. C. Gale; Secretary, Frank J. Mead. Issued to the President, Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, on behalf of the First Liberal League of Minneapolis.
FLORENCE, IOWA.—President, Byron McQuin; Secretary, E. C. Walker. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Florence, Iowa.
WEST MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.—President, W. W. Lee; Secretary, Miss Emily J. Leonard. Issued to W. W. Lee, Edwin Dayton, R. L. Roys, C. C. Munn, N. W. Pomeroy, N. F. Griswold, Mrs. F. Loomis, Marion L. Pomeroy, Joseph Frankowski, Mrs. J. Frankowski, and Emily J. Leonard.
MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO.—President, A. McGinn; Secretary, J. B. Barry. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the National Military Home Liberal League.
MANTOWOC, WISCONSIN.—President, John A. Smith; Secretary, George B. Byron. Issued to J. A. Smith, L. Mendlik, G. B. Byron, F. Heineman, F. Ransch, F. Kostomolatsky, F. Stirn, F. Kollinsky, J. Mendlik, L. Oberland, and others.
ALBANY, NEW YORK.—President, Thomas J. Hennessy; Secretary, Thomas Dugan. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Albany Liberal Association.
BAY CITY, MICHIGAN.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, N. H. Webster. Issued to S. M. Green, N. H. Webster, J. A. Webster, G. H. Brooks, J. Brooks, C. Baker, J. Allen, M. H. Garrells, W. Ellsworth, M. E. Root, and others.
CAMPBELL HILL, ILLINOIS.—President, Horace Newell, M.D.; Secretary, A. R. Swartscope. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Campbell Hill Liberal League.
WAUSAU, WISCONSIN.—President, R. P. Munson; Secretary, V. A. Alderson. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Wausau Liberal League.
CASE COUNTY, MISSOURI (Harrisonville).—President, Dr. Thomas Beattie; Secretary, H. R. Steele. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Liberal League of Case County.
ENTERPRISE, KANSAS.—President, C. B. Hoffman; Secretary, E. L. Seft. Issued to Dr. E. L. Seft, M. Seft, C. B. Hoffman, W. T. Hopkins, Mrs. A. C. Hoffman, Mrs. E. L. Seft, G. W. Wright, E. Jones, A. G. Eyrth, J. F. Bührer, and others.
PASSAIC CITY, NEW JERSEY.—President, J. H. Adams; Secretary, F. W. Orris. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Passaic City Liberal League.
LINEVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA.—President, M. Bishop; Secretary, J. B. Brooks. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Lineville Liberal League.
LEXIA, INDIANA.—President, Dr. R. W. Smith; Secretary, Dr. N. D. Watkins. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of "The First Liberal League of Indiana."
NEW YORK, NEW YORK.—President, Cortland Palmer; Secretary, E. B. Foote, Jr. Issued to Mrs. Clara Neymann, E. H. Neymann, P. Neymann, A. Tanzer, T. C. Leland, J. Dessaur, F. Dessaur, Mrs. M. F. Wendt, G. Fraustein, M.D., E. Lebovitz, and others.
OLATHE, KANSAS.—President, S. B. Willson; Secretary, Mrs. H. Griffin. Issued to O. M. Ott, J. L. Price, J. E. Sutton, William Henry, T. Everett, G. L. Thompson, Dr. Julien, J. B. Ward, Major Abbott, A. W. Warren, and others.
CARBONDALE, KANSAS.—[Officers not yet reported.] Issued to W. Brown, J. Hey, J. Y. Urie, H. H. Heberling, A. Carr, S. Aitchison, S. Mix, H. W. Cole, J. Aitchison, H. Reddy, and others.
ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.—President, J. W. McClintock; Secretary, Thos. J. Stanton. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of St. Louis.

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.—President, F. J. Kieb; Secretary, F. B. Parse. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the First Liberal League of Newark.
HARRISVILLE, TEXAS.—President, Dr. L. J. Russell; Secretary, J. B. Nunneley. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the "Association of Free Thinkers of Bell County, Texas."
CORTLAND VILLAGE, NEW YORK.—President, Hon. Stephen Brewer; Secretary, Dr. Frank Goodyear. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Cortland County Liberal League.
MOBERLY, MISSOURI.—President, S. C. Mason; Secretary, Charles Knight. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Moberly Liberal League.
MALDEN, MASSACHUSETTS.—President, Rev. D. M. Wilson; Secretary, Francis Hinkley. Issued to the President and Secretary on behalf of the Malden Liberal League.
VINCENTS, INDIANA.—President, Charles Graeter; Secretary, Orlan F. Baker. Issued to the President and Secretary in behalf of the Vincennes Liberal League.
[N. B.—Many new local Liberal Leagues have been formed which have neglected to take out charters, and therefore are not entitled to representation.]

Ideal and Historical Christianity.

BY A. W. STEVENS.

"Say nothing but good of the dead" is a maxim born of sweet human charity. It is one which I am glad to believe is generally closely followed. To let asperities and dislikes be buried in the grave is, on the whole, an easy and a common concession; for death both mollifies and subdues the living, and glorifies and transfigures the departed. In almost every instance "distance lends enchantment to the view," by withdrawing or removing the opportunity and the occasion of close, sharp scrutiny. The good that men do does live after them; the evil oftener is forgotten. To judge one who cannot reply, to criticize one who cannot offer explanation,—most men are by nature too magnanimous to do this. The chivalry and the charity of humanity alike hasten to cast the mantle of forgetfulness over the imperfections of those who are overtaken by the night and silence of the grave.

And so it transpires that we naturally and kindly idealize the dim and distant. In such cases all real defects are obscured, and all real beauties enhanced. Emphatically is this so, when the object of our retrospective vision is intrinsically very venerable, or by the force of association or traditional custom has come to appear so; then affection, like the clinging, climbing vine on the old wall or tree, helps to clothe with all the luxuriance of ideal charms that which our thought or memory cherishes.

But this tendency to idealize what is removed by death and time, while it is ordinarily a gracious and proper thing to do, may in some instances be carried so far, and exercised so indiscriminately, as to become a mistake, nay, even a crime. There is such a thing as historical and comparative justice, such a thing as justice to contemporaries; and when we are writing or interpreting history,—be it that of a neighborhood or a nation, a family or a race,—we are bound to do it in the spirit of this justice, and to dispense it impartially to every relative period, person, event, and idea. We must not only deal kindly and generously, but justly and exactly, both with the living and the dead, with what is present and what is past. In all our reminiscences and historical investigations, it is a great thing if we are able to keep the truly discriminating mind, if we are able to bestow upon every object, near and distant, alike the soft glow of charity and the clear, steady look of balanced judgment. It may not, ordinarily, be needful to criticize; and when not needful, criticism is wanton. But when one thing is exalted at the expense of another, or when anything is so idealized beyond its actual character as to cause it to occupy an undue and disproportioned place in our regard,—then criticism is indispensable; then criticism is a duty, and the omission of it a fault: for historical justice must be vindicated and the truth served at whatever and whomsoever's expense.

Now it seems to me that Christ and Christianity have long been ideally regarded. By a fond and partial method of treatment they have been lifted out of their true historical relations, and given a place which does not properly belong to them. They have been viewed not through the deliberately poised telescope of historic comparison, but through the eagerly-clutched kaleidoscope of affectionate prejudice.

Christians are in the habit of affirming that Christ is the perfect teacher, and Christianity, or what he taught, the perfect religion. They do this by a tremendous assumption, which rests primarily not on rational investigation and interpretation, but on authority. That Christ and Christianity are perfect, one as a teacher and the other as a doctrine, is an ex cathedra declaration, quite unhistorical and irrational. They are perfect, it is assumed, because they alone came from God and brought his miraculous attestation. Of course this is, both in premise and conclusion, a complete begging of the question; or it is, in parliamentary phrase, an ordering summarily of the previous question on the matter to be discussed, a cutting off of all debate, and an arbitrary forcing of the decision.

Now if Christ and Christianity were not a part of history, we could not historically view them; we should be left only the pleasant, if not harmless, method of idealizing them. But they are a part of history, a part of the history of religion. They are not the whole of that history, but only a page or a chapter out of the entire vast volume which has been written and is still being writ, and which will never have finis subscribed to it so long as man exists. This being the case, we have no choice left but to consider Christ and Christianity historically, to consider them comparatively, as one of a series, as a part among parts, as a species of a great genus; to consider them not only in the light which shines from them, but also in that which shines from behind them and from all around them.

With but exceptional instances this is not the method which Christians have adopted in their treatment of Christ and Christianity. They have treated them as sui generis, as having a nature peculiarly their own, so unlike that of any other or others as to remove them by a vast distance from all historic, serial, and generic connections. A few, a very few, of the most cultured Christian scholars have, it is true, deigned to inquire as to the character of the other religions of the world, most of which are more ancient, and some of which are more wide-spread to-day, than Christianity. But while some of the more candid of these Christian students of comparative theology have been compelled to admit that in the other ethnic religions the same great fundamental doctrines are taught as in Christianity, they and all of them have gone into the inquiry so completely panoplied with their prepossessions and prejudices in favor of Christ and Christianity, that they have been impervious to the broadest, justest, most generous convictions which such a historical survey enforces, and have come off from their research bringing with them their antecedent indomitable assumption that Christ and Christianity alone are perfect.

What now can we say to all this but that we believe it to be an immense idealization of Christ and Christianity; that we believe such a treatment of the whole matter to be eminently unhistoric and unscientific? How of two things so alike in many of their prime features as Christianity and Buddhism, for instance, are allowed to be even by some Christian scholars, can it be affirmed that one is absolutely divine and the other human? Such a conclusion could surely not be reached if the method of treatment in comparative theology were as scientific as that usually observed in comparative ethnology. There are many races, as many religions. It is not, however, affirmed of any one of these races that it is the absolutely perfect type of man, though it is allowed that some races, in some respects, are vastly superior to others. We see that all races have certain great features and qualities in common; and while they markedly differ in some particulars, they still are so much alike that we do not hesitate to pronounce them homogeneous, to declare that they all have one nature, one origin, one destiny. All together, we say, they make up the race of man; not perfect in any of its parts, not perfect indeed as a whole; but throughout indicating such degrees of progressive development as show it to be on the high road towards perfection. In this way of dealing with races we do no injustice to any, but even justice to all. We idealize none, but we historically and scientifically classify all.

But why not deal with historic religions as we deal with historic races? Surely it cannot be denied that the cases are analogous. Why not, then, observe the same exact and impartial method of treatment in the one instance as in the other? Why not say that all the world's religions are forms of Religion itself; that no one of them is the root, but that all are offshoots from the root that bears and nourishes them; that no one of them is perfect by or in itself; that all together, indeed, they do not give a perfect voicing of absolute truth or absolute right, but that they are the different expressions which, at different times, in different places, and under different conditions, the religious nature of man inspired by the Divine mind has made of itself; and that they all are prophetic of the future progress which man as a religious being will make in the path that stretches on and up forever into the fulness of the Infinite? This indeed would be dealing with religions in the same spirit of historic justice as is brought to the consideration of races. This would be to treat the whole question rationally and not arbitrarily. This would be to dismiss prejudice and employ candor; to trample under the feet of our generous disdain ecclesiastical as well as ethnical caste.

But our purpose now leads us not so much to consider the idealization of Christ and Christianity, which Christians in general indulge in, as that which characterizes a particular class of Christians. All Christians agree in claiming absolute differentiation between Jesus and his doctrine and all the other great religious teachers and their doctrines; all Christians are guilty of gross historic injustice in the comparisons they make, or fail to make, between Christ and other masters, and Christianity and other religions; and yet there is one class of Christians who, in their apprehension and representation of Christianity itself and its author, transcend all others in idealizing both.

Christendom is divided into two parties, the names for which are furnished by popular usage to our hand, as Liberal and Orthodox. The Liberals differ from the Orthodox mainly in their method of interpreting Scripture,—the latter interpreting it on the basis of authority, the former on the basis of reason. Both go to the Christian Bible to find the records of the perfect religion; but both come away with very different accounts of the contents of those records. The Liberals say that Christianity, according to the Bible, is this. The Orthodox say that Christianity, according to the Bible, is that. And when we examine the presentations of both, we find that the Liberal this and the Orthodox that have scarce any mutual resemblance.

Now in this controversy—long since begun and not yet ended—between the two Christian parties, as to what Christianity is in itself according to the Bible, truth and candor compel me to agree in the main with the Orthodox, and to confess that in this instance the Liberals are especially guilty of unhistoric and illogical interpretation; they are the party who falsify the records and misrepresent the doctrinal character of the religion taught by Jesus and his disciples. I do not think they do this deliberately, in order to make out a case; they do it the rather through the easy and not uncommon delusion of mistaking the ideal for the actual. They do it by projecting the ideas of the nineteenth century upon the first; by attributing to Jesus what they believe, instead of receiving from him what he taught.

The Liberals are certainly to be congratulated on not believing what the Orthodox believe; but they are to be reprehended for referring their belief to the wrong source. Their ideal Christianity is for the most part very beautiful and very true; but they gravely and grossly err when they put forth that for the historic actual. They went into the issue with the Orthodox on the basis of reason. This was right. Their mistake is, and has been, that they try to rationalize what is irrational, to spiritualize what insists on remaining literal. Their mistake is in not sticking to their own ground, in not being faithful to the principle they started with. They would fain equip themselves with weapons in the same arsenal wherefrom the Orthodox precedently step armed from head to foot. The Bible is the true fort of the Orthodox; behind its walls they are safely entrenched, and the Liberals in vain essay to take it, and turn its guns against its rightful occupants. The Orthodox are the legitimate inheritors of the chief doctrinal contents of the New Testament, to most of which the Liberals forfeited all claim when they departed from the patrimonial premises and set up for themselves on the capital of reason. The Liberals fatally embarrass themselves by endeavoring to take with them, in all their excursions into the realms of science and modern thought, the New Testament as an authoritative and supernatural exposé of absolute religion. They fight nothing but a losing battle in trying, with the so-called "accommodation theory" of Mr. Andrews Norton, to reconcile many of the prominent doctrines of Jesus and his disciples with nineteenth-century ideas. Sweetly but soundly they had far best suffer to sleep on dusty shelves all tracts written, for instance, to prove St. Peter to have been a Unitarian, and the four Gospels, as well as the apostolic Epistles, to be documents originally indited in the interests of "Liberal Christianity."

The nature of the controversy between Liberal and Orthodox Christians relegates us directly to the actual records of the Christian religion, to the very reputed words of Jesus himself, the "author and finisher" of every Christian's faith. To them we now go, not intending to take with us any prejudices or preconceived notions, not desiring to read between the lines to find what we fancy might be there or imagine is there, but desiring only to read what is actually there written, and to find what is really there put down.

And for one, I would say that I accept with alacrity the necessity of thus going to the book to ascertain what Christianity really is. Indeed, I have already been there, and long and faithfully have I studied what I there find written. And against the desire with which I went to such a study of the New Testament, I come away convinced that in no special doctrinal sense am I a Christian; because, while I find in those writings, and in the great person of whom and on account of whom they were written, much that my heart loves, my judgment approves, and my whole being responds to, I find also so many things contrary to reason, to science, and the natural fitness of things, that I cannot accept Jesus in any special sense as a divine teacher, or the New Testament in any special sense as an inspired book. To the Liberal Christians I am constrained to say: Your Lord is not my Lord, because I do not find him to teach, on the whole, what you claim he does; some things he teaches which you ascribe to him; some beautiful things you quote of him he doubtless uttered; yet the great distinctive features of your Liberal system, as opposed to the Orthodox, I am convinced he did not teach, but the contrary. And in saying this to the Liberals, I appeal from their interpretation to the book itself; I appeal from ideal to historical Christianity.

I. Almost the first Orthodox doctrine which Liberal Christians denied was that of everlasting punishment. The largest, best organized, and most efficient denomination of Liberal Christians in our country to-day conspicuously and strenuously stand on the denial of this doctrine, and on the affirmation of its antithesis; and from this denial and this affirmation they derive their chief strength and popularity,—for no man either wishes or is willing to go to hell under any circumstances, but much prefers to go, and is glad to be convinced that he is going, the other way. But what does the New Testament, what does Jesus, teach about future punishment?

In answering this question I do not propose, and it is not incumbent on me, to go into a philological discussion of the words sheol, hades, and gehenna. Doubtless these were used by the ancients sometimes in one sense and sometimes in another. But that the Jews before Christ, and the Greeks, believed that somewhere in the next world there was a local place and a gross species of horrible torment for the wicked, I suppose no person tolerably acquainted with their literature doubts. Gehenna and hades were the words they habitually used to describe such a locality and condition; and to say that in every instance where we find these words in the New Testament they were used not in the customary but in some other sense, is to jump at conclusions with only a partisan dexterity.

Jesus uses the words hell, hell-fire, everlasting fire, and everlasting punishment a great many times; and he uses them without one particle of cautionary qualification, and not seldom in a very intense and vehement way. He uses them, moreover, in reference to the future condition of those who reject his gospel. On one occasion (Matt. v., 22) he tells his hearers that were they to do a certain thing they would be "in danger of hell-fire." Again (Matt. v., 30), that they had better give up some much-prized possessions than by these to be brought wholly "into hell." Still again (Matt. x., 28) he tells them to fear nothing which can harm only the body, but to "fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." At another time (Matt. xiii., 39-42) he is speaking of "the end of the world," when the Son of Man with angels will come for the judgment of all; then, he says, those will be gathered "out of his kingdom who do iniquity," and will be "cast into the furnace of fire." Once more (Matt. xxv., 31-46), he is describing the future condition of those who have and those who have not accepted him: the first, he says, will "inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world," while to the last he will say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into the everlasting fire which is prepared for the devil and his angels." And he winds up this whole passionate and pictorial passage in this way: "These [the wicked] will go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into everlasting life." The Orthodox, it seems to me, are unanswerable when they call attention to the fact that here Jesus sets off one "everlasting" as equivalent to the other. And yet, if there be any doubt whether Jesus was accustomed to use this word in a limited sense, he himself dispels it in his parable of Dives and Lazarus (Luke xvi.). In that case he graphically refers to both heaven and hell, to a future local condition of the good and the bad; between these two places he says "there is placed a great gulf," so that those who wish to cross may not be able." This would seem to be about as unalterable a state of things as one could well imagine; and if all this language, often and unqualifiedly repeated, does not indicate belief in future everlasting punishment, what can? When we hear such things said in an Orthodox pulpit, we know very well what is meant by them. When we meet with similar sayings in the records of other religions, we do not hesitate to interpret them squarely. Why, then, stammer over the words of Jesus? Why seek to wrest his phrases from their obvious meaning? Why not deal as candidly with the great Galilean as with any other of the world's masters?

